Here the issue is birth, not life – for only life can be birthed. What has been made clear to Peter is that life has been granted to the household of Cornelius, for “the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus” (Rom 8:2) has been visibly attested. Now, however, that life must be birthed, so that the individual may be inducted into Christ, added to the church, and raised to sit in heavenly places. The new birth, one which is “of water” as well as “of the Spirit” (John 3:5), is the point at which men are “delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of” God’s “dear Son” (Col 3:5). It is not the point at which the individual becomes alive. In spiritual birth as well as that of the flesh, life always precedes birth. Many who speak much concerning baptism have failed to make this distinction, which has moved them to reject some who have been made alive by God. Instead of responding to evident life by giving proper instruction, they are often rejected, just as though there was no life in them. Like life in the mother’s womb, spiritual life must be birthed, else it will not survive.

Keep in mind that the same man who is making this statement wrote the book of First Peter. There he said that the water through which Noah was “saved” “symbolizes baptism that now saves you also” (1 Pet 3:21). The sense in which baptism saves us is by moving us out of domain of darkness and into the kingdom of Christ – like water. It is also “for the remission of sins” (Acts 2:38), which accents the appropriation of a purged, or “good,” conscience, as indicated in First Peter 3:21.

BAPTISM IS NOT A RITUAL

Baptism is not a ritual or mere technicality. This is also made clear in Peter’s statement, mentioned above. Some versions thoroughly confound the matter by incorrectly rendering the text. A classic example is the New International Version. “and this water symbolizes baptism that now saves you also--not the removal of dirt from the body but the pledge of a good conscience toward God. It saves you by the resurrection of Jesus Christ.” Removing dirt from the body, as in taking a bath, is not at all the point of the text. It is absurd to compare being baptized into Christ with taking an ordinary bath. The cleansing of the flesh has to do with the ceremonies that were put in place by the Law. In particular it had to do with the procedures that ceremonially cleansed a person so he could traffic among the people of God. Scripture refers to this as “Sanctifying to the purifying of the flesh” (Heb 9:13). An example of this procedure are found in Leviticus 14:7-8

By way of contrast when our bodies are “washed with pure water” (Heb 10:22), it is not to allow the right to be among the people of God. Rather, it is to appropriate a cleansed conscience, which is a requisite for coming to the Lord – “having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience” (Heb 10:22). This cleansing is associated with being baptized “with water” into Christ. No amount of theological wrangling can drive a wedge between those sacred associations.

Now, Peter will reason on the baptism of the household of Cornelius. He will show that God has worked in a unique manner to confirm that the Gentiles have been accepted, and that there is nothing to hinder them from being joined with the Jewish believers as full citizens of the household of faith. In this case, God has given them the Holy Spirit BEFORE baptism, while Peter had previously promised the gift of the Spirit following baptism. This was not done because it was an alternative method of the Holy Spirit being given, but because this was a singular epoch that required Divine attestation. It was no ordinary occasion. Peter immediately sees this, and reasons as follows.

THEY RECEIVED THE HOLY SPIRIT AS WELL AS WE

“ 47b . . . which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?”

Now Peter accounts for why no man can object to those before him being baptized – baptized with water. I will tell you that his response will not fit handily into the mold of systematized theology. He will assess what has happened, and the fact that Luke was moved to put it down in writing confirms that his assessment was precisely correct.

THEY RECEIVED THE HOLY SPIRIT

“ . . . which have received the Holy Ghost . . .” Other versions read, “who have received the Holy Spirit,” NKJV “They have received the Holy Spirit,” NIV “who have been given the Holy Spirit,” BBE “who the Holy Spirit did receive,” YLT and “who the Holy Spirit got.” INTERLINEAR

Thus far, this event has been referred to in various ways. In addition, it will be referenced in a number of other ways – all speaking about the same event.

- FELL ON THEM. The Holy Spirit “fell on” them (10:44). This same terminology was used of the Samaritans, who also received the Spirit (Acts 8:16).

- POURED OUT. The Spirit was “poured out” upon them (10:45a). Peter referred to Joel’s prophecy, which foretold God would “pour out” His Spirit on “all flesh” as commencing on the day of Pentecost (Joel 2:17-18; Acts 2:33). The KJV refers to this as the Spirit being “shed forth.” Other versions read “poured out.” NKJV/NIV Paul said that What we are confronted with in this text is the common experience of the Holy Spirit being given to the people of God. This is speaking of an initial experience that is associated the Spirit was “shed on us abundantly” (Tit 3:6). Other versions read “poured out.” NKJV/BASN/NIV/NRSV This confirms that what was accomplished is common to all believers, even though the means through which the Spirit was given differed.

- THE GIFT. This was the “gift of the Holy Spirit” (10:45b). Peter referred to the “gift of the Holy Spirit” as something that God promised to those who repented and were baptized in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins (Acts 2:38). He also said that gift was promised to “as many as the Lord our God shall call” (Acts 2:39). Jesus promised that the Holy Spirit would be “given” to those who believed on Him (John 7:39). Peter said the Holy Spirit has been “given to them that obey Him” (Acts 5:32). The Apostolic doctrine emphasizes that the Holy Spirit has been “given” to those in Christ (Rom 5:5; 2 Cor 1:22; 5:5; 1 Thess 4:8; 1 John 3:24; 4:13). Our text, then, is speaking of a common gift.

• RECEIVED. They “received the Holy Spirit” (10:47). The Samaritan believers are said to have “received” the Holy Spirit when Peter and John laid their hands upon them (Acts 8:17). Apostolic doctrine states that those in Jesus have received the Holy Spirit (1 Cor 2:12; 2 Cor 11:4; Gal 3:2,14). Once, when Paul confronted certain disciples in Ephesus, he asked them if they had received the Holy Spirit since they believed. When they said they had never heard about the Holy Spirit, he asked them about their baptism. When they said they were baptized with the baptism of John, he taught them more perfectly concerning John and baptism, then baptized them into Christ (Acts 19:2-5).

What we are confronted with in this text is the common experience of the Holy Spirit being given to the people of God. This is speaking of an initial experience that is associated with repentance and baptism. We must discipline ourselves not to be unduly attracted to the particular manner in which this gift impacted those in the house of Cornelius who heard Peter’s word. This will be made even more clear as the text continues. It will also be confirmed in the manner in which it was reported to the brethren in Jerusalem, and how they responded to the report.

AS WELL AS WE

“ . . . as well as we?” Other versions read, “just as we have,” NKJV “just as we did,” NASB “just as we have,” NIV “as we also did,” DARBY “the same way we did,” GWN and “just as we did ourselves.” PHILLIPS

The promise of Joel was certainly not one limited to the apostles, for it spoke of “all flesh,” and male and female as well. Peter said that the promise uttered by Joel was to everyone that the Lord called. Apostolic doctrine confirms that the receiving of the Holy Spirit is common to all who are in Christ Jesus.

When Peter reported this event to the brethren in Jerusalem he made a very specific correlation between what happened at the house of Cornelius, and what took place “at the beginning.” He even connects it with what Jesus had said about baptizing “with the Holy Spirit.” Here are the words of an enlightened man who had been given the keys to the kingdom of heaven. “And as I began to speak, the Holy Spirit fell upon them, as upon us at the beginning. Then I remembered the word of the Lord, how He said, 'John indeed baptized with water, but you shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit. If therefore God gave them the same gift as He gave us when we believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, who was I that I could withstand God?’” NKJV (Acts 11:15-17).

Some time later, Peter reported the same thing at the Jerusalem conference where the matter of the acceptance of the Gentiles was being considered. “And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe. And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as He did unto us ; and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith” (Acts 15:7-9). Notice that the gift is not associated with a special empowerment, but with hearing the word of God and believing. Also, confirming that this was not an experience disassociated from salvation, Peter stated that it was related to the purifying of the heart by faith.

Additionally, it is imperative that we consider that Peter was the only apostle that was present. It is not to be assumed that when he said “as well as we,” that he was referring to the apostles only, and excluding the six brethren that had accompanied him. I do not know how such a postulate could be supported. The promise of Joel was certainly not one limited to the apostles, for it spoke of “all flesh,” and male and female as well. Peter said that the promise uttered by Joel was to everyone that the Lord called. Apostolic doctrine confirms that the receiving of the Holy Spirit is common to all who are in Christ Jesus.

I acknowledge that this sharply conflicts with what I had accepted earlier in my life. I was taught that Jesus baptizing with the Holy Spirit was an experience unique to the apostles. However, in the case of Cornelius Peter made a clear and unquestionable association between what took place there and the words of Jesus, who said men would be baptized with the Holy Spirit.

It is to be acknowledged that the outward phenomena that took place on the day of Pentecost and at the house of Cornelius do not occur every time someone receives the gift of the Holy Spirit – even though some affirm that it does. The rushing mighty wind and cloven tongues of fire that took place on the day of Pentecost apparently did not take place at the house of Cornelius. However, it was the same gift that was given, although the manner differed.

Men must resist any inclination to seek to duplicate the circumstances that attend the giving of the Holy Spirit. I do not know how you could select only some of the signs to be preferred. On the day of Pentecost, you had a rushing mighty wind, cloven tongues of fire, and a simultaneous filling. In the case of the Samaritans, it was necessary for Peter and John to lay their hands on the recipients. At the house of Cornelius, the Spirit was given while they were hearing the Word of God, and before they were baptized. It is possible for men to attempt to construct a system from that, but they will not be successful. Such an approach also betrays a hearts that is not right with God, just as surely as the heart of Simon the sorcerer was not right (Acts 8:21). In a sense, he was also seeking a procedure, and it was one in which he would be allowed some preeminence. He received a stern rebuke.

HE COMMANDED THEM TO BE BAPTIZED

“ 48a And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.”

Peter does not wait for some input from the audience, or the six brethren who are with him. He does not offer alternatives to the hearers, but uses the keys of the kingdom of heaven that have been given to him.

HE COMMANDED THEM

“And he commanded them . . .” Other versions read, “he ordered them,” NASB “he gave orders for them,” BBE “he ordered that,” CJB “gave orders,” NET and “he directed,” WEYMOUTH

As used here, the word “commanded” means “to enjoin, order, prescribe, command . . . to appoint, to define,” THAYER “to order, tell, instruct,” FRIBERG and “to give detailed instructions as to what must be done - 'to order, to instruct, to tell, to command.” LOUW-NIDA

In a sense this command was twofold. First to the hearers themselves who were to be baptized. Second, to the brethren who were standing by, who were to see to it that the baptism was carried out. Peter provides no option for the hearers to refuse to be baptized, or for the brethren to abstain from carrying it out.

It appears that Peter himself did not baptize these believers – just as Paul made it a practice not to baptize the people himself, lest they be unduly attached to him (1 Cor 1:13-17). The six brethren who were with him were doubtless the ones he ordered to baptize the hearers.

Peter knew that Jesus had commanded them to baptize the disciples they made through the preaching of the Gospel (Matt 28:19). He knew the Lord had promised that those who believed and were baptized would be saved (Mk 16:16). He had not been cultured in some of the theology that is popular in our time.

BE BAPTIZED IN THE NAME OF THE LORD

“ . . . to be baptized in the name of the Lord.” They were not simply to be baptized, but to do so “in the name of the Lord” – that is, the Lord Jesus Christ. Baptism, is not an ordinance of the church. It is not the means by which a person becomes a member of a local congregation. Baptism is “into Christ” (Gal 3:27). It is “into His death ” (Rom 6:3-4). In baptism, “the circumcision of Christ” takes place, in which there is a severance of the fleshly nature from the essential person, or “new man” (Col 2:11-12). Further, it is by means of the resurrection of Christ that baptism saves us (1 Pet 3:21). When we are baptized, it is Christ that is “put on” (Gal 3:27). It is on the authority of Christ that believers are baptized. It is in obedience to Christ that this is done. All of this is wrapped up in the expression “be baptized in the name of the Lord.”

This is the same manner of instruction Peter gave on the day of Pentecost – namely, that the inquirers should be baptized “in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins” (Acts 2:38). The Samaritans were also said to have been “baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus” (Acts 8:16). The Ephesians disciples were also “baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ” (Acts 19:5).

Notice the difference in the terminology.

- “Baptized in the name of the Lord ” (Acts 10:48).
- “Baptized in the name of Jesus Christ ” (Acts 2:38).
- “Baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus ” (Acts 8:16).

Any opposition to baptism, or denigration of its importance, is a direct attack on the Lord Jesus Christ, and is to be so regarded.

“Baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ ” (Acts 19:5).

Add to that the words of the Lord Jesus, “baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost ” (Matt 28:19). These are all speaking of the “one baptism” that is common to all believers (Eph 4:5). None of them are speaking of the appellation “Jesus,” or of a formula that validates baptism. They are rather speaking of the Person of the Lord Jesus, and of the association that is made with Him through baptism.

Any opposition to baptism, or denigration of its importance, is a direct attack on the Lord Jesus Christ, and is to be so regarded.

The associations that are made with baptism confirm its necessity. I provide them here for your reference.

THINGS WITH WHICH BAPTISM IS ASSOCIATED

1. Repentance (Acts 2:38).
2. The remission of sins (Acts 2:38).
3. The gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:38).
4. Believing (Mark 16:16; Acts 8:12; 18:8).
5. Salvation, or being "saved" (Mark 16:16; 1 Peter 3:21).
6. Being buried with Christ (Rom 6:4; Col 2:12).

7. In baptism we were raised with Christ (Rom 6:4; Col 2:12).
8. Being identified with Christ's death (Rom 6:3).
9. Becoming dead to sin (Rom 6:2-3).
10. Becoming alive to God (Rom 6:3-11).
11. The circumcision of Christ, in which the whole body of sin is cut away (Col 2:11-12).
12. Faith in the operation, or working, of God (Col 2:12).
13. Coming into Christ (Gal 3:27).
14. Putting on Christ (Gal 3:27).
15. A commandment (Acts 10:48).
16. The confession of Christ (Acts 8:36-37).
17. Gladly receiving the Word of God (Acts 2:41).
18. Washing away our sins (Acts 22:16).
19. Coming into one body through the Spirit (1 Cor 12:13).
20. Something that is done "in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit" (Matt 28:19).

All doubts concerning the necessity and effectiveness of baptism with water should forever be thrust from us. There is not so much as a syllable of Scripture that suggests baptism is optional, or is not immediately associated with salvation. There is even extended apostolic doctrine concerning baptism.

All doubts concerning the necessity and effectiveness of baptism with water should forever be thrust from us. There is not so much as a syllable of Scripture that suggests baptism is optional, or is not immediately associated with salvation. There is even extended apostolic doctrine concerning baptism. One segment of the doctrine consists of an entire chapter – the sixth chapter of the book of Romans. It places great stress on the importance of baptism, associating it with the following:

- Being put into the death of Christ (6:3).
- Being buried with Christ (6:4a).
- Walking in newness of life (6:4b).
- Being planted in the likeness of Christ's death (6:5a).
- Being in the likeness of Christ's resurrection (6:5b).
- The crucifixion of "old man" (6:6a).
- The destruction of the "body of sin" (6:6b).
- NOT serving sin (6:6c).
- Being dead, and consequently freed from sin (6:7).
- Being dead with Christ (6:8a).
- Believing that we will live with Christ (6:8b).
- Christ triumphing over death (6:9).

- Christ living unto God (6:10).
- Reckoning ourselves to be dead indeed unto sin (6:11a).
- Reckoning ourselves to be alive unto God through Jesus Christ (6:11b).
- Not allowing sin to reign in our mortal bodies (6:12).
- Not yielding our capacities as instruments of unrighteousness (6:13a).
- Yielding our capacities as instruments of righteousness unto God (6:13b).
- Sin not having dominion over us (6:14a).
- Being under grace and not under law (6:14b).
- The total unreasonableness of sin (6:15-16).
- Obeying the form of the doctrine delivered to us (6:17).
- Being made free from sin (6:18a).
- Becoming servants of righteousness (6:18b).
- Yielding our capacities as servants to righteousness unto holiness (6:19).
- Being ashamed of our former lives (6:20-21).
- Being made free from sin and becoming servants to God (6:22a).
- Having fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life (6:22b).
- The wages of sin and the gift of God (6:23).

All of that teaching is based upon the fact that we are baptized into Christ. It proclaims the implications of baptism, rather than stressing its necessity. However, if those implications are true, no one but a fool would engage in an effort to minimize the importance of baptism.

It simply is not possible for any ordained response to the Gospel to be neutral, non-essential, or optional, that has been associated with such things. Further, these are not associations made by men, but by the Holy Spirit of God. Men of spiritual integrity will simply not consent to any spiteful words concerning this ordinance.

A TRAGEDY

It is most tragic that many of those who declare the necessity of baptism to be saved fail to stress to the church what is to follow baptism. In fact, all of the doctrine concerning baptism is delivered to the church. I do not question that much of the opposition to baptism arises from the lack of spiritual life in those who stress it. Let it be clear that when the lives of believers do not “adorn the doctrine” in all things (Tit 2:10), the word of God will be blasphemed by others (Rom 2:24; 1 Tim 5:14; 1 Tim 6:1; Tit 2:5).

If a body of professing believers are not walking in the Spirit, living by faith, and generally characterized by unquestionable godliness, it is questionable whether or not they should be engaged in evangelistic efforts. Such people will fall into the same category as the scribes and pharisees of whom Jesus said, “Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves” (Matt 23:15).

I do understand that withdrawing from purported evangelistic efforts would bring about a diminishment in the numbers of many churches. However, where the lives of people are unacceptable before God, the attention must be turned to them – just as Jesus did to the unacceptable churches in Asia (Rev 2:4,14,20; 3:1). When a church is packed with people who are not hungering and thirsting for righteousness, and are not perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord, its light is, to say the very least, beginning to dim. In such a case, something must be done to get leprous influence out of the church, and see to it that it is perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord (2 Cor 7:1). God will not receive people until that is done. That, of course, is His own statement: “Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you” (2 Cor 6:17). It takes a hard and calloused heart to ignore that word!

Now we will behold the response of the newly baptized hearers of the Word of God. Remember that this is a response of faith, and is the expression of newness of life. This reveals some aspects of life in Christ Jesus, and is to be duly noted.

THEY ASKED PETER TO STAY FOR A WHILE

“ 48b Then prayed they him to tarry certain days. ”

What is the reaction of people who are really baptized into Christ? Do they consider baptism a kind of ultimate goal to be reached, or is it seen as a beginning? Indeed, baptism is the door through which we enter into “the newness of life” – a spiritual environment in which we move about with liberty and benefit (Rom 6:4). Our text will confirm that there is a kind of spiritual intuition that accompanies the new birth. When a person who is spiritually alive knows they are in the presence of someone who can bring profit and edification to them, they are eager to avail themselves of the fellowship of that person. That tendency is made known in this text.

THEY PRAYED HIM

“Then prayed they him . . .” Other versions read, “they asked him,” NKJV “they invited him,” NRSV “they kept him with them,” BBE “they begged him,” DARBY/NJB/LIVING/WEYMOUTH/WILLIAMS/MONTGOMERY/AMPLIFIED “they desired him,” DOUAY “they requested him,” MRD and “they besought him.” YLT

The word “prayed” is not a casual one, reflecting a polite, but not fervent, invitation. It appears to me that several versions, in attempting to use contemporary words, have managed to superimpose a certain culture upon the text that is not there. Even in the English language, the word “pray” has an urgent tone in it. Here is the primary modern definition of that English word: “entreat, implore,” MERRIAM-WEBSTER “wish or hope earnestly for a particular outcome,” OXFORD The Greek word from which “prayed” is translated is hvrw,thsan , which is the third person plural of the word evrwta,w . The “third person” means that what is reported was not said by the writer, nor was it addressed to the writer. This is a report of something that took place external to the one who is giving writing the record. In this case, the report is an inspired one, as the writer is being moved by the Holy Spirit. That fact alone makes it important that a proper English word be used to convey the activity of the ones who addressed Peter.

That fact alone makes it important that a proper English word be used to convey the activity of the ones who addressed Peter.

As used here, the lexical meaning of the word “prayed” is “to ask I. e. to request, entreat, beg, beseech,” THAYER “as making a request ask, demand, beg someone to do something,” FRIBERG “request; beg, request urgently, ” UBS “to beg, to entreat.” LEH I do not want to overemphasize this point. However, there is a spirit in the text as well as words. It is reporting the expression of newness of life, and the outflow of the heart.

This same word is used elsewhere in the book of Acts. Its use will confirm the nature of the request.

• THE LAME MAN ASKING ALMS. “Who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple asked an alms” (Acts 3:3).

• ENEMIES OF THE FAITH ASKING PAUL TO LEAVE THEIR AREA. “And they came and besought them, and brought them out, and desired them to depart out of the city” (Acts 16:39).

• BELIEVERS IN APHESIS BESEECHING PAUL TO STAY. “When they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not” (Acts 18:20).

• PAUL REQUEST THAT HIS NEPHEW BE CONSULTED BY THE ROMAN GUARD. “So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee” (Acts 23:18).

• THE CHIEF CAPTAIN QUESTIONING PAUL’S NEPHEW. “Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me?” (Acts 23:19).

• THE JEWS REQUESTING THAT PAUL BE BROUGHT BEFORE THEM. “And he said, The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to morrow into the council, as though they would inquire somewhat of him more perfectly” (Acts 23:20).

My point here is that what was requested of Peter was in harmony with the nature of salvation, as well as the experience of it. This was not a request for time to exchange pleasantries. Rather, there was a distinct spiritual advantage seen in having Peter remain with them.

TARRY CERTAIN DAYS

“ . . . to tarry certain days.” Other versions read, “stay a few days,” NKJV “stay on for a few days,” NASB “stay with them for a few days,” NIV “stay for several days,” NRSV “remain for some days,” RSV “kept him with them for some days,” BBE “remain with them for a time,” WEYMOUTH and “stay on there for some days.” AMPLIFIED

Having profited so much from the presence and words of Peter, the newly born believers urge him to stay on for several days. You may rest assured, it was not in order to engage in some leisurely activities. These people had experienced something from heaven, and knew it. They had received the word with gladness, and had been baptized into Christ. They had been raised up together with Christ, and made sit in “heavenly places” (Eph 2:6). It is a long plummet from there to the mundane! In fact, those who are cognizant of where they are in Christ refuse to occupy the lower realms – like Nehemiah refused to come down from the wall to hold a caucus with Sanballat and Geshem (Neh 6:3).

In this text, Peter was with the converts like Nehemiah was with the builders. You may rest assured that they entertained no notions at that time of terminating their fellowship with the man of God. How could any sensible person entertain such thoughts after God Almighty had sent an angel instructing them to bring this man to the house in which they were sitting?

OTHERS HAVE MADE SIMILAR REQUESTS

This is not an isolated incident! Throughout the Scriptures, when a person of God was recognized by someone who valued the things of God, there was a request for them to stay on.

- When the angels of the Lord visited Lot , preparing to destroy the city in which he lived, he constrained them, pressing them to “turn in,” and “tarry all night” in his house (Gen 19:2-3).

- Ruth refused to leave Naomi, affirming that she would live where she lived, make Naomi’s people her people, and make Naomi’s God her own (Ruth 1:16).

- Elisha refused to leave Elijah, declaring, “As the Lord giveth, and as thy soul giveth, I will not leave thee” (2 Kgs 2:2,4,6).

- When a certain Shunammite woman knew that a man of God, Elisha, frequently passed that way, she told her husband, “Let us make a little chamber, I pray thee, on the wall; and let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a stool, and a candlestick: and it shall be, when he cometh to us, that he shall turn in thither” (2 Kgs 4:10).

- When the son of the Shunammite woman died, she went to the prophet Elisha. Having brought Elisha and his servant to her house, she said, “As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee” (2 Kgs 4:30).

- When Jesus spoke to “many of the Samaritans ” who had been brought to Him by the women at the well, it is reported that “they besought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days” (John 4:40).

- When Cleopas and his companion confronted the risen Christ, and hear Him speak marvelous words to them, they did not yet know who He was. Yet, knowing the impact of His words, they said to Him, “Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them” (Lk 24:29). It was during that occasion, when they asked Him to remain, that He was made known to them (Lk 24:30-31).

- Following the preaching of Paul, and after Lydia had been baptized, Luke reports, “she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us” (Acts 16:15).

- When Paul met with the elders of the church of Ephesus in Miletus, he told them he had to leave. And they wept. The chief reason is said to have been “that they should see his face no more” (Acts 20:38).

That should be sufficient to confirm that the request of those who heard Peter was not a strange one.

A UNIQUENESS OF OUR TIME

We live in a time when a significant number of people object to the extension of their exposure to a man of God – for only a few minutes! In fact, it is exceedingly rare in our nation for there to be a group of people who earnestly seek to personally be with an individual who only speaks the Word of the Lord. These days, wherever there is a person who has insight into the things of God, it is difficult to find some hearers. Occasionally some do surface who are not content with a brief exposure to the word of the Lord. However, they are rare, and are greatly to be treasured.

One of the most disconcerting experiences I have had is that of professing Christians who have little or no interest in the things of God. I have never been satisfied with the miserable explanations that are offered for their lack of hunger and thirst for righteousness. Even the attitude of primitive saints who did not have access to the abundance of truth that is realized in Christ Jesus outshine these souls without spiritual appetite. Ponder the following statements with those being said by people today.

• JOB . “I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food” (Job 23:12).

• DAVID . “My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?” (Psa 42:2; 63:1; 143:6).

“My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times” (Psa 119:20).

“I opened my mouth, and panted: for I longed for thy commandments” (Psa 119:131).

“ . . . the judgments of the LORD are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold: sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb” (Psa 19:10).

• JEREMIAH . “Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart: for I am called by thy name, O LORD God of hosts” (Jer 15:16).

And what will those of meager appetites say on the day of judgment when these man stand up before them? How will they respond to those who had less than was offered to them, yet did more and went further with it? Believe me when I say they will not be in an enviable position!

CATERING TO THE DISINTERESTED

Furthermore, it is seriously wrong to cater to people like this, as though they could be wooed with compromise and awakened Godward with spiritual froth. Jesus did not stay with people who had no interest in what He said (Matt 16:4; 21:16; Mk 8:13). Paul responded in the same manner a lack of interest (Acts 13:46; 18:6-7; 19:9). Believers – all of them – are told to “turn away” from those who have a “form of godliness, but deny the power thereof” (2 Tim 3:5). They are told to “withdraw” from professing believers who walk in a “disorderly,” or in an inconsistent manner (2 Thess 3:6). They are also admonished to note those who “cause divisions and offenses contrary top the doctrine,” and “avoid them” (Rom 16:17). After warning Timothy about teachers who did not consent to “wholesome words,” but chose to wrangle about words and engage in “perverse disputing,” Paul said, “from such withdraw thyself” (1 Tim 6:5).

Even David knew the inappropriateness of unnecessarily maintaining company with people who were ungodly: “Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But His delight is in the law of the LORD; and in His law doth he meditate day and night” (Psa 1:1-2).

The clear implication is that a compelling interest in the Lord and His word is neutralized by ungodly relationships.

AN ERRONEOUS APPROACH TO RELIGION

An approach to religion has been cunningly put in place that has caused people to be content with brevity and shallowness. They do not want brevity in their athletic events, movies, or concerts, but they are quite content for that arrangement in matters pertaining to life and godliness. These people are the product of church leaders and influences to whom they have subjected their minds. The fact that such people are unlike “newborn babes” – that are set before us in the Word of God – is a circumstance worthy of earnest inquiry. Unless the Gospel produces various kinds of Christians, just how can we account for such differences in the professing church? Every Lord’s day, there are gatherings in which the interested and disinterested sit together. Those with a love for the truth are found side by side with those who do not love the truth. People who are hungering and thirsting for righteousness occupy the same seat as those who have no interest in righteousness at all.

Who is able to justify such an admixture? Will they point us to the mingling of the tares and the wheat? In that case, Jesus said the field was “the world,” not the church (Matt 13:38). If the church Jesus is building does not consist of those who are born again and those who are not, then exactly how can it be that any church can be so characterized?

The appointed means of deciphering those who will be accepted by the Lord and those who will not is the proclamation of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. The most general description of the subject declared is “the Word of God” (1 Thess 2:13; Heb 4:12). Considered from a more narrowed focus, it is “the Gospel of the Kingdom,” which particularly accents what God is doing

Those who withhold this preaching, or water it down to please the people, have withdrawn the means by which genuineness is perceived. If people do respond to such preaching, there is no way to know whether they are sincere or nothing more than hypocrites.

(Matt 24:14). In the most focused sense, it is “the Gospel of Christ,” which is the Means through which the purpose of God is being fulfilled – Jesus Christ being the One in whom men are made “complete” (Rom 1:16; 2 Cor 4:4; Col 2:10).

Those who withhold this preaching, or water it down to please the people, have withdrawn the means by which genuineness is perceived. If people do respond to such preaching, there is no way to know whether they are sincere or nothing more than hypocrites.

If it is countered that we are not to sit in judgment of other people, that is a proper view. However, there is an influence that does search out the difference, discovering the real nature of the people. That is the Seed of the Kingdom, the Word of God in general, and the Gospel of Christ in particular. That Word will uncover the hypocrites in the synagogue of the Libertines (Acts 6:9), and the thirsty souls in Samaria (Acts 8:12). It will discover the tender souls in Solomon’s porch (Acts 4:4), and the arrogant religious leaders who cared nothing for the Lord Jesus Christ (Acts 4:1-2).

I realize that all of this sounds a bit critical – and, indeed, there is some of that in my words. None of these things would be said if the people in question did not profess any identity with Christ. However, when such a profession is made, mild though it may appear to be, the name of the Lord is brought into the matter. His great salvation is also related, together with the “church of God” and “the Word of God.” Whoever the person is, when there is a claim to be connected with Jesus, or be saved, or be part of the church, or have faith, critical issues converge upon that testimony. Either Christ will be exalted or defamed by the professed association. The Word of God will either be praised or blasphemed. The salvation of God will be either magnified or diminished.

Let no person suggest to us that we ought to be tolerant of inconsistencies that are denounced by Lord. In this matter, we cannot draw up our own standards for conduct, but must confine ourselves to what the Lord Himself requires of His people. Whatever separates a person from the Lord, also separates the individual from His people. Such conditions are to be addressed by rebukes, corrections, and instructions in righteousness. Where there is no satisfactory response to these ordained approaches, the old leaven must be purged from the assembly (1 Cor 5:7-8).

Those who have comprehended the truth to some measurable degree long for their paths to cross with hungry souls. That is simply the manner of the Kingdom. They are also intolerant of religious pretension, novel presentations, and activities that are tainted by the flesh. That is just the way they are, and everyone in that category knows it.

CONCLUSION

We have been exposed to the working of the Lord. It has been confirmed in the interest of the Gentiles and the tenderness of Peter. It is made known in heaven’s approach to the seeker, and toward a person who is in Christ and living for Him.

CONFIRMATION

The responses of both Peter and the household of Cornelius substantiate how people respond to revelation when their hearts are tender. The eagerness with which obedient hearts proceed is seen in Cornelius sending for Peter, and Peter going with his servants to bring him the good news of the Gospel. The interest and spiritual camaraderie of kindred spirits are witnessed in the servants and soldier joining in the case, as well as the brethren from Joppa accompanying Peter in the trip to the home of Cornelius. The zealousness of a believer is seen in Cornelius gathering his family, friends, and relatives together to hear the Word of the Lord. It is also seen in Peter commencing his declaration as soon as he arrived, even though the journey was lengthy. The patience of believers is seen in the four day wait of Cornelius and those with him. The immediacy of the response of faith is seen in the reaction of both Cornelius and Peter to the visions given to them. The willingness to grow and take hold of things not seen before is seen in both the reaction both Peter and Cornelius to heavenly direction. The lingering effects of faith are seen in the request of the people for Peter to stay, and in his readiness to do so.

The kind of message to which heaven responds is seen in the pouring forth of the Holy Spirit while Peter was speaking. It seems to me that too often men are seeking a response from their peers, when they ought to be seeking one from heaven. There is no way to compensate for the absence of the response of heaven. Men may resort to appealing buildings, lighting effects, and visual presentations to elicit a response from the people. They may embellish their message with all manner of illustrations, scholarship, and humorous anecdotes. But if God does nothing through their message, of what worth is it? Should some small element of truth be found in what such people say, it is like a "jewel in a swines' snout" (Prov 11:22). By the time men finally get hold of it, they are so defiled they cannot maintain their grasp upon it. Far better to pursue the course of Peter. Let the preacher preach what he has seen and heard from heaven. We really have no time to listen to anything else.

See, all of these things are between the lines of our text. In it we are witnessing God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit at work. Furthermore, the degree and effectiveness of Their activity among the people are in direct proportion to the truth that is unveiled in what is being proclaimed in "spirit of faith" (2 Cor 4:13). If what God has said is not valued, there is no possible way to have a proper estimation of what He has done. That is simply the way it is!

Lesson #51

PETER REPORTS TO JERUSALEM

“ 11:1 And the apostles and brethren that were in Judaea heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God. 2 And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, they that were of the circumcision contended with him, 3 Saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them. 4 But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, saying, 5 I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I saw a vision, A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me: 6 Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. 7 And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter; slay and eat. 8 But I said, Not so, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth. 9 But the voice answered me again from heaven, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common. 10 And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven. 11 And, behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Caesarea unto me. 12 And the Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house: 13 And he showed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter; 14 Who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved. 15 And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning. 16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost. 17 Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God? 18 When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. ” (Acts 11:1-18)

INTRODUCTION

A certain spiritual manner is being made known in the book of Acts: it is that of speaking of the wondrous works of God – in particular, reporting what the Lord has done. This is in fulfillment of David’s prophecy, “They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power ” (Psa 145:11). David also spoke of himself as engaged in this activity: “My tongue also shall talk of thy righteousness all the day long” (Psa 71:24). And again, “I will . . . talk of thy doings” (Psa 77:12). The 105 th Psalm admonished the people of God, “talk ye of all His wondrous works ” (v 2). The “sweet Psalmist of Israel” (2 Sam 23:1) also said to the Lord, “Make me to understand the way of thy precepts: so shall I talk of Thy wondrous works ” (Psa 119:27). In relation to the new and “better testament,” this is the result of all the people knowing the Lord. As it is written in prophecy, “for they shall all know Me” (Jer 31:34). The apostolic doctrine confirms that this, in fact, takes place in Christ (Heb 8:8-13).

Thus, the saints do not speak of the works of the Lord as casual bystanders, but as those who have seen and recognized the hand of the Lord. There is a certain insightful exhilaration detected in their reports, as the people “rejoice in His salvation” (Psa 35:9). Isaiah foretold the day of salvation as one in which the people would say, “Praise the LORD, call upon his name, declare His doings among the people, make mention that His name is exalted” (Isa 12:4). In this, the exhortation of the Psalmist actually comes to pass: “Sing praises to the LORD, which dwelleth in Zion: declare among the people His doings” (Psa 9:11).

This manner of speaking is not prominent in an institutional setting, nor, indeed, can it be. The reason for this circumstance is that the Person and works of the Lord will not contribute to the activities and aspirations of mere men. It is not possible for the working of God to promote a human agenda, or vault the institutions of men into prominence. That simply is not the way the Lord works, for such an activity is counterproductive to the fulfillment of His own purpose. God has declared His agenda, and His blessing will not be given to any other order of business.

It is fashionable in our time for professing Christian leaders to point to their outward success as proof of the blessing of the Lord – much like that which was promised under the Old Covenant (Deut 6:3; 7:13). However, because of the recalcitrance of the people, those promises were not ultimately fulfilled. Instead, Israel was actually thrust out of their land, and experienced all manner of outward oppression, by both nature and their enemies.

Within the framework of the New Covenant, there is not a hint that it promises any form of earthly prosperity. That is not the manner of the covenant presently being mediating by Christ.

- NOT ACCORDING TO THE MANNER OF THE OLD COVENANT. The New Covenant is a different kind of covenant. Its blessings are different. Its promises are different. In its basis, objectives, and effects it is not to be compared with the Old Covenant. Unlike the Old Covenant, the New is realized in the Person of Christ, and by means of faith. The Old Covenant was based upon doing, and doing alone (Lev 18:5).

- A COVENANT OF REGARD, NOT DISREGARD. The New Covenant results in a consistent regard for those who are in Christ Jesus. The favor of God is guaranteed to those who abide in Christ.

- HIS LAWS PUT INTO THE MIND. In the New Covenant, the people are brought to think differently. Their thought processes are in concert with what God requires.

- HIS LAWS WRITTEN IN THEIR HEART. There is also a strong affection for the Lord – a preference for Him, a love of the truth, and a delight in the Lord. His laws are written upon their hearts.

- GOD WOULD BE THEIR GOD. That is, He would be the God of the preference, with no competitors.

- THEY WOULD BE GOD'S PEOPLE. God would not be ashamed to own the people in Christ, but would be pleased to call them His own.

- THEY WOULD ALL KNOW THE LORD. The people would not be ignorant of God or unacquainted with His ways. They would be familiar with Him.

- GOD WOULD BE MERCIFUL TO THEIR UNRIGHTEOUSNESSES. God would not speak of the sins of the people as He did with Israel. He would make gracious provision for the removal of sin, thereby permitting Him to be both just and Justifier.

- THEIR SINS AND INIQUITIES WOULD BE REMEMBERED NO MORE. Remission of sin is a hallmark of the New Covenant. In that remission, there is freedom from the power of sin as well as the guilt that results from it.

It is evident that these remarkable components of the New Covenant are not tailored for life in the flesh. They have to do with one's association with the living God, NOT their connection with this world – which is passing away. Precisely how can you use these benefits to build a religious institution, or accumulate wealth, or achieve recognition in the world. How do they contribute to such ambitions?

SOMETHING TO BE SEEN

It is essential to perceive these things because of the nature of the reports provided in the book of Acts. There is a glaring absence of worldly values and status throughout the book. If you were to attempt to pattern a religious organization after the church in Jerusalem, precisely how would you go about it? How would you go about organizing a service, developing a youth program, or some form of community outreach? What method is found that would provide a pattern for developing a missionary program, or any kind of a training program? See, there is nothing in the record of the early church that approaches newness of life in such a manner.

THE ABSENCE OF WORLDLY PROMOTION

In the accounting Peter will give, there is a total absence of any promotion of persons or groups. The attention is drawn to what the Lord has done through those who were walking with Him by faith, and to whom He had revealed the truth. There is not the slightest hint of an institutional agenda.

Further, the reports of Divine workings are faithful, and without the embellishment that often characterizes modern day reports of the purported work of the Lord. There are no exaggerations, and the observations of the work itself are insightful, consistently giving glory to God. This is an aspect of spiritual life that is worthy of note – i.e. being faithful in the stewardship of what we have been given to see and hear, whether in ourselves or others. The testimony given by Peter will reflect his personal humility, as well as his desire for the Lord to be glorified and His purposes declared.

THE BRETHERN IN JUDEA HEAR WHAT HAD HAPPENED

“ 11:1 And the apostles and brethren that were in Judaea heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God.”

In the book of Acts, we frequently read of the reports of what was accomplished, as well as the accomplishments themselves. This has been characteristic of Divine workings throughout history.

- The manner in which the Lord delivered Israel from Egyptian bondage was “heard” in the city of Jericho (Josh 2:10).
- The Lord was with Joshua, and his fame was “noised throughout the country” (Josh 6:27).
- The Gibeonites “heard” of the “fame” of the Lord, and what He did in Egypt regarding Israel’s deliverance (Josh 9:9).
- The Syrians “heard” of the merciful manner of the kings of Israel (1 Kgs 20:31).
- The reports of the working of the Lord were passed down through the generations of Israel (Psa 44:1; 78:3).
- The fame of Solomon “concerning the name of the Lord” was “heard” in other lands (1 Kgs 10:1).
- The “fame” of Jesus “went throughout all Syria” (Matt 4:24).
- When Jesus raised Jairus’ daughter from the dead, “the fame hereof went abroad into all the land” (Matt 9:26).
- Even Herod the tetrarch “heard of the fame of Jesus” (Matt 14:1).
- What took place among the disciples on the day of Pentecost was “noised abroad” (Acts 2:6).
- The apostles in Jerusalem “heard that Samaria had received the word of God” (Acts 8:14).

Preliminary Conclusions

There are some preliminary conclusions that are evident in the texts I have just cited.

- Divine workings cannot be concealed. If a city that is set on a hill “cannot be hid”

(Matt 5:14), you may be sure that the working of the Lord cannot remain under the shroud of concealment.

- Those who participate in the works of the Lord are prone to speak of them.
- The works of the Lord are not an end of themselves. They are rather an appointed means of making the Lord known, and thereby causing glory to be brought to His name.

THE APOSTLES AND BRETHREN

“And the apostles and brethren that were in Judea . . .” Other versions read “through Judea,” NIV “apostles and believers who were in Judea,” NRSV “throughout Judea,” ESV “apostles and other believers,” NLT and “apostles and the brothers [and sisters].” ALT

Behold the harmony in the body of Christ. Although the apostles were placed “first” in the body (1 Cor 12:28), yet they were in no way distinct from the body of Christ. Here they are joined together with other brethren, or believers, throughout the entire region of Judea.

Who Are “Brethren?”

It may seem rather juvenile to ask such a question. However, the modern church is not known for its use of this term, or that of “brothers.” Doctrinally, this is very important word that represents a pivotal kingdom concept. Ponder how it is used in the apostolic writings.

- We can “sin against the brethren” (1 Cor 8:12).
- Peace, together with faith and love, come from the Father and Jesus to “the brethren” (Eph 6:23).
- In obeying the truth “through the Spirit,” we do so “unto unfeigned love of the brethren” (1 Pet 1:22).
- We know we have passed from death unto life because we “love the brethren” (1 John 3:14).
- When we perceive the love of God, because He laid down His life for us, it is apparent that we “ought to lay down our lives for the brethren” (1 John 3:16).

The fundamental relationship between brethren is not their identity with one another. Rather, it is their identity with Christ that makes them “brethren.” This is so because Jesus is “the firstborn among many brethren” (Rom 8:29). Therefore, when He came into the world, and in prospect of the grand redemption He was going to accomplish, it is said that He was made “like unto His brethren” (Heb 2:17). Further, they were His “brethren” because they were begotten of God, having the same Father as He Himself had, in His redemptive role. A particular point is made of this in Hebrews 2:11-12. “For both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of One: for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren. Saying, I will declare thy name unto My brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee.” In this text “He that sanctifieth” is Jesus Himself, and “they who are sanctified” are the ones being saved. The expression “are all of One” refers to God the Father. Other versions read, “For both He who sanctifies and those who are sanctified are all from one Father,” NASB “For He who sanctifies and those who are sanctified have all one origin,” NRSV “For the One who sanctifies and those who are sanctified all have one Father,” CSB “Jesus, who makes people holy, and all those who are made holy have the same Father,” GWN and “For both He Who sanctifies [making men holy] and those who are sanctified all have one [Father].” AMPLIFIED

The term “brethren,” therefore, is not a mere institutional term, used to denote people of similar persuasion. This is one of those collective terms used to identify either the entire body of those in Christ, and those within a given area. Other collective terms are “the believers” (1 Tim 4:12), “disciples” (Acts 9:1), “them which are in Christ Jesus” (Rom 8:1), “joint heirs with Christ” (Rom

8:17a), “heirs of God” (Rom 8:17b), “the body of Christ” (1 Cor 12:27), “the household of faith” (Gal 6:10), “the house of God” (1 Tim 3:15; Heb 10:21), “the flock of God” (1 Pet 5:2), “the children of God” (Gal 3:26), “the whole family” (Eph 3:15), and “the sheep” (Heb 13:20).

In Christ, “brethren” is a word that speaks of those who are “born of God” (1 John 3:9; 4:7; 5:4,18). That birth connects them with Jesus, and consequently with one another.

As used here, we see the marvelous unity of the body of Christ. Those who are ranked “first” by Divine appointment (1 Cor 12:28) are linked together with the rest of the disciples. They do not stand by themselves, even though they are in a unique category. That uniqueness, however, is not owing to their personal achievement, or extraordinary natural abilities. It is rather owing to the role appointed to them by God.

Now, the apostles and brethren together hear the news of what took place in the house of Cornelius. It will be interesting to be exposed to the manner in which the Holy Spirit moved Luke to describe this event.

THEY ALSO RECEIVED THE WORD OF GOD

“ . . . heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God.” Other versions read, “also accepted the word of God,” RSV “the word of God had been given to the Gentiles,” BBE “had welcomed God's message also,” CSB “also were being converted,” LIVING and “also had received and accepted and welcomed the Word of God [the doctrine concerning the attainment through Christ of salvation in the kingdom of God].” AMPLIFIED

Although it appears to be incidental, the word “also” is significant. The idea is that not only had the Jews received the Word (for it was “sent” unto them “first” – Acts 3:26), the Gentiles had “also” received it. Even though this had been in the purpose of God all along, it was largely hidden to the people during the early years of the church. Remember that God gave Peter a special revelation of the acceptance of the Gentiles, which he confessed to be an epoch in his life (Acts 10:28).

I am particularly interested in how this work was reported to “the apostles and brethren.” The news was that the Gentiles had “received the word of God.” Had this been reported by some groups of our time, the following might have been said.

- The household of Cornelius were baptized in the Holy Ghost with the evidence of speaking in tongues.
- They all spoke with tongues.
- They were all baptized into Christ.
- They received the anointing.
- They received Christ into their hearts.
- They were all saved.

None of those things are untrue. However, this is not the manner in which the report went forth. Note what they heard: “that the Gentiles had also received the word of God.”

By saying “also,” the report highlighted that what had taken place at the house of Cornelius was, at the foundational level, precisely the same thing that had taken place among the Jews. The details differed slightly, but the substance did not. The Jewish disciples, for example, “waited” until they were endued with power, tarrying in Jerusalem (Lk 24:49). At the house of Cornelius the Spirit was poured out while they were hearing the proclamation of the risen Christ. Also, when they received the Spirit, He was poured out in Jerusalem as the prophets had declared (Zech 12:10). In the case of Cornelius and those with him, the Spirit was poured out in another region.

However, with both the Jews and the Gentiles, receiving the Word of God was the foundation of what was experienced. In both cases, the Spirit of God was given to the people – a “gift” from God. In both cases, the people spoke in other languages of God Himself: the Jews spoke of “the wonderful works of God” (Acts 2:11), and in the case of the Gentiles “they heard them speak with tongues and magnify God” (Acts 10:46).

When the people on the day of Pentecost were baptized and added to the church, it is said that they had “gladly received the word ” (acts 2:41). When the report of the marvelous conversion of the city of Samaria reached the apostles it is written that they “heard that Samaria had received the word of God ” (Acts 8:14). When the spiritual nobility of the Bereans was described, it is written, “they received the word of God with all readiness of mind” (Acts 17:11). In describing the conversion of the Thessalonians, Paul wrote, “And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost” (1 Thess 1:6). And again he wrote, “For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe” (1 Thess 2:13). Even when addressing those in a backslidden and retrogressing state, James admonished them to “ receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls” (James 1:21).

Receiving the Word of God is pivotal to both the new birth and the maturing of spiritual life. That is because it is “living and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the division of soul and spirit, and of joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart” NKJV (Heb 4:12). The word of God’s grace “is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them that are sanctified” (Acts 20:32).

However where the Word of God is not declared, the arm of God will not be revealed (Isa 53:1). When other messages upstage what God has declared, and human emphases supplant the report that God has sanctioned, the legitimacy of human response is open to question. When it becomes fashionable for the Bible to be used to buttress the ideas of men, all of the power is pulled out of it. I will go so far as to say that in the average religious setting of our day, where additions to the institution are taking place, it would be exceedingly difficult to determine if people are receiving the Word of God or not. There are too many human innovations and appeals being made to the people. They range from special seating arrangements, unique lighting effects and visual presentations, to non-threatening entertainment. Appeals are made that present Jesus as ready and willing to resolve unpleasant circumstances, mend marriages, and bring victory over unpleasant habits. Domestic issues are treated as though they superceded spiritual ones. Whether or not this is specifically said, this is the impression that is left with the people.

Now, I am saying that, in such circumstances, just saying the people have received the Word of God has a strange sound to it. What God has said is not the emphasis. Rather, what men need appears to be the stress. Further, unless that need has been defined by the Creator, and justifies a Savior being sent into the world, I do not know how it can be given any priority in preaching.

However, none of the unbecoming circumstances with which we are faced today existed during the time of our text. Such things were introduced when unperceptive men and opportunists were given a place in the professing church. Paul warned the elders from Ephesus that certain would rise from the ranks of church leadership, “speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them” (Acts 20:30). Following the fulfillment of that word, and in the minds of those falling prey to their emphasis, reporting that people had “received the word of God” would no longer be a satisfactory way of speaking.

But this is a proper way of speaking among “the elect of God” (Col 3:12), and the report resonates with truth and power to insightful souls. I am grateful for such words in Scripture, and for the effect they have upon the heart.

THOSE OF THE CIRCUMCISION CONTEND WITH PETER

“ 2 And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, they that were of the circumcision contended with him, 3 Saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them.”

As soon as Peter returns to Jerusalem, it will become apparent that God had not yet taught them what He had “showed” to Peter. There was not a kind of theological time line when the understanding of all believers was up-graded. Spiritual advancement is not always synchronized among the saints. As long as we occupy the domain of time, there will be “little children,” “young men,” and “fathers” within the household of faith (1 John 2:13-14). However, even though there are certain distinctions in the spiritual attainments of the saints, there are “common” things that bind them together, and make them teachable. There are “the common faith” (Tit 1:4) and “the common salvation” (Jude 1:3). There are also the realities that produce “the unity of the Spirit”: one body, one Spirit, one hope of our calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and One God and Father of all (Eph 4:4-5).

The effectiveness of these common realities will be confirmed in this text. Even though, at the first, there is a disparity in the understanding among the brethren, yet the faithful report of the working of the Lord will bring unity among them.

WHEN PETER WAS COME UP TO JERUSALEM

“And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem . . .”

It is approximately fifty direct miles from Caesarea to Jerusalem, perhaps decidedly more, considering the roads traveled. Already, Peter has remained for several days with the brethren who gathered at the house of Cornelius. The arrival of Peter in Jerusalem, therefore, could have been as much as two weeks later.

The centrality of Jerusalem during the life of the early church ought to be noted. This city is mentioned sixty times in the book of Acts. Even when early believers were scattered due to persecution, the apostles had remained in Jerusalem (Acts 8:1). Peter and John were sent from Jerusalem to Samaria (Acts 8:14), and after they had spent time preaching in Samaria, they returned to Jerusalem (Acts 8:25). This is where the newly converted Saul sought to join himself to the disciples (Acts 9:26). Later, when a question arose about the instruction of Gentile believers, Paul and Barnabas would go up to Jerusalem to meet with the apostles and elders “about this question” (Acts 15:2). Later they would deliver to the churches “the decrees” that were “ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem” (Acts 16:4).

In keeping with the way in which the Lord works among His people, some required insights can only be acquired by means of other members of the body of Christ. Those who insist that they cannot accept a truth unless Christ Himself shows it to them must deal with this text.

Therefore, Jerusalem is to be seen as a kind of spiritual hub. Yet, perfect knowledge was not found there, as our text will confirm. In keeping with the way in which the Lord works among His people, some required insights can only be acquired by means of other members of the body of Christ. Those who insist that they cannot accept a truth unless Christ Himself shows it to them must deal with this text. It must be seen that Christ does, indeed, open the eyes of men’s understanding. Often, however, he does it through the words of fellow believers.

THE CIRCUMCISION CONTENDED WITH HIM

“ . . . they that were of the circumcision contended with him.” Other versions read, “took issue with him,” NASB “criticized him,” NIV “had an argument with him,” BBE “began to argue with him,” GWN “protested to him,” NJB “contended against him,” PNT “found fault with him,” WEMOUTH “began to bring charges against him,” WILLIAMS “disputed with him,” MONTGOMERY “found fault with him [separating themselves from him in a hostile spirit, opposing and disputing and contending with him],” AMPLIFIED and “were full of criticism.” PHILLIPS

Considering that the church in Jerusalem was, at this time, almost totally Jewish, precisely who are those who were “of the circumcision?” It does not appear that it was any of the apostles, for they were very familiar with the conversion of the Samaritans, which strongly suggested salvation was not confined to “the circumcision.” I conclude that this refers to those Jews who were unusually zealous for the necessity of circumcision being continued in Christ Jesus. Perhaps they were representatives of the same group who later would go down to Antioch and tell Gentile believers “Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved” (Acts 15:1).

Although these people were unusually zealous concerning the appropriateness of fellowship with Gentiles, it must be remembered that prior to meeting Cornelius, Peter himself had entertained this view. He had said to those gathered in Cornelius’ house, “Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean” (Acts 10:28). As of the time of our text, however, this revelation had not been made known to the Jews who were confronting Peter.

First, this confirms the seriousness with which early believers addressed matters regarding religion, or the outward display of faith. They did not address issues as mere matters of opinion, but heartily embraced what they perceived as truth.

I gather, therefore, that these men were in Christ Jesus, identified with His church, and yet were especially zealous for maintaining the view of the Gentiles that was held forth under the Old Covenant. The epochal nature of the conversion of those gathered together in the house of Cornelius is confirmed by the impact of the report of that event upon the men who contended with Peter, from the church in Jerusalem.

First, this confirms the seriousness with which early believers addressed matters regarding religion, or the outward display of faith. They did not address issues as mere matters of opinion, but heartily embraced what they perceived as truth. We know these men were not religious bigots, because they immediately yielded to the truth when exposed to it. We know from this that they were being governed by their conscience, and not a mere party spirit.

As well as having a love for the truth itself, Peter was held in high regard by these men. However, their regard for him was not sufficient to embrace something they had not yet seen. Remember, Peter has had the advantage of the Lord showing him the truth on this matter. Prior to that, he was of the same persuasion as these men.

The word “contended” is a strong one, and even sounds so. It comes from a root word that means, “to be separated.” THAYER and refers to “debating an issue dispute, contend, argue.” FRIBERG The picture is that of taking Peter to the side and taking serious issue with him on a matter.

I am from a generation that was characterized by strong disputation on religious matters. Frequently these jousts were considered to be among friends, but feelings and convictions were strong, and issues were openly discussed with much fervency. These discussions could degenerate into mere fleshly disputing, to be sure. However this was not always the case, and it certainly was not the case in this text. As will be seen, people of strong spiritual persuasion can be moved to change when they discern the will of the Lord.

YOU WENT IN TO UNCIRCUMCISED MEN

“Saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them.” Other versions read, “and said, "You went into the house of uncircumcised men and ate with them,” NIV “You went to men without circumcision, and took food with them,” BBE “You fellowshiped with Gentiles and even ate with them,” LIVING “for having visited and eaten with men who were not Jews,” WILLIAMS “You actually went in and shared a meal with uncircumcised men!” PHILLIPS and “You stayed in the homes of Gentiles, and you even ate with them!” CEV

There is no record that Peter and those with him ate with those of the household of Cornelius. However, owing to him staying there for several days, and the fact that Peter does not contest this remark, it is almost certain that this was the case.

The persuasion of the wrongness of having extensive dialog with non-Jews is confirmed in the disciples thoughts about Jesus, concerning the dialog He had with the Samaritan woman at the well of Jacob. “And upon this came His disciples, and marveled that He talked with the woman : yet no man said, What seekest Thou? or, Why talkest Thou with her?” John 4:27). They did not take the Master to task on the matter, for they honored Him. However, the whole incident was confusing to them because of the attitude reflected in our text.

The Jewish Reasoning

As I have stated before, in the commentary on 10:28, the Law did not specifically prohibit the Jews from eating with Gentiles. However, it did strictly forbid intermarriage with them. Of the heathen nations it is written, “Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son” (Deut 7:3). It also spoke of a familiarity with the heathen that could move the people to make a covenant with them, and even become idolatrous, worshipping their gods: “Lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, and they go a whoring after their gods, and do sacrifice unto their gods, and one call thee, and thou eat of his sacrifice; And thou take of their daughters unto thy sons, and their daughters go a whoring after their gods, and make thy sons go a whoring after their gods” (Ex 34:15-16).

Following their entrance into Canaan, Joshua had also warned the people about alliances with the heathen. “Else if ye do in any wise go back, and cleave unto the remnant of these nations, even these that remain among you, and shall make marriages with them, and go in unto them, and they to you: Know for a certainty that the LORD your God will no more drive out any of these nations from before you; but they shall be snares and traps unto you, and scourges in your sides, and thorns in your eyes, until ye perish from off this good land which the LORD your God hath given you” (Josh 23:12-13).

It is clear from these text that the original reasoning of devout Jews concerning refraining from intimacy with the heathen, was not prejudicial. It rather reflected a determination not to culture friendships that would lead them into the conditions concerning which God had warned them. Sound Jewish teachers knew that familiarity with the heathen would break down the resistance of the people to idolatry and other practices that would incur the indignation of God against the people.

A New Circumstance Had Arisen

Known to Peter, but unknown to those now contending with him, a new circumstance had come about since Jesus had died and risen again. The Gentiles, like the unclean meats, had been “cleansed.” The salvation of God now included them. The “middle wall of partition” had been “broken down,” and God was making “one new man,” or new generation, out of both Jew and Gentile. As it is written, “For He is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in His flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in Himself of twain one new man, so making peace” (Eph 2:14-15).

Something to Consider

There is still something to consider concerning relationships with other people. In our day, there is a looseness concerning such associations that is unbecoming of the people of God. There is still a danger of certain kinds of mingling that will bring about unequal yokes – believers marrying unbelievers. Paul speaks of this to the Corinthians, who had become lax in their social conduct. “Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you” (2 Cor 6:14-17).

I do not know how it is possible to defend a condition in which those under a superior covenant are characterized by reasoning that is more flawed than those who functioned under an inferior covenant.

While God has cleansed the Gentiles, He has not cleansed unrighteousness, darkness, Belial, or infidels. Now, however, godly wisdom will be required in order to know where to set limits concerning contact with such people. This is why it is written, “Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time” (Col 4:5). And again, “That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing” (1 Thess 4:12). And again, “Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners” (1 Cor 15:33).

The Spirit also testifies concerning the conduct of believers toward those who claim identify with Christ, yet are living in contradiction of that claim. “But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat ” (1 Cor 5:11).

It behooves every child of God to learn how to live wisely in this regard. There are countless professed believers who have drifted away from the Lord because they forged unequal yokes with those who are in darkness. They did not take seriously what the Lord has said on this matter, and thus have fallen into a state that is fraught with eternal jeopardy.

I do not know how it is possible to defend a condition in which those under a superior covenant are characterized by reasoning that is more flawed than those who functioned under an inferior covenant. I understand that it is wrong to impose laws and ordinances that move people to live artificially and without heart or understanding. However, it is equally wrong, if not more so, to so teach people that they conclude they can live in the midst of defilement without themselves becoming defiled, or imagine that evil communications do not corrupt good manners – a matter on which we are not to be deceived (1 Cor 15:34).

Once again, I emphasize that the result of Peter’s testimony confirms those who were contending with him were not factionists or sectarian in their manners. They were rather people whose understanding had not yet matured on the matter of the Gentiles. God will use this occasion to clarify the matter to them, and they will receive it.

HOW PETER GAVE THE REPORT

“ 4 But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, saying . . .”

It is important to note how Peter responds to the criticism leveled against him. It appears that he sensed the sincerity of the people, even though their conclusions were incorrect. He also doubtless recalled that he had thought the same thing prior to his experience at Cornelius' house. Note the wisdom that is reflected in his answer. He will rehearse what the Lord did, and how He did it.

I am convinced that Peter's explanation is driven by the persuasion that the works of God are recognized by those who know Him.

REHEARSING

"But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning . . ." Other versions read, "explained it to them . . . from the beginning," NKJV "proceeded to explain to them," NASB "explained everything to them," NIV "began to explain to them," RSV "gave them an account of it all," BBE "set forth the matter to them," DARBY "expounded the thing . . . to them," GENEVA "began to address them," MRD "explained everything to them," NJB and "began [at the beginning] . AMPLIFIED

That is, there was a single work of God that was wrought at the house of Cornelius, and it was comprised of several different parts – like a building is made up of individual stones. What took place at that time was one of God's "wonderful works"

The words "rehearsed the matter from the beginning" are translated from a single Greek word (avrxa,menoj). The word means "to rehearse a thing from the beginning." STRONG'S That is, there was a single work of God that was wrought at the house of Cornelius, and it was comprised of several different parts – like a building is made up of individual stones. What took place at that time was one of God's "wonderful works" (Psa 40:5; 78:4; Acts 2:11). The fact that this was a single work required that it be rehearsed "from the beginning." This would bring out more clearly what the Lord was doing.

It is good to think of God's "wonderful works" in this way – of some objective that was completed in several stages, or by various means. Some of those single works with multiple facets include the following.

- The creation: there were six different days of creation, with various orders of creation.
- The flood: rain was sent, a flood covered the world, all flesh died, and Noah and his family were saved.
- The selection of Abraham: he was called to go to a certain country, was given the promise of being a blessing, and the source of blessing, that nations would come from him, and that the ultimate Seed, the Messiah would come from his lineage.
- The deliverance of Israel from Egypt: this involved ten plagues, the spoiling of the Egyptians, observing the Passover, coming out of Egypt at midnight, and crossing the Red Sea.
- God sending His Son into the world: a birth was involved, a flight into Egypt, growing up in Nazareth, being revealed at His baptism, being tempted, and ministering among the people.
- The death of Jesus: involved being rejected, tried, mocked, crucified dying, taking away the sins of the world, destroying the devil, plundering principalities and powers, reconciling the world, and making peace.
- The resurrection of Jesus: involved defeating death, overcoming the grave, His death being validated, ascending into heaven, being enthroned at God's right hand, and receiving all power in heaven and earth.
- The inauguration of the New Covenant: involved sending forth the Holy Spirit, inspiring His disciples, a rushing mighty wind, cloven tongues of fire, speaking in other languages, proclaiming the Gospel, directing inquiring souls.

- The Second coming of Christ: when Jesus comes again, God will show Him in all of His glory, the heaven and the earth will pass away, the dead will be raised, the wicked will be gathered together for destruction, the righteous will be gathered to Christ, the day of judgment will occur, and Satan and his hosts will be forever banished from the Lord and those who have been gathered to Him.

- The conversion of the Gentiles: directing Cornelius, illuminating Peter, the gathering of a host to the house of Cornelius, the pouring forth of the Holy Spirit, the confirmation of the acceptance of the Gentiles, the granting of repentance, and the purifying of their hearts by faith.

A rehearsal of the acts of the Lord is a recounting of what actually took place in His works. In the song of Deborah, she made reference to the rehearsal of the righteous acts of the Lord: “. . . there shall they rehearse the righteous acts of the LORD, even the righteous acts toward the inhabitants of His villages in Israel . . .” (Judg 5:11). David referred to such a rehearsal when he wrote, “They shall abundantly utter the memory of Thy great goodness, and shall sing of Thy righteousness” (Psa 145:7).

EXPOUNDING

“. . . and expounded it by order unto them, saying . . .” Other versions read, “explain to them in orderly sequence,” NASB “precisely as it had happened,” NIV “step by step,” RSV “in detail what had actually happened,” CJB “point by point what had happened,” GWN “methodically,” MRD “exactly what had happened,” NLT “narrated and explained to them step by step [the whole list of events],” and “how the situation had actually arisen.” PHILLIPS

To expound a matter is to set it before the people, exposing their minds to both the scope and the details of the matter being expounded. What is being set forth is presented in an orderly manner, so that the sense of it can be perceived. Conclusions will be drawn, and principles will be set forth. All of this means that the person delivering the word has an understanding of what actually took place in the events being described.

As will be seen in this very text, it is the implication of the facts that gives them their power. For example, a person could speak eloquently, affirming that Jesus died, was buried, and rose again. However, if what was accomplished in those realities is not made known, they have no power over the individual. Unless a person knows WHY Jesus died, and what took place at that time, the report is powerless. If men proclaim that He raised from the dead, yet are mute about what has resulted from that resurrection, and how He is alive with all power in heaven and earth, what good is the proclamation?

. The Divine economy makes no place for purported ministries that do not contribute to the edification and maturity of those who have been begotten by God.

If men declare with Paul that they are determined to know nothing but Christ and Him crucified, yet fail to expound that crucifixion as Paul did (Rom 3:24-25; 4:25; 5:9; 8:3 1 Cor 5:7; 6:20; 2 Cor 5:14-15,19,21; 8:9; Gal 1:4; 3:13; 4:4-5; Eph 1:6-7; 2:13-16; Col 2:14-15; Heb 2:149:14, etc), how will the message have a God-honoring impact upon the people?

The church of our day sorely requires deliverance from stifling academia. It is time to bring an end to the dominance of religious leaders who lack the understanding and aptitude required to perfect the saints and ready them for “the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ” (Eph 4:11-12). Whatever has caused professing believers to remain in a spiritually juvenile state, that has deprived them of wisdom and spiritual understanding, needs to be purged from the church. It is time to “purge out . . . the old leaven,” as we are enjoined to do (1 Cor 5:7). The Divine economy makes no place for purported ministries that do not contribute to the edification and maturity of those who have been begotten by God.

Our text provides a slice of genuine spiritual life, brought about when men are given “the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ Jesus” (2 Cor 4:6). This is the vision without which the people will surely perish (Prov 29:18). In our text, the manner in which obstacles are overcome is lived out before us, and it is refreshing to consider.

PETER REPORTS HIS VISION

“ 5 I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I saw a vision, A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me: 6 Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.”

Peter does not argue with those who have raised an objection concerning what he is reported to have done. He makes no attempt to justify his action with human reasoning. Instead, he will simply rehearse in order the things that took place, and draw some conclusions that will be obvious to those with spiritual minds.

In my judgment, if God has not said or done something that bears directly on any subject of controversy, it is doubtful that any lasting good can come from pursuing it. If the only way we can defend our actions is by affirming they reflect our own preference, or that we are strongly persuaded of the propriety of such endeavors, then there is no need to engage in a heated controversy over it. Because they rest on the foundation of human reasoning, such contentions will awaken the flesh, and make a place for the entry and influence of the wicked one. This is always the case when human opinion and preference are placed upon the throne of the heart.

WHAT HE SAW

“I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I saw a vision, A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me . . .”

There is exacting precision in everything Peter says. He does not embellish his report, as flesh is prone to do. He simply states the facts in the case.

- “I was in Joppa” (10:8-9).
- He was “praying” (10:9).
- He was “in a trance” (10:10).
- He saw a vision; “a certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners” (10:11 does not call this a vision, but recounts the vision itself).
- The sheet “came even to me” (10:11 says it was “let down to the earth.” Later it is written that Peter pondered the meaning of “the vision” – 17,19).

WHAT HE DID

“ 6 Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.”

Peter says he “fastened” his eyes on the contents of the sheet and “considered” considered what he saw. Peter rehearses the exact categories of animals mentioned in the tenth chapter: “fourfooted beats, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air” (10:12).

Here Peter reports that he fastened his eyes on the animals, and “considered” what he saw. This is not stated in the historical record of the event, which simply states the contents of the sheet. However, what followed substantiates that Peter did, in fact consider what he saw, for his response was one that could only follow a due consideration of what was set before him.

We know from the context and Peter’s response that he pondered the vision with the Law of God in mind, and its precise definition of “clean” and “unclean” meats. He did not think within the context of his natural appetite or mere personal preferences. His view was driven by what he had been taught through the Law.

Further, Peter will filter the opportunity set before him through his understanding of the will of the Lord. This provides us an index of what is involved in loving the Lord with all of our heart, soul, MIND, and strength. That spiritual posture constrains the individual to consider opportunities within the context of right and wrong, as perceived in one’s understanding of the Scriptures.

In our day, there has been such a significant departure from the truth that this type of thinking is virtually unknown among Christians. If it is countered that Peter’s thinking was wrong, it must be perceived that this is only true because his understanding was deficient at that point. The way in which he thought was correct, and the reason for his thinking was right. He only lacked enlightenment to arrive at a proper conclusion – and he received it.

PETER REPORTS THE HEAVENLY COMMUNICATION

“ 7 And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter; slay and eat. 8 But I said, Not so, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.”

In the historical record of the event Peter is reporting, we are told that Peter was hungry at the time of the vision, and that some food was being prepared for him. He had gone “to the housetop to pray about the sixth hour: and he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance . . .” (10:9-10). Peter does not cite this detail here, because it is evident from the dialog that follows. The command that is given to Peter would have no significance if he had not been hungry.

It is a principle that teaching, such as that realized when Peter was on the housetop, has no impact if it is not within the context of perceived need or desire. Men cannot effectively be taught truth by mere rote. Peter’s natural hunger caused him to look with greater interest and discretion upon the living creatures that had been lowered from heaven and set before him in the vision of reference.

WHAT WAS SAID

“And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter; slay and eat.” Other versions read, “kill and eat,” NKJV “take them for food,” BBE “slaughter and eat,” CJB “Kill these animals and eat them,” GWN “Kill and eat whatever you wish,” LIVING and “kill something and eat it.” WILLIAMS

This is a precise report of what was said when the voice from heaven spoke to Peter: “Rise, Peter, kill and eat” (Acts 10:13).

This voice came from heaven, and it is confirmed that it was not a temptation, or test, like the time Abraham was commanded to offer Isaac as a burnt offering to God (Gen 22:1-13). Among other things, this shows that those who command men “to abstain from meats” are not reflecting the mind of God (1 Tim 4:3). Whether this is done in the name of health or that of religion, it is nothing more than a human opinion – and it is at variance with what God has said about eating meat (and there were no vegetables in the sheet lowered from heaven). Without laboring this matter, God has addressed the subject with unusual clarity – even though, at the time he had the vision, Peter had not yet seen it. “Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils ; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats , which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving: for it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained” (1 Tim 4:3-6).

Now, whatever a person may personally think on this subject, whether Peter or someone of our generation, the strength of the above instruction is most arresting to consider. Keep in mind that this is a kind of commentary on “kill and eat.”

The sources of the teaching being exposed are those who have “departed from the faith,” are giving heed to “seducing spirits, and doctrines of demons,” NKJV speak lies in their hypocrisy, and have a seared conscience. Remember, what is being taught is that marriage is forbidden, and men ought to abstain from meats.

Such teaching directly contradicts both the creation and the intention of the Lord. First, God created the “meats” in question “to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth” – which, at the time of his vision, Peter did not know. Second, “every creature of God” is good, and is not to be refused, “if it be received with thanksgiving.” Third, such food is “sanctified by the word of God” (what God has said) and “ prayer” (in blessing and thanksgiving). It is this perspective that made it right for the voice from heaven to command Peter to “kill and eat” what he saw.

You may recall that Jesus was completely intolerant of those who lived contrary to what they professed. He solemnly warned His disciples of those who “say and do not” (Matt 23:3). Even under the Law, God upbraided those whose lives contradicted what they said with their lips (Isa 29:13-14), and Jesus confirmed that condition was condemned when He was on the earth (Matt 15:8-9).

Note that Paul also told Timothy that if he “put the brethren in remembrance of these things,” he would be a “good minister of Jesus Christ.” I do not dare to imagine how a “minister” is to be considered who does not do this!

These days, it has become fashionable for Christian dieticians to be given undue influence among believers. These men, for the most part, have taken God out of the consideration of foods. Whatever good they may be thought to have contributed to the household of faith, they cannot remove the words of the Spirit that food is “sanctified by the word of God and prayer.” If a person cannot put the health of their body in the hands of the Lord, I do not know how it can be substantiated that they can “commit the keeping of their souls” to the Lord (1 Pet 4:19).

If all of this seems irrelevant, remember that Peter’s experience appeared to be only related to matters of diet at the time, and how that bore upon his understanding of the Law of God. His understanding was enlarged only as he took seriously the words that were spoken to him.

HOW PETER RESPONDED

“ 8 But I said, Not so, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.”

Again, Peter’s report is most precise. In the record of the actual event, Luke reports, “But Peter said, Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean” (Acts 10:14).

Peter's entire life had been ordered by his understanding of the word of the Lord. He had never allowed himself the luxury of ignoring the word of the Lord in order to gratify fleshly preferences. Again, I want to emphasize how unusual such a posture of life is in our time – even among professing believers in Christ! I do not know that it can be substantiated that a person will receive increased understanding if he has not lived up to what he already knows.

This is stated doctrinally in Galatians 6:15-16: “For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature . And as many as walk according to this rule , peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.” The Amplified Bible reads, “Peace and mercy be upon all who walk by this rule [who discipline themselves and regulate their lives by this principle], even upon the [true] Israel of God!” Walking according to the rule of new creatureship is the same as putting on the new man (Eph 4:24; Col 3:10). It is the same as “not” living unto ourselves, but “unto Him which died for them, and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15). This is what is involved in reckoning ourselves to be “dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord” (Rom 6:11).

You may recall that Jesus was completely intolerant of those who lived contrary to what they professed. He solemnly warned His disciples of those who “say and do not” (Matt 23:3). Even under the Law, God upbraided those whose lives contradicted what they said with their lips (Isa 29:13-14), and Jesus confirmed that condition was condemned when He was on the earth (Matt 15:8-9). Paul also taught that those who maintained a form of godliness, while rejecting the power of it, were not to be rejected by the people of God (2 Tim 3:5). The sudden influx of counselors and psychiatric specialists within the professing church as not changed this situation, even though they speak as though this is not the case.

My point in mentioning this is that, in Peter, we are being exposed to a man who lived within the parameters of his conviction and persuasion. That is the kind of man that will be given further light. Such fits within the parameters mentioned in Psalm 25:14: “The secret of the LORD is with them that fear Him; and He will show them His covenant” (Psa 25:14). It is nothing more than an exercise in vanity for one lacking this quality to seek for understanding.

PETER REPORTS HIS RESPONSE TO THE WORDS FROM HEAVEN

“ 9 But the voice answered me again from heaven, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common. 10 And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven.”

Peter continues his detailed report of the epochal event, starting at the beginning and proceeding in an orderly manner to the conclusion.

HEAVENLY PERSISTENCE

“But the voice answered me again from heaven, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.”

Again, Peter is precise in his report. The historical record states that the heavenly voice said, “What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common” (Acts 10:15). Peter is told not to even SAY something is “common,” or polluted, that God has “cleansed,” or purified – whether he was convinced that what he said was right or not! Let it be clear that it is wrong to say anything that contradicts what God has said or done!

Here we are exposed to a certain heavenly manner. When men say something that contradicts the mind and word of the Lord, heaven is neither neutral nor tolerant. Men may be content when there is a variance between how men think and what God says, but this is not the case in heaven. One of the basic postulates in the salvation of God is that of a fundamental agreement between the saved and the Savior. Given due heed, salvation will lead men into this unanimity just as surely as is seen in the case of Peter.

“What God hath cleansed” is not the statement of a hypothetical case. This is a revelation of something that has already occurred. The word translated “hath cleansed” speaks of an action that has already occurred, the effects of which are ongoing. In other words, the animals that Peter viewed were once “unclean,” but a Divine judgment had made that distinction obsolete. Their former uncleanness was only tentative in order to assist men to understand some higher principles – particularly regarding distinctions among men.

The same is true of the preaching of the Gospel, itself. The results that the Gospel are calculated to produce cannot be brought about by any other message of emphasis. A person cannot be begotten of God through a spurious message, for God does accomplish His work through lies. Neither, indeed, can a person be brought to spiritual maturity by means of another message.

The precise time when “all meats” were “purged,” or cleansed, is revealed to have been during Christ’s ministry. When speaking of what really polluted men, Jesus declared, “Do you not understand that whatever goes into the man from outside cannot defile him; because it does not go into his heart, but into his stomach, and is eliminated? (Thus He declared all foods clean)” NASB (Mark 7:18-19).

No further explanation is provided. It was Peter’s responsibility to ponder what had been said, seeking to understand it – and that is precisely what he did.

THE END OF THE MATTER

“ 10 And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven.”

Three consecutive times Peter was commanded to “Rise, kill and eat,” and three times he responded, “Not so, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.” Again, this precisely accords with the historical record in the tenth chapter of Acts: “This was done thrice: and the vessel was received up again into heaven” (Acts 10:16).

We must not assume that Peter was only reliant upon his memory in giving this report. His heart was right, and thus he was directed into the giving of a flawless report of what had taken place.

Also, we ought to note that valid observations can only be made when an accurate and faithful report is given. Those to whom Peter is bearing witness will draw a conclusion from what he reports. That conclusion will only be as valid as the report is accurate.

The same is true of the preaching of the Gospel, itself. The results that the Gospel are calculated to produce cannot be brought about by any other message of emphasis. A person cannot be begotten of God through a spurious message, for God does accomplish His work through lies. Neither, indeed, can a person be brought to spiritual maturity by means of another message. This can only be accomplished “according to” the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as affirmed in Rom 16:25. Within the professed Christian community there are a staggering number of attempts being made to convert people and to bring them to maturity that ignore the Divine means that have been appointed by the Lord Himself. All such efforts are labors that are in vain.

PETER REPORTS THE CONFRONTATION OF THE MESSENGERS FROM CORNELIUS

“ 11 And, behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Caesarea unto me. 12 And the Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house . . .”

I want to draw your attention to the total lack of any form of distortion in Peter's report. There is no exaggeration, no critical omission, and no carnal embellishment. One of the besetting sins of many religious leaders is their tendency to overstate things in their reports, or make things appear to be more remarkable than they really were. This is the result of the lingering effects of pride, against which all believers must exert themselves. Under the New Covenant pride is addressed more directly, revealing something of its nature.

One of the besetting sins of many religious leaders is their tendency to overstate things in their reports, or make things appear to be more remarkable than they really were. This is the result of the lingering effects of pride, against which all believers must exert themselves.

THINKING TOO HIGHLY OF ONESELF. "For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think ; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith" (Rom 12:3).

- MINDING HIGH THINGS. "Be of the same mind one toward another. Mind not high things , but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits" (Rom 12:16).

- BEING PUFFED UP. "And ye are puffed up , and have not rather mourned, that he that hath done this deed might be taken away from among you" (1 Cor 5:2).

- IMPROPER GLORYING. "Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?" (1 Cor 5:6).

- OVERESTIMATING ONE'S STRENGTH. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" (1 Cor 10:12).

- COMMENDING ONESELF. "For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth" (2 Cor 10:18).

- HAVING A LOFTY VIEW OF ONESELF. "For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself" (Gal 6:3).

- A QUEST FOR VAINGLORY. "Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory ; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves" (Phil 2:3).

- LIFTED UP FOR A FALL. "Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil" (1 Tim 3:6).

- NOT CONSENTING TO WHOLESOME WORDS, BUT TEACHING OTHER THINGS. "If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; he is proud , knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings" (1 Tim 6:5-4).

- BEING HIGHMINDED. "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not highminded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy" (1 Tim 6:17).

- LOVING SELF AND BEING BOASTFUL. "For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud , blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy" (2 Tim 3:2).

- NOT BEING CLOTHED WITH HUMILITY. "Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble" (1 Pet 5:5).

I mention these traits because of their glaring absence from Peter's report. Although he is reporting an epoch – something that had never been reported before – yet he makes no effort to overstate the case. He does not attempt to impress the people with his own accomplishment, but yields himself to the Lord – even in the reporting of things in which he has been involved.

LED BY THE SPIRIT

They Were Already There

Peter reports that three men had already come to the door – “immediately.” The historical account states that “while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate, and called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there” (Acts 10:17-18). There is no contradiction in the account, for the historical record states they had already arrived, and had even inquired concerning his presence there.

I do not doubt that a Jewish mind, cultured in the Scriptures, and acquainted with the working of the Lord, immediately associated this report with Divine coordination. The accounts of Joseph, Moses, David, Daniel, and others would have shaped the way they thought about such things. On the other hand, those who are not acquainted with Scripture are unable to correctly assess the report of Divine workings. They tend to think more of human initiative, coincidence, and happenstance.

Those who are acquainted with the Lord know that the Spirit stands behind, and is involved in, what He directs men to do. The fact that He told Peter to go with the men suggests that. Furthermore, the fact that the Spirit told him not to doubt makes the conclusion unavoidable that the Spirit had, in fact, directed the men to come to Peter.

The Spirit Bade Me

The record in the tenth chapter of Acts reads, “. . . the Spirit said unto him . . . go with them, doubting nothing: for I have sent them” (10:19-20). Those who are acquainted with the Lord know that the Spirit stands behind, and is involved in, what He directs men to do. The fact that He told Peter to go with the men suggests that. Furthermore, the fact that the Spirit told him not to doubt makes the conclusion unavoidable that the Spirit had, in fact, directed the men to come to Peter. It was not uncomfortable for Peter to speak in this manner, nor was it offensive to those who heard him speak. This would not be the case in some circles in which I have traveled.

HE DID WHAT HE WAS TOLD TO DO

“Moreover these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house . . .”

At this point, Peter does not recount what the men said to him when he confronted them. They had reported the character of Cornelius, the vision that he had received, and the commission they had been given. The fact that the Spirit had told Peter to go with the men “nothing doubting” made the appropriateness of his response clear. Further, the essentials concerning Cornelius will be covered by the report of his words to Peter.

The historical account does not specify the number of men that went with Peter. This is the first time that number is made known. Acts 10:23 states that “certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him.” In the record of what took place at the house of Cornelius, they are referred to as “they of the circumcision which believed . . . as many as came with Peter” (10:45). These six men were apparently with Peter, and are substantiating witnesses to what Peter now testifies.

To this point, Peter's words confirm the seriousness of giving accurate testimony. Any testimony that purports to have to do with the working of the Lord, or the experience of His great salvation, is to be delivered with absolute truthfulness. It is to contain no hidden agenda, or in any way misrepresent what took place.

PETER REPORTS HIS ARRIVAL AT CORNELIUS HOUSE

“ 13 And he showed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter; 14 Who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.”

It will become apparent that in his report Peter endeavors to show the involvement of God in this whole incident. The fact of the matter is that it is more important to know what the Lord has done than what has happened to men. When men make human experience the paramount matter, they have drifted away from the moorings of faith.

To this point, Peter has accented heaven's involvement.

- He saw a certain vision of a sheet “let down from heaven” (11:5; 10:11).
- He heard “a voice from heaven” commanding him to “Arise, kill, and eat” (11:7; 10:13).
- When Peter responded, “the voice” answered him again “from heaven, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common” (11:9; 10:15).
- Upon the arrival of the men from Cornelius' house, Peter reports that “the Spirit” told him to “go with them, nothing doubting” (11:12; 10:19-20).

To this point, these are the fundamental things that Peter has reported. All of his involvement, whether in word and deed, were driven by these realities. In fact, what Peter is really doing is rehearsing “the righteous acts of the Lord” (Judges 5:11). He is reporting what the Lord has done.

This is the same thing that took place on the day of Pentecost. The people heard the Spirit-filled disciples speaking “the wonderful works of God” (2:11). Peter also spoke in this manner as he addressed the people, declaring what the Lord had done.

- He reported Jesus as “a Man approved by God among you” (2:22).
- He spoke of “the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God” that drove the death of Christ (2:23).
- He declared that God “raised up” Jesus from the dead, loosing the hold of death upon Him (2:24).
- He referred to the oath that God swore to David, affirming that He would “raise up Christ to sit on his throne” (2:30).
- He affirmed again that God “raised up” Jesus (2:32).
- He declared that Jesus had “received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit” NKJV (2:33).
- He announced that, in the capacity of the exalted One, Jesus had “shed forth” the Holy Spirit which the people then saw and heard (2:33).
- He proclaimed that God had made “that same Jesus whom, ye crucified, both Lord and Christ” (2:36).

Proper glory is brought to God when His doing is perceived as fundamental in the matter. This is even true when His chastening hand is being seen. Ezra recognized the hand of the Lord in the great woes that had come upon Israel. “And after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great trespass, seeing that thou our God hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve, and hast given us such deliverance as this” (Ezra 9:13).

I have taken the time to say these things because it is possible for a testimony to become an end of itself – simply to relate what has happened to the individual. Valid testimony, however, involves making known what “the Lord hath done” (Psa 126:2-3). Isaiah also declared that this principle that is woven throughout the record of Divine dealings: “That they may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of the LORD hath done this , and the Holy One of Israel hath created it” (Isa 41:20).

HE SHOWED US

Immediately, Peter draws attention to the angel who was sent to the house of Cornelius. Devout Jews knew that angels do not roam about, going here and there at will. When they appear on earth, it is because they have been sent on a mission by God Himself. There are numerous records of angels being “sent” by the Lord (Gen 19:13; Num 20:16; 2 Chron 21:15; 32:21; Dan 3:28; 6:22; 10:11; Zech 1:10). They are described as God’s “ministers” (Psa 104:4), sent forth to “do His commandments” (Psa 103:20). Informed souls know that the presence of an angel indicates that God Himself is at work. Whatever the angel says or does is a revelation of the righteous decrees and acts of God.

Although the historical record includes the words of the angel concerning heaven’s recognition of Cornelius’ “prayers and alms,” Peter makes no reference to them here (Acts 10:4). The fact that God had sent an angel to speak to Cornelius confirmed that he was within the circumference of Divine favor. Nothing more needed to be said about that favor.

WORDS WHEREBY THEY WOULD BE SAVED

“ 14 Who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.” Other versions read, “words by which you and all your household will be saved,” NKJV “a message through which . . . will be saved,” NIV “words . . . through which . . . may get salvation,” BBE “message for you which will enable you and your whole household to be saved,” CSB “discourses, by which thou wilt live,” MRD “I you how you and everyone in your household can be saved,” NLT “sayings by which thou shalt be saved,” YLT “sayings by which thou shalt be saved,” WEYMOUTH and “He will give and explain to you a message by means of which you and all your household [as well] will be saved [from eternal death.” AMPLIFIED

This is evidently the more full, or complete, revelation of what the angel had said to Cornelius.

- In the historical record, Luke reported that the angel said concerning Peter, “he will tell thee what thou oughtest to do ” (Acts 10:6). This emphasizes the purpose of the words – to direct Cornelius.
- The men reported to Peter that the angel had told Cornelius to “send for thee into his house, to hear words of thee ” (Acts 10:22). This accents the necessity of hearing a specific message, as compared to the mere conveyance of a plan or procedure.
- When Peter arrived at his house, Cornelius told him the angel had said concerning Peter, “who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee ” (Acts 10:32). This places the stress on the necessity of a person being confronted with a messenger that has been sent by God – for “how shall they preach except they be sent?” (Rom 10:15).

• Later, at the Jerusalem conference concerning the acceptance of the Gentiles, Peter reported this incident in these words: “God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe ” (Acts 15:7). This emphasizes the contents of the message, and the fundamental response of those hearing it.

When a strictly academic approach is taken to Scripture, reports such as those given concerning this event can be confusing. If a person is looking for some kind of pattern, or procedural outline, either frustration will be experienced, or a distorted emphasis will be adopted. The truth of the matter is that more is being accomplished in the saving of men than is ordinarily perceived. When men make it their primary aim to “win souls,” “lead people to Christ,” or bring people to “accept Christ,” they stand in danger of adopting a method rather than delivering a message. There is a vast difference between seeking to garner results and being a faithful steward of the Gospel of Christ. In the record before us, the emphasis is placed upon what is said, not why it is said.

If it is true that the “words” delivered by Peter were intended to be ones by which Cornelius and those with him “shall be saved,” ought not the stress to be placed on the words themselves? If “the power of God unto salvation” is found in the message, precisely what kind of allowance is given to men to shape that message, structure it so that it is well pleasing, or present it in a way that is calculated to produce results?

The message itself is designed to produce results. It does not require the wisdom and strategies of men to do so! The power of God is in the Gospel – the record God has given of His Son. How could any man hope to add something to it to make it effective?

The message itself is designed to produce results. It does not require the wisdom and strategies of men to do so! The power of God is in the Gospel – the record God has given of His Son. How could any man hope to add something to it to make it effective?

In confirmation of this, let me remind you once again of what Peter actually declared to Cornelius and those assembled in his house.

- God is no respecter of persons (10:34).
- In every nation the one who fears God and works righteousness is accepted by Him (10:35).
- God sent the word of the Gospel to Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ (10:36a).
- Jesus Christ is Lord of all (10:36b).
- This word was published throughout all Judea, beginning at Galilee, after the baptism that John preached (10:37).
- God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit and power (10:38a).
- Jesus went about doing good and healing all who were oppressed by the devil (10:38b).
- Jesus was effective because God was with Him (10:38c).
- Peter and those with him were witnesses of what Jesus did in the land of the Jews and Jerusalem (10:39a).
- The Jews slew Jesus and hanged Him on a tree (10:39b).
- God raised Jesus from the dead on the third day (10:40a).
- God showed the risen Christ openly (10:40b).
- God did not show Jesus to all of the people, but only to witnesses that had been chosen beforehand (10:41a).

- The witnesses were those who ate and drank with Him after He rose from the dead (10:41b).
- Jesus commanded these witnesses to preach to the people (10:42a).
- Jesus commanded the witnesses to testify to the people that He had been ordained by God to judge the living and the dead (10:42b).
- All of the prophets witnessed that through Jesus' name, whoever believed in Him would receive remission of sins (10:43).

In his own words, Peter provides the reason why he was preaching the message. Jesus told him to preach to the people. Jesus told him to testify that He had been ordained to judge the living and the dead. That is why he was preaching. He knew that the Lord Jesus Himself accompanied the message. He knew that the Holy Spirit worked through that message, convincing men of sin, righteousness, and judgment (John 16:8-11). All of this is unquestionably confirmed by what happened while he was preaching.

UNGODLY DIVERSIONS

Since the professing church has fallen into the hands of opportunists, its entire thrust has been changed. The objective now is recruitment and the increase of numbers. Every effort is being made to justify this quest. The appeal is no longer the Gospel itself. Some of the tactics that are now employed are as follows.

- Special buildings that will appeal to the masses. These included everything from cathedrals and commodious auditoriums to gymnasiums and family centers.
- Special programs for special people groups. These include youth, senior citizens, singles, and married people.
- Special recovery groups for divorced people, those enslaved to chemical substances, pornography, and other sinful involvements.
- Special church staffs are developed to meet the needs of the people. These include counselors, family life ministers, youth ministers, children's ministers, etc.
- Special studies and courses are offered on the family life, managing finances, obtaining employment, world religions, etc.
- Special services are created to give the people what they prefer: contemporary worship services, traditional worship services, early worship service, brief gatherings, etc.
- Outreach efforts include making friends with those in the community, becoming involved in community projects, and being a general resource for various political involvements.

Someone might ask, "Is anything really wrong with these things?" That is not even a proper question! The issue is not if anything wrong can be found in them, but precisely what is it about them that fits into God's revealed priorities? Exactly what do they do that God's "power unto salvation" does not do? Precisely where is Jesus in such approaches, and what role does the Gospel have in them?

Why are such approaches not found in Scripture? Is it because they are areas in which God has made an allowance for the creativity and wisdom of men? Or, is it possible that they represent an understanding that is actually foreign to the Word of God?

It seems to me that when we read an account like the one before us with some degree of discretion, it is not possible to avoid making some comparison with modern religious trends.

PETER REPORTS THE HOLY SPIRIT FALLING ON THOSE WHO HEARD

“ 15 And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning. 16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.”

This sheds great light on the manner in which the Word of God is to be delivered. Notice, there was no attempt to grab, so to speak, the attention of the hearers. Peter already had their attention! They had come together “to hear words” by which they would be saved. Thus he gave no elaborate introduction.

Peter now relates what happened as he was speaking. This will fully justify not only what he did, in going in to the Gentiles, but what he declared to them. This is the “fruit” by which the validity of his person, action, and words will be established – just as Jesus said when “His disciples came to Him” on “a mountain” (Matt 5:1). “Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them” (Mat 7:16-20).

Fruitless labors are never right, however men may seek to justify them! This is why Paul was “afraid” of the Galatians, standing in doubt of their legitimacy. They were not producing genuine fruit. “I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain” (Gal 4:11). And again, “for I stand in doubt of you” (Gal 4:20). Paul did not change his tactic toward the Galatians in order produce a more favorable result. Instead, he called them back to the message that he had originally proclaimed to them (Gal 1:8-12).

In my judgment this aspect of the kingdom of God has been greatly, if not altogether, obscured by the modern church.

WHEN I BEGAN TO SPEAK

“And as I began to speak . . .” Other versions read, “while I was talking,” BBE “I had hardly begun speaking,” CJB “when I there commenced speaking,” MRD “I had scarcely begun to speak,” NJB “in my beginning to speak,” YLT “so sooner had I begun to speak,” WEYMOUTH and “as soon as I began to speak.” MONTGOMERY

This sheds great light on the manner in which the Word of God is to be delivered. Notice, there was no attempt to grab, so to speak, the attention of the hearers. Peter already had their attention! They had come together “to hear words” by which they would be saved. Thus he gave no elaborate introduction. He did not give an extensive review of what had happened to him on the housetop. Whether men like to hear it or not, it is possible to deliver a message in such a way as to obscure the truth of God, throwing all manner of dust upon the subject and into the eyes of the hearers.

Peter obviously had much to say, but he was only able to begin saying it when heaven interrupted him, reacting to his message. He certainly must have been speaking “words . . . taught by the Spirit, combining spiritual thoughts with spiritual words” NASB (1 Cor 2:13). There can be no question about the acceptability of Peter’s proclamation. The message he delivered was one conducive to the believing of the Word.

AS ON US AT THE BEGINNING

“ . . . the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning.” Other versions read, “the Holy Spirit fell upon them, as upon us at the beginning,” NKJV “the Holy Spirit fell upon them, just as He did upon us at the beginning,” NASB “the Holy Spirit came on them as he had come on us at the beginning,” NIV “the Holy Spirit came on them, as on us at first,” BBE “the Holy Spirit came down on them, just as on us at the beginning,” CSB “the Holy Spirit came to these people. This was the same thing that happened to us in the beginning,” GWN and “the Holy Spirit fell on them, just as he fell on us at the beginning!” LIVING

This is also what the historical record declared: “While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word” (Acts 10:44). Those who were with Peter were astonished “because that on the Gentiles was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost” (Acts 10:45). It was then that Peter observed they had “received the Holy Ghost as well as we ” (Acts 10:47).

Therefore, what took place at the house of Cornelius was precisely the same thing that took place on the day of Pentecost to the disciples – “as on us at the beginning.” The experience of the disciples, therefore, was not an exclusive or unique one, else this observation could not have been made. Neither does Peter make any distinction between the manner in which the apostles received the Spirit, and that exhibited at the house of Cornelius. In fact, he makes a point of the similarity, not any disparity.

THEN I REMEMBERED

“ 16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.”

In order to remove all doubt concerning what was taking place, Peter correlates it with Christ’s own word concerning being baptized with the Holy Spirit. Those words were spoken after Jesus rose from the dead, and immediately prior to His ascension into heaven. They are found in Acts 1:5: “And, being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me. For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence” (Acts 1:4-5).

For purposes of clarification, the following expressions are not found in any version of Scripture: “baptism of the Holy Ghost,” “baptism of the Holy Spirit,” and “baptism of the Spirit.” Nor, indeed, is the phrase, “baptism of the Holy Ghost with the evidence of . . . ” expressed in Scripture. No standard version of Scripture speaks of being baptized “in water” or “in the Spirit.” Baptism is always said to be “with water” or “with the Holy Spirit”

John the Baptist also referred to this outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and he declared it to “the people,” who were considering in their hearts whether or not John was the Christ. To these people John said, “I indeed baptize you with water; but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose: He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire” (Luke 3:16; Matt 3:11). Mark omits the words “and with fire” : “I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost” (Mark 1:8). John says of Jesus, “And I knew Him not: but He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on Him, the same is He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost” (John 1:33). Another version reads, “And I did not recognize Him, but He who sent me to baptize in water said to me, ‘He upon whom you see the Spirit descending and remaining upon Him, this is the one who baptizes in the Holy Spirit.’” NASB

However, Peter does not recall the words of John the Baptist, but of the Lord Jesus, for whom John prepared the way. The point here is that John did not say this was an experience unique to a certain believers, nor is there any indication that Jesus intended to leave that impression. Now, Peter positively affirms that is not the case, for same gift was poured out upon Gentile believers.

This is doubtless the experience to which Peter referred on the day of Pentecost: “Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear” (Acts 2:33).

The difficulty with this text comes when men assign a unique meaning to being “baptized with the Holy Spirit.” For purposes of clarification, the following expressions are not found in any version of Scripture: “baptism of the Holy Ghost,” “baptism of the Holy Spirit,” and “baptism of the Spirit.” Nor, indeed, is the phrase, “baptism of the Holy Ghost with the evidence of . . .” expressed in Scripture.

No standard version of Scripture speaks of being baptized “in water” or “in the Spirit.” Baptism is always said to be “with water” or “with the Holy Spirit” (Matt 3:11; Mk 1:8; Lk 3:16; John 1:33; Acts 1:5; 11:16).

With their theological jargon, unlearned men have thrown the blanket of obscurity over this text. They then use their own terminology to promote an experience they represent as being a second work of grace in which the individual is made more competent. We will see now if this reasoning will hold up under the assessment of Peter.

Will he speak about the experience of the hearers in Cornelius’ house as it is commonly spoken of in certain circles today? Or will he speak in a manner that is in perfect harmony with the ways of the Lord?

PETER REPORTS HIS RESPONSE

“ 17 Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God?”

He did not fasten on what men did, but on what was done by the exalted Christ! This would allow for a proper and Christ-honoring conclusion to be reached by those hearing Peter’s explanation.

Note that in his explanation, Peter makes no reference to the recipients speaking in other languages and magnifying God. This was obviously not the primary thing on which he focused. That is, however, something that flesh would tend to do. He did not fasten on what men did, but on what was done by the exalted Christ! This would allow for a proper and Christ-honoring conclusion to be reached by those hearing Peter’s explanation.

THE LIKE GIFT

“Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us . . .” Other versions read, “the same gift as He gave us,” NKJV “the same grace, as to us also,” DOUAY “equally gave the gift to the Gentiles . . . as he did to us,” MRD “the identical gift he gave to us,” NJB “the equal gift God did give to them as also to us,” YLT and “gave them exactly the same gift as he gave to us.” PHILLIPS

The Greek word translated “like” is i;shn (ee-sos), and has the following lexical meaning: “of number, dimension, quantity equal, same,” FRIBERG “pertaining to that which is equal, either in number, size, quality, or characteristics - 'equal, equivalent, same,” LOUW-NIDA “equal portion,” LEH and “the same.” GINGRICH This word is also used in the following texts, which provide a perspective of its meaning. I have highlighted the English word used in the translation of i;shn .

- “Saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day” (Mat 20:12).
- “For many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together” (Mark 14:56).
- “And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again” (Luke 6:34).

- “Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making himself equal with God” (John 5:18).

- “Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God” (Phil 2:6).

- “Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pet 1:1).

- “And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal ” (Rev 21:16).

I come from a theological background in which considerable effort was expended to distinguish the manner and quantity of the Holy Spirit that was received by the apostles. Rather elaborate arguments were developed to diffuse any notion that all believers in any way received the Holy Spirit in the way realized by the apostles. In this text, however, we have one of the apostles – even the chief among the twelve – commenting on this very subject. Consider these facts.

- There can be no question about the validity of his observation. God had illuminated Peter, and the Holy Spirit had sent him to the house of Cornelius.

- Peter had delivered a word concerning the Lord Jesus that was honored in heaven.

- The historical record states that when the Spirit fell upon those who heard the Word at Cornelius’ house, Peter observed they had “received the Holy Spirit just as we have” NKJV (Acts 10:47).

- Luke was inspired to record the incident, together with two separate reports of it – all of which are perfectly consistent (Acts 10:47; 11:17; 15:8).

Rather than referring to any distinction between the manner or quantity of the Spirit given to the apostles and those gathered at Cornelius’ house, Peter cites their sameness. This, of course, is the very thing that caused those who were with him to be “astonished.” Peter does the same thing when referring to the faith that is obtained by all of the people of God, stating that it is “a faith of the same kind as ours,” or “a faith of equal standing as ours” NRSV (2 Pet 1:1). One has to wonder what kind of reasoning moves people to draw conclusions concerning the gift of the Holy Spirit that clashes with the revealed statements of Peter, who had the keys of the kingdom of heaven (Matt 16:19).

BELIEVED ON THE LORD JESUS CHRIST

“ . . . who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ . . . ” Other versions read, “when we believed on the Lord Jesus Christ,” NKJV “after believing in the Lord Jesus Christ,” NASB “ had come to put our trust in the Lord Yeshua the Messiah,” CJB “when we came to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ,” NAB “when we first believed on the Lord Jesus Christ,” WEYMOUTH and “when we believed in (adhered to, trusted in, and relied on) the Lord Jesus Christ.” AMPLIFIED

Here again, Peter speaks of the gift of the Holy Spirit in a manner quite different from many of our day. First, he has pointedly identified the gift of the Holy Spirit with the words of Jesus concerning being baptized with the Holy Spirit. Second, he has associated what was experienced by those of Cornelius’ house with the experience of the disciples “at the beginning.” Now, he identifies it with a condition found within the people who received the Holy Spirit: “who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ.”

I understand that Peter told those on the day of Pentecost that they would “receive the gift of the Holy Spirit” after they had repented and been baptized (Acts 2:38). Paul also taught that the Holy Spirit is given to us “because ye are sons” (Gal 4:6). Here, however, Peter goes down to the root of the matter – the great enabling factor – believing on the Lord Jesus Christ!

This is precisely the observation made by John concerning Jesus’ promise of the rivers of living water flowing out from the belly of the one who believed on Him. “On the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried out, saying, If anyone thirsts, let him come to Me and drink. He who believes in Me, as the Scripture has said, out of his heart will flow rivers of living water. But this He spoke concerning the Spirit, whom those believing in Him would receive; for the Holy Spirit was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified” NKJV (John 7:37-39). Paul also made this association in delineating the matter of the Ephesian brethren receiving the Holy Spirit. “In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory” (Eph 1:14). In his letter to the Galatians, Paul also associated receiving the Holy Spirit with faith: “That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith” (Gal 3:14).

In its entirety, and in all of its various aspects, the salvation of God is always “by grace through faith” (Eph 2:8). This does not exclude obedience, but is rather the foundation of all obedience, which is appropriately called “the obedience that comes from faith” NIV (Rom 1:5). It is most unfortunate that men have so confused the matter of salvation that they haggle about the gift of the Holy Spirit.

I want to again draw your attention to the manner in which reference is made to the Holy Spirit coming on those gathered with Cornelius.

- The Spirit “fell on all them which heard the Word” (10:44).
- On the Gentiles was “poured out the gift of the Holy Spirit” NKJV (10:45).

Here is an honest man – a person with spiritual integrity. God had acted in stark contradiction of the way Peter formerly viewed things, and he did not have to spend a lot of time thinking about it.

They “received the Holy Spirit just as” Peter and the disciples did (10:47).

- The Holy Spirit “fell” on them, as on the disciples at “the beginning” (11:15).
- Peter was moved to recall “the word of the Lord,” that they would be “baptized with the Holy Spirit” NKJV (11:16).
- God “gave them the same gift” as He did the disciples when they “believed on the Lord Jesus Christ” (11:17).
- God “acknowledged them by giving them the Holy Spirit, just as He did to” the disciples (15:8).

I do not know how the Spirit could have added more clarity to this event. It is as though He extended Himself to relate the giving of the Holy Spirit to the promise of Jesus, the hearing of the Word, the “gift of the Holy Spirit,” and believing on the name of Jesus. How tragic it is that it is possible for anyone to adopt a view that makes it difficult to receive these revelations. Yet, I am among those who struggled for many years with being able to simply receive and repeat what God had said on this subject. I am thankful for being freed from such inhibiting views. I also entertain a certain disdain for a theology that binds living men hand and foot, like Lazarus was when he exited from the tomb (John 11:44).

HE WOULD NOT WITHSTAND GOD

“ . . . what was I, that I could withstand God?” Other versions read, “who was I that I could stand in God’s way?” NASB “who was I to think that I could oppose God?” NIV “who was I that I could hinder God?” RSV “who was I to go against God?” BBE “who indeed was I to be able to forbid God?” DARBY “So who was I to interfere with God?” GWN “who was I to argue?” LIVING “So, could I stop God?” IE “who was I to be able to thwart God?” WEYMOUTH “who was I to try to stop God?” ISV “who was I and what power or authority had I to interfere or hinder or forbid or withstand God?” AMPLIFIED and “who was I to think that I could hinder the working of God?” PHILLIPS

Here is an honest man – a person with spiritual integrity. God had acted in stark contradiction of the way Peter formerly viewed things, and he did not have to spend a lot of time thinking about it. I suppose he could have stepped forward and cited what was perceived to be the proper sequence of certain steps – but he did not. He might have suggested that this was quite different than what the disciples had experienced at the first – waiting for ten days to receive what these Gentiles received while he was still speaking – but he did not! He might have objected to such a rapid conferment of the Holy Spirit, while he and the disciples had spent over three years with Jesus before they received the blessing – but he did not!

Now, we will see how those who contended with Peter will respond to his report – a factual and straightforward recounting of what the Lord had done. Their conclusion will be startling to those who have confined themselves to the traditions of men, and are fundamentally ignorant of the word of the Lord.

Instead, Peter gives his assessment of the situation. He considered a failure to agree with what the Lord had done to be an attempt to “withstand” the God of heaven. Such a response on his part would have been nothing less than standing in the way, blocking the entrance into the kingdom like the scribes and Pharisees did (Matt 23:13). He saw resistance as nothing less than an effort to “oppose God,” NIV “hinder God,” RSV “go against God,” BBE “interfere with God,” GWN and try to “stop God.” IE

Thus, Peter has accounted for going in to the Gentiles and eating with them. He has made no effort to explain what HE did, but rather proclaimed what God did. He knows that whatever the Lord does is right, for “all of His works are done in truth” (Psa 33:4).

Just how can we characterize a person who objects to the way the Lord works? If, for example, the Lord cuts off some natural branches, and grafts some branches from a wild olive tree into their place (Rom 11:17), who is the person who will object? It is good to culture a spirit that enables one to receive what the Lord has obviously done, refusing to stand in way of His working. If God acts in a way that contradicts our theology, then we have no alternative but to abandon any and every view that competes against His righteous works.

Now, we will see how those who contended with Peter will respond to his report – a factual and straightforward recounting of what the Lord had done. Their conclusion will be startling to those who have confined themselves to the traditions of men, and are fundamentally ignorant of the word of the Lord.

THE REACTION OF THE APOSTLES AND ELDERS TO THE REPORT

“ 18 When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. ”

The group with which Peter has shared these things is described as “they that were of the circumcision.” It is assumed that they were a part of the group who had heard the report of the Gentiles receiving the word of God – “the apostles and brethren that were in Judea” (11:1-2). These were people who were in Christ Jesus. Will they be able to process what Peter has said, or will they call for a caucus to carefully examine his words?

WHEN THEY HEARD THESE THINGS

“When they heard these things...” Other versions read, “when they heard this,” NASB “when they heard these words,” MRD “this account,” NJB “when the group heard these things,” IE “this statement of Peter,” WEYMOUTH and “on hearing this.” MONTGOMERY

It appears there was not a long delay. Rather, a response was given immediately upon hearing Peter’s words – “when they heard.” This is the kind of response that is always produced when people receive the word of God.

THEY HELD THEIR PEACE

“ . . . they held their peace . . . ” Other versions read, “they became silent,” NKJV “they quieted down,” NASB “they had no further objections,” NKJV “they were silenced,” NRSV “they said nothing more,” BBE “they stopped objecting,” CJB “they fell silent,” ESV “they desisted,” MRD “This account satisfied them,” NJB “all their objections were answered,” LIVING “they stopped arguing,” IE “they had no answer to make,” WILLIAMS “they were quieted and made no further objection,” AMPLIFIED and “they had no further objection to raise.” PHILLIPS

Although there was some contention at the first, the rehearsing of the righteous acts of the Lord settled the matter. No further objections were raised, and Peter was not criticized any more. What was it that brought about such a change? When Stephen recounted the works of the Lord, the people soundly rejected him, and even stoned him to death (Acts 6-7). When Paul provided an extensive history of the works of the Lord, he was rejected by Jews in the synagogue of Antioch of Pisidia, who chose to contradict and blaspheme what he had said (Acts 13:45-46). What made the difference in this case? Why were these Jews quieted by Peter’s report.

Among other things, it is because they knew the Lord – just as God had promised concerning all who enjoyed the New Covenant (Jer 31:34; Heb 8:11). Upon hearing what the Lord had done, they were able to recognize His hand. Like Peter himself, they could not withstand God, and therefore yielded to His ways and wisdom. Although they had never before known God in the capacity of being no respecter of persons, Peter’s report of Him working in that manner was sufficient to convince them.

THEY GLORIFIED GOD

“ . . . and glorified God, saying...”

Other versions read, “praised God,” NIV “gave glory to God,” BBE “began to praise God,” CJB “extolled the goodness of God,” WEYMOUTH and “gave God the glory,” WILLIAMS

Interestingly, the words “praised” and “glorified” are not synonymous. In my judgment, certain translators did not do well in using the word “praised” in this text. There are at least two words used for “praise” in the New Covenant Scriptures. The first is aivne,sewj , which is primarily related with thanksgiving – a “thank offering” STRONG’S (Heb 13:15). The second is e;painon , which has to do with laudation, or extolling the virtues of God (1 Pet 4:11).

The word “glorified” is translated from a different word (evdo,xasan), which means “to extol, magnify . . . to cause the dignity and worth of some person to become manifest,” THAYER “enhancing the reputation of God. ” FRIBERG Here, the idea has more to do with speaking about God rather than speaking to Him. It is openly declaring what God has been seen to be doing. It is to point out with insight what the Lord has done.

Now, this is precisely what these brethren will do. They will declare that they have seen the hand of the Lord in what Peter has testified. They will also be able to correlate that work with what is involved in being made alive unto God.

GRANTED REPENTANCE

“Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.” Other versions read, “repentance that leads to life,” NASB “a change of heart, so that they may have life,” BBE “resulting in life,” CSB “led people . . . to turn to him so that they can change the way they think and act and have eternal life,” GWN “granted life-giving repentance,” NAB “the privilege of turning to Him and receiving eternal life,” LIVING and “to change their hearts, and have life too.” IE

They observed that God had granted, or given, them repentance. With the single exception of this verse, the word repentance in any form is totally absent in the tenth and eleventh chapters of Acts.

These brethren did not conclude that Jesus had baptized the Gentiles with the Holy Spirit – although that is the word that Peter recalled. They did not draw attention to them speaking in tongues – although that is what they did. They observed that God had granted, or given, them repentance. With the single exception of this verse, the word repentance in any form is totally absent in the tenth and eleventh chapters of Acts. Yet, upon hearing Peter’s report, these brethren correlated what had happened with what Peter had announced in Jerusalem some time earlier: “Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins” (Acts 5:31).

Although men are commanded to repent (Acts 2:38; 3:19; 8:22; 17:30; 26:20), yet it is still true that they must be “granted” to do so. The word “granted” is translated from the Greek word e;dwken which has the root meaning, “to give something, bestow . . . of one’s own accord to give something,” THAYER “appoint, assign,” FRIBERG “to give out,” LEH and “bring, grant, cause, produce,” GINGRICH In its varied forms, this word is used four hundred and fourteen times in Scripture. There is never any question about what it means. Particularly when referring to the Lord, it is translated with unwavering consistency.

- “Give us this day our daily bread” (Matt 6:11).
- “And now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word” (Acts 4:29).
- “Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be likeminded one toward another according to Christ Jesus” (Rom 15:5).
- “That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man” (Eph 3:16).
- “The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day: and in how many things he ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well” (2 Tim 1:18).
- “To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne” (Rev 3:21).

Of all of the preaching and teaching acquaintances I have had over the last fifty-six years (2008), I can scarcely recall a single one that has expressed this view of what took place at the house of Cornelius – even though it is a revealed perspective! Among those acquaintances, this is not a way of speaking about God. This is owing to the pervasiveness of human opinion, and the undue exaltation of human wisdom and the institutions that it breeds.

However, here we have the observation of men with understanding – “spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9). They hear what took place at the house of Cornelius and affirm that God had “granted them repentance unto life.”

Note, there is no record that Peter reported their baptism. At least Luke did not include such a report. His agenda was not to promote baptism, or to engage in a defense of it, for there had not yet been erroneous teaching on the subject. At the time of our text, there was no question concerning the necessity and ministry of baptism. There were doubts concerning the acceptance of the Gentiles and the propriety of being closely aligned with them. However, the faithful reporting of the works of God resolved the matter for the tender of heart.

CONCLUSION

When controversies among professing believers are perpetuated, it is because of a lack of familiarity with God Himself. Considering the nature of the New Covenant, it is not acceptable for this condition to remain for a long period of time. Divine activity, and the faithful report of it, will dispel many of these contentions, putting their perpetrators to silence. However, when theology is systematized, and positions become the treasure of the people rather than the Lord Himself, Divine working will not be found. Thus, when being confined to human opinion and the wisdom of men, division is actually cultured, and gaps between professing believers grow wider and wider. This is a transgression of such monumental proportions that is fearful to even consider it.

There is such a thing as “the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” (Eph 4:3). There is also the reality of “the unity of the faith” into which “we all” are to come (Eph 4:13). Where obvious progress is not being made in the matter of unity, a serious deficiency exists, and it must not be overlooked. Our text has proclaimed a unity between a host of people: Peter, the six brethren with him, Cornelius, his servants, one or more soldiers, his relatives, his friends, the apostles, and the brethren – some of whom were contentious at first.

Knowing this, precisely how would one go about justifying a lack of unity among those claiming identity with Jesus Christ? What form of reasoning can allow for the perpetual lack of harmony among those who wear Jesus’ name?

THE WORD OF GOD SPREADS

“ 11:19 Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen traveled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only. 20 And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus. 21 And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord. 22 Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch. 23 Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord 24 For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord. 25 Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul: 26 And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch. 27 And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch. 28 And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Caesar. 29 Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judaea: 30 Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.” (Acts 11:19-30)

INTRODUCTION

Without any revealed plan or apostolic mandate, those who were scattered by the persecution that arose over Stephen continued to aggressively spread the Word of God. At the very first, this is what they did. As it is written, “Therefore they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word” (Acts 8:4). It is estimated that this took place approximately five years after the day of Pentecost. Now, the events of our text took place around six years after that original scattering, or eleven years after the inauguration of the New Covenant.

The consistency and persistency of the early church stands in stark contrast to the static posture and vacillating nature of the modern church. Without any revealed strategies or known organized efforts, early disciples, though dispersed by antagonistic opposition, “went everywhere preaching the word.” They had something that is not at all common in the church of our time. They were driven from within –

RECORDED ACTIVITIES

Thus far, there is no institutional thrust made known in the book of Acts. If one was to set out to examine the activities of the early church, what exactly would they find? And, how does it compare with the modern representation of the church? Here are some things that have been revealed to this point.

- They “continued steadfastly in the apostles’ doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayers ” (Acts 2:42).
- “All that believed were together, and had all things common” (Acts 2:44).
- They continued “daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house,” eating their food “with gladness and singleness of heart” (Acts 2:46).
- They reported threats and prayed about them (Acts 4:23-31).
- Those who believed “were of one heart and of one soul” (Acts 4:32).
- No one among them lacked, and, when required, distribution was made to every person according to their need (4:34-35).
- When hypocrisy surfaced, it was dealt with immediately (Acts 5:1-10).

- In the Temple and in every house, they ceased not to “teach and preach Jesus Christ” (Acts 5:42).
- Scattered believers went everywhere “preaching the Word” (Acts 8:4).
- Upon hearing that the city of Samaria had heard the Word, Peter and John were sent to them in order that they might receive the Holy Spirit (8:14-15).
- The churches were “edified, and walking in the fear of the Lord and the comfort of the Holy Spirit were multiplied” (Acts 9:31).
- The apostles and brethren in Judea heard that the Gentiles had “received the word of God” (Acts 11:1).

When men attempt to duplicate the results recorded in this book, or to codify them so that they are robbed of their power, they are following the dictates of human wisdom. The result of such an approach is always downward, degenerative, and hence unprofitable.

Peter reported what took place at the house of Cornelius, and the church recognized the work of the Lord and gave Him glory.

- Now, in our text, the church in Jerusalem hears about the spread of the Word, and sends Barnabas to examine the work.

WHAT DO WE SEE?

Now, how does that kind of activity compare with the church work of our time? There is a two-fold thrust revealed that can scarcely be found in our time. First, there was a marked emphasis on declaring the Word of God. Second, the body of Christ was closely knit, and in a state of constant edification. They were motivated by a message, and urged to live in strict conformity with that message. Their allegiance to the body of Christ and soundness of doctrine is also evident.

The notation of the conduct and manners of the early disciples is essential to a good understanding. The reason for this is that in the record of their activities we are beholding two critical things. First, the nature and thrust of newness of life is being displayed. Second, the directing of the Holy Spirit is also perceived, which confirms Divine priorities. If these two things are not duly considered, men will become distracted to the recorded results without obtaining an understanding of why they were present. When men attempt to duplicate the results recorded in this book, or to codify them so that they are robbed of their power, they are following the dictates of human wisdom. The result of such an approach is always downward, degenerative, and hence unprofitable.

THE SCOPE OF THOSE EMPLOYED IN KINGDOM WORK

The scope of those who were employed in the work of the Lord is also worthy of note. Although the apostles were primary, they were not the solitary workers. Consider the laborers who have been mentioned by name through the verses covered in our text – people who were not apostles.

- Stephen (Acts 6:8-9).
- Non-apostles who were scattered abroad (Acts 8:1,4).
- Philip (Acts 8:5-6, 26-40).
- Ananias (Acts 9:10-17).
- Barnabas (Acts 9:27; 11:22,25-26).

In our text, the word of God spreads to other regions. Upon hearing this, the church in Jerusalem sent Barnabas to examine the work. When he perceived the grace of God in the people, he exhorted them to purposefully cleave to the Lord.

- Men from Cyprus and Cyrene who preached in Antioch (Acts 11:20).
- Prophets from Jerusalem (Acts 11:27).
- Agabus (Acts 11:28).
- The elders of Jerusalem (Acts 11:30).

Following this text, there will be several other individuals mentioned – noted for their labors in the Lord, many of which were while they were with Paul.

Certain prophets in the church of Antioch: Barnabas, Simeon, Lucius, and Manaen (Acts 13:1).

- The elders of Jerusalem (Acts 15:2,4,6,22,23; 16:4; 21:18).
- James, the brother of the Lord (Acts 15:13; 21:18).
- The prophets Judas and Silas (Acts 15:27; 32).
- Silas with Paul (Acts 15:22,40; 16:19,25,29; 17:4,10).
- Timothy (Acts 16:1-3;
- Silas and Timothy (17:11,15; 18:5
- John Mark (Acts 15:39).
- Apollos (Acts 18:24-28).
- Aquilla and Priscilla (Acts 18:26).
- Timothy and Erastus (Acts 19:22).
- Sopater, Aristarchus, Secundus, Gaius, Timotheus, Tychicus and Trophimus (Acts 20:4).
- The elders of Ephesus (Acts 20:17,28).
- Philip the evangelist (the same one mentioned in chapter 8 – Acts 21:8).
- The four daughters of who were prophetesses – Acts 21:8
- Agabus the prophet (Acts 21:10-11).
- Brethren from Puteoli who refreshed Paul for seven days (Acts 28:13-14).
- Brethren from Rome who came to meet Paul at Appii Forum to encourage him (Acts 28:15).

Throughout the book of Acts we are being subjected to the life of the body of Christ as well as the activities of the apostles Peter and Paul. The manner of the kingdom is being unveiled to us. In it there is not the slightest hint of institutionalism, or the establishment of a religious hierarchy, or the development of a national, state, or even city church.

AS THE WORD SPREADS

In our text, the word of God spreads to other regions. Upon hearing this, the church in Jerusalem sent Barnabas to examine the work. When he perceived the grace of God in the people, he exhorted them to purposefully cleave to the Lord. Following that, he searched for Saul, and upon finding him brought him to Antioch, where they remained for a whole year. It was here that the disciples were first called “Christians.” About this time, a prophet named Agabus prophesied of a coming pervasive famine. Upon hearing this, the disciples determined to send relief to the brethren in Judaea, which they did, sending it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

What a marvelous commentary on the effectiveness of the salvation that is “in Christ Jesus with eternal glory” (2 Tim 2:10). Not only is the Word of God faithfully preached, there is also a favorable response to it. When a word is delivered that concerns the people of God, they immediately perceive the proper course of action and take it. These are all examples of how the word of God works effectively in those who believe. As it is written, “. . . the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe” (1 Thess 2:13). This is the record of the real church!

THE WORD CONTINUES TO BE PREACHED BY THOSE WHO WERE SCATTERED

“ 11:19 Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen traveled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.”

It becomes very apparent in the book of Acts that the church is, in fact, “the body of Christ” – although the people of God are never referred to as Christ’s “body” in the book of Acts itself. In it, the collective saints are referred to as:

- “The church” (2:47; 8:1.3; 11:22; 13:1; 15:3,4; 18:22; 20:17,28).
- “The churches” (9:31; 15:41; 16:5).
- “Disciples” (6:2; 11:29; 15:10).
- “The brethren” (11:29; 15:1,3,22,23).
- “Them that believed” (4:32).

However, the nature of body-life is seen in the various things chronicled in this volume. Collectively, believers gave heed to the apostle’s doctrine and fellowship, breaking bread together, praying together, and ministering to one another in meaningful ways. There was also a dissemination of the Word of God by various members of the body. Those members represented a kind of cross-cut of Christ’s body, as confirmed in the latter portion of the introduction to this lesson. Our text provides some more details on this aspect of the life of the early church.

THOSE WHO WERE SCATTERED ABROAD

“Now they which were scattered abroad . . .” Other versions read, “scattered after the persecution,” NKJV “scattered because of the persecution,” NASB “had been scattered by the persecution,” NIV “scattered abroad upon the tribulation,” ASV “who had gone away at the time of the trouble,” BBE “dispersed by,” DOUAY “dispersed, by the oppression,” MRD “who fled from Jerusalem,” LIVING “driven in various directions by,” WEYMOUTH “fugitives from the persecution,” WILLIAMS

The Greek words translated “scattered abroad” come from a single word: diaspare,ntej . The lexical meaning of the word is: “disperse, driven to different places,” THAYER and “to cause a group or gathering to disperse or scatter, with possible emphasis on the distributive nature of the scattering (that is to say, each going in a different direction).” LOUW-NIDA

The narrative of the text now returns, continuing from the eighth chapter (8:1-4). At that time “there was a great persecution against the church which is at Jerusalem,” resulting in the dispersion of nearly every one “except the apostles” (8:1). That is, according to appearance, circumstances drove most of the disciples out of Jerusalem. Those who imagine they can manage circumstances, or be taught how to control their environment must take special note of what is here described. There have been numerous records in Scripture that describe people being forced from their environment. Here are few of them.

The idea here is that there was a certain disdain for believers that pervaded the city of Jerusalem. There was apparently no end to which the people would not go to make it difficult for those who were confessed disciples of Jesus.

COMPELLED BY THE LORD. Adam and Eve from Eden (Gen 3:24), the people who were building the tower of Babel and a city (Gen 11:8), and Lot from Sodom (Gen 19:16).

• CONSTRAINED BY A DIRECT CALL FROM GOD. Abraham from his homeland (Gen 12:1, Jacob from the land in which Laban lived (Gen 31:13), and Israel from Egypt (Ex 11:8).

• COMPELLED BY CIRCUMSTANCES. By famines (Abraham, Jacob's ten sons, Elimelech, Naomi, and their sons – Gen 12:10; 42:5; Ruth 1:1-2), and Claudia's expulsion of the Jews from Rome (Aquila and Priscilla – Acts 18:2).

It is good to be aware that there is an uncertainty that attends life in this world. Solomon well said, "Boast not thyself of to morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth" (Prov 27:1). James also confirmed this to be the case: "Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow" (James 4:14).

This circumstance is another reason why we, together with the ancients, confess that we are "strangers and pilgrims on the earth" (Heb 11:13; 1 Pet 2:11). In Christ, we are geared for heaven and eternity, so to speak, and thus at variance with the very nature of the world, which is passing away. "Newness of life" is contrary to the course of this world, and cannot fit handily into it. Add to that the aggressiveness of the children of darkness against the children of light, and you have the reason for believers being "scattered" as they were in Jerusalem.

The thing that we want to note in this passage is the manner in which the believers reacted to this dispersion.

THE PERSECUTION THAT ROSE ABOUT STEPHEN

" . . . upon the persecution that arose about Stephen . . ." Other versions read, "after the persecution," NKJV "because of the persecution," NASB "by the persecution," NIV "upon the tribulation," ASV "at the time of the trouble," BBE "as a result of the persecution," CSB "through the tribulation," DARBY "during the persecution," NLT "through the affliction." TNT

The Persecution

The idea put forth in this text is twofold: (1) That of believers fleeing from the persecution, and (2) That of the persecution driving, or forcing them out of Jerusalem. Life became intolerable for those wearing the name of Jesus. This suggests not only outright opposition, such as that launched against Stephen, but life becoming complicated by withholding social and economic privileges from the people – like being able to buy and sell.

The idea here is that there was a certain disdain for believers that pervaded the city of Jerusalem. There was apparently no end to which the people would not go to make it difficult for those who were confessed disciples of Jesus.

That Rose About Stephen

The persecution and death of Stephen was like a catalyst, igniting the hatred of the Jews for Christians. We know that this is what awakened the fierce hatred and aggression of Saul of Tarsus (Acts 8:1; 9:1-2). Hatred spreads like venom, and there is no known depths to which it cannot plummet. When a contempt for the truth and those who embrace and proclaim it is developed, hostility is born, and initiatives are launched against those who have embraced the truth. As Solomon well said, "hatred stirreth up strifes."

A Parallel in Spiritual Babylon

Although it often appears less hostile than the persecution to which our text refers, spiritual Babylon bears many similarities to the hostile Jews in Jerusalem. Anyone who insists that people must be born again, seek the things that are above, and grow up into Christ in all things, is immediately perceived as a threat. If they press the truth, engaging opponents of it in disputation as Stephen did, they will, face opposition. The pressure put upon such people is depicted in the parallelism of “the mark of the beast.” The Revelation tells us that the mark had to be received in one of two places – “in their right hand, or in their foreheads” (Rev 13:16). That is, the person had to consent to either work for the beast (right hand), or embrace his thoughts and agenda (forehead). Those who refused to subscribe to this arrangement could not “buy or sell.” For Stephen, that meant he could no longer minister in the synagogue. For many of our time, it has meant they could no longer preach in certain churches.

Like the persecution of Stephen, this Babylonish opposition to the truth has caused those who have received the love of the truth to appear strange. The individual who actually lives aggressively for God simply does not fit into the religious arrangements of the day. Such are, in a manner of speaking, driven out of the establishment.

True Believers Will Not Succumb

As our text confirms, true believers will not succumb to the pressure of unbelievers. Although they may be required to “flee,” they will not close their mouths or cease to declare what they have seen and heard. This is because of the compelling and satisfying nature of the truth itself. The truth has a sanctifying power about it (John 17:17). Not only does it produce an environment of clarity for those who receive it, it brings great satisfaction and enjoyment to the soul. What truth brings to the believer outweighs everything that is contrary to it. Now, the person does not testify or preach out of a sense of mere obligation, but because of “the spirit of faith,” which is produced by the truth itself. Now the believer confesses with David and Paul, “We having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak ” (2 Cor 4:13; Psa 116:10). This is why persecuted believers “went everywhere preaching the word” (Acts 8:4).

PREACHING TO JEWS ONLY

“ . . . traveled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.”

Phenice was a region, approximately 150-200 miles north of Jerusalem. It was a strip of coastline about one hundred and twenty miles long and twelve miles broad. Antioch was about one hundred and eighty miles north of the northern frontier of Phenice. and was the capital city of the Greek kingdom of Syria. McClintok Cyprus was an island in the Mediterranean Sea. It is currently about one hundred and forty miles long, and ranging from fifty to five miles in width. McClintok It was about one hundred miles off the coast of Phenice, fifty miles south of Asia, and about 185-200 north of Jerusalem. I give these approximate measurements to accent the aggressiveness of the dispersed believers. Considering the involvements of traveling by land and sea to these places, this is a most arresting account. Terrain maps indicate that the country was rugged, and occasionally even mountainous.

These brethren were not “preaching the word” simply because they were commanded to do so. There is no account of the apostles ever motivating early believers by, what men refer to as, the great commission. When Jesus spoke those words (Matt 28:18-20; Mk 16:15-16), He did not put them in the context of persecution. Neither, indeed, were they intended to be a law, like the Ten Commandments. This was rather the expression of how newness of life would react. It is reflected in the manner in which Luke refers to Christ’s words. “And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem” (Luke 24:46-47).

There is a sense in which the preaching of repentance and the remission of sins is in the same category as Christ suffering and rising from the dead the third day. It is a Divine appointment, and can be carried out only by those who have willingly embraced the word of the King.

This is what we are seeing in this text – people who are willingly carrying out the Word of the King, even though they have been forced out of Jerusalem by an aggressive persecution.

Preaching to Jews Only

Even though the Gospel had been taken to the Gentiles, these scattered believers preached the Word only to Jews. It might be thought that this was wholly inappropriate. After all, on the day of Pentecost Peter had declared that

To this very day there remain a significant number of Gentile believers who believe the Jews have been summarily rejected as a people, and that the church is, by Divine design, fundamentally Gentile.

the promise of the Holy Spirit was for those who are “afar off” as well as the Jews (Acts 2:39).

In addition to this, the city of Samaria had received both the Word of God and the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:14,17), and the Ethiopian eunuch had believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, and was baptized into Christ (Acts 8:36-38). Now, the household of Cornelius, together with his relatives and friends have also believed and received the Holy Spirit, being baptized into Christ (Acts 10:43-48).

Yet, in the early days of the church, there was little clarity concerning the acceptance of the Gentiles. In fact, this was a matter that required some special revelation, which was given to Paul. Here is how Paul referred to that remarkable revelation. “How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ) Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; That the Gentiles should be fellowheirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel : Whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power” (Eph 3:3-7). Paul further expounded this reality in Ephesians 2:13-22.

It should not surprise us that it was difficult for the early Jews to perceive Jew and Gentile being joined together in one body. To this very day there remain a significant number of Gentile believers who believe the Jews have been summarily rejected as a people, and that the church is, by Divine design, fundamentally Gentile. Such poor souls have fallen into the same pattern of erroneous thinking as many of the early Jews. This manner of thinking is also seen in the rarity of any Gospel preaching being directed toward the Jews. While such preaching can be found, it is generally an exception to the rule.

The irony of the situation is that the mystery of Jew and Gentile being joined together has now been clarified through Paul, so that there ought to be no confusion on the matter.

SOME OF THEM PREACHED AMONG THE GRECIANS IN ANTIOCH

“ 20 And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus.”

Acts 8:4 states that those who were scattered “went everywhere preaching the word.” Here is an example of one group of those people.

SOME OF THEM

And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene . . .” Cyprus was an Island North of Jerusalem, as I have already said. Cyrene was a region and city in Africa, which was nearly six hundred miles West of Jerusalem. Yet, these saints were together. Perhaps they were some of those who journeyed to Jerusalem for the day of Pentecost mentioned in the second chapter of Acts.

This very expression (“some of them”) confirms that the common activity of those who were scattered was preaching the word. Here the Holy Spirit places a magnifying glass over one part of them. It is interesting to observe that

When they were driven out of Jerusalem, therefore, they did not simply seek a place of safety in which they could settle down and enjoy peace. Their lives had been altered by Christ, and they were now living for a different reason.

“preaching” is not at all common in the modern church. In fact, it is even growing less and less common among the group referred to as “preachers.” The amount of actual time that they spend “preaching” is rather minimal. For some preachers, the time spent in preaching is less than one hour a week. The rest of the time is taken up with things other than proclaiming, declaring, and opening and alleging. However, in our text, “preaching” was the thing being done. In its various forms, “preaching” is mentioned thirty-six times in the book of Acts. It is referred to fifty-six times in the Epistles, which are addressed to the churches and individual believers.

- Paul was ready to preach the Gospel to the church in Rome (Rom 1:15).
- Paul said believers were established by the preaching of Jesus Christ (Rom 16:25).
- Preaching the cross is the power of God to those who believe (1 Cor 1:21).
- Paul preached in order to present every man perfect before Christ (Col 1:28).
- Timothy was exhorted to preach the Word with longsuffering and doctrine (2 Tim 4:2).
- God has manifested His Word in due times through preaching (Tit 1:3).
- Peter said the Gospel is purposely being preached to those who believe (1 Pet 1:25).

In this text, the preaching was apparently done to those who were not in Christ. However, preaching has never been confined to those who are alienated from God. Further, it has always been the propensity of those who embrace the Gospel to preach it, according to each one’s ability. A sad day has dawned upon the church when it loses its appetite for preaching, replacing it with a desire for singing and entertainment.

THEY SPAKE TO THE GRECIANS

“ . . . which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus.” Other versions read, “the Hellenists,” NKJV “the Greeks,” NASB “THE Gentiles,” NLT “non-Jews,” IE “Hellenistic Jews,” ISV and “Greek-speaking Jews.” ALT

It was a long trip from Jerusalem to Antioch – approximately three hundred miles! McCLINTOK These scattered believers, however, made the trip and engaged in a holy activity – “preaching the Lord Jesus.” When they were driven out of Jerusalem, therefore, they did not simply seek a place of safety in which they could settle down and enjoy peace. Their lives had been altered by Christ, and they were now living for a different reason.

These spoke to “the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus.” It is argued by some that those to whom these preached were not Jews, but were Gentiles. Those espousing this view state that their preaching thus differed from the preaching of the others who spoke “only to the Jews.” To me, this view is questionable, because the description of the activity of the entire group was that they preached “unto the Jews only.” Now, our text affirms, “some of them ” made their way to Antioch and preached the Lord Jesus to “the Grecians.”

The Greek word from which “Grecians” is translated is ~Ellhnista,j (hell-an-is-tas). The transliteration of the word (translation letter-by-letter instead of the translation of the word itself) is “hellenist), and it is so expressed in a number of versions (NKJV, RSV, CSB, ESV, YLT, LITV, MKJV, ISV). This word is used three times in the book of Acts (6:1; 9:29; 11:20). The first occasion is unquestionably a reference to Greek-speaking Jews, and there is no reason to question that this is its meaning in our text. The word “Gentiles” is the consistent word used to distinguish the Jewish people from the rest of the world. That is the ethnic designation of the non-Jewish humanity. The word Hellenist, or “Greek” is not an ethnic distinction, but one of speech, and is compared with those who spoke “the Jews’ language” (Neh 13:24), or “the Hebrew tongue” (Acts 21:40).

This circumstance must be seen with three facts in mind.

- That the text says the scattered believers preached “only to the Jews.”
- That the acceptance of the Gentiles as recipients of the Gospel began with the report of the conversion of the household of Cornelius.
- That well after the events of our text, a special caucus was called in Jerusalem to discuss the matter of Gentile acceptance (Acts 15:2,13).

In view of these considerations, I understand this text to be descriptive of a Gospel initiative primarily toward Greek-speaking Jews, although encompassing some of the Gentiles in Antioch.

The manner in which this preaching is described is also worthy of note: “preaching the Lord Jesus.” This blends perfectly with the manner in which preaching is described throughout the book of Acts.

- “Jesus Christ” was preached (3:20).
- They “preached through Jesus the resurrection of the dead” (4:2).
- “Preaching the word” (8:4; 8:25; 11:20; 14:25).
- Men “preached Christ” (8:5; 9:20).
- Men “preached the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ” (8:12).
- They “preached the Gospel” (8:25; 14:7,21).
- They preached “Jesus” (8:35).
- They preached “in the name of Jesus” (9:27).
- God is said to have sent the word to Israel “preaching peace by Jesus Christ” (10:36).
- Preaching “the Lord Jesus” (11:20).
- They “preached the word of God” (13:5; 15:35).
- Through Jesus “the forgiveness of sins” was preached (13:38).
- They “preached the word of the Lord” (15:36).
- They “preached Jesus and the resurrection” (Acts 17:18).
- They “preached the kingdom of God” (20:24; 28:31).

This is the kind of context within which the working of the Lord is being reported. There is no institutional emphasis, and there is no declared effort to swell the numbers of the church. Rather, there is a message being delivered that is associated with the power of God unto salvation. The absence of this thrust in the church of our day is so obvious it is a wonder that any have missed it. Differing agendas have been adopted and are being perpetrated. All of this is not an innocent matter. Too much has been revealed to justify such action.

THE HAND OF THE LORD WAS WITH THEM

“ 21 And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.”

Even though those who were preaching were doing so “unto the Jews only,” the Lord still blessed their endeavors. Like Peter prior to being at the house of Cornelius, their understanding had not yet been perfected concerning the acceptance of the Gentiles. However they delivered a message with which the Lord of glory could work – and He did!

THE HAND OF THE LORD WAS WITH THEM

“And the hand of the Lord was with them . . .” Other versions read, “the power of the Lord,” BBE “the Lord helped them,” NJB “the Lord honored this effort,” LIVING “the presence of the Lord,” AMPLIFIED and “hand of the Master.” INTERLINEAR

The expression “hand of the Lord” is mentioned thirty-six times in Scripture. It is certainly worthy of our consideration.

Ponder the works that are attributed to “the hand of the Lord.”

- The destruction of the men of Ashdod (1 Sam 5:6).
- Turning the king’s heart (Prov 21:1).
- Causing those in Judah to have one heart (2 Chron 30:12).
- The dispensing of both good and evil, or calamity (Job 2:10).
- Fulfilling prophesy (1 Kgs 8:15).
- Upholding the righteous (Psa 37:24).
- The success of John the Baptist (Lk 1:66).

What God accomplishes among the sons of men is very real. It is not ethereal, or lacking material substance. His works are not mere visions or likenesses, or some form of a mere idea.

“The hand of the Lord” is a literary anthropomorphism: i.e., “an interpretation of what is not human or personal in terms of human or personal characteristics.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER In this case, it is ascribing human attributes to God to assist in comprehending what He does. Thus we read of the following:

- The “eyes of the Lord” (Gen 6:8; 1 Pet 3:12).
- The “ears of the Lord” (Num 11:18; James 5:4).
- The “mouth of the Lord” (Deut 8:3; Isas 40:6).
- The “arm of the Lord” (Isa 51:9; John 12:38).
- The “finger of God” (Ex 8:19; Lk 11:20).
- The “face of the Lord” (Gen 19:13; 1 Pet 3:12).
- God’s “feet” (Ex 24:10; Psa 18:9).
- His “tongue” (Isa 30:27).

The use of such terminology is not intended to leave the impression that God has a body, for He is “a Spirit” (John 4:24). However, by speaking in such a condescending manner, the Lord frees men from the tendency to philosophize about the working of the Lord, or assigning mystical meanings to His “wonderful works.”

The Reality of Divine Working

It is entirely possible that the reason for countless numbers of professing Christians being unable to live above the world is that they have embraced a false god.

What God accomplishes among the sons of men is very real. It is not ethereal, or lacking material substance. His works are not mere visions or likenesses, or some form of a mere idea. When the Lord caused Joseph to prosper, it was observable, and was apparent to all who saw him. When He healed people, they became whole, and no longer bore the marks or traits of their former illness. If he healed lepers, they simply were no longer lepers in any sense. “The hand of the Lord” is an accommodation to the Person of God Himself, but it does not diminish what He does.

It is necessary to say these things because of the impression that is being left on society by the nominal church. Although it may not be fashionable to make mention of these things, something must be said about them, for they are shaping the manner in which men think about God Himself.

The change that is wrought in regeneration is not at all apparent in our society. There is actually little difference between the average church member and the person of the world. Professing Christians are often noted for being slothful, dishonest, ignorant of God, and attached to the world – all of which are addressed in regeneration. The fact of sin has been so blurred that men scarcely know how to define it. What is even more serious, a mental idol has been erected and paraded before the masses. It is a god who loves everyone the same, and does so regardless of who they are or what they do. He can tolerate sin, and is even sympathetic toward it. He does not require holiness, nor is he insistent that men separate from the world. He allows duplicity in the people, and is pledged to work with people who insist on dwelling at a distance from him. He does not require the commitment of professing believers to himself or to one another, and is with them wherever they go, even if it is a place He has condemned.

This is the kind of god against which we are warned. John wrote, “And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life. Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen ” (1 John 5:20-21). Any and every God who can be known or enjoyed independently of the direct ministry of Jesus is not the true God. It is an idol that cannot save or sanctify in any sense.

It is entirely possible that the reason for countless numbers of professing Christians being unable to live above the world is that they have embraced a false god. This is not something to be used in the judgment of others. However, it is incumbent upon everyone professing to be a Christian to know whether or not they have embraced the true God – and that will be determined by identifying the results that He produces. Just as surely as it is imperative that every person come to God through Christ, it is also necessary for them to keep themselves from idols.

God Was Active In Their Work

When our text says “the hand of the Lord was with them,” it means that the Lord Himself was active in what they were doing. He was blessing their works and causing them to prosper, producing results by His power, while being active in their activities. One commentator describes this use of the word “hand” as meaning, “by the help or agency of anyone.” LIGHTFOOT Lexically, as used in this text, the word means, “figuratively, as the expression of the activity of a supernatural or human being control, power ; (a) of God's agency as creator.” FRIBERG

There is a marked tendency in the Christian world to overstate the capability of men and understate the role of God in holy accomplishments. This is precisely the reason for the current emphasis on methods and techniques, routines, and procedures. The modern church is producing a battery of religious professionals that are expert in producing impressive, yet ineffective results. They can launch initiatives to garner a lot of new church members, but they are not able to keep them. They can bring people to profess, but are impotent to enable them to possess. However, in our text we are reading of genuine believers preaching the authentic Gospel, and yielding God-glorifying results. All of this is because God was “working with them,” as He did with the apostles who had remained in Jerusalem (Mk 16:20).

A GREAT NUMBER BELIEVED, AND TURNED TO THE LORD

“ . . . and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.” Other versions read, “a large number who believed turned to the Lord,” NASB “a great number had faith and were turned to the Lord,” BBE “believing, were converted to the Lord,” DOUAY “became believers,” LIVING “[learned] to believe (to adhere to and trust in and rely on the Lord) and turned and surrendered themselves to Him,” AMPLIFIED and “put their faith in Him.” CEV

One of the edifying things about the book of Acts is the different ways in which it describes those who were initially saved. Some of the translations appear to make a studied habit of failing to project this intentional variety. The literal rendering of the text emphasizes the word “turned.” The Greek word used here is evpe,streyaen , and there is no question about its technical meaning as used in this verse: “to turn to, to turn oneself,” THAYER “to turn around, (turn about),” FRIBERG “turn to,” UBS “to turn about.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

What It Means to Turn to the Lord

To turn to the Lord is to cease traveling on the broad road that leads to destruction. It involves an abrupt alteration of ones conduct. Thus we read of turning “to God from idols” (1 Thess 1:9). The commission delivered to Saul of Tarsus involved turning men “from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God” (Acts 26:18). The promised conversion of Israel is described as them being turned “to the Lord” (2 Cor 3:16). This involves beholding the glory of the Lord in the face of Jesus Christ (2 Cor 4:6). It means the person begins “looking unto Jesus” (Heb 12:1-2). The person who “turns to God” is occupied with the Lord. This means that they are no longer attracted to the world and the things that are in it. There is a prevailing interest in the things of God, and the Word of God, the Son of God, and the promises of God.

No person is truly “saved” who has not turned to the Lord. There is no such thing as a salvation that leaves the individual enamored of the world.

Holy Variety

Through this chapter, the inspired record of people being saved includes a variety of statements describing the experience.

- RECEIVED THE WORD AND WERE BAPTIZED. “Then they that gladly received his word were baptized . . .” (Acts 2:41a).
- THE LORD ADDED UNTO THEM. “ . . .and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.” (Acts 2:41b).
- THE LORD ADDED TO THE CHURCH. “And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved” (Acts 2:47).

• HEARD THE WORD AND BELIEVED. “Howbeit many of them which heard the word believed; and the number of the men was about five thousand” (Acts 4:4).

• BELIEVERS WERE ADDED. “And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women” (Acts 5:14).

• THE NUMBER OF DISCIPLES WAS MULTIPLIED. “And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied . . .” (Acts 6:1). “And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly” (Acts 6:7a).

• OBEDIENT TO THE FAITH. “. . .and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith” (Acts 6:7b).

Salvation is a large work, and may therefore be viewed from many different perspectives – all of which are inherent in salvation itself. The person who can employ such language will, in that very employment, distance himself from sectarianism, which demands some form of stereotyping.

BELIEVED AND WERE BAPTIZED. “But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women” (Acts 8:12).

• RECEIVED THE WORD OF GOD. “Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God . . .” (Acts 8:14).

• TURNED TO THE LORD. “And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord” (Acts 9:35).

• BELIEVED IN THE LORD. “And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord” (Acts 9:42).

• RECEIVED THE HOLY SPIRIT. “Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?” (Acts 10:47).

• RECEIVED THE WORD OF GOD. “And the apostles and brethren that were in Judaea heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God” (Acts 11:1).

• GOD GAVE THEM THE GIFT. “Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God?” (Acts 11:17).

• GOD GRANTED REPENTANCE UNTO LIFE. “When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life” (Acts 11:18).

• BELIEVED AND TURNED TO THE LORD. “And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord” (Acts 11:21).

• ADDED TO THE LORD. “For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord” (Acts 11:24).

Salvation Is A Large Work

Salvation is a large work, and may therefore be viewed from many different perspectives – all of which are inherent in salvation itself. The person who can employ such language will, in that very employment, distance himself from sectarianism, which demands some form of stereotyping. To stereotype something is to make it conform to a fixed pattern, making it hackneyed, and robbing it of its power.

I understand that those who are dominated by the natural mind can make no sense out of this. They prefer to have a step-by-step plan that will fully describe how a person may appropriate salvation.

Such a plan can be readily codified and printed, thus making for the preferred consistency. However, no such approach is made in Scripture to the directing of a soul in what to do to be saved.

We have a number of statements in the book of Acts that relate to what people were to do in order to appropriate the salvation of God. Although there are not many of these statements, no person can afford to treat the subject as though these texts did not exist.

• CALLING ON THE NAME OF THE LORD. “And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved” (Acts 2:21; Rom 10:13).

The Gospel is calculated to direct the one who believes it into a path that will include all of these responses – and this does not even include the conviction of sin, righteousness, and judgment

REPENT AND BE BAPTIZED IN THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST FOR THE REMISSION OF SINS . “Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost” (Acts 2:38).

• REPENT AND BE CONVERTED. “Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord” (Acts 3:19).

• CONFESSING JESUS IS THE SON OF GOD. “And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him” (Acts 8:38; Rom 10:9-10).

• BELIEVING AND RECEIVING REMISSION. “To Him give all the prophets witness, that through His name whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins” (Acts 10:43).

• BELIEVE ON THE LORD JESUS CHRIST. “And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house” (Acts 16:31).

We can add to this the words of the Lord Jesus Himself: “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved ; but he that believeth not shall be damned” (Mark 16:16). And again, “I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture” (John 10:9). Paul adds that salvation requires the hearing of the Gospel, delivered by a preacher who has been sent by God (Rom 10:14-17).

Now, all of these statements are true, and none are to be altered or rejected. Each of them reflect some discernment as to where the hearer is, and what he is to be told. Most, if not all, of them presume that some kind of inquiry has been made into the matter of salvation.

I do not know what valid purpose is served by crystalizing a plan of salvation – particularly sense such a plan is nowhere articulated in Scripture. We know that there are not multiple ways to be saved, for the gate of entrance to the road that leads to life is a single one.

I am suspicious of the integrity of any person who finds it easy to omit any requirement that has been stated in Scripture. Think of the marvelous scope of human response that has been covered in the statements just cited:

- Calling on the name of the Lord, and being saved.
- Repenting unto life.

- Being baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.
- Being converted in order to have ones sins blotted out.
- Believing and confessing that Jesus is the Son of God in order to be baptized.
- Entering the sheepfold by means of Christ.
- Hearing the Gospel from the mouth of a God-sent person.

The Gospel is calculated to direct the one who believes it into a path that will include all of these responses – and this does not even include the conviction of sin, righteousness, and judgment (John 16:8-11).

In my judgment, the tendency to codify the means of appropriating the salvation of God is driven by what I call a Great Commission mentality. That is the presumption that the most significant work of the church is to see to it that souls are initially converted – even though there is not a church of Scriptural record that was ever told such a thing. To take such a position is like saying that the most important thing in building the Temple was to get the work underway. Who does not know that the essential thing was to build the Temple, and to finish the work.

So it is in Christ Jesus. The most vital work has to do with conforming us to the image of Christ (Rom 8:29), Christ being “formed” in us (Gal 4:19), and growing up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:15). If believers are not “changed into the same image from glory to glory” (2 Cor 3:18), what difference does it make whether they entered the fold or started the race? If men are “called” by God “into the fellowship” of Jesus Christ (1 Cor 1:9), what may be said of those who give no evidence of having such a fellowship? Although men are prone to do this, God does not dismiss the requirement for growing up into Christ because a person has been busy winning souls. Further, the one who is actually being conformed to the image of Christ will be up and about spreading the word, and shining as a light in the world. Of course, that is precisely what we see happening in our text. Even though the people were persecuted and forced out of Jerusalem, they still went everywhere preaching the Word, and God worked with them.

See, in the book of Acts the people were caught up in the Divinely appointed objective of becoming like Jesus. That is why they went everywhere preaching the Word, and that is why those who heard that word always were properly directed, and always obeyed what they were commanded – and there are no exceptions.

It would bring personal delight to my soul to hear of a body of people who “turned to the Lord.” I would know at once they had “turned from” every competing interest, and would be eager to obey the Lord. However, I greatly fear that a gospel is being preached these days that is not even presenting the view of turning to the Lord, or calling upon His name, or being converted.

THE CHURCH IN JERUSALEM HEARD OF THE WORK

“ 22 Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch.”

I want to emphasize that we are being exposed to the manner of life in the body of Christ. There is a constant communication of the works of the Lord within that body. When the Lord worked, it was faithfully reported.

TIDINGS REACHED JERUSALEM

Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem . . .” Other versions read, “news of these things,” NKJV “news of this,” NIV “the report concerning them,” ASV “the news about Antioch,” GWN “the church at Jerusalem heard what had happened,” NLT “the account was heard in the ears of the assembly,” YLT “the congregation which was at Jerusalem heard about these new believers,” LIVING “the rumors of this came to their ears of the church (assembly) in Jerusalem,” AMPLIFIED and “the word about them was heard in the ears of the assembly.” ALT

There was a level of communication among early believers that is scarcely known in our time. It is evident that a priority was placed upon what the Lord was doing, and that was faithfully reported. Already the church in Jerusalem had heard of the conversion of the Gentiles in Caesarea. Now, another report reaches the church concerning many turning to the Lord in Antioch.

The language suggests that these were not merely person-to-person reports, but ones that were given in the assembly: “unto the ears of the church,” or “in the ears of the assembly.” YLT This being true, it tells us something concerning the nature of the assembly in Jerusalem. Their focus was obviously on what the Lord was doing, and they were interested in His working in places far removed from themselves. When the text says the assembly heard “these things,” it means they heard of “a great number” believing and turning “to the Lord.” Further, they would know that this was the result of “the hand of the Lord” being with them.

The first report delivered to Jerusalem was that of the city of Samaria believing. It is written that this report was heard by “the apostles” (8:14). The second report that was heard concerned the Gentiles in Caesarea believing. That report was heard by “the apostles and brethren in Judaea” (11:1). The third report concerned a great number of people in Antioch, a chief city, who had believed and turned to the Lord. This time, the report comes to “the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem” (11:22).

In this text we perceive a certain growth that is taking place in the church in Jerusalem. At first, the decisions were made solely by the “apostles.” Then, the “elders” are brought into the decision-making process. Now, the whole church becomes involved, selecting a representative that is neither an elder nor an apostle.

Here is an example of a body of believers maturing, coming into singleness of mind, and increasing with the increase of God. The revealed objective for the church is thus seen as taking place in a particular assembly. The following text confirm that objective.

- “Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment” (1 Cor 1:10).

- “And He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ” (Eph 4:11-13).

- “But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love” (Eph 4:15-16).

- “. . . the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God” (Col 2:19).

For the most part, in our time, these are distant goals that are rarely seen. In our text they are realities. They are characteristics that are employed in walking in the works for which the saved are ordained (Eph 2:10).

Now, it is their response to this report that is of particular importance. It will confirm how those early brethren thought, and where they placed their priorities.

THEY SENT FORTH BARNABAS

“ . . . and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch.” Other versions read, “they sent out,” NKJV “they sent Barnabas off to Antioch,” NASB “they sent Barnabas to Antioch,” NIV and “Barnabas was sent.” GWN

This is the third time Barnabas is mentioned in the book of Acts (4:36; 9:27; 11:22). Every time, there was an initiative associated with his name. First, he had a piece of land and sold it, bringing the proceeds and laying them at the feet of the apostles (4:36-37). Second, he took newly converted Saul to the apostles and declared how Jesus had appeared and spoken to him, and how he had “preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus” (9:27). Now, the assembly in Jerusalem sends him far North to Antioch to examine the work reported to have taken place there – three hundred miles away! Although, considering the modes of transportation, this was a considerable distance, there is not the slightest hint of any inconvenience.

SOME FACTS ABOUT ANTIOCH

A city on the banks of the Orontes, 300 miles north of Jerusalem, and about 30 from the Mediterranean. This metropolis was situated where the chain of Lebanon, running northward, and the chain of Taurus, running eastward, are brought to an abrupt meeting. Here the Orontes breaks through the mountains; and Antioch was placed at a bend of the river, partly on an island, partly on the level which forms the left bank, and partly on the steep and craggy ascent of Mount Silpius, which rose abruptly on the south. It was in the province of Seleucis, called Tetrapolis, from containing the four cities Antioch, Seleucia, Apamea, and Laodicea; of which the first was named after Antiochus, the father of the founder; the second after himself; the third after his wife Apama; and the fourth in honor of his mother . . . In the time of Chrysostom the population was computed at 200,000, of whom one half, or even a greater proportion, were professors of Christianity (Chrysos. Adv. Jud. 1, 588; Hom. in Ignat. 2, 597; In Matthew Hon. 85, 7:810). Chrysostom also states that the Church at Antioch maintained 3000 poor, besides occasionally relieving many more (In Matthew Hom. 7, 658).

McCLINTOK STRONG’S

By saying “as far as Antioch,” the text means Barnabas was to cover the territory all the way up to Antioch, which was North of Phenice. It is not clear whether he went to Cyrene and Cyprus – although the suggestion is that he did not. The fact that he remained in Antioch for some time suggests that it was the specific place to which Barnabas was sent.

Barnabas had distinguished himself in the faith, and it was duly noted by the assembly. Earlier, the apostles had “surnamed” him Barnabas, for his natural name was “Joses,” or Joseph (4:36). Now, however, he appears to be well known among all of the disciples for his spiritual qualities. Once again, I want to draw attention to the fact that he was not an apostle, and was not one of the seven who were chosen (Acts 6). Later, in chapter thirteen, he will be classed among the prophets and teachers in Antioch. However, at this time he was not counted among the prophets in Jerusalem. Yet, Barnabas had excelled to such an extent that he was sent to Antioch to examine the work that had been done there.

SOMETHING TO NOTE

It is arresting to see the interest that the early brethren had in others who had received the word of God. This interest will surface several times in the book of Acts (15:2-3,32,36,40-41; 16:4-5,40; 18:27).

In my own judgment, one of the besetting sins of the American church is its lack of interest in the saints of God. There is even a mindset afoot among professed believers that belittles the idea of ministering to the people of God, or devoting quality time to maturing them in the faith. The result of this tragic condition is that the churches are generally weak in the faith, with ignorance prevailing rather than the “wisdom and spiritual understanding” that was the focus of apostolic prayers and endeavors (Col 1:9).

Even though the Head of the church has provided it with remarkable teaching and revelation, multitude of people remain in abject ignorance concerning them. When you consider what has been delivered to the churches, this is mind-boggling! The list of writings specifically addressed to believers include Acts, Romans, First Corinthians, Second Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, First Thessalonians, Second Thessalonians, First Timothy, Second Timothy, Titus, Philemon, Hebrews, First Peter, Second Peter, First John, Second John, Third John, Jude, and Revelation. Within the framework of these letters the following are contained.

- The exposition of the Person of Christ Jesus.
- The exposition of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ.
- The exposition of the present mediatorial and intercessory ministry of Jesus.
- An exposition of the second coming of Christ.
- The eternal purpose of God, and how it is being accomplished through Jesus.
- The ministry of the Holy Spirit.
- The objective for the church.
- The resources available to the church.
- The nature and effects of regeneration.
- The pivotal nature, purpose, and effectiveness of the grace of God.
- The exposition of justification, how it is received by faith, and what it does.
- The combining of Jew and Gentile into one body.
- The complexities related to the old man and the new man.
- The presence and purpose of spiritual gifts.
- The danger of this world, and the necessity of being separate from it.
- How believers overcome the devil and the world.
- The definition and nature of the new covenant.

• What happens when a person is What I am saying is that it is inexcusable for the church today to stand in stark contrast to the church of which we are reading. Unless there is something about salvation that makes for spiritual decline, and unless faith is really not the victory that overcomes the world, this current condition of the church is baptized into Christ.

- The necessity and role of hope in the life of faith.
- The reality of a falling away that would be found within the church, together with its nature and effects.
- The rise and fall of spiritual Babylon.
- The necessity of holiness, and the rationale that supports that necessity.

- Details concerning the end of the world and how that knowledge impacts upon life.

These are only representative of the content and nature of apostolic doctrine. So far as the record is concerned, this is the focus of all spiritual gifts and sound doctrine. Yet, there is such a level of ignorance on these matters that it defies all soundness of thought. Consider if a mandatory questionnaire on these matters were delivered to every church in our land, and a demand made for it to be answered and given to men of understanding to peruse. I do not doubt that it would be difficult to even support that the people had been born again, or had made any kind of genuine commitment to the Lord. If this assessment reflects any degree of accuracy, it should awaken a vigorous and sustained interest in maturing the body of Christ. There is no possible way that a people enveloped in perpetual ignorance, and remaining in a juvenile state can be described as making herself ready to be married to the Lord Jesus Christ – and that is precisely how the real church is described (Rev 19:7).

What I am saying is that it is inexcusable for the church today to stand in stark contrast to the church of which we are reading. Unless there is something about salvation that makes for spiritual decline, and unless faith is really not the victory that overcomes the world, this current condition of the church is like a trumpet blast of alarm.

May God raise up men who can recognize this situation that now confronts us – men of wisdom and understanding – who will lift up their voice like watchmen on the wall. It is time to make war on spiritual mediocrity, and thrust from our presence anyone and everyone that is promoting it. There is no place for such people in Christ's body.

BARNABAS SAW THE GRACE OF GOD, AND WAS GLAD

“ 23 Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.”

We know from this verse why Barnabas went to Antioch. It was to provide a sound assessment of the work there, and to respond accordingly to it. I must acknowledge that I know few men capable of such a diagnosis.

HE SAW THE GRACE OF GOD

“Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God . . .” Other versions read, “witnessed the grace of God,” NASB “saw the evidence of the grace of God,” NIV “seeing for himself the grace of God,” CJB “to see what God had done for them out of kindness,” GWN “saw this evidence of God's blessing,” NLT “saw the wonderful things God was doing,” LIVING “to see the grace which God had bestowed,” WEYMOUTH “saw the spiritual blessing God had given them,” WILLIAMS “saw what grace (favor) God was bestowing upon them,” AMPLIFIED “saw this working of God's grace,” PHILLIPS “perceiving the grace of the God,” INTERLINEAR and “saw what God had been kind enough to do for them.” CEV

Exactly how does one “see” the grace of God. Grace itself is not tangible, nor can its presence be substantiated by any natural senses. So far as human sight is concerned, “grace” itself is invisible, just as the God who gives it.

Grace brings spiritual stability, enabling the believer to stand amidst trials and in the face of ungodly trends and emphases. Where people are not standing firm, the presence of God's grace cannot be substantiated.

The Greek word translated “seen” is ιδω.ν . This word accents knowledge or awareness instead of the sight of the eye. As used in this text it means to “to perceive, notice, discern, discover,” THAYER “as having come to a perception or realization of something know, understand, comprehend” FRIBERG and “understand, recognize, come to know ” GINGRICH This is seeing that is done with the mind , as compared with the eyes. It is perception of the same order as that expressed by Peter to Simon the sorcerer: “For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity” (Acts 8:23). It is also akin to the perception he expressed in Acts 10:34: “For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.” Paul spoke in the same manner to the Athenians: “Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious” (Acts 17:22).

In all of these texts, as well as the verse we are considering, something was seen with the eyes. But it is the deduction to which they refer – the truth that was ascertained by their hearts and minds.

Now, back to the question of how a person can see or perceive the grace of God. First of all, the language suggests an acquaintance with the grace of God, so that it can be recognized. A person who is not familiar with the grace of God has no way of recognizing it, even though strong evidence is place squarely before him. Once the grace of God is comprehended to some measurable degree, the evidence of it can be detected.

What, then, are some of the effects of the grace of God? What does it do that can be readily recognized by those familiar with it. Ponder some of the statements of the Spirit concerning the grace of God.

- Men believe through grace. “And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him: who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace” (Acts 18:27). Grace is only as evident as one’s faith, and wherever faith can be confirmed, the presence of grace is also corroborated.

- Men stand in the grace of God. “By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God” (Rom 5:2; 1 Pet 5:12). Grace brings spiritual stability, enabling the believer to stand amidst trials and in the face of ungodly trends and emphases. Where people are not standing firm, the presence of God’s grace cannot be substantiated.

- Grace reigns through righteousness. “By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God” (Rom 5:2). This is righteousness that is expressed, or lived out. John refers to it as doing righteousness (1 John 2:29; 3:7,10). Where godly living is observed, grace is present. Where there are lapses into sin and friendship with the world, grace is absent.

- Under grace, sin loses its dominion. “For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace” (Rom 6:14). Those who have tasted of the grace of God are not dominated by sin. Those who are ruled by sin have spurned God’s grace,

- Grace causes spiritual productivity. “But by the grace of God I am what I am: and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I labored more abundantly than they all: yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me” (1 Cor 15:10). Those who are spending and being spent for the cause of the Lord are doing so because they have grace. Those who are living for self and uninvolved in the work of the Lord are in that condition because they do not have grace.

- Grace brings sufficiency in everything. “But by the grace of God I am what I am: and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I labored more abundantly than they all: yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me” (1 Cor 15:10). A personal sufficiency that is of such magnitude that it allows a person to abound to every good work exists because of the grace of God.

- Grace brings consolation and hope. “Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace” (2 Thess 2:16). The presence of everlasting consolation and good hope is a confirmation of the presence of the grace of God. These twin qualities ensure that the person does not cast off their faith, or succumb in the time of trial. Those who are knocked down by trial and swept away by temptation lack the grace of God – and we are saved “by grace through faith” (Eph 2:8).

• Grace teaches men effectively. “For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ” (Titus 2:11-13). Those who know how to live godly and do so, have been effectively taught by the grace of God. They are able to reject the tug of temptation and yield to the impulses of the Spirit – and they do so. Ungodly people are always lacking in grace, if not devoid of it altogether, and that condition exists because they do not have faith.

• Grace enables men to serve God acceptably. “Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear” (Heb 12:28). There is a Divine standard for serving God. Men cannot serve God out of rote, or by mere routine. What is more, their service must be accompanied by reverence and godly fear. It is the presence of grace that causes this kind of service.

When Barnabas came to Antioch, he saw the evidences of grace, which were apparently abundant. I cannot help but consider how he would react to the average church of our day. What would he see, or perceive, that would cause him to see the grace of God in the people? That is, indeed, something to think about!

HE WAS GLAD

“ . . . was glad . . .” Other versions read, “he rejoiced,” NASB “he was pleased,” GWN “was filled with joy,” NLT “was filled with excitement and joy,” LIVING “made him very happy,” IE “he was delighted,” WEYMOUTH “he was full of joy,” AMPLIFIED and “was joyed.” INTERLINEAR .

The word from which “was glad” is translated means, “to rejoice, be glad, in a proper, and strict sense,” THAYER “be delighted,” FRIEBERG and “to enjoy a state of happiness.” LOUW-NIDA This word contains the ideas of gratification and extreme satisfaction. It also includes the idea of pleasure. All of this is in a “proper and strict sense,” as compared to sinful indulgence and the pleasures of sin for a season.

The unique thing about this is that Barnabas was not rejoicing in what he had personally experienced. Rather, it was in what he had beheld in others. He saw the grace of God in them, and “was glad.” This is an aspect of rejoicing in the truth (1 Cor 13:6), which is a display of the absolute absence of self-centeredness.

One of the indications of spiritual maturity is when the individual finds great joy and satisfaction when the grace of God is at work in other people.

HE EXHORTED THEM ALL

“ . . . and exhorted them all . . .” Other versions read, “encouraged them,” NKJV “he made clear to them the need of,” BBE “entreated them,” MRD “urged them all,” NJB “continuously encouraged,” ISV “continuously exhorted (warned, urged, and encouraged) them all,” AMPLIFIED “he begged them,” CEV and “urged them.” GNB

The word “exhorted” is an important one in our spiritual vocabulary. It means “to call for, summon . . . entreaty . . . admonish . . . beg, beseech,” THAYER “as speaking with persistence, earnestly ask for, implore, beg . . . urge, encourage,” FRIBERG “appeal to,” UBS “ask for earnestly,” LOUW-NIDA “to request, to plead for, to appeal to,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “to persuade,” LEH and “implore.” GINGRICH

This is a word that has to do with persuasion – constraining people to do the will of the Lord, and engage themselves in what is right and needful. Exhorting is one of the spiritual gifts, or abilities, that the Lord has placed in the church. After telling the saints that they are to think soberly, and in accord with the measure of faith that has been dispensed to them, Paul mentions several gifts that were apparently functioning in the Roman church. Among them was exhortation. He admonishes the brethren to use their gift properly, doing what they have been placed in the body to do. In his admonition he says, “or he that exhorteth on exhortation” (Rom 12:3-8). “The exhorter,” RSV he says, is to give himself “in exhortation.”

The Distinction Between a Command and an Exhortation

An exhortation is more of an appeal than a demand. That does not mean that it is to be treated as optional, or that it does not really have to be done. This is an appeal to the heart as well as to the mind. It is not so much a statement of what is essential, as it is to what is reasonable. An exhortation presumes some life and desire, and is urging the person to act upon it, and enter wholeheartedly into the work. In an exhortation, the sense of the action to which men are called is made obvious, so that, if accepted, the exhortation will confirm that absolute unreasonableness of failing to respond in faith. For this reason, those who respond to exhortations are least apt to require chastening rebuke, reproof, and instruction in righteousness. Institutionalism has so hidden the value of exhortation that it is exceedingly difficult for some to make any sense out of it. Some would rather depend upon an authoritarian approach – a demand from the leaders of the church, a mandate from the elders, or a dictum from the mythical church board.

The necessity for exhortation is seen in that fact that we are engaged in a warfare – both without and within. Within, there is “a law,” that when we would do good, evil is present with us (Rom 7:21). Not only do we possess the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, we also have “another law” that wages war against the law of our mind (Rom 7:23). Without, we are a declining world within which we are strangers. Yet, it calls to us through the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life – all of which are “in the world” (1 John 2:15-17). In our time, there is also the influence of false religion that maintains a “form of godliness, but denies the power thereof” (2 Tim 3:5). All of this requires the word of exhortation to encourage and move us forward in our progress to glory.

Exhortation is not common in the modern church, even though the gift of exhortation has been placed within the body of Christ. Religious men have chosen to yield to the masses, looking upon any summons higher to be putting undue pressure upon the people. It is imagined that they will move forward at their own pace without having to be stirred up. After all, it is assumed, they love the Lord, and therefore they will grow at their own pace, so to speak.

There are staggering numbers of professing Christians who have never been so addressed by any living person. Never have they been admonished to hold fast to the Lord with steadfast determination. They have never been challenged to cling to Jesus with a purposeful heart.

Any soul who is simple enough to accept such erroneous reasoning will have to remove a good part of the Scriptures, cutting out the many exhortations delivered to the people of God with Jehudi’s penknife (Jer 36:23). Any person who objects to being exhorted, pled with, appealed to, and asked to move forward in faith, is shortsighted, to say the least. It is wrong to yield to the juvenile whims of such people, and no person professing to be of God can afford to do so. There simply is too much at stake for those who have come into Christ to be left on their own. This is why Barnabas faithfully and willingly exhorted the people.

Note that he did not do this because the people were lagging behind, or were spiritually indolent, neglecting so great salvation. He was moved to exhort the people because he had seen the grace of God in them. Due reflection on that perspective will yield a good harvest of holy thought.

CLEAVE WITH PURPOSE OF HEART

“ . . . that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.” Other versions read, “with purpose of heart continue with the Lord,” NKJV “with resolute heart to remain true to the Lord,” NASB “remain true to the Lord with all of their hearts,” NIV “remain faithful to the Lord with steadfast purpose,” NRSV “remain faithful to the Lord with steadfast devotion,” RSV “keeping near the Lord with all the strength of their hearts,” BBE “remain true to the Lord with their whole hearts,” CJB “remain solidly committed to the Lord,” GWN “with all their heart, they would adhere to our Lord,” MRD “remain faithful to the Lord in firmness of heart,” NAB “stay close to the Lord, whatever the cost,” LIVING “Never lose your faith. Always obey the Lord with all your heart,” IE “remain, with fixed resolve, faithful to the Lord,” WEYMOUTH “with hearty purpose to continue to be devoted to the Lord,” WILLIAMS “remain faithful to the Lord, with full purpose of heart,” MONTGOMERY “cleave unto and remain faithful to and devoted to the Lord with [resolute and steady] purpose of heart,” AMPLIFIED “be resolute in their faithfulness to the Lord,” PHILLIPS “with purpose of [or, a resolute] heart [fig., with steadfast devotion] to be continuing with [fig., remaining loyal to] the Lord,” ALT and “remain solidly committed to the Lord.” CEV

There are staggering numbers of professing Christians who have never been so addressed by any living person. Never have they been admonished to hold fast to the Lord with steadfast determination. They have never been challenged to cling to Jesus with a purposeful heart. Somehow they rarely, if ever, hear anything about their personal identity with God through Christ Jesus. They only hear of their lives in this world, resolving social and domestic difficulties, and doing their best to do what is right. However, the matter at hand – cleaving to the Lord with purpose of heart – was the first thing that Barnabas said when he saw the grace of God in the those in Antioch who had “turned to the Lord.”

Let it be clear, therefore, that turning to the Lord is not the fundamental thing. It is rather the beginning that enables the primary thing to be done. You would never get this impression in the average church. Many of the sermons that are regularly delivered do not leave people with this thought. Much of the literature to which they subject their minds is devoid of this kind of admonition.

The exhortation of Barnabas perfectly agreed with the words of our Lord: “Abide in Me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in Me . . . If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned” (John 15:4,6). Is there any person of sound mind who will postulate that a person can be saved without abiding in Christ, or without cleaving to Him with purpose of heart?

Or, who will champion the cause that states our condition in Christ requires no vigilance, no commitment, and no steadfastness. Further, precisely why are many people apparently arriving at that conclusion? If such a spiritual posture is even remotely possible, why did Barnabas deliver such a stirring exhortation? What would possibly compel him to speak in such a manner?

A GOOD MAN, FULL OF THE HOLY SPIRIT AND FAITH

“ 24 For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord.”

Now the text accounts for why Barnabas said what he did. I will tell you that this is a very revealing text – one that many poor souls will not be able to receive. Yet, this is the Holy Spirit, moving Luke to record not only what took place, but why it took place.

FOR

“For . . .” Other versions read, “because.” NET/YLT/ALT

The Greek word translated “for” is ο[τι], and it is found in all of the standard manuscripts. As used in this text, its lexical meaning is, “the reason why anything is said to be or to be done, because, since, for that,” THAYER “because, for, since,” UBS and “as a causal conjunction because, since.” GINGRICH

It was for the reason that follows that Barnabas exhorted the people to cleave unto the Lord with purpose of heart” – because, he as a “good man, full of the Holy Spirit and faith.” NKJV That is why, when he perceived the grace in the people, he spoke as he did.

A PARTICULAR KIND OF MAN

“ . . . he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith . . .”

Luke now accounts for the action of Barnabas. It was not because he was obligated to do so. Nor, indeed, was it because he was talented, and was compelled to use that talent.

A Good Man

I have emphasized repeatedly that the book of Acts, among other things, confirms how life in Christ Jesus is lived. Barnabas is a case in point.

Forty-eight of the versions that I have read “good man.” Some variant versions read “dependable man,” GWN “kindly person,” LIVING “good man [good in himself and also at once for the good and the advantage of other people].” AMPLIFIED

The word “good” means, “of a good constitution or nature,” THAYER “of the moral character of persons good, upright, worthy,” FRIBERG “just, kind, generous,” UBS and “implies some type of activity involving others.” LOUW-NIDA

In other words, the life of Barnabas was in harmony with his profession. He “worked good,” as stated in Romans 2:10. He was among those who were overcoming evil “with good” (Rom 12:21). He was willing and able to please “his neighbor for his good unto edification” (Rom 15:2). He, like the brethren in Rome, was “full of goodness” (Rom 15:14), and was “wise unto that which is good” (Rom 16:19). As a “good man” Barnabas walked in the “good works” that had been ordained for him (Eph 2:10). He was no doubt “fruitful in every good work” (Col 1:10), and was among those who followed “that which is good” (1 Thess 5:15). This was a man of God who had been “thoroughly furnished unto all good works” by the Scriptures (2 Tim 3:17).

In other words, Barnabas was walking in newness of life, and therefore was devoted to the betterment of the saints. His was not a philosophical religion, but one that was lived in the power of the truth of God.

I have emphasized repeatedly that the book of Acts, among other things, confirms how life in Christ Jesus is lived. Barnabas is a case in point.

Full of the Holy Spirit

The text does not say that Barnabas once was filled with the Holy Spirit – as some are wont to speak – but that he was “full of the Holy Spirit.” That is, this was the condition in which he was remaining. The Amplified Bible reads, “full of and controlled by the Holy Spirit.” This same thing was said of Stephen (Acts 6:5). When the apostles told the early church to select men to be placed over food distribution, they specified that the men must be “full of the Holy Spirit” NKJV (Acts 6:3).

Believers are admonished, “be filled with the Spirit” (Eph 5:18). Barnabas was fulfilling that word. This is the kind of person who is “spiritually minded,” or has a mind that is “controlled by the Spirit” NIV (Rom 8:6). This is the person who lives and walks “in the Spirit” (Gal 5:25). A person who is “full of the Holy Spirit” is the one who is “led by the Spirit” in putting to death the deeds of the body (Rom 8:13-14). This is the person who is “strengthened with might” by the Holy Spirit in the inner man (Eph 3:16), and in whom “the fruit of the Spirit” is being exhibited (Gal 5:22-24). It is a person who neither quenches nor grieves the Holy Spirit (Eph 4:30; 1 Thess 5:19).

Full of Faith

This is also a most arresting phrase. This statement was also made concerning Stephen (Acts 6:5,8). This is synonymous with being “strong in faith,” and not wavering (Rom 4:20). The effect of such a state is that the believer comes to possess the “full assurance of faith” (Heb 10:22). Being full of faith is equivalent to living by faith (Heb 10:38) and walking by faith (2 Cor 5:7). It means that faith is the basis of both reasoning and living. When we are full of faith, like Abraham, we “consider not” natural circumstances that contradict what faith apprehends (Rom 4:19). A person who is full of faith will “prepare an ark to the saving of his house,” even though there is no outward evidence or circumstance that justifies such an action (Heb 11:7).

What of Those Who Do Not Exhort the Saints?

If Barnabas exhorted those in whom the grace of God had been seen because he was a good man, and filled with the Holy Spirit and faith, what can be said of pretentious leaders who do not do as he did? What can be said of the preacher or teacher who does not admonish the people to cleave unto the Lord with purpose of heart? What of those who year after year omit such words from their preaching and teaching? What kind of men are they? I will leave the matter for you to consider. However, I am persuaded the omission of such exhortations is a far more serious condition than some think.

MUCH PEOPLE WERE ADDED TO THE LORD

“ . . . and much people was added unto the Lord.” Other versions read, “considerable numbers were brought to the Lord,” NASB “added to the Lord,” NRSV “were joined to the Lord,” BBE “joined them selves to the Lord,” GENEVA believed in the Lord,” GWN “won over to the Lord,” NJB “became followers of the Lord,” IE “the number of believers in the Lord greatly increased,” WEYMOUTH “were united to the Lord,” WILLIAMS “added to the Master.” INTERLINEAR “turned to the Lord,” CEV and “believed in the Lord.” GW

Linguistically, there is no question concerning the meaning of the word translated “added.” The Greek word is prosete,qh , and all of the accepted manuscripts contain it. The lexical meaning of the word is, “to put to . . . to add, join to, gather with,” THAYER “put to, add to,” FRIBERG “to add something.” LOUW-NIDA This word is used eighteen times in the Scriptures, Examples of its usage is as follows.

- “Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?” (Matt 6:27).
- “But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you” (Matt 6:33).

- “Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls” (Acts 2:41).

- “Praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved” (Acts 2:47).

- “And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women” (Acts 5:14).

- “Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator” (Gal 3:19).

As you can see, the meaning is very apparent: something or someone was appended to what already existed. In the text before us, people were added, and “the Lord” is the existing Reality to whom they were added.

Here the uniqueness of life in Christ is brought to light. Under the Law the people were not added to the Lord. Nor, indeed, were they added to Moses, the Lord’s representative. But here, in our text, the people were actually added “to the Lord.” I am not sure what translators were thinking when they chose to translate the words “joined themselves to,” GENEVA “believed,” GWN “won over,” NJB “became followers of,” IE and “turned to.” CEV Whatever was in their minds, they failed to convey a very essential aspect of salvation.

Believers Are Joined to the Lord

In the New Covenant, believers are “joined unto the Lord,” becoming “one spirit” with Him. As it is written, “But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit” (1 Cor 6:17). This views conversion from the standpoint of being in Christ’s body, which is such an intimate association that it is said, “For we are members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones” (Eph 5:30). There is a sense in which we are actually “added to the Lord” when we become members of His body. This obviously does not mean that we are equal with the Lord. It does mean that we become “partakers of Christ” (Heb 3:14), and “partakers of the Divine nature” (2 Pet 1:4). It does mean that those who are “added to the Lord” have “the mind of Christ” (1 Cor 2:16). It means that “the dying of the Lord Jesus” and “the life also of Jesus” is “made manifest in our body” (1 Cor 4:10-11).

This same language is employed in the fifth chapter of Acts, where another multitude of people are mentioned. “And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women” (Acts 5:14). The same Greek expression is used: pisteu,ontej tw/l kuri,wl (added, or joined to, the Lord).

This representation of things perfectly coincides with apostolic doctrine. This is a condition that is declared the following facts.

- Believers are “in Christ” (Rom 8:1).
- They have been “baptized into Christ” (Gal 3:27).
- Christ is in believers (Col 1:27).
- Christ dwells in their hearts by faith (Eph 3:17).
- Christ makes His abode in them (John 14:23).
- The response of people to those who are in Christ is said to be their response to Jesus Himself (Matt 25:40,45).
- The Spirit of Christ dwells in them (Rom 8:9).

In the salvation of God, a very real union is wrought between Jesus Christ and those who believe on Him. There is a sense in which they become one with Him, and even with the Father as well (John 17:11,21,22).

In wonderful words, our text affirms that because Barnabas spoke comfortingly and with strong exhortation to those who had “turned to the Lord” in Antioch, “many people were added to the Lord.” NKJV So far as the record is concerned, that was not the result of an evangelistic campaign by Barnabas. Rather, it was the result of the saints of God being properly exhorted.

Who is able to estimate what glorious results would take place if professing believers were exhorted to cleave to the Lord with purpose of heart, and actually did that by faith? This is certainly an area for sober and sustained thought.

BARNABAS SEEKS FOR SAUL

“ 25 Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul: 26a And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people.”

The text now provides some insight into how holy men responded to those who believed on Jesus, embracing His word and holding on to Him with strong determination. I will tell you that what we will now read will not blend with what is seen in professed men of God today. There is an inordinate emphasis being placed on recruitment, and a deploring and meager place being made for the building up of the saints – which is the revealed intention of the Head of the church (Eph 4:11-16).

BARNABAS SEEKS FOR SAUL

“Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul . . .” Other versions read, “to look for Saul,” NASB “to seek out Saul,” DARBY “to hunt for Paul,” LIVING “to try to find Saul,” WEYMOUTH and “to search out Saul.” WILLIAMS

A great spiritual harvest was being reaped in Antioch – similar to that which was going to be reaped in Samaria. That harvest was foretold by the Lord during His ministry in the flesh. At that time He told His disciples, “Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest. And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together. And herein is that saying true, One soweth, and another reapeth. I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor: other men labored, and ye are entered into their labors” (John 4:34-38). Now, in Antioch, the spiritual fields are ready to be reaped, and Barnabas senses there is need for another laborer – in informed and dedicated laborer. Therefore, he sets out to find Saul, who is in Tarsus – about 150 miles away.

Prior to this, the last word that is given concerning Saul of Tarsus is that when his life was endangered because of certain aggressive Jews, the brethren “brought him down to Caesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus” (Acts 9:30). They took Saul to Caesarea from Jerusalem, where he had been with the apostles, and had been “coming in and going out of Jerusalem” (Acts 9:27-28). That was probably a little more than three years prior to this trip by Barnabas, Generally accepted chronology places the sending away of Saul to Tarsus around 40 A.D., and Barnabas’ departure to look for him around 43 A.D. So, it had been some time since Barnabas had seen Saul. However, he had not forgotten him, and now sets out to find him. We do not know what Saul had been doing during that interim.

Tarsus is referred to as “no mean city,” “no insignificant city,” NASB or “no ordinary city” NIV (Acts 21:39). Ancient historians refer to Tarsus as “the chief of cities,” SOLINUS a “very opulent” city, CURTIUS “the most famous of the cities of Gallacia.” JOSEPHUS (John Gill’s Commentary).

We do not know the size of the city of Tarsus during the time of our text, but it must have been significant. Scholars speak of it as “the chief city of Cilicia. It was distinguished for its wealth and for its schools of learning, in which it rivalled, nay, excelled even Athens and Alexandria, and hence was spoken of as ‘no mean city.’” EASTON The city still exists today, being largely in a ruined state, yet with still 30,000 occupants. McCLINTOK-STRONG’S

Now Barnabas goes to this significant city to find Saul. For some, this would be like looking for a needle in a haystack, so to speak. But holy minds do not view challenges in such a manner. In the very least, think of Barnabas’ search as looking for a specific person in Clearwater FL, South Bend IN, Independence MO, or Kansas City KS. That will give you a reasonable perspective of what was involved in looking for Saul. You also get a sense of the value these holy men placed on the work of the Lord. They did not think in terms of it interrupting the flow of their normal lives. They were holding to a principle that was later enunciated by Paul: “For me to live, is Christ” (Phil 1:21). That is a most precise picture of “the newness of life” (Rom 6:4), and what is involved in being “joined to the Lord.”

Over the years I have observed the rarity of people who were devoted to the Lord in this manner. It is most unusual to find a person purporting to be working for the Lord that is not driven by an institutional agenda. There is not the slightest hint of this kind of thing in our text. This is the record of men who were living by faith and walking in the light.

HE FINDS SAUL AND BRINGS HIM TO ANTIOCH

“And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch . . .”

I do not doubt that Saul was actually found in one of the synagogues, or with the brethren who had probably been converted in that region. From the very beginning, Saul was noted for being with the disciples and speaking to the Jews concerning Jesus (Acts 9:19-22).

Having found Saul, Barnabas brings him to Antioch. This indicates willingness on the part of Saul, as well as the heart of himself and Barnabas for the work of the Lord.

THEY ASSEMBLED WITH THE CHURCH FOR A WHOLE YEAR

“And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people.”

How will the Spirit describe the activities of Barnabas and Saul? What will be the thrust of their work? That will be something of interest, and will provide a perspective of the manner in which insightful laborers think.

They Assembled Themselves with the Church

Other versions read, “even for a whole year they were gathered together with the church,” ASV “for an entire year they met with the church,” NASB “they were with the church there for a year,” BBE “They met with the congregation there for a whole year,” CJB “for a whole year they were gathered together in the assembly,” DARBY “that a whole were they were conversant with the Church,” GENEVA “a whole year they assembled themselves with the church,” RWB “a whole year did assemble together in the assembly,” YLT and “For a whole year they assembled together with and were guests of the church.” AMPLIFIED

For an entire year, Barnabas and Saul gathered with “the church” in Antioch – the assembly of the saints in that city. That is where they concentrated their attention. During the time of Moses, his ministry was focused on the children of Israel – God’s chosen people. The prophets majored on ministering to Israel. The ministry of John the Baptist concentrated on the Jews. When Jesus came, His ministry centered in the Jews. Throughout the book of Acts the bulk of the ministry of the apostles and other laborers was toward the churches. All of the epistles were written to the churches. Nearly every record we have of Paul speaking or writing is addressed to the churches, with very few exceptions. Leaders within the church were admonished to “Feed the flock of God” (1 Pet 5:2). The church itself is admonished to edify and build up one another (Rom 14:19; 15:2; 1 Cor 14:26; 1 Thess 5:11). Paul declared that he had been given power to edify (2 Cor 10:8; 13:10). The labors of holy men were not confined to the church, but that is where the stress was placed.

This has always been the manner of God. Judgment begins at the house of God because it has been given the most (1 Pet 4:17). This is where the vast majority of heavenly influence is poured out. These are the people to whom holy angels minister (Heb 1:13-14). They are the ones for whom Jesus intercedes (Heb 7:25), and the ones to whom God gives His Holy Spirit (1 Thess 4:8). These are the people upon whom God Almighty sets His eye, and toward whom His ear is bent (1 Pet 3:12). They alone are His “family” (Eph 3:15), and are the exclusive “body of Christ” (1 Cor 12:27).

What kind of influence would move a person to neglect these people, abandon them, or fail to feed them? In view of the Divine attention that is given to this body of people, what would constrain a person to advocate an emphasis that is placed on someone else – whether the lost, the poor, the young, or anyone else? Mind you, it is not that there is a studied neglect of such people. Rather, it is that they are not the focus of Divine intention. Reaching them is a fruit of spiritual maturity. Further, if the church is not strong, it has no business attempting to expand. In such a case, it is only perpetuating mediocrity and producing deformed and uninformed disciples.

Apart from this kind of reasoning, I do not know how you could account for men of the caliber of Barnabas and Saul remaining in Antioch for a whole year.

And Taught Much People

Other versions read, “taught a great many people,” NKJV “taught considerable numbers,” NASB “taught great numbers of people,” NIV “taught a great company of people,” RSV “instructed a large number of people,” AMPLIFIED “instructed a large number of people,” IE and “taught a large crowd.” WEYMOUTH

The word translated “people” is οχλον, which has the following lexical meaning: “a multitude of men who have flocked together in some place, a throng,” THAYER “throng of people milling around or closely pressed together, crowd, multitude,” FRIBERG “crowd,” USB “group of people, fairly large in size and assembled for whatever purpose,” LOUW-NIDA and “crowd, host, multitude,” LEH This word is used 175 times in the Scriptures. It always speaks of a gathering of people, not of people who are divided or dispersed.

This means that Barnabas and Saul were not speaking one-on-one, or to different groups. So far as this text is concerned, they were not even going from house to house. They were teaching an assembly of people who had come together to hear the Word of the Lord.

This should not surprise anyone. This is how Jesus taught – the people came to Him, or He called them to Him, and He taught them collectively (Mk 2:13; 10:1; Lk 5:3; 20:1; John 8:2). Paul spoke of “the whole church” coming together “in one place” (1 Cor 14:23). The church of our time has allowed men to promote smaller gatherings and cell groups which, they say, are more conducive to learning. What is the source of this idea, and why has it not birthed a mature and informed people?

There is an underlying objective that has been revealed for the church. It is that the whole body be “fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth” (Eph 4:16). It is that the saints be “perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment” (1 Cor 1:10). It may be easy to say that this can best be accomplished by dividing the people into small discussion groups. However, it is not so easy to support that supposition, or to produce some fruit that justifies its embrace. This is not how Barnabas and Saul operated. In view of that, we require some extensive explanation from those who have chosen to conduct their supposed ministry in a different manner. How do you support the idea of a “body” being separated into different parts – particularly when the local congregation is referred to as a “body” ? (1 Cor 12:27).

I do not mean to be contentious about this, but neither will I yield to reasoning that has not been substantiated. When men take it upon themselves to go about the work of the Lord in a manner that differs from Scriptural representations, they do owe us an explanation.

THE DISCIPLES WERE FIRST CALLED “CHRISTIANS”

“ 26b And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.” Other versions read, “in Antioch the disciples were for the first time called Christians,” NRSV “the disciples were first given the name of Christians in Antioch,” BBE “it was in Antioch that the talmidim for the first time were called ‘Messianic,’” CJB “at Antioch the disciples were first named Christians,” DOUAY “In Antioch, God called the followers ‘Christians’ for the first time,” IE “in Antioch that the disciples first received the name of ‘Christians,’” WEYMOUTH and “at Antioch too that the disciples first came to be known as ‘Christians.’” WILLIAMS

Note, the citizenry of Antioch did not refer to the disciples as good citizens, exemplary moral people, or those whose maintained the family structure. They made an association of these people with Christ – not with a movement, but with Christ!

This text has been used to promote the idea that “Christian” is the name of preference for those who are in Christ Jesus. This is based on the notion that the word “called” means called by God. For this reason, the International English version reads, “God called the followers ‘Christians.’” The Greek word translated “were called” is crhmatisai . This word is occasionally used to denote something that God has said. However, in each of those cases, there is a slightly different meaning to the word than the one projected in this text.

It is said to be a warning, and is translated “warned” (Matt 2:12,22;. Acts 10:22; Heb 8:5; 11:7). It is used do describe God revealing to Simeon that he would not see death until he had seen “the Lord’s Christ” (Lk 2:26). It is translated “admonished” in Hebrews 8:5 where God is said to have instructed Moses to build the tabernacle according to the pattern that had been shown to him. It is also used to describe Moses who “spoke” the Law “on earth” to the children of Israel (Heb 12:25). It is also used to describe a woman who was unlawfully married: “she shall be called an adulteress” (Rom 7:3). In none of these cases is the word employed to designate what God intended to be an appellation, and that is not its meaning here. It is unfortunate, to say the least, when men become so eager to support their own view that they endeavor to make the Word of God say what they have come to imagine.

CONCERNING THE WORD “CALLED”

“The name was evidently given to the followers of Christ by the Gentiles to distinguish them from the Jews since they were Greeks, not Grecian Jews. The Jews would not call them Christians because of their own use of Christos the Messiah. The Jews termed them Galileans or Nazarenes. The followers of Christ called themselves disciples (learners), believers, brethren, saints, those of the Way. The three uses of Christian in the N.T. are from the heathen standpoint (here), Ac 26:28 (a term of contempt in the mouth of Agrippa), and 1Pet 4:16 (persecution from the Roman government).” – Robertson’s Word Pictures

Until this time, the church was largely Jewish, and the Jews did not identify the people with Christ, for they did not consider Jesus to be the Messiah. In one place, the Jewish leaders referred Jesus’ followers as “the sect of the Nazarenes” (Acts 24:5). The above quotation is taken from Robertson’s Word Pictures and presents, what I consider to be, the proper view of this word.

“Christians” was a Gentile designation. The word itself (Cristianou,j) means “a follower of Christ,” THAYER and “one who is identified as a believer in and follower of Christ.” LOUW-NIDA In other words, the lives of these people confirmed whom they were following, and whose word was being kept by them. What do you suppose professing Christians are called today by those who do not personally know the Lord? I would venture to say that enough is not being said about the Christ these days for this association to be made.

Among other things, this suggests the emphasis of the teaching of Barnabas and Saul. Just as the apostles had “filled Jerusalem” with the doctrine of Christ (Acts 5:28), so Barnabas and Saul must have filled Antioch with their teaching. I do not know how any Gentile could have associated the people of God with Christ without the awareness of what they had been taught.

The use of this term in Scripture confirms that “Christian” is not the Divinely preferred way of referring to His people. It emphatically is not the appellation that God has assigned to them. It is used only three times in Scripture.

- “And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch” (Acts 11:26).
- “Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian” (Acts 26:28).
- “ Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf” (1 Pet 4:16).

It can be argued that all three of these expressions are from an outsider’s point of view. We do know that no church was ever addressed as “Christians.” There is no record of believers referring to one another in this manner. This certainly does not mean it is wrong to use the term. It DOES mean that it is not proper unless there is some evidence that the individual is really a follower of Christ. In our society, the very concept of a follower of Christ, or being one of His disciples, has little meaning. This is because there is a prevailing ignorance concerning both the Person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. His words are largely unknown, and His teaching has been withheld from the people. It is a tragic circumstance, indeed.

The Result of A Valid Ministry

It is not a coincidence that this Gentile area came to refer to the people of God as “Christians.” This was the result of the faithful ministry of Barnabas and Saul. They had brought a proper understanding of the Lord’s Christ, and made an obvious correlation between the manner of life of believers and the Savior of the world. Even though there is remission of sin in Christ Jesus, that is something that cannot be perceived by the world. The truth of remission must be evidenced through a life that is separate from sin, else the word is nothing more than jargon. The thought that those in Christ are sinners just like everyone else except that they are forgiven, is nothing more than the ranting of mad men who have no spiritual sense. Unless those outside of Christ can detect something obviously different in professed believers, it is open to question that there really is anything different about them. In such a case, claims of being of Christ bring reproach on Him.

PROPHETS CAME FROM JERUSALEM TO ANTIOCH

“ 27 And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch. 28 And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Caesar.”

Continuing the accent on the body of Christ, Luke now reports that certain prophets from Jerusalem came down to Antioch.

PROPHETS CAME FROM JERUSALEM

“And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch.” Other versions read “at this time,” NASB “during this time,” NIV “at that time,” RSV “while they were there,” NJB “about that same time,” IE and “during this period,” PHILLIPS

The phrase “in these days,” refers to the year during which Barnabas and Saul remained in Antioch. Apparently word had reached Jerusalem of the multitudes that were being added to the Lord. It makes perfect sense that prophets came down to Antioch, for they are especially suited for the ministry to the body. It is written, “he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort” (1 Cor 14:3).

Behold the interest in the church, which is the body of Christ, and the flock of God. These were not organizers or motivators, but prophets. They were not ministers for specialized groups, but prophets. During their stay in Antioch, the Lord will make provision for His people during a time of testing that will come.

THE PROPHECY OF AGABUS

Behold the interest in the church, which is the body of Christ, and the flock of God. These were not organizers or motivators, but prophets. They were not ministers for specialized groups, but prophets.

“ 28 And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world . . .”

Agabus the prophet is mentioned again in the twenty-first chapter, where he foretold the imprisonment of Paul, when he would be delivered “into the hands of the Gentiles” (21:10-11).

Other versions refer to this calamity as, “a great famine throughout all the world,” NKJV “a severe famine that would spread over the entire Roman world,” NIV “a great famine over all the world,” NRSV “serious need of food all over the earth,” BBE “a severe famine throughout the Roman Empire,” CJB “a severe famine throughout the Roman world,” CSB “a great famine over all the inhabited earth,” DARBY and “a great famine over the whole world.” DOUAY

Here, the Greek word from which “world” is translated is oivkoume,nhn . As used here, the word means “the inhabited earth,” THAYER “the inhabited part of the earth world.” FRIBERG The idea is that wherever men were found, food would become scarce. It would be a condition that could not be corrected by the governments of men, even the mighty Roman Empire.

IT CAME TO PASS

“ . . .which came to pass in the days of Claudius Caesar.”

The famine of reference came to pass, just as Agabus had said. Of course, that is the acid test of a true prophet – whether or not what he says actually comes to pass. When it comes to prophesying, the Lord makes no provision for mistakes or errors in judgment (Deut18:20-22). When a person declares God has revealed to him that He is going to do this or that, his word had better come to pass . If this does not take place, the person has spoken presumptuously, or brashly. Such should be confronted with the error of his way.

The following is a word concerning this famine. “ In point of fact, the predicted famine, which began in the fourth year of Claudius Caesar (A.D. 44) and lasted till A.D. 48, fell upon Judea exclusively, as far as appears from Josephus ('Ant. Jud.,' lit. 15:3; 20. 2:5, 5:2), and was very severe there. Ishmael was high priest at the time; and Helena, Queen of Adiahene, fetched large supplies of corn from Egypt and of figs from Cyprus to Jerusalem, to supply the wants of the people. Eusebius ('Eccl. Hist.,' 2:8) speaks of this famine as having prevailed "over the world," and as being recorded by authors hostile to Christianity, but mentions no names and gives no particulars ('Eccl. Hist.,' 2:8), but in the twelfth chapter of the same book he limits it to th<n Ioudai>an , Judea" PULPIT COMMENTARY

THE DISCIPLES DETERMINE TO SEND RELIEF TO BELIEVERS IN JUDEA

“ 29 Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judaea: 30 Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.”

This was the manner of the early church, and is the focus of philanthropy throughout Scripture. This does not suggest that it is wrong to assist the poor as we are able. It does, however, accent that while we are to “do good unto all men,” we are to do it “especially unto them that are of the household of faith”

The response of the disciples to this word is most arresting. The coming famine was declared to impact “all the world.” One might imagine that a good church would set up a world-wide relief fund. Perhaps some provision would be made for the starving children or some other global category of people. However men may choose to view it, this is not what the disciples determined to do – and there is no suggestion in the text that they were not correct in what they did chose to do.

THE DISCIPLES DETERMINE TO SEND RELIEF

Other versions read, “to send a contribution,” NASB “to provide help,” NIV “provide relief,” CJB “to minister to them,” DARBY and “send succor.” GENEVA

This relief was to be sent to the brethren in Judaea which, according to historians, was impacted greatly by this extensive famine. The collection of these resources, together with additional contributions, is mentioned frequently in Scripture (Rom 15:25-27; 1 Cor 16:1-2; 2 Cor 8:1-5; 9:1-2).

These were apparently financial resources, and each person determined to do the best that he could, giving proportionately to their resources. Paul also admonished that manner of giving to this cause in First Corinthians 16:1-2.

The particular people for whom provisions were being made were “the brethren,” or those who are in Christ Jesus. These are the poor for whom the church in Jerusalem made provision during the early days of the church (Acts 6:1-6). This was the manner of the early church, and is the focus of philanthropy throughout Scripture. This does not suggest that it is wrong to assist the poor as we are able. It does, however, accent that while we are to “do good unto all men,” we are to do it “ especially unto them that are of the household of faith” (Gal 6:10). In my own judgment, this has not been made sufficiently clear to the modern church.

THEY SENT IT BY THE HANDS OF BARNABAS AND SAUL

Other versions read, “sending it in charge of Barnabas and Saul to the elders,” NASB and “sending their gift to the elders by Barnabas and Saul.” NIV Those who have been involved in the distribution of gifts for the poor and needy, or have been made aware of such a work, know that distribution is the weak point of such programs. In addition, the siphoning of funds for other purposes this is a very troublesome reality.

One might question why they did not send the gift to the apostles, or to the deacons who had originally been appointed to the work of distribution to the needy. They did not send it to the apostles because it was not reasonable. Barnabas himself was there when “the twelve” told the people, “it is not reason that we should leave the word of God to serve tables” (Acts 6:2). Second, of the original seven who were appointed over the work of distribution, Stephen had been martyred, and Philip, driven out from Jerusalem by the persecution, was preaching abroad. It is reasonable to suppose that the other deacons had been involved in the dispersion as well. This was now 13-14 years after Pentecost, and the elders could best handle this situation – if not by direct involvement, by seeing to it that spiritually competent men were appointed over the work.

Notice how the believers in Antioch addressed this situation. First, they selected honorable men to be in charge of getting the contribution to Jerusalem – “Barnabas and Saul.” Second, they made sure that spiritually insightful and wise men were in charge of distributing the funds – “the elders.” Godly endeavors require godly men, who will conduct themselves in a godly manner. It appears that the church of our time could improve in this area. This is a time when waste is too common.

This, in a few verses, we have covered a period of more than one year.

CONCLUSION

Once again, I want to stress that we are being exposed to the expression of “newness of life.” This is the regenerated life in action. It is a display of how justification by faith impacts those who participate in it. The servants of whom we are reading are living by faith and walking in the Spirit. This is how people who have received the love of the truth conduct their lives. The priorities that are created by faith are made known in this book. Proper assessments are manifested, and how believers react to a word from God is made known. The level of interest that holy men had in the church of the living God is verified, and what believers think of one another is lived out.

Godly men and women should be profoundly concerned when these kinds of responses are not found in the church. Further, diligence must be exercised to avoid exalting traditions and customs that attempt to duplicate the results of which we are reading, while avoiding the appointed means through they are accomplished.

Lesson #53

JAMES IS KILLED and PETER ARRESTED

“ 12:1 Now about that time Herod the king stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church. 2 And he killed James the brother of John with the sword. 3 And because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. (Then were the days of unleavened bread.) 4 And when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people. 5 Peter therefore was kept in prison: but prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him. ” (Acts 12:1-5)

INTRODUCTION

While the Word of God is spreading, and multitudes are being “added to the Lord” north of Jerusalem, and in Gentile territory, a sudden turn of events takes place in Jerusalem. Life in Christ does not guarantee a life of ease and convenience in this world. While there are times when a season of tranquility is granted to the faithful, Jesus taught His disciples not to expect this to be the norm. His telling words are found in Matthew 10:34-36. “Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter in law against her mother in law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household.”

These words unveil the erroneous gospel that proclaims Christ always unites the family, and is the answer to every domestic dilemma. While every tender soul confesses this to be their desire, every honest person equally confesses the relative rarity of such an experience. Jesus did not mean He would invariably divide the family, or that this was a kind of litmus test of the legitimacy of one's faith. Rather, He was showing the effects of the embrace of a Gospel that anchors one in another world, constraining the individual to live for the time when the Lord gathers His people to Himself, so they can be where He is. The life of faith actually separates a person from the world, causing him to be a pilgrim and a stranger in it (Heb 13:14; 1 Pet 2:11). It simply is not possible for that fact to blend with the psychological approach to life that is being hawked in the modern churches. That is why those who major on domestic and social harmony life are prone to a procedural approach to life. Living is presented as though the individual is the primary thing, and existence and circumstances in this world are fundamental.

Throughout history, there have been notable families that have been divided. The very first family found Cain and Abel in the same household (Gen 4:8-9). There was also Ishmael and Isaac in Abraham's house (Gen 21:9-10), and Jacob and Esau in the house of Isaac (Gen 25:23; 27:41). Then there was the hostility in Jacob's household between Joseph and his brothers (Gen 37:4-8). Who can forget the opposition of David's own son, Absalom, to himself (2 Sam 15:6).

LIFE IS TO BE LIVED FOR CHRIST

God has made clear that life is to be lived for Him, not for self. It is written that Jesus "died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again" (2 Cor 5:15). Whatever the believer does, and however minuscule it may appear to be, it is to be done for the glory of God. As it is written, "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor 10:31). And again, "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by Him" (Col 3:17).

This posture addresses the matter of our associations with other people, for God is able to make our enemies be at peace with us (Prov 16:7). Even the heart of the king is in His hand, so that He turns it whenever and however He desires (Prov 21:1). However, should the individual choose to modify his commitment to the Lord, or alter the stance of his life in life in order to produce tranquil surroundings, he at once begins to stand in a precarious place.

While believers are not to go out of their way to produce friction, neither are they to place an inordinate value on peaceful and convenient circumstances. If Jesus said we are not to think that He came to send peace on earth, how could such a view possibly be right? Having said that, any social or domestic disturbance that cannot be traced back to the lack of unity in the faith can be perceived by the believer as something to be resolved.

First, it is important to establish that the highest form of knowledge is the knowledge of God. Actually, the intent of all revelation is to bring men to the knowledge of God.

Having said all of this, let it be clear that any hostility toward the saints must be because of their faith and righteousness, not any transgression or obnoxious peculiarities found in them. Solemnly Peter admonished us, "But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busybody in other men's matters" (1 Pet 4:15).

AN APOSTLE IS MARTYRED

In our text, a chief apostle, one of the inner circle of three (Peter, James, and John), is martyred by Herod. This was one of the twelve apostles, "set" first in the church and being charged with laying the foundation of that church. The apostles brought a certain indispensable lucidity to the people concerning Jesus Christ and the salvation that is in Him with eternal glory. Yet, even though his role was an essential one, James is removed from the world through an act of deliberate violence.

Then, because Herod saw that his despicable deed pleased the Jews, he set out to do the same thing to Peter, another of the chief apostles.

In the death of the one apostle, and in the arrest of the other, it appeared as though Herod was invincible, and could not be restrained. Yet, this report must be read within the concept of the Kingdom of God and the fact that "the heavens do rule" (Dan 4:26).

This is now the third initiative launched against the church. In the latter two, the people of God appeared to be powerless victims of oppression – at least to the eye of the flesh. In our text, the extraordinary power of oppression from religious quarters is also confirmed. We will also see how corrupt religion gets along well with this world's governments.

A REMINDER OF WHAT WE ARE BEHOLDING

In order to encourage a proper perspective of the Scriptures, it is needful to look at them from a higher vantage point – that of God's eternal purpose . An eternal objective drives all Divine dealings regarding the world and the human race. It is woven into the fabric of creation, the Law, the Person of Jesus Christ and the record God has given of Him, the book of Acts, the Epistles, and the Revelation. There is a certain progression in the sequence of these realities. It is not so much a progress that is quantitative as it is in the gradual unfolding of an enormous expanse.

First, it is important to establish that the highest form of knowledge is the knowledge of God. Actually, the intent of all revelation is to bring men to the knowledge of God. This is encapsulated in the insightful summation of the Law that was given by a certain scribe who had asked Jesus to identify "the first commandment of all." Jesus replied, "The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord: And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these." The scribe replied, "And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbor as himself, is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices. " Jesus saw that the scribe had answered "discreetly" and replied, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God" (Mk 12:28-33).

The point here is that man's identity with, perception of, and profound affection for the Living God is the most essential of all human involvements. The most important thing is NOT to know yourself, but to know God. It is NOT to resolve your particular problems, but to participate in what God is doing. The ultimate aim of God is not to get you to live correctly, and within the parameters of what is right. To be sure, that is involved, but it is by no means the sign of genuine achievement. Jesus revealed this to His disciples when He said, "So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do " (Luke 17:10). Before God, there is no virtue in doing what you are supposed to do – even though that is an absolute requirement. The thing that counts is what takes place AFTER you have been obedient. As a person who is in Christ Jesus, God Himself has called you "unto the fellowship of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord" (1 Cor 1:9). That "fellowship" is what make "the newness of life" what it is. This is what is involved in the objective of God's "exceeding great and precious promises" (as compared with commandments). It is through them that we "participate in the Divine nature AND escape the corruption in the world caused by evil desires" NIV (2 Pet 1:4).

This is why every form of revelation has been to enlarge our familiarity with, and understanding of, God Himself.

- THE CREATION. The creation presents a summary-type view of God. Although men did not perceive it on their own, God's word declares that "the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead ; so that they are without excuse" (Rom 1:20). The testimony of nature is everywhere that men can be found. The Psalmist says of heavens and firmament, "There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard" (Psa 19:3). Although their testimony is rudimentary when compared with what has been made known in Christ, sin has so impacted man's thinking that it has never perceived this clear testimony this on his own.

- THE LAW. The Law provided a larger circumference of revelation. In it there is a "form of knowledge of the truth," or "the embodiment of knowledge and truth" RSV (Rom 2:20). The Law was to knowledge and truth what an impenetrable wall is to a treasure house. There was a lot of truth and knowledge in the Law, but it was not apprehended by the people. They handled the Law like the Gentiles did nature – without comprehending its contents. This is precisely why David asked God to give him an understanding of the Law (Psa 119:34,73,125,144,169). He knew there were "wondrous things" in the Law, but also knew God had to open his eyes to see them (Psa 119:18). Now, in Christ, we can see the character of God in the Law.

- JESUS CHRIST. The Lord Jesus is the most precise embodiment of both God and the Truth that issues forth from Him. "The fulness of the Godhead" dwells in Him "bodily" (Col 1:19; 2:9). This means that there is nothing about God that can be known that is not revealed in Christ Jesus. He is the fullest revelation as well as the most precise exhibit of God. This is particularly relevant to us, because eternal life is knowing "the only true God" and "Jesus Christ" whom He has sent (John 17:3). If there is any professed teacher or preacher, or any religious system, that does not contribute to the understanding of Christ, the key of knowledge has been taken away and the entrance to the Kingdom of God has been blocked.

- THE BOOK OF ACTS. The book of Acts is not primarily a book of doctrine, or teaching, although much teaching is recorded there. Primarily, this book is an example of the newness of life being lived out. Here is how Jesus expressed Himself through men and women of faith. The book also contains examples of the reaction of the devil to truth as he works within simple souls. It is important to distinguish between an example of how men ought to live, and the actual record of how life in Christ IS lived. In the first case, we are speaking of an objective to be accomplished by men. In the second, we are provided an actual record of how Christ and the truth impact upon the human personality. The unavoidable conclusion is that if men do not react to the truth in the same manner as believers did in the book of Acts, then they do not possess what those people had. It is also significant to note that what they possessed is represented as common in the household of faith.

- THE APOSTLES DOCTRINE. The Apostles' doctrine is primarily the exposition of Christ Jesus and the salvation of God. They expatiate the implications of the Gospel, delineating what was accomplished by the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. They also open up how these realities affect men when they believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. Their teaching is not merely to direct men in how they are to live – although they say considerable on this subject. However, their primary testimony has to do with Jesus Himself and the great salvation that is in place because of Him. If it was possible to remove the exposition of Jesus and salvation from the epistles, nothing of lasting value would remain.

• THE REVELATION. The book of the Revelation presents the same thing – Jesus and His great salvation – from yet another perspective. Here the entire drama of redemption is presented as a vision. In a remarkable and grand summary form it presents the whole of salvation from beginning to end. It is done in pictorial form, many times using creatures, cities, and other natural phenomenon to depict how God is working salvation in the midst of the earth. The book confirms the unchangeable nature of both Satan and Deity. It also confirms that it is not possible for Satan to ultimately win, or for Jesus to lose. It affirms that those who place their faith in Christ and live for Him will survive the end of the world, the day of judgment, and demise of the devil. They will, in fact, be forever with the Lord.

With these things in mind, we will now launch into our text. We will see the nature of men who are vassals of Satan. We will also behold how those who are of God may appear to have been overcome, yet how God manages their lives. Religious flesh will also be held before us, with its depraved nature which takes pleasure in the suppression of truth and the opposition of the people of God. We will also see that deliverance is according to Divine discretion.

HEROD LAUNCHES AN INITIATIVE AGAINST CERTAIN OF THE CHURCH

There is a certain way in which history is recorded in Scripture. Among historians, history itself is often the point. Therefore precise sequence, dates, and surrounding circumstances are provided with great care. If the reader has understanding, there is measured value in such an approach. However, in the Word of God, there are often long periods of time that are omitted. For example, from Adam to Enoch was a period of over six hundred years. From Enoch to Noah was over four hundred years. The flood came six hundred years after Noah’s birth. From the flood to the call of Abraham was over three hundred and fifty years. From Abraham to the giving of the Law was around five hundred years, with considerably revelation being given concerning that period of time (Genesis 12:1-50:26 and Exodus 1:1-40:38). Israel’s forty-year trek in the wilderness is contained in Leviticus through Deuteronomy. The history of Israel following their entrance into Canaan through the time of Malachi the prophet was about 950 years, and is covered in the books Joshua through Malachi. The five hundred years between Malachi’s time and the birth of Jesus is not ordered in the historical record. Daniel’s prophecies relate largely to that period of time. From the birth of Jesus until the commencement of His ministry was thirty years, with only one incident, and the time related to John the Baptist’s birth (its announcement and a brief summation of John’s advancement to maturity), and his ministry (a period of six months) being very briefly referenced in Scripture.

All of this confirms that this world and what takes place in it is significant only if it has to do with the working out of the purpose of God. Apart from that, it is given no emphasis at all in the Word of God – and that is the proper perspective of the world and everything in it.

ABOUT THAT TIME

“Now about that time . . .” Other versions read, “It was about this time,” NIV “at the same time,” DOUAY “in that time,” TNT “during the same time,” IE and “it was at this time.” PHILLIPS

Ponder the things that were taking place at this time. The Word of God was spreading rapidly, reaching as far as the Island of Cyprus, the region of Phenice, and the central Syrian city of Antioch. At the arrival of Barnabas, “much people was added to the Lord” (11:24). Barnabas had brought Saul from Tarsus to Antioch, and they had spent a whole year, assembling with the church and had “taught much people” (11:26). It was there that the disciples were “first called Christians,” as their association with Jesus Christ was very obvious. Prophets had come from Jerusalem to Antioch. One of them, Agabus, had prophesied of a coming famine. In a sterling display of the unity of the Spirit, the disciples determined to “send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judah.” They did this, sending it “by the hands of Barnabas and Saul” (11:30).

Satan’s Head Is Bruised, Yet He Walks About As A Roaring Lion

One might imagine that during such a remarkable success of the Word of God, and with the hearts of people being so obviously changed that they were referred to as “Christians ” (followers of Christ), a devastating blow had been dealt to the kingdom of darkness. And, indeed, from one perspective this was true, for in His death Jesus had “destroyed the devil” and “spoiled principalities and powers” (Heb 2:14; Col 2:15). However, lest we forget, Satan is in the process of demise, and has not been annihilated, or exterminated. Jesus delivered a mortal bruise to Satan’s head, but he is still walking about “as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pet 5:8). He has no influence over Jesus, for He has triumphed gloriously over the old serpent. However, on earth, it is altogether a different matter. Therefore the word comes from heaven, “Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time” (Rev 12:12). Believers are reminded to “be sober” and “vigilant,” knowing that their “adversary” is on the prowl (1 Pet 5:8). Paul told the spiritually lethargic Christians in Corinth, “But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ” (2 Cor 11:3). James reminded men that the devil must be resisted, and they must draw close to God, else there was no hope of victory (James 4:7-8).

At the point the church loses the perspective of a fierce and relentless adversary, it stands in serious jeopardy. Satan cannot be overcome by steps, routines, procedures, or some form of personal discipline. He is too shrewd for such meager attempts to encroach upon his kingdom.

In confirmation of these things, the book of Acts reports several initiatives of Satan against the church – even though his head had been bruised. These aggressions took place while inroads were being made into his kingdom. For example, while the Gospel was being preached, and multitudes were being added to the Lord, a fierce persecution was launched against the church in Jerusalem, and all “except the apostles” were “scattered abroad” (Acts 8:1).

All of this confirms that God is not only “working salvation in the midst of the earth” (Psa 74:12), He is doing so in the midst of a conflict that is too large and powerful for men themselves. This is a fact that has been hidden from those pretenders who teach men to overcome sin by routines, disciplines, and the recitation of canned prayers and formulae. Let these men attempt to neutralize persecution by their Christianized incantations! Although they pretend to be able to release men from demonic hold by their methodologies, none of them are so foolish as to attempt to use such an approach to bringing an end to persecution, which is also a Satanic initiative. Additionally, they do not come against false doctrines in such a way, which are often “doctrines of demons” (1 Tim 4:1). All of this confirms that their meager attempts really have no power in the kingdom of darkness.

The prowess of the wicked one is the reason why believers are told, “let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober” (1 Thess 5:6). “And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light” (Rom 13:11-12).

In resisting the devil, we dare not depend upon the wisdom of men, which got us into sin in the first place. This will become apparent in this very text. This will not be an occasion for the church to gather together and form a strategy through which to neutralize Herod’s aggression. Nor, indeed, will they be able to outsmart him on a natural level. Further, God is going to allow something that will make no sense to the worldly mind-set. Apart from faith and an unwavering hope, I do not know how you can account for the things that are now reported in the book of Acts.

It is wise to enter into this text with the words of the Lord Jesus in our minds: “These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world” (John 16:33). The peace of which Jesus speaks postulates the presence of tribulation, affliction, burden, and trouble. In our text two forms of trouble have been introduced: persecution and famine. From a human point of view, both of them are unmanageable. Also, both of them confirm that believers are, in fact, “strangers and pilgrims” in the earth (Heb 13:14; 1 Pet 2:11). Salvation is not an economy that suits us for this world. It rather orients us to “the world to come.” The aim of redemption is multifaceted, and it is glorious to consider. Without being exhaustive, and avoiding any tendency to systemize these things, here are a few of them.

- Rid us of the guilt and stain of sin, which alienated us from God.
- Deliver us from the power of sin, in order that we might live for Him who died for us and rose again.
- Introduce us to fellowship with Christ, into which we have been called.
- Begin the process of changing us from glory to glory until we are at last fully conformed to the image of God’s Son at His coming.
- Through the Spirit to experience God working in us both to will and do of His own good pleasure.
- To gain an acquaintance with God – the knowledge of God – through which all necessary resources are acquired.
- To disassociate us from this present evil world in order that we might fit into the world to come.

The truth of the matter is that “heaven and the earth shall pass away” (Matt 24:35). It is also that “we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad” (2 Cor 5:10). It is for this reason that Jesus “gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father” (Gal 1:4). This makes perfect sense in view of the temporality of the world and life in the flesh.

The events of which we are reading are against the backdrop of these realities. What is even more, the apostles delivered a doctrine that, when received, caused men think this way. They made no effort to explain professed believers living in sin, nor did they represent life in Christ as being one of success and ease in this world. This is precisely why believers responded as they did to difficulties – whether famine or persecution.

HEROD THE KING

The name “Herod” was a family name, not a name specific to any single individual. The Herodians were “of Idumean descent (Josephus, Ant. 14:1, section 3). Fausset’s Bible Dictionary says of them, “The Idumeans were conquered and brought to Judaism by John Hyrcanus, 130 B.C. Thus the Herods, though aliens by birth, were Jews in faith. They made religion an engine of state policy.” The Idumeans were descendants of Esau, elsewhere referred to as Edomites, from which Idumea is derived. In fact, Scripture specifically states that Esau “is Edom” (Gen 36:1), and that he is the “father of the Edomites” (Gen 36:9,43).

Some are of the opinion that Herod had embraced the Jew's religion, but I personally doubt that to be the case. There is no firm statement in Scripture that reflects this understanding. Being a descendant of Esau, there is no doubt in my mind but that he maintained the primary traits of his progenitor. When Jacob and Esau were yet in the womb, the Lord said to their mother Rachel, "Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels; and the one people shall be stronger than the other people; and the elder shall serve the younger" (Gen 25:23). In this text, James and Peter represented "the manner" of Jacob, while Herod stood for "the manner" of Esau.

This family made the Jewish law "a lever for elevating themselves and their secular kingdom. For this end Herod adorned gorgeously the temple with more than Solomonic splendor. Thus a descendant of Esau tried still to get from Jacob the forfeited blessing (Gen. 27:29,40), in vain setting up an earthly kingdom on a professed Jewish basis, to rival Messiah's spiritual kingdom, as it was then being fore-announced by John Baptist." FAUSSET

The Edomites frequently clashed with Israel. Once, while they were en route to Canaan, the Edomites refused to let Israel pass through their country (Num 20:18-21). King Saul made war against them (1 Sam 14:47). David made a conquest over them (1 Kgs 11:14-16; 1 Chron 18:11-13). Once they joined with Babylon against Israel (Obadiah 1:11-16). The Psalms mention how the "children of Edom" once called for Jerusalem to be razed (Psa 137:7). Ezekiel prophesied against Edom because they "dealt against the house of Judah" (Ezek 25:12-14). Here, in the book of Acts, one of Esau's descendants is ruling in the land of Israel, and will turn his hand against the saints of the most High God.

This group of people bore a remarkable similarity to spiritual Babylon, which also seeks to build worldly advantage on revealed truth – something that is really impossible to do. This impossibility is owing to the incompatibility of flesh with Spirit, and the wisdom of this world with the wisdom that comes down from above.

This group of people bore a remarkable similarity to spiritual Babylon, which also seeks to build worldly advantage on revealed truth – something that is really impossible to do. This impossibility is owing to the incompatibility of flesh with Spirit, and the wisdom of this world with the wisdom that comes down from above. Oh, what a lesson is to be learned concerning the Herodian family!

This is the grandson of Herod the great, who built the Temple of Jesus' time – a project that took forty-six years (John 2:20). Prior to him there was "Herod the king" who was ruling when Jesus was born (Matt 2:1). He is one who ordered the slaughter of "all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under" (Mat 2:16). Shortly after that, he died (Matt 2:19).

Early in Christ's ministry "Herod the tetrarch" (ruler of the fourth part of a county) arrested John the Baptist and had him beheaded at the behest of his wicked wife. John had formerly rebuked Herod for marrying his brother's wife, telling him it was "unlawful" for him to have her (Matt 14:4; Lk 3:19-20). Later, Herod heard of Jesus, about midway through His ministry, and thought that it was John the Baptist risen from the dead (Lk 9:7). This Herod is also the one who joined Pilate in coming against Jesus (Lk 3:1; 23:11-12; Acts 4:27). This is also the Herod whom Jesus referred to as a "fox" (Lk 13:32).

Now, at the point of our text, it is approximately fifteen years after Jesus was crucified, and another Herod has risen. This man is historically known as "Herod Agrippa I." Because he was driven by a strong desire to be popular he will now engage in an initiative against "certain of the church." He was truly a member of the generation of which Solomon spoke: "There is a generation, O how lofty are their eyes! and their eyelids are lifted up. There is a generation, whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men” (Prov 30:13-14).

THE VEXING OF CERTAIN IN THE CHURCH

“ . . . stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church.” Other versions read, “to harass some,” NKJV “laid hands on some . . . to mistreat them,” NASB “arrested some . . . intending to persecute them,” NIV “laid violent hands on some,” NRSV “to afflict certain,” ASV “made cruel attacks,” BBE “arresting and persecuting certain,” CJB “cruelly attacked,” CSB “devoted his attention to mistreating certain,” GWN “to harm them,” NAB “began to persecute some,” NLT “moved against,” LIVING “in order to ill-treat them,” WEYMOUTH “In order to do them violence,” WILLIAMS and “to afflict and oppress and torment some.” AMPLIFIED

The words “stretched forth his hands” describe a deliberate and focused objective. This is not something that was done casually, or on the spur of the moment. The words suggest a plan, as well as the target of specific people. Of course, that is characteristic of all persecution.

Satan Was at Work

Satan himself was behind Herod’s initiative against certain in the church. His activity is portrayed in a most vivid manner in the Revelation: “Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time” (Rev 12:12). Again, this is said of the devil, “And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ” (Rev 12:17). The persecution launched by Herod is one way in which Satan worked. Herod was his vassal, doing his will, coming against “certain” in the church, which is the body of Christ.

Principalities and Powers Were Working

From another point of view, this was the activity of the under-rulers of Satan’s kingdom: “principalities,” “powers,” “the rulers of the darkness of this world,” and “spiritual wickedness in high places” (Eph 6:12). These, like Satan, had already been overthrown and plundered by Jesus (Col 2:15). Yet, they are still active, although they cannot touch what is born of God, or intrude into the heavenly realms to force men out of the place where God has placed them. They still work among men who, as Jesus said, are able “kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do” (Luke 12:4).

What Is Vexing?

Herod stretched forth his hand, engaging in an imitative to “vex” certain of the church. “Vex” is a good English word, meaning, “to bring trouble, distress, or agitation to . . . to bring physical distress . . . to irritate or annoy . . . harass.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER The meaning of the Greek word translated “vex” means, “to oppress, afflict, harm, maltreat,” THAYER “to physically harm, mistreat, ill-treat,” FRIBERG “treat badly, harm; be cruel,” FRIBERG and “treat badly, harm; be cruel.” LOUW-NIDA

The intention of Herod was not to merely make life difficult for “the church,” like imposing restrictions upon them, and complicating their lives. He set out to do harm to them, like Satan intended to do to Job. If unrestrained, the hatred of the people of God eventually leads to forceful aggression and ill-treatment. This is confirmed in Cain killing Abel, Joseph’s brother’s intending to slay him, Egypt’s treatment of Israel, and all of the opposition to the holy prophets.

It seems to me that the distinction between those who are reconciled to God and those who are not is being blurred in our time. There are too many efforts being exerted to explain why Christians appear to be no different than those who make no such claim. When the same characteristics that identify the unsaved are found in those who profess to be saved, it is not possible for any valid distinction to be made between them. Professing Christians who are really no different than those who are “of the world,” cannot shine as lights in the world, and it is foolish to admonish them to do so.

An innate hostility exists between those who are in the flesh and those who are in the Spirit. It is of such magnitude that it can scarcely be put into words. It is only the hand of the Lord that restrains the continually outward oppression of the saints. The nature of the ungodly is hostile toward both God and His people. That is why compromise with the world is so wrong.

These distinctions do exist, and they cannot be blended together in one personality. For example, you cannot have a holy demon, a godly evil, or a righteous sinner. Neither can you have an unholy seraphim, an ungodly Savior, or a worldly Christian. Although it is quite common to hear people speak of carnal Christians, dead Christians, or Christians in bondage, the language is self contradictory. One is either “in the flesh” or “in the Spirit,” as expounded in Romans 8:4-13.

Certain of the Church Were Selected

From the text, it appears clear that the word “certain” refers primarily to the apostles. At the very least, it would refer to those within the church who especially had godly influence among the people. That would be from an outward point of view. Seen even more clearly, it would include those with a greater understanding, who had grown up into Christ more fully, and were able to delineate the truth with power. Stephen and Philip were among those who could be so described, even though they were not apostles. I gather from the text that these were the kind of people toward whom Herod directed his wicked endeavors, with the accent being placed on the apostles.

This is still the manner of the wicked one. First the wicked one will seek to cast aspersions upon the truth itself. Then he will target those who are declaring it. Finally, he focuses on those who have manifestly embraced it

They Belonged to the Church

Notice that those against whom Herod stretched forth his hand are described as “of the church,” or those who “belonged to the church.” NASB These were part of the larger body of people, and were not separate from it. One of the unfortunate results of a “falling away,” or a general departure from the truth among those professing allegiance with Christ (2 Thess 2:3; 1 Tim 4:1-3; 2 Tim 3:1-5), is that insightful souls are no longer associated with “the church” in the minds of the enemies of Christ. It was the Roman Catholic church that first codified this separation, referring to the religious hierarchy as “the church,” and the members as “the children of the church.” This is reflected in the Catechism of the Catholic Church.

131. "And such is the force and power of the Word of God that it can serve the Church as her support and vigor, and the children of the Church as strength for their faith, food for the soul, and a pure and lasting fount of spiritual life."

Catechism of the Catholic Church

Article 3, Sacred Scripture

Later, this philosophy spilled over into protestantism in which the leaders were designated “clergy,” and the people were called “laity.” This practice continues today in a less formal way, but with the maintenance of the concept firmly in place. The language of our text confirms that this notion was not entertained by the early church.

A Result of Falling Away

Right here, I must say something concerning the effects of “a falling away” – when the professing church loses its appetite for, and grip upon, the truth of God. When the professing church is weak and ignorant, truly insightful souls are seen by the world as renegades, and religious oddities. They are not perceived as members and representatives of “the church.” More than often, such a person is even perceived by the professing church as a kind of oddball – an eccentric. Their words are viewed as inconsequential, and thus they are generally ignored by the very church they are endeavoring to strengthen. Throughout history, this has proved to be true. The great Reformers were largely unappreciated during their lives, coming to be appreciated years after their sojourn was completed.

However, when the church is strong, and its faith robust, the presence of godly and insightful souls is viewed quite differently.

The Flickering Flame

When the church at large has only “a form of godliness,” but is “denying the power thereof,” there are certain results that take place in the world.

- The truth is not held forth as the Lord intended when He made the church “the pillar and ground of the church” (1 Tim 3:15).
- The amount of light that the church is intended to shine into the world is diminished, so that critical matters are not clearly seen (Matt 5:14,16; Phil 2:15). This invariably results in general social decline.
- Wickedness is not exposed as it should be (Eph 5:11). The conscience of the public is therefore dulled, so that there is less and less concern for immorality and spiritual ignorance.
- Because they are not found within the ones professing identity with Christ, the dying and life of Christ are greatly obscured (2 Cor 4:10-11). As a consequence, Christ Himself becomes more and more befogged, giving rise to all manner of erroneous conceptions concerning both His character and objectives.
- The capacity of “the church” to influence society is greatly diminished because there is a decided reduction of grace that flows from Jesus to the people, for it comes only through those who are holding to Him, and are connected to Him (Eph 4:15-16; Col 2:19).

This Is Not the Time for Focusing on Individuals

When the church is in a weakened state, and its members are closer to the earth than to heaven, it is not the time to focus on individuals. This is not the time for the professing church to set out to resolve the difficulties of the world, or to concentrate on individual deficiencies. This does not mean individuals are ignored, but that they cannot become the center of attention. This is because their condition is largely owing to the deficiency of the church itself which has not held up the truth, both in word and in life. As a result, the consciousness, or awareness, of God has diminished, opening the door for the devil to enter.

This is a time when “the body” must be built up – when a collective growth must take place. This is growth that is marked by spiritual synergy, where the members complement one another through mutual ministry. This process, for want of a better term, is described in Colossians 2:19. There Jesus, who is “the Head,” is depicted as the Source “from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God.”

Ephesians 4:15-16 describes Jesus as the One into whom all believers are to “grow up,” and “from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.”

In both of these texts Jesus is depicted as ministering to the church through those members who have grown up into Him, or are matured in their faith. They are said to be holding to Him, which is another way of saying abiding in Him. As they remain connected to Him, He ministers nourishment, or life-sustaining grace, to them, making them capable of strengthening the other members of His body. It is at the point these members (who include every person in the body of Christ) touch, or have influence, with the other members, that the nourishment is “ministered” by Jesus through the individual. The collective saints are then “held together and compacted” by what Jesus ministers through them to one another. If this is not taking place, a strong church remains nothing more than an idea. No church, regardless of its size and perceived influence, can be said to be growing, united, or increasing, in which this ministry is not taking place.

Why Say These Things?

It is necessary to say these things because we are reading of the condition that prevailed in the early church – before “the falling away” NKJV (2 Thess 2:3). The church was mature and strong – that is why when it was scattered, the disciples “went everywhere preaching the word” (Acts 8:4). That maturity came about because they “continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers” (Acts 2:42). The believers were “continually devoting themselves to the apostles' teaching and to fellowship, to the breaking of bread and to prayer.” NASB

Reading With Perspective

We cannot read the book of Acts as though it reflected the condition of the modern church. Neither, indeed, can we read it as though it contained a depiction of the model church. This is the record of the real church, holding to its appointed Head, having nourishment ministered to it, and increasing with the increase of God. It is the report of what takes place when Jesus takes up residence in people. Here we are being exposed to what happens when the Holy Spirit is not quenched, and when sound doctrine is taught. It reveals what happens when that doctrine is embraced and people grow up into Christ Jesus. Here we are seeing people living by faith and walking in the Spirit.

The hostility against this church that is now reported is the direct result of the change in character that takes place in those who are joined to the Lord.

HEROD KILLS JAMES WITH THE SWORD

“2 And he killed James the brother of John with the sword.” Other versions read, “And he had James the brother of John put to death with a sword,” NKJV “He had James the brother of John beheaded,” NJB “He ordered that James be killed with a sword. (James was the brother of John),” IE and “He had James the brother of John murdered with a sword.” WILLIAMS

KILLED

The word translated “killed” is a very graphic one. As used here, the lexical meaning of the word is “to take away,” THAYER “do away with,” FRIBERG “to get rid of someone by execution,” LOUW-NIDA and “do away with, kill, murder.” GINGRICH This word accents the purpose – a purpose that was carried out by killing, or murder. The purpose was to get rid of someone that was standing, so to speak, in the way – someone that was being viewed as an obstacle.

The depiction is that of the Savior, restraining the expressions and manners of the hypocritical leaders. To them, getting rid of Jesus was like breaking the chains and cutting the ropes that bound and straitened them because of Him.

James is the first apostle who was martyred, which took place around A.D. 44. McClintok and Strong's Cyclopedia says of his martyrdom, "Clement of Alexandria, in a fragment preserved by Eusebius (Hist. Eccles. 1, 9), reports that the officer who conducted James to the tribunal was so influenced by the bold declaration of his faith as to embrace the Gospel and avow himself also a Christian; in consequence of which, he was beheaded at the same time." Clement of Alexandria lived from A.D. 150-211/216, and is considered prominent among the early teachers in the church. I mention this only to accentuate that from early times, key believers have been mindful of James the apostle, and of his martyrdom.

RESTRAINING INFLUENCES

As illustrated in this text, the truth of the matter is that it is more difficult for sinners to sin and despots to rule when righteous people are present. Oh, they do not confess to this restriction, but it does exist. The fulness of this condition was exhibited in our Lord Jesus Christ. His very presence was a restraint upon the wicked and hypocritical. The Psalmist portrayed this condition when he prophesied the intent for which the Messiah was slain. "Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us" (Psa 2:3). This was the Psalm that the early church rehearsed to God when they prayed for boldness in the wake of the opposition of the chief priests and Sadducees (Acts 4:5-8). The depiction is that of the Savior, restraining the expressions and manners of the hypocritical leaders. To them, getting rid of Jesus was like breaking the chains and cutting the ropes that bound and straitened them because of Him.

That is precisely what we have here –an attempt to break moral chains and cut ropes that were being imposed by the truth that was being disseminated in Jerusalem. It is also important to note that the Jews themselves were agitated by the presence of a proclaimer of the truth of Christ.

JAMES, THE BROTHER OF JOHN

Herod focuses on James, identified as "the brother of John." His position among the disciples, and influence in the city, was obviously one of prominence. He was one of the very first apostles who were called to follow Jesus, being preceded by Peter and Andrew (Matt 4:18-22). James, together with the other apostles, was among those who had "left all" and followed Jesus (Mk 10:28; Lk 18:28).

"James" is the Graecized form of Jacob (Ija>kwbov). Prior to being called by Jesus into the apostleship, he was a fisherman who worked with his brother John and their father Zebedee (Matt 4:21).

James and his brother, John, were called "Boanerges" by Jesus, "which is, The sons of thunder" (Mark 3:17). Lexically, this name "seems to denote fiery and destructive zeal that may be likened to a thunderstorm." THAYER This gives us an indication of the nature of James – zealous, and bursting with energy. He is an example of one whose energy was harnessed by the grace of God, and devoted to holy activities. In this regard, he appears to have been much like Elijah the Prophet and John the Baptist – noted for their uncompromising and focused zeal.

Although prominent among "the twelve," there is no mentioning of James between Acts 1:13, where he is listed second, and Acts 12:2. He is never again mentioned in the Scripture. He stands as an example of a significant person in the Kingdom of God who was not vaunted among men.

One Of Three Favored Apostles

James was one among three who were vouchsafed special favor from the Lord Jesus Himself. They formed the inner circle of "the twelve apostles" (Matt 10:2), and were granted some privileges others did not receive.

- These three were the only men who accompanied Jesus to the mount in which He was transfigured (Matt 17:1).
- They are the only ones who saw Jesus transfigured (Matt 17:2).
- They were the only ones who saw Moses and Elijah in glory, speaking with Jesus about the death He was going to accomplish (Matt 17:3; Lk 9:30-31).
- They were the only ones to whom God Himself spoke on the mount of transfiguration (Matt 17:5).
- When going to the house of Jairus to raise his daughter from the dead, Jesus permitted only Peter, James, and John to follow Him (Mk 5:37).
- Jesus allowed only these three to enter the house of Jairus with Himself (Lk 8:51).
- The entire Olivet discourse was delivered to Peter, James, John, and Andrew (Mk 13:3-37; Matt 24:3-25:46).
- On the night of His betrayal, Jesus permitted only Peter, James, and John to go further with Him in the garden (Mk 14:33).

The flesh might reason that privilege guarantees longevity, or that prominence always affords protection. However, let us consider this malicious deed that was wrought on James. Here was a wicked person – Herod – gaining the seeming advantage over a righteous person – James. Here was a child of the wicked one seemingly triumphing over a child of God. The ungodly killed the godly. The wicked apparently removed the holy. Someone who lacked faith opposed and removed someone who did have faith.

Now, this is not the first time such actions have been recorded.

Here was a child of the wicked one seemingly triumphing over a child of God. The ungodly killed the godly. The wicked apparently removed the holy. Someone who lacked faith opposed and removed someone who did have faith.

Cain killed Abel (Gen 4:3-8; 1 John 3:12).

- Pharaoh slew great numbers of innocent male children (Ex 1:16,22; Jer 19:4).
- Jezebel killed the prophets of God (1 Kgs 18:4,13).
- The Jews killed their own prophets (1 Thess 2:15).
- Zechariah the prophet was killed in the court of the house of God (2 Chron 24:21; Matt 23:35).
- Uriah the priest was killed by Jehoikim the king (Jer 26:23).
- Herod mandated the slaughter of innocent children (Matt 2:16; Jer 19:4).
- John the Baptist was beheaded by Herod (Matt 14:10; Mk 6:27-28).
- Stephen was stoned by the Sanhedrin (Acts 7:58-60).
- Holy people were “stoned” and even “sawn asunder” (Heb 11:37).

This is not to mention the extended suffering that many of the people of God have endured. Among the records are that of the incomparable sufferings of Job (Job 1-2), four hundred years of oppression for the Israelites (Gen 15:13; Acts 7:6), the extended persecution of the early church (Acts 8:1-4), and many others.

Such actions, if viewed from a lower vantage point, are difficult to comprehend. They appear to contradict some of the great promises that have been given to the people of God.

- “For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found: surely in the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him” (Psa 32:6)
- “The angel of the LORD encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them” (Psa 34:7).
- “Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the LORD delivereth him out of them all ” (Psa 34:19).
- “ No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper ; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the LORD, and their righteousness is of me, saith the LORD” (Isa 54:17).
- “But there shall not an hair of your head perish ” (Luke 21:18).

Such texts are to be considered within the context of other words that Jesus delivered on the subject of opposition and even martyrdom.

- “Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake” (Matt 24:9).
- “Therefore also said the wisdom of God, I will send them prophets and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute” (Luke 11:49).

Given due heed, all of these advantages work to produce a life that is acceptable to God. Even a persecutor of the church will stop that activity when he is joined to the Lord. A former thief, even though momentarily snared by the sin again, only needs to be told, “steal no more”

“Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also” (John 15:20).

- “These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world” (John 16:33).

You can add to this the words delivered by holy men after Jesus was enthroned in heaven.

- “. . . we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God” (Acts 14:22).
- “And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together” (Rom 8:17).
- “That no man should be moved by these afflictions: for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto” (1 Thess 3:3).
- “If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us” (2 Tim 2:12).

Life in This World Is

Not The Primary Life

All of this accents that life in this world is not the primary life. That is precisely why Jesus said, “He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal” (John 12:25). It is not possible that there can be an exception to this rule.

In view of this clear statement by the Lord Jesus, I do not know how any person can justify an approach to life in Christ that majors on correcting human behavior. The salvation that is “in Christ Jesus with eternal glory” (2 Tim 2:10), impacts directly upon the character of those receiving it. Their hearts are “purified” (Acts 15:9), their conscience is “purged” (Heb 10:22), they become a “new creation” (2 Cor 5:17), and receive the Holy Spirit of God (1 Thess 4:8). Their sins are forgiven (Col 2:13), they are “joined to the Lord” (1 Cor 6:17), and the grace of God that brings salvation teaches them to effectively reject all ungodliness, and live righteously in this world (Tit 2:11-13). Every possible advantage has been given to the child of God, and that includes access into the grace wherein we stand (Rom 5:2).

Given due heed, all of these advantages work to produce a life that is acceptable to God. Even a persecutor of the church will stop that activity when he is joined to the Lord. A former thief, even though momentarily snared by the sin again, only needs to be told, “steal no more” (Eph 4:26). Of course, all of this is to no avail if life is addressed as though it was comprised of habits.

SEEING PERSECUTION FROM A HIGHER POINT OF VIEW

It is wrong to philosophize about why the people of God suffer. The Lord has made it clear that He is taking a people “out of” the masses for His own name (Acts 15:14). Jesus Himself made clear that those whom He chooses are chosen “out of the world,” and no longer belong to its order. He also affirmed that this why the world hates those whom He has chosen out of it (John 15:19).

Finishing the Course

Particularly when we are considering the death of a believer, like that of James, there is something to ponder. Just as surely as there is a race that is “set before” those called of God (Heb 12:1), so there is a point at which the servant of God can say, “I have finished my course” (2 Tim 4:7).

For some, the course is relatively short – like Abel, Enoch, Stephen, and James. For others, it is considerably long – like Abraham, Noah, Hosea, Daniel, John, Peter, and Paul. It is the work to which one has been appointed that determines their duration in the world. I say this in the awareness that a person, through foolish living, can die before their time (Eccl 7:17). From this point of view, protection is only as sure one’s assignment from the Lord.

A Confirmation of Revealed Truth

When the people of God are oppressed, and even slain, several statements of truth are confirmed. This confirmation is to heavenly principalities and powers as well as the saints on earth.

- The world does, indeed, hate those who have been chosen by Jesus (John 15:18-19; John 16:2,33; 17:14; 1 John 3:13).
- Jesus is, in fact, able to succor, or minister relief, to those who are tempted (Heb 2:18).
- No opposition or inconvenience, however severe it may be, can “separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus” (Rom 8:35-39).
- The opposition and persecution directed toward the people of God by the ungodly is a “token” of the justness of their punishment. Paul stated it in these words: “And in nothing terrified by your adversaries: which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God” (Phil 1:28). And again, “So that we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure: Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer: Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you” (2 Thess 1:4-6).
- In all of these things, the “manifold wisdom” of God is being made known to “principalities and powers in heavenly places” through “the church” (Eph 3:10). The beheading of James will have no hindering effect upon the truth. It was the means through which James left this world to be “present with the Lord.” It also confirmed that Herod was wicked, that James was righteous, and that the truth is superior.

WHEN HE SAW THAT IT PLEASSED THE JEWS

“ 3 And because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. (Then were the days of unleavened bread.)”

Herod was shrewd and calculating. He sought for the applause of men as well as other forms of personal advantage. This will all be confirmed in the manner in which he viewed this whole situation.

HE SAW THAT IT PLEASSED THE JEWS

“And because he saw it pleased the Jews . . .” Other versions read, “he saw that this was pleasing the Jews,” BBE “saw how much this pleased the Judaeans,” CJB “saw how much this pleased the Jewish leaders,” LIVING “saw that the Jewish leaders liked this,” IE “Finding that this gratified the Jews,” WEYMOUTH “saw how this was agreeable to the Jews,” ISV and “when he found this action pleased the Jews.” PHILLIPS

Josephus, the Jewish historian, says of Herod: “This king (Herod Agrippa) was by nature very beneficent, and liberal in his gifts, and very ambitious to please the people with such large donations; and he made himself very illustrious by the many expensive presents he made them. He took delight in giving, and rejoiced in living with good reputation.” Antiq., 19, chapter 8, section 3)

Commenting on the Divine objective of civil government, Paul wrote the following: “Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same: For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil” (Rom 13:1-4).

The following is a brief summation of this passage.

- The words “power” and “powers” are translated from the Greek word evxousi,a. . The meaning of this word is “the power of authority,” THAYER “ruling power, government, official. Jurisdiction,” USB and “right to control or govern over – authority to rule.” LOUW-NIDA

Herod was shrewd and calculating. He sought for the applause of men as well as other forms of personal advantage. This will all be confirmed in the manner in which he viewed this whole situation.

- “Every soul” is to be subject to civil authorities. As with all forms of power, both domestic and social, this applies only in matters that do not contradict the Lord of all.

- The reason for subjection to civil authorities is that they have received their power from God.

- Whoever resists, or rebels against due authority, is resisting or rebelling against what God has instituted.

- Those resisting the specified authority will bring judgment upon themselves.

- Rulers, as defined by God, are not a terror to those who do good.
- The same rulers are intended to strike terror in those who do evil, or wrong.
- Those who do good, of what is right, will receive commendation from properly functioning authorities.
- Civil authorities are God's ministers, or servants, for the good of society.
- Such authorities are also God's ministers, or servants, for the punishment of those who do evil.
- They do not bear the sword in vain, executing capital punishment where warranted.

All of this coincides with what is written elsewhere concerning civil authority.

- “He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory : for the pillars of the earth are the Lord's, and he hath set the world upon them” (1 Sam 2:8).
- “God hath spoken once; twice have I heard this; that power belongeth unto God ” (Psa 62:11).
- “ By Me kings reign , and princes decree justice. By Me princes rule , and nobles, even all the judges of the earth” (Prov 8:15-16).
- “I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by My great power and by My outstretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto Me ” (Jer 27:5).
- “And He changeth the times and the seasons: He removeth kings, and setteth up kings : he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding” (Dan 2:21).
- “And they shall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field: they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and seven times shall pass over thee, until thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will ” (Dan 4:32).
- “And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen” (Matt 6:13).
- “Jesus answered” [Pilate], “Thou couldest have no power at all against Me, except it were given thee from above : therefore he that delivered Me unto thee hath the greater sin” (John 19:11).
- “And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood” (Rev 1:5).
- “And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS” (Rev 19:16).

Therefore, civil authorities are responsible to God for what they do – whether we are speaking of Pharaoh or Saul, Og and Sihon or Solomon and David. All of the kings of Israel and Judah were responsible to God. Heathen kings like Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Darius, and Cyrus were as well. There are some notable examples of heathen kings who recognized this responsibility and yielded to it. Some of them are Cyrus (Ezra 1:1-11), Darius (Ezra 6:1-12), Artaxerxes (Ezra 7:1-28), and the King of Nineveh (Jonah 3:6-9).

Some of the wicked rulers who did not give honor to God included Pharaoh (Ex 1:10-22), Hanon the Ammonite (2 Sam 10:4), Ahab (1 Kgs 16:30-33), Manasseh (2 Kgs 21:1-17), and Pilate (Lk 13:1; Matt 27:11-26).

This is the Way It Is

The Scriptures declare to us the precise manner in which worldly rulers obtain their power. Knowing this, or at least sensing it, godly people refused to yield to the mandates of any ruler whose authority was used in contradiction to the law of God. No insightful person has ever been represented as submitting to a ruler who required the people to contradict the nature or revelation of Almighty God.

- The Hebrew midwives refused to obey Pharaoh's command to kill the male Hebrews babies (Ex 1:15-21).
- Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah refused to obey the king's command to bow down to a golden image (Dan 3:16-18).
- Daniel refused to obey the edict to cease praying to the God of heaven (Dan 6:10).
- The three wise men from the East were told by an angel not to obey Herod, but to return home another way (Matt 2:8,12).
- When the religious leaders commanded the apostles to cease to teach and preach Jesus Christ, they refused to do so (Acts 4:19-20).

No person, whether king or vassal, has the right to disobey the God of heaven, or to act in contradiction of His will. Further, no commandment that is at variance with the revealed will of God is to be obeyed, regardless of its source.

If these things are not so, then Herod can be justified in the beheading of James. Such a thought is too absurd to be entertained for even a moment.

The truth of the matter is that Herod stepped beyond the boundary of his authority. He ventured into an area in which God had given him no authority.

This is a perspective that must not be lost by the professing church. Believers must posture themselves to obey God rather than men, never yielding to any requirement from men that obviates the necessity of yielding to the Lord.

What Their Religion Produced

Here was a wicked king who made a move against the church because it pleased religious people – even the leaders of the people who were chosen and cared for by Almighty God. This was the people of whom it was said, “Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen” (Rom 9:4-5). All of this translated into a very definite advantage. It is written, “What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision? Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God” (Rom 3:1-2).

The principle is that such an approach to acceptable living actually awakens and strengthens the sinful nature, rather than subduing it. From the heavenly vantage point, this is precisely what the Law was designed to do – to make sin break forth, in order that men might become more aware of their need for a Savior.

It is essential to see that “the Jews” were no ordinary people even though they were conducting their lives as though they were. Privileges had been vouchsafed to them that were absolutely unique. They had brought inconceivable advantages to the people. Yet, when those favors were ignored, it caused them to plummet even deeper into sin. The truth of God has an unavoidable impact upon those who are subjected to it. It will either promote liberty or enforce bondage. When the truth is “known,” it makes men free (John 8:32). When it is ignored, disdained, and not believed, it nails them more firmly to this world and condemnation.

Although it is necessary, exposure to the truth by no means guarantees its acceptance. This puts the lie to the notion that hearing and repeating things eventually leads to the formation of better character. This erroneous notion is nothing more than imagination spawned in hell itself, and perpetrated by demons. Yet, it is the supposition upon which all procedural approaches to correct behavior are founded. If such a thought was true, the Jews would have been the most spiritually and morally improved people in the history of the world.

Paul elaborates on this principle in his letter to the Colossians. He did so because they were being corrupted by teaching that was philosophical, and recommended routines and disciplines through which wayward tendencies were addressed. In a sterling statement concerning the impotence of humanly devised “ordinances” designed for those who are “living in the world,” Paul wrote, “Which things have indeed a show of wisdom in will worship, and humility, and neglecting of the body; not in any honor to the satisfying of the flesh” (Col 2:23). Other versions say such rules are of no value in “in restraining sinful indulgence,” NIV “in checking the indulgence of the flesh,” NRSV “in restraining people from indulging their old nature,” CJB and “but they are of no value in checking the indulgence of the flesh (the lower nature). [Instead, they do not honor God but serve only to indulge the flesh].” AMPLIFIED

The principle is that such an approach to acceptable living actually awakens and strengthens the sinful nature, rather than subduing it. From the heavenly vantage point, this is precisely what the Law was designed to do – to make sin break forth, in order that men might become more aware of their need for a Savior. Paul stated it this way – and this is said of God’s holy, just, spiritual, and good law: “But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful” (Rom 7:13). The Amplified Bible reads, “It was sin, working death in me by using this good thing [as a weapon], in order that through the commandment sin might be shown up clearly to be sin, that the extreme malignity and immeasurable sinfulness of sin might plainly appear.”

Paul cites his own experience as proof of this. “For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. And the commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me” (Rom 7:9-11). The idea here is that there is such a vast chasm between human nature and the Divine nature, that the very Law of God caused sin to break forth. Or, in the words of Paul, “But sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence” (Rom 7:8).

Account for the Pleasing of the Jews

I am accounting for the fact that the Jews were “pleased” when Herod killed James. For sensitive souls, such a reaction defies all reason. Additionally, this account verifies the absolute need for a Savior, and the unwavering requirement of men to accept Him, yield to Him, and live no more for themselves.

Do not fail to get the picture. We are speaking of an initiative, and the commendation of it, that took place in Jerusalem – among the Jews. These are the people who not only had been subjected to the regular reading of the Law and the prophets, but were also exposed to the introductory ministry of John the Baptist. There was also the ministry of the Son of God Himself, extending over a period of more than three years. At the time of our text, they had also been exposed to the expensive ministry of the apostles and others for nearly fifteen years.

Shut Up to the Faith

Yet, these people preferred living under the contrived traditions of the Jewish leaders, who wrested the Scriptures, leaving the people thinking that they were serving God. In them a principle enunciated by Paul was lived out. “But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed” (Gal 3:23). Other versions read, “locked up until faith should be revealed,” NIV “kept under restraint until faith should be revealed,” NRSV “imprisoned and guarded under the law until faith would be revealed,” RSV and “kept in custody in preparation for the faith.” AMPLIFIED

Elsewhere Paul announces that the Law had nothing whatsoever to do with faith. It was a system of doing, not believing. As it is written, “And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doeth them shall live in them” (Gal 3:12), or “But the Law does not rest on faith [does not require faith, has nothing to do with faith], for it itself says, He who does them [the things prescribed by the Law] shall live by them [not by faith]. [Lev. 18:5].” AMPLIFIED In other words, those who subscribe to a system of Law are actually kept from believing, for there is nothing in the Law that either requires or promotes faith. It leads men to Christ, but it does not give them to Him. It is the peculiar prerogative of faith to do that.

Therefore, because of their penchant for Law, these people, like those who were subjected to Jesus, refused to embrace Him because they “could not believe” (John 12:48).

It ought to be noted that all who promote systems of law, routines, procedures, and the likes for the promotion of spiritual life, have actually made it more difficult for faith to enter. If the Law that was ordained of God shut men up to faith, you may be sure that the systems and laws created by men will do no better.

The Flesh Profits Nothing

All of this substantiates that the flesh profits nothing. “Flesh” speaks of the natural part of man – everything that can be traced back to Adam, for “ whatsoever is born of the flesh IS flesh” (John 3:6), and the entire human race is traced back to Adam (Acts 17:26) and to Eve, who is “the mother of all living” (Gen 3:28). In Adam “all die,” both spiritually and in the body (1 Cor 15:22).

Flesh cannot be educated or cultured out of its unacceptable condition. It cannot be trained in such a manner as to make men adequate for Divine acceptance. There is no procedure that can remove the past, grant repentance, create a new heart, or restructure man’s character. If the Law – the ultimate moral code – given by God Himself, could not accomplish such a change, you may be sure men cannot devise such a system.

It is important to remember that the Law was not a series of progressive steps – a procedure that men continually try to sanctify. The Ten Commandments in their entirety were to be kept all of the time. They were not a series of steps through which human behavior could be corrected. Rather, their purpose was to show that man’s basic nature cannot be changed by anything man himself does. To put it another way, the fundamental nature of Adam cannot be changed for the good. It is in this sense that Adam and Eve died, and the whole human race with them. It is written that men are “dead in trespasses and sins” (Eph 2:1).

Men left entirely to their own (barbarians) cannot change their nature. This is confirmed by the first chapter of Romans (1:19-32). Left to themselves, men degenerated, spiraling downward until they freely committed and condoned deeds that were beneath the temperament of the beasts of the earth (Rom 1:26-27). The change wrought in them was not upward, but downward.

Even when the flesh is cultured through all manner of natural wisdom and expertise, it has no impact upon the character of men. This is seen in the Egyptians, the Chaldeans, the Greeks, and the Romans. These were all noted for their cultural advancements, which are held in high regard to this very day. The Egyptians refused to acknowledge the God of heaven, even after He had made Himself known to them through ten awesome plagues. The Chaldeans, Greeks, and Romans were also exposed to Divine manners through the Jews, and the Romans in the Person of Christ – yet they took their stand against both God and His people. Their culture, with all of its wisdom, social expertise, and well-ordered society, could not change their character.

Even religious flesh cannot be sanctified. The primary evidence of this is the Jews themselves, who had a revealed religion. They were given a superior law (Deut 4:7), and statutes and ordinances that reflected the mind of the Lord. Although their origin was found in God Himself, they became “a degenerate plant and a strange vine” to Him (Jer 2:21). They killed the prophets that were sent to them, and finally, through the hands of wicked men, crucified and killed “the Prince of life” (Acts 3:15; 1 Thess 2:12). The strictest form of procedural religion – one given by God – did not and could not change them!

Even when men are granted authority, they cannot improve their fallen condition. World rulers like Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezzar, Darius, Cyrus, Alexander the Great, and the Caesars, could not change their character. Their influence reached across the length and breadth of the world, and their innovations and accomplishments are burned into history. They could not change their character. Their authority did not reach that far! Add to these those leaders of lesser authority, who also exercised domination over men. Politically, these include both Pilate and Herod. Religiously they include the Jewish chief priests, the elders, the scribes, the Pharisees, and Sanhedrin, and the lawyers. All of them together did not bring about a single improvement in the character of men. What is even more, all of them opposed the Lord’s Christ, who was Truth incarnate.

I do not know how it is possible to present a more thorough testimony of the inability of man to change himself. Yet, to this very day, there are still men who are presenting procedures and disciplines that claim to change the individual. Some consist of seven steps, some of eight, and some even of twelve. But none of them can reach the heart or alter the character. None of them can transform or regenerate, or bring back from death in trespasses and sins, or produce a cleansed conscience before God. None of them require faith, and none of them can bestow the blessing that comes from Jesus alone.

See, these very things are being confirmed to us in our text. We are reading of Herod, who was noted for cultural advance, and keeping the people pleased. We are reading about religious leaders who were occupying offices instituted by God Himself. We are reading of people who had a revealed religion, and progenitors that walked in Divine favor. Yet, in spite of all of this, James, the brother of John, chosen by Jesus, and occupying a pivotal position in the body of Christ has been beheaded – and the wicked deed has pleased the Jews! Let those who champion the imagination that change comes through routine give us an explanation of this condition!

The Pervasive Nature of Unbelief

This also confirms the pervasive nature of unbelief, and the wickedness that is promoted when people who are exposed to the truth refuse to accept it. Unbelief has to do with the heart, not merely the mind. Therefore it is written, “Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God” (Heb 3:12). Because of its association with the heart, unbelief is pervasive and invasive in nature. It contaminates everything it touches, making it unacceptable to God – and that includes the person and everything he does. As it is written, “unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled” (Titus 1:15).

Because of its rebellious nature, unbelief awakens “the flesh” to do remarkably absurd and unreasonable things. We see this in this very text. Herod had been exposed to enough of the truth to know who was chief within the church. There is no question concerning an association being made between James and Jesus of Nazareth, for that message is what gave identity to the early church. That is why they were referred to as “the sect of the Nazarene,” and someone of prominence among them was called “a ringleader,” as Paul was several years later (Acts 24:5).

The Flesh Cannot Be Reformed

“The flesh” cannot be reformed. That is because God has rejected it, and requires a new birth. Every effort to train the flesh is nothing more than vanity. Such cannot possibly yield the results that have been assigned to faith.

“The flesh” cannot be reformed. That is because God has rejected it, and requires a new birth. Every effort to train the flesh is nothing more than vanity. Such cannot possibly yield the results that have been assigned to faith.

If it can be traced back to Adam, there is no lasting value in it – it makes no difference what it is. In Jesus, there is a new generation. He is the only Progenitor that can beget acceptable children (Rom 5:12-19). As the “Last Adam,” He has brought the official conclusion to everything deriving its source from Adam (1 Cor 15:45). As “the Second Man,” He is the Beginning of a new generation – the only one that is, or ever will be, received by God (1 Cor 15:47; Heb 2:13).

The Myth of the Power of Habit

Worldly philosophers and heathen religions have heralded habit as the door that leads to character. As I am using the term, and as commonly accepted, “habit” means “a behavior pattern acquired by frequent repetition or physiologic exposure that shows itself in regularity or increased facility of performance b : an acquired mode of behavior that has become nearly or completely involuntary” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

All recovery systems and procedural religion are based on this mythical approach. Here are some historical statements made concerning “habit.”

- “Sow an act...reap a habit; Sow a habit...reap a character; Sow a character...reap a destiny." Attributed to George Dana Boardman

Baptist Minister, 1801-1931

- “We sow our thoughts, and we reap our actions; we sow our actions, and we reap our habits; we sow our habits, and we reap our characters; we sow our characters, and we reap our destiny.”

Author: Desiderius-Gerhard- Erasmus

Dutch Humanist and Theologian, 1466-1536

- “I say that habit's but a long practice, friend, and this becomes men's nature in the end.”

“Men acquire a particular quality by constantly acting in a particular way.”

"Moral excellence comes about as a result of habit. We become just by doing just acts."

Aristotle

Greek Philosopher, 384-322 B.C.

- “Our character is basically a composite of our habits. Because they are consistent, often unconscious patterns, they constantly, daily, express our character.”

Steven Covey

Mormon, Born 1932

- “To learn new habits is everything, for it is to reach the substance of life. Life is but a tissue of habits.”

Henri-Frederic Amiel

Swiss Philosopher, 1821-1881

- “Thought moulds your character. If you entertain noble thoughts, you will develop a noble character; and if you entertain evil thoughts, you will develop a base character. This is the immutable Law of Nature. Therefore, you can deliberately shape your character by cultivating sublime thoughts. Thought materialises and becomes an action. If you allow the mind to dwell on good, elevating thoughts, you will do naturally good and laudable actions.”

Excerpt from All About Hinduism by Sri Swami Sivananda

Hindu spiritual teacher, 1887-1963

- "Men's natures are alike; it is their habits that separate them."

Confucius

Chinese thinker & social philosopher, 551-479 B.C.

In all of these groups, the participants confess that they are still really what they have always been. However, now the difference is that they have new habits, and are no longer indulging their old ones, even though they are going against their fundamental desires.

Thus, ranging from preachers to philosophers, and from Mormon’s to Hindus, it has been promulgated that character is, in fact, formed by repetitive expressions. Actually, actions flow from character. Character does not result from actions. What a person does is the expression of what they are. What they do cannot change what they are, anymore than a leopard can change its spots, or an Ethiopian the color of his skin. In fact, the Word of God makes a point of the fact that a person cannot change what they are by what they do. “Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil” (Jer 13:23). That is, any change of habit is only outward, and has no bearing at all upon what the person really is.

As I have said, this view drives all recovery routines. It is the foundation upon which all “anonymous” groups base their programs. Official groups following this approach include the following.

- Adult Children of Alcoholics = "<http://www.adultchildren.org/>"
- Alcoholics Anonymous = "<http://www.alcoholics-anonymous.org/index.html>"
- Clutterers Anonymous = "<http://www.clutterers-anonymous.net/>"

In all of these groups, the participants confess that they are still really what they have always been. However, now the difference is that they have new habits, and are no longer indulging their old ones, even though they are going against their fundamental desires.

Of course, it is one thing to speak of these as social ills, independent of the life that is in Christ Jesus. However, this approach has now been incorporated into church programs across the country. The number of these groups is so staggering it boggles the mind – and these are recovery groups for professing Christians. I have personally counted fifty of these groups, twenty-six recovery centers, and eleven Christian Counseling Associations. All of these are global, national, or regional and are not listed at the city, or community, or private level.

The Purpose for This

My purpose in bringing up this seemingly diversion is to accent the uniqueness of salvation – something in which neither Herod nor the consenting Jews had participated.

In Christ Jesus a point is established at which the individual ceases to be what they were before. The point is the new birth, or regeneration. It is the place in which the person is delivered from the kingdom of darkness, and translated into the Kingdom of God's dear Son (Col 1:13). At that point the person is turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God (Acts 26:18). Their "old man" is crucified, and they begin walking in the newness of life (Rom 6:4-6). They are no longer what they were before, even though some of them had been immersed in deviate and enslaving manners of life. Paul speaks of some in Corinth who could be so described, and he unequivocally proclaims their present state. "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. And such were some of you : but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God" (1 Cor 6:9-11). How frequently this manner of speaking is employed – not accented what the people did, but what they WERE.

- "But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you" (Rom 6:17).
- "Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led" (1 Cor 12:2).
- "That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world" (Eph 2:12).

- “For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light” (Eph 5:8).

- “For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls” (1 Pet 2:25).

And what was it that changed what we “were” ? Was it a habit, or a new set of habits? Were we changed by a series of steps that we performed, or by some form of regimented repetition? Oh, the answer is obvious enough to those with eyes to see. We were changed by the working of the Lord! Our character was changed. Our minds were changed. Our basic persons – our hearts – were changed. We became a “new creation” in Christ Jesus. Old things – including what we were – passed away, and everything became new (2 Cor 5:17). As God’s own workmanship, we were “ created in Christ Jesus” (Eph 2:10). We were “ made righteous” (Rom 5:19), “ made free” (Rom 6:18,22), and “ made to drink into one Spirit” (1 Cor 12:13). We were “ made accepted in the Beloved” (Eph 1:6), and “ made to sit together with Christ in heavenly places” (Eph 2:6). Now, we are described as having been “ made partakers of Christ” (Heb 3:14). The change wrought when men are born again is described in this manner: “enlightened . . . tasted of the heavenly gift . . . made partakers of the Holy Ghost . . . tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come” (Heb 6:5).

The change itself is the result of God’s own work, and is so described. “For God , who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 4:6). The same kind of change took place within the believers as took place in the creation. Just as surely as chaos was dissipated and darkness dispersed, so we were moved from darkness into light, changing the entire landscape of lives. So far as the ongoing change that is taking place – which is always upwards and onwards – it too is traced to Divine working : “And we all, with unveiled face, beholding the glory of the Lord, are being changed into his likeness from one degree of glory to another; for this comes from the Lord who is the Spirit” (2 Cor 3:18).

How do you describe a person who went through all of that, and now must go through some form of recovery? Is it that their real self reasserted itself? Is it that they really were never changed at all? Is that the explanation? Or, is it that they have “fallen” (Gal 5:4), or “turned back” (2 Pet 2:21), or made a place for Satan (Eph 4:27)? Could it be that they allowed an “evil heart of unbelief” to enter into them again (Heb 3:12)?

In the case of our text, the Jews were pleased because they chose to remain under the Law, which was “weak through the flesh” (Rom 8:3). The Law itself was not weak. It was the ones to whom it was addressed that were weak. It required more strength than those who were under it possessed.

By the time of our text, they had probably kept fourteen more Passovers, fourteen more Feast of the Tabernacles, and fourteen more Pentecosts. Seven hundred and twenty-eight Sabbaths were behind them. They had heard Moses and the prophets read at least that many times.

The religious rule-makers, however, do not deliver this message to the people. They lead them to believe that the strength is in the procedure – that if they will just do it long enough, it will transform them. But, what will they do with the Jews of our text. They certainly continued to do the procedures prescribed by the Law. In fact, they even performed them with care while they were delivering Jesus to be crucified (John 18:28). By the time of our text, they had probably kept fourteen more Passovers, fourteen more Feast of the Tabernacles, and fourteen more Pentecosts. Seven hundred and twenty-eight Sabbaths were behind them. They had heard Moses and the prophets read at least that many times. I know of no purported recovery program that requires that many repetitions. Some claim good results in forty days. Others say it will require a year. But what about the Jews of our text? Just how does that fit into that way of thinking? And if Divinely ordained routines did not change people, who is the person brash enough to say their rules will get the work done?

We Are Being Exposed to the Real Thing

In our text, we are being exposed to the real thing. This is not the outworking of a theory, but the manifestation of the fact that men are unchanged until God Himself changes them. Herod killed James because he was alienated from God, and James was reconciled to God. He did so because he was not changed, and James was changed. He did not think about what God thought of his action, but took note of what the Jews thought. That was because he had more in common with them than with the Lord. On the other hand, the Jews were pleased with the death of James because they were alienated from the life of God. They did so because they could not see James as God saw him, and God could not see him as they saw him. The whole affair was a revelation of what the people were. In my judgment, that is one of the reasons God did not stop it from happening – in order, among other things, to stop the mouths of those who barter with the souls of men, leading people to think their plans are more effective than the salvation of God.

Rather than being changed by doing, we are changed by beholding – that is the express statement of Scripture (2 Cor 3:18; 4:6). When at last we undergo the final change, our bodies being raised from the dead, the change will be wrought precisely the same way – by beholding Jesus, seeing Him as He is (1 John 3:1-2).

HE PROCEED TO TAKE PETER ALSO

“ . . . he proceeded further to take Peter also.” Other versions read, “to seize Peter,” NKJV “arrest Peter,” NASB “Take Peter also,” DARBY and “lay hold on Peter also.” YLT

How brash and bold was this wicked man. God had said, “Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm” (1 Chr 16:22; Psa 105:15). David dared not touch king Saul (1 Sam 24:6-7). Michael the archangel, when disputing with the devil, dared not cast a railing accusation at him (Jude 1:9). But Herod, like a stupid beast, apprehended and incarcerated the man who had been given “the keys of the kingdom of heaven” (Matt 16:19).

That is how a person thinks when they are “dead in trespasses and sins,” “alienated from the life of God,” and taken captive by the devil “at his will” (Eph 2:1; Eph 4:18; 2 Tim 2:26). God does not interfere with Herod’s activity, for “it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble” His people (2 Thess 1:6). He will let them treasure up wrath for themselves (Rom 2:5). God is of such a nature as to store of His wrath for a great outpouring, by enduring with much longsuffering the vessels of wrath that were “prepared for destruction” (Rom 9:22). He will allow them to work their wills to remove all doubt about their reprehensible nature!

It is this fact that supports the statement, “For we know Him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto Me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge His people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God” (Heb 10:31). That text is based upon a statement God made concerning Himself in Deuteronomy 32:35. It is a most arresting text, and worthy of our consideration – particularly since an appeal is made for believers to consider it. “To Me belongeth vengeance, and recompense; their foot shall slide in due time: for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste.” The idea is that all of their strength will eventually run out, because they are trusting in themselves. For Herod, he is basking in the strength of his throne, killing one apostle, and arresting another in hopes of doing the same thing. He sees himself as invincible, and Peter as vulnerable. Little does he know the future God has planned for him, as well as for His faithful servant Peter.

THE DAYS OF UNLEAVENED BREAD

“Then were the days of unleavened bread.” Other versions read, “Now it was during the Days of Unleavened Bread,” NKJV “This happened during the Feast of Unleavened Bread,” NIV and “This was during the days of Unleavened Bread [the Passover week].” AMPLIFIED

The “Feast of Unleavened Bread,” or “days of unleavened bread,” were the seven days following the Passover. The Law specified this in Leviticus 23:5-6: “In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the LORD: seven days ye must eat unleavened bread” (Lev 23:5-6). The Passover was on the fourteenth day, and the “days of unleavened bread” commenced on the fifteenth day. The whole period was not referred to as “the Passover,” as some allege. Luke 22:1 appears to refer to this feast as “The

This was the same season during which Jesus was crucified 14-15 years earlier. It was a holy time for the Jews – an extended period – yet they still were pleased when Herod rid them of one of the chief representatives of Jesus.

Passover.” “Now the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the Passover” (Luke 22:1). However, the emphasis here was on the approach of the Feast of Unleavened Bread, and not on the Feast itself – i.e. “The feast of unleavened bread drew nigh,” or was at hand. The particular day that marked that approach was the Passover, which was on the fourteenth day. The Passover and the Feast of unleavened bread were considered separately, even though they were consecutive (2 Chron 35:17; Mk 14:1). The word used in our text is plural (h`me,rai) – “days” – confirming that it was not speaking of the Passover itself, but of the week that followed. In other words, the “days of unleavened bread” were in process.

This was the same season during which Jesus was crucified 14-15 years earlier. It was a holy time for the Jews – an extended period – yet they still were pleased when Herod rid them of one of the chief representatives of Jesus. So far as these people were concerned, their hearts were still calloused, and no change had been wrought in them. This was true, even though they had just observed a feast that was an ordained depiction of the death of Christ, who is appropriately described as “our Passover” (1 Cor 5:7). However, as Paul says elsewhere, “their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which veil is done away in Christ. But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart” (2 Cor 3:14-15). Because of the hardness of their heart, God had poured out the spirit of deep sleep upon them (Isa 6:9-10; 29:10-11; Matt 13:14-15), so they could make no association between the time of the Passover and “the Lamb of God,” of which John the Baptist had spoken (John 1:29,36).

PETER IS APPREHENDED

“4a And when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him . . .”

Here we will confront the clear conflict of man's intentions with the purpose God. Herod desires one thing, and God desires another. Judging from the success that Herod had in killing James, it may appear that he is free to do whatever he desires. It will be interesting to see how all of this plays out. Keep in mind that Divine manners and power are being made known as well as the human purposes and abilities.

WHEN HE HAD APPREHENDED HIM

“And when he had apprehended him . . .” Other versions read, “arrested him,” NKJV “seized him,” NASB “taken him,” ASV “caught him,” GENEVA “capturing,” GWN and “taken into custody.” NAB

As used here, the word “apprehended” means, “to lay hold of, to take, capture,” THAYER “with hostile intent to seize, arrest, take hold of,” FRIBERG “to take hold of firmly and with a considerable measure of force - to take hold of, to seize,” LOUW-NIDA and “to take into custody.” GINGRICH

This word suggests launching a search for Peter, and engaging in a quest to capture him. Herod has no fear of Peter, just as he apparently had no fear of James. He thinks himself to be superior to the apostle, and feels as though he can have his way with Peter.

David spoke of the wicked plotting to apprehend the righteous. “The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth” (Psa 37:12). “The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him” (Psa 37:32).

Jeremiah also lived in treacherous times, when the wicked were plotting against he godly. “For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side. Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him, and we shall take our revenge on him” (Jer 20:10).

What will be the outcome of Herod’s initiative? David said of the efforts of the wicked against the righteous, “The LORD will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged” (Psa 37:33). Alas, it seems as though God did leave James in Herod’s hand – but He did not. As Isaiah said, the death of James was actually a deliverance – it just came in a different manner. Here is what Isaiah said. “The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come. He shall enter into peace: they shall rest in their beds, each one walking in his uprightness” (Isa 57:1-2). As you can see, the will of the Lord is not always apparent, but it IS always superior, and cannot be frustrated by His enemies.

Juvenile and simplistic views of triumph are damaging to the people of God, and those who promote them do them no service. It is never an advantage to think like a child in kingdom matters. Solemnly we are told, “in understanding, be men ” (1 Cor 14:20). However we choose to think about opposition, conflict, and oppression, we must remember that Jesus is, in fact, “over all” (Rom 9:5). He will not allow any of His disciples to be tempted above their ability, but will always provide a way of escape, that they may be able to bear it. That does not mean they will always escape from trouble, but from the objective of the temptation hurled at them by the wicked one. Their escape may be upward , and it may even appear as though no escape was provided. However, this very night James can tell you that he did in fact, escape from the hand of Herod.

There appears to have been a kind of awareness in Herod that this man required special measures of security. It certainly was not that he was like Barabbas a “notable prisoner” (Matt 27:16). Peter was not a rabble rouser or insurrectionist. Yet, there was something about him that moved Herod to be cautious. This fact alone should have moved him to inquire further into the matter of Peter.

HE PUT HIM IN PRISON

“ . . . he put him in prison . . . ” Other versions read, “threw him in prison,” CJB “cast him into prison,” DOUAY “had him thrown into prison,” GWN “imprisoned him,” NLT “put in jail,” IE and “lodged in jail.” WEYMOUTH

Herod forcibly laid hold on Peter and put him in prison. Peter no doubt remembered when he had been imprisoned by the Jews (Acts 5:18). There were no human rights groups, or advocacy professionals to champion the rights of Peter. And, you may be sure, Herod would not have honored them if there had been any. Thus he first takes Peter out of activity, confining him in prison while he waited to fulfill his own will against him – like he thought he did with James.

DELIVERED TO FOUR QUATERNION OF SOLDIERS

“ . . . and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him . . . ” Other versions read, “four squads of soldiers,” NKJV “four squads of four soldiers,” NIV “four bands of armed men,” BBE “four files of soldiers,” DOUAY and “sixteen soldiers in squads of four.” GWN

A “quaternion” was four bands of four soldiers each, which guarded Peter in succession, or in rotations, throughout the four watches of the night. We do not know the limits of these watches, but there is an allusion to them in Matthew 14:25, the record of Jesus walking on the water to the disciples during “the fourth watch.” It is thought that the Roman watches were from 6-9 PM, 9-12 AM, 12-3 AM, and 3-6 AM. Others have considered the watches to be described as “even,” “midnight,” “cockcrowning,” and “morning.” These divisions of the night are mentioned in Mark 13:35: “Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowning, or in the morning” (Mark 13:35).

During these four watches, four soldiers were guarding Peter at all times, supposedly ensuring that he would be present when the morning arrived.

There appears to have been a kind of awareness in Herod that this man required special measures of security. It certainly was not that he was like Barabbas a “notable prisoner” (Matt 27:16). Peter was not a rabble rouser or insurrectionist. Yet, there was something about him that moved Herod to be cautious. This fact alone should have moved him to inquire further into the matter of Peter. He did not, however yield to such an impulse, but boldly took measures that he thought were sufficient to ensure Peter would be there in the morning.

All of this confirms the hardness of heart that accompanies unbelief and the desire to please men. It is a consequence unbelievers cannot avoid, and is a state to be greatly feared.

AFTER EASTER

“ 4b . . . intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people.”

Herod, who had already carried out his will concerning James with no apparent restriction, now incarcerates Peter.

INTENDING

“ . . . intending . . . ” Other versions read, “his purpose being,” BBE “with the intention,” CJB “purposing,” DARBY “Herod wanted,” GWN “that he might,” MRD “Herod planned,” NET and “meaning to try him in public.” NJB

Here we are confronted with the will of man – Herod’s intentions. The Scriptures do deal with human intentions or purposes. First, we are reminded that the Word of God is “living and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the division of soul and spirit, and of joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart ” NKJV (Heb 4:12). Proverbs 12:2 affirms that God will condemn “a man of wicked intentions.” NKJV

You may remember a similar incident, when king Nebuchadnezzar decreed the death of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednigo in a fiery furnace. Before the whole matter was concluded, the king confessed that God sent His angel and “changed the king’s word,” or “frustrated the king’s word” (Dan 3:28). Isaiah said of the Lord: He “frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish” (Isa 44:25). Nehemiah confessed that the Lord had brought the counsel of his enemies “to nought,” or “to nothing” NKJV (Neh 4:15).

It is also declared that God does what He wants to do, and that no one can hinder Him, or even ask Him what He is doing. The Living God is identified as the One with an “everlasting dominion, and His kingdom is from generation to generation: And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay His hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?” (Dan 4:34-35). Now, we will see if Herod’s purposes are in conflict with those of God. If they are, there is no question concerning whose will be done.

AFTER EASTER

“ . . . to bring him forth after Easter . . .” Other versions read, “after Passover.” NKJ/NASB/NIV/NRSV

Historically, this is one of the most controversial texts in the English Bible. A staggering number of articles have been written about the wrongness of translating the Greek word pascha “Easter,” instead of “Passover.” This same word is used twenty-nine times from Matthew through Hebrews, and, in the King James Version, is always translated “Passover” – except in this text. Not desiring to make an inappropriate issue over this matter, my aim here is only to confirm that there was some reasoning behind the choice to translate the word “Easter” at time of the compiling of the King James Version. For those who are interested, I have documented some of the opinions on this subject in the box titled, “Easter” As Used in This Text. I will briefly summarize the justification of its use here.

- First, two major translations that preceded the King James translation used the word “Easter” in Acts 4:12. These were Tyndall’s New Testament (1534), and The Bishop’s Bible (1595). The King James translators sought to retain the language of previous translators, particularly where it was unique, and gained wide acceptance.

- Until Tyndale, there was no English word into which the Greek word pascha could be translated. In the first English translation, Wycliffe transliterated the word “pask.” (4 “And whanne he hadde cauyte Petre, he sente hym in to prisoun; and bitook to foure quaternyouns of knytytis, to kepe hym, and wolde aftir pask bringe hym forth to the puple.”). It is generally understood that Tyndale invented The word is translated “Easter” in some of the translations preceding the King James Version – Tyndale (1534), Bishop’s Bible The word “Easter” is of Saxon origin, and is supposed to be derived from “Eostre,” the goddess of Love, or the Venus of the North, in honor of whom a festival was celebrated by our pagan ancestors in the month of April (Webster). Since this festival coincided with the Passover of the Jews, and with the feast observed by Christians in honor of the resurrection of Christ, the name came to be used to denote the latter. In the old Anglo-Saxon service-books the term “Easter” is used frequently to translate the word “Passover.” In the translation by Wycliffe, the word “paske,” that is, “Passover,” is used. But Tyndale and Coverdale used the word “Easter,” and hence, it has very improperly crept into our King The word "Easter" in Acts 12:4 of the King James Version is often seen as a mistranslation of the Greek word “pascha”. Even the well-known Barnes' Notes comments on this single occurrence of the word "Easter" in the King James Version, as follows, "There was never a But the truth is that the word "Easter" is the correct word and the KJV is the only version that gets it right! If you read in Exodus 12 and Numbers 28:16-17 it will be clear that the In fact, by translating the Greek word “pascha” as “passover" in Acts 12:4 modern bibles have inserted an error that displays not only their lack of knowledge of the Greek in context, Of a truth that person who invented the word "passover" - William Tyndale, did not use the word he invented (passover), in Acts 12:4. Why? Because the days of unleavened bread come after Passover. That's one reason why Tyndale did not use the word passover in Acts 12:4. The second reason is because Herod was looking forward to the pagan feast of Ishtar, from which the word "Easter" is derived, and therefore Tyndale, did not use the word. The pagan festival of Astart or Ishtar ("Easter") was always held late in April to celebrate the To me there is no doubt that Herod wanted to kill Peter during his own pagan festival of The Greek word "pascha" is translated as Passover in the KJV with this one exception where it is translated as "Easter". Therefore, some point to this passage as a translation error on the KJV's part. However, earlier English translations such as Tyndale's NT, the Great Bible, and the Bishop's Bible also translated "pascha" as "Easter" in this verse, showing that the understanding here dealt with something other than the Jewish Passover. Also, the translation of "pascha" as Passover in Acts 12:4 was known to the king's translators since The use of the word "pascha" in early Christian writings dealt with the celebration of "Easter", and not just the Jewish Passover. Dr. G. W. H. Lampe has correctly stated that "pascha" came to mean "Easter" in the early Church. The ancient Christians did not keep the Jewish Passover. Instead they kept as holy a day to celebrate the resurrection of Christ near the time of both Passover and the pagan festival celebrating the goddess Ostara. Dr. Lampe lists several rules and observances by Christians in celebration of their "pascha" or "Easter". Lampe also points to various Greek words such as "pascha" and "paschalua" that came to mean celebrate "Easter" and "Eastertide." Likewise, Dr. Gerhard Kittel notes that "pascha" It should be noted that the English word "Easter" originally carried a meaning that would encompass the Jewish Passover. The Oxford English Dictionary states that "Easter" also means, "The Jewish passover" and cites examples dating to 971 A.D. Likewise, the Coverdale Bible often used the word "Easter" instead of Passover in its translation because the two had the same meaning to the English mind. Further, the Homilies of the Church of England (1563) refers to "Easter", a great, and solemn feast among the Jewes. Therefore, we see by definition, that the word "Easter" is correct in the understanding of the English. It is my position that "Easter" in Acts 12:4 in the KJV is not an error, if understood that from the early church until relatively recently "Passover" and "Easter" were basically synonyms the English word "Passover," which is a kind of transliteration of the Greek word. However, he employed "Easter" in this text – and only in this text – because of the uniqueness of it.

- Our text states that Herod had determined to present Peter to the people "after" Easter. However, the text states that when Herod apprehended Peter, it was "the days of unleavened bread." The Lord specified that The Feast of Unleavened Bread commenced on the fifteenth day, lasting for seven days, while "The Passover" was held on the fourteenth day. "In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the LORD: seven days ye must eat unleavened bread" (Lev 23:5-6).

I understand that there are varied opinions on this matter. My only purpose here is to confirm that there was solid reasoning behind the way in which the translators of the King James Version represented the word. It is my perception that at that time (1611), there was a general understanding of the people that "Easter" and "Passover" were synonymous. Because Christians did not observe the Passover, they chose the word "Easter" that denoted a simultaneous feast that took place at that time. The wisdom of their choice may be debated, but those appear to be the facts in the case. It is also open to question whether or not Herod was thinking of the period during which he arrested Peter as the Jewish Passover.

BRING HIM FORTH TO THE PEOPLE

" . . . to bring him forth to the people." Other versions read, "bring him before the people," NKJV "bring him out before the people," NASB "bring him out fore public trial," NIV "bring him to public trial,” NLT and “deliver him to the Jews for execution.” LIVING

Just as Pilate had brought Jesus before the Jews (John 19:5), so Herod had determined to bring Peter before them. It appears that he did this in an effort to please the people, thus maintaining some semblance of order in Jerusalem. He no doubt sought to avoid the possibility of a charge being leveled at him like the Jews had hurled at Pilate: “And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him: but the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Caesar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Caesar” (John 19:12). Just as Pilate sought to please the people to protect his own position, so Herod was motivated by purely self and political interests.

This text also reveals the public nature of the Jews opposition to the church and the spread of the Gospel. Those who had not believed had grown more obstinate. Their thirst for blood was not satisfied when Jesus was crucified, or when Stephen was stoned, or when James was executed. That is the nature of the flesh and of the world. Do not think that a compromise of the truth, or a diminishment of its proclamation will somehow reach those who have chosen to live in the flesh.

In His parable of the sower, Jesus taught that the truth of the Gospel is used to identify the condition of the people (Matt 13:18-23; Mark 4:14-20; Luke 8:11-15). It is the Gospel that brings out the kind of hearts and dispositions that they have. It reveals what is in them, how they reason, and what they value. This being the case, those who withhold that Word of truth, reducing the exposure of the people to it, have actually removed the means of knowing whether or not the people have an interest in the truth of God. Now, they can only speculate about their condition. To call such an approach wise seems to me to be the epitome of ignorance. As we peruse the accounts of Scripture, they must be seen within light of both nature and purpose of God. In them, we are not being exposed to mere history, but to the outworking and nature of an eternal purpose.

PETER WAS KEPT IN PRISON

“ 5 Peter therefore was kept in prison . . .” Other versions read, “being held under watch in prison,” CSB “was in custody in the prison,” MRD “was under guard,” NJB “was being kept in prison,” ISV and “closely guarded in the prison.” PHILLIPS

The church prayed earnestly and without ceasing TO God FOR Peter. They did not pray for Herod, but for Peter. I am sure they knew that it was proper to pray for those who are in authority, as Paul admonishes in 1 Timothy 2:2. But that is not what was appropriate on this occasion.

By saying that the killing of James “pleased the Jews,” we infer that there had been some kind of communication between Herod and the people. Perhaps they had conveyed to him how Peter and John had once been incarcerated by the high priest and those with him, and held in “the common prison.” During the night, they had disappeared from the jail, and were found the following day preaching in the Temple. What had actually happened was the Lord had sent an angel to open “the prison doors,” bring the apostles of the prison, and command them to return to the Temple and resume preaching “all the words of this life” (Acts 5:17-19).

At any rate, Herod took measure to ensure that Peter did not disappear during the night. He thought he was keeping Peter in prison by assigning a rotating guard of sixteen soldiers throughout the night – four for each watch. Like Pilate commissioned the Jewish leaders concerning the body of Jesus, he was making His prisoner “as secure” as he could (Matt 28:14).

The action of Herod will be as pointless as the binding of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednigo when they were thrown into the fiery furnace (Dan 3:21-24). It will be as pointless as the binding of Samson, when three thousand men of Judah turned him over to the Philistines (Judges 15:13). This is not to mention the binding of Jesus when they arrested Him in the garden (John 18:12), when Annas sent Him “bound” to Caiaphas (John 18:24), when the chief priests and elders delivered Him “bound” to Pilate (Matt 27:2) – or when He was nailed to a tree (John 19:25; 20:25; Gal 3:13).

The world, whether in the form of corrupted religion, government, or particular individuals, has always taken measures to ensure that the truth is not declared. For a significant period of time, the Scriptures themselves were taken from the people. Bloody persecutions and executions have been employed to subdue the truth. There have been laws passed that were designed to suppress the expression of the truth of God. In even more subtle ways, those who have embraced the truth have been maligned, separated from the people, and treated with social disdain. All of this has been an attempt to keep the truth “in prison,” like Herod sought to keep Peter in prison.

There is a spirit that animates all of these efforts, and it emanates from hell itself, being authored and empowered by “the prince of the power of the air” (Eph 2:2). Sometimes it takes dignified forms, like the Higher Criticism of the Scriptures, or the promotion of “Science [knowledge] falsely so called” (1 Tim 6:20), Gnosticism, or even Atheism. There are even efforts that involve a distortion of the truth, a misrepresentation of Jesus Christ, and the falsification of the Gospel of Christ.

Religious scholarship and purported practicality are even employed by the devil to neutralize the truth of God. All of these attempts – from bloody persecution to intellectual masquerades – are members of the same family, and have the same father. The devil is behind them all. They are his “flood,” designed to “carry away” the truth and the people of God who have embraced it (Rev 12:15-16). Satan’s initiative is relentless, for his nature cannot be changed, and he cannot be discouraged. Even when he was cast 3out of heaven, he entered the arena of “the earth” . . . having great wrath, because he knows HE has a short time” (Rev 12:12). He cannot learn, he is not discouraged, and he will not give up.

Nevertheless, our arch adversary will not succeed – and neither will his vassal Herod. His intentions against Peter will not be brought to fulfillment. Neither, indeed, will his purpose for other believers be realized.

PRAYER WAS MADE FOR HIM BY THE CHURCH

“ . . . but prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him. ”

Now, the scene shifts from Satan’s followers to the disciples of Jesus – the church, which is the body of Christ. We will see how they react to the news of Herod’s intentions. On the one hand we have Herod working under the immediate auspices of the devil, who is himself unwillingly subject to God and His will. On the other hand we are now given a glimpse of those who are obligingly subject to the “good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.”

PRAYER WITHOUT CEASING

“ . . . but prayer was made without ceasing . . . ” Other versions read, “constant prayer,” NKJV “prayer . . . made fervently,” NASB “earnestly praying,” NIV “intense prayer,” BBE “unceasing prayer,” DARBY “praying very hard,” GWN “continual prayer,” MRD “prayed . . . unremittingly,” NJB “fervent prayer for him was persistently made,” AMPLIFIED “prayer . . . was outstretched,” INTERLINEAR and “never stopped praying.” CEV

First, observe that the believers were knowledgeable of the events pertaining to their number. I have emphasized that true spiritual life is selfless, and that Jesus died in order that “they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15). The book of Acts lifts this fact out of the domain of philosophy, and puts it where it belongs – in the arena of life, or human expression. This verse is a case in point. Within the larger circumference of lives devoted to the Lord, their prayers were not shaped by the mundane. They knew where to focus their spiritual energy. They also knew the value of Peter, and the pivotal role he played in the spread of the truth and the stabilization and maturity of the body of Christ.

Prayer Was “Made”

The word “made” is in the Greek text, and is a significant one. Coming from the Greek word ginome,nh , and as used in this text, this word means, “to be made, done, finished,” THAYER and “be made, be done, be brought into existence.” FRIBERG In other words, these were intelligent prayers, as though fabricated with insightful words and covered with spiritual rationality. They were prayers with perspective, pieced together with wisdom and spiritual understanding.

These were not prayers of meaningless repetition. Nor, indeed, were they prayed as though the people would be heard because of their “much speaking” (Matt 6:7).

This is now the third time the disciples have been reported as praying collectively with specificity. The first time was when the bishopric of Judas was to be filled (Acts 1:24-25). The second was when the Jewish leaders sought to suppress the truth, commanding the apostles that they speak no more in the name of Jesus (Acts 4:24-31). Now, they join in accord once again about a critical Kingdom matter.

I have often pondered the matter of the prayers of collective believers. While it is not wise to seek to strictly order such occasions, due consideration should be given to the subject of such prayers.

“Without Ceasing”

The idea here is not that of one endless prayer meeting, but of a constant, fervent, and persistent presentation of matters pertaining to the arrest and imprisonment of Peter. Such an approach is the antithesis of casual and sporadic prayers. I envision the disciples addressing the matter from different perspectives, with new insights being ministered to them from heaven.

BY THE CHURCH

“ . . .of the church . . .” Other versions read, “by the Messianic community,” CJB “by the assembly,” DARBY and “of the congregation.” TNT

The idea here is that the disciples were assembled together when they prayed. The technical root meaning of “the church” is, “a gathering of citizens called out from their homes into some public place; an assembly.” THAYER From a spiritual perspective, this is the assembly called out of the world and into Jesus Christ. On a practical level, it is when the people of God “come together into one place” (1 Cor 11:20; 14:23).

In the book of Acts, “the church” is equated with “the disciples” (6:2; 9:1; 11:26), and “all that believed” (2:44). I cannot help but wonder how men think of “the church” in this day. What people would they be referring to if they used the language of this text.

MADE UNTO GOD FOR HIM

“ . . . unto God for him.” The church prayed earnestly and without ceasing TO God FOR Peter. They did not pray for Herod, but for Peter. I am sure they knew that it was proper to pray for those who are in authority, as Paul admonishes in (1 Tim 2:2). But that is not what was appropriate on this occasion.

The text does not tell us what they prayed for Peter. Some have assumed they were praying for His release, but that is not what this passage says. It says they prayed for Peter, not for his release. They doubtless saw him as the one who needed to be strengthened, upheld, and holding to the faith. Herod had already killed James, and there was every indication that he was going to do the same to Peter.

Earlier, when the apostles had been threatened, they did not pray for the thwarting of the intentions of the Jewish council. They rather asked God to “ behold their threatenings: and grant unto Thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak Thy word, By stretching forth Thine hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of Thy holy child Jesus” (Acts 4:29-30). The focus of that prayer gives us some idea of how those early disciples thought. They knew that God would work appropriately when He beheld what their enemies were doing. They did not presume to suggest to Him what He ought to do with those enemies. However, they did know what God was doing with regards to the truth, and therefore they asked for boldness to preach all the more fervently. They did not ask for signs and wonders so the Jewish leaders would see them and cease their threats. They rather sought for themselves to be granted boldness to preach the Word through such gracious confirmations.

It seems to me that their prayers were most probably of this nature when they prayed to God for Peter. Oh, I know that was a different day, but I candidly would like to see such a perspective find its way into the professing church once again. Perhaps then works of a more effective and noble nature would be found in the professing church, and some of its ancient glory would be restored.

CONCLUSION

Thus, our text has provided us with an update of the struggle between Jacob and Esau – a struggle of differing natures that commenced in Rachel’s womb, and continues to this day. The aggressiveness of the flesh has been seen, and how the devil can work through those who “have not faith” (2 Thess 3:2). We have seen an example of how government can set itself against the followers of Jesus and the spread of the Gospel. Our text has confirmed the consistent effect of the truth upon those who embrace it, and their refusal to yield to the threats of the world. The intelligent nature of faith, and how it compels those who possess it to engage in the initiative of prayer has been seen. The tendency of disciples to gather together for a noble cause as well as for edification has been confirmed. We have seen how the flesh is never satisfied with what it has done against the people of God, and how it seeks ways to please those who are not in Jesus. The Lord has shown us the ineffectiveness of dead religion and empty routine, and how the observance of times and seasons cannot change human nature. We have seen that an evil tree cannot produce good fruit, that a good tree cannot produce evil fruit, and that every tree is known by its fruit. A pregnant text, indeed!

Lesson #54

THE DELIVERANCE OF PETER

“ 12:6 And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains: and the keepers before the door kept the prison. 7 And, behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands. 8 And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And so he did. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me. 9 And he went out, and followed him; and wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he saw a vision. 10 When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city; which opened to them of his own accord: and they went out, and passed on through one street; and forthwith the angel departed from him. 11 And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety, that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews. 12 And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying. 13 And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came to hearken, named Rhoda. 14 And when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate. 15 And they said unto her, Thou art mad. But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, It is his angel. 16 But Peter continued knocking: and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished. 17 But he, beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, Go show these things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place. ” (Acts 12:6-17)

INTRODUCTION

In a continuing confirmation of the fact that those in Christ are not of the world, Herod proceeds to carry out his initiative against “certain of the church.” He does this because, to him, it appears as though it is within his power. Whatever privileges believers have are not apparent to him. Although great signs and wonders have been done throughout a period of at least fourteen years, and although the number of believers has swelled, and they have continued to hold on their way, Herod sees them as helpless vassals over whom he exercises political power. So far as

SOMETHING TO BE NOTED

Now, there is something important that must be noted at this point. Remember, in this book we are confronted with the “newness of life” being lived out in the world. The impact of that life upon both believers and unbelievers is being revealed.

- A sterling example has been given us of how those who are alive to God view each other (2:44,46; 4:32; 5:12).
- The unity of the believers is apparent: they were “together” (2:44; 4:31).
- There has been a witness of the intrusive nature of hypocrisy and the quest for personal advantage (5:1-10; 8:18-24).
- We have been introduced to the manner in which those in the grip of a stereotyped religion react to this newness of life (4:1-3; 5:17-18; 7:57-60; 8:1; 9:1-2).
- We have seen how those who are inquiring into the truth of Scripture respond to it (4:4; 8:23-39; 10:44-48; 11:17).
- The manner in which those who have received the grace of God respond to sound doctrine has been displayed (11:23-29).

- An example of the spiritual stamina and aggressiveness of believers who are being persecuted has been displayed (4:20,23-31; 5:29; 8:4; 11:19).

- The proneness of the disciples to rehearse the righteous acts of the Lord has been confirmed (5:10-11; 8:14; 9:38; 11:1,22).

- Now we are being exposed to the manner in which earthly government views those who believe (12:14).

If those in Christ were actually of this world, and life in Him was primarily intended to enhance their lives on earth, what we are reading in this text could not possibly have taken place.

In my judgment, the presence of the book of Acts, together with the apostles doctrine, makes it wrong to philosophize about spiritual life. Opportunists who present themselves as experts in life are intruders. While they appear to be within the body of Christ, identifying themselves as Christians, they are actually outside of the circumference of life. Satan is working through them to lure unstable souls into the arena of worldly wisdom, where they can be exploited. Oh, this is not the manner in which these intruders think. They have been deceived, and do not realize they are suggesting that men are really not complete in Christ, and that the grace of God does not address the difficulties with which they grapple.

It must be observed that men with recovery plans, steps to a better life, and the development of character-forming habits are not present in the church reported in the book of Acts. There is no mass recovery plan presented to the body of Christ. Those who are in Christ are never reminded that “we are all human,” or “we all struggle with this or that,” or “all of us are weak and need help.” No person is ever depicted as proclaiming a purpose that was not revealed by God, through Jesus, and by words of the apostles of Christ. It seems to me that it would be helpful to honestly consider if these observations are true, and if they are, why is it so?

BELIEVERS ARE NOT OF THIS WORLD

If those in Christ were actually of this world, and life in Him was primarily intended to enhance their lives on earth, what we are reading in this text could not possibly have taken place. If the purpose of redemption is primarily to bring a good life to us in this world, exactly how do you account for the chief priests, the elders, the Jewish council, Saul of Tarsus when he persecuted the church, and Herod the king? How is it that any of them could realize any measure of success in their attack of believers if this world is really the main one, and life in it is the primary life. Is it that they overturned the purpose of King Jesus? Did they thwart what He had designed for His people? And, why could there even be such a thing as a “great dearth” that brought tremendous inconvenience to the saints of God, if Jesus really has a preeminent desire for their welfare in this world. Why did the churches in surrounding areas have to send relief to the brethren in Judea if prosperity is really what God intends for His people?

The choosing and extrication of people from the world are in order to the obtainment of an eternal inheritance that is reserved for them in heaven. That is why grace teaches us to reject sinful impulses and live in a holy manner while we look for Jesus to return from heaven (Tit 2:11-12). This is why they run the race set before them “with patience,” or perseverance, “looking unto Jesus” (Heb 12:1-2). By its very nature, faith confirms that those who possess it do not belong to the order of “this present evil world” (Gal; 1:4). Unless it is “strong delusion” that is sent to those who refuse to receive the “love of the truth” (2 Thess 2:10), whatever tends to attach them more firmly to this world cannot possibly be from God. This is particularly heinous when it is presented in the name of Jesus.

A FUNCTION OF THE LIFE OF FAITH

As believers await their inheritance, living by faith is designed to enhance their appetite for it. In the crucible of conflict, their desires and preferences are enhanced as they learn by experience that the world is just as “evil” as God has said. Primarily, however, they also come to know experientially that Jesus and the benefits He brings are superior to anything and everything this world has to offer. The statement, “And ye are complete in Him, which is the head of all principality and power” (Col 2:10), is more than a mere platitude or religious slogan. It is “of His fulness” that we “receive” (John 1:16). Resources cannot possibly come from any other place.

I acknowledge that it appears as though I am spending an inordinate amount of time on this subject. However, the fact of the matter is that this is the very thing that is being hidden from our generation. It is not a circumstance unique to our times, but one that is characterized by greater degrees of obscurity. This has been largely caused by the crafty entrance of professionalism into the church. By professionalism I mean a career-centered activity that borrows its strength and imagined expertise from the world.

The entrance of this mode of thinking has moved men to approach perceived deficiencies in the professing Christians as though the people WERE victims of something they could not control. Therefore a new vocabulary has been hawked and adopted that allows for this kind of thinking. Sin is viewed as addiction, genetic makeup, hereditary tendencies, and sometimes even a disease. In order to address these conditions a system of law is employed. This, like all law, is based on the control of human conduct by outward means. Like all law, it is also a system that does not require faith (Gal 3:12). It also entertains the presupposition that those in Christ remain firmly connected to this present evil world – in character, as well as in outward presence. It is further surmised that one’s character can be altered by means of regimen.

The circumstances of our text make no sense in such a context. Conditions are introduced that could not possibly be altered by a routine, or a series of steps, or any other codified approach. There is no form of human wisdom that could have accomplished what is reported in this text, which includes peaceful rest, deliverance, and holy assessment.

We also are exposed to the will of man versus the will of God. As will be confirmed, such a confrontation never falls to the side of the human will. It is God’s will that prevails, for He alone has the right and the power to do what He wants. As it is written, “But our God is in the heavens: He hath done whatsoever he hath pleased ” (Psa 115:3). In considering this fact, it is important to remember that the will of God does not revolve around humanity. There are higher purposes being served that the personal interests of men and their welfare. Those purposes include, but are not confined to, the following.

- The ultimate glory of God (Isa 61:3).
- That He might be justified in all of His sayings (Rom 3:4).
- That principalities and powers in heavenly places may learn of His manifold wisdom through the church (Eph 3:10).
- To prepare a habitation for Himself (Eph 2:22)
- That men might know that He is the Lord (Ezek 20:12,26).
- That God might be “just” in the justification of men (Rom 3:26).
- That men would praise Him for His goodness (Psa 107:8,15,21,31).
- He has raised up men to show His power in them, like Pharaoh (Ex 9:16; Rom 9:17).

It is sign of significant spiritual growth when the works of the Lord are seen as the execution of His will rather than ours. When we come to see that we are not the center of God’s universe, we have come to see something very significant, and with great impact.

HEROD PREPARES TO IMPLEMENT HIS PURPOSE

“ 12:6a And when Herod would have brought him forth . . .” Other versions read, “was about to bring him forth,” NKJV “was about to bring him to trial,” NIV “was about to bring him out,” NRSV “was to bring him out for execution,” CSB “Herod was on the point of taking him out of prison,” WEYMOUTH and “Herod was planning to bring him out.” PHILLIPS

The word translated “would have” has the following lexical meaning. “to be about to do anything . . . to intend, have in mind, think to” THAYER “intend,” UBS and “to think of doing, intend to do, to be about to do.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

This is the language of purpose, determination, and objective. This is something Herod had determined to do, and he had no thought of his will not being carried out. He was going to bring Peter before the people in the morning, and no doubt condemn and execute him. This was a “king” that had made this decision – one of “the kings of the earth” (Psa 2:2), who are solemnly exhorted by the Psalmist to “praise the Lord from the earth” (Psa 148:7,11). This is one of the kings that had been “set up” by God Almighty, and was therefore responsible to Him (Dan 2:21; 4:17). Just as with Pilate, the power and authority that he had were given to him by God (John 19:11; Rom 13:1). Yet, just as the Herod of Jesus’ time, he was now coming against the Lord (Acts 4:26). This man occupies a throne, has civil authority, and has already executed the apostle James. Now, he fully intends to do to Peter what he had done to James. Will he be able to carry out his will? Judging according to appearance, it seems as though he will. However, that is not a valid way of judging (John 7:24).

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF GOD

There is a manner of preaching and teaching that manages to hide the fact that God is Sovereign: “above all” (4:6). This subtle form of teaching, although not always intentional, leads the individual to think in a non-theocentric manner: i.e. “God is not in all his thoughts” (Psa 10:4). Such a person, robbed of a proper perspective of God, vacillates between “the fear of man” which brings a snare (Prov 29:25), and putting “confidence in man,” which is antithetical to faith (Psa 118:8).

Entangled in this web of erroneous thought, men blurt out flawed statements like, “God will never violate the free will of man,” or “God will not force a person to do something against their will.” There is a sense in which this is true – such as the appropriation of His great salvation. In that case, willingness is essential. What is more, God is able work in such a way as to cause the people to be “willing in the day of His power” (Psa 110:3).

THE EXAMPLE OF JONAH

For example, if Jonah is not willing to go and preach to Nineveh as the Lord has commanded, there are options available to God that are not available to men. In that case God took measures that moved Jonah into a state of willingness, then taught him more perfectly in Divine manners.

For example, if Jonah is not willing to go and preach to Nineveh as the Lord has commanded, there are options available to God that are not available to men. In that case God took measures that moved Jonah into a state of willingness, then taught him more perfectly in Divine manners.

- While Jonah was fleeing from the presence of the Lord, “the Lord sent out a great wind” that jeopardized the boat in which he was found (Jonah 1:4).
- When Jonah, at his own request, was about to be thrown overboard into the raging sea, the Lord “prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah” (Jonah 1:17).
- There, in the belly of the fish, with the water surrounding him, and the seaweeds wrapped around his head, Jonah found the circumstance to be conducive to prayer. He “prayed out of the fish’s belly,” concluding his prayer with the promise that he would do what he had vowed, and the confession “Salvation is of the Lord” (Jonah 2:1-9).

- Upon that confession, “the Lord spake unto the fish and it vomited out Jonah on the dry land” (Jonah 3:10).

- The word of the Lord then came to Jonah “the second time saying, Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee ” (Jonah 3:1-2). This time, Jonah was willing – he was willing in the day of the Lord’s power!

- After declaring to the inhabitants of Nineveh that the city was going to be destroyed in forty days, “the people believed God,” proclaimed a fast, and “God repented of the evil that He had said He would do.”

- Their response greatly displeased Jonah, and he “prayed unto the Lord,” saying that he knew God was gracious, merciful, kind, and repented of the evil. After asking God to take his life, he went out of the city, made a booth, and sat under it to see what would happen to the city (Jonah 4:1-5).

- When the blazing sun rose in the sky, “ the Lord God prepared a gourd , and made it come up over Jonah , that it might be a shadow over his head” (Jonah 4:6).

- In order to teach Jonah more of Himself, “ God prepared a worm when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered.” The heat was so severe that Jonah “fainted, and wished himself to die” (Jonah 4:7).

- It was at this point that the Lord told Jonah he had pity on a gourd for which he had not labored, and which he had not made to grow. God, however, confirmed the reasonableness of sparing a “great city” in which “120,000 persons not [yet old enough to] know their right hand from their left, and also many cattle [not accountable for sin]”

AMPLIFIED

Our text has to do with the same God – a God who is in control and is fully able to implement His will! He is also able to frustrate and bring to nought the counsels of men who seek to thwart or impede His purpose – whether they do it ignorantly or not.

Now, whose will was accomplished in this incident? Whose will prevailed? And, do you not see the way in which God did His will, maintaining absolute control of both nature and man, doing so in a remarkably wise and effective manner? In this account we find the wind, the sea, the fish, the gourd, and the worm serving the Lord. We see Jonah’s mind changed by a circumstance over which he had no power. We also see the mind of the people changed by a message.

Our text has to do with the same God – a God who is in control and is fully able to implement His will! He is also able to frustrate and bring to nought the counsels of men who seek to thwart or impede His purpose – whether they do it ignorantly or not.

DIVINE NEGATION

The Word of God declares that God negates the counsels of His enemies. He overturns their purpose, and thwarts their designs.

- “He shall break in pieces mighty men without number, and set others in their stead. Therefore he knoweth their works, and he overturneth them in the night, so that they are destroyed” (Job 34:24-25).

- “Thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemed . . . That frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish” (Isa 44:25).

• “The LORD bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect” (Psa 33:10).

• “Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels. Let now the astrologers, the stargazers, the monthly prognosticators, stand up, and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee. Behold, they shall be as stubble; the fire shall burn them; they shall not deliver themselves from the power of the flame: there shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it” (Isa 47:13-14).

• “Surely the princes of Zoan are fools, the counsel of the wise counselors of Pharaoh is become brutish: how say ye unto Pharaoh, I am the son of the wise, the son of ancient kings? Where are they? where are thy wise men? and let them tell thee now, and let them know what the LORD of hosts hath purposed upon Egypt” (Isa 19:11-12).

• “Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid” (Isa 29:14).

• “And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the King, whose name is the LORD of hosts” (Jer 51:57).

• “And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him” (Ezek 21:25-27).

• “Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?” (1 Cor 1:20).

• “For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness” (1 Cor 3:19).

When the enemies of Nehemiah took counsel against him, God “brought their counsel to nought” (Neh 4:15). Israel could say to their enemies, “Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand: for God is with us” (Isa 8:10). It is not possible to oppose the Lord, His Son, His will, or His Gospel and ultimately succeed! Thus it is written, “There is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the LORD” (Prov 21:30). Again it is written, “There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the LORD, that shall stand” (Prov 19:21).

When enemies conspired against Judah, determining to trouble them and place their own king in the midst, the word of the Lord came to Isaiah. Here is what he said. “Because Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have taken evil counsel against thee, saying, Let us go up against Judah, and vex it, and let us make a breach therein for us, and set a king in the midst of it, even the son of Tabeal: Thus saith the Lord GOD, It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass ” (Isa 7:5-7).

Oh, that this were seen more clearly by those who wear the name of Jesus, and that it was proclaimed with power by every professing servant of God! There is no cause to fear men, or to adjust your speech and manners to please or pacify them. It is far better to determine to please Him who possesses all power.

THE HOPELESS CIRCUMSTANCE

“ 6b . . . the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains: and the keepers before the door kept the prison. . . ”

Fearful and unbelieving hearts are prone to consider the circumstances as though they were set in stone. Without God at the center of our thinking, it is difficult, if not altogether impossible, to think of circumstance as being changeable and transitory. There is also a tendency to resort to men for help – like Israel who went “down to Egypt for help,” trusting in horses and chariots (Isa 31:1).

Those who resort to men instead of to the Lord will eventually confront a situation where hope withers and dies, and the circumstances become impossible, at least from a human point of view. That is the kind of situation that is chronicled in our text. Not only does it appear hopeless, Herod has already killed James, which suggests to the simple and naive that God has given him leave to operate at will. Or, perhaps, for some it suggests that God is not governing the nations at all, but that they are free to function however they desire.

We must keep in mind that the Scriptures contain the record of the implementation of the will of God, and not a mere history of occurrences related to that purpose. While they contain human responses to the execution of that purpose, they are really incidental to the purpose itself. If we fail to recognize this reality, we will fall into all manner of intellection snares and traps.

PETER WAS SLEEPING

“ . . . the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers . . . ”

There are a significant number of professing Christians who seem to think they can possess what Jesus gives without following Him, as He requires. However, His blessings are simply not dispensed under those conditions, and it is essential that men understand this.

Having a restful night, and enjoying a peaceful sleep is not always the lot of men. What person is not familiar with restless nights, and concern about circumstances. Yet, here is Peter; James, his close companion for at least 17-18 years having been executed, himself apprehended, and now in prison. So far as appearances were concerned, the apparent expectation was to be martyred. Jesus had told Peter years earlier, “Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not” (John 21:18). Speaking through the Spirit, who brought the words of Jesus to his remembrance, John said of this saying, “This spake He, signifying by what death he should glorify God. And when he had spoken this, He saith unto him, Follow me” (John 21:19). Peter had heeded the word of Jesus, following Him from that time until the time of our text when he was behind prison doors.

There Is a Peace that Attends Following the Lord Jesus

There are benefits to be realized only when one is in the process of following Jesus – that is, of being with Jesus where He is, and doing what He is doing. When Jesus was upon earth, following Jesus involved being with Him when He was in the Temple, on a mountain, in the desert, or in a village. It required the person to be present when Jesus was speaking, and to be a witness to what He was doing. If He was feeding the multitudes, the ones who WERE following Him WERE there, and would be employed in the distribution of the food. If He was en route to raise Lazarus from the dead, His followers WERE with Him. Following Jesus involves being with Him by choice, and it requires that one remain or abide with Him as well.

There are a significant number of professing Christians who seem to think they can possess what Jesus gives without following Him, as He requires. However, His blessings are simply not dispensed under those conditions, and it is essential that men understand this.

Now Peter, who was, in fact, following Jesus as He was told, enjoys the benefits that result from that stance. In him, we see a fulfillment of Psalm 127:2: “for so He giveth His beloved sleep.” Again, Peter could say with David, “I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for Thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety” (Psa 4:8). I am sure he could say with confidence, “I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the LORD sustained me” (Psa 3:5). And again, he had the kind of assurance and confidence that could say with Jeremiah, “Upon this I awaked, and beheld; and my sleep was sweet unto me” (Jer 31:26).

The “peace of God” is like a sentinel that guards the heart and the mind, bringing quietness and stability to the soul. As it is written, “And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus” (Phil 4:7). This is a peace that is like a king, ruling in the heart and thrusting away invasive thoughts and imaginations that would trouble the soul and awaken fear. Thus we read, “And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful” (Col 3:15).

Therefore, Peter, on what appeared to be the evening before his martyrdom, “was sleeping between two soldiers.” What a testimony it must have been to those men! Perhaps they had also been present when James was beheaded.

PETER BOUND AND THE DOOR OF ENTRANCE GUARDED

“ . . . bound with two chains: and the keepers before the door kept the prison. . .” Other versions read, “and the guards before the door were keeping the prison,” NKJV “guards in front of the door were watching the prison ,” NASB “sentries stood guard at the entrance,” NIV “guards in front of the door were keeping watch over the prison,” RSV and “guards maintained a strict watch in the doorway of the prison.” PHILLIPS

The circumstances in which Peter finds himself appear hopeless – at least so far as men are concerned.

- He has been arrested by a king.
- He is incarcerated behind closed doors.
- He is bound with two chains
- He is positioned between two guards
- Guards were at the door of the prison, prohibiting any unapproved entrance, and certainly forbidding any escape.

Peter, however, is sleeping peacefully, unagitated by the situation in which he found himself. Among other things, this is the result of assuming the posture of a stranger and pilgrim in the world. It is the outcome of being in the world, but not of the world. That stance, however, is meaningful and profitable only to the degree that men are in fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the “Captain of their salvation” (Heb 2:10). This is something that cannot be delivered by theological systems, human methodologies, or the philosophies of men. It is rather the solitary prerogative of faith to bring the realization of these things. Peter is not a super-man, but a redeemed one. As he himself acknowledges, the faith that the children of God have “obtained” is “of the same kind” as that of the apostles themselves (2 Pet 1:1).

While the faith of Peter was designed to accomplish a different work (such as that of an apostle), it is of the same order or kind as ours, and is equally effective in the lives of all who possess it. It brings justification, peace with God, and gives access to the grace wherein we stand. It also brings certain enablements.

A MINISTER FROM HEAVEN ARRIVES ON THE SCENE

“ 7a . . . And, behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. . .”

There is every reason to believe that Peter anticipated his martyrdom. After all, his close companion and co-laborer, James, had recently been beheaded. Jesus had even told the twelve that some of them would be killed (Matt 24:9). Although it is said that the church “made” prayer for him (5:5), there is no indication that they were praying for his release. Further, the events of this text will strongly suggest that the deliverance of Peter from death was not the focus of their prayers.

There are some who are presently teaching that heaven does not, and cannot, move in favor toward men unless prayer is made for the Lord to work. I am not sure of the objective of such a teaching, or precisely what mind-set compels men to say such things. Apostolic doctrine informs us that there are occasions when the knowledge of the saved ones is insufficient to identify their need. In such a case, the Holy Spirit is their Intercessory, and God hears what He says (Rom 8:26-27). Additionally, Jesus is also interceding for the redeemed, and I do not know that His intercession is always driven by human petition, although I do not question that this is often the case (Heb 7:25).

I prefer to view this text as an example of the government of Jesus, and of the extent to which He will go to fulfill the will and purpose of God the Father.

THE ANGEL OF THE LORD CAME UPON HIM

And, behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him . . .” Other versions read, “Stood by him,” NKJV “suddenly appeared,” NASB “appeared,” NIV “came to Peter,” BBE “came there,” DARBY “stood next to him,” ESV “stood over him,” MRD “stood there before Peter,” NLT and “was there present.” PNT

Angels are not normally visible to men, for they are “ministering spirits” (Heb 1:14). In Christ, we have come unto “an innumerable company of angels” (Heb 12:22). Though unseen, there is a sense in which they are all around the people of God. As it is written, “The angel of the LORD encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them” (Psa 34:7). This is what the angels are sent to do, and they are disposed to do it with zeal. However, it is the word of the Lord that sets them in motion, for they do not operate according to their own will. It is well said of them that they “do His commandments, hearkening unto the voice of the Lord” (Psa 103:20). In this text we have a sterling example of an angel responding to the commandment of the Lord, and hearkening to His voice.

In Christ Jesus, enlightenment is a principle factor in deliverance from the power of darkness. Conversion itself involves being “enlightened” (Heb 6:4), or “illuminated.” Paul accounts for the new birth in this way: “For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ”

The idea here is not that the angel appeared, or was made visible, for Peter was asleep. Rather, the point being made is that the angel came on the scene to do something. Thus the KJV reads, “came upon him” (Peter). The Greek word used here is evpe,sth, which means, “to stand by, be present . . . stand over one, place oneself above.” THAYER The idea is that the angel of the Lord identified himself with Peter, and will now take up his cause. Just as Daniel was told that Michael the great angel would “stand up” for the people of Israel (Dan 12:1), so an angel now stands up, as it were, for Peter. He focuses his attention upon Peter as the angel of the Lord did to Paul when he stood by him (Acts 27:23).

Angels do not come to visit or to merely spectate, but to work, for they are “sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation” (Heb 1:14). You may be sure that there is no human opposition that is effective against even one angel. They are absolutely superior to humanity in its most impressive form. That is precisely why they are said to “excel in strength” (Psa 103:20).

A LIGHT SHINED IN THE PRISON

. . . and a light shined in the prison . . .” Other versions read, “shone in the cell,” NASB “a great light was shining in the room,” BBE “shined in the house,” GENEVA “his cell was filled with light,” GWN “light shone in all the building,” MRD “light shined in the habitation,” PNT “shined in the lodge,” TNT “shone in the buildings,” YLT and “a light shone in the place where he was.”
AMPLIFIED

Sometimes I marvel at the ambiguity that is promoted by some of the translators. It appears that at times their scholastic mind overshadows their spiritual aptitude: “cell,” “room,” “house,” “all the building,” “the lodge,” and “the buildings.” Well, where did the light shine? Was it in the whole complex of buildings, the prison house in general, or the place in which Peter was located? The stress of this text is that the angel came to Peter, and will deliver Peter alone. The light is, as the Amplified Bible well says, “where [Peter] he was.”

This was a discreet deliverance, designed only for Peter. Some time later, when Paul and Silas were in prison, there was a mighty earthquake, “all the doors were opened, and every one’s bands were loosed.” In that case, rather than leaving the prison, Paul and Silas remained, and all of the prisoners with them (Acts 16:26-27). During that occasion the jailor was made privy to what had occurred, and was “saved” with all of his house before the evening was over (Acts 16:30-34). But that is not what happened here. Only Peter will be delivered, and the prison keepers will not know what happened, nor will they be saved.

Angels are often associated with light, glory, or brilliance. When an angel announced the birth of Jesus to certain shepherds, “the glory of the Lord shone round about them” (Lk 2:9). John saw an angel who had great power, “and the earth was lightened with his glory” (Rev 18:1). In this text, the light that filled the place where Peter was being held no doubt emanated from the angel himself.

A Type Seen

There is a beautiful spiritual type seen here. Deliverance occurs in the environment of light, or illumination. When Israel went out of Egypt at midnight, they were accompanied by a cloud that gave them light (Ex 13:21). David spoke of the Word of God accompanying his progress: “Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path” (Psa 119:105). Solomon declared much the same when he said, “But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day” (Prov 4:18).

In Christ Jesus, enlightenment is a principle factor in deliverance from the power of darkness. Conversion itself involves being “enlightened” (Heb 6:4), or “illuminated” (Heb 10:32). Paul accounts for the new birth in this way: “For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 4:6). Spiritual growth is depicted as walking “in the light” (1 John 1:7), and the “eyes of our understanding” being “enlightened” (Eph 1:17).

I find myself having an increasing disdain for spiritual ignorance within the Christian community. Preaching and teaching that promote such ignorance are an abomination, and there is no way to dignify the matter. There are also messages that represent themselves as being filled with wisdom and understanding, and yet they leave people in the dark concerning matters pertaining to life and godliness. These have not come from God. Instead, they are the words of Satan himself, who “is transformed into an angel of light.” He also enables his ministers to be “transformed into the ministers of righteousness,” promulgating methods and techniques that claim to liberate and assist ailing humanity (2 Cor 11:14). Yet, after men have embraced their words, they remain fundamentally ignorant of God, with affections that are firmly nailed to the earth.

Just as surely as Peter’s deliverance was accompanied by light, so those who are delivered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of God’s dear Son are accompanied by spiritual illumination. Within the framework of that enlightenment, they see themselves, the world, God, and Christ is the freshness of a new dawn.

HE SMOTE PETER ON THE SIDE, AND RAISED HIM UP

“ . . . and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up . . .” Other versions read, “struck,” NKJV “tapped,” RSV “touching him,” BBE “striking,” CSB “having smitten,” DARBY “nudged,” GWN “pricked,” MRD “slapped,” LIVING and “gently smote.” AMPLIFIED

The word from which “smote” is translated is pata,xaj . As used here, it means “to strike gently” THAYER and “as giving a light or gentle blow touch, strike.” FRIBERG It is also used other places in the sense of “to strike, smite: absolutely,” THAYER and “inflicting a heavy or fatal blow strike (down)” – as when Peter “ struck a servant of the high priest, ” cutting off his ear (Matt 26:51).

For an angel, the blow was a very light one. However, it was sufficient to awaken Peter from a peaceful and sound sleep. In this way the angel “raised him up,” “roused him up,” NASB or “woke him up.” NIV The word translated “raised” means “to arouse from sleep, to awake.” THAYER

This also is a type of being awakened spiritually, when a person comes to himself like the prodigal did among the swine (Lk 15:17). This speaks of the time when the individual sees things more clearly, and leaving the world and fleeing to Christ make perfect sense. Any progress in spiritual life must be preceded by waking up, so to speak, and being aroused from slumber. Therefore it is written, “And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep : for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed” (Rom 13:11). Again, it is written, “ Awake to righteousness , and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame” (1 Cor 15:34). And again, “Wherefore he saith, Awake thou that sleepest , and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light” (Eph 5:14). A slumbering church is in prison, just like Peter, except he knew it, and they do not.

ARISE UP QUICKLY

“ . . . saying, Arise up quickly. . .” Other versions read, “Get up quickly,” NASB Quick, get up!” NIV “Hurry! Get up!” CSB “Arise, instantly,” MRD and “Rise in haste.” YLT

Peter must not tarry, but respond instantly to the word of the delivering angel. There is a sense in which his deliverance depends upon his response, just the deliverance of Lot. The angels who delivered Lot said to him, “Haste thee, escape thither; for I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither” (Gen 19:22). In Peter’s case, the angel will lead him, make the way clear for him, and bring him out of confinement. However, he must respond immediately, making no delay. Even though roused from a deep sleep, he must get up immediately.

This too is the manner of the kingdom. Many a professing believer has been overcome by sin because they did not respond to the summons to get up quickly. They knew they should get up, preparing to leave the place in which they have been found – but they did not do so. They may have heard the voice of the Spirit saying, “Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you” (2 Cor 6:17). But they did not respond, imagining that God would give them more time to make up their mind. And what of the countless souls who remain in the confines of spiritual Babylon, noted for its whoredom and unfaithfulness to God. The word has gone forth, “Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues” (Rev 18:4). Refusing to heed the word, they sleep on in the cursed domain which God has destined for destruction (Rev 14:8; 16:19; 18:2,10,18-21). There is no way to justify delaying to obey the word of the Lord! Deliverance depends upon a response to His word!

HIS CHAINS FELL OFF

“ 7b . . . And his chains fell off from his hands.” Other versions read, “fell off Peter’s wrists,” NASB “came off his hands,” BBE “dropped from his wrists,” WEYMOUTH ‘At once the chains fell off his hands,’ WILLIAMS and “fell away from his hands.” PHILLIPS

It appears from the text that as soon as Peter commenced to get up, the means by which he was bound to the soldiers no longer held him. As Peter was getting up, the chains that confined him fell off! In this manner, the soldiers between whom he was positioned were not aroused. Additionally, all of the soldiers were probably in a state of stupefaction due to the presence of the angel – like the angels were at the tomb of Jesus (Matt 28:4).

There are several instances in which miracles were wrought while the people were responding to Jesus’ command. That is, Divine power was dispensed at the point when the individual responded in faith to the word of the Lord.

- THE MAN LOWERED THROUGH THE ROOF. “But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (then saith He to the sick of the palsy,) Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house. And he arose, and departed to his house ” (Matt 9:6-7).

- THE IMPOTENT MAN AT THE POOL OF BETHESDA. “Jesus saith unto him, Rise, take up thy bed, and walk. And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked : and on the same day was the sabbath” (John 5:8-9).

- THE MAN WITH HE WITHERED HAND. “Then saith He to the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other ” (Matt 12:13).

- THE TEN LEPERS. “And when he saw them, he said unto them, Go show yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed ” (Luke 17:14).

This is the nature of Divine working. It is at the point of the response of faith that freedom is experienced. At that point, whatever bound the person has no more power. It is precisely then that the individual experiences the reality spoken by Jesus: “If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed” (John 8:36). Ponder what a reproach it would be to Jesus if a man whom He had healed from blindness was

This is the nature of Divine working. It is at the point of the response of faith that freedom is experienced. At that point, whatever bound the person has no more power. found groping about the city a few days later. Or, what of the man with the withered hand finding that only a few days later his hand became useless. What if the impotent man who took up his bed and walked soon had to return to that same bed because his legs could no longer support him? Would this have brought glory to the Lord Jesus?

Even so in this text, as Peter made his exit from the prison, his chains were no longer on him, for they had no power to retain him. He was not dragging them as he commenced following the angel.

A DEPICTION OF LIBERTY IN CHRIST

Keep in mind that this is a depiction of what occurs in Jesus Christ. There is a very real spiritual liberty that corresponds to the liberation of Peter. Those who are freed from sin have this word fulfilled in them: “For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace” (Rom 6:14). Further, Jesus frees us to continue in a state of freedom. There is nothing about salvation that allows for the continuation of the domination from which we were freed. Therefore it is written, “Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage” (Gal 5:1). The Amplified Bible reads, “IN [this] freedom Christ has made us free [and completely liberated us]; stand fast then, and do not be hampered and held ensnared and submit again to a yoke of slavery [which you have once put off].”

It is at the point that sins are forgiven that we are freed from their power! To say it another way, freedom commences at the time of deliverance. Although the capacity to sin remains in us, it is confined to “the old man,” who is vastly inferior to “the new man.” The power of sin cannot exceed the degree to which sin is desired – and regeneration addresses that situation. As it is written, “And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts ,” or “ with its passions and desires” NKJV (Gal 5:24). In addition to this, when the “lusts” of desire surface through that “old man,” salvation fully provides for them to be denied, or rejected – i.e. for the person to absolutely refuse to yield to them. “For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world” (Titus 2:11-12).

In view of this revealed circumstance, what has really happened when a person who has been forgiven and is in Christ, does, in fact, sin? Here are some of the things that have taken place. They assist in providing a very needful perspective.

- They did not walk in the Spirit, for if they had, they would not have fulfilled the lusts of the flesh (Gal. 5:116).
- They did not receive the teaching of the very grace that brought salvation, or they would have rejected sinful desires (Tit 2:11).
- They provided a place in their lives in which Satan could work. That is why he gained the dominance over them (Eph 4:27).
- They did not resist the devil, and that is why he did not “flee” from them (James 4:7).
- They WERE not “steadfast in the faith,” and WERE therefore unable to resist the devil (1 Pet 5:7-8).
- They ignored the way of escape that came with the temptation (1 Cor 10:13).

None of these facts suggest that no believer can “sin” (1 John 2:1), or be “overtaken in a fault” (Gal 6:1). However, they do confirm that such things do not occur because the saved are helpless, or cannot manage their lives. Salvation – real salvation – introduces a condition defined as “reigning in life” (Rom 5:17), and being “ more than conquerors” (Rom8:37). Jesus described the condition as having life “more abundantly” – that is, it supercedes all of the things that are against it (John 10:10).

Precisely what kind of salvation is it that frees the person, yet leaves the chains on their hands? What kind of Divine work is it that forgives sin, yet leaves the person under its power? Who would dare preach a Gospel like that? Who is the imposter who would suggest that Jesus did, in fact, forgive us of “all trespasses,” yet leave us under the power of the sins of our ancestors, or helpless victims of personal proclivities and desires?

Does all of this seem foolish? Such a Gospel is being perpetrated by all who suggest that those in Christ have unmanageable lives, or are under the power of personal inclinations that must be dealt with by a procedure created by men. The word of God informs us that those who are living in the snare of the devil, being taken captive at his will, can “recover themselves out of the snare of the devil” by simply repenting and acknowledging the truth (2 Tim 2:25-26). John says it this way, “If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, AND to cleanse us from all unrighteousness,” or “[everything not in conformity to His will in purpose, thought, and action]” AMPLIFIED (1 John 1:9). Forgiveness deals with the propensity to sin as well as the act of sin itself.

When believers in Christ are taught to say their lives are not manageable, and that they are helpless, they have been taught a lie. There is no way to dignify such a heresy. How is it remotely possible for anyone who is joined to the Lord to be “helpless?” How can one who is joined to the Lord be said to have a life that is out of control? And, if such a condition can exist, then precisely what advantage is there to being “in Christ,” being a “believer in Christ,” or being one of His followers?

Those who embrace such nonsense might as well look for the chains to still be on Peter’s hands as he came out of the prison. Or, perhaps he might be pictured as still chained to the guards who walked along with him as he followed the angel. If such a thought sounds foolish, it is because it is!

THE ANGEL SAYS, “FOLLOW ME”

“ 8 And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And so he did. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me.”

Having been freed from the shackles that held him, Peter is now ready for deliverance from the domain in which he had been held – the prison house itself. He was not made free to remain in the prison, but to leave it. Being made free did not allow for him to remain in the domain in which he was confined, but prepared him to make a “clean escape” from it.

GIRD THYSELF, AND BIND ON THY SANDALS

“And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals. And so he did . . .” Other versions read, “put on your clothes and sandals,” NIV “Dress yourselves and put on your sandals,” NRSV “Fasten your belt and put on your sandals,” RSV “Put on your shows and get ready to go,” BBE “Fasten your girdle . . . and tie on your sandals,” WEYMOUTH Tuck in your shirt and put on your sandals,” ISV and “Tighten your belt and put on your shows. WILLIAMS

This was Peter’s preparation for escape. To “gird” himself was to prepare for travel – tucking his garments and tightening the belt that held his garments in place. His feet needed protection during the escape, and therefore he put on his shoes.

CAST THY GARMENT ABOUT THEE

“And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee . . .” Other versions read, “Put on your garment,” NKJV “Wrap your cloak around you,” NASB “Cast thine upper garment about thee,” DARBY and “Put your coat on.” GWN

Having attired himself with his regular clothing and shoes, the angel now tells Peter to put on his outer garment – his cloak, or coat. This would provide warmth during the night air and make his escape without unnecessary discomfort.

In effect, Peter was taking what belonged to him, and would assist him in his journey, not leaving it in the prison. He also left behind what no longer belonged to him – his shackles, or chains.

In this respect, he was much like Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. When they left the fiery furnace, they were in their clothes, and their bonds were removed and left in the furnace (Dan 3:25-27). They even left the smell of the furnace behind them.

FOLLOW ME

“ . . . and follow me.” Other versions read, “come with me,” BBE and “come after me.” MRD

This part of the escape was imperative. It would have done Peter no good to gird himself, put on his sandals, and wrap his coat around him, if he did not follow the angel out of the prison house. There would have been no purpose to the chains falling off his hands if he did not “follow” the one who was freeing him. Peter was not freed from his chains in order to move about in the prison house with greater liberty. There really would be no deliverance at all if this word was not obeyed, and done do instantly, for the angel was on the move.

SALVATION PREFIGURED

In this account we have a marvelous picture of the liberty that is realized in Christ Jesus. It is revealed in remarkable detail, and is worthy of our consideration. This is not forcing something into the text, for all of God’s workings are with His eternal purpose mind. Thus we read of “Him who works out everything in conformity with the purpose of his will” NIV (Eph 1:11).

Foregleams of salvation can be seen in the purposeful working of the Lord. Examples include the following:

- Creating man for the purpose of dominion. Man was placed in the garden, told what he could do and not do, and given dominion over the works of God’s hand.
- Having Noah build an ark for the purpose of saving his house. The Lord provided plans for the building, told him of the duration and the project, and kept him safe during the trial of the flood.
- Delivering Israel out of Egypt, in order to bring them into the promised land. He brought them out with power, sustained them in a wilderness, and enabled them to overcome their foes.
- The miracles of Jesus – a depiction of the what is involved in being delivered from sin: i.e. opening blinded eyes, opening deaf ears, causing one to walk, dispelling the powers of darkness, etc.

Now, a picture of the salvation is seen in the deliverance of Peter.

Awareness

Before any actual deliverance was realized, Peter was made aware of its nearness. He was awakened from his sleep, and became alert. This parallels the awakening that comes when a person is convicted by the Holy Spirit. That conviction involves an awareness of the sin of unbelief, which parallels being held in prison. It involves the conviction of righteousness – that only Jesus is righteous, and we must be brought into the condition that exists only in Him. The needed conviction also brings a persuasion that Satan had already been judged, and it is not possible to be aligned with Him without losing everything. Jesus said, “And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment: Of sin, because they believe not on me; Of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged” (John 16:9-11).

No one is spiritually awake who is not keenly aware of these realities. Such are asleep in the prison house of sin, bound with the fetters of iniquity, and held fast by the wicked one.

Response

In order for an escape to be facilitated, the awakened soul must respond to the conviction that has been brought through the Holy Spirit. Just as Peter got up, so they must get up from the bed of unbelief, and raise up from the posture of slumber. Even though their situation may appear hopeless, they must get themselves in a condition that will allow movement toward the Lord. This involves repentance and the heightening of the desire to be free. It also includes being baptized into Christ and acknowledging that He is the Son of God.

Freedom

When Peter got up, his chains fell off. So it is with those who repent and call upon the Lord – those who act upon the word of the King and set their face to dwell forever with the Lord. No person comes out of the waters of baptism with shackles – no one! There has never been a person who “obeyed the form of the doctrine” (Rom 6:17), yet remained a slave to sin. At the point a person comes into Christ, they are “made free from sin” (Rom 6:18,22). This involves not only being freed from the guilt of sin, but from its power as well. Those in Christ are no longer debtors to, or obligated to live after, “the flesh” (Rom 8:12).

Preparation

In order to enjoy freedom in Christ, people must prepare for it. This is done by:

- Girding the “loins of your mind” (1 Pet 1:13), and putting on proper frames of mind (Col 3:12).
- Putting on “the new man” (Eph 4:24; Col 3:10).
- Putting on “the armor of light” (Rom 13:12), and “the whole armor of God” (Eph 6:11; 1 Thess 5:8).

It also involves bringing forth “fruits meet for repentance,” or “in keeping with repentance” (Matt 3:8). Paul taught people that in coming to Christ they were to “repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance” (Acts 26:20). As Peter also confirmed, coming to Christ is to be preceded by a change in conduct that results from a change of mind. “Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord” (Acts 3:19). Note that the phrase “Repent and be converted” preceded the blotting out of sins, being a requisite to the reception of that blessing. This required change of conduct is much like a man with a withered hand stretching out his hand, or an impotent men picking up his bed and walking – it must be done! When the person exerts his will and effort to do it, power will be given for its accomplishment.

Journey

Once his shackles fell off, he was girded, his sandals on, and his coat wrapped around him, Peter was ready to make the journey. He was not freed to choose his own way of escape, but to follow the one who was delivering him.

Even when Jesus was on earth, He made clear what men were to do: “Follow me” (Matt 4:19; 8:22; 9:9; Matt 16:24; 19:21; Lk 9:23; John 1:43; 10:27; 12:26; 21:19). Our freedom initially and in its maintenance requires that we follow Jesus. That is, that we be where He is, remaining close to Him and abiding in Him.

It is a fundamental error when men depict escape from sin as a process requiring an extensive period of time and a regimented series of steps. The process is associated with transformation – something that is accomplished by the Holy Spirit, and through which we become more and more like Jesus.

There is one other thing that is important to note. The journey was not the escape itself, but the trip to the appointed destination. The point was where he was going!

So it was when Israel was delivered from Egypt. Technically, the deliverance was not realized in a journey. All of Israel made an exit from Egypt in a single night. It was the trip to the promised land that constituted the journey – and that journey could only be made when they were free from the encumbrances of Egypt.

It is a fundamental error when men depict escape from sin as a process requiring an extensive period of time and a regimented series of steps. The process is associated with transformation – something that is accomplished by the Holy Spirit, and through which we become more and more like Jesus. This is expressly stated in Second Corinthians 3:18, which describes our ongoing change. Of course, that is a process upon which men cannot capitalize. The truth of the matter is that men are delivered by Jesus in order for the Spirit to change them. That transformation is required to be forever with the Lord.

PETER FOLLOWS WITHOUT COGNITION

“9 And he went out, and followed him; and wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but thought he saw a vision.”

There is something to be seen here that is most precious. Even though Peter is not fully aware of what is happening, it is his nature to respond to the directive of the angel. The laws of God had been written upon his heart and put into his mind (Heb 8:10). His basic propensity was toward the Lord (Phil 3:7-15). He was fundamentally inclined to do the will of the Lord. He was living in the Spirit (Gal 5:25) and by faith (Gal 3:11). His nature was not to rebel, for he had been made a partaker of Christ (Heb 3:14; Isa 50:5). It was not to draw back (Heb 10:38), or even be tardy in his responses (Psa 119:60). He was forward to do the will of the Lord – even when he thought he was seeing a vision.

In our time, there are professed preachers and teachers who are constantly reminding the church of their recalcitrant nature. They speak of a natural disposition that recoils at Divine directives, is slow and obtuse, and basically unwilling to obey the Lord. They have said these things so often, and with such persuasiveness, that the very mind-set of the modern church is inclined in this direction. A host of specialized ministries have also been created to deal with the circumstance of rebellion against God. Oh, they do not call it rebellion. They choose to refer to the wayward condition as one in which the people are victimized by addiction, dysfunction, flawed habits, and a flawed family tree. You must know that salvation deals with waywardness.

In this text, however, we are being exposed to a real “Christian,” not one that is nothing more than the result of defective teaching. This is the account of a person who has been born again (1 Pet 1:23), created in Christ Jesus (Eph 2:10), and cleansed by the washing of regeneration (Tit 3:5). This is a man who is walking by faith (2 Cor 5:7) and in the Spirit (Gal 5:16). His instant and thorough response is not a miracle, but is rather the result of being dead indeed unto sin, and alive unto God (Rom 6:11).

AND HE WENT

Peter’s deliverance was miraculous, and there is no question about it. However, he himself was involved in the deliverance. He “went out,” first preparing to do so by readying himself, and then participating in the deliverance by following the angel out of the prison.

“And he went out, and followed him; . . .” Other versions read, “went out and continued to follow,” NASB “followed him out of the prison,” NIV “went out after him,” BBE “going forth he followed him,” DARBY “came out and followed him,” GENEVA “left the cell, following the angel,” NLT “having gone forth, he was following him,” YLT “the angel went out and Peter followed,” IE “went out and began to follow him,” ISV and “kept following him out.” WILLIAMS

Peter's deliverance was miraculous, and there is no question about it. However, he himself was involved in the deliverance. He "went out," first preparing to do so by readying himself, and then participating in the deliverance by following the angel out of the prison.

Here again we are exposed to the nature of salvation. The Lord works, and men participate!

This is how Noah was saved from the flood. He responded to the Divine warning, built an ark, gathered food to be eaten, and gathered a host of animals – clean animals in groups of seven, and unclean in pairs (Gen 6:13-7:3).

This is how Israel was delivered from Egypt. They prepared themselves to leave by observing the Passover, placing blood upon the entrance to their homes, packing their goods, gathering their flocks, obtaining goods from the Egyptians, and even preparing and baking bread for their preliminary journey (Ex 12:18-41).

This is how Israel was commanded to obtain the promised land. They had to conquer Jericho, enter the land, drive out its inhabitants, and faithfully keep the ordinances of the Lord (Josh 6; Num 33:54-55; Deut 28:9).

Our text, together with these accounts and a host of others, clarify what it meant by the apostolic injunction, "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling" (Phil 2:12).

HE WIST NOT THAT IT WAS TRUE

" . . . and wist not that it was true . . ." Other versions read, "did not know . . . was real," NKJV "had no idea . . . was really happening," NIV and "was not certain . . . was a fact." BBE

Although Peter was on his way out of the prison, he did not know if it was a real experience or not. At this point, his understanding was deficient, but his obedience was not.

DONE BY THE ANGEL

" . . . which was done by the angel . . ." Other versions read, "being done by the angel," NASB "what the angel was doing," NIV "with the angel's help," RSV "through the angel," CSB "by means of the angel," DARBY "what the angel was doing," GWN and "done through the messenger." YLT

All of the circumstances that attended this deliverance were "being done by the angel." NASB This includes the peaceful awakening of Peter, his chains falling from his hands, directions concerning proper preparations and total unawareness of all of the soldiers, both within and without the cell in which Peter was kept.

Behold how earthly circumstances whether personal or impersonal, yield to the angel of the Lord. What was a hopeless situation from the earthly point of view, was no challenge at all to a holy angel. This would be nothing more than an interesting fact if we were not given some additional information concerning angels that is pertinent to our circumstance. " . . . the angels . . . Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" (Heb 1:13-14). This gives us good reason to refuse to be cast down because of difficult circumstances!

HE THOUGHT HE SAW A VISION

" . . . but thought he saw a vision." Virtually all versions read "vision." Departures from this representation are found in The Living Bible ("a dream or vision"), Williams New Testament ("he thought he was dreaming it") , and Contemporary English Version ("only a dream") .

In the Scriptures, there is one word for "vision," and another for "dream." These words are used in Acts 2:17, where Joel is quoted as prophesying that young men would “see visions,” and old men would “dream dreams.” The general distinction between the two words is that a “dream” occurs while one is asleep, while a “vision” is seen while one is awake. Both are given by God, and are revelatory in nature.

Peter knew that he was awake, and even moving about. Yet, he thought he was experiencing a vision – something like he did when on “the housetop” of the house of Simon the tanner (Acts 10:10-17). He was not yet aware of what was really taking place.

It ought to be noted that there are things that really do happen to us, even though there may be a period of time when we are not fully aware of them. Nevertheless, they are very real, and yield very real effects. An example of this is the new birth in which we become dead to sin and alive to God. Initially, such an experience may appear to be nothing more than an ideal view, or something toward which we are to progress. But this is not the case. Just as Peter’s deliverance was very real, so what takes place when we are baptized into Christ is very real. This is precisely why Paul reasoned with believers as he did concerning overcoming sin. “Are you ignorant of the fact that all of us who have been baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into His death? We were buried therefore with Him by the baptism into death, so that just as Christ was raised from the dead by the glorious [power] of the Father, so we too might [habitually] live and behave in newness of life. For if we have become one with Him by sharing a death like His, we shall also be [one with Him in sharing] His resurrection [by a new life lived for God]. We know that our old (unrenewed) self was nailed to the cross with Him in order that [our] body [which is the instrument] of sin might be made ineffective and inactive for evil, that we might no longer be the slaves of sin. For when a man dies, he is freed (loosed, delivered) from [the power of] sin [among men]. Now if we have died with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with Him, Because we know that Christ (the Anointed One), being once raised from the dead, will never die again; death no longer has power over Him. For by the death He died, He died to sin [ending His relation to it] once for all; and the life that He lives, He is living to God [in unbroken fellowship with Him]. Even so consider yourselves also dead to sin and your relation to it broken, but alive to God [living in unbroken fellowship with Him] in Christ Jesus” AMPLIFIED (Rom 6:3-11).

Just as surely as Peter had to be brought to see that his deliverance was real, so we must see that our deliverance is also very real! Reigning in life will commence at point this is seen.

AS PETER FOLLOWS, CIRCUMSTANCE YIELDS TO HIM

“10 When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city; which opened to them of his own accord: and they went out, and passed on through one street; and forthwith the angel departed from him.”

The details of the deliverance are provided, for the details are the means by which the deliverance is more fully discerned. Both Peter’s deliverance from the prison and our deliverance from sin is presented in summary form. It is this summation that establishes the cause of the deliverance. The details are provided to confirm its effectiveness. However, the details have no impact upon the human spirit until the cause for the deliverance is established. This is a nugget of truth that brings great comfort to the believer.

THEY WERE PAST THE FIRST AND SECOND WARD

“When they were past the first and the second ward . . .” Other versions read, “the first and second guard posts,” NKJV “the first and second guards,” NASB “the first and second watchmen,” BBE “the first guard, then the second,” NAB “the first and second watch,” TNT and “first and second cell blocks.” LIVING

The word “ward” can refer to the post where the guard was stationed, or the guard himself.

STRONG’S Either meaning is acceptable here, for the point is that they passed the places where a guard or guards were found, stationed at their various posts to secure the prisoner. However, even though Herod had made provision to keep Peter in prison, the angel led him past those who were in charge of him, and they did not even know it.

Behold the comparative ease with which Peter’s deliverance was accomplished – even though the circumstances appeared to shout out that such a thing was altogether impossible. As the angel and Peter proceeded, they did not crouch down and attempt to hide themselves. They “past by” those who were charged with making sure their prisoner did not escape. Peter’s enemies were completely oblivious to what was going on. They could see neither the angel nor Peter, and their ears were closed to any sounds emitting from them.

When faith brings an understanding of this kind of deliverance, it becomes all the more reasonable to cast our care upon the Lord, as we are enjoined to do (1 Pet 5:7).

It seems to me that Scripture is written to bring great comfort to those who are living by faith, while, to others, it appears to be nothing more than a record of history and an outline for human conduct. The doctrine of Scripture declares the realities that are grasped by faith. The historic incidents of Scripture are a kind of exposition of the implications of the doctrine.

THEY CAME TO THE IRON GATE

“ . . . they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city . . .” I have forty-four versions of Scripture that all say precisely the same thing: “iron gate.” This was a formidable gate that separated the prison from the city. Iron is a processed metal, refined in a furnace, and noted for its great strength. When God spoke of heaven being impenetrable because of the wickedness of the people, He said, “I will make your heaven as iron” (Lev 26:19; Deut 28:23). In such a case, prayers could not go up, and rain could not come down. Referring to the captivity of Israel in Egypt, Moses said the Lord had taken them out of “the iron furnace” (Deut 4:20). When the people were judged, and put into the hands of their enemies, they were said to have a “yoke of iron” upon them (Deut 26:48). Formidable opponents were said to have “chariots of iron” (Judges 1:19; 4:3,13). The head of Goliath’s spear was made of “iron,” and weighed fifteen pounds (1 Sam 17:7). Daniel was given a vision of a kingdom – the fourth kingdom – that was characterized by unusual strength. It is said to have been “strong as iron” (Dan 2:40).

When, therefore, we read of an “iron gate,” we are being introduced to something noted for stability. As men consider things, it was fully capable of keeping prisoners in, and intruders out. However, that is the view of mortals. In this text, an angel from heaven has appeared on the scene, and what is unconquerable to men, is not even a faint consideration to the angel.

IT OPENED ITS OWN ACCORD

“ . . . which opened to them of his own accord . . .” Other versions read, “by itself,” NASB “it opened for them,” ESV and “Of its own accord [the gate] swung open.” AMPLIFIED

The angel did not speak to the gate: it opened of its own accord. Peter did not push the Gate: it opened of its own accord. No special word from heaven was given that was to be spoken to the gate: it opened of its own accord. In other words, the gate yielded to a power greater than its own. That is true of all power, whether natural or spiritual. Winds, noted for their ferocity and power, yielded to Jesus (Mk 4:39a). A stormy sea, noted for its destructive power, yielded to the Lord (Mk 4:39b). Demons, capable of captivating and dominating mortals who are not in communion with God, yielded to Jesus Christ (Mk 1:25; 9:25). A fever that was controlling Peter's mother-in-law, yielded to the rebuke of Jesus (Lk 4:39). Death, having held Lazarus in the tomb for four days, yielded to the word of Jesus (John 11:43). Even the devil himself, when confronting the Lord Jesus, could not resist the command of Christ, who said to him: "Get thee hence!" It is written that at that point, "the devil leaveth him" (Matt 4:11).

That is a vivid depiction of the life of faith. It is a life of progress, growth, increased fellowship, ongoing change, and incremental conformity to the image of Christ.

Thus, the restraining gate refused to stay closed as the angel of the Lord and the one being escorted by him approached: it opened "of its own accord." It ought to be noted that those who refuse to yield to the Lord have less sense than an iron gate.

THEY WENT OUT, PASSED THROUGH ONE STREET, AND THE ANGEL DEPARTED

"and they went out, and passed on through one street; and forthwith the angel departed from him."

Notice the progress that has taken place to this point. It is, in a sense, the depiction of the progress of faith.

- Peter awoke.
- Peter got up.
- Peter girded himself.
- Peter put on his sandals.
- Peter put in his cloak.
- Peter followed the angel out of the cell.
- Peter followed the angel past the first ward.
- Peter followed the angel past the second ward.
- Peter followed the angel through the iron gate.
- Peter passed on through one street.

Behold the progress! See how Peter moved steadily toward his destination. Perceive how he got further and further from the place of bondage. That is a vivid depiction of the life of faith. It is a life of progress, growth, increased fellowship, ongoing change, and incremental conformity to the image of Christ. Stagnation, retrogression, reversion, backsliding, lapse, and static conditions have no part in the life that is in Christ Jesus. Furthermore, there is no humanly-conceived program that can arrest a stance that is diminishing in nature. That is a condition that can only be addressed to Deity. Real spiritual life is noted for its progression, and is therefore paralleled with walking – not in circles, as Israel did in the wilderness, but toward a destination.

- Walking "in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham" (Rom 4:12).
- Walking "in newness of life" (Rom 6:4).
- Walking "in the Spirit" (Gal 5:16,25).
- Walking in "good works," that God has before ordained (Eph 2:10).
- Walking "in love" (Eph 5:2).
- Walking "in wisdom" (Col 4:5).
- Walking "in the light" (1 John 1:7).
- Walking "in the truth" (3 John 1:4).

How reasonable would it have been for Peter to have remained in prison after the angel had appeared to him? What if he had settled for a new set of clothes, and a course in acceptable prison behavior? What if he has reconciled himself to being chained to the guards, and simply decided to make the best of the situation – doing so AFTER the angel had appeared to him and instructed him. Is there a person in all of the world who would have applauded Peter for such a response? It would have been wrong to teach Peter how to survive in prison!

Yet we are living in a time referred to as “the day of salvation” and “the acceptable time” (2 Cor 6:2). A word has been sent from heaven that announces “deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind,” and the proclamation of liberty to “them that are bruised” (Luke 4:18). Yet myriad professing Christians sit in prison as though nothing had really happened – just as though Jesus had really not accomplished anything. All kinds of programs are being marketed to the churches that teach them how to be acclimated to prison life, remaining the way they always were, yet developing some new habits that will help them think differently about themselves.

After all is said and done, it is good to know that there are still deliverances initiated from heaven that are just as effective, and even more so, than the one of which we are reading. People can leave the place of moral and spiritual confinement, walk right past the very things that kept them there, and experience the yielding of the inferior power of the wicked one to the Captain of our salvation. Praise God for that!

PETER COMES TO HIMSELF

“ 11 And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety, that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.”

We will see now that a person will take the proper action only when they have properly assessed the situation. Flawed living is always the result of flawed thinking, an incorrect analysis, and improper assessments. This is why godly men prayed for understanding, not desiring to proceed with a faulty understanding.

PETER WAS COME TO HIMSELF

We will see now that a person will take the proper action only when they have properly assessed the situation. Flawed living is always the result of flawed thinking, an incorrect analysis, and improper assessments. This is why godly men prayed for understanding, not desiring to proceed with a faulty understanding.

“And when Peter was come to himself . . .” Other versions read, “came to his senses,” BBE “recognized [where he was],” MRD “recovered his senses,” NAB and “finally realized what had happened.” LIVING

It is interesting to ponder the very concept of a person coming to himself, or coming to one’s senses. This is the same kind of language Jesus employed in his parable of younger son who asked for “the portion of goods” that had been allotted to him. His father distributed the goods to both of his sons, and the younger one straightway squandered it all in “riotous living,” “loose living,” NASB or “prodigal living” NKJV (Lk 15:11-13). The English word “prodigal,” means “characterized by profuse or wasteful expenditure.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER After the younger son had “spent all” – and only after he has spent all – “there arose a mighty famine in the land.” Jesus said the young man “joined himself to a citizen of that country, ” and was sent “into the fields to feed the swine.” He became so hungry that he gladly would have eaten what he was giving to the swine. It was at that point that Jesus said he “came to himself,” and begin thinking properly, in concert with reality (Lk 15:14-17).

In the case of the prodigal, he was, in a manner, insane when he was wasting his substance on dissolute, degenerate, or profligate living. When he came to himself, he saw things as they really were. He had wasted his substance, was no longer worthy to be called his father's son, and was worse off than his father's servants.

In Peter's case, coming to himself was not recovery from moral insanity. He was still thinking in a theocentric, or God-centered manner. However, he thought he was having a vision – perhaps one that would require some interpretation, like the one he had on the housetop some years earlier.

But now Peter sees the circumstance as it really is. With his mind he is able to properly assess what has happened, and to draw some valid conclusions. His proper reasoning will also enable him to know what to do.

I KNOW OF A SURETY

“he said, Now I know of a surety, that the Lord hath sent his angel . . .” Other versions read, “I know for certain,” NKJV “I know for sure,” NASB “I know without a doubt,” NIV “I am sure,” NRSV “I know of a truth,” ASV “I am certain,” BBE “I know in very deed,” DOUAY “I know in reality,” MRD “It's really true,” LIVING and “I know that the Lord really did send his angel to me.”
IE

This is the expression of “the full assurance of faith” (Heb 10:22), and “the full assurance of understanding” (Col 2:2). This is an example of “confidence” (1 John 2:28), and of “certainty” (Lk 1:4). This is the kind of knowledge that brings boldness and certitude.

Peter now knew for certain that God Himself had determined his deliverance, and sent his angel to accomplish it. Also, like Jonathan, he knew that with the Lord “there is no restraint” (1 Sam 14:6).

It is a sign of marked progress when the person who has been delivered can trace that deliverance back to God Himself.

FROM HEROD AND FROM THE EXPECTATION OF THE JEWS

“ . . . and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.”

Thus Peter sees the scope of his deliverance. He was not merely rescued from inconvenience and hardship, but from the determination of Herod to take his life. His deliverance was not only from restriction and isolation, but from the cruel intentions of the Jews. He saw this, and saw it clearly.

Other versions read, “rescued,” NASB “taken me out,” BBE “save me,” NJB and “released me.”
MONTGOMERY

With men, circumstance can seem like everything. In heaven, it is nothing more than an opportunity through which God can receive glory. The angel had no difficulty with the circumstance. It was no challenge to him, and therefore deliverance was instant, thorough, and to the praise of God.

Now, being in his right mind, Peter gives the proper assessment of what he had just experienced. More was involved than simply getting out of prison.

Delivered Out of the Hand of Herod

Herod had made a determination, and he was confident he could carry it out with no difficulty at all. After all, he was the king of the territory. Beside that, he had dispensed with James the apostle, and no doubt imagined that this was owing to his great power.

Now, however, his council is reversed, and his judgment nullified. His intentions are dashed to the ground, and he is not able to do what he had determined. And the deliverance was thoroughly accomplished without a war or conflict of any kind – even without a word being spoken. No court convened on earth, and no lawyer mounted the rostrum to speak in the behalf of Peter. The prison was not stormed by a troop, and no trumpet of warning was sounded. Instead, light filled the prison, the soldiers were rendered helpless, and Peter walked out, a free man!

Delivered from the Expectation of the Jews

But Peter was also delivered from the expectation of the Jews – which was of the same order as that of Herod. They appeared to be looking forward to ridding themselves of Peter, who had been a thorn in their sides for around fifteen years. How expectantly they must have awaited the morning, when Peter would be brought before them, and they could publically condemn him like they did Jesus. However, their expectation was thrown down without any kind of initiative against it. A Solomon well said, “the expectation of the wicked shall perish” (Prov 10:26).

Thus Peter sees the scope of his deliverance. He was not merely rescued from inconvenience and hardship, but from the determination of Herod to take his life. His deliverance was not only from restriction and isolation, but from the cruel intentions of the Jews. He saw this, and saw it clearly.

PETER CONSIDERS WHAT HAS HAPPENED

“ 12a And when he had considered the thing. . .” Other versions read, “when he realized this,” NASB “When this dawned upon him,” NIV “when he became clear about this,” BBE “having become clearly conscious in himself,” DARBY “after a little thought,” LIVING “after thinking things over,” WEYMOUTH “ When he became conscious of his situation,” WILLIAMS and “When he, at a glance, became aware of this [comprehending all the elements of the case].” AMPLIFIED

The word “considered” is translated from the Greek word sunidw,n . . . The lexical meaning of the word is, “to see (have seen) in one's mind, with oneself . . . to understand, perceive, comprehend.” THAYER This has to do with understanding what had happened – that is, the fulness of his deliverance burst upon him. He was free!

Once the reality of his deliverance registered upon his heart and mind, he proceeded to act upon it. That is, his actions were dictated by what he understood, or comprehended.

A PRINCIPLE OF SPIRITUAL LIFE

Right here we have the fountainhead of both proper conduct and stability – considering what happened when deliverance occurred. There is such a thing as “the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus” (Rom 8:2). That is, there are certain traits that characterize life in Christ Jesus. This involves choosing a course of life that is conducive to the end for which God has called us. It is what we know about life in Christ Jesus that directs what we do (Rom 5:3; 6:6,9; 13:11; 2 Cor 1:7; 4:14; 5:6; 5:11; Gal 2:16; Eph 6:8-9; 2 Tim 2:23; Heb 10:34; James 1:2; 1 Pet 3:9; 5:9).

Those who stumble, fail to grow, or fall away, do so because the life of faith has not made sense to them. The truth of what takes place in Christ Jesus has not registered on their minds.

Those who stumble, fail to grow, or fall away, do so because the life of faith has not made sense to them. The truth of what takes place in Christ Jesus has not registered on their minds. This is why the apostles, and Paul in particular, labored to bring believers to a proper understanding of what is realized in Christ Jesus. The truth of the matter is that until this happens, living godly and productive lives at an acceptable level, simply is not possible.

The following expressions indicate the degree of dissatisfaction that was realized by godly teachers when the people remained in a state of ignorance.

- CONCERNING SPIRITUAL GIFTS. “Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant” (1 Cor 12:1).

- CONCERNING ISRAEL’S BLINDNESS. “For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in” (Rom 11:25).

- CONCERNING ISRAEL’S DELIVERANCE. “Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea” (1 Cor 10:1).

- CONCERNING THE COMING OF THE LORD. “But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope” (1 Thess 4:13).

- CONCERNING WHAT HAPPENED WHEN WE WERE BAPTIZED. “Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?” (Rom 6:3).

- CONCERNING THE NATURE OF SIN. “Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?” (Rom 6:16).

- CONCERNING THE DOMINION OF LAW. “Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth?” (Rom 7:1).

- CONCERNING THE CHURCH. “Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?” (1 Cor 3:16).

- CONCERNING THE PERVASIVE NATURE OF SIN. “Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?” (1 Cor 5:6).

- CONCERNING JUDGMENT. “Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?” (1 Cor 6:3).

- CONCERNING UNRIGHTEOUSNESS. “Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind” (1 Cor 6:9).

- CONCERNING OUR BODIES. “Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid” (1 Cor 6:15).

- CONCERNING THE USE OF OUR BODIES. “What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's” (1 Cor 6:19-20).

- CONCERNING RUNNING THE RACE. “Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain” (1 Cor 9:24).

- CONCERNING WHETHER OR NOT CHRIST IS IN US. “Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" (2 Cor 13:5).

• CONCERNING FRIENDSHIP WITH THE WORLD. "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God" (James 4:4).

A PARALLEL TO SPIRITUAL LIFE

Peter coming to a juncture where he had a fuller understanding of what had happened to him, parallels life in Christ Jesus. In his first epistle, Peter referred to a point in time when we come to see more clearly what is declared in the Gospel.

Having declared that we "have a more sure word of prophecy," or "the prophetic word confirmed," NKJV or fulfilled, we are reminded that we "do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts" (2 Pet 1:19). That is, as we ponder the Gospel of Christ, musing upon it, and probing into it, there will come a time when the day will dawn, and we will commence walking in the light as He is in the light. There will be illumination within, so that it will be reasonable to live unto the Lord, and totally unreasonable not to do so.

Those poor souls who never do see clearly will never be able to rise high enough to experience any degree of spiritual consistency. No one can "walk as children of light" (Eph 5:8) who remains ignorant of where the Lord has brought them, and how marvelously He has done so. One of the responsibilities of faithful ministers is to assist the people in obtaining clarity of vision.

PETER HEADS FOR A PARTICULAR HOUSE

"12b . . . he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying."

Here we are also exposed to the manner of spiritual life. Having been freed, Peter immediately goes to the brethren. This is what he and John did when they were released by the Jewish council. They "came to their own company, and reported . . ." (Acts 4:23). This is also what the disciples did following the ascension of Jesus, coming together to pray (Acts 1:12-13). Following the day of Pentecost, with three thousand being added to the church, the believers "were together" (Acts 2:44). Some time later, when Paul and Silas were released from the Philippian jail, they "entered into the house of Lydia," saw the brethren, comforted them, and departed (Acts 16:40). This is the manner of spiritual life. When professed believers have no heart to meet together, a very major deficiency exists.

HE CAME TO THE HOUSE OF MARY

" . . . he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark . . ."

This Mary was a sister to Barnabas. Paul refers to her in his letter to the Colossians, also saying that she was Mark's mother. "Aristarchus my fellowprisoner saluteth you, and Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas, (touching whom ye received commandments: if he come unto you, receive him) (Col 4:10). Here was a woman who offered her home as a place for believers to gather. We do not know much about her, but what we do know is very commendable, and sets forth an excellent example for us all.

Here is a woman that is known because of her son – something like Lois and Eunice, who became well known because of Timothy (2 Tim 1:5). It is good for children to determine to bring honor to their parents by engaging in the work of the Lord.

This is the John that Barnabas and Saul took on a missionary journey (Acts 12:25). He is also the one who left them, not going "to the work," and causing a sharp contention between Barnabas and Saul (Acts 15:37-38). Notwithstanding that dark spot in his life, John Mark recovered from his bout with instability, and came to be a great help to Paul (2 Tim 4:11).

In his First epistle, Peter refers to Mark (“Marcus”) as his “son,” indicating that he was converted under Peter’s ministry (1 Pet 5:13). Many are also of the opinion that Mark was the “young man” you followed Jesus when He was arrested in the garden, leaving his cloak in the hands of those who sought to apprehend him that night (Mk 14:51-52). He is also considered to be the one who wrote the Gospel of Mark at the dictation of Peter.

Here is a woman that is known because of her son – something like Lois and Eunice, who became well known because of Timothy (2 Tim 1:5). It is good for children to determine to bring honor to their parents by engaging in the work of the Lord. Texts mentioning Mark include Acts 12:12, 25; 13:5,13; 15:39; Col 4:10; 2 Tim 4:11; Philemon 1:24.

MANY WERE GATHERED TOGETHER PRAYING

“ . . . where many were gathered together praying.”

The word “many” means a considerable number of people, without any specific number being given. Early in the book of Acts, we are told that the collective disciples continued steadfastly “in prayer” (Acts 2:42). On another occasion, when Peter and John had been threatened, the disciples came together to pray (Acts 4:23-24). In this, the accord and singleness of purpose is to be noted.

We assume the brethren were praying for Peter, and that this is a further explanation of the previous statement, “but prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him” (Acts 12:5).

Here we see how tightly knit the brethren were – coming together in a house for the purpose of prayer. There is also a resounding testimony of their absolute reliance upon the Lord. Here we see the body of Christ, knit together in love, and praying to their Lord. Their lives were being lived unto the Lord, and they resorted to Him in the time of need, knowing they were complete in Him, and that God was for them.

RHODA RECOGNIZES PETER’S VOICE

“ 13 And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came to hearken, named Rhoda. 14 And when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate.”

We are rarely exposed to their mundane activities, domestic circumstances, or other things pertaining to this life. It is characteristic of the Spirit to mention activities of life as they bore upon matters relating to the Lord and his purpose.

It is still during the night, perhaps toward the close of the darkness, as the day was about to dawn. Peter has arrived at the home of Mary, apparently a familiar gathering point for the disciples. I cannot help but observe how the early disciples are described in Scripture. We are rarely exposed to their mundane activities, domestic circumstances, or other things pertaining to this life. It is characteristic of the Spirit to mention activities of life as they bore upon matters relating to the Lord and his purpose. Thus, the hospitality of both Abraham and Lot are detailed when it had something to do with what the Lord was doing (Gen 18:1-8; 19:1-11). The same may be said of the occasion when Isaac asked for some venison to be brought to him, which occasioned the incident in which Esau sold his birthright to Jacob (Gen 27:3-33). There is such a consistency in this manner of reporting the activities of the disciples that it is arresting. Duly noted, it will assist us in adopting a proper emphasis in our own lives.

AS PETER KNOCKED

“And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate . . .” Other versions read, “the outer entrance,” NIV “the door of the gateway,” NASV “the outer gate,” RSV and “the door of entry.” DARBY This was not door of the house structure itself, but the one that led to the court around the house. The manner in which one gained access to a person’s house was much like that of the tabernacle. There was an outer court that was situated between the entrance to ones domain and the house occupied by them. The fact that the entry point was closed suggests that it was still night

The word “knock” means to “knock with a heavy blow,” THAYER and “to knock on a door, as a means of signaling one's presence to those inside.” LOUW-NIDA The point is that Peter was at the residence belonging to someone else, and had to be given permission to enter. We assume the “door of the gate” was secured, prohibiting any unapproved entrance.

Here we have an example of the involvements of seeking grace to help in the time of need – an activity Jesus described as knocking. As in the text before us, such a quest is guarantee an answer (Matt 7:7-8).

A DAMSEL NAMED RHODA

“a damsel came to hearken, named Rhoda . . .” Other versions read, “a girl,” NKJV “a servant-girl,” NASB “a maid,” NRSV “a young girl,” BBE “a servant,” CJB “a slave girl,” NET “a maidservant,” WEYMOUTH As used in the Old Covenant Scriptures, the word “damsel” means a young woman, or young girl (Gen 24:14; Deut 22:15; 1 Kgs 1:3). In our text, the word “damsel” emphasizes that the young woman was a servant, for the word from which it is translated means “a maidservant, a young female slave.” THAYER

Here is the only place in Scripture where this young woman is mentioned. Behold how alert she was, hearing Peter knocking, and coming to the door – even while the brethren were praying. There is an example of a good and faithful servant – alert, diligent, and instant to respond.

SHE KNEW PETER’S VOICE

“ . . . And when she knew Peter's voice . . .” Other versions read, “recognized Peter’s voice.” NKJV

Here was an attentive servant who had, through much exposure, come to recognize the voice of Peter the apostle. Our text does not say that she heard Peter identify himself, but that she recognized his voice, being fully able to confirm that it really was him. In this text, she was to Peter what John the Baptist was to Jesus. After identifying Himself as the Good Shepherd, Jesus said of John, “To Him the porter openeth” (John 10:3). Jesus also likened Himself to master coming to His servants, declaring that they should watch for Him like diligent porters: “For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch” (Mark 13:34).

Rhoda was a faithful “porter,” acquainting herself with the voice of those who were welcomed to enter.

SHE OPENED NOT THE GATE FOR GLADNESS

“ . . . , she opened not the gate for gladness . . .” Other versions read, “because of her gladness,” NKJV “because of her joy,” NASB “she was overjoyed,” NIV and “in her joy.” NRSV

Here is a case where joy interfered with sound judgment – just as it did with the disciples when they first saw the risen Lord: “while they believed not for joy” (Lk 24:41). Such a joy is very real, but it is not deep. It is only on the surface.

Notwithstanding, there are some things of profit to be noted here. First, Rhoda was familiar enough with the situation to know that something of greatness had occurred. Though young, she was not uninformed. Although a servant, she had taken in what was going on around her. Rhoda knew about Peter

One of the benefits of acquaintance with the people of God and the things of God is this: at the time of visitation, you will be more apt to recognize what is taking place, and to give an accurate report. Disinterest robs the soul of these benefits, contributing to ignorance and slowness of heart.

and his incarceration – and she was a servant! She also was aware of the advantages that were available when Peter arrived.

Although our society does not have servants like the people of our text, there are people about us who are privy to the way we live and the conversations we have. What do you suppose they conclude about us? What kind of knowledge are they appropriating while in our company?

SHE TOLD HOW PETER STOOD AT THE GATE

“ . . . but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate.”

That is, she ran from the gate of the courtyard back to the house, giving her glad report that Peter was standing at the gate. Unlike the messenger Ahimaaz, Rhoda did know what to say. Ahimaaz ran to give a report to David concerning the uprising of his own son, Absalom. Absalom had been slain during that conflict, and David did not know it. When he asked this messenger if Absalom was “safe,” Ahimaaz replied, “When Joab sent the king's servant, and me thy servant, I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was” (2 Sam 18:29). He did not know what to say. Rhoda did know what to say!

One of the benefits of acquaintance with the people of God and the things of God is this: at the time of visitation, you will be more apt to recognize what is taking place, and to give an accurate report. Disinterest robs the soul of these benefits, contributing to ignorance and slowness of heart.

THOSE WHO ARE PRAYING DO NOT BELIEVE HER

“ 15 And they said unto her, Thou art mad. But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, It is his angel.”

Surely the response of the disciples will be one of gladness. After all, a faithful report has been given. However, this is not their initial reaction. This text has been the occasion for much criticism of the disciples involved. Throughout the years, I have heard men of note say the disciples had been praying for Peter's release. Yet, when the answer to their prayer was given, they did not believe it. This observation is then ported over to our generation to justify the unbelief resident among many professed Christians who find it surprising when their prayers are answered.

The flaw in this reasoning is that nothing in the text suggests the disciples were praying for Peter's release, or that there was any compulsion to believe that he was going to be released. Unlike those of our country, they were acquainted with martyrdom. Early on Stephen had been stoned to death (Acts 7:59-60). Under the persecution of Saul of Tarsus, believers were “put to death” (Acts 26:10). Jesus had told His disciples that some of them would be put to death (Luke 21:16). Jesus had personally told Peter of the manner in which he would glorify God in a martyr's death (John 21:19). On top of all of this, Herod has just “killed James the brother of John with the sword” (Acts 12:2).

These brethren had a different view of life in Christ and testifying for Him. They did not think in terms of being popular with the people, accepted by those who were prominent in the world, and a life free from threat. They looked at death as a time of “gain” (Phil 1:21). They were well acquainted with the hostility of the world – particularly the religious world.

I find it difficult to conceive of brethren like this praying fervently for the release of Peter, then being stunned when their prayer was answered. It seems to me that this is a reproach cast upon our early brethren by those who lack what they possessed. While I do not question that prayers had been made for Peter to be spared, it is my persuasion that this was not the subject of their prayers at the time of our text. The text strongly suggests that this was not the case.

THOU ART MAD

“And they said unto her, Thou art mad.” Other versions read, “You are beside yourself,” NKJV “You are out of your mind,” NASB “You’re crazy,” CSB “Thou art delirious,” MRD and “Thou art insane.” WEB

There was no doubt in Rhoda’s mind about Peter being at the door of the gate. She knew this was the case, and kept on stating the fact – affirming that what she knew for sure was the truth, for she had recognized Peter’s voice.

The word “mad” is said “of one who so speaks that he seems not to be in his right mind.” THAYER This is the word used when the people said Jesus had “a demon and is mad” (John 10:20). It is also used when Fetus said to Paul, “much learning doth make thee mad” (Acts 26:24). Paul also used this word when describing a stranger coming into the assembly and hearing them all speak in other languages: “will they not say that thou art made?” (1 Cor 14:23). This does not refer to the ranting of a deranged person, but of someone who is perceived as speaking in an irrational manner. Such a person is not removed as one who gone berserk, but is simply treated as someone who is not speaking rationally.

The statement that Rhoda made was considered to be foolish and without foundation. It was perceived as unreasonable, and outside the boundary of rationality. Perhaps you have encountered people who felt that is the way you spoke when you delivered some word of truth that was precious to you.

SHE CONSTANTLY AFFIRMED

“But she constantly affirmed that it was even so.” Other versions read, “kept insisting,” NKJV “confidently affirmed,” ASV “said with decision,” BBE “insisting that it was true,” CSB “maintained,” “affirmed it constantly,” GENEVA “maintained that it was a fact,” MRD “strenuously maintained,” WEYMOUTH and “confidently insisted.” MONTGOMERY

Rhoda is not discouraged when her testimony is thrust aside as though it could not possibly be true. This, of course, is an aspect of knowing something is true: you cannot be dissuaded from it! This young lady not only kept affirming, or restating what she knew to be true, but did so with confidence. The words “constantly affirmed” are translated from the single Greek word διισχυρίζομαι. The lexical meaning of this word is, “to affirm stoutly, to assert confidently,” THAYER “insist, assert, firmly maintain,” FRIBERG “state something with firmness and certainty,” LOUW-NIDA and “to affirm confidently.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

There was no doubt in Rhoda’s mind about Peter being at the door of the gate. She knew this was the case, and kept on stating the fact – affirming that what she knew for sure was the truth, for she had recognized Peter’s voice.

In my own view, this kind of testimony is sorely needed in our day. A lot of what is being said these days has an unsure sound to it. The tone of assurance is often absent, and confidence is not apparent. This is largely owing to the propensity of men to settle for, what might be called, second hand human knowledge.

While there is measured value in benefitting from the valid knowledge of others, in matters pertaining to life and godliness, a more immediate knowledge is required. This is acquired when a person is able to recognize the truth, like Rhoda was able to recognize the voice of Peter. Jesus referred to this kind of knowledge as His people knowing His voice (John 10:4,27). Those possessing such wonderful knowledge will not easily be turned from the way of truth, nor will their testimony be subdued without great difficulty.

IT IS HIS ANGEL

“Then said they, It is his angel.” Other versions read, “It must be his angel,” NIV “Perhaps it is his ghost,” MRD “It is his messenger,” YLT “It must be his angel. [They must have killed him.],” LIVING “ and "It is his guardian angel." WEYMOUTH

The word used here is not the word for spirit or ghost , but the word for messenger: “ his angel” (~O a;ggelo,j). To my knowledge, there are very few exceptions to this word referring to the holy angels, who are “ministering spirits” (Heb 1:13-14). It is used in reference to the spies entertained by Rahab (James 25). The messengers of the seven churches of Asia are also referred to as “angels” (Rev 1:20; 2:1,8,12,18; 3:1,7,14). There are also the “angels” who are aligned with the devil (Psa 78:49; Matt 25:41; 2 Cor 12:7; 2 Pet 2:4; Rev 12:7,9).

The text strongly suggests that they thought this was a heavenly messenger who had been assigned to Peter – like the angel Michael was assigned to Israel (Dan 12:2). In a statement that has long intrigued thoughtful believers Jesus said, “Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven” (Mat 18:10).

Whatever vagueness may be associated with this text, We do know that an angel was sent to release Peter, so it should not be difficult to conceive of such a being as “his angel.” Of course, during the earlier days of the church, it appears believers found less difficulty in acknowledging the reality of the angelic hosts, and of their operations among the sons of men.

Although we are given little information concerning this statement, it appears the disciples concluded that Peter had been killed like James, and his angel had come to inform them of the event, or the things related to it.

PETER CONTINUES KNOCKING

“ 16 But Peter continued knocking: and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished. 17a But he, beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. . .”

Here we have an excellent example of perseverance under seemingly discouraging circumstances. This is a very practical example of the spiritual posture that refuses to give up.

PETER CONTINUED KNOCKING

“But Peter continued knocking.. .” Other versions read, “kept on knocking,” NIV “Peter, meanwhile, was still knocking,” NJB and “went on knocking,” WEYMOUTH

What a marvelous example of persistence! Rhoda kept on affirming, and Peter kept on knocking. Rhoda saw the need for her word to be received, and Peter saw the need to bear witness of his deliverance.

I suppose it would have been theoretically possible for Rhoda to stop affirming, and Peter to cease knocking. However, they did not, because of the realities they had embraced. Rhoda knew Peter was really at the door, and Peter knew he had really been delivered.

It is good to take Peter's conduct as a pattern, so to speak, for our own. When we are knocking at the gate of heaven, seeking for the Divine door to be opened, let us see to it that we "continue knocking" when there seems to be a delay. Jesus said if we knock, the door will be opened (Matt 7:7-8). In another saying that addressed the same matter, Jesus spoke "to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint" (Lk 18:1). Again, Jesus said, "pray always" (Lk 21:36). Paul said the same thing when he wrote, "continuing instant in prayer" (Rom 12:12), "praying always with all prayer," (Eph 6:17), and "pray without ceasing" (1 Thess 5:17). In other words, keep knocking!

THEY OPENED THE DOOR AND SAW HIM

" . . . and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished."

It requires understanding to explain HOW the deliverance of the Lord was wrought. Here Peter is not referring to the mere sequence of events, but to the obvious working of the Lord.

The persistence of Rhoda and Peter paid off, just as Jesus said it would. The door was finally opened because Rhoda kept insisting, and Peter kept knocking. If either one would have ceased their activity, the door would not have been opened. If Rhoda had kept on telling them that Peter was at the door, yet when they went to it, there was no knocking, her word would not have been believed. However, two constant efforts by two different people were worked together for good. God employed their efforts to change the minds of the doubters.

When they saw Peter, they reacted differently than Rhoda when she heard his voice. She was glad, and they were astonished, or "amazed." NASB That is, the deliverance of Peter had not been the resolution they had expected. Although I acknowledge it to be an opinion, I do heartily agree with John Gill who was also persuaded the brethren were praying that Peter "might be strengthened and made steadfast, and kept faithful to the last; and bear, by his sufferings and death, a glorious and honorable testimony for Christ." That seems to me to be more in keeping with the manner in which those early brethren thought – more to the foundation of things rather than simply on the surface.

HOLD YOUR PEACE!

"But he, beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace . . ."

Evidently the disciples started speaking – perhaps in expressions of joy as well as astonishment – but it was not the time for them to speak. This was the time for Peter to speak. It was not the time for those who were "astonished," but for the one with understanding. This was the time to heed the admonition of James, which would be given many years later: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak" (James 1:19).

Therefore, Peter is now "motioning to them with his hand to keep quiet and listen." AMPLIFIED He will now explain to them why he is there, and how he came to realize freedom from the hand of Herod and the will of the people.

HE DECLARED UNTO THEM

" . . .declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison..." Other versions read, "described to them how," NASB "gave them an account of how," BBE "told them how," CJB "related to them how," DARBY "explained to them how," NAB and "told them by what means." PNT

It requires understanding to explain HOW the deliverance of the Lord was wrought. Here Peter is not referring to the mere sequence of events, but to the obvious working of the Lord. His chains fell off, he walked past the first and second wards, the gate opened of its own accord – and all of this was according to the direction and authority of an angel sent from heaven. Peter did not develop an escape strategy. The brethren had not mounted a rescue plan, storming the prison and saving Peter. This was the Lord's doing, and it was marvelous in the eyes of Peter and those who heard him (Psa 118:23). There is nothing about this deliverance that would lead anyone to question its Source.

Do not forget that young John Mark was probably there. This might have been his first exposure to a report of this sort. If this is true, what a pleasant experience for a young man to have – to hear someone rehearse “the righteous acts of the Lord” (Judges5:11). You may remember that Peter also “rehearsed” to the brethren in Jerusalem what God had done at the house of Cornelius (Acts 11:4). Later in this book, Paul and Barnabas “rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles” (Acts 14:27).

It is good to walk in the light as He is in the light in order that He might work in us that which is well pleasing in His sight I1 John 1:L7; Heb 13:20-21). Then, it is good to do like Peter, and faithfully rehearse what He has done.

SHOW THESE THINGS TO JAMES AND THE BRETHREN

“ 17b . . . And he said, Go show these things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place.”

Having delivered his report, Peter gives some instructions and moves on. He is a man in the center of the will of God, and is progressing in that will. Although imprisoned, and probably unrested, he is operating according to another agenda, and it is one that imparts strength and encouragement to those who operate within it.

SHOW THESE THINGS TO JAMES

“And he said, Go show these things unto James, and to the brethren.” Other versions read, “tell these things,” NKJV “Report these things,” NASB “Tell . . . about this,” NIV “Tell this,” NRSV “Give the news,” BBE “Tell all this,” WEYMOUTH and “Report all this.” AMPLIFIED

The Greek word that is translated “show,” or “tell,” NKJV is Vapaggei,late . This word means, “to bring tidings (from a person or thing), bring word, report,” THAYER “as carrying back word from a happening report,” FRIBERG “tell, inform; proclaim,” UBS and “to announce or inform, with possible focus upon the source of information.” LOUW-NIDA

Now, there are several things to note in this word by Peter. First, what is shown told, or reported, is something factual – something that actually did take place. They were not to tell what they thought about Peter's report, but to give the report itself – the facts in the case. Second, the idea of good news is inherent in the report they will give. Third, the report concerned what God had done, not merely what happened to Peter: “he declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of prison .” There is a difference in giving this kind of report. A carnal report of the deliverance could have been phrased something like this. “I finally managed to get to sleep, chained between two soldiers. I was most uncomfortable, and hoped the Lord would deliver me. Finally my time came, and the chains that were hurting my wrists finally fell off. It surely did feel good to be freed from those. I did manage to get past all of the guards. When I arrived at the gate, you will never believe what happened. There must have been a defect in the locking mechanism. At any rate, the gate swung open, and I got out of that doleful prison. I sure was lucky.” Does that sound foolish? I have heard many testimonies of improvement and advantage that sounded much like that! However, as used in our text, that is not a report, but an interpretation of what happened. To show something is to tell what actually happened. In this case, it was to associate the occurrence with the God who wrought it.

Tell It to James

It should be apparent that this is not the apostle James, for he had been martyred. This is the “James” who became prominent in the early church, being one of its pillars (Gal 2:9). This is the James who declared the conversion of the Gentiles to be the fulfillment of prophecy. He gave council at that time, with which the “apostles and elders” agreed (Acts 15:13-22). This is also the James to whom Paul “declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry” (Acts 21:19). Paul further defined him as, “James, the Lord’s brother” (Gal 1:19; Matt 13:55), and states that Jesus made a special appearance to him after his resurrection (1 Cor 15:7). This James also sent people forth to adjudicate certain Kingdom matters (Gal 2:12). We understand him to be the author of the book of James, noted for his activity among the Jews (James 1:1).

At this time, therefore, James had risen prominence within the church. This was not a self-imposed prominence, as was confirmed by Christ’s special appearance to him. Although, well into the time of Jesus’ ministry, he (along with his other brothers) did not believe on Jesus (John 7:5), he obtained like precious faith, and became a pillar in the house of God.

Peter recognized this and gave word to report what the Lord had done to James. He would know what to do with the report. It is also probable that “the brethren” refers to the rest of the apostles primarily, and to those who were prominent among the saints.

HE WENT TO ANOTHER PLACE

“And he departed, and went into another place.”

Having reported what had happened, Peter now leaves. There is work to be done, and perhaps others to whom he desired to give this report. We do not know where he went, only that it was “another place.” You may rest assured it was not a place of mere leisure, or a place where he could take a rest or enjoy a sabbatical of some sort. Some feel that he went to another house where other saints may have been assembled together. Wherever he went, I am sure it was a place where kindred spirits could be found, and the work of the Lord could be reported and enjoyed.

CONCLUSION

Once again, the hand of God has been seen in the affairs of His people. When people are walking in the light as He is in the light, living by faith, and walking in the Spirit, the Lord works in them both to do and to will of His own good pleasure. Such people become involved in the outworking of the good and acceptable and perfect will of God. Such people are the recipients of angelic ministry and deliverance, whether they are aware of it or not.

Throughout this book, there is a total, and very apparent, absence of the wisdom and strategies of men. God works independently of such things, having declared the wisdom of this world to be “foolishness” with Him (1 Cor 3:19). Wherever the Scriptures record progress in the Lord, whether personal or collective, the Lord Himself is active in the matter. In fact, He is the preeminent One in all such things. If that one lesson can be learned, it will have a calculated impact upon everything the people of God set out to do.

The Book of Acts

. Where this understanding is not present, we are shut up to scholasticism and conjecture, both of which are of the world, not of God.

THE INSOLENCES OF HEROD REWARDED

“ 12:18 Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, what was become of Peter. 19 And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they should be put to death. And he went down from Judaea to Caesarea, and there abode. 20 And Herod was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and, having made Blastus the king's chamberlain their friend, desired peace; because their country was nourished by the king's country. 21 And upon a set day Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them. 22 And the people gave a shout, saying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man. 23 And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost. 24 But the word of God grew and multiplied. 25 And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their ministry, and took with them John, whose surname was Mark. ” (Acts 12:18-25)

INTRODUCTION

The deliverance of Peter has taken place without any of the prison keepers knowing what had happened. It is not until morning that any apparent check is made, or any effort expended to account for Peter. There is a sense in which this is the way in which all who are of the world relate to the ways and works of God – they are unaware of them, like men who are sleeping in the night. Paul well wrote, “For they that sleep sleep in the night; and they that be drunken are drunken in the night” (1 Thess 5:7). This involves more than the time when there is no solar light. Sin causes men to become blind, so that everything around them is “night.” Even what they think they see does not appear to them as it really is. Men create their own form of artificial moral light that they imagine causes things to be seen more clearly. It may take the form of a system, or a philosophy, or a “science falsely so called” (1 Tim 6:20). They entertain erroneous ideas of men, thinking them to be a higher form of animal life rather than a reflection of Divine life. They may look at the world and everything in it as something that is evolving with neither management nor purpose. They may embrace the thought that only the worldly-fit survive, and those conceived by the world to be weak are destined to failure. But all of these are erroneous ideas that cannot emit light to the mind or hope to the heart. They are like Herod, his prison, and his prison keepers. They distort the vision of the people, bringing no clarity to life.

Everyone involved in the incarceration of Peter had complete trust in the system put in place by Herod. There was no thought of it being in any way deficient. The cell was secure. The restraining chains were in place. Peter had been placed between two guards. There were two other posts to guarantee no intruder could access the prisoner, and the prisoner himself could not escape. In addition, there was the large and formidable gate that isolated the prison complex from society. The security of the prisoner was unquestionably sure – at least that is what they thought.

However, their trust in the arm of the flesh will prove to be in vain. God has determined that those who trust in anything or anyone other than Himself WILL find that trust to be vain. “There is no king saved by the multitude of an host: a mighty man is not delivered by much strength. An horse is a vain thing for safety: neither shall he deliver any by his great strength” (Psa 33:16-17). “Lo, thou trustest in the staff of this broken reed, on Egypt; whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that trust in him” (Isa 36:6). Insightful souls have confessed, “vain is the help of man” (Psa 60:11; 108:12). Jeremiah affirmed, “Truly in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains” (Jer 3:23). This principle is true for all kinds of erroneous thought, whether it be humanly conceived religious systems, medical answers, political strategies, scientific discoveries, educational developments, or military strength. God will allow none of these things, or anything like them, to take His place!

On the other hand, Peter's trust in God will be fully justified. In him the saying will be fulfilled, "Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him" (Psa 2:12). And again, "O Thou that savest by Thy right hand them which put their trust in Thee from those that rise up against them" (Psa 17:7). And again, "Every word of God is pure: He is a shield unto them that put their trust in Him." (Prov 30:5).

It is one thing to have such affirmations in your creed. It is quite another to have them dwelling "richly" in your heart (Col 3:16). Part of ingesting the Word of God is appropriating these affirmations of absolute Divine superiority.

The apostles confirm that this is especially true of those who put their trust in Christ. After identifying Christ as the stumbling stone to which Isaiah referred, Paul wrote "As it is written, Behold, I lay in Sion a stumblingstone and rock of offence: and whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed" (Rom 9:33). Following his delineation of the role of the Gospel in our salvation he wrote, "For the scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed" (Rom 10:11). It is ever true, "But let all those that put their trust in Thee rejoice: let them ever shout for joy, because Thou defendest them : let them also that love Thy name be joyful in Thee" (Psa 5:11),

There is a sense in which this text provides a sterling commentary on the two types of people who dwell in the earth: those who by Jesus "believe in God" (1 Pet 1:21), and those who "trust in chariots" and "in horses" (Psa 20:7) – wheat and tares, the godly and the ungodly, those who are reconciled to God and those who are alienated from the life of God, those who love God, and those who love the world. These live for different reasons, and are anticipating significantly different things. The godly think differently, and approach life differently. It is because they "know the Lord," and have been persuaded that He is "above all" (Eph 1:21; 4:6,10), and "over all" (Rom 9:5; Rom 10:12; Eph 1:22).

It is one thing to have such affirmations in your creed. It is quite another to have them dwelling "richly" in your heart (Col 3:16). Part of ingesting the Word of God is appropriating these affirmations of absolute Divine superiority. Jesus Christ, for example, is the "only Potentate" (1 Tim 6:15). At the level at which He reigns, there are no competitors – not even Satan, who is "the god of this world" (2 Cor 4:4). WE may be in a competitive arena, but the Father and the Son are not! Since Jesus has been enthroned, there are no battles in heaven! Furthermore, orders that are issued from there cannot be effectively contravened on earth. If the Lord commands deliverance from heaven (Isa 44:4), it cannot be hindered, postponed, or nullified upon earth. If God sends a "strong delusion" (2 Thess 2:11), it will be effective with no possibility of being deterred.

The truth of this is being lived out in our text. Peter trusts in the Lord, and he is delivered. Herod trusts in flesh, and his mandate is overthrown. The prison keepers trusted in the strength of chains, the superiority of militia, and the restraining power of iron – but it was all in vain.

THE VANITY OF HUMAN SYSTEMS

One of the tragic consequences of relying upon systems that have been contrived by men is that it removes the necessity of trusting in the Lord. I am painfully aware that it is not religiously correct to say such things, but they must be said. As Paul well stated, there is a "show of wisdom" in the strategies of men (Col 2:19). It seems to me that the time has come to emphasize that what cannot reconcile us to God, by that very circumstance, has no power to recover us from sin in any sense, or restore to us an imagined control of our lives. Whatever cannot take away sin, cannot keep sin away. If it cannot cleanse the conscience in the first place, it cannot restore one. If it cannot deliver us the power of the devil, it cannot save us from any of the powers he controls. That seems very elementary to me, but it is becoming increasingly difficult to make this point in the modern church. Through demonic doctrines, Satan has brought many professing believers to adopt, what I will call, a YABUT theology. That is a view that, after hearing of a Sovereign God, a Savior who is King of kings, and a power that is exceeding, responds by saying "Yea, but . . ." Perhaps it is "But there is some good in what they say." Or, "But, they use Scripture in their plans." Or "But, there is nothing wrong with using a system that works.” Or, “But, they have done so much good.”

If men are to live in Divine favor, they must be brought to the point where what is said of the entire household of faith can be said of them: “For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh” (Phil 3:3). These are not goals, but are realities produced by salvation.

- “The circumcision.” Other versions read, “the true circumcision,” NASB “the real circumcision,” ESV and “true people of the circumcision.” NJB This refers to “the circumcision of Christ” (Col 2:11), in which the “body of the sins of the flesh” are cut away from our essential persons. That is, our basic propensity is now toward the Lord, and not our bodies and the nature associated with them.

“Worship God in the Spirit.” Our lives are now lived in service to God. We no longer live to please ourselves, but offer our bodies and lives to the Lord. This is done in the power of the Spirit, and is like the offering of life itself, as seen in the scapegoat and living bird that were not killed, yet were offered to the Lord (Lev 14:6-7, 51-53; 16:8,10,26).

- “Rejoice in Christ Jesus.” This is not something believers should do, but is the expression of their basic persons. Rejoicing in Jesus is the expression of their faith, and it is why they will not give their hearts to anything or anyone other than Him.

- “Have no confidence in the flesh.” Having been delivered from the dominion and contamination of “the flesh,” they have no intention of trusting it again. If it can be traced back to Adam, through which both sin and death entered into the world, they will not trust it – regardless of the form that it takes.

There is no possibility that someone lacking these things is a genuine Christian. It is possible for those who “are not far from the kingdom of God” (Mk 12:34) to aspire to have these qualities. However, they are not actually possessed until men are delivered from the power of darkness, and translated into the kingdom of God’s dear Son (Col 1:13). When this condition is realized, the same thing that put them into Christ causes them to be characterized as this text affirms. This is not descriptive of a category believers, but of the body of Christ itself. These realities account for the calm of Peter, and for his deliverance as well. The lack of these things account for the frustration of Herod’s purpose, and the obtuseness of the soldiers.

ONE MORE AFFIRMATION

It is necessary to once again affirm the spiritual realities that have been lived out in the deliverance of Peter. The individual who has been saved, or delivered from the guilt and power of sin by the Lord Jesus Christ, is free to cease serving sin. Any failure to follow through by yielding oneself to God, and ceasing to serve sin, is owing to unbelief, and unbelief alone. Further, that failure is to be treated as unbelief, and not as some innocent error, or lingering dominion of sin that was not addressed by “the Deliverer” (Rom 11:26). That would be tantamount to Peter being delivered from prison, yet retaining the chains that had confined him there.

There is to be no tolerance of any teacher or teaching that leads people to believe that the sin from which they have been freed maintains its power over them. Nor are those who have been delivered from the power of darkness to retain thoughts of helplessness, as though they were not really delivered by Jesus. Such views negate any claim to faith, misrepresent both God and Christ, and demean the salvation that is in Him with eternal glory. Further, they are the result of embracing a lie. The lie is that they are still under the dominion of something that has been forgiven. The acceptance of the lie forbids the person to reckon himself to be “dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord” (Rom 6:11) – a posture that is required by the Lord. Those who perpetrate doctrines that produce such effects are to be soundly rebuked, and their teaching treated with absolute and total disdain. Their error is the direct result of ignoring the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and it is corrupting.

THERE WAS NO SMALL STIR

“ 12:18 Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, what was become of Peter.”

A lot had happened during the night – things of which these people were totally unaware. Peter had been delivered. He had been with those who were praying at Mary’s house. He had reported the great deliverance that was wrought by God through a holy angel. A commission had even been delivered to report to James and the brethren the wonderful things that had happened. I can tell you that the things taking place in Mary’s home were quite different than the environment of which we will now read.

AS SOON AS IT WAS DAY

“ Now as soon as it was day . . . ”

This is how the flesh reacts to the working of the Lord. There are things with which the ungodly cannot contend – things that the devil, with all of his power, cannot reverse or modify. When any event or circumstance negates the power of the wicked one, it also voids every form of opposition and contradiction.

So far as Herod and his soldiers were concerned, the next significant event would occur in the morning. However, a great deliverance was wrought during the night. A similar deliverance took place when Israel walked out of Egypt during the night (Ex 11:4; 12:29-36), and when Paul and Silas were freed during the night (16:25-26). In all of these case, the words of young Elihu were fulfilled: “God . . . giveth songs in the night” (Job 35:10). David said the Lord’s “song” would be with him “in the night” (Psa 42:8). He also spoke of his “song in the night” (Psa 77:5). Sometimes that “song” is the result of the joyful recollection of Divine mercies and goodness in the past. It is also the result of deliverance that has been experienced during the night. If you have walked for any length of time with the Lord, you know what I am speaking about.

Now, a new day dawns, and Peter has already visited one location, and is in another, enjoying the freedom that only the Lord can create. But, alas, back at the prison, once occupied by Peter, all is not well. There is confusion among the hosts of the enemy! Those who are under the control of the wicked one are in a state of consternation.

WHAT WAS BECOME OF PETER

“ . . . there was no small stir among the soldiers, what was become of Peter.” Other versions read, “no small disturbance,” NASB “no small commotion,” NIV “were greatly troubled,” BBE “in an uproar,” GWN “a great dispute,” MRD “great consternation,” NET “no little ado,” PNT and “very upset.” IE

The word translated “stir” indicates a state of mind, and not a mere physical activity. The lexical meaning of the Greek word used here is “commotion, stir (of mind),” THAYER “mental agitation, extreme anxiety, confusion,” FRIBERG “serious disturbance, commotion, serious trouble,” LOUW-NIDA and “mental agitation, consternation.” GINGRICH

This is how the flesh reacts to the working of the Lord. There are things with which the ungodly cannot contend – things that the devil, with all of his power, cannot reverse or modify. When any event or circumstance negates the power of the wicked one, it also voids every form of opposition and contradiction. There are no adversarial human strategies that can be successful where Satan himself has been overthrown. Therefore, when confronted with the startling absence of Peter, there was not a thing that the soldiers or Herod could do. That circumstance is the cause for “no small stir among the soldiers.” It was their helpless state that dictated their response.

THE MANNER OF THE KINGDOM

There have been numerous times when the Lord outwardly frustrated the enemies of the Lord.

- The drowning of Pharaoh and his hosts (Ex 14:9-10,25,28).
- When Gideon and his men stood around the camp of the Midianites, the Lord “set every man’s sword against his brother” (Judges 7:22).
- The Lord turned the worldly-wise counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness (2 Sam 15:31).
- The angel of the Lord slew 185,000 Sennacherib’s army during the night (2 Kgs 19:35).
- During the days of Jehosaphat, when the Ammonite and Moabites stood up against them, God told them, “Ye shall not need to fight in this battle: set yourselves, and stand ye still, and see the salvation of the Lord.” The Lord then set abashments against these foes, and they helped to actually destroy one another (2 Chron 20:17-23).
- Through Isaiah, the Lord said He would set the Egyptians against the Egyptians, and cause the spirit of Egypt to fail (Isa 19:2-3).

This is not to mention the time the Jewish council incarcerated Peter and John, only to find them to disappear from jail, and were now preaching again in the Temple (Acts 5:19-25).

It is still true, “There is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the LORD” (Prov 21:30). And again, “There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the LORD, that shall stand” (Prov 19:21). Those who are engaged in the good and acceptable will of the Lord can say to their foes, “Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand: for God is with us” (Isa 8:10). Is it not written, “If God be for us, who can be against us?” (Rom 8:31).

These things are being lived out in our text: the foe is being frustrated, and the cause of the Lord is moving forward! Of course, when men adopt an agenda of their own, or fail to work in strict harmony with God’s revealed purpose, their efforts are all in vain.

THE REACTION OF HEROD

“ 19a And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they should be put to death.”

The time now comes for Herod to carry out his intentions: to bring Peter before the people and let them do with him what they desire, just as they did with Jesus, nearly one-and-a-half decades ago.

HEROD COULD NOT FIND HIM

“And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not . . .”

The thought had not entered Herod’s mind that he was inferior to Peter, and that his will was not even a consideration within the framework of the will of God. He is familiar with the Jews, but he does not have a particle of understanding concerning the God of the Jews. He thinks that he is in charge of the situation, and that the best thing for his popularity and personal gratification is to please the Jews. In his thinking, he had carried out his intentions against James, and will also do the same with Peter. This how the flesh thinks: it sees itself as thoroughly capable of doing what it wants to do.

Now, however, Herod comes up against something with which he cannot contend. He cannot even find Peter, much less carry out his intentions against him. He has soldiers and a militia at his command – but he still cannot find Peter. There were no doubt some who are quite willing to work with him to find Peter, but he still could not find him. I do not doubt that he consulted with certain Jewish leaders, like one of his predecessors did when the Christ was born (Matt 2:4).

When the text says Herod “sought for” Peter, it reflects a certain focus and intensity. There was nothing casual or indifferent about his quest. The Greek word translated “sought for,” is evpizhth,saj , and it means. “Seek diligently,” THAYER “as making an effort to get what one wants demand, strive for, require,” FRIBERG and “to try to learn the location of something by searching for it (presumably somewhat more emphatic or goal-directed than 'to try to learn where something is,,” LOUW-NIDA

We must learn from this the effectiveness of Divine hiding! When the Head of the church moves someone to a place of safety, there is no way that the enemies of the hidden one can find him! With all of their wisdom and resources, they cannot touch the one who is under Divine protection. It is said of whoever is born of God, “that wicked one toucheth him not” (1 John 5:18). If the leader of the wicked ones cannot touch such a one, you may be sure that no one in his charge can do so!

It is not without cause that David prayed, “Keep me as the apple of the eye, hide me under the shadow of thy wings” (Psa 17:8). Again, “ Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked; from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity” (Psa 64:2). And again, “Deliver me, O LORD, from mine enemies: I flee unto thee to hide me ” (Psa 143:9). Having experienced this benefit, David testified concerning the means through which this hiding is accomplished. “For in the time of trouble He shall hide me in His pavilion: in the secret of His tabernacle shall He hide me ; He shall set me up upon a rock” (Psa 27:5). Behold how David besought the Lord with understanding: “Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me: for my soul trusteth in Thee: yea, in the shadow of Thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast” (Psa 57:1).

The real safety is found in one’s identity and fellowship with the Lord. It is there, in the “heavenly places,” that Satan and his foes have no access! Examples of safety being lived out, as in our text, include the following.

- The infant Moses was hidden from the eyes and intentions of Pharaoh for three months (Ex 2:2).
- Two spies from Israel were hid by Rahab in the city of Jericho (Josh 2:4,6).
- Obadiah hid “an hundred prophets” from rampaging Jezebel (1 Kgs 18:4).
- Young Josiah was hidden for six years from the wrath of Athalia, who killed the king’s sons (2 Kgs 11:2-3).

All of God’s deliverance are this way. When the truth of them is known, they defy carnal explanation. Yet, even though the world cannot comprehend them, they are thoroughly effective, and their results cannot be denied, even though they defy explanation.

The point here is that, for those living unto the Lord, when their activity for the Lord is threatened by inimical forces, “The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations” (2 Pet 2:9). That is another one of the marvelous benefits of loving the Lord with all of the heart, soul, mind, and strength, and doing whatever we do with all of our might, as unto Him (Mk 12:30; Eccl 9:10). Of course, for those who do not live in this manner, no such deliverance and protection is promised. While this may not be a popular view, it is a truthful one. God has made no commitments for good to those who ignore His Son and live only for themselves.

HE EXAMINED THE KEEPERS

“ . . . he examined the keepers. . .” Other versions read, “cross-examined,” NIV “questioning,” BBE “interrogated,” CSB “arraigned,” MRD “asked the guards many questions,” IE “sharply questions,” MONTGOMERY and “placed the guards on trial.” AMPLIFIED

This was no casual questioning, but a strong and unrelenting interrogation. The word used here means “to investigate, examine, inquire into, scrutinize, sift, question.” THAYER The picture is of an aggressive lawyer, questioning thoroughly, probing, and seeking for a satisfactory explanation.

However, Herod will not be able to obtain a rational answer from the guards, for they had no idea what had happened. A great deliverance was wrought right under their nose, and completely without any awareness of it on their part.

This is a demonstration of how the Lord counts the wisdom of the world foolishness. He uses their own craftiness to snare them. As it is written, “For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain” (1 Cor 3:19-20).

All of God’s deliverance are this way. When the truth of them is known, they defy carnal explanation. Yet, even though the world cannot comprehend them, they are thoroughly effective, and their results cannot be denied, even though they defy explanation.

The soldiers did not see anything or hear anything. Peter’s chains fell off, and they did not see or hear them fall. Peter walked right past them, yet they were oblivious to that fact. The large iron gate swung open, and they neither saw it nor heard it. And now, under the strenuous examination of a despot, they had to admit all of this was true. Oh, it is true indeed, “the way of the transgressor is hard.”

HE COMMANDED THAT THEY SHOULD BE PUT TO DEATH

“ . . . and commanded that they should be put to death.” Other versions read, “Ordered that they be led away to execution,” NASB “ordered that they be executed,” NIV “commanded them to be led to be punished,” GENEVA “led away to punishment,” YLT “court-martialed and sentenced to death,” LIVING and “gave the order that the guards be killed.” IE

Some versions read “punished,” rather than “executed,” “killed,” or “put to death.” This is based on the general definition of the Greek used here (avpacqh/nai): “to lead away.” However, as used here, even the linguists conclude it means “Used of a way leading to a certain end.” THAYER “put to death,” UBS and “execute.” LOUW-NIDA Herod had already examined and tried the men. They were not led away to be tried in a court, but for the sentence to be carried out – in this case, death.

The Manner of Historical Rulers

It was the manner of historical rulers to put to death those who did not carry out their duty, or were in some other way found to be unacceptable.

- Abimelech charged all his people to “put to death” anyone who touched Isaac or his wife (Gen 26:11).
- Nebuchadnezzar decreed anyone speaking against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego be cut in pieces (Dan 3:22).
- Darius commanded that the men who accused Daniel be thrown into the lion’s den, from which Daniel had been delivered (Dan 6:24).

Behold again that “the way of the transgressor is hard.” That is, it is hedged with thorns and disadvantages.

Flesh Is Obstinate

When it comes to the flesh, it is obstinate and obtuse. It cannot learn anything from the workings of the Lord, for “the carnal mind is enmity against God” (Rom 8:7). The unspiritual, or “natural ” mind does not reason with God as its locus. It rather reasons as though “There is no God” (Psa 53:1). It does not assign causes to God Almighty, but is blind to His workings, and steeled against the messages they deliver. This is the manner of the flesh. It will move those who beheld Jesus “approved of God” among them by “miracles and signs and wonders,” and imagine that they can break loose from His binding influence by killing Him (Acts 2:22-23; Psa 2:2-3).

Thus Herod cannot even think with Divine working in mind. His mind is nailed to the earth, like everyone who is alienated from the life of God.

And what can be said of those who, in the name of Jesus, cater to the flesh, shaping their speech so as not to offend those who prefer and love the world? What can actually be gained by such an approach? Will compromise cause the truth to be more appealing to such people? Will the Holy Spirit, who uses the Word of God as His sword, be more inclined to use the approaches and routines of men to reach the hearts of those who are on the broad road that leads to destruction? The answer ought to be obvious, but in today’s church culture this is not well known. This is largely owing to the intrusion of false teachers.

Trust In God

When you experience difficulty in the world, or stand in need of some kind of deliverance, consider the God who works in this manner. Ponder how He knows how to deliver the godly out of temptation (2 Pet 2:9). Meditate on the fact that His eyes are always “upon the righteous, and His ears are open to their cries” (Psa 34:15; 1 Pet 3:12). Seek for grace for yourself to be described as “Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you” (1 Pet 5:7). Your faith will confirm the truth of these things.

A SLICE OF HERODIAN LIFE

“ 19b And he went down from Judaea to Caesarea, and there abode. 20 And Herod was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and, having made Blastus the king's chamberlain their friend, desired peace; because their country was nourished by the king's country.”

The text takes a sudden shift, reporting that Herod goes to another location for a while. All of this is done in order to confirm that he had not passed from under the scrutinizing eye of the Almighty God. We will now be briefly exposed to a slice of Herodian life.

HE ABODE IN CAESAREA – WHERE PETER HAD BEEN

“And he went down from Judaea to Caesarea, and there abode.”

Down from Judaea

Remember, Caesarea was actually north of Jerusalem. However this is not a directional statement, but one of perspective. It is the manner of historical accounts to reckon Jerusalem (which was in Judaea) as the center of Divine attention. It was located in a high region, so that wherever you went from there was actually a descent: “As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the LORD is round about his people from henceforth even for ever” (Psa 125:2).

- “ Go up to Jerusalem” (1 Kgs 12:28; 2 Kgs 12:17; 16:5; 2 Chron 2:16; Ezra 1:3; 7:13; Matt 20:17,18; Mk 10:32,33; Lk 2:42; 18:31; 19:28; John 2:13; 5:1; 11:55; Acts 11:2; 15:2; 21:4, 12,15; 24:11; 25:9; Gal 1:17-18).

- “Down from Jerusalem” (Mk 3:22; Lk 10:30' Acts 8:26; 25:7).

Additionally, the Lord's house, which was in Jerusalem, was on a mountain. This was reckoned as the place where blessing and spiritual renewal would take place.

The text takes a sudden shift, reporting that Herod goes to another location for a while. All of this is done in order to confirm that he had not passed from under the scrutinizing eye of the Almighty God.

- “And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob ; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem” (Isa 2:3).

- “O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain ; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!” (Isa 40:9).

- “And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the LORD out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the LORD” (Isa 66:20).

- “O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from Thy city Jerusalem, Thy holy mountain : because for our sins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and Thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us” (Dan 9:16).

- “So shall ye know that I am the LORD your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain : then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more” (Joel 3:17).

- “And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD , and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem” (Micah 4:2).

- “Thus saith the LORD; I am returned unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: and Jerusalem shall be called a city of truth; and the mountain of the LORD of hosts the holy mountain ” (Zech 8:3).

A Point to Be Made

The geographical location and prominence of Judea and Jerusalem are a living figure of the nature of the Kingdom of God. The things that are immediately associated with the Living God are the highest and most relevant matters. The place of Divine fellowship is the preeminent place, and fellowship with God is the loftiest involvement. Anything and everything that have to do with other things is lesser, secondary, and subordinate.

Herod Goes down to Caesarea

At this point, and according to Scripture, we have no idea of the time frame in which Herod went down to Caesarea – precisely when he went to Caesarea, or how longed he stayed. “This journey of Herod is related by Josephus (Antiq., book 19, chapter 8, section 2). He says that it was after he had reigned over all Judea for three years.” ALBERT BARNES

You might recall that Peter had returned from this region some time earlier, after preaching and spending time with Cornelius (Acts 10:1,24; 11:11).

HIGHLY DISPLEASED WITH THEM OF TYRE AND SIDON

“20 And Herod was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon . . .” Other versions read, “very angry,” NKJV “had been quarreling,” NIV “was in bitter hostility,” DARBY “having an angry quarrel,” NET “on bad terms,” NJB “Had incurred Herod’s violent displeasure,” WEYMOUTH “cherished a bitter grudge,” WILLIAMS “violently displeased,” MONTGOMERY and “cherished bitter animosity and hostility.” AMPLIFIED

The word from which “highly displeased” is translated is very strong. It does not describe a passing emotion, but reflects aggressive and harmful intention. This is the only place the word is used in Scripture. As used here “It means to meditate war; to purpose war in the mind.” ALBERT BARNES As used by the Greeks, it meant “to carry on war with great animosity . . . to be very angry, be exasperated,” THAYER “to be extremely angry, with the implication of violence,” LOUW-NIDA and “to fight desperately.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

The cause for Herod’s displeasure with Tyre and Sidon is not known, either from Scripture or from history. We do know that these cities were under Roman rule, but had been permitted some measure of liberty. There is no proof that they had been insubordinate to Rome. Some have conjectured the controversy was over the matter of commerce – perhaps having to do with taxation. However, all of this is nothing more than conjecture. In some way they had agitated this proud king, incurring his indignation. It appears as though he went to the region to settle their differences by diplomatic means rather than subduing them by war.

Why Do We Have This Record?

To some, this record appears to be a meaningless bit of trivia thrown in by Luke. However, I cannot believe this is the case. Such a procedure is by no means the manner of those who are writing under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

It seems to me that we are being further acquainted with the nature of Herod – a man driven by pride, and a quest for popularity. In him we will see the Scripture fulfilled: “Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall” (Prov 16:18). This text is often quoted as saying pride goes “before a fall.” However, this is not correct. It goes “before destruction.” That is, God will not overlook the surfacing of this trait. Solomon said that of the seven things the Lord hated, “a proud look” was number one (Prov 6:16).

Jesus declared that pride issues forth “out of the heart of man,” and brings defilement with it (Mk 7:21-23). Paul reminded Timothy that pride causes self-exaltation which, in turn, leads to falling into “the condemnation of the devil” (1 Tim 3:5). This is one of the three things that are “in the world,” all of which are evidences of a love for the world. John tells us of the one possessing such things, “the love of the Father is not in him” (1 John 2:15-17).

Both Peter and James declare that God “resisteth the proud,” contrasting them with “the humble,” to whom He gives grace (1 Pet 5:5; James 4:6). In Mary’s prayer of magnification, she stated that God “hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts” (Lk 1:51). That is, He has not allowed their corrupt causes to be brought to fulfillment.

As confirmed in “Herod the king,” pride moves a person to have an inordinate view of himself. In such a case, “I” is at the center of one’s life, and God Himself is moved, at the very best, to the periphery of life. By its very nature, pride has to do with this world, and one’s status in it. It is an evidence of being attached to the world, for it is one third of “all that is in the world” (1 John 2:15).

Because God “knoweth the proud afar off” (Psa 138:6), they are fundamentally ignorant of God and His ways. This is compared with the Lord’s inclination toward the lowly, or those who have forfeited personal interests in favor of knowing God. The Spirit is very definitive on this matter, particularly when dealing with teachers who do not consent to sound doctrine, choosing to perpetrate spiritual confusion and error. Here is what He says of such spiritual rogues. “If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself” (1 Tim 6:3-5). It is the pride of such an individual that has hid the truth from him.

I say these things, because those who have a compelling love for the truth, and a corresponding disdain for doctrinal error are often charged with being haughty. However, it is the religious leader who is oblivious of truth and addicted to error that is the haughty one. His failure to apprehend the truth is confirmation of that condition.

I say these things, because those who have a compelling love for the truth, and a corresponding disdain for doctrinal error are often charged with being haughty. However, it is the religious leader who is oblivious of truth and addicted to error that is the haughty one. His failure to apprehend the truth is confirmation of that condition. If he were humble, God would draw nigh to him and open the truth to his heart. Pride raises an impenetrable wall between men and God, so that the truth can neither be seen nor known.

The Case of Herod

The case of Herod will confirm to our hearts the aggressiveness with which the Lord treats the proud. He was not a Jew, nor was he a religious leader. Yet, he provides us with an example of the Lord’s posture against the proud. His role as king confirmed that he was directly responsible to God, for “there is no power but of God” (Rom 13:1). Let us behold the account of Herod with godly discretion, for in it we are being exposed to Divine manners.

THEY DESIRED PEACE

“ . . . but they came with one accord to him, and, having made Blastus the king's chamberlain their friend, desired peace . . . ” Other versions refer to Blastus as “the king’s personal aide,” NKJV “a trusted personal servant,” NIV “The controller of the king’s house,” BBE “the king’s chief personal servant,” CJB “in charge of the king’s bedroom,” CSB “the king’s personal assistant,” NET “over the bed-chambers of the king,” YLT “the royal secretary,” LIVING and “his treasurer.” WEYMOUTH

Representatives from Tyre and Sidon came in a state of unity and accord, seeking to negotiate peace with Herod. They knew that an angry Herod would work to their decided disadvantage. Further, they did not approach him directly, but sought to gain access to him through their personal friend, Blastus, who, in his regular duties, was close to Herod. Behold how wise they were in their approach, driven a desire for peace.

Exactly what is a “chamberlain?” Judging from the various versions of Scripture, quite an array of possibilities are open to us: personal aide, personal servant, controller, in charge of the king’s bedroom, personal assistant, and royal secretary, and treasurer. The Greek word from which this word is translated is koitw/noj. This word does mean “the officer who is over the bed-chamber, the chamberlain.” THAYER The word is used elsewhere of one with decidedly more control – such as Erasmus, a saint who was “the chamberlain of the city” of Rome (Rom 16:28). The point here seems to be that Blastus was in charge of the personal affairs of king Herod, which would have included his bedchamber. Apparently the people came to him because he had the ear of Herod without being in the area of competition or kingly duties. It was certainly a shrewd action on the part of the people.

Sensing the gravity of their situation, they ignored protocol, and sought a more direct access to the king, in order to present their cause.

THEY WERE NOURISHED BY THE KING'S COUNTRY

“ . . . because their country was nourished by the king's country.” Other versions read, “supplied with food from the king’s country,” NKJV “fed by the king’s country,” NASB “depended on the king’s country for their food,” NRSV “depended on the king's lands for their food supply,” CJB “the supplies of their country were derived from the kingdom of Herod,” MRD “their cities were economically dependent upon trade with Herod's country,” LIVING and “They were forced to do this because their country's food supply was dependent on the king's dominions.” PHILLIPS

The reason for their quest for peace is now stated more precisely. They were not seeking peace for themselves alone, but for their country. Furthermore, they were not simply trying to avoid a military skirmish with Herod, although, if his anger continued, such a confrontation would no doubt have occurred. The reason for their mission of peace was that their country depended on Herod’s domain for food. The government of Rome, being universal in extent, oversaw the distribution of food and other necessities. No province could function in a strictly independent manner.

The “King’s Country”

The kingdom of Herod was Palestine, the land of the Jews, and it was rich with supplies. This is the very land described as “the sanctuary” (Ex 15:17), “the land of Israel” (1 Sam 13:19), “the land of the Hebrews” (Gen 40:15), “the land of the Jews” (Acts 10:39), “the holy land” (Zech 2:12), “the Lord’s land” (Hos 9:3), and the land belonging to “Immanuel” (Isa 8:8). God referred to it as “ My land” (2 Chron 7:20; Isa 14:25; Jer 2:7; Ezek 36:5; Joel 1:6), and the prophets referred to it as “ His land” (Deut 32:43; Psa 10:10; Ezek 36:20; Joel 2:18; Zech 9:16). But now, Tyre and Sidon refer to the same real estate as “the king’s land” –and the king to which they referred was Herod! Oh, what a penalty there is for defection from the Lord!

When described through Moses, the Lord said this land was “a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills; a land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig trees, and pomegranates; a land of oil olive, and honey; a land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack any thing in it; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass ” (Deut 8:7-9). Moses further said of the land, “But the land, whither ye go to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven: a land which the LORD thy God careth for: the eyes of the LORD thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year” (Deut 11:11-12).

But now, alas, this rich and fertile land was being governed by Herod, not the Jews. The governing kingdom was Rome, not the Israelites. The rich resources that were intended for Israel were now out from under their control, and were being distributed at the whim of a political despot. He was managing what God had given to His people, and was doing so because the land had been filled with moral and spiritual darkness (Matt 4:16). The people who were living in it had killed the prince of life, martyred Stephen, and vigorously opposed the spreading of the Gospel.

Tyre and Sidon stood in sharp contrast with “the land of the Jews.” They were seaports, and were thus cities of commerce. However, located in a rocky area, they could not produce food. Their did business with the goods of others, but actually produced nothing of substance themselves.

Now, when Tyre and Sidon need food, they do not come to an Israelite king, as they did in the time of Solomon. During Solomon’s reign he struck a trade agreement with the area from which these messengers of peace were sent, exchanging wheat from Israel for choice timber from Sidon (1 Kgs 5:7-14). Ezekiel referred to these trade agreements, made by Judah with surrounding lands (Ezek

A Spiritual Parallel

These two cities have a remarkable resemblance to spiritual Babylon. In a description of this monstrosity, John is shown the allegiance that it has to the world. She is seen as an entity with no resources herself. She only did business with what was supplied by the merchants of the world. It was revealed to John that when Babylon falls, it will cause great lament among the world's merchants, because she is like a great seaport through which the world peddles its goods. Having rejected the Lord's Christ, and disdained His great salvation, this whorish city is a trading point for the things of this world.

In picturesque language, the world is depicted as mourning her demise within but an hour of time. How grievously they cry out. "And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more : The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, and cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men. And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all" (Rev 18:11-14).

Thus the worldly church is seen as being in league with the world, like Tyre and Sidon was with Herod and Rome. If you were to remove from the Christian world all worldly professionalism and business pursuits, the impact would be staggering. It would have a direct bearing upon education, entertainment, real estate, engineering, architecture, financial institutions, clothing distributors, electronic media, the music world, book publishers and distributors, dietary businesses, jewelry stores, the counseling world, and a host of other things. There are also a significant number of worldly organizations that market in "the souls of men," capitalizing on the constituency of the Christian world.

All of these circumstances belie any claim to identity with God through Christ Jesus. All of them are a source of shame and an evidence of unbelief.

A MARVELOUS TYPE OF THE LOGIC OF PEACE WITH GOD

In this text we have a remarkable parallel to certain spiritual realities. First, in Christ Jesus we are in a situation similar to that of Tyre and Sidon. Our lives are also being "nourished by the King's country." Instead of being supplied by a worldly king, these supplies are administered by the Lord Jesus Christ through the Holy Spirit. God has deposited "all spiritual blessings" in "heavenly places," which parallel "the Lord's land," and they are accessed through Jesus Christ (Eph 1:3).

All of the "treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hid in Him" (Col 2:3). Furthermore, "all things that pertain to life and godliness" are provided to us "through the knowledge of Him" who has "called us" – and that circumstance requires peace between those receiving the supplies, and the One distributing them (2 Pet 1:3). Grace, mercy, and peace – so essential for the maintenance of the life that is in Christ Jesus, come "from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord" (1 Tim 1:2; 2 Tim 1:2; Tit 1:4; 2 John 1:3). "Love with faith" come "from God" (Eph 6:23). "Every "good gift and perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from God" (James 1:17). Truly, in every sense of the word, the people of God are "nourished by the King's country."

This insidiously suggests that a person can be at peace with God, yet conduct their lives at a distance from the Lord. It suggests that the issue is really not alienation from God, or incurring the displeasure of the Lord, but just correcting a few unpleasant habits.

It is precisely for this reason that there must be “peace with God.” This peace, however requires an Intermediary – Jesus Christ, who was, in a sense, prefigured in Blastus. What is more, just as in the case of Tyre and Sidon, the peace must be maintained. Our spiritual citizenry must be maintained within the boundaries of Divine acceptance. This involves abiding in Christ (John 15:7), continuing in His Word (John 8:31), and what we have heard remaining in us (1 John 2:24). It requires walking as dear children (Eph 5:1), seeking the things that are above (Col 3:1-2), and working out our own salvation with fear and trembling (Phil 2:12).

There is also the matter of not provoking the Lord (1 Cor 10:22), giving no place to the devil (Eph 4:27), and not allowing the entrance of “an evil heart of unbelief” (Heb 3:12).

Many professing believers are conducting their lives just like those of Tyre and Sodom – they are provoking and displeasing the Lord who purchased them, and from whom all of their nourishment is obtained. Jesus can be “displeased” with His disciples (Mk 10:14). The church is solemnly reminded that God Almighty is said to have been “not pleased” with “many” of the very ones He delivered and maintained. Consequently, they were “overthrown” en route to the promised land (1 Cor 10:5). Believers are also reminded that God, “having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not” (Jude 1:5). Those in Christ are also reminded that there were those who came out of Egypt, received the promise of their own land, yet “could not enter in because of unbelief.” Then saints are admonished, “Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it” (Heb 3:19-4:1).

The Modern Day Dilemma

There is a certain dilemma that exists in the modern church. Countless numbers of people have fallen into a state that is even worse than that of Tyre and Sidon. They did know the source of their supplies and the need for peace between them and the king of that supplying country. However, this morsel of knowledge has been taken from the people by a host of professing teachers. Their attention has been turned to their “habits,” as though they were not personally responsible for their condition. They are being provided with recovery programs, and methodologies designed to help them get a handle on their lives again. It all sounds innocent, and even proper – at least to the naive and uninformed. They are taught to say they are followers of Jesus, and that they are saved – however, their lives are out of control. This insidiously suggests that a person can be at peace with God, yet conduct their lives at a distance from the Lord. It suggests that the issue is really not alienation from God, or incurring the displeasure of the Lord, but just correcting a few unpleasant habits.

As a result of this delusion, the people engage in a quest that is wholly centered in this world. A satisfying and productive life in this world captures the attention, and the world to come is conveniently forgotten. Death, the coming of the Lord, the passing of the heavens and the earth, and the day of judgment are placed on the shelf of neglect, and it is imagined that everything will be all right if life here and now can be supposedly controlled .

In order to sanctify this approach, God is acknowledge as having the power to help the people change their lives. However, the corruption of the heart is not acknowledged, nor is unbelief admitted. The whole approach fails to acknowledge that a person cannot walk in the light and stumble (John 11:9). It will not admit that one cannot walk in the Spirit and fulfill the lusts of the flesh (Gal 5:16). It ignores the fact that if the provided graces are added in their faith, they will “never fall” (2 Pet 1:10).

A “faithful” God has “called” us “into the fellowship of His Son, Jesus Christ our Lord” (1 Cor 1:9). That fellowship is remarkably expansive, including “fellowship with the Father” (1 John 1:3), and the “fellowship of the Spirit” (Phil 2:1). Any postulate that suggests that a fellowship of that magnitude in any way allows for sin, betrays an ignorance of God, a lack of acquaintance with Jesus, and no familiarity with the Holy Spirit of God.

When the King of glory has a matter against a person, reconciliation is the principle thing to be addressed. That is precisely why Paul fairly shouted out to the wayward Corinthians, “Be ye reconciled to God” (2 Cor 5:20). This is also involved in going on to perfection, refusing to remain in an spiritually infantile state (Heb 6:1-6).

Is This Being Too Critical?

Is this approach really too critical, as some have alleged? Well, one might ask the citizens of Tyre and Sidon how critical it was to seek peace between themselves and Herod, who was “highly displeased with them.”

God has gone to a great extent to save us. Our salvation involved the slaughter of innocent babies as well as the birth of a Savior, “which is Christ the Lord” (Matt 2:16; Lk 2:11). It required making Jesus “to be sin for us,” as well as being with Him during His earthly ministry (2 Cor 5:21; Acts 10:38). It necessitated the cursing of Jesus, as well as Him being “approved . . . by miracles and wonders and signs” (Gal 3:13; Acts 2:22). It was imperative that God “deliver” Jesus up to death “for us all,” “for our offenses,” as well as raising Him up for our justification (Rom 4:25; 8:32).

Is there really any person of sound mind who imagines that such a God is ever indifferent to sin? Is it possible that He can never be displeased with sin in you, when He was so displeased when that sin was laid upon Christ – which caused Him to turn His face from His own Son? Is that really possible? And, what should we say of those who so represent the God of heaven, whether by outright statement, or by insinuation? Shall we ignore the influence they exert, and the confusion they cause within the body of Christ? Who is willing to step forward and defend such misrepresentations of God? – particularly since He has revealed so much about Himself, and provided such staggering details concerning the great salvation that is realized in His Son.

I acknowledge that the matter of peace with God does not appear to be a weighty subject in our time. In preference for a self-centered life, it is something that has nearly been removed from human thinking.

It is a shame and a disgrace when, as Jesus put it, “the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light” (Luke 16:8). What will be said on the day of judgment to those who were less zealous to obtain and maintain peace with God, than those of Tyre and Sidon were to be at peace with wicked Herod?

I acknowledge that the matter of peace with God does not appear to be a weighty subject in our time. In preference for a self-centered life, it is something that has nearly been removed from human thinking. However, it is everything in the matter of salvation. Further, it is not something to be taken for granted. After all, the God who saves is also the One who keeps (Jude 1:24-25). The One who lifted us up is also the One who causes us to stand. The One who rescued us also leads us.

IT IS THE VOICE OF A GOD, AND NOT OF A MAN

“ 21 And upon a set day Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them. 22 And the people gave a shout, saying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man.”

The scene now shifts, but refers to the time during which Herod was in Caesarea. The fact that this occurred in Caesarea accounts for the brief record of the citizens of that area engaging in an initiative to gain peaceful associations with Herod. The Jewish historian Josephus provides some details of this account, which are given in the box titled “JOSEPHUS’ ACCOUNT OF HEROD.”

In this account, we must see that God is dealing with the proud. It also confirms that God holds all people responsible for what they do – whether that have a formal association with Him or not. Some have conjectured that if men are not in covenant with God, the laws of God do not apply to them. I was personally subjected to this teaching during my formal religious education. However, there is no truth to it – not so much as a particle. There have been numerous people, cities, and even nations, who were judged by God, even though they had no covenant with Him.

- The world of Noah’s day (Gen 6:3-7).
- The people in the plain of Shinar, who conspired to build a city and a tower (Gen 11:1-8).
- Sodom, Gomorrah, and the cities of the plain (Gen 18:20-21,24-25).
- Abimelech, a Philistine king (Gen 20:3).
- The city of Nineveh (Jonah 1:2).
- Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 4:30-33).
- Belshazzar (Dan 5:22–30).
- Babylon (Jer 25:12).
- Tyre and Sidon (Isa 12:1-2).
- The nations who possessed Canan before Israel (Deut 9:4-5).
- The entire world (Isa 13:11).
- The inhabitants of the earth (Isa 26:21).

Those who imagine that civil authorities are not directly responsible to God do well to take note of this text. Also, it is a sign of unspeakable rebellion and ignorance when any nation opposes the laws of God, or imagines that they are separate from the state. There are too many records in Scripture that contradict that notion, to justify it ever being spoken or entertained. God is depicted as being “terrible to the kings of the earth” (Psa 76:12). The idea is that He is to be feared. Such a thought would be pointless if they were not responsible to Him. With great solemnity, “the kings of the earth,” together with “all people; princes, and all judges of the earth: both young men, and maidens; old men, and children,” are admonished to “praise the Lord from the earth” (Psa 148:7-12). No person is exempted from this responsibility.

We will now read the account of a king who refused to do this, and of the response of heaven to his conduct.

WHEN HEROD WAS ARRAYED IN ROYAL APPAREL

“And upon a set day Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne . . .”

Other versions read, “took his seat upon the rostrum,” NASB “on the platform,” RSV “in his place,” BBE “on the elevated seat of honor,” DARBY “in the judgment seat,” DOUAY “on a tribunal,” MRD “the royal seat,” ISV and “on the public throne.” PHILLIPS

The subject of this oration is not provided – either by Luke or Josephus the historian. Although it was obviously a moving oration, it was driven by ignoble motives, and therefore will therefore immediately gain the attention of heaven.

The idea here is not that this was Herod’s official and kingly throne. Rather, this was a place reserved for dignitaries that came to Caesarea. It could also have been a portable apparatus appropriate for the occasion. At any rate, it solemnized the affair during which Herod would speak in the capacity of a king. The word from which “throne” is translated suggests an elevated area from which all of the people could be seen and addressed – like a stage.

We have such a custom in our country as well. When the president speaks in an official capacity, he is provided with a special platform and speaking stand. The official presidential seal is also displayed to confirm that he is speaking in an official capacity, and not merely providing some personal opinions of this or that.

Herod is, therefore, going to speak as the king – the one responsible for supplying this area with their needs. It is probably true, as some have surmised, that this occasion was largely owing to the quest of those from Tyre and Sidon, who were seeking peace with Herod.

HE MADE AN ORATION TO THEM

“ . . . and made an oration unto them . . . ” Other versions read, “gave an oration to them,” NKJV “delivering an address to them,” NASB “delivered a public address to the people,” NIV “made a public statement to them,” BBE “made a speech to them,” CJB “addressed them publicly,” NAB “and was haranguing them,” WEYMOUTH “made them a popular address,” WILLIAMS and “began to harangue them.” MONTGOMERY

Some versions use the word “harangue.” This English word has the meaning “Address forcefully.” The first meaning of the English word is, “a speech addressed to a public assembly.” The second meaning is “a ranting speech of writing.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER The meaning of the Greek word used here is, “to harangue the people; to address a public assembly, make a speech to the people,” THAYER and “to speak in a somewhat formal setting and probably implying a more formal use of language - 'to address, to make a speech.’” LOUW-NIDA

The subject of this oration is not provided – either by Luke or Josephus the historian. Although it was obviously a moving oration, it was driven by ignoble motives, and therefore will therefore immediately gain the attention of heaven.

THE PEOPLE GAVE HIM UNDUE VENERATION

“ . . . And the people gave a shout . . . ” Other versions read, “the people kept shouting,” NKJV “kept crying out,” NASB “with loud cries,” BBE “made acclamation,” DOUAY “started shouting,” GWN “acclaimed him,” NJB and “At its conclusion the people gave him a great ovation.” LIVING

The Living Bible presents the shouting of the people as taking place at the conclusion of Herod’s oration. I am not sure this is what took place. First, the word used here is in the imperfect active voice, which means it was repetitive shouting: i.e. “kept on shouting.” It is as though this was taking place as Herod was speaking, constituting an opportunity for him to stop them from speaking as they did. The text does not confirm whether Herod worked the people into a frenzy by his oratory, or if this was the people heaping praise upon him in order to obtain his favor. It was probably a mixture of both.

IT IS THE VOICE OF A GOD

“ . . . saying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man. ” Other versions read, “A god's voice and not a man,” DARBY “The voice of God, and not of man,” GENEVA “These are the utterances of a God, and not of a mortal,” MRD “It is a god speaking, not a man!” NJB and “This is a god speaking, not a mere man!” PHILLIPS

Some have conjectured that this was nothing more than an appeal the pride of Herod. However, the outcome of the whole event does not lend itself to such a conclusion. Others have suggested this was an example of emperor worship, which was common in Rome. Herod, however, was not an emperor, but was himself a subject of the emperor. It seems more likely to me that the people, inordinately impressed by the oratory of Herod, thought that a god was speaking through him – or that one had come down to them in the form of Herod . A similar conclusion was made concerning Paul and Barnabas when they preached in Lystra. Witnessing the healing of a man who had been crippled from his mother’s womb, the people cried out, “The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men!” They called Barnabas Jupiter, otherwise known to the Greeks as as Zeus NKJV , and Paul Mercurius, known to the Greeks as Hermes, NKJV who was the messenger of Zeus, and duly represented, they thought, by Paul, “because he was the chief speaker” (Acts 14:11-12). Paul and Barnabas immediately tore their clothes and ran through the people rejecting such honor, for they were “men of like passions” as those who were setting out to worship them. Even with their zealous effort, “they could scarcely restrain the multitudes from sacrificing to them” (14:14-18).

This, in my judgment, is what is being reported in the text. The people felt that they were being addressed by one of the gods. Considering what follows, I do not see how this text can be considered in any other way.

A Principle to Be Seen

This is not the first or last time that a word has been delivered to the sons of men that was not from God, yet was regarded as coming from Him. It is one thing for something like this to occur in a political arena, or among heathen peoples. It is quite another for it to be found among those who profess to know God, or be followers of Christ.

Under the Law, God warned the people about prophets who “presumed to speak a word” in his name. Of such a person He said, “that prophet shall die” (Deut 18:20). Jeremiah spoke of such prophets in these words: “Then the LORD said unto me, The prophets prophesy lies in my name: I sent them not, neither have I commanded them , neither spake unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart. Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name, and I sent them not , yet they say, Sword and famine shall not be in this land; By sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed” (Jer 14:14-15).

In a telling word concerning the seriousness of misrepresenting the Lord, He spoke again through Jeremiah. “Behold, I am against them that prophesy false dreams , saith the LORD, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies , and by their lightness ; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them : therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the LORD. And when this people, or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, What is the burden of the LORD? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden? I will even forsake you, saith the LORD. And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the LORD, I will even punish that man and his house ” (Jer 23:32-34).

Notice the pointedness of the Lord’s denunciation of false prophets.

- They prophesied false dreams – dreams that did not have their origin in God.
- They caused the people to err by their lies.
- They caused the people to err by their “lightness,” or “reckless boasting.” NASB
- They misrepresented “the burden of the Lord,” or the preeminent message that was to be spoken at that time.

This involves more than testing whether men are speaking according to the Word of God – although that is imperative. It also involves identifying “the burden of the Lord,” or the word that God wants delivered at this time – i.e. the emphasis or thrust of what is to be said.

In our time, there are all manner of supposed Divine priorities being placed before the people. Some are saying that this is the time for the nation to repent. Others are saying this is the time for men to take charge of their households. Still others are saying this is the time God is going to pour out His Spirit on all flesh. There are some who say this is the time for the churches to unite, and stand together. Still others say God is calling for a godly man to be our president, while others are urging a lukewarm and carnal church to go into all the world and preach the Gospel.

It is the business of those who are in Christ to “try the spirits, whether they are of God, because many false prophets are gone out into the world” (1 John 4:1). This involves more than testing whether men are speaking according to the Word of God – although that is imperative. It also involves identifying “the burden of the Lord,” or the word that God wants delivered at this time – i.e. the emphasis or thrust of what is to be said. If you wonder how serious God is about this, He said through Jeremiah, “But since ye say, The burden of the LORD; therefore thus saith the LORD; Because ye say this word, The burden of the LORD, and I have sent unto you, saying, Ye shall not say, The burden of the LORD ; Therefore, behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of My presence : and I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten” (Jer 23:38-40).

All of this provides a kind of explanation for the presence of this record of Herod’s speech. When, in the minds of the people, an individual is linked in any way with Deity, we have a serious circumstance on our hands. If the person is properly representing God, His Word, and His priorities, all is well. However, if that is not the case, judgment is just around the corner.

Being Unable to Distinguish God’s Word

It is important for people to comprehend when a word is from God and when it is not. This is especially critical in our day, when all kinds of media are placing religious ideas before the people. There are men who are promoting programs within the church of God that are, to say the least, unsubstantiated. Some of them purport to bring people closer to God, promote growth in Christ, and provide a way to gain the dominance over sin. Such claims are most serious, because those are matters in which Deity is revealed to be active. Some, reacting much like those who heard the oratory of Herod, are saying: “This is a word from God.” Or, “This is God’s answer to my problem!”

There is something that is common in all of such messages and programs. Christ is not the prominent person in them. Rather the people themselves are the centerpiece, and their welfare is the main thing. But in the Divine economy, the Son of God is the fundamental Person, and the glory of God is the primary objective.

There is something that is common in all of such messages and programs. Christ is not the prominent person in them. Rather the people themselves are the centerpiece, and their welfare is the main thing. But in the Divine economy, the Son of God is the fundamental Person, and the glory of God is the primary objective.

Another common thread in these programs is the minuscule role that is given to faith – the means by which justification and triumph are realized (Rom5 :1; 1 John 5:4-5). Add to that the near-total absence of “the knowledge of God,” through which we are provided with everything having to do with life and godliness (2 Pet 1:3), and by which we escape the pollution of the world (2 Pet 2:20). Messages and programs that lack these things cannot possibly be from God, and it is certain they cannot accomplish what He requires.

Crediting to God What Came from Man

How serious is it when something that originated with men is credited to God? What of those who speak of spiritual advantages and benefits that have the well of human nature as their source? How does heaven react to such circumstances? How serious is the Lord about glory being given to Him, and to Him alone? And, does it really make any difference to Him if men give Him glory for something that He did not do or say? Does God allow opinions in these things?

Our text will provide some insight into the matter. It will confirm that “The eyes of the LORD are in every place, beholding the evil and the good” (Prov 15:3), and that “the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins” (Psa 7:9). No person can afford to ignore this circumstance.

HEAVEN RESPONDS IMMEDIATELY

“ 23 And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost.”

So far as the record is concerned, Herod has made no claim to being the oracle of God. While he was arrayed in gorgeous garments, he had made no claim to himself being God, or any form of Deity. The people, however, have repeatedly shouted, “It is the voice of a god, and not of a man!” The verb tense of the word translated “gave a shout” means they “kept shouting,” NKJV or “kept crying out.” NASB Whether during his oration or after it, there was ample time allotted to Herod to refuse to be seen in this manner. However, being filled with pride, he received the accolades of the people. He chose not to respond like Paul and Barnabas did later, refusing to be recognized in such a manner.

IMMEDIATELY

“And immediately . . .” Other versions read , “straight away,” BBE “At once,” NAB “at that moment,” NJB “Instantly,” NLT and “presently.” NLT

The word “immediately” is translated from the Greek word paracrh/ma , which has the following lexical meaning: “immediately, forthwith, instantly,” THAYER “immediately, at once, without delay,” FRIBERG “suddenly, at once, immediately' (in a number of contexts there is the implication of unexpectedness),” LOUW-NIDA and “on the spot, forthwith, straightway.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

Some of the places where this word is used are listed below. I have highlighted the word translated from this particular Greek word.

- THE CURSING OF THE FIG TREE. “And when he saw a fig tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig tree withered away” (Matt 21:19).

- ZECHARIAS’ SPEECH RESTORED . “And his mouth was opened immediately , and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God” (Luke 1:64).

- HEALING OF PETER’S MOTHBER-IN-LAW. “And he stood over her, and rebuked the fever; and it left her: and immediately she arose and ministered unto them” (Luke 4:39).

- “ . . . I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy couch, and go into thine house. And immediately he rose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, glorifying God” (Luke 5:24-25).

- “And a woman having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of any, Came behind Him, and touched the border of His garment: and immediately her issue of blood stanchd” (Luke 8:43-44).

- “And he put them all out, and took her by the hand, and called, saying, Maid, arise. And her spirit came again, and she arose straightway : and he commanded to give her meat ” (Luke 8:55).

- “And He laid His hands on her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God” (Luke 13:13).
- “And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew” (Luke 22:60).
- “And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up: and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength” (Acts 3:7).
- “Then fell she down straightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghost: and the young men came in, and found her dead, and, carrying her forth, buried her by her husband” (Acts 5:10).
- “And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized” (Acts 9:18).
- “And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand” (Acts 13:11).
- “And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed” (Acts 16:26).

There are seventeen places where this word is used in the New Covenant Scriptures (Matt 21:19; Lk 1:64; 4:39; 5:25; 8:44,47,55; 13:13; 18:43; 19:11; 22:60; Acts 3:7; 5:10; 9:18; 12:23; 13:11; 16:26). In each of them, the occurrence described was initiated from heaven. Sometimes it was a blessing, and sometimes it was a judgment. However, it was caused by God, and took place upon earth without any form of effective opposition.

Keep in mind that Divine determinations are made in heaven, then executed on earth. Heavenly messengers pass through the domain of the “prince of the power of the air” en route to earth – and they now encounter no detaining power. Further, when that will is fulfilled on earth, there are times when it is completely independent of earthly circumstance and the human will – as in this text.

The absolute superiority of angels over men is confirmed in this passage. The angel of the Lord will act immediately, and in strict keeping with both the nature and will of the Lord. He is executing what the Lord has determined, and is not functioning on his own. Further, his action will provide confirmation of the manner in which God views men heaping praise upon men, and those upon whom the praise is heaped receiving it. It is imperative that we take due note of these things, for God is still beholding the sons of men and what they do. He is still beholding and trying “the children of men” (Psa 11:4).

THE ANGEL OF THE LORD RESPONDS

“ . . . the angel of the Lord smote him . . .” Other versions read, “struck him,” NKJV “sent a disease on him,” BBE “struck him down,” CJB “killed,” GWN “struck Herod with a sickness,” NLT “caused him to become sick,” IE and “smote him and cut him down.” AMPLIFIED

The root meaning of the word translated “smote” is “to beat.” As used here, the word means “to afflict; to visit with evils, etc.: as with a deadly disease,” THAYER “to strike down,” FRIBERG “to strike a heavy blow, implying severe damage,” LOUW-NIDA “a deadly blow,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “strike down, slay.” GINGRICH

This is a most sobering text to consider! It provides insight into the Person of God that is not often expounded. Some are even foolish enough to affirm that no disease or calamity actually comes from God – but here is a case where it did! The blow delivered by the angel was a mortal one, resulting in the death of Herod. There was no battle, simply the execution of the will of God without any kind of hindrance or delay.

This is not the first person whom God slew because of their sin. Let me name a few of them to remind us that it truly is “a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God” (Heb 10:31).

- All men, with the exception of in Noah and his family (Gen 7:21).
- The citizens of Sodom, Gomorrah, and the cities of the plain (Gen 19:24-25).
- The Lord slew Er, Judah’s firstborn son, because he was “wicked in the sight of the Lord” (Gen 38:7).
- Onan, for not raising up seed to his brother (Gen 38:9-10).
- All of the firstborn sons in Egypt (Ex 13:15).
- The entire Egyptian army and their horses who pursued Israel (Ex 14:24-28).
- Nadab and Abihu for offering strange fire to the Lord (Lev 10:1-2).
- “Much people” died of snake bites because they murmured (Num 21:6).
- 603,550 Israelite men for not believing they could take the promised land (Ex 38:26; Num 26:55; Deut 2:16-17).
- 14,700 who died of a plague because of the rebellion of Korah (Num 16:49).
- 24,000 who died of a plague because of mingling and committing fornication with the Moabites (Num 25:9).
- 250 men who died during Korah’s rebellion, the earth opening up and swallowing them (Num 26:10).
- Uzzah, for touching the ark of the covenant (2 Sam 6:6-7).
- 70,000 who died in a pestilence sent by the Lord because His anger was kindled against Israel (2 Sam 24:1,15).
- An angel killed 185,000 soldiers of Sennacherib’s Assyrian army (2 Kgs 19:35).
- Ananias and Sapphira for lying to the Holy Spirit (Acts 5:2-10).

These are only deaths that were accomplished by the Lord, without human instrumentality. Admittedly, they are quite challenging to consider.

Now, in our text, the angel of the Lord smites Herod with a lethal blow, and his life is brought to a conclusion. This whole matter is confusing to the flesh. Herod kills James, yet he himself remains alive. He arrests Peter, and determines to do away with him as well – yet, he is not smitten by the Lord. Now, when he is not engaged in an initiative against the church as a whole, or any particular believer, he is struck down while giving an oration amidst the praises of the people.

Whatever may be said of the reign of Herod, he, like all kings, obtained his power from God. It is God who sets up kings, and it is God who deposes them. As it is written, “And He changeth the times and the seasons: He removeth kings, and setteth up kings” (Dan 2:21).

Heaping Up Wrath

There is such a thing as storing up Divine wrath. Paul wrote that hardness of heart, and a lack of repentance, tends to store up wrath to be unleashed in a single outpouring: “But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God” (Rom 2:5). As sin continues, wrath is accumulating. That is another reason why there is such a thing as “ greater damnation” (Matt 23:14). That involves not only the nature of the sin, but its outworking tendency, as evidenced by the scribes and Pharisees robbing widows houses and being pretentious in their prayers. Both of those were ongoing activities.

To “give God the glory” is to perceive Him as the Source, and give Him all the honor, and all the credit. It is to ascribe excellence, preeminence, dignity, and grace to Him. It is to recognize what He has done, and laud Him for it. The one who gives God the glory has recognized Him as the supreme ruler who possesses all power.

BECAUSE HE GAVE NOT GOD THE GLORY

“ . . . because he gave not God the glory . . .” Other versions read, “did not give praise to God,” NIV “he did not give the glory to God,” CJB “had not given the honor to God,” DOUAY “did not ascribe the honor to God,” NAB “because he accepted the people's worship instead of giving the glory to God,” NLT “he did not give God the glory (the preeminence and kingly majesty that belong to Him as the supreme Ruler),” AMPLIFIED and “because he took the honor that belonged to God.” CEV

To “give God the glory” is to perceive Him as the Source, and give Him all the honor, and all the credit. It is to ascribe excellence, preeminence, dignity, and grace to Him. It is to recognize what He has done, and laud Him for it. The one who gives God the glory has recognized Him as the supreme ruler who possesses all power. Jesus taught us to do this in our prayers: “For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen” (Matt 6:13). In a stirring Psalm David wrote, “Give unto the LORD, O ye mighty, give unto the LORD glory and strength. Give unto the LORD the glory due unto his name; worship the LORD in the beauty of holiness” (Psa 29:1-2). And again, “Give unto the LORD, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the LORD glory and strength. Give unto the LORD the glory due unto his name: bring an offering, and come into his courts” (Psa 96:8).

With a note of urgency Jeremiah told the people, “Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud: for the LORD hath spoken. Give glory to the LORD your God, before He cause darkness , and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and, while ye look for light, He turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness” (Jer 13:15-16). Whatever your view of the patience and longsuffering of God may be, you must take words like this into account. Do not imagine for a moment that God is indifferent to the failure of men to give Him glory – even when they are heathens!

The Sin of Nebuchadnezzar

This was the sin that caused Nebuchadnezzar to enter into a seven year period of life that has no historic parallel. It was a period of time in which he lost his sanity, and roamed in the open field with the beasts of the earth, eating grass. In a single hour “he was driven from men, and did eat grass as oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hairs were grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like birds' claws ” (Dan 4:33). At the conclusion of that seven year period, Nebuchadnezzar said, “And at the end of the days I Nebuchadnezzar lifted up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine understanding returned unto me, and I blessed the most High, and I praised and honored Him that liveth for ever, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and His kingdom is from generation to generation: And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and He doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth : and none can stay His hand, or say unto Him, What doest thou? At the same time my reason returned unto me; and for the glory of my kingdom, mine honor and brightness returned unto me; and my counselors and my lords sought unto me; and I was established in my kingdom, and excellent majesty was added unto me. Now I Nebuchadnezzar praise and extol and honor the King of heaven, all whose works are truth, and His ways judgment: and those that walk in pride He is able to abase ” (Dan 4:34-37).

Whether it sounds religiously correct or not, these are all things that can only be wrought by God through faith. It is as wrong to credit them to a plan as it was for Nebuchadnezzar to refer to Babylon as something he had built, or for Herod to accept the praise of those who said when they heard him speak, they had heard the voice of a god.

The thing that brought Nebuchadnezzar down was his assessment of the city in which he ruled his kingdom: “Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?” (Dan 4:30) It was “While the word was in the king's mouth,” that “there fell a voice from heaven, saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken; The kingdom is departed from thee. And they shall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field: they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and seven times shall pass over thee, until thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will” (Dan 4:31-32).

Not Far Removed From Our Time

This kind of failure to give God glory is not far removed from our time. When, for example, some improvement in life has been experienced, there has been a phenomenal increase of giving praise to methodologies rather than to God. Let me give you some quotations from a contemporary plan that has become quite popular. In order not to detract from the gravity of the claims, I am withholding the name of the plan. At the latest count, it has been adopted by over 15,000 churches, and is a plan developed for Christians.

- “We open the door to recovery by sharing our experience, strength, and hope with one another. This leads us to a great capacity for accepting God’s grace and movement in our lives as we are working through issues that have robbed us of all hope for a better future.”

- “The recovery process enables us to move toward greater freedom from addictive, compulsive, and dysfunctional behaviors. The freedom creates a peace, serenity, joy, and most importantly a stronger relationship with God and others .”

- “The purpose of . . . is to fellowship and celebrate God’s healing power in our lives through the ‘8 Recovery Principles . This experience allows us to ‘ be changed .’ By working and applying these Biblical principles, we begin to grow spiritually As we progress through the program we discover our personal, loving, and forgiving High Power – Jesus Christ , the one and only true High Power.”

There is a sterling example of giving glory for spiritual improvement to something other than God Himself. If it is really true that “of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things” (Rom 11:36), then it cannot be right, in any sense of the word, to ascribe to a humanly-devised system or plan such things as the following:

- Opening of “the door to recovery”
- A “greater capacity to receive grace”
- The creation of “peace” and “joy”
- A “stronger relationship with God”
- “God’s healing power”
- Being “changed.”
- “Growing spiritually”
- “discovering . . . Jesus Christ.”

Whether it sounds religiously correct or not, these are all things that can only be wrought by God through faith. It is as wrong to credit them to a plan as it was for Nebuchadnezzar to refer to Babylon as something he had built, or for Herod to accept the praise of those who said when they heard him speak, they had heard the voice of a god.

God Does Not Always Judge Immediately

Although God is always monitoring the affairs, words, and reactions of men, His judgments are not always immediate. For the sensitive of heart, this is indicative of “the longsuffering of God,” which is actually a “space to repent” (Rev 2:21) – a token of His goodness that leads to repentance (Rom 2:4).

However, it is said of those who yield to the cries of the flesh, “Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil” (Eccl 8:11). For them, the absence of judgment is an indication of Divine tolerance – and that is a most critical error in assessment.

Cases like that of Herod and others have been written up to assist us to think more soundly concerning God’s attitude toward sin, the failure to obey Him, and the absence of giving Him glory. This is the real God of whom we are reading, and it is “the angel of the Lord” who is executing His judgment.

Sinners who are judged immediately are not to be considered the worst of sinners. They are examples, to be sure, but the discretionary judgment that was poured out upon them by no means indicated the approval of other sinners. Jesus pointed this out in two of His salient sayings.

- The first was occasioned by a report of a malicious deed of Pilate . “There were present at that season some that told him of the Galilaeans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices. And Jesus answering said unto them, Suppose ye that these Galilaeans were sinners above all the Galilaeans, because they suffered such things? I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish” (Luke 13:1-3).

- The second was his extended answer to the very same report. “Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish” (Luke 13:4-5).

The very same principle is related in Paul’s reference to the Israelites who fell in the wilderness. “Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; And did all eat the same spiritual meat; And did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ. but with many of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown in the wilderness. now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted. Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them; as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand. Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents. Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer. now all these things happened unto them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come” (1 Cor 10:1-11).

A point is made of all of the people participating in a genuine deliverance and very real sustenance.

- All were under the cloud of protection.
- All passed through the sea.
- All were baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea.

- All ate the same spiritual meat.
- All drank the same spiritual drink.

However, with many of them, God was not well pleased. This was because of what they did.

- They lusted after evil things.
- Some of them were idolaters.
- They sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to “play,” or “indulge in pagan revelry.”

NIV

- They committed fornication.

As a result of God’s displeasure in those who sinned:

- They were overthrown in the wilderness.
- They were destroyed by serpents.
- They were destroyed of the destroyer.
- Three thousand were slain in one day.

Certain observations are made of this remarkably detailed record.

- These things are our examples.
- They are written that we “should not lust after evil things.”
- They are written that we should not be “idolaters.”
- They are written that we should not “commit fornication.”
- They are written that we should not “tempt Christ.
- They are written that we should not “murmur.”
- These things “happened to them as our examples.” NKJV
- They have been written “for our admonition.”

We Are Not the Standard of Evaluation

We are not to evaluate God’s response to sin by the way He has responded to our own conduct. We are rather to learn from the accounts of His reaction to sin that are recorded in the Scriptures. That is one of the grand functions of the historical records of Divine judgments.

The record of Herod’s death manifests how God regards those who are filled with pride, which is evidenced by failing to give God glory.

HE WAS EATEN OF WORMS

“ . . . and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost.”

JOSEPHUS’ ACCOUNT OF HEROD

“Herod, having reigned three years over ALL Judea, (he had reigned over the tetrarchy of his brother Philip four years before this,) went down to Caesarea, and there exhibited shows and games in honor of Claudius, and made vows for his health. On the second day of these shows, he put on a garment made wholly of silver, and of a contexture most truly wonderful, and came into the theater early in the morning; at which time the silver of his garment, being illuminated by the first reflection of the sun’s rays, shone out after a surprising manner, and was so resplendent as to spread a horror over those who looked intently upon him; and presently his flatterers cried out, one from one place, and another from another, 'He is a god:' and they added, 'Be thou merciful to us, for although we have hitherto revered thee only as a man, yet shall we henceforth own thee as superior to mortal nature.' Nor did the king rebuke them, nor reject their impious flattery. But, looking up, he saw an owl on a certain rope over his head, and immediately conceived that this bird was to him a messenger of ill tidings; and he fell into the deepest sorrow; a severe pain also arose in his bowels, and he died after five days' severe illness."

This is the sum of the account given by Josephus, Ant. lib. xix. cap. 8, sect. 2.

Other versions read, "his flesh was wasted away by worms, and he came to his end" BBE "He was eaten away by worms and died," CJB " became infected with worms and died," CSB "he was eaten by worms and breathed his last," ESV "was eaten by maggots, and he died," GWN "he was consumed with worms and died," NLT "having been eaten of worms, he expired," YLT "was filled with maggots and died," LIVING "He was soon eaten by worms inside him, and he died," IE and "And in fearful agony he died." PHILLIPS

As I have already mentioned, angels have often been dispatched to cause death among the sons of men (2 Sam 24:16; 1 Chron 21:12,15,20,27; 2 Chron 32:21). Well ought we to thank God that these powerful and superior servants of the Lord have also been sent forth "to minister for them who shall be the heirs of salvation" (Heb 1:14). In this case, the angel caused a grievous internal disease through which Herod was eaten by worms. The very occurrence is most offensive to the mind, and some cannot conceive of God doing such a thing – but He did! This is the God to whom we have been reconciled "by the death of His Son " (Rom 5:10). How will those who imagine God is kindly disposed toward everyone account for this harsh and painful death of Herod? Will they ascribe it to Satan, when God has said it was executed by "the angel of the Lord," who only does the will of God?

As I have suggested, the worms were evidently within Herod, not worms that covered his outward frame. Also, apparently Herod did not die instantly from this mortal blow – although the blow itself was instant. Josephus says he died "after five days." So far as being a historian is concerned, there is no reason to doubt what he has said. He also wrote of this occasion that Herod "did neither rebuke them [the people] nor reject their impious flattery. A severe pain arose in his belly, and began in a most violent manner. And when he was quite worn out by the pain in his belly for five days, he departed this life, in the 54th year of his age, and the 7th year of his reign." Once again we see that "the way of transgressors is hard" (Prov 13:15).

BUT – THE WORD OF GOD GREW AND MULTIPLIED

" 24 But the word of God grew and multiplied."

As with all inspired narration, activities are set within the context of the outworking of Divine purpose. That is the heart and core of Scripture – what the Lord is doing! Here, the Lord simply removes an obstacle after it has been duly confirmed that Herod was a wicked man. Like Pharaoh, he was "endured with much longsuffering," even though he as a "vessel of wrath, fitted for destruction" (Rom 9:22).

It is the Divine manner to bring our attention back to primary things. This text is an example of that characteristic.

BUT

"But . . ." Other versions read, "Then," CSB "and," GENEVA and "Meanwhile" NLT Though small, this is a significant word, being translated from the Greek word de. From the standpoint of language, this is a disjunctive – a word that stands between two contrasting statements. The lexical meaning of the word is “by way of opposition and distinction; it is added to statements opposed to a preceding statement . . . it opposes persons to persons or things previously mentioned or thought of - either with strong emphasis.” THAYER

Here we have a vivid picture of the Lord governing His Kingdom, for “For the kingdom is the LORD'S: and He is the governor among the nations” (Psa 22:28). In our text, on the one hand, He removes Herod because he did not give God the glory – and that is why men are here. On the other hand, the advancement of God’s cause will be realized. It will not be hindered by enemies or by circumstance. In all of this God is showing that there is a level of His will that cannot be contravened. Nothing can deter it that will, alter it, or make it null and void. Some confirmations of this include the following:

- The flood.
- The development of Abraham’s seed.
- The deliverance of Israel from Egypt.
- The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.
- The birth of Jesus.
- The death of Jesus.
- The bruising of Satan’s head.
- The resurrection of Jesus.
- The ascension of Jesus.
- The enthronement of Jesus.
- The pouring out of the Holy Spirit.
- The destruction of Jerusalem.
- The appointment of death.
- The second coming of Christ.
- The glorification of those who are in Christ.
- The day of judgment.

These are matters in which there can be no alteration, negation, or effective negotiation. It is because they all have to do with the carrying out of a Divine initiative. Neither the will of man nor his natural aptitude play any role in these things.

THE WORD GREW

“ . . . the word of God grew . . .” Other versions read, “continued to grow,” NASB “continued to increase,” NIV “continued to advance,” RSV “went on increasing,” BBE “went on growing,” CJB “flourished,” CSB “was proclaimed,” MRD “kept on increasing,” NET “continued to spread,” NLT “was spreading rapidly,” LIVING “prospered,” WEYMOUTH and “continued to gain ground.” PHILLIPS

What does it mean for the Word of God to grow, increase, or advance? As used here, the word “grow” means “to cause to grow, to augment . . . to cause to grow, to augment” THAYER “become more important,” UBS “the message (about the good news) kept spreading and growing stronger.” LOUW-NIDA

When the Word of God grows, people become more aware of what God has said about a matter. They become more conscious about the Lord Jesus. A proper conception of sin is entertained, and there is a prevailing interest in reconciliation to God and the obtaining of an eternal inheritance.

Later, after a great awakening in Ephesus, it is written “So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed” (Acts 19:20). This describes a circumstance in which the Word of God is more and more received, and opposing thoughts are thrown down to the ground. The Word becomes more dominant in the thinking of the people, and is dwelling richly in their hearts (Col 3:16). It is more prominent in speaking, and there is more of an appetite for it. When the Word of God “grows,” there is a more thorough declaration of what God has revealed. The “whole counsel of God” is made known. In such a circumstance, competing bodies of knowledge become less popular, and the Word of God is preferred.

In Ephesus, when the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified, “many that believed came, and confessed, and showed their deeds. Many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver” (Acts 19:19). It is after that, that the text affirms, “So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed.”

In our society, if the Word of God was suddenly to “grow,” there would probably be a similar book burning. There would be an abandonment of writings and other forms of expression that are the fruit of man’s wisdom, and attention would be given the more to what God has declared. That is the kind of thing that happens when the Word of God grows. Today, there is a phenomenal amount of purported Christian activity that has little or nothing to do with the Word of God. These days there are other books – other religious books – that are more popular than the Word of God. By more popular, I mean they are read more, quoted more, and talked about more. There are other words that are growing – other messages, and other proclamations. I have heard many sermons that had made very few references to the Word of God, and some that have contained none at all. In such a case, the Word of God is not growing. The people are not being brought to think about what God has revealed, what He has spoken, and the things He has accented.

When the Word of God grows, people become more aware of what God has said about a matter. They become more conscious about the Lord Jesus. A proper conception of sin is entertained, and there is a prevailing interest in reconciliation to God and the obtaining of an eternal inheritance. All of this, and more, was taking place in our text.

The Time When Truth Fails

God described a time that existed in Isaiah’s day. It is worthy of note because it parallels the circumstances of our time. “And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey: and the LORD saw it, and it displeased him that there was no judgment” (Isa 59:14-15). It is not that truth itself lost any of its properties. It was rather than the religious leaders let it go in preference of other words. It did not fall in the street because it was weak, but it was no longer embraced. Truth did not fail because it became feeble, but because it was not proclaimed, and therefore could not do its work. This is the opposite of the Word growing.

Paul described this kind of situation more clearly. Here is what he said of such a time. “For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables” (2 Tim 4:3-4). In such a circumstance, a person becomes an enemy because he tells the truth (Gal 4:16). That kind of response is antithetical to Word of God growing.

Jesus spoke to people who did not believe Him because He told them the truth (John 8:45). If He had told them what the scribes had said, He would have been readily received. If He had quoted the traditions of the elders, those very people would have followed Him zealously. When people become prominent, there is a corresponding cessation of the growth of the Word.

THE WORD MULTIPLIED

“But the word of God . . . multiplied.” Other versions read, “spread,” NIV “gain adherents,” NRSV “spread itself,” DARBY “win many followers,” GWN “there were many new believers,” NLT “influencing more and more people. The group of believers became larger and larger,” IE “converts were multiplied,” WEYMOUTH and “increase its influence.” PHILLIPS

The Word of God is described as “quick and powerful,” or “living and active,” NIV Also, although those who declare it may be bound, “the Word of God is not bound” (1 Tim 2:9). It works within those who embrace it, and does so effectively, causing the will of God to be lived out. Therefore it is written, “For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe ” (1 Thess 2:13).

When men receive the word of God, it is not like receiving a creed, or a historical statement, or a position. The Word of God causes things to take place in those who believe it. It “effectively works in you who believe.” NKJV This is of such a dynamic nature that when these believers are persecuted, and even scattered abroad, they go “everywhere preaching the Word” (Acts 8:4). That is an example of the Word of God multiplying. It spreads within believers and through them to others. In this way, it grows exponentially – not in its content, but in its effectiveness. When freely declared, it accomplishes the purpose for which God sent it (Isa 55:11).

Thus, from a very broad point of view, our text proclaims the twofold work of the Lord. 1) The saving and establishment of believers (1 Tim 1:15; 2 Tim 3:16-17), and 2) Making the enemies of His Son His footstool (2 Cor 15:27-28; Heb 10:13). These processes are the Kingdom of God advancing.

BARNABAS AND SAUL FULFILLED THEIR MINISTRY

“ 25 And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their ministry, and took with them John, whose surname was Mark. ”

The narrative now returns to Barnabas and Saul. In fact, from this point through the conclusion of the book of Acts, the attention will be turned to the ministry of Paul.

BARNABAS AND SAUL RETURNED FROM JERUSALEM

“And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem . . .”

Following the conversion of the Gentiles at the house of Cornelius, certain prophets had come from Jerusalem to Antioch. During that time, “one of them named Agabus” had “signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world ” (Acts 11:28). Upon hearing this, and with the discernment that this was a word from God, and with an obvious immediacy that is birthed by faith, “the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judaea” (Acts 11:29). They were not like the Corinthians, who also determined to send relief to the “poor saints in Jerusalem” (Rom 15:26), yet tarried for more than a year without actually doing it (2 Cor 8:10; 9:2). These brethren gathered the monies immediately, and “sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul” (Acts 11:30). Now Barnabas and Saul return from that trip to Jerusalem to Antioch, from whence they had been sent (Acts 11:26-28).

WHEN THEY HAD FULFILLED THEIR MINISTRY

when they had fulfilled their ministry . . .” Other versions read, “finished their mission,” NIV “after completing their mission,” NRSV “when their work was ended,” BBE “having completed their errand,” CJB “had completed their relief mission,” CSB “fulfilled their ministrations,” ERV “completed their service,” ESV “delivered the contribution,” GWN “completed their task,” NJB “fulfilled their office,” PNT “finished their business,” LIVING “finished their work,” IE “having discharged their mission,” WEYMOUTH and “finished their helpful service.” WILLIAMS

In the kingdom of God, work is an activity in which something is accomplished, completed, finished, or fulfilled.

Barnabas and Saul delivered to the elders the offering that had been gathered for the poor saints in Jerusalem. The purpose for the offering was to bring relief to brethren in Judaea who suffered in the aftermath of the prophesied famine. Barnabas and Saul were chosen to deliver the relief to the elders in a timely manner, thereby exhibiting the love of the brethren and the faithfulness of God. They left Jerusalem only when that work had been completed.

Finishing the Work

The very concept of finishing or completing a ministry, or service, or commission, is refreshing to consider. This thought reflects the nature of the Kingdom of God, which involves doing good works that have been “ordained that we should walk in them” (Eph 2:10). When the Scriptures speak of being “workers together with” God, or “laborers together with God,” it is not speaking of menial and meaningless activity or motion (1 Cor 3:9; 6:1). Working in God’s vineyard (Matt 20:1), or working in the harvesting of the fields (John 4:35) is not purposeless activity. In the kingdom of God, work is an activity in which something is accomplished, completed, finished, or fulfilled. Paul said that he did not run uncertainly, or beat the air. That is, he was not like a runner who simply frolicked about in the open spaces with no goal, or a boxer who shadow-boxed, never really facing an opponent (1 Cor 9:26).

In fact, Paul was deeply concerned about his labor being vain, never really yielding the intended results (Gal 4:11; Phil 2:16; 1 Thess 3:5). There is a category of human effort that is pointless, wasted, and in vain: “Except the LORD build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the LORD keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain” (Psa 127:1). This kind of work is one that is never brought to a conclusion. It is like the man who “began to build, and was not able to finish” (Lk 14:29-30).

One of the ways God is glorified is in a work that is finished – brought to its intended culmination. Zerubbabel was assured that the work he commenced would, in fact, be “finished.” Zechariah was told to say, “The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it; and thou shalt know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto you” (Zech 4:9).

While I do not wish to dwell on this subject, it ought to be apparent that, in Scripture, the value of young believers is seen in their association with the tenured saints, not their work and influence among their peers.

Jesus Himself declared that His food was not only to do the Father’s will, but to complete His work. “My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish His work” (John 4:34). In fact, the works were given to Him to finish. As He said, “the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me” (John 5:36). An unfinished work brings no glory to God! That is why failing to grow, backsliding, drawing back, and falling away are such despicable transgressions! The Lord is noted for finishing His work (Rom 9:28), and performing what He has begun “until the day of Christ” (Phil 1:6). If this does not happen, it is only because thoughtless men have departed “from the faith,” which is the appointed means through which the completion is wrought (1 Tim 4:1).

Unfortunately, owing to a great falling away, the landscape of Christianity is cluttered with unfinished works – people who started, but did not finish. They are like the 603,550 men of Israel who came out of Egypt, but fell in the wilderness, never entering the promised land for which they were delivered. They are like Israel, who, under the figure of Ephraim, was like a “cake not turned” – half-baked, and unsuitable for consumption (Hos 7:8).

Barnabas and Saul were not such men. They set out to do a holy work, and did not leave until it was accomplished.

THEY TOOK JOHN MARK WITH THEM

“ . . . and took with them John, whose surname was Mark.” Other versions read, “who was also called Mark,” NASB and “whose other name was Mark.” NRSV

This was the son of the woman at whose home the disciples were found praying when Peter was released (Acts 12:12). It is apparent that, to some extent, he was a spiritually distinctive young man in Jerusalem, as Timothy was in the area of Derby and Lystra (Acts 16:1). Barnabas and Saul took note of this young believer, and “took” him “with them.” Later, he will be described as their “minister,” or “helper” (Acts 13:5).

You may recall that Joshua was Moses’ “minister” (Ex 24:13; Josh 1:1). Elisha occupied a similar role toward Elijah (1 Kgs 19:19; 2 Kgs 2:1-9).

While I do not wish to dwell on this subject, it ought to be apparent that, in Scripture, the value of young believers is seen in their association with the tenured saints, not their work and influence among their peers. I do not believe you will find an exception to this rule. Some examples include the following.

- Moses’ sister Miriam, who watched her infant brother, and spoke to Pharaoh’s daughter concerning his care (Ex 2:4-9).
- Samuel, who ministered in the Tabernacle under the administration of Eli (1 Sam 2:18).
- The young Jewish maiden who informed Naaman of a prophet in Israel (2 Kgs 5:2-4).
- Jeremiah, who was set apart to God from his mother’s womb (Jer 1:5-7).
- John the Baptist, who “grew and waxed strong in spirit” (Luke 1:80).
- The Lord Jesus, who “increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man,” and, at twelve confounded the doctors of the Law (Luke 2:46-47,52).

The thing to be seen in this text is the manner in which godly men perceived spiritually unusual youth. With the contemporary penchant for sequestering young people, the kind of assessment made known in this text is most unusual. We have even come to the point where special ministers are being appointed for the youth. In this text, special youth were appointed to minister to Kingdom laborers. In this manner, they became more acquainted with the manner of the kingdom, as well as the focus and way of life of holy men. In my judgment, there is no way to effectively assess the damage that is being done to the body of Christ by the current manner in which young people are being cultured by the churches.

This young man, John Mark, is mentioned eight times in Scripture (Acts 12:12,25; 15:37,39; Col 4:10; 2 Tim 4:11; Phile 1:24; 1 Pet 5:13).

Others who are said to have been “surnamed,” or given another name, include the following.

- Jacob (supplanter), who was surnamed “Israel” (he will rule)– the name used to refer to God’s people – Isa 44:5; 45:4.
- Lebbaeus (a man of heart), an apostle “whose surname was Thaddeus” (large-hearted, courageous) – Matt 10:3.
- James (supplanter) and John (Jehovah is a gracious giver): Jesus “surnamed them Boanerges” (sons of thunder) – Mk 3:17.
- Judas (he shall be praised, “surnamed Iscariot” (inhabitant of Kerioth) – Lk 22:3.
- Joseph (let him add) called Barsabas (son of Sabas), “who was surnamed Matthias” (gift of God– Acts 1:23).
- Joses (exalted), “who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas” (son of consolation) – Acts 4:36).
- Simon (a hearing), “whose surname is Peter” (a rock, or stone) – Acts 10:5).
- Judas (he shall be praised), chief among the brethren in Jerusalem, “surnamed Barsabas” (son of Sabas) – Acts 15:22).
- Abram’s (exalted father) name was changed to Abraham (father of a multitude) – Gen 17:5
- Sarai’s (princess) name was changed to Sarah (noble woman, mother of nations – Gen 17:15-16).

In Scripture, names have a certain ministry. Even in their names, people were associated with their character, particularly as it related to the work of the Lord. This is a contribution that the Israelites, a Divinely cultured nation, has made to the world. It is good that believers carry it forward, as in this text. Too, it is good to see people as they relate to the work of the Lord.

In this text, “John” (Jehovah is a gracious giver) was renamed “Mark” (a defense). It appears as though they saw in this young man the potential of being a great defender of the faith. Ultimately, he did, in fact, measure up to the name, writing the Gospel of Mark, and serving the Lord in other lands. He certainly lived up to his surname. Historians say of him, “ Was born of Jewish parents of the tribe of Levi. He is supposed to have been converted to Christianity by Peter, whom he served as an amanuensis, and under whose inspection he wrote his Gospel in the Greek language. Mark was dragged to pieces by the people of Alexandria, at the great solemnity of Serapis their idol, ending his life under their merciless hands. ”

CONCLUSION

It should be apparent that there is character in Scripture as well as information. The nature of God is revealed in it as well as His will. The reports that are made are more than a historical statement. They reflect Divine priorities, the way in which the Lord works, and how people are impacted by both faith and unbelief.

It is the nature of truth to permeate the lives of those who love and believe it. It also sheds light on the environment into which it is introduced. Were it not for the truth of the Gospel, the true character of Herod could not have been truly seen. The caliber of men like Peter would also have been hidden. What kind of change would ever have been wrought in Saul of Tarsus if the truth of the Gospel had not been declared and lived out?

All of this confirms the necessity and priority of the continued declaration and exposition of the Gospel of Christ. It is a sin of unspeakable magnitude to exchange the emphasis of the Gospel for some human accent. No person can expect the work of God to be done independently of the record He has given of His Son (1 John 5:10-11). The notion that the Gospel has only to do with the extrication of men from sin is an error that has staggering implications. First, it negates the great percentage of the epistles, which contain, in fact, a delineation of the Gospel. Little of the Gospel of Christ can even be known without the details of the epistles. When these writings are withheld from the people, the Gospel cannot be considered.

The book of Acts is a revelation of the government of Jesus being carried out among men. It has to do with the establishment of believers, and the overthrow of the wicked. Each is done in a timely and appropriate manner, bringing glory to God and edification to saints.

Lesson #56

THE CALLING OF BARNABAS and SAUL

“ 13:1 Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul. 2 As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. 3 And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away. 4 So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus. 5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also John to their minister. 6 And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Barjesus: 7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God. 8 But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith. 9 Then Saul, (who also is called Paul,) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him, 10 And said, O full of all subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? 11 And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand. 12 Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord. ” (Acts 13:1-12)

INTRODUCTION

We are now exposed to some details related to another church, or gathering of believers. Until Acts 11:22, the only other “church” specified in this book was the church at Jerusalem (2:47; 5:11;7:38;

8:1,3; 11:22). That was the hub of activity in the household of faith. This was in strict accord with the testimony of the prophets. Both Isaiah and Micah foretold that the word of the Lord would go forth “from Jerusalem” (Isa 2:3; Mic 4:2). That city was set forth as the one that would bring “good tidings” (Isa 40:9). Joel prophesied, “for in mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the LORD hath said, and in the remnant whom the LORD shall call” (Joel 2:32). Zechariah foretold “there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness” (Zech 13:1).

Again he prophesied, “that living waters shall go forth out from Jerusalem” (Zech 14:8).

The centrality of Jerusalem was not the result of human strategies or mere carnal preferences. This city had been cultured for the Messiah, even though many of its inhabitants were not aware of it. Malachi alluded to this when he said, “Behold, I will send My messenger, and he shall prepare the way before Me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to His temple, even the Messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, He shall come, saith the LORD of hosts” (Mal 3:1). This was the coming that was also foretold by Zechariah, and fulfilled in the triumphal entry into Jerusalem. “Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass” (Zech 9:9; Matt 21:4-5). It was during that time that Jesus “went into the temple of God,” purging it the second time from the defiling presence of merchandisers (Matt 21:12-15).

All of this, and more, brought a certain spiritual dignity to Jerusalem. This is where Jesus commanded His disciples to begin preaching repentance and remission of sins (Lk 24:47).

There were also a number of churches scattered throughout Judaea, Galilee, and Samaria, though not mentioned individually (9:31). Now, the Spirit focuses on a particular congregation other than the one in Jerusalem. It proves to be an extraordinary body of believers, and one from which two devoted and informed disciples are called by the Holy Spirit to a particular work. We will also be introduced to the context in which the call was made known, and the manner in which the brethren responded to that call.

The invariable rule of the Kingdom is, God first, man second – and there is never a deviation from it. Putting God first does not suggest the deliberate neglect of men. It does mean that God’s voice is to be perceived as outranking that of man. The will of God is superior to the will of man. Pleasing God trumps pleasing men.

Once again, we are being exposed to the manner of the Kingdom – the way in which the Lord works, the kind of individuals through whom He works, and the effectiveness of the works that He has ordained, and in which the saved are to walk. The Scriptures confirm that God has, in fact, “ordained” works in which we are to walk: “For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them” (Eph 2:10). Some of these “works” are general in nature – such as doing “good unto all men, especially unto them who are the household of faith” (Gal 6:10). There are special opportunities, also called “good works,” in which God can enable us to liberally participate (2 Cor 9:8). There is also the perspective of “every good work” in which we can be “fruitful” (Col 1:10). These are the objective for every believer, and none are to be content coming short of them, or be satisfied to live within the narrow circle of their own interests. “Good works” are the expression of a heart that is not self-centered, but is living for the purpose of Another – namely, the One who died and rose again for them (2 Cor 5:15).

In this text we are exposed to an even higher form of “good work.” In this case, the work is defined by God, and the believer is called into it. The participant is actually carrying out a specific objective that serves Divine interests. It appears to me that this is the primary work of men, not the secondary one. It has to do with serving God, as compared with human interests. The first and second commandment provide us with a perspective concerning both attitude and living. Jesus said to an inquiring scribe, “And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these” (Mark 12:29-31).

THE RULE OF THE KINGDOM

The invariable rule of the Kingdom is, God first, man second – and there is never a deviation from it. Putting God first does not suggest the deliberate neglect of men. It does mean that God’s voice is to be perceived as outranking that of man. The will of God is superior to the will of man. Pleasing God trumps pleasing men. When there is any kind of conflict between allegiance to God and allegiance to men, allegiance to God is mandated. The person who defers to men in neglect of God has transgressed the first and great commandment. To place the stress on the second commandment is an obvious error, and should require no further elaboration. When God is loved first and foremost, the proper adjudication of human interests will take place under His direction, for God is the Creator of men.

Our text is an excellent case in point. Two men of God are called into a work that has to do with bringing advantages to men – true advantages. Because the church to which the call came loved God first, they will immediately enter into the will of the Lord. Because the ones who are being called love God first, they will submit without any hesitation.

Rather than simply pointing out what are conceived to be the errors of the modern church, I am seeking to draw attention to the absence of similarities with the church/churches of Scripture through whom God worked.

This is the manner of the Kingdom. It is not the ideal, but is rather the norm. Wherever men are living by faith and walking in the Spirit, this is the way they react to a Divine summons. If this is not the way they are living, they do not receive a call into Divine service – for even if such a call could hypothetically occur, their hearts would not be tuned to hear it.

All of this sharply contrasts with the “church life” of our time. If you were to attempt to impose this text into our Christian culture, you would find it to be a near-total misfit. However, we are being exposed to a genuine church, and to bona fide spiritual life.

THE AVOIDANCE OF OVER-CRITICALITY

It is well to make a statement concerning the avoidance of being overly critical of the Christian representation of our day. Rather than simply pointing out what are conceived to be the errors of the modern church, I am seeking to draw attention to the absence of similarities with the church/churches of Scripture through whom God worked. While some of the things that took place in this text tended to be unique, the sensitivity of the people to the Lord and commitment to Him are not to be ignored.

As we go through this book, the direction of the Lord is becoming increasingly clear, as well as the saints submissiveness to it.

- The disciples waiting for the promise of the Father (Acts 1:13-14).
- The selection of the one to fill the bishopric vacated by Judas (Acts 1:15-26).
- The day of Pentecost (Acts 2:1-4, 14ff).
- The response of Peter and John to the mandate of the religious leaders to cease preaching Christ (Acts 4:19-20).
- The response of the church to the reports of threats against the apostles (Acts 4:23-32).
- The response of the church to the deaths of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:11-12).
- The direction of Peter and John to preach in the Temple, from which they had previously been removed and incarcerated (Acts 5:19-20).
- Stephen's boldness before the Jewish council, even though it led to his death (Acts 6:12-55).
- Philip's response to heavenly direction (Acts 8:25-30).
- The response of the apostles to the report of the Samaritans receiving the word of God (Acts 8:14).
- The response of Saul of Tarsus to the call of Jesus (Acts 9:6-9).
- The response of Ananias to the call of God to go to Saul (Acts 9:10-17).
- The response of Cornelius to Divine direction (Acts 10:1-8).
- The response of Peter to the call to go to the house of Cornelius (Acts 10:9-23).
- The response of the early church to the report of Peter concerning the events related to Cornelius (Acts 11:18).
- The response of Peter to the delivering angel (Acts 12:7-11).

None of these could have taken place among a lethargic, indifferent, or insensitive people! It was their faith and commitment to the Lord that enabled them to react as they did. It was their profound love for God that moved them to respond instantly. It was their deep gratitude for the Savior that compelled them to enter joyfully into the work. That is the manner of the Kingdom.

It is a revelation of real spiritual life – life that is being lived “unto Him which died for them and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15). Where this kind of life is not apparent, at the very best, the Spirit is being grieved and quenched (Eph 4:30; 1 Thess 5:19). At the worst, there may be no spiritual life at all, in which case, conversion itself becomes the requirement.

I say these things because it is a source of grief to my spirit that any Scriptural record of faithful and productive people could conflict with the personal views or representations of any professing believers of our time. No view of, or approach to, matters relating to the Kingdom of God can be at variance with the inspired record of the progress and effectiveness of that Kingdom.

If Divine power is absent from religion, there is no procedure that can restore it. The power is granted by Divine discretion within the context of fellowship with the Son, into which He has called us (1 Cor 1:9). Any renewal that is attempted must be aimed at restoring that required fellowship.

A PRODUCTIVE CHURCH

“ 13:1 Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul.”

To this point, the book of Acts has referred to a number of unholy persons who, by virtue of some sinful deed, have been mentioned: These include the following:

1. Pilate - Acts 3:13; 4:27
2. Annas the high priest - Acts 4:6
3. Caiaphas the high priest - Acts 4:6
4. John , kindred of the high priest – Acts 4:6
5. Alexander , kindred of the high priest – Acts 4:6
6. Herod - Acts 4:27; 12:1,6,11,19,20,21
7. Ananias - Acts 5:1,3,5
8. Sapphira - Acts 5:1
9. Saul of Tarsus (before change) - Acts 7:58; 8:1,3; 9:1,4,9
10. Simon the sorcerer - Acts 8:9,13,18, 24

An additional wicked person will be mentioned in this text (Elymus, 13:8).

Just as there are key individuals in the body of Christ, so such are found in those who are dominated by Satan. These are always opposed to the work of Lord. During the beginning of the church, such men were not frequently confronted. However, as the Gospel began to spread, such individuals increased. This strongly suggests that during the initial establishment of the body of Christ Satan was, in a sense, caught off guard. It is evident that He did not know Jesus would rise from the dead, send His Holy Spirit, and transform and empower believers.

We have also been introduced to a number of holy people who were not apostles. Most of them are mentioned for the first time in the book of Acts, and a significant number of them were not apparently present on the day of Pentecost. Here are the ones that are mentioned from Acts 1 through our text (13:1-12).

1. Mary the mother of Jesus - Acts 1:14
2. Joseph called Barsabas, surnamed Justus - Acts 1:23
3. Mathias - Acts 1:23
4. Joses, surnamed Barnabas - Acts 5:36; 9:27; 11:22,25,30; 12:25; 13:1, 2,7
5. Stephen - Acts 6:5,8,9; 7:59; 8:2; 11:19
6. Philip (deacon) - Acts 6:5; 8:5,6,12,13, 26,29,34,35,37,38,39,40
7. Prochorus - Acts 6:5
8. Nicanor - Acts 6:5
9. Timon - Acts 6:5

10. Parmenas - Acts 6:5
11. Nicolas - Acts 6:5
12. Ananias - Acts 9:10,12,13,17
13. Aeneas - Acts 9:33,34
14. Tabitha (Dorcas) - Acts 9:36,39,40
15. Simon the tanner - Acts 9:48; 10:6, 17,32
16. Cornelius - Acts 10:1,3,7,17,21,22,24, 25,30,31
17. Agabus - Acts 11:28
18. Mary , the mother of John (Mark) - Acts 12:12
19. Mark - Acts 12:12,25; 13:5
20. Rhoda - Acts 12:13
21. James (the Lord's brother) - Acts 12:17
22. Simeon called Niger - Acts 13:1
23. Lucius of Cyrene - Acts 13:1
24. Manaen - Acts 13:1

In this, we are being exposed to the Lord working through His body, which is “the fulness of Him that filleth all in all”

In this, we are being exposed to the Lord working through His body, which is “the fulness of Him that filleth all in all” (Eph 1:23). Among those mentioned thus far are, two mothers (Mary the mother of Jesus, and Mary the mother of John Mark), two Jewish proselytes (Nicolas and Cornelius), a widow (Dorcas), a tanner (Simon), a young man (John Mark), a young maiden (Rhoda), and a brother of Jesus (James), deacons Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, Nicholas), and prophets and teachers (Barnabas, Simeon, Lucius, Manaean, Saul).

Notice the diversity of the people – not only in who they were, but what they did . This is the diversity of which Paul wrote to the Corinthians. He likened the church to a “body” with different parts, each one working for a common purpose, yet in different ways. “Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal” (1 Cor 12:4-7).

These are all dispensed by God (1 Cor 12:18), administered by Jesus (1 Cor 12:5), and managed by the Holy Spirit (1 Cor 12:4). They are operated through the faith of the individuals possessing them (Rom 12:5; Gal 3:5), and as those who minister them “hold” to the Head of the body, Jesus Christ (Col 2:19). These various “gifts,” or spiritual aptitudes, are the means through which Jesus ministers to His body, “which is the church” (Eph 4:15-16; Col 1:19,24).

These are referred to as “spiritual gifts” (1 Cor 12:1; 14:1,12), “the measure of faith,” “gifts,” an “office” (Rom 12:3), “gifts” (Eph 4:8), and “the gift” (1 Pet 4:10). Those possessing the gifts are admonished to be “good stewards of the manifold grace of God” (1 Pet 4:10). We are also reminded that these are a “measure of faith,” and provide the spiritual boundaries within which we are to evaluate ourselves (Rom 12:3).

These gifts differ, depending on the work that is being accomplished through any given congregation. An example of this difference is found in several of the epistles. In these texts, there are often different spiritual gifts mentioned. These may not be found in every congregation, as some falsely allege. Differences are determined by the Lord (1 Cor 12:18), and in strict accord with the spiritual status of that congregation, and the degree to which they are participating in the purpose of God. I understand the core, or common gifts, to be specified in Ephesians 4:11: “apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers.” The “apostles” have been given to the church through the Scriptures, and it is their doctrine that forms the substructure of all valid teaching. Apostles, prophets, and teachers are also mentioned Paul’s writings to the church in Corinth (1 Cor 12:28).

I do not know that this is intended to be a thorough representation of spiritual gifts, but it certainly does highlight their diversity. It seems to me that if these were not being given by the Lord and administered by the Holy Spirit, they would make for a chaotic condition.

Various specifications of spiritual gifts are found in the following texts. I am mentioning them because our text cites some of the gifts in the church in Antioch: namely prophets and teachers.

- THE CHURCH IN ROME: (7) Prophecy , ministry, teaching , exhorting, giving, ruling, showing mercy (Rom 12:3-8).

- THE CHURCH IN CORINTH: (13) Word of wisdom, word of knowledge, faith, gifts of healing, working of miracles , prophecy , discerning of spirits, speaking different languages, interpretation of different languages, apostles , teachers , helps, governments, (1 Cor 12:8-11,28).

- THE CHURCH IN GALATIA: (1) Jesus Himself is referred to as “He who supplies the Spirit to you and works miracles among you” NKJV (Gal 3:5).

- THE CHURCH IN EPHESUS. (4) Apostles , prophets , evangelists, and pastor-teachers (Eph 4:11).

- SCATTERED BELIEVERS. (2) Speaking, and ministering (1 Pet 4:11).

Taking the gifts that are duplicated in the various listings into consideration (apostles–2, prophecy–3, teaching–3, working miracles–2), there are twenty different gifts mentioned.

- Prophecy
- Ministry
- Teaching
- Exhorting
- Giving
- Ruling
- Showing mercy
- Word of wisdom
- Word of knowledge
- Faith (The inclusion of “faith” in the listing of spiritual gifts indicates that this refers to an extraordinary measure of faith, and not “the common faith” – Tit 1:4).
- Gifts of healing
- Working of miracles
- Discerning of spirits
- Speaking different languages
- Interpretation of different languages
- Helps

- Governments
- Evangelists
- Speaking as an oracle of God
- Pastor-teachers

I do not know that this is intended to be a thorough representation of spiritual gifts, but it certainly does highlight their diversity. It seems to me that if these were not being given by the Lord and administered by the Holy Spirit, they would make for a chaotic condition. All of them have a common objective – to profit the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:7; Eph 4:12-16; Col 2:19).

Now, for the first time in Scripture, we will be exposed to a particular congregation, and specific individuals within it, whose spiritual gifts are specified.

CERTAIN PROPHETS AND TEACHERS

“Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers . . .” Other versions read, “prophets and doctors,” DOUAY and “prophets (inspired interpreters of the will and purposes of God) and teachers,” AMPLIFIED All other versions read “prophets and teachers.”

These are the second and third ranking offices in the body of Christ. All other offices, or spiritual gifts, come “after” these. “And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers , after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues” (1 Cor 12:28).

What are “prophets and teachers,” and how vital is their role in the body of Christ? First, if God has placed them in the body, Jesus is administering them, and the Spirit if making them operational, they cannot be incidental.

• PROPHET. From the standpoint of language, a prophet is “one who speaks forth . . . an interpreter or spokesman for God; one through whom God speaks,” THAYER “one who speaks for God, proclaiming what God wants to make known,” FRIBERG and “one who has insight into the Divine will.” UBS Doctrinally, the person who prophesies is said to speak “unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort” (1 Cor 14:3). This is a person with spiritual insight and understanding who brings the truth to bear upon the hearts and conscience of men. Their words result in the strengthening of men, moving them forward in the will of God, and encouraging them in the good fight of faith. Their message is not man-centered, but is God-centered, and thus He works through their word.

• TEACHER. From the standpoint of language, a teacher is one who instructs men, delivering holy “doctrine” to them, THAYER or the body of teaching that pertains to life and godliness. A teacher is not a mimic, aping what other men have said. This is a person who has expertise in the Scriptures and the things of God, and has been made capable to communicate them to others. Nicodemus referred to Jesus as a “Teacher come down from God” (John 3:2). Paul referred to himself as a “teacher” as well as an apostle (1 Tim 2:7; 2 Tim 1:11).

It is interesting to observe the mentioning of these two gifts that were operating in the church in Antioch. Barnabas and Saul had remained there for “a whole year,” teaching “much people” (Acts 11:26). Now, as a result of their teaching, several prophets and teachers had risen among them. Saul and Barnabas are included in the number; Barnabas being mentioned first, and Saul last. They were like spiritual book-ends in this remarkable listing of holy men. You might also view this as the maturation of the church. Three other men are mentioned.

- SIMEON THAT WAS CALLED NIGER. We know nothing more of this brother than is stated here. He was one of the prophets and teachers in the church in Antioch.

- LUCIOUS OF CYRENE. Cyrene was located in Africa. We assume this is the same person Paul mentioned in Romans 16:21. Nothing more is known of him.

- MANAEN, BROUGHT UP WITH HEROD. Manaen is not mentioned anywhere else in Scripture. The Herod mentioned here was “the tetrarch of Galilee” (Lk 3:1). Manaen was probably a man of rank and education.

The fact that these three men are mentioned in the same breath as Barnabas and Saul is worthy of note.

Now special privileges will be vouchsafed to this church. It has grown up into Christ, and can now be trusted with an expanded stewardship. The men who were used to stabilize the church Barnabas and Saul, will now be called to another work. The apostles will not need to send new leaders there, for they now have spiritually competent men among them

This by no means suggests they were all equals with Barnabas and Saul. However, they were all members of the same body, and partakers of the same “fulness” (Eph 1:23). The Lord was working through them in accordance with His will, and in the capacity in which He Himself had placed them.

Now special privileges will be vouchsafed to this church. It has grown up into Christ, and can now be trusted with an expanded stewardship. The men who were used to stabilize the church Barnabas and Saul, will now be called to another work. The apostles will not need to send new leaders there, for they now have spiritually competent men among them. We are beholding a real church – one that did not, it appears, require an epistle of correction, like Corinth, Galatia, or five of the seven churches in Asia. There are a few churches in Scripture who were commended. Here are some of them.

- Rome – Rom 1:8
- Ephesus – Eph 1:15
- Philippi – Phil 1:4-5
- Colossae – Col 1:4 ; 2:5
- Thessalonica – 1 Thess 1:8; 2 Thess 1:3
- Smyrna – Rev 2:8
- Philadelphia – Rev 3:7

These were bodies of believers who were living by faith, walking in the Spirit, and were known for their love for the brethren. It is for this reason that they were known outside the circumference of their immediate influence. While there are no list of qualifications for congregations who will be used by God for the execution of His purpose, there are certain indications of the type of people for whom He looks.

- “The steps of a good man are ordered by the LORD: and he delighteth in his way” (Psa 37:23).

- “For the eyes of the LORD run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him ” (2 Chron 16:9).

- “For all those things hath mine hand made, and all those things have been, saith the LORD: but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at My word ” (Isa 66:2).

- “But shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness. And their word will eat as doth a canker: of whom is Hymenaeus and Philetus; Who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some . . . If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work ” (2 Tim 2:21).

• “All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works ” (2 Tim 3:16-17).

These days, it has become fashionable to speak of certain bodies of people shaking the world for Christ – like a great host of “on-fire youth,” who are going to storm the bastions of wickedness and save souls. It all sounds good – at least to the uninitiated in the Kingdom. However, the issue is really not who is going to step up to the plate and do the work of the Lord. God is really not looking for volunteers. Instead, He is looking for people who are walking within the moral and spiritual boundaries He has established. These will be people who have a working knowledge of His Word – a knowledge that is confirmed by holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord (Heb 12:14). They are a people who do not love the world, and have separated themselves from contaminating influences. In the employment of individuals selected to work together with God, I do not know that it is possible to substantiate that God will use any other kind of people.

Our text is speaking of a body of people who were usable. They could discern both the voice and the will of the Lord. They had brethren among them who had something to say, and had been faithful in carrying out the word of the Lord delivered to them.

It is important that we see these brethren in this light, and that this understanding play a key role in the formation of our concept of the church, which is the body of Christ. Many churches are noted for little more than their size and community involvement – something that has more of an appeal to the flesh than to those living in the Spirit. It is wrong – thoroughly wrong – for any person to allow the impressions of overt sight to determine their estimation of the body of Christ or the work of the Lord. As in all critical matters, the Word of God provides the standard of measure.

AS THEY MINISTERED TO THE LORD AND FASTED

“ 2 As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.”

Here we are exposed to a productive spiritual environment – one in which the Lord calls men into further involvement in His good, and acceptable, and perfect will.

Here we are exposed to a productive spiritual environment – one in which the Lord calls men into further involvement in His good, and acceptable, and perfect will. That context involves the presentation of the body as a living sacrifice to God – a circumstance in which Jesus Christ Himself is perceived as the preeminent Person, and the will of God is seen as the fundamental activity.

AS THEY MINISTERED TO THE LORD

“As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted . . .” Other versions read, “were worshiping the Lord and fasting,” NIV “were doing the Lord's work, and going without food,” BBE “fasting and making supplication to God,” MRD “serving the Lord and fasting,” NET “offering worship to the Lord and keeping a fast,” NJB “doing service to the Lord and fasting,” LITV and “officiating to the Master and fasting.” INTERLINEAR

The word “ministering” is translated from the Greek word leitourgou,ntwn (li-toorg-oon-ton). The root meaning of this word is “to do service, to do a work . . . of the priests and Levites who were busied with the sacred rites in the tabernacle or the temple . . . of Christians serving Christ, whether, by prayer, or by instructing others concerning the way of salvation, or in some other way (Acts 13:2),” THAYER “of a Christian's service to God through prayer, teaching, good works, etc.” FRIEBERG “serve, worship,” UBS “more generally, to serve a master,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “perform a (religious) service Heb 10:11; Tit 1:9 v.l. Ac 13:2.” GINGRICH

The Concept of Ministry or Worship

In Christ, the concepts of “service” and “worship” are blended together in the word “ministry.” It speaks of engaging in activity, or work, sorely because of the Lord – i.e. living unto the Lord. This is marvelously set forth in the apostolic exhortation to present our bodies to God as a “living sacrifice.” “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service” (Rom 12:1). Here, the word “service” parallels the activities of the Levitical priests of old. It describes a life that is lived “unto Him who died for them and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15). A “living sacrifice” was prefigured by the scape goat and the living bird of the Old Covenant. These were each one half of a sacrifice offered to God. The “scape goat” was allowed to live, while the other goat was killed, and its blood offered to the Lord (Lev 16:8,10,26). The living bird was let go into the air, to fly free, while the other bird was killed, and its blood used in a cleansing ceremony (Lev 14:6,7; 14:51-53).

In the matter of our redemption, Jesus Christ is the sacrifice that was offered, and whose blood was used for cleansing us “from all sin” (1 John 1:7). The resurrected Christ is the living sacrifice that is lived out in the redeemed ones by means of a consecrated and devoted life.

Foreshadowed in the Levitical Priesthood

This kind of life is foreshadowed in the lives of the Levites, who lived solely for the Lord, having no inheritance in the land of Canaan. Their lives were wrapped up in serving in the tabernacle. As it is written, “ But the Levites shall do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation , and they shall bear their iniquity: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, that among the children of Israel they have no inheritance” (Num 18:23-26; Lev 3:12). They were the Lord’s “inheritance,” and were the ones chosen to do the Lord’s work: “The priests the Levites, and all the tribe of Levi, shall have no part nor inheritance with Israel: they shall eat the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and his inheritance” (Deut 18:1). When it came to the matters pertaining to God, they “did the service” of the Lord, (Heb 9:9), and were said to “execute the service of the Lord” (Num 8:11). This was wrapped in the daily “service of the tabernacle” (Num 18:23).

New Covenant Worship and Ministry

In the New Covenant, “worship” is not confined to a specific activity – like singing. It rather speaks of a wholly devoted life that is offered to God in service. This is the concept delivered in the twelfth chapter of Romans. Some versions accent this when rendering the phrase “reasonable service:” “your spiritual service of worship,” NASB “your spiritual; act of worship,” NIV “your spiritual worship,” NRSV “spiritual service,” ASV “the worship it is right for you to give Him,” BBE “This kind of worship is appropriate for you,” GWN “This is truly the way to worship him,” NLT “ your reasonable service (th.n logikh.n latrei,an u`mw/n). "Your rational (spiritual) service (worship) , ROBERTSON “This is true worship from you,” IE “this is the reasonable way for you to worship,” ISV and “which is your reasonable (rational, intelligent) service and spiritual worship.” AMPLIFIED

This type of sacrificial life is the foundation upon which edification is accomplished: to bring the people to a point where their entire lives are a service, or ministry, to the Lord. This is the express teaching of the apostle Paul. In his reference to the “gifts” that were given to the church by the ascended and enthroned Christ (Eph 4:8-11), he expounded them by stating the objective for which they were given: “For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry , for the edifying of the body of Christ” (Eph 4:12). All of the members of Christ’s body are prefigured by the various vessels used in the tabernacle service. They were referred to as “the vessels of the ministry,” or “the vessels used in worship.” RSV

A Serious Error of Our Time

What is missed is the fact that ministry to the Lord is, in fact ministry to His people. This is specifically taught in an apostolic word concerning singing. While this is not the only means of ministering to the family of God,

In our time a serious error has surfaced, and it has been the cause of much disruption among professing believers. It is represented by the words “praise and worship,” which are now employed in religious vernacular as though they were actually found in the Bible – which they are not. As it is used in this purely sectarian view, “praise and worship” refers to words that are offered to God, particularly in song, as opposed to a LIFE that has been offered to Him, as in Romans 12:1.

What is missed is the fact that ministry to the Lord is, in fact ministry to His people. This is specifically taught in an apostolic word concerning singing. While this is not the only means of ministering to the family of God, it does serve to illustrate the objective. “Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord ” (Col 3:16). Ephesians says it this way, “And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord ” (Eph 5:19).

Jesus Himself made clear ministering to His people was, in fact, a ministry to Him: “And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me” (Matt 25:40). This kind of action reaches its apex in the focused activities of a godly assembly. It is there that we “admonish one another” (Rom 15:14), teach “one another” (Col 3:16), “comfort one another” (1 Thess 4:18), and “edify one another” (1 Thess 5:11). All of these ministries are, in fact, to the Lord. They involve the strengthening of His body, which is a part of Himself, “of His flesh, and of His bones” (Eph 5:30).

It is not possible to minister to the Lord while neglecting His people. Conversely, it is not possible to minister to His people without it bearing directly upon Him.

Who Was Ministering, and What Were They Doing?

It is generally understood that the “they” refers to the five prophets and teachers that have been mentioned: Barnabas, Simeon, Lucius, Manaen, and Saul. Because the word translated “ministered” carries the implication of a public service being performed (Thayer, Friberg, Robertson, and Calvin), we understand that they were ministering to the assembly of saints.

The fact that they were “fasting” suggests that this was some form of extended prophesying and teaching. Teaching and prayer, which often are accompanied by fasting (Psa 35:13; Dan 9:3; Matt 17:21; 1 Cor 7:5), were also joined together in apostolic activity. When the early church chose special servants to administer the daily distribution of food, the apostles said, “But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word” (Acts 6:4). It was a time when they had sacrificed the normalities of life in favor of “meat” that men “know not of.” You may recall that Jesus referred to the time He had spent speaking to the Samaritan woman as one of inner nourishment – nourishment that resulted from declaring the truth (John 4:32).

It is therefore my persuasion that as these men were devoting themselves to feeding the flock of God, using the power they had been given “for edification” (2 Cor 13:6,10) , the Holy Spirit spoke to them.

THE HOLY SPIRIT SAID

“ . . . the Holy Ghost said . . . ” Other versions read, “the Holy Spirit said,” NKJV “the Holy Ghost said to them,” DOUAY “the Holy Spirit said to them,” MRD and “the Holy Spirit spoke to them, saying.” PHILLIPS

All of this suggests that a quest for those who could be used had already been accomplished. The ranging eyes of the Lord had already found two men whose hearts were perfect toward the Lord, and who were ready for service. They were good men, and therefore their steps were being directed by the Lord.

In some way this was revealed directly to them – probably through the prophets. It seems clear that at some point this word was spoken through one of the prophets, in order that all might know. A prophet is noted for speaking as well as for receiving insight, for insight that is not articulated serves no purpose. Therefore it is said of the one who prophesies that he speaks “unto men to edification, exhortation, and comfort” (1 Cor 14:3). In this case, it would be unto exhortation, moving the people to openly fulfill the will of the Lord.

Jesus once told His disciples that it was the nature of the Holy Spirit to speak through men (Matt 13:11). Such words can be classified as words “which the Holy Spirit teaches” (1 Cor 2:13).

At this point, although Saul had been called to be an apostle, he was not yet fully functioning in that office. Barnabas was the lead person between the two of them, being mentioned first up to this point (Acts 11:30; 12:25; 13:2,7). This being the case, there was no functioning apostle present, yet a directive came to them from the Holy Spirit. Here is an example of the Lord administering His Headship over the church through the operation of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor 12:3-11).

SEPARATE ME BARNABAS AND SAUL

“ . . . Separate Me Barnabas and Saul . . . ” Other versions read, “Separate to me,” NKJV “Set apart for Me,” NASB “Let . . . be given to Me,” BBE “Set aside for Me,” CJB “I want . . . set apart,” NJB “Dedicate,” LIVING “Appoint for My service,” IE “Set apart for Me, now at once,” WEYMOUTH and “Separate now for Me.” AMPLIFIED

Notice the imperative nature of this word. The Spirit does not ask Barnabas and Saul if they would like to work for Him. He does not send a word to their peers, inquiring if they thought it well for them to be separated unto the Holy Spirit. There is no free will in this. There is no plea for someone to volunteer. In this matter, the choice has already been made, and those with understanding are told to formalize the choice of the Holy Spirit.

All of this suggests that a quest for those who could be used had already been accomplished. The ranging eyes of the Lord had already found two men whose hearts were perfect toward the Lord, and who were ready for service. They were good men, and therefore their steps were being directed by the Lord.

I find it exceedingly difficult to imagine this kind of thing happening in the churches with which we are familiar. First, it is difficult to conceive of a congregation where men are present who would respond to such a mandate. However, Barnabas and Saul had already separated themselves from the world. They were already wholly devoted to the Lord, and had proved themselves in a solid year of diligent labor among the assembly in Antioch. They were “prepared unto every good work,” and possessed the qualities for which the Lord looks.

CALLED TO A SPECIFIC WORK

“ . . . for the work whereunto I have called them.” Other versions read, “the work to which I have called,” NKJV “the special work for which they have been marked out by me,” BBE “the work whereunto I have taken them,” DOUAY “a special job I have for them,” LIVING “I have chosen them to do a special work,” IE and “for a task to which I have called them.” PHILLIPS

Here we have a special call to a special work! We will see throughout the book of Acts that the work of the Lord is not always left strictly to men. While Philip did go to Samaria apart from any revealed direction (Acts 8:5), he was especially sent to the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:26,29). Peter went down to the saints in Lydda (Acts 9:32), but was especially sent to the house of Cornelius (Acts 10:19–24). Barnabas brought Saul to Antioch, where they remained for “a whole year,” assembling with the church there (Acts 11:25–26). However, now they are called by the Holy Spirit to a special work for which they had been adapted, but concerning which they had not given previous thought.

Religious men often speak of strategies through which they hope to do the work of God. However, it seems to me that the stress ought to be placed on doing what our hands have already found to do, and developing spiritual sensitivity and readiness for Divine employment. It appears to me that these key factors are too often missing. It may very well be that the absence of Divine direction is the explanation for failed works and fruitless labors. At least, that is something to ponder. Holy men were concerned about laboring in vain (2 Cor 9:3; Gal 2:2; 1 4:11; Phil 2:16; 1 Thess 3:5). A due concern on the part of the Lord’s laborers will induce them to look for, and be sensitive to, Divine direction.

How Can We Know When the Lord is Directing Us?

As to knowing how a person can be sure God is directing them, there is no canned procedure that can bring such an assurance. It is the peculiar prerogative of faith to produce this kind of awareness. Coupled with the knowledge of God, His Word, and the spiritual maturity they foster, the detection of a Divine calling is possible. The only exception to this rule would be some visible manifestation, such as that vouchsafed to Abraham, Jacob, Joshua, Cornelius, and others.

Under circumstances such as those of our text, when believers are separated to a special work, the call will come within the context of Divine fellowship and involvement in the work of the Lord.

Jesus taught His disciples that spiritual leadership is nothing like the world’s leadership. He told them that the Gentile notion of authority and rule would not be found among them. They would function according to a higher principle

As a general rule, I have found the following considerations helpful.

- The conscious possession of an spiritual aptitude.
- The fervent desire to engage in focused and holy activity.
- The unquestionable opportunity to engage in the activity for which one has an aptitude and desire.

When these three things are experienced simultaneously, it appears to me that a person is being called into the activity. All of this presupposes fellowship with Christ, holiness, and consistent involvement in the will of God. Where these factors are missing, no time is to be spent speculating about a call.

A Word of Caution

Natural aptitude and an outgoing personality are not indications that one is suited for Divine employment. Often people will assess such an individual as someone who should be a preacher, or one who assumes some form of spiritual leadership. However, this is not the criterion that fits a person for the work of the Lord. A person, for example, who is an excellent business manager and organizer might prove to be a miserable Kingdom worker. Herod was such a person. A person who has a way with words, and can move people with them, might be the worst of all preachers. Hitler was such a person. The man who can lead great bodies of people, and marshal them for a certain cause may be altogether passed over by God. Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar were such men.

Jesus taught His disciples that spiritual leadership is nothing like the world's leadership. He told them that the Gentile notion of authority and rule would not be found among them. They would function according to a higher principle (Mark 10:42-45). Spiritual leadership has to do with serving – with discerning those with spiritual capacities, and, through edification and encouragement, enabling them to fill the role for which God has suited them. That is what Jesus did with His apostles.

THEY SENT THEM AWAY

“ 3 And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.”

The apparent response of the brethren to whom this word was delivered, was immediate. Their hearts and minds had been cultured to recognize not only the truth, but the direction Author of it as well. I have frequently heard self-acclaimed spiritual leaders quote Solomon in their effort to teach the people: “in the multitude of counselors there is safety” (Prov 11:14; 24:6). And again, “Without counsel purposes are disappointed: but in the multitude of counselors they are established” (Prov 15:22). However, that does not apply in the Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. On one occasion, many counselors advised Paul not to go to Jerusalem (Acts 21:12). However, Paul ignored their counsel, choosing to go to Jerusalem anyway. When the brethren saw his determination, they wisely said, “The will of the Lord be done” (Acts 21:13-14).

The only time counselors have any value is when the will of the Lord is not known – and even then, they are required to be godly. Even then, those who have access to God ought to first make inquiry of Him. There is far too much worldly wisdom being carried about and perpetrated within the professed church. We certainly need no more of it.

The point to be seen here is that these men recognized the validity of the call of the Spirit, and set out immediately to obey it. It goes without saying that there was no question concerning the abilities or commitment of Barnabas and Saul. They had demonstrated their devotion to the Lord among the saints, and their comprehension of the will of the Lord was unquestionable.

AND WHEN THEY HAD FASTED AND PRAYED

“And when they had fasted and prayed . . .” Other versions read, “having fasted and prayed,” NKJV “after they had fasted and prayed,” NIV “after prayer and going without food,” BBE “completing their fasting and prayer,” NAB “after more fasting and prayer,” NLT “the congregation fasted and prayed,” IE “after further fasting and prayer,” PHILLIPS and “Everyone prayed and went without eating for a while longer.” CEV

Some of the versions of Scripture introduce confusion into the text by putting their interpretation into it. One such misrepresentation is that the men in question continued on with the praying and fasting in which they were already engaged (NAB, CEV).

Consecration, dedication, and separation do have a certain formality embedded in them. In this the attention of the people is drawn toward the work at hand – a work set in motion by the Lord. The gravity of the situation is seen, and everything associated with the work is identified with the Lord who ordained it.

This season of fasting and prayer was in response to the Spirit's command to “separate” Barnabas and Saul to the work to which He had called them. This time was like a line of demarcation in the history of the church. It represented a special initiative toward the Gentile world, and introduces a new thrust in the book of Acts. Through these two men, “the door of faith” would be opened to the Gentiles (Acts 14:27).

I see no reason to doubt the general consensus of godly men who have considered this text to be referring to a special period of time set aside for the separation of Barnabas and Saul to the work for which the Spirit had called them. We do not know the length of the period given to prayer and fasting. I assume that it was not a lengthy period, for the will of the Lord had already been revealed to them. This was the means through which they prepared themselves for joining in the work by undergirding it and seeking grace to help in the time of need. Others also made a practice of recommending, or committing, people “to the grace of God” (Acts 14:26; 15:40).

More Than A Mere Formality

The occasion was more than a mere formality, although it was certainly associated with formality. Consecration, dedication, and separation do have a certain formality embedded in them. In this the attention of the people is drawn toward the work at hand – a work set in motion by the Lord. The gravity of the situation is seen, and everything associated with the work is identified with the Lord who ordained it. I do not doubt that they asked the Lord to provide everything that was required for the mission of the Spirit to be fulfilled. It is certainly not the manner of the Kingdom to take such provisions for granted. Even our blessed Lord spent the night in prayer before He chose His twelve apostles. As it is written, “And it came to pass in those days, that He went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, He called unto him his disciples: and of them He chose twelve, whom also He named apostles” (Luke 6:12-13).

Prefigured in The Tabernacle

Of old time, when Moses prepared the Tabernacle for use, he first sanctified all of the vessels that were to be used in its service. “And Moses took the anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle and all that was therein, and sanctified them” (Lev 8:10). And again, “And it came to pass on the day that Moses had fully set up the tabernacle, and had anointed it, and sanctified it, and all the instruments thereof, both the altar and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them, and sanctified them” (Num 7:1).

Further, God revealed to Moses that He had sanctified Aaron and his sons to minister to Him in the priest’s office: “And I will sanctify the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar: I will sanctify also both Aaron and his sons, to minister to me in the priest’s office” (Ex 29:44). In a rather elaborate ceremony (Ex 29:1-44), Moses set Aaron and his sons apart to this ministry. During that ceremony Moses was commanded to “take of the blood that is upon the altar, and of the anointing oil, and sprinkle it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon the garments of his sons with him: and he shall be hallowed, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons’ garments with him” (Ex 29:21).

Moses was brought to a keen realization of the gravity of anything or anyone set apart to the service of God. Among the Jews, this recognition was fostered and developed.

- High priests were anointed (Num 35:25).
- Priests were anointed (Lev 4:3).
- Kings were anointed (Judges 9:8; 1 Sam 15:1; 2 Sam 2:4; 1 Kgs 1:39).
- Prophets were anointed (1 Kgs 19:16).

In a day of religious professionalism, there appears to be little awareness of the seriousness of being called into Divine service. These days it is not uncommon for men to be set apart by colleges, seminaries, and certificates. This text is in sharp contrast with actions fostered by such an impersonal

AND LAID THEIR HANDS ON THEM

“ . . . and laid their hands on them . . .” Other versions read, “laid hands on them,” NKJV “placed their hands on them,” NIV “imposing their hands upon them,” DOUAY “Simeon, Lucius, and Manaen placed their hands on Barnabas and Saul,” GWN “put their hands on them,” TNT and “and the laying on of hands.” WEYMOUTH

Sanctity

There is a certain sanctity and solemnity associated with “pure religion.” These qualities assist in freeing us from the dreaded effects of casualness and normality. There is something about informality and casualness that tend to erode spiritual sensitivity. If not carefully guarded, they are like doors through which carnality can enter.

We assume that Simeon, Lucius, and Manaen placed their hands on Barnabas and Saul, setting them apart for the work to which the Spirit had called them. In a sense, they were the lesser, for it was Barnabas and Saul who had taught them, and nurtured them in the Lord. Yet here we find an example of a principle Jesus declared: “But many that are first shall be last; and the last first” (Mark 10:31). That is a broad principle that is applied to many circumstances. Later Paul will say of the apostles, “For I think that God hath set forth us the apostles last, as it were appointed to death: for we are made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men” (1 Cor 4:9). Yet, in reality, God has placed them, “first” in the church (1 Cor 12:28).

So it is in our text, that those whom the Spirit had chosen for a special work were set apart by those who were not engaged directly in that mission. However, you will find no objections being registered by Barnabas and Saul. They do not ask for the church to send for the apostles to set them apart. Saul might well have recalled how he himself had been set apart to the apostleship by “a certain disciple” named Ananias (Acts 9:10-18). Now, in a spiritually formal setting, he is being readied to launch into his apostolic work by the laying on of the hands of certain prophets in Antioch, who were not themselves apostles.

Timothy was also set apart, receiving a spiritual gift “by prophecy, and by the laying on hands of the presbytery” (1 Tim 4:14).

The “laying on of hands” is one of the elemental principles of “the doctrine of Christ” (Heb 6:2).

- Jesus laid His hands on little children and blessed them (Matt 19:13,15).
- Jesus was noted for laying hands on some He healed or raised from the dead (Mk 5:23; Matt 9:18).
- Jesus laid His hands on some who were sick and healed them (Mk 6:5).
- Paul laid hands on the Publius and healed him (Acts 28:8).
- Men were ordained to holy work by the laying on of hands (Acts 6:6; 1 Tim 5:22).
- The apostles, on occasion, imparted the Holy Spirit through the laying on of hands (Acts 8:17,19; 19:6).

What is it that is common in all of these reports concerning the laying on of hands? It is this: that the benefit realized came from outside of the efforts of the individual themselves. Whether it was the sick, the dead, or the ones set apart for a particular office or work, they were parties who were acted upon.

I have never been satisfied with the standard commentaries on this subject. They seem to leave us with nothing more than a knowledge of the various occasions during which the laying on of hands took place. I have already mentioned the ones having to do with the time from Jesus forward. What is it that is common in all of these reports concerning the laying on of hands? It is this: that the benefit realized came from outside of the efforts of the individual themselves. Whether it was the sick, the dead, or the ones set apart for a particular office or work, they were parties who were acted upon .

No person of understanding will affirm that such a procedure has become obsolete – any more than baptism, faith toward God, repentance from dead works, etc. have been rendered out-of-date. However, spiritual maturity involves personally taking hold of the things of God, not always relying on another party bringing about the needed change. The laying on of hands has to do with initiating a work, not completing it. However, those in whom a work is begun are to “go on to perfection,” entering into the work, and growing up into Christ in all things. In this way, they are not lingering in the vestibule where the laying on of hands takes place.

Formalities Under the Law

Under the Law, God taught people about holy preparation. At Sinai, the Lord instructed Moses to tell the people to prepare themselves for the giving of the Law by washing their clothes (Ex 19:10). Men were admonished “do not come near your wives” NKJV (Ex 19:15).

Before entering into Canaan, when the blessings and cursings of the Law were read to the people, it was a formal occasion. Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Joseph, and Benjamin stood on Mount Gerizim (Deut 27:12). Reuben, Gad, and Asher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali stood on Mount Ebal (Deut 27:13). While they were there, the Levites solemnly read all of the blessings and cursing “with a loud voice.” All of the people were commanded to “answer, and say Amen” (Deut 27:14-15). There was certainly nothing casual about that occasion!

During the time of Nehemiah, the solemnity of holy occasions was restored after a long period of captivity. On a specific day, “the seed of Israel separated themselves from all strangers, and stood and confessed their sins and the iniquities of their fathers.” During that occasion the Levites “read in the book of the Law of the Lord their God one fourth part of the day; and another fourth part they confessed and worshiped the Lord

This being the case, it appears to me that the approaching “day” is actually the first day of the week, during which we enjoy communion with the body and blood of the Lord, and teach and admonish one another.

their God ” (Neh 9:1-3).

These occasions will suffice to illustrate how holy and sensitive people approached special words and special occasions. They would first free themselves from the formalities of life, then concentrate on the subject at hand.

Under the New Covenant

Under the New Covenant, holy preparations are elevated and intensified. The people are exhorted “gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 1:13). When they “come together,” they are to see to it that it is “for the better” and not “for the worse” (1 Cor 11:17). Paul spoke of an assembly, when “the whole church be come together into one place,” at which time they would “all prophesy” (1 Cor 14:23). In such an environment, no unintelligible utterances were permitted unless they had been interpreted (1 Cor 14:26). He allowed for no carnal disruption (1 Cor 14:34). It was an environment in which things could be revealed to key people (1 Cor 14:30), and where prophets were to speak

“one by one,” with no more than two or three speaking, while the other prophets “judged” what they said (1 Cor 14:29-31). I do not know how such things could possibly be accomplished in a casual atmosphere.

While no person of faith is inclined to mandate rules or decorum for the assembly of the righteous, it seems to me that it is more than appropriate for people to ready themselves for such occasions. It is a great disadvantage to venture unprepared into the assembly of the righteous. This is one of the reasons for the exhortation, “And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching” (Heb 10:24-25). There have been a variety of views concerning “the day approaching” – which day is that? Some have considered it to be the second coming of Christ. Others have thought it so be the destruction of Jerusalem, which was imminent at the writing the epistle to the Hebrews. Still others consider it to be the day of death or the day of judgment.

However, none of these seem to fit well into the text, and appear to me to be forced interpretations. The reason for the exhortation is given in verse twenty-six: “For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins” (Heb 10:26). That is an ongoing jeopardy, as long as we are in the body. In view of this statement, it seems to me that the point of the exhortation is avail ourselves of the means through which we are brought to spiritual maturity. According apostolic doctrine, this is accomplished through the body of Christ, through which the Head ministers through various members. This being the case, it appears to me that the approaching “day” is actually the first day of the week, during which we enjoy communion with the body and blood of the Lord (1 Cor 10:16), and teach and admonish one another (Col 3:16). As that day approaches, it is in order to exhort one another to avail ourselves of the appointed advantages of that day.

THEY SENT THEM AWAY

“ . . . they sent them away.” Other versions read, “sent them off,” NIV “Sent them on their way,” NLT “let them go,” PNT “sent them out,” WEYMOUTH and “Set them free for this work.” PHILLIPS

That is, they sent Barnabas and Saul away to do the work to which the Spirit had called them. They recognized that these unusual men were not merely leaving them, but were going out to do the work of the Lord. This work was not defined by them, but by the Holy Spirit. In this case, it was not a burden that had been especially placed upon them, or upon which they had given considerable thought. This mission was a revelation.

THEY DEPARTED, BEING SENT FORTH BY THE HOLY SPIRIT

“ 4 So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus.”

The specific directions of the Spirit for this mission are not revealed to us – although they doubtless were the two. In some way Barnabas and Saul knew where to go, and thus they left Antioch, and set out to do the work for which they had been separated.

BEING SENT FORTH BY THE HOLY SPIRIT

“So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost . . .” Other versions read, “being sent out by the Holy Spirit,” NKJV “Sent on their way by the Holy Spirit,” NIV “sent on their mission by the Holy Spirit,” NJB “directed by the Holy Spirit,” LIVING and “sent at the Holy Spirit’s command.” PHILLIPS

The role of the Holy Spirit in the life of the body of Christ must not be understated. He is the One through whom the Head of the body directs its members. Thus far in the book of Acts attention has been drawn to His prodigious work.

- Prior to His ascension, Jesus gave commandments to the apostles through the Holy Spirit (Acts 1:2).
- Jesus said the disciples would receive power after the Holy Spirit had come upon them (Acts 1:8).
- The Spirit filled the disciples on the day of Pentecost, enabling them to speak the wonderful works of God in languages they had not learned (Acts 2:4,11).
- Those calling upon the name of the Lord were told that, upon their repentance and baptism, they would receive the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:38).
- The Spirit filled Peter, empowering him to respond powerfully and insightfully to the Jewish council (Acts 4:8).
- When the disciples assembled and prayed for power, they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and spoke the word of God with boldness (Acts 4:31).
- When Peter rebuked Ananias for misrepresenting the gift he had given, he said he had lied to the Holy Spirit (Acts 5:3).
- When Peter rebuked Sapphira for her role in the deception, he said she had tempted the Holy Spirit (Acts 5:9).
- Peter declared that God gives the Holy Spirit to those who obey Him (Acts 5:32).
- Those who were chosen to administer the food distribution were required to be full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom (Acts 6:3).
- Stephen was full of the Holy Spirit and faith (Acts 6:5).
- Stephen charged the unbelieving Jews with resisting the Holy Spirit (Acts 7:51).
- When Stephen was dying, he was full of the Holy Spirit, and saw heaven opened, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God (Acts 7:55).
- Peter and John were sent to Samaria to ensure that the believers received the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:15-17).
- The Holy Spirit directed Philip to join himself to the chariot in which the eunuch was riding (Acts 8:29).
- The Spirit of the Lord caught Philip away following the baptism of the eunuch (Acts 8:39).
- Ananias came to Saul of Tarsus in order that he might be filled with the Holy Spirit (Acts 9:17).

These are records of the real church – the one that Jesus is building. As you can see, the Holy Spirit was prominent in the work from the very beginning. In view of these things, it is exceedingly difficult to understand why so little sound teaching is being given to the church

- The Holy Spirit comforted the churches in Judea, Galilee, and Samaria (Acts 9:31).
- The Holy Spirit directed Peter to go with the men sent to him by Cornelius (Acts 10:19; 11:12).
- The Holy Spirit fell on those in Cornelius house while Peter was preaching (Acts 10:44; 11:15).

- Peter declared that the gift of the Holy Spirit had been poured out upon the Gentiles (Acts 10:16).
- Barnabas is described as a good man, full of the Holy Spirit and faith (Acts 11:24).
- The Holy Spirit moved Agabus to speak of a coming famine (Acts 11:26).
- The Holy Spirit commanded the brethren in Antioch to separate Barnabas and Saul for the work to which He had appointed them (Acts 13:2,4).

These are records of the real church – the one that Jesus is building. As you can see, the Holy Spirit was prominent in the work from the very beginning. In view of these things, it is exceedingly difficult to understand why so little sound teaching is being given to the church these days concerning the Holy Spirit. He is still prominent in spiritual life. That is precisely why we are warned not to quench or grieve Him (Eph 4:30; 1 Thess 5:19).

Ponder what the Spirit of God is represented as doing in those who are in Christ Jesus.

- The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit (Rom 5:5).
- Spiritual mindedness consists of minding the things of the Spirit (Rom 8:1,4).
- If a person does not have the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His (Rom 8:9).
- We mortify the deeds of the body through the Spirit (Rom 8:13).
- We are led by the Spirit (Rom 8:14; Gal 5:18).
- The Holy Spirit bears witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God (Rom 8:16).
- The Holy Spirit intercedes for us when we do not know what we should pray for (Rom 8:26-27).
- We have joy through the Holy Spirit (Rom 14:17).
- We abound in hope through the power of the Holy Spirit (Rom 15:13).
- The offering up of the Gentiles was sanctified by the Holy Spirit (Rom 15:16).
- Collective believers are the temple of God, and the Holy Spirit dwells in them (1 Cor 3:16).
- We are washed, sanctified, and justified by the Spirit (1 Cor 6:11).
- Our bodies are the temple of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor 6:19).
- We say that Jesus is the Lord by the Holy Spirit (1 Cor 12:3).
- Spiritual gifts are given by the Spirit (1 Cor 12:8-11).
- The Holy Spirit has been given to us as an earnest of what is to come (2 Cor 1:22).
- Believers are the epistle of Christ, written with the Spirit of the living God (2 Cor 3:3).
- Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty (2 Cor 3:17).
- We are changed from one stage of glory to another by the Spirit (2 Cor 3:18).
- Spiritual life includes the communion of the Holy Spirit (2 Cor 13:14).
- Because we are His sons, God has sent the Holy Spirit into our hearts (Gal 4:6).
- Through the Spirit we are waiting for the hope of righteousness (Gal 5:5).
- The Holy Spirit produces fruit in believers (Gal 5:22-23; Eph 5:9).

- It is through the Spirit that we will reap eternal life (Gal 6:8).
- The Holy Spirit lusts against the flesh (Gal 5:17).
- We have access to the Father by the Spirit (Eph 2:18).
- We are built together for a habitation of God through the Spirit (Eph 2:22).
- We are strengthened by the Holy Spirit in the inner man, so Christ can dwell in our hearts by faith (Eph 3:16).
- The Holy Spirit is the author of unity (Eph 4:3).
- Believers are admonished to be filled with the Spirit (Eph 5:18).
- The Word of God is the sword of the Spirit (Eph 6:17).
- Prayer and supplication are made in the Spirit (Eph 6:18).
- Our fellowship is in the Spirit (Phil 2:1),
- Our love for one another is in the Spirit (Col 1:8).
- God chooses men to salvation through the sanctification of the Spirit and the belief of the truth (2 Thess 2:13).
- The things that have been given to us are kept by the Holy Spirit (2 Tim 1:14).
- God saves us by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Spirit (Tit 3:5).
- We obey the truth through the Spirit (1 Pet 1:22).
- We build ourselves up in the most holy faith, praying in the Holy Spirit (Jude 1:20).

Not A Strange Thing

As ought to be abundantly apparent, the history recorded in the book of Acts perfectly accords with the declarations of the prophets, the promises of Jesus, and apostolic doctrine. It should not sound strange when we read of the Holy Spirit calling for people to do a work, and then sending them forth through the instrumentality of men.

By yielding to the Spirit, the brethren entered into the work of the Lord: the prophets by setting them apart, and Barnabas and Saul by submitting to His leadership.

A professed church in which the Holy Spirit is not active is really no church at all. I do not know that it can be established that a body of people in whom, over an extended period of time, little or no evidence is found of the Lord's presence can be appropriately called a "church." The degree of His activity is determined by the faith of the people – and the faith of the people is dependent upon the declaration of the Gospel through, which faith comes (Rom 10:17) and is sustained (Rom 16:26) . The implications of these realities are quite alarming.

THEY DEPARTED . . . AND SAILED

“ . . . departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus.”

Seleucia was located close to Antioch, and was a seaport city from which Barnabas and Saul could disembark. The text indicates that their departure took place within a short period of time, and with no extensive delays.

In this book, there is a consistent pattern of behavior seen in the responses of believers. As soon as the will of God was clear, those with faith acted upon that revelation. The insensitivity, obtuseness, and delays to which contemporary Christians have grown accustomed, are not found in this inspired record of God working among His people. Obedience was the norm, and disobedience was the exception. Eagerness to do the will of God was the standard, and a lack of such avidness was unusual.

Thus, with holy dispatch, Barnabas and Saul set out for the island of Cyprus, approximately 150 miles from Antioch.

THEY PREACHED IN THE SYNAGOGUES

“ 5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also John to their minister.”

As you read this text you sense the presence of holy confidence. These two men do not grope about, attempting to determine what they ought to do. They get to the work of the Lord as soon as they arrive on Cyprus, making no delay.

SALAMIS

“And when they were at Salamis . . .” Other versions read, “arrived in Salamis,” NKJV “reached Salamis,” NASB “after landing in Salamis,” CJB “being in Salamis,” DARBY “when they were come to Salamis,” DOUAY “arriving in the city of Salamis,” NAB and “having come into Salamis.” YLT

This was a city at the east end of Cyprus, and was apparently the sea port receiving the vessel on which Barnabas and Saul sailed. Cyprus was also the native country of Barnabas (Acts 4:36). Certain who had been scattered by “the persecution that arose about Stephen” had also been here, and preached the Word of God, doing so only to the Jews (Acts 11:19-20). History attests that there was a large Jewish constituency on this Island. This was a city of significant size, and was the place where great copper mines were located, and from which copper was sent to Herod the Great. McClintok-Strong’s

THEY PREACHED THE WORD OF GOD

“ . . . they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews . . .” Other versions read, “they began to proclaim,” NASB “they proclaimed,” NIV “They announced,” DARBY “began to spread,” GWN “they showed,” TNT and “they declared.” YLT

The Greek word translated “preached” is a significant one: kath,ggellon (kat-ang-gel-lov). The lexical definition of the word is, “to announce, declare, promulgate, make known; to proclaim publicly, publish,” THAYER “proclaim (solemnly), announce something (AC 4.2); (2) proclaim, tell about someone,” FRIBERG and “proclaim, make known, preach; teach, advocate.” UBS This word is used several times in Scripture. Here are some samples. The English word derived from this expression is highlighted.

- “ . . . they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. (Acts 4:2).
- “Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins” (Acts 13:38).
- “Opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom I preach unto you, is Christ” (Acts 17:3).
- “For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription,

TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you” (Acts 17:23).

- “That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles” (Acts 26:23).

- “First, I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world” (Rom 1:8).

- “Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel” (1 Cor 9:14).

- “For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come” (1 Cor 11:26).

- “Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus” (Col 1:28).

The distinction in this word is found in the fact that it deals with the announcement, or proclamation, of existing realities – not something that can be, or ought to be, but IS! This is what might be called objective reality. It is not the proclamation of possibilities or probabilities, but of fixed and unwavering realities.

Barnabas and Saul were busy reporting “the wonderful works of God,” as did the disciples on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:11). They did not bring a message of earthly solutions, but one of eternal relevance. Whether men were going to die on the day they heard their message, or live on for another hundred years, the message was still relevant. Whether they were experiencing domestic difficulties, or were experiencing domestic joy and tranquility, the message being delivered was critical, and was to be received.

The Gospel addresses the human circumstance as assessed by the Lord Himself, and needs no philosophical elaboration. The condition is appraised in no uncertain words. Here are some statements of the human situation.

- Men are in blind to spiritual realities (Acts 26:18a).
- Men are in moral and spiritual darkness (Acts 26:18b).
- Men are dominated by the power of Satan (Acts 26:18c).
- Men need the forgiveness of sins (Acts 26:18d).
- Men are dead in trespasses and sins (Eph 2:1).
- Men are alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them (Eph 4:18).
- Men are without God and without hope in the world (Eph 2:12).

Any ministry to lost men that ignores this situation, or presents some other scenario, is off-center, and will ultimately lead away from Christ. This is why there is such a thing as preaching, announcing, or proclaiming. That is delivering a word that has been mandated by God. It is a report of the record God has given of His Son (1 John 5:10-11). The Holy Spirit did not separate Barnabas and Saul to give advice, deliver counsel, or resolve social and domestic dilemmas. They were not marital counselors or financial advisors. They were sent to proclaim a message that was encapsulated in the Person of Jesus.

It appears to me that the burden of modern day representations of preaching are largely pragmatic – i.e. dealing with practical matters or affairs rather than facts. Jesus is being presented a solution to temporal circumstances, rather than the Son of God who has accomplished the will of God. Listening to some of the preaching of our day, one senses that the speaker really does not have anything to say – no message to proclaim. Preachers are rather being presented as diagnosticians who are marketing practical resolutions to every-day problems. Among them are gurus of marriage, finance, child-rearing, career development, church planting, missions, and the likes. Apart from the difficulties and vicissitudes of life, they really do not have much to say. If the people were actually to avail themselves of the salvation of God, and grow up into Christ, such men would have nothing left to do. Whatever may be said in defense of such activity, this is not the kind of thing that is reported in Scripture. When holy men of God dealt with problems and difficulties within the church, it was always because they impinged upon one's relationship with God through Christ. In our day, that relationship is taken for granted, and difficulties are being addressed as though their resolution was an end of themselves. If, in fact, there really was no heaven and no hell, these teachers would not need to change their message. They could continue on without any interruption.

The Synagogues

This is the second city that is declared to have had multiple synagogues – the city of Damascus being the other one (Acts 9:2,20). The presence of a multiplicity of synagogues suggests there was a large contingency of Jews in Salamis.

It is of interest that Jesus, the apostles, and other Divinely called preachers, consistently went into the synagogues to preach (Matt 4:23; 9:35; 12:9; 13:54; Lk 4:15; 13:10; Acts 9:20; 13:5,14; 14:1; 17:1-2,10,17; 18:4,19,26; 19:8). Following Jesus' enthronement in glory, the Gospel consistently went "to the Jew first" (Rom 1:16). Following that, there was also a presentation to "devout" people, who evidenced some propensity toward God (i.g. Acts 8:27; 10:2; 17:4,17).

My intention is not to codify the approach to preaching the Gospel. Rather, I only intend to show the manner in which Holy-Spirit-led preaching was carried out – and it is fairly consistent.

Current Evangelical Weaknesses

These days, we are faced with evangelical thrusts that come short of the objectives God has revealed. Such things as youth ministries, children's ministries, ministries to those enslaved to various forms of sin, and ministries to the poor and downtrodden, are certainly not wrong. However, they do have a down-side: namely that they tend to be circular in their results. That is, as new converts are made, old ones drop through the floor of neglect. The end result is that the purported minister never gets to the feeding and nurturing level. This is largely owing to the perpetual influx of those with little or no former commitment to the appropriation of the knowledge of God. The result is that co-laborers from among the ranks of those who are the focus of the ministry rarely occur. For this reason, continual calls to believers in other areas are made to come and assist in the work. Some ministries of this kind have continued in this mode for decades, and they are still viewed as a kind of normal and legitimate Kingdom activity.

However, in the book of Acts you will not find this kind of circumstance. Fellow laborers came from the ranks of the converts, whether in Jerusalem or other regions. The first reported laborers came from those who walked with Jesus during His prodigious ministry. The first official servants, appointed over the daily distribution of food, came from the Jerusalem church itself. In our text, those who were sent out were among the brethren in Antioch at that time. John Mark, who also attended Barnabas and Saul, was from the Jerusalem congregation. Barnabas was as well. Timothy was garnered from the brethren in Lystra and Iconium. The church at Jerusalem had "chief men" among them with Paul and Barnabas. Silas was one of them (Acts 15:22). Onesimus and Epaphras, productive laborers for the Lord, came from the Colossian church (Col 4:9,12). These, and similar, people were not hired by the church, but were produced by it!

The point here is that a Christian work or church that is not producing competent proclaimers and leaders is a kind of spiritual aberration. There may be a lot of people associated with such a group, as well as an impressive outlay of finances for others. However, if competent and informed brethren are not being developed, something is seriously wrong.

The point here is that a Christian work or church that is not producing competent proclaimers and leaders is a kind of spiritual aberration. There may be a lot of people associated with such a group, as well as an impressive outlay of finances for others. However, if competent and informed brethren are not being developed, something is seriously wrong. The Word of God itself is designed to make the man of God “perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works” (2 Tim 3:17). No amount of religious activity can compensate for the lack of such results.

As I perceive the situation, it is an understanding of these things that compelled the early preachers and teachers to conduct their minister as they did. Should a contemporary situation arise where the Lord opens doors of opportunity to labor in His Kingdom, it is the business of the church to be ready send forth the required workers. It is to be understood that they must have a thorough acquaintance with the Word of God, and possess an understanding of the purpose of God, and of God Himself.

What we are reading in this text is a sterling example of that kind of thing taking place.

THEY HAD ALSO JOHN AS THEIR MINISTER

“ . . . and they had also John to their minister.” Other versions read, “as their assistant,” NKJV “as their helper,” NASB “to assist them,” NRSV “as their attendant,” ASV “an attendant to assist them,” AMPLIFIED and “subservant,” INTERLINEAR

The word “minister” is translated from a unique Greek word: u`phre,thn (hoop-ay-ret-ain). The lexical meaning of the word is “an under rower, subordinate rower. b. anyone who serves with his hands; a servant,” THAYER and “one who acts under orders of another to carry out his will, assistant, helper.” FRIBERG As used in Scripture this kind of servant is carrying out the will of another – being employed as a servant of someone with greater authority, insight, and commission than themselves. Such service could range from menial, but necessary tasks, such as transporting goods and possessions, to delivering a word from the one they were serving, and sharing in some of the lesser responsibilities.

In the United States, we are not accustomed to such a role being played by the younger. However, this is a custom that still prevails in the eastern countries. As a point of interest, that is the part of the world in which every known Divine initiative took place. Samples include the following.

- The Garden of Eden.
- Noah, and the repopulation of the earth.
- The calling of Abraham.
- The establishment of the Jewish nation.
- The giving of the Law.
- The giving of the holy land to Israel.
- The ministry of the Prophets.
- The ministry of John the Baptist.
- The entrance of Jesus into the world, His ministry, His death, burial, resurrection, and ascension.
- The calling and commissioning of the apostles.
- The initial outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

- The establishment of the church.
- The inclusion of the Gentiles in the salvation of God.
- The calling of Paul the apostle.
- The launching of a Gospel initiative into all the world.

Awareness of this manner of Divine workings casts a different light on the manners and customs of people living in that part of the world. While this is not something of which an issue should be made, consider the following. It is possible that many of the unique customs of that part of the world are owing to the impact of Divine workings. Also, I do not know how an intelligent grasp of Jesus as the “Servant” of God (Isa 42:1; 49:6; 50:10; 52:13; 53:11) can be obtained within the framework of our culture,

Mark, the Servant

As the servant of Barnabas and Saul, John Mark was exposed to the focus and demeanor of godly workers. He witnessed their priorities, the sacrificial nature of their lives, and what is involved in serving the Lord. He was made privy to spiritual maturity, and no doubt felt a tug upward, while beholding the distance that existed between the world and those who are aligned with the God of heaven.

Specialized ministries that surround the immature with their peers forfeit all of these advantages. Furthermore, when the objective of any proposed ministry is to entertain, feed worldly interests, and the likes whatever is being served, it is not the revealed will of God. I realize this is not a popular view, but it is appropriate to draw our attention to these things.

A FALSE PROPHET IS ENCOUNTERED

“ 6 And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Barjesus: 7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God.”

Barnabas and Saul assaulted the Island of Cyprus, blitzing it with the Gospel, and with apparent aggressiveness. They had set out to do the work to which the Holy Spirit Himself had called them, and they were doing it with zeal.

THROUGH THE ISLE TO PAPHOS

“ And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos . . .” Other versions read, “gone through the whole island as far as Paphos,” NASB “traveled through the whole island until they came to Paphos,” NIV “made their way throughout the whole island. They ended up in Paphos,” CJB “They traveled the whole length of the island, and at Paphos,” NJB and “they preached from town to town across the entire island until finally they reached Paphos.” LIVING

This island was 140 miles long, and from 5-50 miles wide, the narrow width being on the east side.

This island was noted for its rich timber and other resources, and was a shipbuilding capital. It was a kind of crossroads for many merchants, which meant that any penetration by the Gospel would yield exponential results. “Its proximity to Asia Minor, Phoenicia, and Egypt, and its numerous havens, made it a general rendezvous for merchants . . . Among the mineral products were diamonds, emeralds, and other precious stones, alum, and asbestos; besides iron, lead, zinc, with a portion of silver, and, above all, copper, the farfamed oes Cyprium .” McCLINTOK STRONG’S

At that time, there were approximately 100 towns and villages on the island – at least fifty of them being port cities. The text suggest tat Barnabas and Saul began at the east side of the island and worked their way through all of the cities, preaching the Word until they reached the far western port city of Paphos.

“At this time Cyprus was in a state of considerable prosperity; it possessed good roads, especially one running from east to west through the whole length of the island, from Salamis to Paphos, along which Paul and Barnabas traveled; an extensive commerce, and it was the resort of pilgrims to the Paphian shrine from all parts of the world (Fairbairn).” McCLINTOK STRONG’S

The aggressiveness and thoroughness of Barnabas and Saul are arresting to consider. As was also characteristic of Paul throughout his life, they threw themselves wholeheartedly into to the work to which the Holy Spirit had called them. This as the grace of God working in them (1 Cor 15:10). From another point of view, it was Jesus Christ Himself living in them (Gal 2:20), just as He did when He walked among men, being seen of them. This is a consistent trait among those who have yielded their bodies to God as a living sacrifice.

THEY FOUND A CERTAIN SORCERER

“ . . . they found a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar jesus . . .” Other versions read, “a certain magician, a Jewish false prophet,” NASB “a certain wonder-worker and false prophet, a Jew,” BBE “a Jewish sorcerer and pseudo-prophet,” CJB “a Jewish man. . . an astrologer who claimed to be a prophet,” GWN “a Jewish sorcerer, a fake prophet,” LIVING “a Jewish man who did tricks of magic,” IE “a Jewish occult practitioner and false prophet,” ISV and “a certain Jewish wizard or sorcerer, a false prophet.” AMPLIFIED

Sorcery was practiced by the Egyptians (Ex 7:11) and the Chaldeans (Dan 2:2). It was an occultic practice that employed unlawful means to obtain knowledge. It was soundly condemned under the Old Covenant (Jer 27:9). Sorcerers are identified as having a part in “the lake the burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death” (Rev 21:8). God had declared He will come against sorcerers (Mal 3:5), and that they are forever outside, and excluded from, the city of God (Rev 22:15). This sin is associated with divination, which is “a general term descriptive of the various illusory arts anciently practiced for the discovery of things secret or future.” McCLINTOK-STRONG’S This involved a Satanic means of obtaining knowledge and understanding, and was soundly condemned by the Lord. “There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination unto the LORD: and because of these abominations the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee” (Deut 18:10-12).

I do understand that there is a notion afoot in the Christian community that views all such transgressions as nothing more than imaginations and tricks – like our modern magicians. While some of that may be involved, this is not always the case. It is difficult to conceive of God condemning something that really did not exist. The Lord did speak of communications from the dead, and of their unlawfulness. “And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?” (Isa 8:19). This should not surprise us, for we are expressly taught that there are doctrines that are perpetrated by demons (1 Tim 4:1).

At any rate, we are here introduced to a man that trafficked in knowledge, but it was not lawful knowledge.

A Spiritual Invasion

It is evident that Barnabas and Saul had invaded a territory over which the powers of darkness were exercising considerable power. Just as Philip, Peter, and John encountered an aggressive worker of occultic arts, so Barnabas and Saul confront one. In the first instance, the “sorcerer” had bewitched the people of Samaria, exercising great influence (Acts 8:9). Now another of these men, also a false prophet and a Jew, is confronted by Barnabas and Saul. Note that the text says they “found” the sorcerer. That does not mean they were looking for him. Rather, it means that in the process of their preaching, while they were proclaiming the Word, this man surfaced.

No person should be surprised that Satan’s ministers surface when the truth is being preached. Truth is always a threat to the kingdom of darkness.

WHICH WAS WITH THE DEPUTY

“ . . . which was with the deputy of the country . . .” Other versions read, “who was with the proconsul,” NKJV “who was an attendant of the proconsul,” NIV “who was with the ruler,” BBE “he had attached himself to the governor,” CJB “associated with . . . the governor of the island,” GWN “adhered to . . . the proconsul,” MRD “which was with . . . the ruler of the country,” TNT “always stayed close to . . . the governor,” IE “was a friend of the proconsul,” WEYMOUTH “an intimate friend of the governor,” WILLIAMS “belong to the suite of the proconsul,” MONTGOMERY and “was closely associated with the proconsul.” AMPLIFIED

Some versions suggest that this man imposed himself upon the “deputy” – “attached himself to.” CJB Others leave the impression that this was a personal association – “a friend,” WEYMOUTH and “an intimate friend.” WILLIAMS The word from which “with” is translated is used in a variety of ways: denoting togetherness, inner agreement, close association, and someone who attends another. THAYER/FRIBERG In this text, I am assuming the sorcerer was in an official capacity, in some way being an advisor to the “deputy.”

The word translated “deputy” denotes a head of government in a Roman senatorial province, FRIBERG that is, a province under the control of the Roman Senate. LOUW-NIDA This man was, therefore, the key governmental authority on the island of Paphos.

SERGIUS PAULUS, A PRUDENT MAN

“ . . . Sergius Paulus, a prudent man . . .” Other versions read, “an intelligent man,” NKJV “a man of intelligence,” NASB “a man of understanding,” ASV “a wise man,” MRD “an extremely intelligent man,” NJB “a man of keen intelligence,” WEYMOUTH and “an intelligent and sensible man of sound understanding.” AMPLIFIED

Those who drift away from God do so in their minds. Those in Christ are noted for the way in which they think: “the law of my mind.” The one who is living by faith confesses, “with the mind I myself serve the law of God.” There is such a thing as being “spiritually minded.” We are admonished to be “renewed in the spirit of your mind.” In fact, in Christ we are given “a sound mind.”

The lexical meaning of the word translated “prudent” is “intelligent, having understanding, wise, learned,” THAYER “having understanding, intelligent, wise,” FRIBERG “pertaining to being able to understand and evaluate - 'intelligent, insightful, understanding,” LOUW-NIDA and “intelligent, wise, with good sense.” GINGRICH

The idea is that this man had a keen and disciplined mind, able to perceive critical matters, and effective in applying his understanding to matters with which he was acquainted. The surfacing of this man, together with what is said of him, once again underscores the thrust of those early labors, which were toward devout and thoughtful people.

A good mind is not an end of itself, but it is not to be disdained. It yields optimum benefit when it is focused upon the things of God, for they have been revealed for thoughtful people. Paul once told the Philippians, “think on these things” (Phil 4:8). He told young Timothy, “Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them” (1 Tim 4:15). The people of God must not content themselves with an approach to religion that does not challenge and engage the mind.

HE CALLED FOR BARNABAS AND SAUL

“ . . .who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God.” Other versions read “summoned,” NASB “sent for,” NIV “invited,” NLT “asked,” LIVING and “summoned to him.” AMPLIFIED The Word translated “called” means “to call to oneself; to bid to come to oneself,” THAYER It has an official tone to it, and is not a casual word, like one neighbor inviting another one to come to his house. It was an official invitation that was not tendered in a spirit of casualness.

And why did this intelligent ruler call for Barnabas and Saul? You may rest assured, it was not obtain some counsel about the affairs of government. We are told that he “desired to hear the word of God.” Among other things, this confirms that the word of God appeals to those with intelligent and inquiring minds. If men are to love the Lord with all of their mind (Mk 12:30), then it follows that the Word of God has a fundamental appeal to the mind. That is, it calls for the involvement of the mind of the people.

Those who drift away from God do so in their minds (Rom 1:28). Those in Christ are noted for the way in which they think: “the law of my mind” (Rom 7:23). The one who is living by faith confesses, “with the mind I myself serve the law of God” (Rom 7:25). There is such a thing as being “spiritually minded” (Rom 8:6). We are admonished to be “renewed in the spirit of your mind” (Eph 4:23). In fact, in Christ we are given “a sound mind” (2 Tim 1:7).

There is a form of Christianity being perpetrated these days that has little or no appeal to devout and thoughtful people. There is too much childishness in such appeals. This is also true of the advancement of rules and procedures. Of course, such regulations are required when men are navigating in unknown waters, and are not sure of themselves.

Sergius Paulus did not inquire about some methodology that Paul and Barnabas were advancing. He was not looking for a way to be a better governor. He wanted to hear “the word of God.” we do not know how he came to know of Barnabas and Saul. However, we do know the associations he made with them. They were speaking “the Word of God” – that is, what the God of heaven had made known. The thing for which they were noted was preaching the Word of God. Oh, that more were like that.

HE SOUGHT TO TURN HIM FROM THE FAITH

“ 8 But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.”

Those who are dominated by the devil are not indifferent to the proclamation of the Word of the Lord. Whether such individuals surface in an intellectual environment, or one of pleasure or immorality, the Word of God awakens their hostility against the Lord. The carnal mind is “enmity against God” (Rom 8:7). It will break forth against what God has said, and do so aggressively. This is what will happen in our text.

He was dominated by the carnal mind, and the Word of God had awakened the hostility of that mind, for he was not subject to the law of God, neither was such a thing even possible.

It ought to be noted that any attempt to placate a carnal mind is nothing more than foolishness.

Those who make such attempts are forced to diminish the importance of and reference to the Word of God. They pretend as though this is done in the interest of influencing people for God. However, they forget that such approaches confirm their lack of allegiance to the Lord Himself. His mandate is “preach the Word,” being “instant in season, and out of season” – or being “persistent whether the time is favorable or unfavorable” NIV (2 Tim 4:2). The modern church, for the most part, has not done well in this matter. This is largely owing to the changing of its agenda. When the fundamental aim is to help people, as opposed to serving God, the soul is set adrift on the raging sea of error. This is why Paul strongly affirmed, “Now am I trying to win the favor of men, or of God? Do I seek to please men? If I were still seeking popularity with men, I should not be a bond servant of Christ (the Messiah)” AMPLIFIED (Gal 1:10).

HE WITHSTOOD BARNABAS AND SAUL

“But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them . . .” The name Barjesus means “son of Jesus,” which was a somewhat common name among the Jews (Col 4:11). This was the Greek form of Joshua (Heb 4:8). The name “Elymas” means “wise man.” He appears to have been noted for intelligent proclamations and insights – yet they were not lawful. His intelligence was found to be in conflict with the rationale that is made known in the Gospel.

Now, when Barnabas and Saul are declaring the Word of God to the governor, this man withstands them . Other versions read, “opposing them,” NASB “put himself against them,” BBE “tried to distort the meaning,” GWN “tried to stop them,” NJB and “interfered.” NLT To withstand or oppose means to set oneself against the individual, and to do so aggressively. What was declared by Barnabas and Saul contradicted what this “wise man” had been saying. Unwilling to consider what they were saying, he opposed it. He was dominated by the carnal mind, and the Word of God had awakened the hostility of that mind, for he was not subject to the law of God, neither was such a thing even possible (Rom 8:7).

SEEKING TO TURN THE DEPUTY FROM THE FAITH

“ . . . seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.” The Amplified Bible reads, “seeking to keep the proconsul from accepting the faith.” Here is a case where the heart of the governor was being drawn to Christ. God was giving him to believe (Phil 1:29), and faith was coming to him through the hearing of the Gospel (Rom 10:17).

Now this wicked man seeks to divert the attention of Sergius Paulus from the Word of God. There is a battle here, and the soul of a man is at stake. How will the men of God deal with this situation? Will they assume the sincerity of this opponent, and attempt to reason with him on the matter? Indeed, they do not!

Here is a child of the wicked one confronting sons of the Living God. Behold their reaction, and how they deal with such flagrant opposition.

SAUL CONFRONTS THE FALSE PROPHET

“ 9 Then Saul, (who also is called Paul,) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him, 10 And said, O full of all subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? 11 And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.”

The decisiveness and immediacy of this response confirms the seriousness of opposing the truth of God. It also corroborates the statement of Paul to Titus that there are some “whose mouths must be stopped” (Tit 1:11). This is not a case that requires gentleness, for this man is not opposing himself

(2 Tim 2:24-26) , but the servants of the Lord – and that is a matter of the greatest gravity. When arguments are presented to those inclined to the Lord to turn them aside, it is not to be treated lightly as though it was nothing more than a clash of intellects.

SAUL, FILLED WITH THE HOLY SPIRIT

“ Then Saul, (who also is called Paul,) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him . . .” Other versions read, “looked intently at him,” NKJV “fixed his gaze upon him,” NASB “looked straight at Elymas and said,” NIV “fastened his eyes on him,” ASV “looking hard at him,” BBE “stared straight at the sorcerer,” CSB “stared at Elymas,” GWN “glared angrily at the sorcerer and said,” LIVING “looked him straight in the eye,” ISV “gazed steadily at him,” MONTGOMERY and “looked steadily at [Elymas]” AMPLIFIED

While the devil was filling Elymas, the Holy Spirit was filling Paul,

The decisiveness and immediacy of this response confirms the seriousness of opposing the truth of God. It also corroborates the statement of Paul to Titus that there are some “whose mouths must be stopped.” This is not a case that requires gentleness, for this man is not opposing himself, but the servants of the Lord – and that is a matter of the greatest gravity.

and the battle was set in array. The words that will be spoken have come from the Holy Spirit, and reflect the attitude of the Lord toward those who would impede His Word.

This is the first time in all of the Bible that the name “Paul” is mentioned. Furthermore, apart from Paul recounting Jesus speaking to him on the road to Damascus (Acts 22:7,13; 26:14), this is the last time in the Bible he is referred to as “Saul.” Also, with the exceptions of Acts 14:12,14 and 15:12,25, from this point on, where Barnabas and Paul are referenced, Paul is mentioned before Barnabas (13:43,46,50; 15:2,22,35,36).

From this point on, the record in the book of Acts will focus on the activities and ministries of Paul.

THOU CHILD OF THE DEVIL

“And said, O full of all subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? “

What a bold and forthright declaration!

- Full of all subtlety. Other versions read “all deceit,” NKJV “all kinds of deceit,” NIV “all guile,” ASV :fraud,” CJB “utter fraud,” NJB and “master of every form deception and recklessness.” AMPLIFIED Here was a man Satan was holding captive (2 Tim 2:26), who was also “controlled by the sinful nature” NIV (Rom 8:7). Like the devil did with Eve, he was a master at making the lie attractive. There was no goodness or honesty in him, – not so much as a speck. He was “full of all subtlety,” misrepresentation, and deceit.

- Full of all mischief. Other versions read “fraud,” NKJV “trickery,” NIV “villainy,” NRSV “evil ways,” BBE “all craft,” DARBY schemes,” GWN “wrongdoing,” NET and “unscrupulousness, and wickedness.” AMPLIFIED The word from which “mischief” is translated means “1) ease in doing, faculty 2) levity or easiness in thinking or acting 2a) love of a lazy effeminate life 3) unscrupulous, cunning, mischief.” THAYER That is another way or referring to the “broad” way that “leadeth to destruction” (Matt 7:13). Sensing the aggressive nature of faith, Elymas sought to turn the governor to an easier and less difficult way – a way that allowed the flesh more leniency , and permitted the individual to maintain self interests above those of God. Such ways are still being pressed upon the people!

Notice the authority with which Paul speaks. This is something that proceeds from a profound fellowship with Christ and a staggering scope of spiritual understanding. In his measure, as the Lord Jesus did, Paul was doing the works that he saw God doing.

Thou child of the devil. Other versions read “son of the devil,” NKJV and “son of Satan.” CJB What a staggering description! In the garden of Eden, God spoke to the devil referring to his “seed” (Gen 3:15) – Elymas was one of them. Jesus said the tares were “the children of the wicked one” (Matt 13:38). He also said to the religious leaders of His day, “Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do” (John 8:44). John wrote, “He that sinneth is of the devil” (1 John 3:8). In this text, Paul recognized one of Satan’s own offspring, and declares plainly that this is the case.

- Thou enemy of all righteousness. Other versions read, “enemy of everything that is right,” NIV “hating all righteousness,” BBE “enemy of everything good,” CJB “You hate everything that has God’s approval,” GWN and “enemy of everything that is upright and good.” AMPLIFIED Just as righteousness and unrighteousness cannot mingle, and Christ and Belial cannot be in accord, so a person cannot embrace some of the truth while hating another part.

- Cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord. Other versions read, “perverting the straight ways of the Lord,” NKJV “make crooked the straight ways of the Lord,” NASB “turning people from the right ways of the Lord,” BBE and “twisting the straight paths of the Lord.” NAB It is not that the ways of God themselves can be perverted or corrupted. It is rather that they are misrepresented. Peter referred to this kind of action as wresting the Scripture, twisting it to say something it does not. He also adds, that those who so such things will be destroyed because they did so (2 Pet 3:16).

It seems to me that the church of our day could use a good dose of this kind of thinking. There is too much tolerance of corruption, and too little awareness of the seriousness of it.

THE HAND OF THE LORD IS UPON THEE

“And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season . . .”

Notice the authority with which Paul speaks. This is something that proceeds from a profound fellowship with Christ and a staggering scope of spiritual understanding. In his measure, as the Lord Jesus did, Paul was doing the works that he saw God doing (John 5:19).

I am affirming that Divine power cannot be employed for personal purposes. That being true, and considering that Paul was, in fact, filled with the Spirit on the occasion, several conclusions are in order.

- First, we are being exposed to the Lord’s reaction to the imposition or corrupt and unlawful knowledge and wisdom. Elymas was noted for being a “wise man,” for that is the meaning of the name “Elymas.”

- Second, here is an example of heaven’s view of those who attempt to turn people away from the faith. If you imagine that this has no relevance in our day, consider the efforts of secular education, various cults, and deceived teachers within the Christian community. Add to that the growing prominence of heathen religions like Islam and Buddhism, and corrupt forms of Christianity, like Mormonism and the Jehovah’s Witnesses. All of these are engaged in a gargantuan effort to turn people the faith. Ponder government rules and regulations that are designed to stifle the quest for and expression of faith.

- There is also the matter of the judgment of the Lord, imposed upon sinners. This man will have a condition forced upon him from heaven. Other individuals who experienced the imposition of judgment include Pharaoh, Uzzah, Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Ananias, and Sapphira.

- Here we have the fulfilment of First Timothy 5:24: “Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after” (1 Tim 5:24). Such sins must be judged immediately, for the sake of others – and the offenders must still stand before the Lord on the day of judgment.

- A judgment was poured out upon Elymas that matched his spiritual condition. Her was blind within, and now, for a season, he would be blind without.

- The fact that this blindness was only for a time suggests that during that period he was being given “space to repent” (Rev 2:21). It is also quite possible that the period would confirm that this man had passed beyond the possibility of repentance. Such a condition is mentioned in the Revelation of those who “repented not” even though great judgments were poured out upon them (Rev 9:20; 16:9.11).

A MIST AND DARKNESS FELL ON HIM

“And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.” Other versions read, “a dark mist fell upon him,” NKJV “a mist and a darkness fell upon him,” NASB “mist and darkness overcame him,” NIV “a dark mist came down upon him,” BBE “everything quickly became dark,” IE and “a mist and utter blackness came over his eyes.” PHILLIPS

The word “mist” means “dimness,” THAYER and “darkness” means “blindness.” THAYER The picture here is that of an immediate obscurement of Elymas’ vision, followed by total blindness. It is as though his vision, over a brief period, faded out, so that the strength of this imposed judgment might register upon him. There are Divine judgments like that. They are toward the individual immediately, yet are carried out in stages – like Herod being smitten by an angel, then dying as worms consumed him from within (Acts 12:23). I gather that this judgment was also for the sake of the governor, to confirm the truth of what Barnabas and Paul were declaring. That is, this was a judgment that could be observed, for as soon as his vision had been removed, Elymas sought for someone to lead him about. Note that he did not repent. He did not ask Paul to pray for him as Simon did Peter (Acts 8:24). Of course, Paul did not admonish him to repent of his wickedness either, as Peter did Simon.

THE DEPUTY BELIEVED

“ 12 Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord. ”

The results that follow confirm that Paul had, in fact, thrown down a bastion of wicked thought, so that it could hold no sway over the governor of the island. This is an example of the use of spiritual weaponry against the assault of contradicting patterns of thought. As it is written, “For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh: (For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds;) Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ” (2 Cor 10:3-5). In the case of the Corinthians, Paul’s employment of these weapons would be against the false teachers at Corinth who were promoting “another Jesus,” “another gospel,” and “another Spirit” (2 Cor 10:1-2; 11:3).

This kind of judgment is necessary because of the impact of false messages. In the case of Corinth, what the teachers delivered caused the people to drift away from Christ, which in turn produced the moral and spiritual lapses that were taking place there. In the case of Elymas, had he been allowed to continue, the governor would have rejected the Gospel in favor of what Elymas was saying.

The gravity of erroneous teaching, however innocent it may appear, cannot be overstated. Where such teachings are found, the Spirit never elicits sympathy for the propagator. This is because their words “spread like cancer,” NKJV (2 Tim 2:17), “subverting the hearers” (2 Tim 2:14), and overthrowing their faith (2 Tim 2:18). This is not speaking of the words of those who have an incomplete knowledge, like Apollos, yet have a heart for the truth. This is rather speaking of competitive doctrines that assign Divine power and effectiveness to messages that God did not give.

Believing involves the absence of doubt, and the presence of persuasion, and trust. The believing one has been convinced of the truth, and has wholly embraced it. Believing is not an experiment – like trying out a new way of thinking.

For these, and other, reasons, a very apparent judgment has taken place upon Elymas. This has, in effect, confirmed what he was saying was not the truth, and that what Paul was saying was the truth.

HE SAW WHAT WAS DONE AND BELIEVED

“Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed . . .” Other versions read, “Then the proconsul believed, when he saw what had been done,” NKJV “Then the proconsul believed when he saw what had happened,” NASB and “When the proconsul saw what had happened, he believed.” NIV

This confirms that the judgment upon Elymas was apparent, or visible. There was no doubt what had happened to him. Nor, indeed, was there any need to interpret it, for Paul had precisely declared what would happen – and his word came to pass. Now it had been established that Paul was the one who had the message of the Lord, not Elymas.

The word “believed” is not primarily expressive of the activity of the intellect or mind. Believing takes place within the heart, within the citadel of man’s nature. It is written, “For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness” (Rom 10:10). The Amplified Bible reads, “For with the heart a person believes (adheres to, trusts in, and relies on Christ).

Believing involves the absence of doubt, and the presence of persuasion, and trust. The believing one has been convinced of the truth, and has wholly embraced it. Believing is not an experiment – like trying out a new way of thinking. The one who believes senses that everything rests on the message that has been heard, and thus discards all competing bodies of knowledge, and casts his soul wholly and solely upon the Lord.

BEING ASTONISHED AT THE DOCTRINE OF THE LORD

“ . . . being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.” Other versions read, “astonished at the teaching of the Lord,” NKJV “amazed at the teaching of the Lord,” NASB “full of wonder at the teaching of the Lord,” BBE “astounded by the teaching about the Lord,” CSB “admiring at the doctrine of the Lord,” DOUAY “being much struck by what he had learnt about the Lord,” NJB “astonished at the power of God’s message,” LIVING and “astonished and deeply touched at the teaching concerning the Lord and from Him.” AMPLIFIED

Notice that Sergius Paulus was not astonished at the miraculous judgment against Elymas, but at what had been taught concerning the Lord . It was the doctrine that moved him to believe, not the experience of Elymas.

What we have here is something similar to what occurred during the ministry of Jesus. What He did confirmed what He had taught. After hearing what Jesus said, and beholding His authority over demons, they said, “What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they do obey him” (Mark 1:27). The uniqueness of Jesus was not in His authority over demons, but in the message that He brought. His disciples could cast out demons, but it was the message of the Lord Jesus Himself that they delivered.

The teaching of Christ that Paul delivered was of such magnitude that upon witnessing the imposed blindness of Elymas, the governor thought of the word that Paul had preached concerning the Lord. He turned his heart and mind to a consideration of what was said, not what was done. That word was not about the possibility of miracles, or the probability of social or financial advantages. It was a clear and powerful declamation of the Person of Christ Jesus – and it had captured the heart and attention this political official.

It is a matter of great concern when the church is not noted for its message – for what it is declaring or affirming! Let us learn from this text the value of a word that anchors the soul, exposes error, and validates to the soul the marvelous effects of the wonderful works of God, as wrought through Jesus.

CONCLUSION

We have been exposed to the effects of following the leading of the Holy Spirit. Those who do, in fact, live by faith, are effectively led by the Spirit because of their faith. They are sensitized to the will of the Lord, having been given ears to hear what the Spirit is saying. For them, it is no great thing to forfeit their own will, for faith has convinced them of the superiority and goodness of the will of the Lord. Jesus said, His sheep know His voice and follow Him (John 10:27). And, as the Revelation confirms, they follow Him wherever He goes (Rev 14:4). They perceive Him as their Leader.

These realities are being lived out in our text. Duly noted, this record will encourage our hearts and strengthen our hands in the Lord. Truly, our labor in the Lord is not vain’ (1 Cor 15:58).

Lesson #57

PAUL PREACHES IN ANTIOCH, #1

“ 13:13 Now when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia: and John departing from them returned to Jerusalem. 14 But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and sat down. 15 And after the reading of the law and the prophets the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on. 16 Then Paul stood up, and beckoning with his hand said, Men of Israel, and ye that fear God, give audience. 17 The God of this people of Israel chose our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought He them out of it. 18 And about the time of forty years suffered He their manners in the wilderness. 19 And when He had destroyed seven nations in the land of Chanaan, He divided their land to them by lot. 20 And after that He gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet. 21 And afterward they desired a king: and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years. 22 And when He had removed him, He raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom also He gave testimony, and said, I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after Mine own heart, which shall fulfil all My will. 23 Of this man's seed hath God according to His promise raised unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus. ” (Acts 13:13-23)

INTRODUCTION

After concluding their ministry in Cyprus, filling the island with the Word of God, and subduing the influence of a prominent sorcerer, “Paul and his company” came to Perga in Pamphylia, where John Mark left them, returning to Jerusalem. Again, it is important to note the manner of the labors being described. There is a singularity of both objective and focus. Unlike the writings of mere men, there is an absence of details unrelated to the work at hand.

The text does not revolve around the people whose account is being written, but around the One they were serving. This is an invariable trait that is unique to the ministry of the Word of God. This is not a word that is generic, and to be adapted to the purposes of men. Although Scripture has been, and is often used in that manner by some men, this is not a Divine manner. Everything in Scripture derives its relevance through association with God and His purpose, particularly as it has been revealed in Christ Jesus. This is why a purported ministry that revolves around human conditions or perceived needs is, to say the least, inferior. You may rest assured that there were a variety of human needs in the areas in which the works being reported were done – and yet, we note that the Scriptures provide us with absolutely no details concerning them.

For example, the Roman emperor Caligula was assassinated in A.D. 41. In A.D. 43, the Romans invaded and conquered Britain, bringing it under their rule. London was founded that same year. However, political and social circumstances are mentioned in Scripture only as they are related to the working of the Lord. Otherwise, they are incidental. This does not mean that daily circumstance is to be altogether ignored, or that earthly needs are to be neglected. It rather means that neither our theology nor our labors for the Lord are to be structured around them as though they were preeminent. It should be obvious that faith and wisdom are required to properly assess and address such matters. However, as the first and second commands accentuate, God is always first, and man, in the most favorable posture, is always second. These realities are reflected throughout all inspired historical accounts.

After departing from Cyprus, Paul and those with him eventually “came to Antioch of Pisidia,” where they entered into a synagogue. Once again, the priority of preaching the Gospel to those with only a partial, or even a distorted acquaintance with God is seen. We will find this to be a consistent pattern throughout the book of Acts. The principle is also carried out in the epistles, which are written to those in Christ, who required a more extensive familiarity with the Lord and His objectives. Because this perspective has been nearly lost in our generation, I will make frequent reference to the priorities of preaching and expounding the Gospel. This by no means suggests that the heathen are not to hear the Gospel. It does buttress the fact that they are to hear it from informed and stable souls, and that spiritual life, by its very nature, will provoke that to take place. If people do not speak because they believe – through the “spirit of faith” (2 Cor 4:13) – they ought not to speak for God at all. Further, if professed believers are not shining “as lights in the world,” they are actually contributing to the existing darkness. Such people are not commanded to shine. Rather, they are to obtain the light that characteristically shines forth, just as surely as it has been “shined into our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 4:6). Like Moses, those who are actually in the presence of the Lord do emit “the light of life” (Ex 34:29; John 8:12).

One of the most damaging circumstances within the Christian community is the practice of people with little or no spiritual light bearing supposed witness to others. I do not know that it is possible to obtain any accurate estimate of the degree to which this has loosed the powers of darkness upon our society. Limited, distorted, and even fabricated representations of the truth lend themselves to wickedness, not to righteousness. Satan always works through the lie, whether it is a deliberate expression or one born out of ignorance. This is why Jesus admonished His disciples to “pray” the Lord of the harvest that He would send forth laborers into “His harvest” (Matt 9:38). If the church is, in fact, the pillar and ground of the truth, then it must be a distributor of the light, which can only shine through those who are themselves walking “in the light” (1 John 1:7).

In our text, while Paul and company were in the synagogue, they were asked if they had a word of exhortation to give. Instantly responding, Paul delivered a powerful message in which he accented the necessity and priority of Jesus, placing it within the context of Divine initiatives toward Israel, and their responses to them. He makes no reference whatsoever to the personal lives of the Israelites, or to political or social cycles and trends about them. This is because it is not possible to reason toward Jesus when beginning with man’s condition. With unwavering consistency, when religious men begin with the self-perceived condition of humanity, they will develop methodologies to correct the condition. It is simply not possible to begin at that point, and arrive at Jesus as the total answer – one in whom the individual realizes total and uncompromising completeness (Col 2:10). The reason for this is that Jesus Christ is the provision of God for the condition that He saw, and the purpose that He conceived “before the world began” (2 Tim 1:9).

The salvation that is in Christ Jesus indirectly addresses life in this world. By that I mean life in the body is not the primary life, and the world is not the primary place. The matter of human conduct, although it is addressed indirectly, is effectly handled.

As soon as men begin to think of the salvation of God as the Divine response to a condition that was out of control, they step outside of the circumference of the Divine will. God’s purpose is not to simply reform men, but to raise them from death in trespasses and sins, and conform them to the image of His Son (Eph 2:1-2; Rom 8:29). It is not simply to enable them to live a controlled and successful life in this world, but to ready them to reign with Christ (2 Tim 2:12;), to take charge of the world to come (Heb 2:5-11), and, under the leadership of Jesus, take the Kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world (Dan 7:18,22,27).

Majoring on a regimented life in this world appears very small in view of grand objectives like this. If a person is prone to think that issues relating to human behavior are not addressed in this kind of approach, let him think again. The salvation that is in Christ Jesus indirectly addresses life in this world. By that I mean life in the body is not the primary life, and the world is not the primary place. The matter of human conduct, although it is addressed indirectly, is effectly handled. This is owing to the nature of salvation itself.

- In Christ, we are born again, becoming a new creation (1 Pet 1:23; 2 Cor 5:17). This involves receiving a new heart (Ezek 36:26), and a new man that is created in true holiness (Eph 4:24).

- The law of God is put into the heart and written upon the mind (Heb 10:16).
- Those in Christ receive the Holy Spirit who strengthens them within (Eph 3:16-17), produces Divine qualities with them (Gal 5:22-23), and leads them in the subduing of sinful inclinations (Rom 8:11-14).
- We are made partakers of Christ (Heb 3:14).
- Through God's exceeding great and precious promises, we become partakers of the Divine Nature (2 Pet 1:4).

These realities account for the absence in Scripture of a methodology for the correction of deviate behavior.

But all of this begins with a proper assessment of the human condition – a revealed assessment. Therefore, in our text, Paul's reasoning is erected upon the firm pillars of Divine initiatives and workings, as defined by His immutable, and consequently eternal, purpose. Human behavior particularly that of the Jews, will be assessed from that point of view – namely, how they did or did not respond to the working of the Lord. We must learn something from this.

PAUL AND HIS COMPANY

“ 13:13a Now when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia . . .”

Having completed their ministry on the island of Cyprus, Paul and Barnabas set sail for the area of, what is now called, Turkey.

PAUL AND HIS COMPANY

“Now when Paul and his company . . .” Other versions read, “Paul and his party,” NKJV “Paul and his companions,” NASB Paul and those who were with him,” BBE and “Paul and his men.” GWN

Those who were with Paul were probably Barnabas and John Mark. We are not certain if others were with them or not. The important thing to note is the new beginning here. Paul is the prominent figure, and the others are with him, being referred to his “ his company,” or “companions.” Prior to this, he was mentioned in reference to others.

- Barnabas took him and “brought him to the apostles” (Acts 9:26).
- Saul was “with” the apostles, coming in and going out at Jerusalem (Acts 9:29).
- Barnabas went to Tarsus to look for Saul (Acts 11:26).
- Barnabas brought Saul to Antioch, where he remained for a year with Barnabas (Acts 11:26).
- The disciples sent an offering to the elders in Jerusalem, for the poor saints, by the hands of Barnabas and Saul (Acts 11:30).
- Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, taking John Mark with them as their minister (Acts 12:25).
- Saul was among the prophets and teachers in Antioch (Acts 13:1).
- The Holy Spirit called for the separation of Barnabas and Saul to the work to which He had called them (Acts 13:2).
- The governor of the island of Cyprus called for Barnabas and Saul to hear the Word of God from them (Acts 13:7).

- When confronting Elymas the sorcerer, it was Saul who stepped forward to rebuke and judge him. It was at this point that he began to be called “Paul” (Acts 13:9).

Now, in confirmation that this was the commencement of his apostolic prominence, our text identifies him as the one in charge of the mission.

It ought to be noted that there was no contention on the part of Barnabas, who now reverted to a secondary position. This is another example of the selflessness of the early believers, a trait that accompanies every new birth, through which one comes into affiliation with the God who justifies the ungodly.

FROM PAPHOS TO PERGA

“ . . . loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia . . .” Other versions read, “set sail from Paphos,” NKJV ” put out to sea,” NASB “sailed to,” NIV “went by ship,” BBE and “departed by ship.” GENEVA

Sailing on the Mediterranean Sea, referred to as “the great sea” in Scripture (Num 34:6; Josh 1:4; 34:4), Paul and those with him journeyed approximately two hundred miles to the borders of, what was then known as, Asia. Now, this area of the world is Turkey. Perga was originally the capital city of Pamphylia, which made it a significant location. Pamphylia was the southern part of Asia, with the Mediterranean Sea on the south. Even so, this group will not stay in Perga, but will make their way up to Antioch of Pisidia, in which a significant Jewish constituency was located.

A Trip with a Special Plan

Keep in mind that this was not a trip that was planned as men would ordinarily think. This was a mission that was directed by the Spirit of God – a work to which He had called Barnabas and Saul, and a purpose that He had originated. It was also during this activity that Saul of Tarsus came to be known as Paul. He further assumed the leadership of this expedition. Any work that is directed by the Holy Spirit of necessity involves people who are sensitive to His direction, who also have a working knowledge of the Lord and His purpose.

If, for example, Paul and company had adopted the great commission mentality , as it is ordinarily perceived, they would probably have stayed a little longer in Cyprus, and settled for a while in Perga. One has only to become acquainted with the outworking of Divine purpose to see that a higher and more far-reaching agenda was being worked out. Jesus, for example, had His disciples begin where He Himself had spent over three years, ministering and “preaching the gospel of the kingdom” (Matt 4:23). Now, when Barnabas and Saul set out on a mission originated by the Holy Spirit, they first went to Cyprus where considerable preaching of the Word had already been done (Acts 11:19). Even though the Jews had already heard this preaching, Barnabas and Saul “preached the Word of God in the synagogues of the Jews” (13:4) – and this was a work to which the Holy Spirit Himself had called them.

There is a view of the preaching of the early disciples that sees them neglecting what Jesus had said when He told them to go into all the world (Matt 28:19), preaching the Gospel to every person (Mk 16:15). Yet, in this passage we have the Holy Spirit calling Barnabas and Saul to a special work while they were ministering to the church in Antioch. To me, this clashes with the mindset of many of our time. Add to this that in Paul’s later labors, he actually gave precedence to his ministry to the churches, foregoing preaching where God was not known until the church had been duly corrected and stabilized. He referred to this in his second letter to the Corinthians in which he spoke of “a door” that was “opened” to Him by Christ when he came to Troas “to preach Christ’s gospel.” Yet, because of his profound concern for the Corinthian church, which was being led astray, he went to Macedonia where he met Titus, who gave him a report of the affairs in Corinth. This occasioned the writing of his second epistle to them (2 Cor 2:12-13; 7:55-7). Paul also told the Corinthians that when they had been sufficiently grounded, he would proceed to other regions. “Neither do we go beyond our limits by boasting of work done by others. Our hope is that, as your faith continues to grow, our area of activity among you will greatly expand, so that we can preach the gospel in the regions beyond you. For we do not want to boast about work already done in another man's territory” (2 Cor 10:15-16).

I say these things to accentuate the necessity of maintaining a proper perspective of the work of the Lord. With staggering consistency, those with a faulty knowledge of God are the first to be exposed to the Gospel. This applies to both the churches, the Jews, and those who worship false gods. That order also appears to be consistent in the preaching of the Gospel. As long as professing churches are characterized by a fundamental ignorance of God and the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, attention must be given to the correction of that condition. Where sin and recovery from it are at inordinate levels within the church, something is seriously wrong, and requires immediate attention. If this is not done, the risk is that evangelistic and missionary efforts can result in the perpetuation of flawed views and spiritual mediocrity. Although I cannot fully substantiate this, I suspect that this condition accounts for much of the spiritual immaturity that exists in virtually all missionary enterprises.

The Manner of the Report

In my judgment, the report is given by Luke to accentuate the effectiveness of the leading of the Holy Spirit. Taken as it stands, it gives no emphasis to the decisions that were made by Paul and Barnabas, or exactly how they went about their work. There is no mention of human strategies or key decisions that were made – even though I do not doubt that such things were involved to some degree. However, one can only imagine how such plans would have been codified and bound on others had they been provided.

JOHN DEPARTED

“13b . . . and John departing from them returned to Jerusalem.” Other versions read, “and John left them,” NASB “John, however, left them,” NRSV “and there John went away from them,” BBE “and John separated from them,” DARBY “John Mark deserted them there,” GWN “Here John quit them,” WILLIAMS “And separating from them,” LITV “separated himself from them,” AMPLIFIED and “yet from-spacing from them.” INTERLINEAR

The Greek word translated “departing” is avpocwrh,saj (ap-okh-a-reh-oas). The lexical meaning of this word is, “to go away, depart,” THAYER “desert, abandon,” FRIBERG “leave,” UBS “to move away from, with emphasis upon separation and possible lack of concern for what has been left - 'to go away, to depart, to leave,” LOUW-NIDA and “leave, desert.” GINGRICH

COMMENT ON JOHN DEPARTING

Act 13:13 - “Luke is silent on John's reasons for leaving Paul and Barnabas. He was the cousin of Barnabas and may not have relished the change in leadership. There may have been change in plans also now that Paul is in command. Barnabas had chosen Cyprus and Paul has led them to Perga in Pamphylia and means to go on into the highlands to Antioch in Pisidia. There were perils of many sorts around them and ahead (2Co 11:26), perils to which John Mark was unwilling to be exposed. Paul will specifically charge him at Antioch with desertion of his post (Ac 15:39). It is possible, as Ramsay suggests, that the mosquitoes at Perga gave John malaria. If so, they bit Paul and Barnabas also. He may not have liked Paul's aggressive attitude towards the heathen. At any rate he went home to Jerusalem instead of to Antioch, zu seiner Mutter (Holtzmann). It was a serious breach in the work, but Paul and Barnabas stuck to the work.”

ROBERTSON'S WORD PICTURES

This particular word is only used two other times in the Scriptures. First, as a departure that will be imposed on the workers of iniquity: “And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity” (Matt 7:23). Second, of a wicked spirit that took hold of a young boy, and was reluctant to leave him: “And, lo, a spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again, and bruising him hardly departeth from him,” or “departs from him with great difficulty” NKJV (Luke 9:39).

The point is that this is not a casual word. It speaks of a deliberate separation or withdrawing, whether imposed or as an expression of willingness. In this case, the departure was a willing one – something that John Mark decided to do. This was not the impulse of the Spirit, but was clearly one that was of the flesh. Referring to this incident later the Spirit moved Luke to write, “And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whose surname was Mark. But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work ” (Acts 15:37-38). The occasion was so serious that later, Paul was unwilling to have Mark accompany them, seeing he had vacillated in this initial trip.

It does appear from the later text, that the departure of John Mark did not cause such difficulty with Barnabas, who was John’s uncle (Col 4:10). Precisely why this was the case, we do not fully know. However, the remainder of the book of Acts does shed some light on the subject. Following the disputation that arose over Mark, Barnabas “took Mark and sailed unto Cyprus” (Acts 15:39). That is the last mention of Barnabas in the book of Acts. Paul does refer to him in First Corinthians 9:6 as an example of one who had power to “forbear working” to supply their own needs. He is also mentioned in Galatians 2:1 where he accompanied Paul and Titus to Jerusalem. During that occasion Barnabas was “carried away” with the dissimulation that took place when Peter withdrew from the Gentiles to appease his Jewish brothers (Gal 2:11-13).

The point here is not to demean Barnabas. Rather, it is to show that Paul’s view of the withdrawal of John Mark from the work was a justifiable one. Even though John Mark may not have been called directly by the Holy Spirit into the work, he was chosen by those in whom the Spirit was at work. That is the precise point that is made of this withdrawal in the fifteenth chapter: he “went not with them to the work .” or “had not continued with them in the work” NIV (Acts 15:38). Instead, as the word “departed” indicates, he “left them,” NRSV “ went away from them,” BBE “ separated from them,” DARBY “ deserted them there,” GWN “ quit them,” WILLIAMS and “ separated himself from them.” AMPLIFIED

The text strongly suggests that there are no good reasons for quitting, leaving the work, and separating yourself from a work of God in which you have been involved. It is always a bad sign when someone who have engaged in the good work of the Lord diminishes their activity, or withdraws from it altogether. Let no person attempt to explain such a withdrawal. I do understand that some, like Barnabas, will lean toward the quitter, as though there was some good and acceptable reason for them distancing themselves from the work in which they were once involved. However, no servant of God is free to ignore the summons of the Holy Spirit: “Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord” (1 Cor 15:58).

This is an intensely personal matter, but each believer must see to it that they are in synch with the manner of the Kingdom. The working mode is always upward, onward, advancing, growing, and increasing. It always involves a distance increasing between the believer and the world, and the things that are integral to it. This is why Jesus demanded all competing associations and interests to be pushed into the background, and made subordinate to following Him (Lk 14:26,27,33). This is not an option, but is an unwavering requirement of the “Lord of all” (Acts 10:36).

THEY CAME TO ANTIOCH OF PISIDIA

“ 14 But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and sat down.”

Now, the work of the Lord goes on, as Paul and Barnabas continue in the labor to which the Holy Spirit had called them, and for which they had been separated.

THEY DEPARTED FROM PERGA

“But when they departed from Perga . . .”

This apparently took place after John Mark deserted them, returning to Jerusalem. Their action confirms the priority of their love for Christ and commitment to His calling. John was their minister, and thus his absence would probably increase the number of things they would be required to do – at least for a time. But this did not deter them from the work. Those who are squeamish about the amount of work they may be required to do in the vineyard of the Lord should either reconsider the propriety of their involvement, or come up high in their thinking. Those with a penchant for ease and convenience will find no functions in the body of Christ that lend themselves to such accommodations.

Too, some might consider that the departure of Mark might suggest that the decision to go to the next location was subject to reevaluation. This kind of thinking is characteristic of those who prefer ease and convenience, or are lacking in confidence and assurance. Although no one who lacks such qualities can see the sense of it, confidence and assurance resolve many dilemmas with which the unstable contend. “Patient continuance in well doing,” or “perseverance,” NASB while seeking for “glory, honor, and immortality,” is matched by an unequivocal promise: “ETERNAL LIFE” (Rom 2:7).

However, such a posture is exceedingly difficult, if not altogether impossible, where the assurance that one is doing the will of the Lord is absent. While engaged in the work of the Lord, that work must loom larger than any competing interest. That very circumstance requires that one know the One in whom he has believed, and be persuaded that He is able to keep anything and everything that has been committed to him, to be presented on the day of Christ, together with an appropriate reward (2 Tim 1:12).

THEY CAME TO ANTIOCH OF PISIDIA

“ . . . they came to Antioch in Pisidia . . .”

Antioch of Pisidia was approximately 100 miles northeast of Perga. This is not the Antioch in which Barnabas and Saul labored for a year with the church (Acts 11:26). That Antioch was in Syria. This one was in Asia, now called Turkey.

Because this mission was initiated by the Holy Spirit, and is referred to as “the work whereunto I have called them” (13:2), it seems obvious that the whole of it is being directed by the Holy Spirit. While the details of the direction are not specified both the nature of the mission and the manner in which it is being carried out strongly suggests this is the case. This is not a mere missionary experiment. Further, if, in fact, it was a specific work to which Barnabas and Saul were called, and if they were good men and full of faith, we have an example of what is stated in Psalm 37:23: “The steps of a good man are ordered by the LORD: and he delighteth in his way.”

Therefore, I will continue to view the report as one of Divine direction and preference. That requires that we see what follows as the execution of the will of the Lord. In it we will behold something of the Divine manner in determining the spread of the Gospel.

THEY WENT INTO THE SYNAGOGUE ON THE SABBATH DAY

“ . . . and went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and sat down.”

Once again we see the consistency of those sent out by God entering into the Jewish synagogues. There are forty-one references to synagogues in the Gospels, and twenty-two in the book of Acts. We are told that one of the regular activities in these synagogues was the preaching of Moses and the reading of His writings. It was a consistent practice that had been in place for some time. “For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day” (Acts 15:21).

These were also places in which vain religious men sought for preeminence among the people. Jesus said to His disciples, “Beware of the scribes, which desire to walk in long robes, and love greetings in the markets,

SYNAGOGUE ORDER

“The order of the synagogue service was first the prayers , read by the Sheliach, or angel of the synagogue, the people standing. Then came the reading of the Law in Hebrew by the reader, and the interpretation by the interpreter, who, outside of Judaea, generally used the version of the LXX (Septuagint). This reading, or lesson, was called the Parashah. Next came the reading and interpreting of the prophets , called the Haphtorah, either by the regular reader or by any one invited by the ruler of the synagogue (Luke 4:16, 17). Then came the Midrash, the exposition or sermon, which Paul undertook at the invitation of the ruler of the synagogue. Our Lord at Nazareth seems to have delivered the Midrash sitting (Luke 4:20); here St. Paul stands (ver. 16).”

PULPIT COMMENTARY, Acts 13:15

and the highest seats in the synagogues, and the chief rooms at feasts” (Luke 20:46). He also upbraided the Pharisees for their practice of the same. “Woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye love the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets” (Luke 11:43). There were even some who blew a trumpet in the synagogues, drawing attention to what they put into the treasury (Matt 6:2). Others made pretentious prayers in the synagogues, drawing attention to themselves (Matt6:5). However, this deterred neither Jesus nor those He sent out from going into the synagogues. There were some people there who were sincere of heart.

Paul and those with him went into the synagogue and “sat down.” This suggests that there was some kind of formality present in the synagogue. In fact, there were rulers and chief rulers in the synagogues (Mk 5:36,38; Lk 8:41; 13:14; Acts 18:8,17). In this case, the “ruler” was the director – in fact, “ It was his duty to select the readers or teachers in the synagogue, to examine the discourses of the public speakers, and to see that all things were done with decency and in accordance with ancestral usage.” THAYER With all of their deficiencies, Jews had been cultured to associate sobriety, order, and propriety with the assembly of the people. Jesus Himself submitted to this arrangement. On one occasion, when He was in His home town synagogue, the book of Isaiah was given to Him by the “minister” of that synagogue. When the Lord had finished reading it, He gave it back to the attendant (Lk 4:17-20). Jairus, whose daughter Jesus raised from the dead, was a ruler of the synagogue (Mk 5:36). On one occasion, the ruler of a synagogue in which Jesus healed a women with a spirit of infirmity rebuked the Lord for doing so (Lk 13:14). My point here is draw attention to the manners that were associated with solemn assemblies – particularly in the synagogue. These were not frivolous occasions, or times when unbridled speech was permitted. Whether the people were always aware of it or not, things pertaining to God had come to be known as serious, requiring some kind of order in those participating in them. It was into such an environment that Paul and company entered. The fact that they chose to do this should be considered.

THE READING OF THE LAW AND THE PROPHETS

“ 15a And after the reading of the law and the prophets . . .” Other versions read, “the Torah and from the prophets,” CSB “Moses’ teaching and the prophets,” GWN and “the books of Moses and the prophets.” NLT

Paul and Barnabas make no effort to interrupt the proceedings of the synagogue, deferring to “decently and in order,” which are incumbent upon every holy assembly, whether Jewish or in Christ Jesus (1 Cor 14:46).

SOMETHING TO NOTE

There is something of interest to note in the references to synagogue decorum, as referenced in Jewish history. I have found that there is a general consensus among Biblical scholars that this is an accurate portrayal of what took place in the synagogues, and is still the practiced among orthodox Jews.

The entire service centered in God and His word: i.e. men addressing God in prayer, and hearing Him speak to them through His Word. There was also an emphasis on understanding, with Moses and the prophets being interpreted, expounded, or clarified. Our text will also confirm there was exhortation in which the people were encouraged and moved to act upon the Word they had heard.

All of this would appear incidental were it not for the involvement of the Lord Jesus and the apostles in the synagogues. These were also the places where Gentiles went to obtain more knowledge concerning the Lord (Acts 13:42; 14:1; 17:4; 18:4). It was even where Christians were often found (Acts 9:2). Whatever abuses were associated with the synagogues, their service reflected the intentions of godly men who had been cultured under a covenant that had been made by God Himself. It seems to me that it is proper to assume that the priorities established in those synagogues were noble, providing a suitable framework within which the insightful preaching of the Gospel could take place.

It also ought to be noted that in Christ Jesus, and under the New Covenant, these priorities have been confirmed and enhanced. However, the fun-filled and casual environment that characterizes many professed Christian assemblies reflects a religious manner that has been historically absent from societies that have been impacted by the truth of God. It is a new order developed by those who merchandise the people and advance purely humanistic agendas. The fruit that these approaches have yielded confirms they are not of God.

Let it be clear that I am not advocating a resurrection of Jewish manners. Rather, it is the spiritual dignity that was found in those early environs, and fostered by Jesus and the apostles themselves, that is my intention.

THE LAW AND THE PROPHETS

Here is an inspired expression that is pivotal to our understanding of God and His purpose. An improper understanding of this language impacts directly on one’s understanding of God, Christ, the New Covenant, and salvation itself. Where there is a lack of discernment in this matter, corruption in doctrine is inevitable, and cannot be avoided. A demeaning view of Divine revelation itself also will ensue. Because this is an essential building block in spiritual understanding, it will be profitable to be more definitive about this matter.

Corrupt Views

Whether taught intentionally or by inference, a prevailing view of the Scriptures has been adopted by a significant percentage of believers that attaches little or no importance to the section of Scripture this phrase describes: “the law and the prophets,” or “Moses and the prophets.”

In efforts to delineate the “New Covenant” or “New Testament,” an approach is taken that suggests the Old Covenant was a system that did not work, and therefore had to be replaced. Further, an improper view of the covenants themselves is integral to this doctrinal corruption.

Briefly stated, this doctrinal aberration has two views. Both of these views have this in common: the covenants are equated with a compilation of Scriptural books.

The first view presents the Old Covenant, or Old Testament, as the totality of the books of Genesis through Malachi, and the New Covenant or Testament as the totality of the books of Matthew through Revelation. This view is also promoted by the uninspired assignment of those terms to those sections of the Bible. Technically, they are best viewed as the Old Covenant writings and the New Covenant writings. That is, what was written under the time period governed by those covenants.

The second view postulates that everything prior to the book of Acts was actually under the Old Covenant. Therefore, it represents that covenant as the totality of the books from Genesis through John, and the New Covenant as the totality of the books from Acts through the Revelation. If all of this sounds a bit strange, it is because that is precisely what it is.

Both views teach that the Old Testament, as comprehended in the above definitions, was obviated with the inauguration of the New Covenant, and contains nothing immediately pertinent to salvation. As a consequence of this, the first thirty-nine books of the Bible, and often the Gospels in addition, are studiously neglected. Neither of the corrupt views say that the books in question were not inspired, only that they have now been rendered obsolete in matters relating to salvation. Further, the exponents allege, only those commands and directives that were restated under the New Covenant have any validity for men today. Additionally, all of the prophecies contained in them are said to have been fulfilled.

Points of of Clarity

First, it is imperative to comprehend that God’s purpose is an “eternal” one (Eph 3:11), and nothing that He has ever said or done has been in contradiction of it. Although the purpose was “hidden” from the past ages and generations (Col 1:26), it was firmly in place. Once that purpose is perceived in Christ Jesus, it can be seen throughout Moses and the prophets, both in utterance, and in types and shadows.

Second, let us dispense with the notion that everything written in Moses and the prophets has been fulfilled, with no statement made in them remaining to be fulfilled. Ponder the following examples.

The Scriptural Concept the Law and the Prophets

God has frequently paired the writings of Moses and the prophets.

2 Kings 17:13: ‘Yet the LORD testified against Israel, and against Judah, by all the prophets , and by all the seers, saying, Turn ye from your evil ways, and keep my commandments and my statutes, according to all the law which I commanded your fathers, and which I sent to you by My servants the prophets .’ This was not speaking of the covenant itself, but of the corrective ministry of the Lord toward His people.

- Nehemiah 9:26: “Nevertheless they were disobedient, and rebelled against thee, and cast Thy law behind their backs, and slew Thy prophets which testified against them to turn them to thee, and they wrought great provocations.”

- Lamentations 2:9 : “Her gates are sunk into the ground; He hath destroyed and broken her bars: her king and her princes are among the Gentiles: the law is no more; her prophets also find no vision from the LORD.”

- Zephaniah 3:4: “Her prophets are light and treacherous persons: her priests have polluted the sanctuary, they have done violence to the law .”

- Zechariah 7:12: “Yea, they made their hearts as an adamant stone, lest they should hear the law , and the words which the LORD of hosts hath sent in his spirit by the former prophets : therefore came a great wrath from the LORD of hosts.”

- Matthew 5:17: “Think not that I am come to destroy the law , or the prophets : I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil.”

- Matthew 7:12: “Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets .”

- Matthew 11:13: “For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John.”

- Matthew 22:40: “On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets .”

- Luke 16:16,29,31: “The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it . . . Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets ; let them hear them . . . And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets , neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead.”

- Luke 24:27,44: “And beginning at Moses and all the prophets , he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself . . . And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses , and in the prophets , and in the psalms , concerning me.”

- John 1:45: “Philip findeth Nathanael, and saith unto him, We have found him, of whom Moses in the law , and the prophets , did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.”

- Acts 24:14; 26:22; 28:23: “But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets . . . Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come . . . And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses , and out of the prophets , from morning till evening.”

- Rom 3:21: “But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets .”

All of the above references have to do with the ethical and prophetic ministry of Moses and the prophets, not to the Old Covenant itself.

Distinguishing the covenants

While this may appear rather technical, that is not the case at all. The covenants, both the Old and the New, were the compact, or agreement, that God made under them.

The Old Covenant

For example, the Law came by Moses, but the Law and the covenant are not synonymous. The Ten Commandments are referred to as “the words of the covenant” (Ex 34:28; Deut 4:13). The agreement that was based upon those commandments was this: “Ye shall therefore keep my statutes, and my judgments: which if a man do, he shall live in them : I am the LORD” (Lev 18:5). This is stated again in Ezekiel 20:11,13,21. Jesus referred to this covenant in Luke 10:28: “And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.” Paul referred to it as “the righteousness which is of the law” (Rom 10:5). He also refers to this Old Covenant in Galatians 3:12: “And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doeth them shall live in them.”

The Old Covenant was this: to do everything God commanded, without any deviation whatsoever. A single transgression voided the covenant, breaking it and rendering its promise of life void (Ex 3:22; Lev 26:14-15; Num 15:40; Deut 6:24-25; 11:32; 12:14; 15:5; 28:1,15,58; 29:29; 30:8; 31:12; 32:46; Josh 23:6). There was to be perfect compliance, at all times and in all ways. Obedience was to be accompanied with holiness, fear, observing, hearing, learning, and not turning to the right or the left. Referring to this aspect of the Old Covenant James said, “For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all” (James 2:10).

The New Covenant

The Old Covenant was this: to do everything God commanded, without any deviation whatsoever. A single transgression voided the covenant, breaking it and rendering its promise of life void

The New Covenant is one that is of another order, or kind (Jer 31:32; Heb 8:9). It is not based upon doing, but upon believing. Paul makes this telling point in Romans 10:5-11. “For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, That the man which doeth those things shall live by them. But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above:) Or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead.) But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.”

The New Covenant is spelled out with remarkable specificity, leaving no question as to either its nature of content. Jeremiah foretold it: “Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the LORD: But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the LORD, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts ; and will be their God, and they shall be my people . And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the LORD: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the LORD: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more” (Jer 31:31-34).

This passage is repeated in Hebrews 8:8-12 and 10:16-17. There it is firmly established that this is the covenant currently being mediated by Jesus, and that it is the only means through which acceptance with God can be realized.

The Reading of the Old Testament

Paul referred to the reading of the Old Testament by the Jews. “But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which veil is done away in Christ” (2 Cor 3:14). This passage is alleged to mean that they read from the first thirty-nine books of the Bible. However, this is not the intended meaning of the text. The very next verse clarifies that this refers to what Moses said: “But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart” (2 Cor 3:15). This referred to the Law, the unmitigated keeping of which was required for Divine acceptance. That was the covenant – the Law, not as mere information, but as the stipulations of the covenant that God “made with their fathers” in the day He “took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt” (Jer 31:32). That covenant was accepted by Israel when they said, “All that the LORD hath spoken we will do” (Eph 19:8). That is the “old testament” of reference in Second Corinthians 3:15 – it was the reading of the covenantal stipulations.

Paul’s point in that passage is simply this – that frequent exposure to the clear and concise covenant itself never did promote life, but only death. In our text, “the reading of the law and the prophets” accents the promissory note of those scriptures – particularly as they regarded the coming of the Savior. In the book of Acts, a point is frequently made of this (3:18,22,24-25; 7:52; 10:43; 13:27, 33; 15:15; 24:14; 28:33). Those synagogues, however deficient they may have been, provided a most excellent environment in which to present the truth of the Gospel to both Jews and inquiring Gentiles. I do not believe the average “church” provides such an environment.

IF YOU HAVE A WORD OF EXHORTATION

“ 15b . . . the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on.”

THE RULERS OF THE SYNAGOGUE SENT UNTO THEM

“ . . . the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them . . .” Other versions read, “the synagogues rulers sent word to them,” NIV and “the officials of the synagogue sent them a message.” NRSV

“It is defined as ‘the act of laying such motives before a person as may excite him to the performance of any duty. It differs only from suasion in that the latter principally endeavors to convince the understanding, and the former to work on the affections. It is considered as a great branch of preaching, though not confined to that, as a man may exhort, though he do not preach; though a man can hardly be said to preach if he do not exhort.’”

The idea here is that the synagogue officials sent someone to Paul and Barnabas as they were sitting in the audience – for they had entered into the synagogue “and sat down.” Here again, there is evidence of order, and a refusal to allow the gathering to be disrupted by outbursts. At this point, it is enough to take note of the care the leaders had for proper focus and procedure.

IF YE HAVE ANY WORD OF EXHORTATION

“ . . . saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on.” Other versions read, “a message of encouragement,” NIV “a word of comfort for the people,” BBE

“if ye have any sermon to exhort,” TNT “any word of instruction,” LIVING “something to say which will help the people,” IE “any word of exhortation or consolation or encouragement,” AMPLIFIED and “message of encouragement.” PHILLIPS

The Meaning of the Word

As used in this text, the word “exhortation” means, “exhortation, admonition, encouragement,” THAYER The basic, or root, meaning of the word is “calling someone to oneself,” and is consequently “the presentation of privileges and requirements.” FRIBERG It is an effort to move the hearer to act upon the word that has been spoken.;

McClintok and Strong’s Cyclopaedia says of the term “exhortation,” “It is defined as ‘the act of laying such motives before a person as may excite him to the performance of any duty. It differs only from suasion in that the latter principally endeavors to convince the understanding, and the former to work on the affections. It is considered as a great branch of preaching, though not confined to that, as a man may exhort, though he do not preach; though a man can hardly be said to preach if he do not exhort.’ I have never been satisfied with lexical definitions that equate exhortation with encouragement and comfort. These do not appear to harmonize with the manner in which “exhort” is used in Scripture.

- “And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation ” (Acts 2:40).
- “Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord ” (Acts 11:23).
- “And now I exhort you to be of good cheer : for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship” (Acts 27:22).
- “Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up before hand your bounty , whereof ye had notice before, that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness ” (2 Cor 9:5).
- “Furthermore then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more ” (1 Thess 4:1).
- “Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient toward all men ” (1 Thess 5:14).”
- “Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread ” (2 Thess 3:12).
- “I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men ” (1 Tim 2:1).
- “Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded ” (Titus 2:6).
- “The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: feed the flock of God which is among you , taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind” (1 Pet 5:1-2).

These examples suffice to confirm the nature of exhortation. They also show the kind of social environment that was cultured among those in covenant with God.

This is an area in which the Gentile church is particularly weak. There is a need to call men into the good fight of faith, and summon them to take hold of what has been declared to them. Keep in mind that there are other unseen influences attempting to draw the hearers away from has been said, and engage them in mundane things. That circumstance requires strong exhortations, particularly when the people have been exposed to the mind of the Lord as revealed in Scripture.

Paul and Barnabas Invited to Exhort

Having taken note that Paul and Barnabas were Jews, the leaders of the synagogue took their devotion and integrity for granted. With all of their faults, there was an underlying assumption that serious Jews were informed, and could speak intelligently and effectively to the people. I do not know how you could account for this text any other way.

Even though this circumstance should be much more pronounced among professing Christians, this is generally not the case at all. In fact, even in the setting of our text, which was vastly inferior to an assembly of those who are in Christ Jesus, an example is set forth that is exceedingly rare in any average Christian congregation of our time. I have often been in assemblies where some great man of God was present, who was never asked to even pray, much less address the assembly. Among the spiritually informed, this is wholly inappropriate.

Noting the Context

The context within which this request was made was the reading – the faithful reading – of the Law and the prophets. That kind of environment will have a significant impact on how a person speaks. Consider this circumstance with the recollection that faith comes through hearing (Rom 10:17).

YE MEN OF ISRAEL, AND YE THAT FEAR GOD

“ 16 Then Paul stood up, and beckoning with his hand said, Men of Israel, and ye that fear God, give audience.”

I must continually keep before you that this is a work to which the Holy Spirit had called and separated both Paul and Barnabas. I have no doubt that this fact is dictating where they go as well as what they say.

PAUL STOOD UP

“Then Paul stood up, and beckoning with his hand said . . .” Other versions read, “motioning with his hand,” NKJV “with a gesture began to speak,” NRSV “making a sign with his hand,” BBE “with his hand bespeaking silence,” DARBY “raised his hand for silence and began to speak,” NJB and “lifted his hands to quiet them.” NLT

As always, those who spoke for the Lord, desired to be heard, and spoke in a manner befitting that desire. This involved quieting the people, drawing their attention to the speaker, and then speaking with sufficient volume and clarity to be heard. The message that is delivered by those who speak as oracles of God is befitting of such an approach. After all, they are speaking “all the words of this life” (Acts 5:20).

Paul, like all those sent forth by Jesus, had been bathed in the words spoken to the holy prophets. “Lift up thy voice . . . cause it to be heard” (Isa 10:30); “lift up thy voice with strength” (Isa 40:9); “the watchmen shall lift up the voice” (Isa 52:8); “Cry aloud, spare not [do not hold back], lift up thy voice like a trumpet” (Isa 58:1); “cry: and lift up thy voice” (Jer 22:20). There is no purpose to speaking unless it can be heard and comprehended. The man of God does not speak to merely get things off his chest. He is speaking “as an oracle of God,” and as such, the issues of life and death are associated with what he says. He is speaking with eternity in perspective, and in order to clarify the issues with which men must deal.

MEN OF ISRAEL AND YE THAT FEAR GOD

“ . . . Men of Israel, and ye that fear God. . .” Other versions read, “Gentiles who worship God,” NIV “Israelites and others who fear God,” NRSV “Men of Israel, and you who have the fear of God,” BBE “Men of Israel and God-fearers,” CJB “Men of Israel and converts to Judaism,” GWN “Men of Israel . . . God-fearing Gentiles,” NLT “Men of Israel . . . and all others here who reverence God,” LIVING “Men of Israel, and you other people who also worship the true God,” IE “Men of Israel and “who reverence and fear God.” AMPLIFIED

It is generally understood that this is a description of the Jews and Gentile proselytes that were present. I see no need to doubt that perception. The description “that fear God” was intended to be descriptive of both groups. This was a group of people who feared God, and it was composed of both Jews and Gentiles, who had apparently converted to Judaism, or were about to do so.

The thing that is arresting to me is the manner in which he refers to them: “them that fear God.” This expression was also used to describe those who gathered at the house of Cornelius to hear Peter’s words (Acts 10:2). Maturing churches were described as “walking in the fear of the Lord” (Acts 9:31). In fact, throughout the history of Abraham’s seed, the concept of fearing God had been kept alive, and that phrase was used of those who revered and served the Lord (Gen 42:16; Ex 1:17,21; 18:21; Neh 7:2; Psa 66:16; Eccl 8:12; 12:13). Job also was noted for fearing God (Job 1:1,9). The absence of such fear was also used to distinguish the ungodly (Deut 25:28; Psa 55:19).

This equates to the phrase “devout men,” which described the audience to whom Peter spoke on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:5). Cornelius was also a “devout” man (Acts 10:2). Later in this chapter we will read of “devout and honorable women” (Acts 13:50). In Thessalonica, several “devout Greeks,” believed and joined with Paul; and Silas (Acts 17:4). In Athens, Paul reasoned with certain “devout persons” (Acts 17:17).

If all of this seems inconsequential, consider how differently a person speaks when he is cognizant that those to whom he is speaking fear God. Such an awareness strips from human speech distracting humor, religious chatter, and frequent references to mere human relationships.

Within contemporary Christendom, such descriptions are not at all common. This is a way of speaking that has nearly faded from view, even though it was faithfully maintained for over three thousand years before Christ, and for hundreds of years following His enthronement. The early church walked in “the fear of the Lord” (Acts 9:31). Believers are admonished to “Fear God” (1 Pet 2:17). On the Isle of Patmos, John heard a voice from heaven with a message to “them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.” The message was “ Fear God , and give glory to Him!” (Rev 14:5-6).

If all of this seems inconsequential, consider how differently a person speaks when he is cognizant that those to whom he is speaking fear God. Such an awareness strips from human speech distracting humor, religious chatter, and frequent references to mere human relationships. It seems to me that it is good to take note of such expressions, and see to it that they are common among us.

GIVE AUDIENCE

“ . . . give audience.” Other versions read, “listen,” NKJV “listen to me!” NIV “hearken,” ASV “give ear,” DOUAY and “pay attention to me.” WEYMOUTH

Those who speak for God must insist on being heard. This is not to be approached as a mere matter of procedure. It rather denotes the seriousness of what is being spoken. If it is true that Paul and Barnabas had been separated for a work assigned to them by the Holy Spirit, and if the word they spoke was really a word from, heaven, how could it possibly be in order to ignore them? Such words must be heard, and done so with focus and interest. This is the significance of the word “hearken”

(Acts 2:14; 4:19; 7:2; 12:13; 15:13). This word means “to receive into the ear,” THAYER “listen carefully to, pay attention to,” FRIBERG and “pay close attention to.” UBS

Thus the stage is set for the remarkable exposition that follows. Paul has quieted the people, focused their attention on him, and called them to serious listening. The Spirit also present, and ready to go to work.

GOD CHOSE THE FATHERS, EXALTED THE PEOPLE, AND BROUGHT THEM OUT

“ 17 The God of this people of Israel chose our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought He them out of it.”

Paul will now embark on a God-honoring discourse. He will assess pertinent history in strict accord with what the Lord Himself did. The distinguishing feature of his word will not be what men did, or what men ought to have done, but what the mighty God of heaven did. In this manner, he will provide a proper context in which the Spirit can work, and the nature of the people will be revealed. Throughout the book of Acts, as well as his epistles, Paul will meet the people where they are – but he will consistently meet them with Divine workings in mind, not their achievements or circumstances. He will not diagnose the people until he has clearly proclaimed what the Lord had done. Any diagnosis of the people that is not within that context is nothing more than a human imagination.

THE GOD OF THIS PEOPLE

“The God of this people of Israel . . .” Other versions read, “The God of our nation Israel,” NJB and “The God of our people, Israel.” IE

If we were talking about any other nation but Israel, their god is the one that THEY chose. Such gods are theirs because of their choice. But this is not the case with Israel. It is God who chose them, and not vice versa. That is, it is His choice that made them His people. Any choice the nation of Israel made to serve God followed His choice of them. This is made abundantly clear in Scripture.

- “For thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God: the LORD thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth” (Deut 7:6).

- “The LORD did not set His love upon you, nor choose you , because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people” (Deut 7:7).

- “For thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God, and the LORD hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto Himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth” (Deut 14:2).

- “Blessed is the nation whose God is the LORD; and the people whom He hath chosen for His own inheritance” (Psa 33:12).

- “O ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob His chosen ” (Psa 105:6).

- “And He brought forth His people with joy, and His chosen with gladness” (Psa 105:43).

- “For the LORD hath chosen Jacob unto Himself, and Israel for His peculiar treasure” (Psa 135:4).

- “Yet now hear, O Jacob My servant; and Israel, whom I have chosen ” (Isa 44:1).

The reality of God being Israel’s God was not something that they determined. It was, however, something of which they were to become aware. Thus it is written, “And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God. And they shall know that I am the LORD their God , that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them: I am the LORD their God ” (Exo 29:45-46).

Similar Language Concerning the Church

We also ought to note that the same type of language is employed when speaking of the church – those who are in Christ Jesus.

- “Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you , and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in My name, He may give it you” (John 15:16).

- “If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world , therefore the world hateth you” (John 15:19).

- “According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love” (Eph 1:4).

- “But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth” (2 Thess 2:13).

- “Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which He hath promised to them that love Him?” (James 2:5).

- “But ye are a chosen generation , a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light” (1 Pet 2:9).

- “These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for He is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with Him are called, and chosen , and faithful” (Rev 17:14).

Thus Paul launches his discourse by drawing the attention of the people to a Divine determination. God having chosen them, there was a solemn obligation placed upon them to receive whatever was sent to them from Him, and to believe whatever He said to them.

CHOSE OUR FATHERS

The choice of Israel was based upon the choice of “our fathers,” or progenitors. It is possible for the word “fathers” to refer to those who originated, revived, or proclaimed certain teachings – i.e. “the church fathers.” However, that the way in which this expression is used. This refers to the fleshly lineage of the nation of Israel.

Until Jesus Christ, fleshly lineage was a critical matter. This is because the real objective of Divine selection was not a nation, or any other select group of people. The real birth that was anticipated in heaven was that of the Messiah – the Lord Jesus Christ. Apart from that, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob had no lasting significance. This is the circumstance that surrounds Paul’s marvelous dissertation. When He speaks of Israel and the staggering privileges that were vouchsafed to them, it is with Jesus Christ in mind. This will become very apparent as we proceed through this text. On the day of Pentecost, this same approach was taken by Peter (Acts 2:14-36). This very same approach was also taken by Stephen when he spoke to the Jewish council (Acts 7:2-54).

Paul also used a similar form of reasoning when speaking to Greeks in Athens. Because they were not a Divinely covenanted people, he started with God creating them and placing them in both time and place. He then reasoned forward to the day of judgment, at which time all men will be judged by Jesus (Acts 17:22-31).

The Point to Be Seen

The thing to be seen here is that sound preaching and reasoning begins and ends with the Lord. That is something of what is involved in Him being “the First and the Last” (Rev 1:17), the “Beginning and the Ending” (Rev 1:8), and the “Alpha and the Omega” (Rev 1:11). It is also reflected in this description of God Himself: “For of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen” (Rom 11:36). It is also seen in this statement concerning the Lord Jesus Christ: “For by Him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by Him, and for Him” (Col 1:16).

Too much – far too much – of the preaching of our time begins and ends with men. It starts with their troubles, and ends with the purposed solution to them. It begins with what men want, and concludes by offering it to them. This kind of preaching is so skewed in the wrong direction that if there were no death, no resurrection, and no judgment day, it would not materially change the way these people preach. If there were no world to come, no eternal inheritance, and no heaven or hell, a significant percentage of modern-day preaching and teaching would remain the same.

When the book of Acts is read with a mind to see Divine involvements, it will significantly alter how we view efforts that claim to be done in the name of, and for the glory of, the Lord.

EXALTED THE PEOPLE

“ . . . and exalted the people when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt. . . ” Other versions read, “made the people great,” NIV “lifting the people up from their low condition,” BBE “made them a strong nation,” GWN “raised them up and multiplied them,” MRD “made the people prosper,” NIB “made them multiply and grow strong,” NLT “honored them in Egypt by leading them out,” LIVING “made this people important,” WILLIAMS and “made this people great and important during their stay in the land of Egypt.” AMPLIFIED

Precisely how were the people exalted while they were strangers in the land of Egypt? Judging from some of the different versions, one might be led to believe they were exalted to social prominence, even gaining considerable substance while there. However, the inspired record of their sojourn in Egypt will not lead a person to that conclusion, and it appears wholly out of order for some translators of Scripture to leave us thinking in such a manner.

Moses makes this statement concerning Israel’s sojourn in Egypt, and it occurred prior to the rise of a Pharaoh “which knew not Joseph.” “And the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them ” (Ex 1:7). Speaking of that time, the Psalmist wrote, “And He increased His people greatly; and made them stronger than their enemies ” (Psa 105:24). Stephen spoke of this Divine favor in his great sermon to the council: “But when the time of the promise drew nigh, which God had sworn to Abraham, the people grew and multiplied in Egypt ” (Acts 7:17).

Precisely when the exponential increase began, we do not know. However, it does appear that it was quite early during their pilgrimage. God had told Abraham his offspring would suffer affliction for four hundred years (Gen 15:13). Stephen said they were treated “evil for four hundred years” (Acts 7:6).

These affirmations confirm that the people were exalted while they were being oppressed. They were not exalted to political prominence, nor were they elevated in the eyes of the general Egyptian populous. Egypt was an incubator in which the promise of a multitudinous offspring was fulfilled. While Israel was under the bludgeon of oppression, they were increasing in number in order that they might be able to occupy the promised land. They did get the attention of the ruler of Egypt. Beholding their remarkable increase, he reasoned, “come, let us deal shrewdly with them, lest they multiply, and it happen, in the event of war, that they also join our enemies and fight against us, and so go up out of the land ” (Ex 1:10). At that time, taskmasters were appointed over the children of Israel, and they “afflicted them with burdens.” However, it is written, “the more they multiplied and grew. And they were grieved because of the children of Israel” (Ex 1:12). The Pharaoh even launched a focused effort to kill all of the male babies in the nation, thinking to stem the tide of the rapid increase of people (Ex 1:15-22).

There is no way to account for the explosion of Israel’s population apart from the initiative God. God was exalting them, even while they were being oppressed! Blessed is that person who does not measure the blessing of the Lord by tranquil circumstances and a lack of oppression!

HE BROUGHT THEM OUT

“ . . . and with an high arm brought He them out of it.” Other versions read, “with uplifted arm,” NKJV “with mighty power,” NIV “with a strong arm,” BBE “stretched out arm,” CJB “His powerful arm,” GWN “by Divine power,” NJB “with wondrous power,” WEYMOUTH and “Then He lifted up His arm.” PHILLIPS

The expression “uplifted arm” is most precise. The words “high arm” mean an arm that is lifted high. This is a phrase denoting the manifest, or obvious, display of Divine power. It also describes the kind of authority that is resident in the Person of God – as though the mere lifting of His arm causes the appointed work to be set in motion.

We do know that angels were instrumental in the deliverance of Israel; from Egypt (Ex 14:19; Num 20:16). It is as though they were summoned into activity by the uplifted arm of the Lord. We also know that the Egyptians begged them to leave, giving them a significant amount of riches (Ex 11:2-3; 12:33,36). It only took the raised arm of the Lord to move them to be so charitable.

Divine deliverances are not wrought by extensive Divine activity – struggling, fighting, etc. Men are frequently called into fierce conflicts where they must fight, resist, and struggle for the victory. However, no such activity is required by the Lord of glory. This is something to be perceived. In fact, in Israel’s deliverance from Egypt, they did not have to raise a hand, either to defend themselves, or to overthrow their enemies.

GOD SUFFERED THEIR MANNERS

While some manuscripts may support this reading, both the historical accounts and the doctrine of Scripture suggest God’s endurance of their provocative ways. In fact, the book of Hebrews makes a point of their manners, which were endured for the forty years, finally excluded them from the promised land

“ 18 And about the time of forty years suffered He their manners in the wilderness.” Other versions read, “He put up with their ways,” NKJV “He put up with them,” NASB “He endured their conduct,” NIV “He bore with them,” RSV “He endured their manners,” DOUAY and “endured their behavior.” AMPLIFIED

Several versions present the idea of Divine care and gentleness: “as a nursing-father bare He them,” ASV “He took care of them,” CJB “He nursed them,” DARBY “He fed them,” MRD “cared for them,” NIB “nursed them,” LIVING “was patient with them,” IE and “like a fatherly nurse He cared for them in the wilderness.” AMPLIFIED Referring to this translation, the NIV provides the following footnote: “Some manuscripts <and cared for them>.”

The period of forty years refers to the wandering of the Israelites in the wilderness. Stephen said of this same period, “And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands. Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets, O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness?” (Acts 7:41-42). Of that period Moses said, “Because all those men which have seen my glory, and my miracles, which I did in Egypt and in the wilderness, and have tempted me now these ten times, and have not hearkened to my voice . . . And your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, and bear your whoredoms, until your carcasses be wasted in the wilderness . . . Remember, and forget not, how thou provokedst the LORD thy God to wrath in the wilderness: from the day that thou didst depart out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the LORD” (Num 14:22,22; Deut 9:7).

Other writers spoke after the same manner: “Forty years long was I grieved with this generation, and said, It is a people that do err in their heart, and they have not known my ways” (Psa 95:10).

There is no question concerning the Lord caring for the people while they journeyed through the wilderness, providing their needs. “Yet Thou in Thy manifold mercies forsookest them not in the wilderness . . .” (Neh 9:19). However, that is not the thrust of this passage. While some manuscripts may support this reading, both the historical accounts and the doctrine of Scripture suggest God’s endurance of their provocative ways. In fact, the book of Hebrews makes a point of their manners, which were endured for the forty years, finally excluded them from the promised land (Heb 3:16-4:2). While God’s care for them was evident, the point made in the apostles’ doctrine is to take due note of their manners, avoiding such miserable responses to God (1 Cor 10:1-11). We are taught that we are not to emulate their wilderness manners (1 Cor 10:1-11).

GOD DESTROYED SEVEN NATIONS, AND DIVIDED THEIR LAND

“ 19 And when He had destroyed seven nations in the land of Chanaan, He divided their land to them by lot.”

Take note that thus far Paul is accenting what the Lord has done.

- The Lord was “the God of this people.”
- God chose the fathers.
- God exalted the people.
- God brought them out of Egypt with a high hand.
- God suffered their manners for forty years.

Now he will refer to two more things that God did. All of this will firmly establish that no one can ignore the working of the Lord with impunity. Whatever views a person or group may have about the longsuffering of God, His gentleness and kindness, and His unwillingness for anyone to perish, when God works in a persons behalf, He will not allow it to be perpetually ignored.

Something to Notice

Here is something important to notice. Throughout the book of Acts, preaching began with the proclamation of what the Lord had done. This is true of all of the messages covered thus far.

- Peter on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:14-36).
- Peter before the religious rulers (Acts 4:8-12).
- Stephen before the Jewish council (Acts 7:2-52).;
- Philip before the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:30-35).
- Peter at the house of Cornelius (Acts 10:34-43).
- Paul in the synagogue of Antioch of Pisidia (Acts 13:18-41).

There is such remarkable consistency in this matter that it is startling to consider how it has escaped anyone's attention. Holy men started by proclaiming what the Lord had done. They then declared the implications of those works, and followed by applying them to their audience. This is precisely what Paul is doing in our text.

Why Is This Rare Today?

Why is this approach so rare in our day. Without being unduly distracted, this is owing to a very fundamental ignorance of what God has actually done throughout history. There are vast segments of Scripture that are like portions men have hidden in the back part of a museum. Yet, in many of these very sections there are revelations of the Person, purpose, and manners of the God of heaven. Our text provides us with an excellent example of this. However, even though such things may appear very apparent to those who have an acquaintance with Divine manners, they are hidden to those who have embraced sectarian and institutionalized interests. For this reason I am going to extend myself to emphasize Paul's stress on the workings of the Lord.

WHEN HE HAD DESTROYED SEVEN NATIONS

“And when He had destroyed seven nations in the land of Chanaan ...” Other versions read, “He overthrew seven nations,” NIV “put to destruction seven nations,” BBE and “extirpated seven nations.” MRD

The seven nations are identified in Deuteronomy 7:1: “ the Hittites, and the Girgashites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites” (Deu 7:1). Each one of these nations was larger than Israel, to say nothing of them in the aggregate. They are described as “seven nations greater and mightier than thou” (Deut 7:1).

According to appearance, it was Israel that engaged in an initiative to drive the heathen nations out of the land God had given to them. God told them to “possess the land” (Deut 1:8,21; Josh 1:11). He told them to “drive out all the inhabitants of the land” (Num 33:62). Israel fought, (Josh 10:36), and they subdued the land (Josh 18:1). When they were slack to possess the land, Joshua challenged them: “How long are ye slack to go to possess the land, which the LORD God of your fathers hath given you?” (Josh 18:3).

However, when it got down to the root cause for the expulsion of the nations, it was actually God who drove them out and destroyed them. Repeatedly the Word of God makes a point of this.

- Moses told the people God would bring them into the land and “cast out many nations” before them (Deut 7:1; 4:38;).

- After Israel came into the land under Joshua, God told them, “And ye went over Jordan, and came unto Jericho: and the men of Jericho fought against you, the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Girgashites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites; and I delivered them into your hand ” (Josh 24:11).

- Jehosaphat confessed, “Art not thou our God, who didst drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and gavest it to the seed of Abraham thy friend for ever?" (2 Chron 20:7).

- In Nehemiah's day the people confessed, "So the children went in and possessed the land, and Thou subduedst before them the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, and gavest them into their hands, with their kings, and the people of the land, that they might do with them as they would" (Neh 9:24).

- The Psalmist exclaimed, " He cast out the heathen also before them , and divided them an inheritance by line, and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents" (Psa 78:55).

- Stephen said, "Which also our fathers that came after brought in with Jesus [Joshua] into the possession of the Gentiles, whom God drove out before the face of our fathers, unto the days of David" (Acts 7:45).

Little by Little

In accordance with the promise of the Lord, the inhabitants were driven out "little by little," giving the people time to increase, and thus fill the land. The people were told that God would not drive out the inhabitants in a single year, for there were not enough Israelites to fully occupy the land. If the land was emptied too quickly, wild beasts would fill the land, becoming foes and hindrances to the people. Therefore God said, "I will not drive them out from before thee in one year; lest the land become desolate, and the beast of the field multiply against thee. By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land" (Ex 23:30).

A Divine Manner Seen

Although there are a few exceptions to this rule, God generally uses means to accomplish His deliverance. In the case of Israel driving out the nations, He did it through their efforts, empowering them and giving them wisdom. Often they had to use the sword, gathering together and going forth under a commander (Josh 10:29). In the beginning, they walked around Jericho, and its walls fell down – yet they had to gird on their swords, enter into the city, and subdue it (Josh 6:20).

God still works in this manner, calling upon His people to do the impossible, then giving them the power to do it.

Another One of God's Ways

Also, another "way" of God is made known in the manner in which they occupied the land – "little by little." Until teach tribe increased to the point where they could occupy the land, enemies remained in it. So it is in the life of faith. There are lingering remnants of of sin, called "the old man," that remain in the believer. The size and power of this remnant is directly proportionate to the degree to which individuals are living unto the Lord, having yielded their members to Him as instruments of righteousness. Those who are not advancing in their spiritual maturity will not be able to gain dominance over their "old man," putting him off, as they are enjoined to do (Eph 4:22; Col 3:9).

I do not believe this is generally known within the modern church. The fact that there are so many recovery programs in place is sufficient confirmation of this observation. When professing believers have unusual difficulty expelling sin from their lives, it is because they are not living wholly for the Lord. Just as with Israel possessing the promised land, until they can occupy the area of life in which the propensity to sin is particularly strong, they will not be able to thoroughly "put off the old man."

HE DIVIDED THEIR LAND

"He divided their land to them by lot." Other versions read, "He distributed their land by allotment," NKJV "He distributed their land as an inheritance," NASB "He gave their land to His people as an inheritance,” NIV and “He gave them [the Hebrews] their land as an inheritance [distributing it to them by lot.” AMPLIFIED

Because the land of Canaan was actually God’s land, He took it from the nations that were possessing it when Israel arrived, and gave it to them. This was by Divine intention. However, all of its inhabitants did not simply leave, and Israel march in and take the land for themselves. The land was given to them “by lot,” with each of the tribes receiving a portion of it appropriate to their size. They were then responsible for driving out the inhabitants of their section of land.

The method of division is specified –namely, “by lot” – was ordered through Moses a considerable time before he died: “And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, Unto these the land shall be divided for an inheritance according to the number of names. To many thou shalt give the more inheritance, and to few thou shalt give the less inheritance : to every one shall his inheritance be given according to those that were numbered of him. Notwithstanding the land shall be divided by lot : according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they shall inherit. According to the lot shall the possession thereof be divided between many and few” (Num 26:53-56). The specific borders of the land were also specified (Num 34:1-12).

One of the chief difficulties with preaching in our time is the lack of Scriptural knowledge that exists in the churches. There is hardly any aspect of God’s great salvation that does not require extensive explanation. This makes spiritual growth more difficult, because the people can rarely draw profitable conclusions from what is preached.

This was faithfully carried out by Joshua, confirming the faithfulness of this good man. Joshua 14:1-3: “And these are the countries which the children of Israel inherited in the land of Canaan, which Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel, distributed for inheritance to them. By lot was their inheritance, as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses, for the nine tribes, and for the half tribe. For Moses had given the inheritance of two tribes and an half tribe on the other side Jordan: but unto the Levites he gave none inheritance among them. (Josh 14:3) For the children of Joseph were two tribes, Manasseh and Ephraim: therefore they gave no part unto the Levites in the land, save cities to dwell in, with their suburbs for their cattle and for their substance. As the LORD commanded Moses, so the children of Israel did, and they divided the land” (Josh 14:1-5).

In conformity with the word of God through Moses (Num 34:13-14), and by Joshua, the tribes of Reuben and Gad were the ones who received their inheritance on the other side of Jordan, and not in Canaan itself. “With whom the Reubenites and the Gadites have received their inheritance, which Moses gave them, beyond Jordan eastward, even as Moses the servant of the LORD gave them” (Josh 13:8). The determination made through Moses is specified in Numbers 32:22: “And Moses gave unto them, even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and unto half the tribe of Manasseh the son of Joseph, the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Bashan, the land, with the cities thereof in the coasts, even the cities of the country round about.”

This record of the distribution of the land is recorded in Joshua 14:5-19:51 – 185 verses, Yet, Paul passes over this with a single sentence. This is because the people were familiar with their Scriptures, how their nation had arisen, and the working of the Lord throughout the entire process. Had they not been familiar with this history, he would have explained the matter more fully.

A Difficulty of Our Time

One of the chief difficulties with preaching in our time is the lack of Scriptural knowledge that exists in the churches. There is hardly any aspect of God’s great salvation that does not require extensive explanation. This makes spiritual growth more difficult, because the people can rarely draw profitable conclusions from what is preached. They have difficulty seeing the scope of the Lord’s working because they are largely ignorant of what He has done. Unprofitable ministers are content to tell the people God loves them and wants to do them good. Yet, they have not expounded the great realities that comprise salvation – which exposition is essential because of the ignorance of the people. It is not possible for hearers to profit when men simply refer to what the Lord has done, if those realities are not actually known among the hearers. For example, simply saying Christ died is not sufficient if men do not know why He died – that would be like Paul referring to the possession of Canaan among an uninformed Gentile audience as he did to informed Jews in this text.

The present condition of the church has been in place for such a lengthy period of time that the very foundations of the faith no longer exist in the mind and conscience of the people. Therefore, the circumstance of which David warned has come to pass: “If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?” (Psa 11:3). In my judgment, it would be good to call a cessation to most, if not all, problem resolution, until such time as the foundations have again been established in the thinking of the people. That condition would probably bring about a resolution to the difficulties that are hindering the ignorant and the unlearned.

I understand that this would dissolve many careers and organizations. However, they have been imposed upon the church by men, and need to go.

GOD GAVE THEM JUDGES

“ 20 And after that He gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet.” Other versions read, “. . . all of which took about four hundred and fifty years. And after these things He gave them judges until Samuel the prophet,” NASB and “All this took about 450 years. "After this, God gave them judges until the time of Samuel the prophet.” NIV

This has proved to be a thorny passage for some. Reasoning upon a statement made in First Kings, some say the 450 years is from the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt until David’s expulsion of the Jebusites from the strongholds of Zion (2 Sam 5:6-8). Most commentators reject the idea that the judges covered a period of 450 years, for adding up the specified durations of their rules only comes to 339. However, during that time, the Israelites were also delivered over to their enemies several times, which years are not included in the years during which the judges ruled. The following table provides a satisfactory explanation.

Thus, the period from the time of the judges until Samuel can be properly calculated to be 450 years. I do not wish to make an issue out of this – only to show that there is a sound basis for the way the text is stated.

The point to be seen is that the judges were given to the people by God. They were not the result of human ingenuity. It is also essential to see the kind of rulers that were established in the land: JUDGES. These were men of wisdom and discretion, as well as military leaders when required.

This was the kind of role Moses fulfilled during the forty years Israel wandered in the wilderness (Ex 18:13). When the burden became too heavy for him, the Lord took some of the spirit that was upon Moses, and placed it upon seventy holy men, appointed them to also be judges among the people (Num 11:16-25). Issues requiring a holy decision were then brought to the judges who had been given some of the spirit that was on Moses (Ex 21:6,22). Moses also charged these men to “judge righteously” (Deut 1:16).

Now, after entering into Canaan, God gave the people special judges. Their role was not merely to settle disputes among the people, but to direct them in the ways of the Lord. They stemmed the spread of iniquity and maintained peace. They also initiated military exploits that were required.

Behold the priority of sound judgment and righteousness. God did not raise up leaders to be tyrants over the people. He did not institute an office intended to provide personal advantages for the ruler. The role of the judges had to do with the relation of the people to God Himself. They were required to be godly, exercise sound judgment, and see to it that the will of the Lord was done. That is Divinely sanctioned leadership, and it is still required among the people of God.

GOD GAVE ISRAEL A KING

“ 21 And afterward they desired a king: and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years.”

Paul is confirming the sovereignty of God and the fundamental corruption of the people. Even though He frequently intervened in the affairs of the people, showing them great kindness, yet they pursued their own wicked ways, thus confirming that they were dominated by sin, even though they had been given every conceivable advantage.

THEY DESIRED A KING

“And afterward they desired a king . . .” Other versions read, “they asked for a king,” NKJV “their request for a king,” BBE “the people demanded a king,” GWN “they asked for themselves a king,” MRD and “begged for a king.” NLT

God had established His power and faithfulness to these people. He brought them out of the land of Egypt, giving them favor in the eyes of the Egyptians. He brought them through the Red Sea on dry land, and destroyed the hosts of the Egyptians before their very eyes. He gave them miraculous bread every day, and brought a mighty river out of a rock. He kept their shoes and clothing from wear and tear as they journeyed through the wilderness. He subdued their enemies. He enabled them to take Jericho, and possess the promised land. He gave them judges who led them in victory over their foes, and delivered to them the word of the Lord that was appropriate for their situation. Surely they will be thankful for such favor, never before vouchsafed to any nation under the heavens!

Alas, however, when the last judge, Samuel, grew old, and they felt that his sons were not an adequate replacement for him, they came to Samuel with a petition. “Behold, thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways: now make us a king to judge us like all the nations” (1 Sam 8:5). God had actually separated them, redeeming them “from Egypt, and from the nations and their gods” (2 Sam 7:23).

It is still true that when religious people insist on having leaders like like those who are of the world, it is because they have rejected the rule of God. There really is no way to sugarcoat this. If it is true that we are “complete” in Christ (Col 2:10), then seeking spiritual advantages and resources elsewhere constitute a rejection of the Lord.

For those with no heart for the Lord, this might have seemed like a reasonable request – but it was not. In fact, it greatly “displeased Samuel, when they said, Give us a king to judge us.” As a consequence “Samuel prayed unto the Lord” (2 Sam 13:6).

Like God did in the wilderness when He gave the people quail, then slew them when they ate the meat (Num 11:33), He would grant the people the desires of their heart. He will not do this because it is good for them, or because it is the best thing to do. Here is how the Lord answered the lamenting Samuel. “And the LORD said unto Samuel, Harken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected Me , that I should not reign over them. According to all the works which they have done since the day that I brought them up out of Egypt even unto this day, wherewith they have forsaken Me , and served other gods, so do they also unto thee. Now therefore hearken unto their voice: howbeit yet protest solemnly unto them, and show them the manner of the king that shall reign over them” (1 Sam 8:7-9).

It is still true that when religious people insist on having leaders like like those who are of the world, it is because they have rejected the rule of God. There really is no way to sugarcoat this. If it is true that we are “complete” in Christ (Col 2:10), then seeking spiritual advantages and resources elsewhere constitute a rejection of the Lord.

GOD GAVE THEM SAUL

“ . . . and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years.”

The people asked Samuel to give them a king, but God is the one him. The procedures God used are quite revealing. He told Samuel, “Torrow about this time I will send thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, and thou shalt anoint him to be captain over my people Israel, that he may save My people out of the hand of the Philistines : for I have looked upon My people, because their cry is come unto me” (1 Sam 9:16). Not only did God bring Saul to Samuel, he did so in order to deliver His people from the Philistines – not merely to satisfy their thirst for a king. When Samuel saw Saul the Lord said to him, “Behold the man whom I spake to thee of! this same shall reign over My people” (1 Sam 9:17). In due time, and at an appointed place, “Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and kissed him, and said, Is it not because the LORD hath anointed thee to be captain over His inheritance ?” (1 Sam 10:1).

Later Samuel told Saul that God had chosen him when he was small in his own estimation: “When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the LORD anointed thee king over Israel?” (1 Sam 15:17). Alas, even though God made Saul king, He also removed him from that position.

GOD REMOVED SAUL AND RAISED UP DAVID

“22 And when He had removed him, He raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom also He gave testimony, and said, I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after Mine own heart, which shall fulfil all My will.”

Paul is working his way to the Lord Jesus Christ. He does not allow himself to be distracted by the many details associated with what he has said. He can do this because the people already have a knowledge of them. However, he is going to assist them in seeing that God was behind all of these things, and that He was fulfilling what He had already determined.

GOD REMOVED SAUL

“And when He had removed him . . .” Other versions read, “put him on one side,” BBE “taken him away,” GENEVA “deposed him,” NJB and “put him down.” WEB

The removal of king Saul was accomplished by God, with several things taking place. The removal was done justly, and for good cause, because Saul had refused to obey the Lord. The Lord had sent Saul on a mission to “utterly destroy the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until they be consumed” (1 Sam 15:18). This was mandated because God remembered “that which Amalek did to Israel, how he laid wait for him in the way, when he came up from Egypt” (1 Sam 15:2). However, Saul did not do this. It is written, “But Saul and the people spared Agag, and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them: but every thing that was vile and refuse, that they destroyed utterly” (1 Sam 15:9). Therefore God set out to remove him from the very office into which He had placed him.

- It repented the Lord that He had set up Saul to be king (1 Sam 15:11).
- Because Saul rejected the word of the Lord, the Lord rejected him from being king over Israel (1 Sam 15:25).
- God tore the kingdom from Saul and gave it to his neighbor, who was David, who was better than him (1 Sam 15:28).
- Although Samuel mourned over Saul, he never again spoke to him until the day of his death (1 Sam 15:35).
- The Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul (1 Sam 16:14).
- An evil spirit from the Lord came upon him (1 Sam 16:14).
- In a battle with the Philistines, Saul was “sorely wounded” (1 Sam 31:3).
- Saul committed suicide (1 Sam 31:4).

From his disobedience concerning the Amalekites until his death spanned a period of approximately twenty-five years. Yet, it is briefly comprehended in the word, “He removed him.” It ought to be apparent, that once a person is rejected by God, nothing else is of any consequence. It is no wonder that the people of God are admonished, “Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?” (2 Cor 13:5).

Why Did God Choose Saul in the First Place?

Some might wonder why God chose Saul in the first place. Did He make a mistake in doing so? Of course, such questions are foolish, and ought not to be entertained for a moment. We are told why He chose Saul – that he may save My people out of the hand of the Philistines ” (1 Sam 9:16). Having fulfilled that mission, he fell and was rejected.

HE RAISED UP DAVID

“ . . . He raised up unto them David to be their king. . . ” Other versions read, “He raised up for them David,” NKJV “He made David their king,” NIV “replaced him (Saul) with David,” NLT and “set up David to be their king.” TNT

This also was a process that extended over a period of time.

- As soon as Saul was rejected, God told Samuel he had chosen one of the sons of Jesse the Bethlehemite (1 Sam 16:1).
- Samuel anointed David in the house of Jesse (1 Sam 16:13a).
- The Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward (1 Sam 16:13b).
- David became noted for his military exploits (1 Sam 18:7).

David remained a king incognito for twenty-five years, finally assuming the throne after the death of Saul (2 Sam 2:4). Yet, that period of time is covered by the words, “He raised up David to be their king.”

It ought to be apparent that the people of God should not get caught up in the details of life. They should be compelled by fundamental things, not incidentals.

A MAN AFTER MINE OWN HEART

“ . . . to whom also He gave testimony, and said I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after Mine own heart, which shall fulfil all My will.” Other versions read, “a man dear to My heart,” BBE “a man according to My own heart,” DOUAY and “the man I like.” IE

What does God mean by “a man after Mine own heart” ? First, it means that God does not view every person alike – not even those in a chosen nation, and in covenant with Him. If the love of God was indiscriminate, such a statement could not be made.

A person that is especially dear to God is identified in Scripture. The Lord speaks of such individuals, and our text states that David was such a person.

- THOSE WHO TREMBLE AT HIS WORD. “For all those things hath mine hand made, and all those things have been, saith the LORD: but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word ” (Isa 66:2).
- THOSE WITH HUMBLE AND CONTRITE HEARTS. “For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit , to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones” (Isa 57:15).

• THE MEEK. “The spirit of the Lord GOD is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek . . .” (Isa 61:1).

• BROKEN HEART AND CONTRITE SPIRIT. “The LORD is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart ; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit” (Psa 34:18). “The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart , O God, thou wilt not despise” (Psa 51:17).

• THE LOWLY. “Though the LORD be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly . . .” (Psa 138:6).

• THOSE WHO SIGH AND CRY BECAUSE OF SURROUNDING ABOMINATIONS. “And the LORD said unto him, Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof ” (Ezek 9:4).

Briefly stated, the person who is after God’s own heart is one who is tender toward Him, sensitive of His will, and discontent with any shortcomings. It is a person who laments personal sin, never seeking to justify it. It is the person who is instant in his response to God, not tarrying to obey or slow to discern.

The Lord described David as a man who “shall fulfill all My will.” Other versions read, “will do everything I want him to do,” NIV “will carry out my wishes,” NRSV “will do all things that I will,” GENEVA “will carry out my every wish,” NAB “will perform my entire will,” NJB and “who will do all My will and carry out My program fully.” AMPLIFIED

This description is reminiscent of what the Lord said about Abraham: “For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the LORD, to do justice and judgment; that the LORD may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him” (Gen 18:19).

In both cases, the men were enabled by God to fulfill His will. However, that was not the point of emphasis. It was rather that Abraham and David were men who could be directed by God. Their hearts were tender, and they were not like the horse and mule “Which have no understanding, Which must be harnessed with bit and bridle, Else they will not come near you” NKJV (Psa 32:9).

These days, this kind of teaching is not common – but it is sorely needed. There are many people in whom God is not working simply because their hearts are hard, and they are dominated by unbelief. I understand that this circumstance can be corrected, but it will require sensitivity on their part for this to happen.

FINAL THOUGHT

I want to again draw attention to the way in which Paul is accenting the working of the Lord. From the beginning of Paul’s message through this verse, the following is what the Lord is declared to have done. All of these things are affirmed in the power of the Spirit.

- The Lord was “the God of this people.”
- God chose the fathers.
- God exalted the people.
- God brought them out of Egypt with a high hand.
- God suffered their manners for forty years.

- God destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan.
- God divided the land to Israel by lot.
- God gave them judges.
- God gave them Saul to be to be their king for forty years,
- God removed Saul from being king.
- God raised up David to be their king.

GOD RAISED UP A SAVIOR FOR ISRAEL

“ 23 Of this man's seed hath God according to His promise raised unto Israel a Savior, Jesus. ” Other versions read, “from the offspring of this man,” NASB “From this man’s descendants,” NIV and “Of this man’s posterity.” NRSV

Now we come to the central point of Paul’s message – the Person of Jesus Christ. While the birth of Jesus is traced back to Abraham (Gal 3:16), and ultimately to Eve (Gal 3:15), the exalted and Kingly Christ is traced back to David (Acts 2:30,34-36; 2 Tim 2:6). Jesus is the real point! He is the reason for Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. He is the reason for Israel. He is the reason for David. These were all appointed vehicles through whom the Savior would come. The promises made to them were in order that the Christ might be recognized when He came.

Every involvement of God with men up to that point was preparatory for the Savior. It was designed to confirm the need of a Savior, and the nature of the One God would provide.

During the time of Moses, God gave Israel a lawgiver. Later He gave them judges, and then kings. But those leaders were not the point. They were rather a preparation for the point. The real need of humanity was not a lawgiver. It was not a military captain, or a discreet judge. The need was not a mighty king, or a charismatic leader. What the race of Adam needed was a Savior, and that is what God ultimately raised up. Every involvement of God with men up to that point was preparatory for the Savior. It was designed to confirm the need of a Savior, and the nature of the One God would provide.

The Savior, Jesus Christ, was raised up according to God’s promise. If they were not being directed by the Scriptures, this was not the kind of Savior men would expect. Even today, where there is a fundamental ignorance of the Word of God in general, and the promises of God in particular, it is not possible for men to have a lucid conception of a Savior sent from God. Blessed is the person who sees this, and shapes his life around it.

CONCLUSION

Paul’s message in the Antioch synagogue is a display of spiritual understanding. In it, God is seen as the principle Person, and Christ as the One to carry out His objective of salvation. The world is seen as a stage on which the drama of redemption is being brought to its appointed conclusion. All of those who are involved in this purpose have been chosen by God, and He is the One who works in them. However, because this purpose is being worked out in a moral arena, amidst competing influences, man’s involvement must not be taken for granted. Already Paul has cited Saul as an example of one chosen by God, yet rejected because he failed to yield to Him. This kind of exposition will continue, ensuring that any person toward whom God shows favor is expected to be sensitive and responsive to that favor.

Lesson #58

PAUL PREACHES IN ANTIOCH, #2

“ 13:24 When John had first preached before His coming the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel. 25 And as John fulfilled his course, he said, Whom think ye that I am? I am not He. But, behold, there cometh One after me, whose shoes of His feet I am not worthy to loose. 26 Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent. 27 For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew Him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning Him. 28 And though they found no cause of death in Him, yet desired they Pilate that He should be slain. 29 And when they had fulfilled all that was written of Him, they took Him down from the tree, and laid Him in a sepulchre. 30 But God raised Him from the dead: 31 And He was seen many days of them which came up with Him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are His witnesses unto the people. 32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, 33 God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that He hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee. ” (Acts 13:24-33)

INTRODUCTION

Paul passes over 2,000 years of Divine workings – from Abraham through the raising up of Jesus – leaping over the period of the kings, the era of the Prophets, the Babylonian captivity, the return of Judah from that captivity, and the rebuilding of the Temple (a period of more than a thousand years). It ought to be obvious that there is objectivity in his preaching. He is not merely passing along information, or giving a chronological history lesson. In order to preach like this, God Himself, the Author of history, must be known. His objectives and priorities for mankind must be comprehended, and the indispensable role of Jesus discerned.

While, from the human point of view, these are representative of significant historic events, they are all incidental from the heavenly point of view. These are samples of unusual human productivity, ranging from language and literature, to philosophy and architecture; and from shipbuilding to the establishment of cities and empires. Yet they are not significant within the framework of the purpose of Almighty God. That is, they are given no emphasis, nor does the Lord use them as pillars of reason, or primary reference points. In fact, they are not even mentioned in the Word of God – not even in passing.

GODLY THINKING

We are living in a period of time in which professed Christian thinkers have been unduly influenced by worldly accomplishments. The realm of Christian scholarship has been penetrated by bodies of knowledge Scripture refers to as “science falsely so called,” or “false called knowledge” NKJV (1 Tim 6:20). Such things as psychiatry with its psycho-analysis, hermeneutics (methodological principles of interpretation), principles of statistics, logic (the science of the formal principles of reason), physical science, etc. have been merged with religious thought. This has yielded all kinds of erroneous doctrines, as well as the modern approaches to exposition.

As soon as men attempt to mingle human wisdom, however valid it may appear, with the revealed wisdom of God, the mind is diverted away from God. It is not possible for any form of the wisdom of man to assist one in understanding the revelation of either the Person or purpose of God Almighty. This is not a speculative statement, God has spoken on this matter. “For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe” (1 Cor 1:19-21). With holy deliberation, Paul avoided any attempt to merge the wisdom of God and the wisdom of men. “And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God” (1 Cor 2:4-5).

Paul provides enough of Israel's history to establish God's purposeful dealings with them, as well as their recalcitrant nature toward that Divine intent.

WHY MENTION THIS?

Because this is such a sensitive subject, it is necessary to affirm the relevance of its mention. It is because our text is exposing us to the preaching of one of the premier men in the body of Christ. He is on a mission originated the Holy Spirit (Acts 13:2), and is speaking in view of the solemn commission that was delivered to him when he first was added to the church (Acts 26:18). His thinking and speaking are shaped by his faith. In addition to this, as he wrote some time later, Jesus had considered him “faithful, putting him into the ministry” (1 Tim 1:12). That is, like Abraham and David before him, he could be trusted to do what pleased the Lord (Gen 18:19; 1 Sam 13:14). For these reasons, it is vital that we note the manner in which Paul speaks. He does not rely on rabbinical interpretations or the traditions of the elders. There is no reference to the instruction of the scribes, or even to the sayings of Gamaliel. He relies wholly upon the Scriptures for the formulation of both reasoning and proclamation. This is not a common practice in our time, but there is good reason to believe it is a completely sound one.

SUFFICIENT INFORMATION FOR THE OCCASION

Paul provides enough of Israel's history to establish God's purposeful dealings with them, as well as their recalcitrant nature toward that Divine intent. Now he shows that a kingly Messiah was promised through David, and that everything revolved around Him. Because of who He was, men were not given the option of rejecting, spurning, or refusing to hear Him. Often I hear men referring to others being free to reject Jesus. This is a clumsy saying, and is unworthy of repetition. I understand that men are capable of rejecting Christ, but they are not free to do so. In fact, they will be condemned for doing it (Mk 16:16). Too frequently, I fear, men are presented with the fact of Christ as though they had time to think about it, considering whether it was to their best advantage to believe on Him and act accordingly. In this message, Paul will give them a single opportunity to consider the matter, admonishing them to zealously avoid falling into the category of those who did not believe the faithful report of the Savior. He had no tolerance for unbelief.

In the case of king David, everything was not centered in him. He was the head of the nation, and the people looked to him. However, he only had power to govern the people, not to change them. He could defeat the enemies, but he could not utterly remove them. He was a man after God's own heart, but he was not the seed of the woman who would bruise the head of the serpent. Thus Paul reasons from the most outwardly productive king of Israel to the King of kings. He says only enough concerning the history of Israel to clearly establish the priority of Christ Jesus, and the necessity of responding to His Person and work.

JOHN PREACHED BEFORE HIS COMING

“ 13:24 When John had first preached before His coming the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel.”

JOHN THE BAPTIST

Leaping from David to the raising up of Jesus, Paul commences his exposition of the Savior with the ministry of John the baptist. This is because Jesus cannot be properly understood independently of John's ministry. Here was a man who was the subject of prophetic utterances at least seven hundred years before the Word became flesh, and dwelt among men (John 1:14). Isaiah spoke of him in this manner: “The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the LORD, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain” (Isaiah 40:1-4). Matthew states that John the Baptist particularly fulfilled this prophecy (Matt 3:1-3). While Matthew only refers to the first part of this prophecy, Luke includes the later part of the prophecy as well: “Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth; and all flesh shall see the salvation of God” (Luke 3:4-6).

Following Christ's resurrection, the references to John the Baptist of significant.

- JESUS SAID: “For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence” (Acts 1:5).

- JESUS SAID: “ For this is he , of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist : notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he. And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John ” (Matt 11:10-13).

- ZECHARIAS SAID: “And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest : for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways ; To give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins” (Luke 1:76-77).

• PETER SAID: “Beginning from the baptism of John , unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection” (Acts 1:22) .

• PETER SAID: “That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judaea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached ” (Acts 10:37).

• PETER SAID: “Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water ; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost” (Acts 11:16).

• PAUL SAID: “Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance , saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus” (Acts 19:4).

John’s ministry was to “prepare” the people for the Christ (Isa 40:3; Matt 3:3; 11:10; Mk 1:2-3; Lk 1:76-77; 3:4; 7:27). This prophet acquaints us with what is required to receive Christ, and to be received by Him as well. He was appointed by God to do this work, and therefore no person can afford to ignore John the Baptist. In preaching the Gospel, John plays a significant role.

BEFORE HIS COMING

“When John . . . before His coming . . .” Other versions read, “before the coming of Jesus,” NIV “?or whose coming John made ready,” BBE “before He came to public attention,” CSB “before the face of His entry,” DARBY “before Jesus began His ministry,” GWN “heralded His coming,” NAB “before Jesus arrived,” NET and “whose coming was heralded.” NJB

The idea is that it is a baptism that is characterized by repentance. In other words, a person who had not repented, even though they may have gone through the external form of baptism, had not really been baptized. It was repentance that validated the baptism, and baptism that confirmed the actuality of repentance.

It is interesting to note how Paul refers to Christ’s coming. He does not refer to His birth, but to the commencement of His ministry. This took place after He was baptized by John (Matt 3:16-4:17). Like John the Baptist, that was the time of His “showing” (Lk 1:80). Even though, according to the flesh, people knew of Jesus prior to His baptism, technically speaking, He had not yet “come” – i.e. He had not yet entered into the work He was sent to accomplish. Prior to His baptism John the Baptist knew of Him, recognizing that He was a righteous man (Matt 3:13-14). He was also known in Nazareth, where He regularly attended the synagogue, and was a recognized reader and expounder of the Scriptures (Lk 4:16-17). The general populous considered him to be “the carpenter’s son,” knew Mary was His mother, and that He had brothers and sisters (Matt 13:55-56). Owing to His apparent occupation, they also knew of Jesus as “ the carpenter, the son of Mary” (Mk 6:3).

However, that is not how Jesus is to be known, and thus such knowledge gave no advantage. During the first thirty years of His life, He appeared to be nothing more than an extraordinary Jew. His primary associations were with Mary and Joseph, and their family.

John the Baptist was born six months before Jesus (Lk 1:24-26,36). Thus, when Jesus commenced His ministry at thirty years of age (Lk 3:23), assuming that John began his ministry at the same age, John had been preparing the way for the Lord for at least six months. Thirty years of age was the time when the priests began their ministry (Num 4:3,23,30,35,39,43,47; 1 Chron 23:3). Although not intended to be a point of controversy, this is the basis for considering John’s ministry to also have commenced when he was thirty years of age. David was also thirty years of age when he began to reign (2 Sam 5:4).

THE BAPTISM OF REPENTANCE

“ . . . had first preached . . . the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel.” Other versions read, “ Repentance and baptism,” NIV “the baptism which goes with a change of heart,” BBE “an immersion in connection with turning to God from sin,” CJB “the baptism of penance,” DOUAY “repent of their sins and turn to God and be baptized,” NLT “baptism of reformation,” YLT “the need for everyone in Israel to turn from sin to God,” LIVING “change their hearts and to be immersed,” IE and “baptism as an expression of repentance” WILLIAMS

In their somewhat feeble attempt to clarify the text, some of the English versions distort this verse. They treat the matter as though repentance and baptism were separate from one another, or, and John preached it, could be accomplished independently of one another. However, the expression “baptism of repentance” is a precise translation, reflecting exactly what the words say. It does not refer to two independent actions, but to one. The idea is that it is a baptism that is characterized by repentance. In other words, a person who had not repented, even though they may have gone through the external form of baptism, had not really been baptized. It was repentance that validated the baptism, and baptism that confirmed the actuality of repentance. This is why John refused to baptize certain Pharisees and Sadducees who came to his baptism. He said to them, “But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance : and think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham” (Matt 3:7-9). Their fleshly lineage back to Abraham did not qualify them to be baptized. Rather, there had to be clear and unquestionable evidence that they had repented, else they could not be baptized.

The Word of Preparation

Whatever a person may think about the matter, repentance is a requisite for coming to Christ. It is an absolute requirement. This is how men were prepared for receiving the earthly ministry of Christ, and it is also required for eternally benefitting from His presence in heaven (Acts 2:38; 3:19; Acts 17:30; 26:20).

Following the enthronement of Christ in heaven, Peter also associated the evidence of repentance with repentance itself. In order for sins to be blotted out, he declared the person must first be converted: “Repent ye therefore, and be converted , that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord” (Acts 3:19). In this case, “repent” referred to a change of mind, and “convert” to a change of conduct. While a change in conduct cannot be sustained independently of being “in Christ,” it must be commenced prior to that experience. On his way to Jesus, Paul had to cease persecuting the church – and he did. When the Thessalonians turned to God, they ceased the worship of idols (1 Thess 1:9).

This was the point that caused John to refuse to baptize the Pharisees and Sadducees that came to his baptism. He told them, “Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance,” or “in keeping with repentance,” NASB or “that befits repentance” RSV (Matt 3:8).

This is not a strange concept. Even under the Law, the Lord required Israel to amend their conduct, insisting that such an action must precede the experience of His favor. “Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Amend your ways and your doings , and I will cause you to dwell in this place . . . For if ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings ; if ye thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbor; if ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods to your hurt: then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers, for ever and ever ” (Jer 7:3,5-7; 26:13; 35:15).

I do not believe it is possible to establish that a person can come to Christ without renouncing sin. Nor, indeed, is it possible to appropriate His great salvation without extending oneself to cease and desist from deviate conduct. Such determinations cannot be maintained without receiving the grace of God. However, just as surely as the lame was told to pick up his bed and walk, so the sinner must determinedly embark on a new course of life if he expects to be blessed by Jesus. That determination will be empowered, and Divine enablement will be granted to the soul who comes to Jesus in such a manner. They have brought forth fruits worthy of repentance, and they will not be left to navigate in their own strength.

Much of the evangelism of our day does not insist on this approach to Jesus. It leaves people imagining that they can come to Jesus clinging to their old manner of life, thinking that their behavior will be addressed after they are in Christ. It is true that when we come to Christ we come stained with the guilt of sin, but we do not come with any allegiance to it! Repentance is a change of perspective and values that brings one to hate unrighteousness and resolve to have nothing more to do with it. Conversion is the outgrowth of that, and enables the person to throw off his deviate ways en route to the Savior.

This was the preparatory ministry of John the Baptist. He would not receive those who refused to change. You may be sure that less is not required today in coming to Jesus.

In his message, Paul will make perfectly clear that no person can come to Jesus who maintains a disdain for His Person or His word. That kind of manifestation must come to a grinding halt, else the person has judged themselves unworthy of eternal life.

Prior to John, washings were all ceremonial. They were not associated with any fundamental change in the people (Heb 9:10). However, John's baptism was not a mere ceremony. It was related with a very real change in the people. For the first time in history, men would acquire a knowledge of forgiveness – something that was never accomplished through the Law. In prophesying of this ministry, Zecharias being filled with the Holy Spirit, said of John: "And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto His people by the remission of their sins" (Luke 1:76-77).

The idea here is that of more precisely defining salvation in the minds of the people. Until this time, owing to the abbreviated revelation of God, and the limitations of the Old Covenant, salvation had been largely associated with outward deliverance. This, however, is not the nature of the salvation Jesus would bring. His would be a deliverance from the guilt and power of sin, this present evil world, and the devil – something never before realized to such an extent.

WHEN JOHN FULFILLED HIS COURSE

"25 And as John fulfilled his course, he said, Whom think ye that I am? I am not He. But, behold, there cometh One after me, whose shoes of His feet I am not worthy to loose."

John the Baptist ministered at a unique time. He stood between the covenants, as it were, preparing the people for the ending of the Old Covenant, and the beginning of the New – for that, among other things, is what would be accomplished through Jesus Christ.

Jesus said of John, "The law and the prophets were until John : since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it" (Luke 16:16).

Jesus referred to "the law and the prophets" in respect to their purpose, or the role they played in the execution of God's eternal purpose. They were not an end of themselves, but were designed to acquaint men with God, and ready them for Christ by confirming the nature of fallen man. The Law presented the unalterable demands of God, which amounted to the necessity of men being like God before they could be fully approved by Him. In His acceptance of men, God would not compromise His own character. First, such a compromise is not even possible, for God "cannot deny Himself" (2 Tim 2:13). That is, He cannot speak or conduct Himself in contradiction of His own nature. This meant that He could not receive men unless someone stepped into the defiled domain and acted in the behalf of men. This would require the expiation of their sins, the defeat of their foe, and the full satisfaction of God Himself. The Law confirmed that this did, in fact, have to be done. The Prophets spelled out the characteristics of the Savior, and how He would go about achieving this requirement. Neither the Law nor the Prophets were ultimately intended to spell out the manner in which men were to live. They did do this, but that was not their greater work.

When the Savior came, He would do a work that would fully meet the righteous requirements of the Law, and would also thoroughly fulfill the prophecies declared by the prophets. Once He came, the ministry of the Law and the Prophets would be reduced to a secondary position, being overshadowed by a greater glory.

John the Baptist occupied a transitory position in time – a time when the Lord was redirecting the way men thought. The emphasis of preaching, or inspired declaration would change.

JOHN FULFILLED HIS COURSE

“And as John fulfilled his course.” Other versions read, “was finishing his course,” NKJV “was completing his course,” NASB “was finishing his work,” NRSV “was ending his work,” CJB “was completing his life work,” CSB “was fulfilling his ministry,” MRD “completing his mission,” NET “towards the end of his career,” WEYMOUTH “was closing his career,” WILLIAMS “was finishing his race,” MONTGOMERY and “reached the end of his time.” PHILLIPS

The Greek words translated “his course” are to.n dro,mon , and have the following lexical meaning. “His course of life,” THAYER and “his racecourse, course, place for running.” FRIBERG Paul spoke of finishing his “course” (Acts 20:24), and when he came to the conclusion of his life he wrote, “I have finished my course” (2 Tim 4:7).

This statement is made against the backdrop of Divine assignment. In general, it is said of all men, “From one man He made every nation of men, that they should inhabit the whole earth; and He determined the times set for them and the exact places where they should live” NIV (Acts 17:26). For believers, life is described a “the race that is set before us” (Heb 12:1). That is, life is like a race with a particular course, or path, and a specified duration of time. Because it is possible to be on the wrong path, and squander the time that has been allotted to us, wise men have prayed, “So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom” (Psa 90:12).

For John the Baptist, his life’s work lasted for approximately six months. Shortly after Jesus began His ministry, John was imprisoned by Herod (Matt 4:12; Lk 3:20), and eventually beheaded (Matt 14:10). His was a brief, but aggressive, ministry – and he finished his course in good stride, having accomplished what God sent him to do – prepare the way of the Lord, and “make ready a people prepared for the Lord” (Lk 1:17). He lived for thirty years, spending most, if not all, of his adult life “in the deserts until the day of his showing unto Israel” (Lk 1:80). That time came when “Annas and Caiaphas” were “high priests.” At that time “the word of God came unto John the son of Zecharias in the wilderness . . . he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins” (Luke 3:3).

Commencing his ministry in the power of the Holy Spirit, this righteous man faithfully ran the course that was set before him, finishing it to the glory of God.

Our text states that the completion of his course involved a declaration. It was like a capstone on his work, enabling him to finish the race set before him in full vigor, while faithfully fulfilling what he had been sent to do.

I AM NOT HE

“ . . . he said, Whom think ye that I am? I am not He.” John the Baptist was a different kind of minister and prophet – more after the New Covenant than the Old, yet standing between them. His ministry did not center in himself, but in the coming Christ. In such a case, I cannot imagine him referring to his work as “The John the Baptist Ministries” – a procedure that has become quite common in our day. The reason for this is that it is not possible to capitalize on the name of Jesus, or use it to bolster a particular work. It was not the name of John the Baptist, or baptizer, that brought the people to him, but what he said.

During his ministry, he had gotten the attention of the people. Confirming the validity of his ministry to prepare the way of the Lord, it is written of him, “Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judaea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins” (Matt 3:6). The people “counted him as a prophet” (Matt 14:5). So powerful were His words that “all men mused in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ, or not” (Luke 3:15). It was this latter consideration that moved John to declare “I am not He!”

Being filled with the Holy Spirit “even from his mother’s womb,” John knew who he was, and the mission on which he had been sent. On one occasion, when particularly questioned by the crowd, he did not hesitate to declare who he was. John provides the details of that conversation. “And this is the record of John, when the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou? And he confessed, and denied not; but confessed, I am not the Christ . And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not . Art thou that prophet? And he answered, No . Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself? He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias” (John 1:19-23).

The impact of John upon the people can be measured by the associations that were made with him. They pondered the following possibilities.

- That he was the Christ (Anointed One) the prophets said would come (Isa 61:1-4). John said, “I Am not He.”
- That he was the Elijah that Malachi said would come (Mal 4:5-6). John responded, “I am not.”
- That he was the Prophet that Moses said would come (Deut 18:15,18). John responded, “No.”

As Jesus indicated, the prophecy of Malachi was not yet fulfilled, even after John had been beheaded. Jesus left the door open for the fulfillment of Elijah coming and restoring all things.

It may be countered that Jesus said John was Elijah, and therefore John was uninformed on that matter. Jesus’ words concerning this are given by Matthew: “And if ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come” (Matt 11:14). Mark records, “And they asked him, saying, Why say the scribes that Elias must first come? And he answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things ; and how it is written of the Son of man, that he must suffer many things, and be set at nought. But I say unto you, That Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him” (Mark 9:11-13). This question was asked by the disciples just after the transfiguration of Jesus, during which Elijah appeared in glory. At that time, John the Baptist had already been martyred (Matt 14:10). Yet, Jesus said, “Indeed, Elijah is coming first and restores all things” NKJV (Mark 9:12). He then added that the people did to John whatever they wished, referring to his death. Additionally, John did not “restore all things,” and was never intended to do so. His work was to prepare the way for the Lord, and that is what he did.

Clarifying the association of John with Elijah, the angel Gabriel announced to Zecharias that the prayer of himself and his wife, Elizabeth, concerning having a child, had been heard. Their son would be John the Baptist. Of him Gabriel said, “And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias , to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord” (Luke 1:17).

From these I deduce the following.

- That John the Baptist was a type of the Elijah of whom Malachi prophesied, coming in his power and spirit.
- That his role was not to restore all things, but to turn “many” toward the Lord, preparing the way for Him. The conclusion of his ministry was not the restoring of the people, for the very people to whom he had ministered were guilty of delivering Jesus to Pilate to be crucified.
- As Jesus indicated, the prophecy of Malachi was not yet fulfilled, even after John had been beheaded. Jesus left the door open for the fulfillment of Elijah coming and restoring all things.

THERE COMES ONE AFTER ME

“But, behold, there cometh One after me, whose shoes of His feet I am not worthy to loose.”

John, though standing at the threshold of Christ’s earthly minister, was given to perceive His greatness. He saw himself as unworthy to even remove the shoes of Jesus from His feet. That would have been a servile task, to say the least. However, John saw such a humble task as so honorable he considered himself unworthy of such a privilege.

Jesus once testified to the greatness of John the Baptist when compared to other men: “But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet . For this is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist .” Then, confirming the greatness of the salvation He would effect, and the era of greatness that was upon them, He added, “notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he” (Mat 11:9-11). That is, a man-to-man comparison with John would confirm that no man excelled him. However, when compared to the domain in which men stood, the Kingdom Jesus ushered in brought to men a greatness that excelled that of John the Baptist. The difference was where men stood, not who they were. John was like a giant standing in a valley, while those in Christ are like midgets standing on a mountain – small in personal comparison, but greater in privilege.

John, though standing at the threshold of Christ’s earthly minister, was given to perceive His greatness. He saw himself as unworthy to even remove the shoes of Jesus from His feet. That would have been a servile task, to say the least. However, John saw such a humble task as so honorable he considered himself unworthy of such a privilege.

I can only imagine the kind of response John the Baptist would have to the religious pride that exists in our time.

What Did John Say About Jesus?

The testimony of John concerning the Lord Jesus Christ is remarkably extensive – and it was all uttered in a relatively brief period of time. That was after Jesus was baptized, during the close of John’s ministry. Or, as our Paul said, “while John was completing his course.” NASB (Acts 13:25). The pertinence of his testimony is certified by the words of Jesus Himself: “he bare witness unto the truth” (John 5:33). Here are the things he said.

- MIGHTY. John said Jesus was “mightier” than John (Matt 3:11a; Mk 1:7a; Lk 3:16a).

- SUPERIOR. John said he was not worthy to loose the sandals from His feet (Matt 3:11b; Mk 1:7b; Lk 3:16b).

- A BAPTIZER. John said Jesus would “baptize . . . with the Holy Spirit and fire” (Matt 3:11c; Mk 1:8; Lk 3:16).

- A PURGER AND GATHERER. John said Jesus would thoroughly purge His floor, gathering in the wheat, and burning up the chaff (Matt 3:12; Lk 3:17).

- PREFERRED. John said Jesus was preferred before him. (John 1:15,26a,30)

- ETERNAL. John said Jesus existed before him (even though He was born after John (John 1:15,26a,30).

- UNKNOWN prior to his baptism. John said that until His baptism, the Christ was not truly known (John 1:26,27).

- THE LAMB OF GOD. John identified Jesus as “the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world” (John 1:29,36).

- UNKNOWN UNTIL BAPTIZED. John said he did not know who Jesus was unto he baptized Him (John 1:31).

- TO BE REVEALED. John said he came baptizing in order that the Christ might be revealed in being baptized (John 1:31).

- SPIRIT REMAINED ON HIM. John said he was given a sign: the One upon whom the Spirit descended and remained was the Christ, who would baptize with the Holy Spirit (John 1:32-33).

- SON OF GOD. John said he saw this happen, and bare record “that this is the Son of God” (John 1:34).

- RECEIVED WHAT HE HAD FROM HEAVEN. When John was told that Jesus was baptizing, he responded, “A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven” (John 3:27).

- JOHN WAS SENT TO PRECEDE HIM. John said he was “not the Christ,” but was “sent before Him” (John 3:28).

- THE BRIDEGROOM. John said Jesus was “the Bridegroom” and had “the bride,” while he was the “friend of the bridegroom” (John 3:29a).

- REJOICED AT THE BRIDEGROOM’S VOICE. John said he stood and heard, rejoicing greatly “because of the Bridegroom’s voice,” and in this his joy was fulfilled (John 3:29b).

- MUST INCREASE. John said that Jesus “must increase,” but he had to “decrease” (John 3:30).

- CAME DOWN FROM HEAVEN. John said Jesus “came down from heaven . . .” (John 3:31).

- IS ABOVE ALL. John said Jesus “is above all” (John 3:31).

- HIS TESTIMONY NOT RECEIVED. John said Jesus testified what He had seen and heard, and “no man receiveth His testimony” (John 3:32).

- THE MEANS OF CERTIFICIATION. John said that the person who did receive Christ's testimony "hath set to his seal that God is true," or "certified that God is true" NKJV (John 3:33).

- SPOKE THE WORDS OF GOD. John said of Jesus, "For He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God. . ." (John 3:34a).

- HAD THE SPIRIT WITHOUT MEASURE. John said of Jesus, "God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto Him" (John 3:34b).

- THE FATHER LOVED HIM. John said, "The Father loveth the Son . . ." (John 3:35a).

- THE FATHER GAVE ALL THINGS INTO HIS HAND. John said, "The Father ... hath given all things into His hand" (John 3:35b).

- WHOEVER BELIEVES ON HIM HAS EVERLASTING LIFE. John said, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life . . ." (John 3:36).

- THE WRATH OF GOD ABIDES ON WHOEVER DOES NOT BELIEVE HIM. John said, ". . . he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on Him" (John 3:36).

There is a hasty listing of twenty-seven things John the Baptist said concerning Jesus. Although it is a source of great shame, there are staggering numbers of professing Christians that have not yet heard this much information about Christ. Further, what they have heard does not blend with the nature of these revelations. Observe that in preparing people for the Lord, he made no reference to Jesus resolving personal problems, correcting social ills, assisting people to fulfill their dreams, and a host of similar things now being placed before the people. However, John was sent by God, filled with the Spirit, and commissioned to make the people ready for the Lord. Judge for yourself the source of much of what is being said about Jesus in our time.

Also note that what John said about Jesus is perfectly harmonious with what Jesus said about Himself, and how He was declared in the "apostles' doctrine." It is the nature of truth to always be symmetrical – all utterances blending with and complementing each other. Messages that are at a variance with the Person and purpose of God, as well as the declared objectives of Jesus, cannot possibly be true. A variance with God voids the message.

TO YOU IS THE WORD OF THIS SALVATION SENT

" 26 Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent."

Having delivered a stirring and insightful summation of about 2,500 years of history, Paul zeros in on the purpose of it all – salvation, deliverance, rescue, and preservation. This all has more to do with eternity than with time, and with the world to come rather than this present evil world. He is going to show that Jesus is pertinent to the salvation that God has promised. Jesus has no relevance apart from that promised salvation.

MEN AND BRETHREN

"Men and brethren . . ." Other versions read, "brethren," NASB "brothers," NIV "my brothers," NRSV "men, brethren," DOUAY/RWB/YLT and "ye men and brethren." GENEVA/PNT/TNT

The majority of later English

This all has more to do with eternity than with time, and with the world to come rather than this present evil world. He is going to show that Jesus is pertinent to the salvation that God has promised. Jesus has no relevance apart from that promised salvation.

versions omit the word “men,” employing only the word “brethren” or “brothers.” Both older and newer Greek manuscripts contain the two words translated “men” and “brethren” (Andrej avdelfoi). The first word (Andrej), as used in this text, has the following lexical meaning: “when persons of either sex are included,” THAYER and “person.” UBS

The second word (avdelfoi), as used in this text, has this lexical meaning: “having the same national ancestor, belong to the same people, countrymen.” THAYER

The first word – “men” – views the listeners as being traced back to Adam, the “one blood” from which God made all man (Acts 17:26). The second views their ethnic origin – from the standpoint of their progenitor being the same as that of Paul himself – hence he calls them “brethren,” as being members of the same family, as well as of the human race itself. As we will see, these distinctions are critical to the effective communication of the message Paul is delivering.

CHILDREN OF THE STOCK OF ABRAHAM

“ . . . children of the stock of Abraham . . .” Other versions read, “sons of the family of Abraham,” NKJV “children of Abraham,” NIV “descendants of Abraham’s family,” NRSV “sons of the family of Abraham,” RSV “descendant of Abraham,” GWN and “sons of the race of Abraham.” YLT

The word “stock” is a proper translation of the Greek word used here, although that term does require some interpretation. It is referring to the progenitor from which the people sprang. From the ethnic point of view it could be translated “family” or “race.” From a parabolic point of view, a “stock” would be like a trunk of a large tree that yielded all manner of branches and fruit. Here, it is descriptive of the fleshly progeny of Abraham – particularly the Jews which were traced backward from the sons to Jacob, through Jacob, through Isaac, and finally to Abraham.

WHOSOEVER AMONG YOU FEARETH GOD

“ . . . and whosoever among you feareth God . . .” Other versions read, “you God-fearing Gentiles,” NIV “others who fear God,” NRSV “converts to Judaism,” GWN and “all those others among you who reverence and fear God.” AMPLIFIED

This particularly refers to Gentile proselytes, but is by no means limited to them. It also includes the Jews who feared the Lord. Prior to the coming of Christ, and with very few exceptions, the Jews were the exclusive custodians of things pertaining to God. Here, however, the fear of the Lord is not perceived as a creed or an empty claim. Paul distinguishes those in his audience whose lives are being directed by their fear and consciousness of the living God. The message he will deliver is for those, and those alone.

A word also ought to be said about

Gentiles coming to the synagogue. During those early times, and prior to the establishment of independent congregations of believers, this was the place where devout Gentiles came to appropriate more of the knowledge of God. Such people were aware that the Jews had been blessed by God with a unique knowledge of God, and were in covenant with Him. Now Paul includes such people in the word he has to deliver.

Thus we have four different relationships delineated in this text. First, “men” deals with the lowest level of commonality – Adam. Second, “brethren” is the basis of personal identity, in this case, with Paul as a Jew. Third, there is the matter of those not related by blood, yet who have kindred interests – the Gentiles. Fourth, there is the highest level of commonality in a mixed audience – the fear of the Lord. Everyone in the synagogue could be included in “men” – identity with Adam.

TO YOU IS THE WORD OF THIS SALVATION SENT

“ . . . to you is the word of this salvation sent.” Other versions read, “the word of this salvation has been sent,” NKJV “the word of this salvation is sent out,” NASB “this message of salvation has been sent,” NIV “is the word of this salvation sent forth,” ASV “the message that God saves people,” GWN “is the word of this life sent,” MRD and “has been sent the message of this salvation [the salvation obtained through Jesus Christ].” AMPLIFIED

Precisely to whom is “the word of this salvation” sent? Technically, it is sent to “all men” – those who have come from Adam. Narrowing that down, it is “sent” first to the ones to whom it was promised – the Jews. Therefore Peter once told an audience of Jews, “Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities” (Acts 3:26). Later, speaking to those gathered at the house of Cornelius, he referred to the Gospel as “The word which God sent unto the children of Israel , preaching peace by Jesus Christ” (Acts 10:36). However, in its most precise form, this word is “sent” to those who fear the Lord, are eager to please Him, and are devoted to Him. To those people, the Gospel is truly “the glad tidings” (Acts 13:32), and “glad tidings of good things” (Rom 10:15).

One of the great tragedies of our time is the near-total lack of the awareness of a need for a Savior from sin. The very concept of sin has been neutralized by references to genetic flaws, inherited tendencies, addictions, and unbecoming habits. Consequently, a Jesus is being preached that is rarely associated with deliverance from the guilt and power of sin (Rom 6:18) , or rescuing people from a state of condemnation (John 3:18) , or delivering them from the wrath to come (1 Thess 1:10). A Jesus whose fundamental work was to please God is virtually unknown. As a result of an erroneous emphasis, worship has been reduced to lip-service rather than serving God with all of the heart, soul, mind, and strength.

What Is Salvation?

Defined etymologically, salvation is deliverance, rescue, and preservation. While such a definition is technically correct, it lacks the substance that can be found only in the prophets. They are the ones who were used by God to define the work of the Savior. Here are some of their representations.

- Sins being made white as snow (Isa 1:18).
- Death swallowed up in victory, tears wiped away, and the rebuke of God’s people taken away (Isa 25:8).
- The deaf hearing the words of the Book, and the eyes of the blind seeing out of obscurity (Isa 29:18).
- The meek increasing their joy, and the poor rejoicing in the Holy One (Isa 29:19).
- Those who erred in spirit will come to understanding, and those who murmured learn doctrine (Isa 29:24).
- A King shall reign in righteousness (Isa 32:1).
- A Man shall be for a hiding place (Isa 32:2).
- Seeing and hearing shall be with consistent clarity (Isa 32:3).
- There will be an understanding of knowledge, and speaking will be with clarity (Isa 32:4).
- A highway of holiness will be provided for men, and those who walk on it will not err (Isa 35:8).
- Men will be saved with an everlasting salvation (Isa 45:17).
- Men will be turned from unrighteousness (Isa 59:20).

As long as men are the body, there are certain conditions that are not eliminated by the salvation of God. These includes tears, death, sorrow, crying, and pain. These will not be viewed as “former things” until the Lord comes, the present heavens and earth pass away, and we are forever with the Lord.

- Men will be brought out of the prison house (Isa 42:7).
- Bind up the brokenhearted, proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison; proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord (Isa 61:1-2).
- Give beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness (Isa 61:3).
- Finish the transgression, make an end of sins, make reconciliation, and bring in everlasting righteousness (Dan 9:24).
- Open a fountain for sin and uncleanness (Zech 13:1).

Sickness, disease, poverty, and other forms of human suffering are grievous – but none of them separate men from God. Things of that order do not turn the face of God against us, or cause the wrath of God to come. They are all symptoms of the curse, but they are not the curse itself. Salvation is primarily, and consistently from sin, the world, and the devil. Jesus came into the world to “save sinners” (1 Tim 1:15). He came to deliver us “from this present evil world” (Gal 1:4). His purpose was to “reconcile us into God” (Col 1:20).

Nowhere is it proclaimed that the work of the Savior is to correct social and domestic ills, or assist men in forming new habits. Those who declare such a salvation cannot guarantee their product. They cannot ensure peace in the home, a state of physical wellness, and marital bliss. Such things are not encompassed in the salvation of God – at least, not while men are in this world. As long as men are the body, there are certain conditions that are not eliminated by the salvation of God. These includes tears, death, sorrow, crying, and pain. These will not be viewed as “former things” until the Lord comes, the present heavens and earth pass away, and we are forever with the Lord. That is the express teaching of Jesus Himself, and is addressed to the churches (Rev 21:4).

“The word of THIS salvation” is the word declaring that what the prophets promised is fulfilled in Christ Jesus – that is, that the salvation they foretold can now be realized. Those who deliver any other purported good news have only deceived the people. They have not been sent by God, and the Jesus they present is “another Jesus” who has no moral or spiritual power.

THEY KNEW HIM NOT, AND CONDEMNED HIM

“ 27 For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew Him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning Him.”

Paul now delivers a word concerning the Jew’s rejection of Jesus. He shows that while it can be explained, it can by no means be justified. It is good for those of our generation to give due heed to these words. When there is an undue exaltation of academics and human scholarship, men are satisfied with explanations – even though they are quite often shallow and conciliatory to the flesh. However, as Paul will confirm, explanations that overlook unbelief and hardness of heart are not acceptable. Neither, indeed, is it possible for any explanation to neutralize the fact that certain advantages had been given to the people, yet they did not capitalize upon them.

BECAUSE THEY KNEW HIM NOT

“For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew Him not . . .” Other versions read, “they did not know Him,” NKJV “recognizing neither Him,” NASB “did not recognize Jesus,” NIV “having no knowledge of Him,” BBE “not having known Him,” DARBY “did not apprehend it,” MRD “though they did not realize it,” NJB “not knowing who He was,” ISV “were ignorant of Him,” WILLIAMS “did not know or recognize Him,” AMPLIFIED and “refused to recognize Him.” PHILLIPS

And what can be said of the people of our time who do not have the faintest idea of what the prophets have said about the Savior? How will it be possible for them to recognize Him? Will they have to take the word of others, all the while ignoring what the prophets have said?

The rejection of Jesus was the result of the collaboration of the Jews: “they that dwell in Jerusalem AND their leaders.” In this, the people chose to follow the leaders, while the leaders refused to yield to the original reaction of the people to Jesus. The leaders determined the course of action, and the people followed them. However, the people were not innocent – neither is any group who follow false leaders. Jesus once said, “And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch” (Matt 15:14).

Paul says this unholy alliance of people “knew Him not.” Precisely what does that mean? There are several possibilities.

- Were not personally acquainted with Him.
- Failed to pick up on the things that He said about Himself.
- Did not pay attention to those who were blessed by Him.
- Simply did not know about a Savior like this.
- Were not aware of what they were really doing.

As used here, the meaning of the phrase “did not know” involves more than simply being ignorant. There is also the element of disregard in the thoughtlessness, THAYER and oversight . FRIBERG Doctrinally, the intention of Paul is to point out that they did not recognize the One foretold by the prophets, and announced by John the Baptist. By intention, God had adequately prepared the Jews to receive the Christ as soon as they saw Him. Both His character and His work were spelled out by the prophets. John the Baptist specifically said that He was the Son of God, and had come down from heaven.

However, those who dwelt in Jerusalem, together with their rulers, could not make a correlation between Jesus of Nazareth and the Messiah foretold by the prophets and announced by John the Baptist. They “knew Him not,” or “did not know or recognize Him.” AMPLIFIED There was also the element of stubbornness in their ignorance, as indicated by Phillips’ translation: “they “refused to recognize Him.”

BECAUSE THEY KNEW NOT THE VOICES OF THE PROPHETS

“ . . . nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day . . . ”

Their ignorance was highlighted by the fact that the prophets were publically read every sabbath day. That is, they were regularly submitted to the promises of a coming Savior, and therefore should have recognized Him. There were some, of course, who did see in Jesus the fulfillment of the prophets. Philip told Nathanael, “We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph” (John 1:45). Alas, however, such people were in the vast minority. The majority of the people, together with their “rulers,” or religious leaders, could not associate Jesus of Nazareth with the promises delivered by the prophets, as record in the Scriptures. They were not able to recognize the One of whom they spake, even though He was enfleshed before their very eyes, and was “approved of God” among them “by miracles, signs, and wonders” (Acts 2:22).

Notice that the reading of the prophets is equated with hearing their voice: “the voices of the prophets which are read.” That phrase distinguishes a living word from a mere literary word. To hear the prophets read is the same as hearing their thundering announcements of a coming Savior. The same is true of the record of Jesus words, and the writings of the Apostles,

The Transgression of Ignorance

It is also important to note that spiritual ignorance leads to sin. John states that the “world” did not know Him when “the Word became flesh” (John 1:10). He also states that His own people did not receive Him in the capacity of a Savior (John 1:11). Peter traced the Jew’s rejection and crucifixion of Jesus to their ignorance of His identity (Acts 3:17). Paul does the same thing in this text, and in his epistle to the Corinthians (1 Cor 2:8). In fact, he accounted for his own former rejection of Christ by stating he was living “in ignorance and unbelief” (1 Tim 1:18).

What of Our Time?

And what can be said of the people of our time who do not have the faintest idea of what the prophets have said about the Savior? How will it be possible for them to recognize Him? Will they have to take the word of others, all the while ignoring what the prophets have said? What if they are not even aware that God prepared the people for the coming of Christ through Moses and the prophets? And what if they are ignorant of the preparatory ministry of John the Baptist, and of the critical role of repentance in the preparation he announced? Although it is grievous to acknowledge such a condition, I fear there are many professing preachers and teachers who do not even know these things.

This is complicated by the fact that the Scriptures themselves are not prominent in many assemblies. All of this is greatly compounded by the presentation of a Jesus who is nothing more than the creation of men, bearing little, if any, similarity to the Jesus who was prophesied by the holy prophets. Men are hearing of the kind of Jesus that sells books, promotes careers, builds large institutions, and produces a prosperous and trouble-free life. It is no wonder there is so much ignorance of Jesus Christ. Furthermore, where there is an ignorance of the real Jesus, there will eventually be hostility against Him.

THEY HAVE FULFILLED THEM

“ . . . they have fulfilled them in condemning Him.” Other versions read, “in condemning Him they fulfilled the words of the prophets,” NIV “gave effect to them by judging him, BBE “fulfilled that message by condemning him,” CJB “fulfilled also the voices of the prophets,” DARBY and “have actually fulfilled these very predictions by condemning and sentencing [Him].” AMPLIFIED

People who reject Jesus today are also fulfilling the prophecies that spoke of His rejection – and it is certainly no benefit to be guilty of such a thing. There really is no excuse for rejecting Jesus.

They did not fulfill the prophets by receiving Christ, and thus realizing the promised benefits that came through Him. Instead, they fulfilled the Scriptures that spoke of His rejection. Here are some examples of what the prophets said on this matter.

- “He is despised and rejected of men” (Isa 53:3).
- “I gave My back to the smiters, and My cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not My face from shame and spitting” (Isa 50:6).
- “All they that see Me laugh Me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying, He trusted on the LORD that He would deliver Him: let Him deliver Him, seeing He delighted in Him” (Psa 22:7-8).

- “Reproach hath broken My heart; and I am full of heaviness: and I looked for some to take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none. They gave Me also gall for My meat; and in My thirst they gave Me vinegar to drink” (Psa 69:20-21).

- “. . . shall smite the Judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek” (Micah 5:1).

- “. . . So they weighed for My price thirty pieces of silver. And the LORD said unto me, Cast it unto the potter: a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORD” (Zech 11:12-13).

People who reject Jesus today are also fulfilling the prophecies that spoke of His rejection – and it is certainly no benefit to be guilty of such a thing. There really is no excuse for rejecting Jesus. It amounts to condemning Him, and consenting to His death. This is what is intended by the expressions, “they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame” (Heb 6:6), and “guilty of the body and blood of the Lord” (1 Cor 11:27). As these texts indicate, such sins are also committed by those who fall away from the Lord. Their sin is greatly compounded by the fact that they once knew Him, but were brought to a place where they rejected Him in favor of the world and the gratification of the flesh. Those who postulate that such a condition is not possible overlook the fact that knowing Jesus involves intimacy with Him – abiding in Him, and walking in the light as He is in the light (1 John 2:28; 1 John 1:7). None of those conditions are reflexive, or automatic. They evidence willing and deliberate involvement.

THEY FOUND NO CAUSE OF DEATH IN HIM

“ 28 And though they found no cause of death in Him, yet desired they Pilate that He should be slain.”

Paul now confronts his audience with the deliberate manner of unbelief, and the stubbornness of heart that accompanies the rejection of Jesus Christ.

THEY FOUND NO CAUSE OF DEATH

“And though they found no cause of death in Him . . .” Other versions read, “no ground for putting Him to death,” NASB “no proper ground for the death sentence,” NIV “no cause for a sentence of death,” NSRV “could charge Him with nothing deserving death,” RSV “could not find any legitimate ground for a death sentence,” CJB “could not find any good reason to kill Him,” GWN “no basis for a death sentence,” NET “no legal reason to execute Him,” NLT “no just cause to execute Him,” LIVING “Couldn’t find any real reason for Him to die,” IE “Without having found Him guilty of any capital offense,” WEYMOUTH and “could find no cause deserving death with which to charge Him.” AMPLIFIED

In Paul’s statement, however, the point is not that Pilate and Herod could find no fault in Jesus, but that the Jews themselves, even though they aggressively sought for a reason to slay Him, could not find one. Their search was in the law of God, in which reasons for capital punishment were delineated.

Although, from the standpoint of Roman law, there was no civil infraction of which Jesus was guilty, that is not the point of the text. Jesus was not a political insurrectionist like Barabbas (Mk 15:7). He could not be charged with failing to pay taxes required by the Roman government (Matt 22:21). The Jews had attempted to present Jesus as a political rebel, telling Pilate that Jesus perverted the nation “forbidding to give tribute to Caesar, saying that He Himself is Christ a king” (Lk 23:2). However, even wicked Pilate refused to honor the charge, later saying two times, “I find no fault in this man” (Lk 23:4,14), and even declaring that Herod also found no “nothing worthy of death” in Him (Lk 23:15).

In Paul's statement, however, the point is not that Pilate and Herod could find no fault in Jesus, but that the Jews themselves, even though they aggressively sought for a reason to slay Him, could not find one. Their search was in the law of God, in which reasons for capital punishment were delineated. This included directions given to Noah concerning capital punishment. They were numerous, and dealt with a variety of issues. It is good for us to be acquainted with them. They all had to do with the person who was "worthy of death" (Deut 17:6).

- A STRANGER WHO ATTEMPTED TO TAKE DOWN OR SET UP THE TABERNACLE. Num 1:51.
- A STRANGER WHO ATTEMPTED TO PERFORM THE WORK OF THE PRIEST. Num 3:10; 18:7.
- ANYONE OTHER THAN MOSES AND THOSE MINISTERING IN THE TABERNACLE WHO CAMPED CLOSE TO IT. Num 3:38.

I have listed some of the capital offenses that had to do with the tabernacle service, assuming that they also applied to the Temple service. In all of these offenses there are two prevailing causes for death: (1) Defilement of one's relationship to God. (2) The defilement of human associations. They were, in fact, sins that were an overt expression that contradicted the premier commandments. Jesus Himself magnified the Law by confirming the identity of these requirements: "And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord: And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these” (Mark 12:29-31).

Armed with a technical knowledge of the Law, and acquainted with the public and extended ministry of Jesus, His foes could not find a reason that would justify putting Jesus to death. In a wicked attempt to meet the requirement of the Law for two or more witnesses in the case of capital punishment (Deut 17:6), the leaders even sought for false witnesses to secure some agreeable testimony against Jesus (Matt 26:59-60). Even then, the only fabricated charge they could come up with was blasphemy (Mk 14:64) – and that was upon the basis of Jesus acknowledgment that He was “the Son of the Blessed” – which He was (Mk 14:61-62).

Jesus did just as the prophet said

Men ought to learn from this account not to allow an “evil heart of unbelief” to enter into them. There are no depths to which such a heart cannot sink!

He would: “magnify the law, and make it honorable” (Isa 42:21). He did so in such a manner that no one could convict Him of sin, or prove Him guilty of the slightest infraction of the Law (John 8:46).

YET THEY DESIRED HIM TO BE SLAIN

“ . . . yet desired they Pilate that He should be slain.” Other versions read, “they asked Pilate that he should put Him to death,” NKJV “asked . . . that He be executed,” NASB “asked . . . to have Him killed,” NRSV and “made a request . . . that He might be put to death.” BBE

Even though they could by no means substantiate a case against Jesus, yet those dwelling in Jerusalem “and their rulers” pressed Pilate to have Jesus put to death. Peter told the Jews in Jerusalem, “ye delivered up, and denied Him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let Him go. But ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you” (Acts 3:13-14). The Gospel accounts inform us that they repeatedly cried out “Crucify Him!” even after Pilate declared he could find “no fault” in Him (Matt 27:22-24). They even called down the responsibility for the blood of Jesus upon themselves and their children (Matt 27:25). In a remarkable display of the stubbornness of unbelief, “the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Caesar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Caesar” (John 19:12). Unbelief causes thos dominated by it to be creative in their opposition to Christ.

Men ought to learn from this account not to allow an “evil heart of unbelief” to enter into them (Heb 3:12). There are no depths to which such a heart cannot sink!

WHEN THEY HAD FULFILLED ALL THAT WAS WRITTEN OF HIM

“ 29 And when they had fulfilled all that was written of Him, they took Him down from the tree, and laid Him in a sepulcher.”

Thus far, in the book of Acts, holy men have accented that the death of Jesus, while carried out by wicked men, was according to the purpose of God. While it appeared on the surface that the will of men was the primary thing being accomplished, their will was actually secondary, and was subordinate to the will of God. Fundamentally, it was God’s purpose being carried out, even though men were totally unaware of it.

• PETER ON THE DAY OF PENTECOST. “Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God , ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain” (Acts 2:23).

• PETER IN SOLOMON’S PORCH. “But those things, which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, He hath so fulfilled ” (Acts 3:18).

• IN THE PRAYER OF THE EARLY CHURCH. “For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom Thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever Thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done ” (Acts 4:27-28).

• PAUL IN THE ANTIOCH SYNAGOGUE. “For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew Him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning Him ” (Acts 13:27).

The Words of Jesus

• DOING THE WILL OF THE FATHER. “Therefore doth My Father love me, because I lay down My life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of My Father” (John 10:17-18).

• THE FULFILLMENT OF SCRIPTURE. “Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled , that thus it must be?” (Mat 26:53-54).

The Apostles Doctrine

Apostolic doctrine also makes a point of the purpose of God being fulfilled in the rejection, betrayal, and crucifixion of Jesus Christ.

• GOD DELIVERED HIM UP. “He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?” (Rom 8:32).

• SLAIN FROM THE FOUNDATION OF THE WORLD. “And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world ” (Rev 13:8).

• FOREORDAINED. “But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot: Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world , but was manifest in these last times for you” (1 Pet 1:19-20).

• THE SACRIFICE OF HIMSELF. “For then must He often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself ” (Heb 9:26).

In this time of superior light, no believer should have to discover this truth later in his spiritual life. It should be proclaimed initially – as it was in this, and other, texts. Men should cease all melancholy proclamations of Christ that have more of an appeal to the flesh than to the Spirit.

WHEN THEY HAD FULFILLED ALL THAT WAS WRITTEN OF HIM

“And when they had fulfilled all that was written of Him . . .”

While the death of Jesus does make known Christ’s great love (Gal 2:20), and the love of God as well (1 John 3:16), it is essential that we comprehend the necessity of sin being judged in the Son. This is why the very nature of God required His atoning death. God could not receive men in a sinful state.

As is apparent in the preaching of both Peter and Paul, this did not in any way minimize the wickedness of what the Jews did to Jesus. However, it does accent that if this had not been the will of God – the appointed means through which the sin of the world would be taken away – it could not possibly have happened. Furthermore, their involvement in the death of Christ was not completed until everything written concerning Him, that was to be carried out by them, was completed. Take due note that it is what was “written of Him” that was the crucial matter, not what was written of them.

THEY TOOK HIM DOWN, AND LAID HIM IN A SEPULCHER

“ . . . they took Him down from the tree, and laid Him in a sepulcher.”

Here, the point is that everything that was required to have been accomplished by His death was accomplished before He was removed from the tree of cursing (Gal 3:13). There were things that had to be accomplished in His death, and His body was not removed until they had been done.

- Jesus had to die, and there could be no question about it (Rom 8:34; 2 Cor 5:14).
- He had to be made sin for us, else the curse of God could not possibly have been upon Him (2 Cor 5:21).
- He had to be cursed by God, otherwise the penalty for sin would not have been paid (Gal 3:13).
- God had to be satisfied with the travail of His soul (Isa 53:11).
- Peace had to be made by the blood of His cross (Col 1:20).
- The devil had to be destroyed through His death (Heb 2:14).
- Principalities and powers had to be plundered in His cross (Col 2:15).
- The world had to be reconciled by His death (Rom 5:10).

The Necessity of Christ’s Death

The necessity of Christ’s death is properly traced to the requirement for the judgment of God against sin. It was in the flesh of Christ that sin was “condemned,” or judged once and for all (Rom 8:3). If this did not take place, God could not forgive sin. While the death of Jesus does make known Christ’s great love (Gal 2:20), and the love of God as well (1 John 3:16), it is essential that we comprehend the necessity of sin being judged in the Son. This is why the very nature of God required His atoning death. God could not receive men in a sinful state. They had to be brought to Him by a Savior who allowed God to fully deal with sin once for all. Had this not taken place, sin would have remained.

The Necessity of Christ’s Burial

The burial of Christ stood between Him being “delivered for our offenses” and being “raised again for our justification” (Rom 4:25). His burial confirmed that He had, in fact, “died for our sins” (1 Cor 15:3), and prepared for Him to be “declared to be the Son of God with power” (Rom 1:4). John saw Jesus die, and bore witness to the truth of it (John 19:34-35). The burial of the Lord confirmed that death beyond all controversy. Before He was taken down from the cross, Pilate insisted that Jesus’ death be confirmed – and it was (Mk 15:44-45).

There was also the matter of fulfilled prophecy. Isaiah spoke of the burial of Christ, confirming that this was a part of His identity with the human race. “And He made His grave with the wicked, and with the rich in His death; because He had done no violence, neither was any deceit in His mouth” (Isa 53:9). David also spoke of Christ’s burial, referring to His body not seeing corruption, OR His soul remaining in the region of the dead: “For thou wilt not leave My soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption” (Psa 16:10).

Thus the body of Jesus was laid in a sepulcher and remained there for three days, setting the stage for the fulfillment of “the sign of Jonah” . Jesus said of that sign, “For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth” (Mat 12:40).

Although a very controversial passage, Peter declares that Jesus was busy while His body was in the grave. “For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: By which also He went and preached unto the spirits in prison; Which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water” (1 Pet 3:18-20). Referring to how Jesus went and preached to these “spirits,” other versions read, “but made alive by the Spirit, by whom also He went and preached,” NKJV “made alive in the Spirit in which also He went and preached,” NASB and “made alive by the Spirit through whom also He went and preached.” NIV

Later Peter said that the Gospel, “For this cause . . . was preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit” (1 Pet 4:6). The reference to “spirits” is to those who were living in the time of Noah, but died in the flood. Some are of the opinion that the preaching of reference is that of Noah. Noah’s preaching, however, was like that of Jonah. Neither had any gospel to preach, so this cannot refer to Noah. Further, the preaching of the Gospel to the living is never referred to as preaching to “spirits.”

All of this, although not satisfying to the intellect of man, confirms the necessity and role of the burial of Christ: they “laid Him in a sepulcher.” We will have to wait for the glory to receive a fuller explanation of this intriguing text.

BUT GOD RAISED HIM FROM THE DEAD

“ 30 But God raised Him from the dead . . . ” Other versions read, “But God gave Him back from the dead,” BBE “But God brought Him back to life,” GWN “But God raised Him again from the dead,” PNT “But God raised Him again from death,” TNT and “and God raised Him out of the dead.” YLT

THE STATE OF BEING DEAD

The state of being “dead” is one of the body being without the spirit (James 2:26). It is the condition of being without life, in which the body has no ability to respond or react. In the case of Jesus, He dismissed His spirit when He said, “into Thy hands I commend My spirit,” or “commit My spirit” NASB (Lk 23:46). Other versions read, “give My spirit,” BBE “entrust My spirit,” CSB “I put My spirit into Your hands,” IE and “commit My spirit to Your care.” WILLIAMS

SIMILAR TO STEPHEN’S DEATH

This appears to be quite similar to what Stephen said as He was being stoned to death: “Lord Jesus, receive my spirit” (Acts 7:69). However, in Stephen’s case, his life was taken from him. Admittedly, according to appearance, it looked as though that is what took place when Jesus died. However, an explanation is provided concerning the death of Christ that confirms His life was not taken from Him. Jesus said, “No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of My Father” (John 10:17-18). There are a number of ways in which this can be said, and I must confess that I am not completely satisfied with any of them.

- Jesus did not die by the constraint of others.
- His life was not taken from Him.

- His life was not placed into the hands of men – like that of the martyrs.
- He did not die because of sin, or because of identity with Adam.
- He did not die of natural causes – like heart failure, bleeding to death, or from the bruises of men.

• Viewed from the standpoint of possibilities, and apart from the commandment of the Father, He could have refused to die, and done it effectively. He referred to this when He said, “Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?” (Matt 26:53). He then added, “But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?” (Matt 26:54).

• Jesus could not have died as other men, because He had no sin of His own, and the wages of sin is death (Rom 6:23). The One individual who “had no sin” could not have the sentence of death imposed upon Him by men. If He had not consented to die, it would not have been possible for Him to do so.

There is an element of truth in all of these explanations. Yet there is something about Jesus laying down His life that goes beyond the circumference of human perception. It is something that can be received, imbibed, and made profitable to us by faith.

“BUT”

This is a word depicting Divine judgment and intervention. The decree of men was that Jesus was “worthy of death,” and that they should be rid of Him. God’s decree was that He was not worthy of death. His death was vicarious, or substitutionary. It was a death associated with accomplishment (Lk 9:31). Once the will of God that necessitated that death was accomplished, death could maintain no hold on Jesus (Acts 2:24).

Whatever men may think about the possibility of God infringing upon the will of men, or violating their purported free moral agency, a sober reflection upon this text is essential. The will of man was that Jesus should die. The will of man was that the presence of Jesus should be once and for all removed. What is more, they did everything within their power to ensure that this will was carried out. However, God, in a display of His Sovereignty, nullified their judgment. He imposed His will upon the situation, and brushed their will aside as nothing more than chaff.

The will of man comes into the picture in the matter of appropriating Divine benefits. Even then, in order for that will to be effective, it must be associated with the power of God, as stated in Psalms 110:1. Every person who is knowledgeable in holy Scripture knows that

The will of man comes into the picture in the matter of appropriating Divine benefits. Even then, in order for that will to be effective, it must be associated with the power of God, as stated in Psalms 110:1. Every person who is knowledgeable in holy Scripture knows that the preeminent will is the will of God. Men are at their best when they prefer that will over their own, and they are at their worst when they do not.

GOD RAISED HIM FROM THE DEAD

There are several explanations in Scripture for the resurrection of Christ – and all of them are obviously true. It is necessary to spend some time on this, because Jesus expressly said He had received power to take back His life “again” (John 10:18). More was involved in the resurrection of Jesus is will be involved in the general resurrection.

- It is declared that God raised Jesus from the dead (Acts 2:32; 4:10; 10:40; 13:30,37; 17:31; Rom 4:24; 10:9; Gal 1:1; Eph 1:20; Heb 13:20; 1 Pet 1:21).
- Jesus Himself rose from the dead (Matt 20:19; 26:32; Lk 24:7; John 2:19-22; 10:18;

Acts 10:41; 17:3; 26:23; 1 Cor 15:12,20

- He was raised from the dead “by the glory of the Father” (Rom 6:4).
- The Holy Spirit was also involved in the resurrection of Christ (Rom 1:3; 8:11; 1 Pet 3:18).

Jesus took back His life because He was commissioned by the Father to do so. The Father had decreed that He would not let Him remain in the region of the dead (Acts 2:27). Further, the entire matter of redemption was the eternal purpose of God, and Jesus came to do His will (Heb 10:7,9). The Father raised the Son by decree, through the power of the Spirit, and by giving the Son authority to take back His life from the domain of death.

All of this was required because “the Word became flesh and dwelt among us” (John 1:13). They were part and parcel of the involvements of the circumstance of Christ’s humanity. Satisfactory explanations from the reservoir of the human intellect are not possible.

HE WAS SEEN MANY DAYS

“ 31 And He was seen many days of them which came up with Him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are His witnesses unto the people.”

The attestation of the resurrection of Christ was vouchsafed to chosen witnesses, and extended over a period of time. It was sufficient to dissolve their doubts, and enable them to patiently wait for the promise of the Father that Jesus had delivered to them.

SEEN MANY DAYS

“And He was seen many days . . .” Other versions read, “for many days He appeared,” NASB “for a number of days He was seen,” BBE “over a period of many days He appeared,” NLT and “He was seen many times during the next few days.” LIVING

The period of time during which Jesus was seen is specified as “forty days” (Acts 1:3). These appearances took place first in Jerusalem, then in Galilee, then again in the environs of Jerusalem.

Initial Appearances In Judea After His Resurrection

- To Mary Magdalene at the tomb (Mk 16:9; John 20:14-17).
- To the women at the tomb (Matt 28:9-10).
- To the two on the road to Emmaus (Lk 24:13-31).
- To Simon Peter (Lk 24:34).
- To the eleven and those with them, Thomas being absent (Lk 24:36-49; John 20:19-23).
- To the eleven and those with them, Thomas being present (John 20:26-29).
- To James (1 Cor 15:7).

Appearances in Galilee

- The disciples were instructed to meet Him in Galilee (Matt 28:7,10; Mk 16:7).
- To above five hundred (1 Cor 15:6).
- To the eleven in a mountain (Matt 28:16-17).
- To the disciples by the sea of Tiberias (John 21:2-22).

Appearances in Judea Just Before His Ascension

- To the disciples, consummating in His ascension (Matt 28:18-20; Mk 16:15-19; Lk 24:30-51; Acts 1:4-9)

THEM WHICH CAME UP WITH HIM FROM GALILEE TO JERUSALEM

“ . . . of them which came up with Him from Galilee to Jerusalem . . .” Other versions read, “who had traveled with Him from Galilee to Jerusalem,” NIV and “who had accompanied him from Galilee to Jerusalem.” NET

Prior to Jesus’ death, and during His ministry, there were people who came from Galilee and followed Him (Matt 4:25; 19:1-2). During His ministry certain women from Galilee followed Him and ministered to Him (Matt 27:55). However, these are not the occasion to which our text refers. This refers to His post-resurrection appearances, and to the people who stayed with Him after His appearances in Galilee, following Him to Jerusalem.

It appears as though a great number of the people who witnessed Jesus in Galilee did not return with Him to the environs of Jerusalem. Assuming that the more than five hundred brethren that saw Him on a single occasion did so in Galilee, the vast majority of them appeared to have remained there after they witnessed the risen Christ. We know that the disciples who assembled, together with the eleven “were about an hundred and twenty” (Acts 1:15). That means at least three hundred and eighty (76%) who saw the risen Jesus did not return with Him to Jerusalem – and it is possible that the number was every greater.

The primary people who were with Him in Jerusalem were the apostles, who were His chosen messengers to humanity. They were the principle figures, even though they were not the only ones. They were the ones He chose to be with Him and to preach.

WHO ARE HIS WITNESSES TO THE PEOPLE

It appears as though a great number of the people who witnessed Jesus in Galilee did not return with Him to the environs of Jerusalem. Assuming that the more than five hundred brethren that saw Him on a single occasion did so in Galilee, the vast majority of them appeared to have remained there after they witnessed the risen Christ.

“ . . . who are His witnesses unto the people.” Other versions read, “to our people,” NRSV “to the Jewish people,” GWN “to the people of Israel,” NLT and “to the Jews.” WEYMOUTH

The Greek word translated “people” is laos, which has the following lexical meaning: “a people, tribe, nation, all those who are of the same stock and language,” THAYER “nationally, as people making up a nation,” FRIBERG and “the largest unit into which the people of the world are divided on the basis of their constituting a socio-political community - 'nation, people.” LOUW-NIDA This is not a reference to the general population of the world, but to a specific body of people – “THE people.”

In this case, “the people” is a reference to the Jews – the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. These are particularly the apostles. While their primary ministry was to the Jews, that was not their only ministry. Just as Paul’s primary ministry was to the Gentiles, but that was not His only ministry. Paul makes mention of this distinction in his letter to the Galatians. “But contrariwise, when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter; (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me toward the Gentiles)” (Gal 2:8). While He was ministering among them, Jesus also confirmed this primary ministry of the twelve apostles. “And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel” (Matt 19:28).

Paul, therefore, is affirming that the risen Lord made special provisions for the Jewish people. The witnesses provided for them would deliver the Gospel to others as well, but the children of Israel would be their emphasis. As Paul will indicate in this message, this leaves the people without any valid excuse. Every advantage had been given to them, and they were responsible to give heed to what was said. As our Lord Himself affirmed, “For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more” (Luke 12:48).

In our thinking, we must be able to make the transition to what has been declared to the Gentiles – particularly to the Gentile church. The apostle that has been given to the Gentiles, Paul himself, was given to see remarkable things, and he faithfully proclaimed them. There is an unwavering responsibility on the part of the Gentile church, as well as all believers, to receive what he has written, for it is intended for them.

WE DECLARE UNTO YOU GLAD TIDINGS

“ 32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers . . . ”

Although Paul is addressing the audience, he speaks for Barnabas as well, for they are united in what they declare. Those familiar with the current church scene are painfully aware of the exceeding rarity of this circumstance.

The real Gospel, because of its singularity of both focus and content, tends to bring the people together. That is why, in the beginning, “all that believed were together.” It is because they were hearing the same message.

The staggering number of divisions within the professed church is strictly owing to differing messages. When men do not “speak the same thing,” division is inevitable – and division is always the manifestation of a corrupt message. That is why, when Paul knew of the divisions within the Corinthian church, he knew that they had been subjected to “another Jesus,” “another Spirit,” and “another gospel” (2 Cor 11:4). The real Gospel, because of its singularity of both focus and content, tends to bring the people together. That is why, in the beginning, “all that believed were together” (Acts 2:44). It is because they were hearing the same message. In fact, they all “continued steadfastly in the apostles’ doctrine” – not doctrines (Acts 2:42).

WE DECLARE GLAD TIDINGS

“And we declare unto you glad tidings . . . ” Other versions read, “preach the good news,” NASB “tell the good news,” NIV “bring the good news,” NRSV “giving you the good news,” BBE “announce to you,” MRD and “proclaim to you.” NET

The words “declare unto you glad tidings” come from a single Greek word: euvaggelizo, meqa (yoo-ang-ghel’idz-ometha). Its lexical meaning is, “to bring good news, to announce glad tidings,” THAYER “bring or announce good news,” FRIBERG “communicate good news concerning something,” LOUW-NIDA and “to preach or to proclaim (as glad tidings).” LIDDELL-SCOTT

Paul and Barnabas did not come to address personal, domestic, social or political difficulties. They did not put their ears to the religious ground to see what the people were seeking. Their message was not tailored for circumstances as defined by men. The “glad tidings” they declared were Divinely adapted to the human situation as defined and declared by God. As such, it is not possible for that message to require frequent updating, or to be abandoned for a more relevant word. Sin has produced a common condition in all men, regardless of gender, race, nation, or social status. The message is specifically adapted to that circumstance – and it is the good news of the Divine resolution to the sin problem. It is a predetermined message – and is not based upon the perceived needs of the people.

Another thing integral to “glad tidings” is the fact that they make known something that has already taken place – something that is pertinent to the condition of the people. This is not glad tidings, or good news, about what can be, or what should be, but what IS. Of course, this removes all possibility of the exploitation of the message for any form of personal gain. The very act of exploitation requires the existence of variables. That is why religious men who seek to gain from what they preach must depart from the preaching of the glad tidings. They must adopt a message that differs from the Gospel of Christ – the record God has given of His Son (1 John 5:10-11). That record is a declaration of what Jesus has done and is doing.

What Christ Has Done

- He has put away sin (Heb 9:26).
- He has reconciled the world to God (2 Cor 5:80-20).
- He has made peace through the blood of His cross (Col 1:20).
- He has destroyed the devil (Heb 2:14).
- He has spoiled principalities and powers, triumphing over them in His cross (Col 2:15).
- He has ended the Law as a means to righteousness (Rom 10:4).
- He has redeemed us from the curse of the Law (Gal 3:13).
- He has tasted death for every man (Heb 2:9).
- He has been wounded for our transgressions (Isa 53:5a).
- He has been bruised for our iniquities (Isa 53:5b).
- He has risen from the dead, triumphing of both Hades and the grave (Rom 8:34).
- He has ascended into heaven, leading captivity captive and giving gifts to men (Eph 4:8).
- He has been given all power in heaven and earth (Matt 28:18).
- All things have been put under His feet, and He has been given to the church as Head over all things (Eph 1:22).
- He is Lord of all (Acts 10:34).
- God has highly exalted Him (Phil 2:9).

What Christ Is Doing

- Saving believers to the uttermost (Heb 7:25a).
- Ever living to make intercession for those who are coming to God through Him (Heb 7:25b).
- Bringing many sons to glory (Heb 2:10).
- Shepherding the people of God (Heb 13:20).
- Mediating the New Covenant (Heb 8:6).
- He is the Head of the body, the church (Col 1:18).
- Provides nourishment through the individual members of His body, causing them to be fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplies (Eph 4:16).

- Is dispensing grace and peace (1 Cor 1:3).
- Is dispensing love and faith (Eph 6:23).
- Is nourishing and cherishing the church (Eph 5:29).
- Is living out His life in those who are walking by faith (Gal 2:20).
- Is appearing in the presence of God “for us” (Heb 9:24).
- Is giving His people an understanding, that they might know God (1 John 5:20).
- Sheds forth the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:33; Tit 3:5).

The declaration of such things is, indeed, “glad tidings!”

THE PROMISE MADE TO THE FATHERS

“ . . . how that the promise which was made unto the fathers . . . ” Other versions read, “What God promised,” NIV and “the undertaking made to the fathers.” BBE

Paul does not identify “the promise” because it was well known among devout Jews. In effect, he tells his audience that he is not bringing some new or strange word. He is chronicling the fulfillment of THE PROMISE made unto the fathers – particularly Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and then through Judah, from which tribe Jesus came.

The expression “the promise” is the broadest view of all that was encompassed in the “great salvation” of God.

- Concerning the One who would accomplish the salvation, it referred to the Lord Jesus Christ.
- As regards the effect of the promise upon men, it was a blessing.
- If we view it from the standpoint of accomplishment, it was the attainment of everything required to extricate men from the guilt and power of sin, and bring them into productive accord with the God from whom sin had alienated them.

The promise was not delivered to the father’s of the Jewish people in its fullest scope. The prophets would spell out many of the details. That would be after a proper concept of “blessing” had been formed in men through the tutelage of the Law, and the various experiences of benefit enjoyed by the Israelites. “The promise” was one of global proportions, as declared to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

- ABRAHAM. “And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed . . . (Gen 22:18).
- ISAAC. “ . . . in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed ” (Gen 26:4).
- JACOB. “ . . . and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed ” (Gen 28:14).

The effectiveness of this blessing was seen in the word spoken regarding Judah, from whom Jesus came.

- JUDAH. “The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto Him shall the gathering of the people be ” (Gen 49:10).

The words “ bless” and “blessing” are not as easy to define as one might think. However, if we are going to have an intelligent and productive view of salvation, we must have some cogent concept of what “bless” means. Lexically, the definitions do not extend beyond the term “bless.” In the Hebrew the lexical meaning is “to bless.” WTT BHS In the Greek it is “to cause to prosper, to make happy.” THAYER However, these do little more than confirm the frequent poverty of language and scholarship. I find that a definition based on Scriptural usage and doctrine provides a more satisfactory view of what it means for God Almighty to bless. One worthy observation is found in McClintok and Strong's Cyclopedia (see "A DEFINITION OF BLESSING").

The salient remark concerning the productivity of the blessing of God is particularly noteworthy. Indeed, "the promise" of God not only involved God, through His grace, bestowing benefit upon men. It also involved God-honoring productivity, or fruit, in the ones being blessed. The eyes of the people would be opened, and they would be turned "from darkness to light." Not only would they be turned from the power of Satan; they would also be turned "unto God." They would, indeed, receive "forgiveness of sins," but an "inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith" in Christ as well (Acts 26:18).

A DEFINITION OF BLESSING

"When God blesses, he bestows that virtue, that efficacy, which' renders his blessing effectual, and which his blessing expresses. His blessings are either temporal or spiritual, bodily or mental; but in every thing they are productive of that which they import. God's blessings extend into the future life, as his people are made partakers of that blessedness which, in infinite fulness, dwells in himself (Genesis 1:22; 24:35; Job 42:12; Psalm 45:2; 104:24, 28; Luke 11:9-13; James 1:17)." McClintok & Strong's Cyclopedia

"One of the most exhaustive encyclopedias ever produced in the English language. Covers virtually every field of religious knowledge in its 31,000 articles. First published in 1895, but still of great value today. Few researchers will be disappointed by what they find in this work. "

J. Barber – The Minister's Library

12 large volumes, 12,432 pages, and over 31,000 articles, originally published in the 1800's

The work accomplished by the Christ would be effective in the heavens, causing God to be pleased, and His requirements satisfied. But it would also result in effectiveness among all who received Him, believing on His name (John 1:12).

Let it be clear that there has been no fulfillment of the promised blessing unless its effects have been realized. Some of those effects include the following, and they are encompassed in the words "the promise." These effects were announced by the prophets, and were well known to devout Jews. Because of this circumstance, it is appropriate to mention a few of them, for they are encompassed in "the promise," and would be perceived in that manner by those who were anticipating the Messiah.

- ACCORD WITH THE MIND OF THE LORD. His Law would be written on their hearts and put into their minds (Jer 31: 33a).

- THEY WOULD CHOOSE AND PREFER GOD. God would be their God, and they would be His people (Jer 31:33b).

- THEY WOULD KNOW AND UNDERSTAND GOD. From the least to the greatest, all who were encompassed in the blessing would have a holy familiarity and appreciation of God (Jer 31:34).

- THEY WOULD BE WILLING. A characteristic of the reign of Christ is the willingness of the people in the day of His power (Psa 110:3).

- THEY WOULD NO LONGER BE REBELLIOUS. God promised He would remove the stony heart, and give the people a malleable heart of flesh (Ezek 36:26).

- THEY WOULD CONSISTENTLY OBEY THE LORD. The promise was, "And I will put My spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes, and ye shall keep My judgments, and do them” (Ezek 36:27).

- THE PEOPLE WOULD SPEAK DIFFERENTLY. God would restore to the people a pure language, purifying their lips (Zeph 3:9).

- THE PEOPLE WOULD BE NOTED FOR MORAL AND SPIRITUAL STRENGTH. Those who wait upon the Lord renew their strength, persevering under difficult circumstances (Isa 40:31).

Paul will now announce that the fulfillment of “the promise” regarding these, and other, benefits, has been taken place in Christ. That is, that the blessing announced to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is now made available to men.

THE HATH FULFILLED THE SAME UNTO US THEIR CHILDREN

“ 33 God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that He hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee. ”

Having provided a great salvation for all men, God will not tolerate those who give priorities to other things. He will give His marvelous provisions to those who are despised by the world, yet have a holy appetite for the feast of fat things that He has prepared for all people

Paul now gets to the matter at hand – the fact of blessing, and the responsibility of men to respond appropriately to it. It must be remembered that man are not allowed the luxury of refusing the Divine invitation. This is confirmed in Christ’s parable concerning a man who made a great feast. This saying was prompted by the statement of a person who was eating bread with Jesus in the home of a Pharisee on the Sabbath day. Jesus had spoken to them concerning making a feast without any selfish motives. Upon hearing what He said, “one of them that sat at meat with Him heard these things,” and “said unto him, Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God” (Luke 14:15). In response Jesus said, “A certain man gave a great supper and invited many, and sent his servant at supper time to say to those who were invited, 'Come, for all things are now ready. But they all with one accord began to make excuses. The first said to him, 'I have bought a piece of ground, and I must go and see it. I ask you to have me excused. And another said, 'I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I am going to test them. I ask you to have me excused. Still another said, 'I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come. So that servant came and reported these things to his master. Then the master of the house, being angry , said to his servant, 'Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in here the poor and the maimed and the lame and the blind. And the servant said, 'Master, it is done as you commanded, and still there is room. Then the master said to the servant, 'Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled. For I say to you that none of those men who were invited shall taste my supper ” NKJV (Luke 14:16-24).

For some, this is a hard saying, but it is one that must be duly considered. Having provided a great salvation for all men, God will not tolerate those who give priorities to other things. He will give His marvelous provisions to those who are despised by the world, yet have a holy appetite for the feast of fat things that He has prepared for all people (Isa 25:6).

I believe that some among our number have actually enjoyed feasting on things that many who appear superior to them have not been allowed to ingest. From an institutional point of view, these precious souls are seen as poor, maimed, lame and blind. They are perceived as dwelling in remote highways and hedges, far removed from highly structured religion and institutionalism. Yet, these despised people perceive things that cannot be seen or understood by those immersed in the traditions of men.

What has happened is this: because of their unacceptable priorities those who had first access to the salvation meal have been denied access to it. With many of them, their ignorance has not only been willing, but has been ratified and imposed upon them by God – He simply will not let them sit at His table. I will not presume to identify such people, for that is not my prerogative. However, we are expressly told that God does do this: “For the LORD hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered . . . Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid” (Isa 29:10,14). Jesus declared this had taken place among the generation to whom He spoke (John 12:39-40; Mk 4:11-13). Paul accounted for the obtuseness of certain Jews with this very text (Acts 28:25-27).

Others, who do not meet the qualifications of the institution have been brought into the feast, and are dining on the rich things of God. Those with some measure of insight will recognize this to be true. Though slightly different, this circumstance is of the same spiritual substance as a word delivered by Paul to Corinth. “If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord. But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant” (1 Cor 14:37-38).

GOD HATH FULFILLED

“God hath fulfilled the same . . .” The promise God made to the fathers He Himself fulfilled. Divine intentions are brought to their appointed culmination by the One who made them. There are matters of Divine will that men are required to fulfill, “doing the will of God from the heart” (Eph 6:6), and doing it within the framework of perseverance (Heb 10:36). However, that is not the kind of thing that is being declared here. God Himself is the One who did what He said He would do – making the promise, then fulfilling it in the very arena over which Satan was the under-ruler.

God did it even though Satan opposed it. God did it even though the nation of Israel frequently walked in their own ways. Let it be clear that the coming of the Savior in no way depended upon men. That coming could not possibly be hastened or delayed by what men did. Jesus came “in the fulness of the time” – at the precise time, and in the precise place that were appointed (Gal 4:4; Micah 5:2). This confirms that at the root, salvation is wholly of the Lord – in intention, initiation, and culmination (2 Thess 2:13; Rev 7:10; 19:10). All valid human involvement is grounded upon that fact.

UNTO US THEIR CHILDREN

“ . . . unto us their children, . . .” Other versions read, “our children,” NASB/ASV “their descendants,” GWN “us [their] children,” LIVING “for us, their descendants.” ISV

There are two critical thoughts here.

The promise God made to the fathers He Himself fulfilled. Divine intentions are brought to their appointed culmination by the One who made them.

First, that what God had done in Christ was for the generation to whom Paul was speaking. He was announcing a current benefit that could be realized precisely as God intended.

- Second, and of primary importance, the blessing was available for Abraham’s sake.

It was His promise to Abraham that was being fulfilled.

As expounded here, the realization of the promised “blessing” – even to the entire world – was contingent upon the people’s association with Abraham. The promise was stated to Abraham in this manner: “And I will establish my covenant between Me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee” (Gen 17:7). There are three senses in which this text are to be taken. Each one of them is true, revealing different facets of the promise.

- First, in the most precise sense, Jesus Christ is Abraham's Seed, through whom all of the promised benefits are now realized. Thus, Paul writes, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal 3:16).

- Second, the fleshly offspring of Abraham were also included in the promise. This was strictly by virtue of their generational connection with Abraham. Thus the land of Canaan is said to have been given "to the seed of Abraham" (2 Chron 20:7). More specifically, the children of Jacob are referred to as "the seed of Abraham" (Psa 105:6). Israel is called "the seed of Abraham" (Isa 41:8). Paul said, according to the flesh, he was "an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham" (Rom 11:1). In this sense, the blessing was toward them "for Abraham's sake," not because of any personal worth on their part (Gen 26:24). God reasoned with Isaac on this wise: "And I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; Because that Abraham obeyed My voice, and kept My charge, My commandments, My statutes, and My laws" (Gen 26:4-5).

When accounting for mercy extended to the Israelites, it is written, "And the LORD was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them, and had respect unto them, because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and would not destroy them, neither cast he them from his presence as yet" (2 Kgs 13:23). Thus God introduced the concept of many being blessed because of one.

The promise to Abraham was not fulfilled at Jesus birth. It was not fulfilled during Jesus' prodigious earthly ministry. Nor, indeed, was it fulfilled in His vicarious death. The promised blessing came only after He had risen from the dead and was seated at the right hand of God, exalted above all, and administering the New Covenant.

In the broadest application of this word, those who are related to Abraham by faith are eligible for the promise – that is, by virtue of their possession of the faith of Abraham. Thus it is written, "Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all" (Rom 4:16). The salvation of God is not even offered to those who do not have Abraham's kind of faith! Again Paul reasons, "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham" (Gal 3:8-9). In an even more precise statement Paul writes, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal 3:28-29).

In this text, Paul spreads the table of salvation for the fleshly seed of Abraham, and he does so by virtue of the fact that there were Abraham's descendants. Even so, however, the experience of salvation will be finally narrowed down to whether or not they have the faith of Abraham – whether or not they believe God after the Abrahamic manner. I will tell you that whatever you may think about the offer of salvation and whosoever will, no person who fails to believe like Abraham did, will ever participate in the salvation of God. The very occasion that Luke is reporting in this text will confirm this to be true.

IN THAT HE HATH RAISED UP JESUS AGAIN

" . . . in that He hath raised up Jesus again . . ."

Only the older versions of the English Scriptures say "raised up again" (Tyndale's New Testament – 1534, Bishop's Bible – 1595, Webster's Bible – 1833). In the first English translation, Wycliffe (1382) rendered the text, "again-raised Jesus."

There is a sense in which the entrance of Jesus into the world was a raising up of Jesus (Acts 13:23). However, in this text, the reference is to the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, as confirmed by the next verse. This was the point at which the promise to Abraham realized its ultimate fulfillment – when Jesus was raised and exalted to the right hand of God. The blessing that was promised to Abraham was not realized until Jesus was raised from the dead, and ascended back to heaven. It was only then that the salvation of God was announced, and repentance and remission of sins were preached in the New Covenant sense.

The promise to Abraham was not fulfilled at Jesus birth. It was not fulfilled during Jesus' prodigious earthly ministry. Nor, indeed, was it fulfilled in His vicarious death. The promised blessing came only after He had risen from the dead and was seated at the right hand of God, exalted above all, and administering the New Covenant. This blessing is what Peter announced on the day of Pentecost, associating it with the resurrection of Jesus. "Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear" (Acts 2:33).

This confirms that New Covenant life is not a codified system, nor is it an attempt to emulate the life of Jesus. It is, in fact, the resurrected life of Jesus, lived out in those who have been joined to Him in His death, burial, and resurrection (Rom 6:1-11). Further, it is not possible to be joined to Jesus in His death and burial, and not to be joined to Him in his resurrection. This is the reasoning set forth in Romans 6:4-8: "Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life . For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection : Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin . For he that is dead is freed from sin. Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with Him ." No person who is "dead with Christ" will remain in that condition. God, who "raises the dead" (2 Cor 1:9), will raise that person to walk in newness life. That life is not one of discipline or mere emulation. It is the resurrected Jesus living in them, as stated in Galatians 2:20. There is no possible way to confirm that a person has been freed from sin, or justified from all things, where walking "in newness of life" is not present. I realize that, for some, this is an exceedingly difficult thing to accept. However, this is the teaching of the sixth chapter of Romans. It is also why it is written, "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb 12:14). Seen from this perspective, holiness is walking in newness of life.

AS IT IS WRITTEN IN THE SECOND PSALM

" . . . as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee."

Jesus was begotten twice: once in the womb of Mary through the Holy Spirit, and once from the region of the dead. This is why He is referred to as the "the first begotten of the dead" (Rev 1:5). The first begetting was in order to the second, and the second was in order to the ultimate fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham. From the standpoint of Jesus and His generation, He was "the first that should rise from the dead" (Acts 26:23). From the standpoint of the covenant made with Abraham, He was "the firstborn from the dead." NKJV

Paul also refers to the second Psalm in this manner, associating it with the exaltation of Christ, as compared to Him humbling Himself to become a man. "Being made so much better than the angels, as He hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee? And again, I will be to Him a Father, and He shall be to Me a Son?" (Heb 1:4-5). And again, "So also Christ glorified not Himself to be made an high priest; but He that said unto Him, Thou art My Son, to day have I begotten Thee" (Heb 5:5).

It is imperative that men think of the Savior of the world in terms of His resurrection as well as of His death. It is not right to propagate a concept of Jesus that ignores His resurrection – when He was begotten by God to commence His ministry of liberation and preservation. It is what Jesus is presently doing now that brings the experience of salvation.

CONCLUSION

Here is a message that is comparatively brief, yet very precise. Paul sends forth words with the precision of a skilled archer who hits the bulls eye with his arrow. Much profitless preaching results from a lack of proper focus. The Divine intention behind preaching is never realized because the speaker has adopted an agenda that is antithetical to that of God. There is no record of such preaching in the Scriptures. There are references to such preaching and teaching, but they are never dignified with an historical account. It is also worthy to note the setting in which the jewel of redemption is placed. It is never set in the context of contemporary life. It is always presented within the framework of Divine intent and activity.

Paul referred to his refusal to present the Gospel, in any other manner when he wrote, “As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed. For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ” (Gal 1:9-10). The Amplified Bible reads, “As we said before, so I now say again: If anyone is preaching to you a gospel different from or contrary to that which you received [from us], let him be accursed (anathema, devoted to destruction, doomed to eternal punishment)! Now am I trying to win the favor of men, or of God? Do I seek to please men? If I were still seeking popularity with men, I should not be a bond servant of Christ (the Messiah).”

And precisely what does it mean to “seek to please men,” “win the favor of men,” or seek “popularity with men?” Unfortunately, this can appear very noble, taking the form of getting involved in their problems, addressing things that are considered by men to be “relevant,” and dealing with the everyday issues of life. Aside from matter of immorality, or things that impacted directly upon pleasing God, you will never find such an approach in Scripture, or in the ministry of Jesus. He nor His apostles became embroiled in the everyday affairs of life. It is not that they exempted themselves from them, but that they did not allow themselves to be pulled into them to the neglect of eternal matters. In Christ Jesus daily living is addressed, but not at the detailed level. That is the nature of spiritual life. Here are some statements that reflect how life is to be addressed.

- “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God” (Rom 12:1-2).
- “Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God” (1 Cor 10:31).
- “And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15).
- “Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God” (2 Cor 7:1).
- “If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit” (Gal 5:25).
- “As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him” (Col 2:6).
- “And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by Him” (Col 3:17).
- “Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord” (Heb 12:14).

Admonitions of this order require foundational teaching, else they really have little meaning. It is only against the backdrop of the purpose of God and the exalted Christ that they have significance. That is why such admonitions are never attended by a list of details.

We do well to take due heed to the way Paul is preaching, and then to endeavor to become masters in speaking in such a manner. This is something that cannot be taught in a classroom or learned by rote. It is the result of spiritual insight that has been birthed in the context of the knowledge of God.

Lesson #59

PAUL PREACHES IN ANTIOCH, #3

“ 13:34 And as concerning that He raised Him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, He said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David. 35 Wherefore He saith also in another psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. 36 For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption: 37 But He, whom God raised again, saw no corruption. 38 Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins: 39 And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. 40 Beware therefore, lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets; 41 Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you. ” (Acts 13:34-41)

INTRODUCTION

Paul continues to elaborate on the Person of Christ, accenting His resurrection from the dead, and confirming its uniqueness. In this, he is delivering “sound doctrine,” anchoring reasoning in Divine priorities, and building upon both the Person and accomplishments of Jesus Christ. In matters pertaining to life and godliness no word or concept is valid that is not founded, or based upon Christ Jesus. If the thought can subsist independently of the Son of God, it is purely of human origin, and is to be discarded as a filthy rag.

HUMAN ASSESSMENT

These days, there is an astounding amount of doctrinal presentation that centers in mankind, and not in Jesus. This is the direct result of men, “after their own lusts” heaping “to themselves teachers, having “itching ears” (2 Tim 4:3). The Amplified Bible reads, “having ears itching [for something pleasing and gratifying], they will gather to themselves one teacher after another to a considerable number, chosen to satisfy their own liking and to foster the errors they hold.” This accounts for much modern religious charlatans who major on well being in this world, without giving due regard to preparation for death, the coming of the Lord, the day of judgment, and the world to come. Those with “itching ears” like to hear about their advantage in this world, the issues that they have defined, and the worldly ambitions that they have embraced. But you will not find any man or woman of Scripture piping to such people. In fact, Jesus once spoke of this kind of people, explaining why they objected to much of what He said. “But whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, And saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented” (Mat 11:16-17).

The messenger of God, however, does not put his ear to the ground to hear the desires of men, or to feel the modern pulse, what is popular, and what is trendy and novel. He comes from God, not from men, and his message reflects Divine priorities, not those of men. For him, God defines the situation, and that situation has to do with man’s association with the living God. Spiritual men will accept no other priority.

Paul wrote concerning his own motivation – one that was driven by the knowledge of God and the understanding of the “mystery of godliness” (1 Tim 3:16). “Now am I trying to win the favor of men, or of God? Do I seek to please men? If I were still seeking popularity with men, I should not be a bond servant of Christ (the Messiah)” AMPLIFIED (Gal 1:10). It is at the precise point that preachers and teachers seek to please men, that they abruptly cease to be the servants of Christ. That has a lot to do with seeking to make the things of God relevant and tailoring public gatherings to please the people. Just as surely as a man cannot serve two masters, he cannot seek to please men and seek to please God simultaneously.

Christ Jesus can be properly understood only within the context of Moses and the Prophets. They not only set the stage for the coming Savior, but identified both His nature and ministry.

Thus our text displays a man filled with the Spirit, speaking with a total disregard for what men think within themselves. He is clarifying what God has done in Christ Jesus without inordinate regard to human assessment or acceptance.

THE GOSPEL AND THE PROMISES

With the skill of a spiritual tactician, Paul weaves the Gospel proclamation with the promises delivered by the holy prophets, relating it to the forgiveness of sins.

Christ Jesus can be properly understood only within the context of Moses and the Prophets. They not only set the stage for the coming Savior, but identified both His nature and ministry. A Jesus that is at variance with what was prophesied concerning Him cannot possibly be the Son of the Living God. Men are not given the liberty of creating a Jesus that will meet their self-diagnosed needs. God has given a “record” concerning His Son that presents Him precisely as He is, and in the manner in which He is to be seen and received. That “record” consists of several perfectly harmonious and consistent parts.

- The initial declaration of the coming Savior that God made in the Garden.
- The promises that were made to Abraham concerning his Seed.
- The prophecies of Moses concerning a coming Prophet.
- The prophetic references of the Prophets to the coming Savior.
- The Gospel accounts of His ministry in the flesh, together with His death, burial, and resurrection.
- The exposition of Jesus’ Person, accomplishments, exaltation, ministry, and second appearing.

What Paul says about Jesus will in no way conflict with any of these representations of the Christ of God.

JUSTIFICATION INTRODUCED

For the first time in the book of Acts, there is a reference to justification, or being justified. In fact, this passage contains the only direct reference to justification in the entire book of Acts. This subject was one concerning which Paul was given considerable insight. In fact, the only other epistle that mentions the word “justify” in any of its varied forms is James (James 2:21,24,25). Paul’s letters contain 26 references to this subject, confirming the Lord had given him considerable revelation on the matter. In our text, during the beginning of Paul’s ministry, there is indication of his early perception of this subject.

The statement that Paul makes cannot be made by many of our time. It is a statement that covers more theological ground than they are able to cover. Nevertheless, it is the truth, and we do well to comprehend it, and include it in our doctrinal expressions. Here is the statement. See how you can handle it. “And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses” (Acts 13:39).

The text will also relate a solemn warning that is startling to the flesh. It will make no allowance for rejecting the work God has done in Jesus, and the proclamation of that work. It will confirm the solemnity that is associated with hearing the good news of Jesus Christ, and the fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham.

CONCERNING THE ONE GOD RAISED UP FROM THE DEAD

“ 13:34a And as concerning that He raised Him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption . . . ”

There is power in affirming the truth – in declaring it confidently and with power. This is because “truth” is reality – it is what IS, and is therefore supported by the “God of truth”

Without laboring the point to the extreme, I want to again draw your attention to the manner in which Paul reasons. He does not base his remarks on the condition of men, but on the initiative of God. He is not promulgating what men can do, but what God has done. This is a manner of reasoning upon which men in the flesh cannot capitalize. Men cannot make a name for themselves or amass wealth by means of declaring the truth about God. This is because the works of God are designed primarily to bring Him glory.

CONCERNING

“And as concerning that. . .” Other versions read, “and that,” NKJV “and as for the fact that,” NASB “the fact that,” NIV “as to His,” NRSV “and about,” BBE “and as for,” CJB “since,” CSB “but to show that,” DOUAY “God stated that,” GWN “but regarding the fact,” NET “for God had promised,” NLT “and as to,” WEYMOUTH and “Now as proof that.” WILLIAMS

The expression “as concerning” comes from two Greek words: o[ti de. . Here, their meaning is, “in further proof of this.” The fact that is being proved is the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and the way Paul goes about it provides an excellent lesson on preaching the truth. Thus far Paul has adduced the following evidence that Jesus was, in fact, raised from the dead.

- AFFIRMATION. “God raised Him from the dead!” (13:30).
- WITNESSES. “He was seen many days of them which came up with Him from Galilee to Jerusalem” (13:31).
- PROMISE FULFILLED. “. . . the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled . . .” (13:32).

These are not the kind of words men would use to buttress what they say. In fact, such a witness would be considered foolish by those who are of the world. However, the fact that the flesh cannot perceive is that the Holy Spirit works with the truth, clarifying it to the hearts of men. Through the gift of faith, what is so declared is substantiated to the soul, so that the believer has no doubts. However, for those who do not believe, such words appear to be nothing more than foolishness. Yet, Paul will not allow the thinking of carnal men to impact upon the way he proclaims the truth.

HE RAISED HIM UP FROM THE DEAD

“ . . . He raised Him up from the dead . . .”

This is now the third time Paul has affirmed that God raised Jesus from the dead:

- “But God raised Him from the dead ” (Acts 13:30).
- “God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that He hath raised up Jesus again ; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee ” (Acts 13:33).
- “And as concerning that He raised him up from the dead , now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David ” (Acts 13:34).

He will affirm it again later: “But He, whom God raised again , saw no corruption” (Acts 13:37).

Affirming the Truth

There is power in affirming the truth – in declaring it confidently and with power. This is because “truth” is reality – it is what IS, and is therefore supported by the “God of truth” (Deut 32:4; Psa 31:5; Isa 65:16). Although the truth that has been revealed to and for men, it stands separate and independent from them. The truth does not depend upon men, and does not center in them. Truth is essentially identified with God, and secondarily with man. The entire Godhead is identified with truth. God the Father is referred to as “the God of truth” (Deut 32:4). Jesus is referred to as “the Truth” (John 14:6). The Holy Spirit is identified as “the Spirit of truth” (John 16:13). Again, it is written,

“the Spirit is truth” (1 John 5:6).

When men are taught the truth, it is defined “as the truth is in Jesus” (Eph 4:21). Again, the Head of the church confessed to the Father in heaven, “Thy Word IS truth,” and declared that men were sanctified by it (John 17:17). The illuminating ministry of the Holy Spirit is referred to in this manner: “But the anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in Him” (1 John 2:27).

When the truth is spoken – truth as defined by God – it provides a context in which the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit work. When it is not spoken, it is only vain imagination that supposes They will work, or that the Lord will in any way be honored or glorified.

At times, truth may appear simplistic, but it is not. This is true because of its association with God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit. Therefore, when Paul refers to the resurrection of Christ, he is not merely making a theological statement, or belching out a lifeless creed. He is declaring something that has impacted heaven, the earth, and the entire region of darkness. He is speaking of a work that confirms Jesus is the Son of God with power (Rom 1:4), causes men to be “begotten . . . again” (1 Pet 1:3), and validates our baptism into Christ (1 Pet 3:21).

When the apostles gave “witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus” to the assembled church, “great grace was upon them all” (Acts 4:33). It is evident that heaven responds to that annunciation. When the resurrection of Jesus is preached, infinitely more is taking place than the speaking of one person, and the hearing of a body of people. This is a reality that, when perceived and embraced, brings the influence of heaven to the hearers. It is my persuasion that once a person gets hold of this truth in his spirit a neutralization of adversarial powers is realized that is absolutely unparalleled.

Further, it was the proclamation of the resurrection of Jesus that brought out the unbelief and hardness of heart in the Athenian philosophers (Acts 17:18,32). On the surface, it appeared as though they simply analyzed what was said, and considered it to be unreasonable and absurd – i.e. an intellectual observation. However, this is not a full explanation of the case. If that was all there was to it, Paul would have entered into a defense of the resurrection of Jesus, or an extensive elaboration of its details, or purported historical proofs. However, he did not do this, because a refusal to embrace and act upon the fact of Christ’s resurrection from the dead evidences a corrupt and unbelieving heart. When the fact of a risen Christ has been treated with disdain, there is no form of reason that can break through that condition.

The Churches Are to Hear This Word

The churches are not to be exempted from hearing the proclamation of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. It is not a theme to be casually addressed once a year, or during some special occasion. This is a matter that is integral to sound doctrine. For example, the resurrection of Christ is mentioned fifty times in the letters to the churches .

The churches are not to be exempted from hearing the proclamation of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. It is not a theme to be casually addressed once a year, or during some special occasion. This is a matter that is integral to sound doctrine. For example, the resurrection of Christ is mentioned fifty times in the letters to the churches: Rom 1:4; 4:24-25; 5:10; 6:4-5,9-10; 8:11,34; 10:9; 1 Cor 6:14; 1 Cor 15:3-8,12-23; 2 Cor 4:10-11,14; 5:15; 13:4; Gal 1:1; Eph1:20; Phil 3:10; Col 1:18; 2:12; 1 Thess 1:10; 4:14; 2 Tim 2:8; Heb 13:20; 1 Pet 1:3,21; 3:18,21; Rev 1:5,18. It is part of the fabric of reason, and is associated with every facet of spiritual life, from the first (our baptism) unto we are raised from the dead to live and reign with Jesus, world without end. It is associated with the following.

- The declaration that Jesus is the Son of God with power (Rom 1:4).
- Justification (Rom 4:24-25).
- Reconciliation (Rom 5:10).
- Baptism into Christ and newness of life (Rom 6:4-5).
- Being dead indeed unto sin and alive unto God (Rom 6:9-11).
- Sanctification (Rom 8:11).
- The scope of salvation (Rom 8:34).
- Being saved (Rom 10:9).
- Abstinence from fornication (1 Cor 6:13-14).
- The Gospel (Cor 15:4).
- Confirming witnesses (1 Cor 15:5-8).
- The general resurrection of the dead (1 Cor 15:12-23).
- The life of the believer (2 Cor 4:10-11).
- Living exclusively unto the Lord (2 Cor 5:15).
- Believers living with Christ (2 Cor 13:4).
- The apostleship of Paul (Gal 1:1).
- The power that is toward those who believe (Eph 1:19-20).
- The objective to experience spiritual power in life (Phil 3:10).
- Jesus being the Head of His body, which is the church (Col 1:18).
- Being raised with Jesus in baptism through faith in the operation of God (Col 2:12).
- Believers waiting for God's Son from heaven (1 Thess 1:10).
- Hope (1 Thess 4:14).
- Something to be remembered (2 Tim 2:8).
- Believers being made perfect in every good work (Heb 13:20-21).
- Being begotten to a living hope (1 Pet 1:3).

All of this postulates that the matters with which the resurrection of Christ is associated are preeminent in the minds of the people. Of course, if this is not the case, they Jesus' resurrection will not have a prominent role in preaching. Furthermore, no pretentious claim to believe that Jesus was raised from the dead can neutralize the absence of these associations in preaching.

By Jesus, believing in God (1 Pet 1:21).

- Suffering for well being according to the will of the Lord (1 Pet 3:18).
- Baptism saving us (1 Pet 3:21).
- Jesus being the "Faithful Witness" (Rev 1:5).
- Not fearing as we are consciously in the presence of Jesus (Rev 1:18).

All of this postulates that the matters with which the resurrection of Christ is associated are preeminent in the minds of the people. Of course, if this is not the case, then Jesus' resurrection will not have a prominent role in preaching. Furthermore, no pretentious claim to believe that Jesus was raised from the dead can neutralize the absence of these associations in preaching.

I am not inclined to further develop this matter at this time. However, it could very well be that the failure of the modern church to consistently and powerfully proclaim the risen Christ evidences a condition of heart that is of the utmost concern.

NO MORE TO RETURN TO CORRUPTION

“ . . . now no more to return to corruption . . . ” Other versions read, “return to decay,” NASB “never to decay,” NIV “never again to go to destruction,” BBE “never decayed,” GWN “never again to be in a state of decay,” NET “not leaving him to rot in the grave,” NLT “no more to die,” LIVING “will never go back to the grave and decay,” IE “never again to be in the position of one soon to return to decay,” WEYMOUTH “never to experience decay,” and “no more to return to [undergo] putrefaction and dissolution [of the grave].” AMPLIFIED

When Jesus was placed in the sepulcher, He was really dead – that is, His spirit had left its body, which state constituted being “dead” (James 2:26). When the “breath” of the body is taken away, death occurs, and, ordinarily, decay sets in. As the Psalmist said, “Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled: thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust ” (Psa 104:29). And again, “man . . . His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth” (Psa 146:3-4). That is the common experience when death takes place – death occurs when the life and person of the body are gone.

However, when Jesus died, His body did not decay or experience corruption. Therefore it is proclaimed, “neither [did] His flesh see corruption” (Acts 2:31). This was in fulfillment of the prophecy of Psalm 16:10, to which Peter alluded (Acts 2:27). This is also the text to which Paul refers in this message, in which he mentions “another psalm” (13:35).

The words “no more to return to corruption,” do not suggest that Jesus did decay at one time, but will never again do so. Rather, there are at least two things that are intended.

- He will never again die, and be buried in the grave, in which decay ordinarily occurs.
- He will never again, in any way, occupy the domain in which the body rots and returns to the dust of the earth.

Both views are technically correct. However, it seems to me that the emphasis is that the body of Jesus will never again dwell in the domain of decay, or “return to” the realm of “corruption.” He will never again occupy the place of the dead. Of course, such a return would require another death – like that of every other person who had been raised from the dead. These resurrections were not a defeat of death itself. They include:

- The son of the widow of Zarephath (1 Kgs 17-23).
- The Shunammite’s son (2 Kgs 4:32-37).
- The young man let down into the sepulcher of Elisha (2 Kgs 13:21).
- The son of the widow of Nain, raised by Jesus (Lk 7:12-15).
- Jairus’ daughter, raised by Jesus (Lk 8:49-55).
- Lazarus, raised by Jesus (John 11:43-44).
- Dorcas, raised by Peter (Acts 9:37-40).
- Eutychus, raised by Paul (Acts 20:9-12).

Jesus Christ died “once” (Rom 6:10; Heb 7:27; 9:12,26,28; 10:10; 1 Pet 3:18), and, being raised from the dead, He is “alive for evermore” (Rev 1:18). His resurrection confirmed that everything that was intended to be accomplished by His death had, in fact, been achieved – and that God was satisfied with the results. No further purpose could be served by Jesus remaining in the region of the dead, and so He was raised up out of it. In this, Jesus took back His life, which He was told to do (John 10:17-18).

HE SPEAKS ON THIS WISE

“ 34b . . . He said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David.”

Paul now proclaims the effects of Christ’s resurrection, confirming that it was not intended to be a mere display, for no one on earth actually saw Jesus raise from the dead. The evidence that He had risen was not the sight of the resurrection itself, but the presence and words of the One who had been raised. This substantiates that it is the reason for the resurrection of the Lord that must be comprehended, not merely the fact of it. The power is in the reason for it.

ON THIS WISE

“ . . . He said on this wise . . .” Other versions read, “He has spoken thus,” NKJV “He has spoken in this way,” NASB “is stated in these words,” NIV “He said these words,” BBE “He spoke thus,” DARBY “He declared in this way,” NAB “God has spoken in this way,” NET “is stated in these words,” NIB “is no more than what he had declared,” NJB “This is stated in the Scripture that says, LIVING and “And as for the fact of God's raising him from the dead, never to return to corruption, He has spoken in these words.” PHILLIPS

This is a marvelous example of apostolic reasoning. It substantiates the centrality of the Scriptures themselves in arriving at holy conclusions. The matter that Paul is addressing is that God “raised” Jesus “up from the dead.” The statement is, “And as for the fact that He raised Him from the dead, no more to return to corruption, He spoke in this way.” RSV And precisely how is it that Paul will establish the fact that God raised up Jesus from the dead, and He will never again go into the grave, where the body ultimately becomes corrupt? What kind of proof can be adduced for that statement? He cannot present the body of Jesus, for He is glorified in heaven, and can no longer be seen by mortal eyes. When Jesus returned to heaven, He left no tangible evidence in the hands of His disciples that would confirm, He had been with them – evidence they could submit to men.

What we will see here will not conform to human reasoning. However, it is representative of holy thought and inspired reasoning. It is the kind of rationality that only appeals to those with faith, and it is designedly that way.

THE SURE MERCIES OF DAVID

This is a marvelous example of apostolic reasoning. It substantiates the centrality of the Scriptures themselves in arriving at holy conclusions.

“ . . . I will give you the sure mercies of David.” Other versions read, “sure blessings of David,” NASB “sure blessings promised to David,” NIV “the holy promises made to David” RSV “the holy and sure blessings of David,” ASV “the holy and certain mercies of David,” BBE “the holy and trustworthy things of David,” CJB “the faithful covenant blessings made to David,” CSB “the enduring love promised to David,” GWN “the sure grace of David,” MRD “the holy things promised to David which can be relied upon,” NJB “the faithful kindnesses of David,” YLT “the wonderful thing I promised David,” LIVING and “the holy and sure mercy and blessings [that were promised and assured] to David.” AMPLIFIED

The text to which Paul refers is a rather obscure one in the fifty-fifth chapter of Isaiah. “Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David” (Isa 55:3). This word reflects the promise of God to David:

“And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom, , , my mercy shall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee. And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee: thy throne shall be established for ever.” (2 Sam 7:12-16). In this promise, as stated in verses 13-14, there is an immediate reference to David’s son Solomon, who would build the temple of God. However, the indirect, yet more focused, promise was of the coming Savior, who would build an everlasting house, and occupy an everlasting throne. However, the eighty-ninth Psalm, written by a member of Solomon’s court, makes clear that the promise given to David strictly pertained to the coming Christ: “For I have said, Mercy shall be built up for ever: thy faithfulness shalt thou establish in the very heavens. I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant, Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Selah . . . Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah” (Psa 89:3-4 . . . 35-37). Peter also applied God’s promise to David to the Lord Jesus Christ (Acts 2:30-31).

If this line of reasoning is true, then it throws to the ground the notion that men can be brought to see the truth through logical arguments, apologetics, archeological findings, etc. While it may not be popular to affirm this, those who insist that such proofs are possible, they are faced with the gargantuan task of explaining why the Word of God can have power or work effectively when it is relegated to a subordinate position.

Thus Paul presents proof of the resurrection of Christ: God had promised an “everlasting covenant” and “sure,” or unending mercies to David (Isa 55:3) – and God “cannot lie” (Tit 1:2).

Jesus was the promised “Seed of David” (Rom 1:3; 2 Tim 2:8), the “Son of David” (Matt 1:1). In fact, long after David had died, the prophets frequently referred to the coming Messiah as “David” (Jer 30:9; Ezek 34:23,24; 37:24,25; Hos 3:5). The prophets also declared that the Messiah would die, being “cut off out of the land of the living” (Isa 53:8), “made grave with the wicked, and with the rich in His death,” (Isa 53:9), and making His “soul an offering for sin” (Isa 53:10). Daniel declared He would be “cut off,” for no fault of his own, and without any progeny (Dan 9:26).

If, therefore, God affirmed that the Messiah, though He died, would be for an “everlasting covenant,” and that He would ever reign on the “throne of David,” then He would have to be raised from the dead – else God would have been represented as lying. However, such a thing is not possible, for, as God Himself declared, “For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: So shall My word be that goeth forth out of My mouth: it shall not return unto Me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it,” or “it shall not return to Me void [without producing any effect, useless], but it shall accomplish that which I please and purpose, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it” (Isa 55:10-11).

The fact that God declared the Messiah would be everlasting, plus the fact that He said His body would not be left in the grave, confirms that Jesus did, in fact, rise from the dead. That is Paul’s reasoning. This is not satisfactory to the flesh, but that is of no consequence. God has magnified His Word above all His name (Psa 138:2), so that the apprehension of everything He gives hangs upon the belief of that Word. If men do not believe what God has said, there is no corroborating witness that can be given to them. Were such a thing possible, then the purported witness would be exalted above God’s Word – and such an exaltation simply is not possible.

If this line of reasoning is true, then it throws to the ground the notion that men can be brought to see the truth through logical arguments, apologetics, archeological findings, etc. While it may not be popular to affirm this, those who insist that such proofs are possible are faced with the gargantuan task of explaining how the Word of God can have power or work effectively when it is relegated to a subordinate position. If God has exalted His Word above all His name, how can it be possible to accomplish the task of promoting faith independently of that Word? That is a supposition that ought to be abandoned, with dispatch and determination! Men must take care that they do not exalt human reasoning above Scripture.

ANOTHER PSALM

“ 35 Wherefore He saith also in another psalm, Thou shalt not suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption.”

Having cited a summation of what God had promised David, Paul continues to refer to the Word of God, for that is the appointed means by which spiritual life is sustained (Matt 4:4; Lk 4:4). First he has pointed out that God promised sure and everlasting mercies through the coming Christ – and that would not be possible if Jesus had not raised from the dead. Now he goes to the well of Scripture again, anchoring his affirmation in the written Word of God.

IN ANOTHER PSALM

“Wherefore he saith also in another psalm . . .” Other versions read, “Therefore He also says,” NKJV “So it is stated elsewhere,” NIV “Therefore He has also said,” NRSV “Because He saith also,” ASV “This is explained elsewhere,” CJB “And again He said,” MRD “This is why He also said,” NAB “another psalm explains it more fully,” NLT “in another place God says,” IE and “For this is the reason He says also.” AMPLIFIED

Notice again how Paul is extolling the Word of God: “HE saith,” for the pronoun “He” refers to God Himself – the same One who said through Isaiah, “I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David” (Isa 55:3).

Technically, as the following text will affirm, it is the Messiah Himself who is speaking. Yet, it is credited to God, for the Son always spoke in strict conformity with what the Father said (John 15:15).

There is something else to be seen here. Those who were hearing Paul were familiar with the Scriptures, for they were regularly read in their gatherings.

His situation was not like that which those who speak the Word often confront in our time. There is an unparalleled level of scriptural illiteracy among professing Christians. It is at such a pronounced level that the Word of God is rarely recognized. This circumstance greatly complicates the matter of effectively communicating the Word of God. I do not know that it is possible to estimate the level of spiritual poverty that is maintained by an ignorance of the Word of God. Keep in mind that we are not speaking of barbarians, but of professing Christians. Even though God has magnified His Word, it continues to occupy a low position in the average congregation. Of course, the people who are ignorant of the Scriptures are nothing more than the product of what they have been fed.

GOD WOULD NOT ALLOW IT

“ . . . Thou shalt not suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption.” Other versions read, “You will not allow,” NKJV “You will not let,” NIV “Thou wilt not give,” ASV “You will not permit,” NET and “Thou wilt not give up.” WEYMOUTH

This quotation is taken from Psalm 16:9-11: “Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope: For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt show me the path of life: in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore.” Peter also quoted this text on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:26-28). It represents the reasoning of the Christ while His body was in the grave.

Who but God is capable of not allowing a body to deteriorate in the grave? As an act of His Sovereign will, He would not permit the body of Christ to in any way decay. Corruption could not take hold of His body. In four days, corruption had already made significant advancement in the body of Lazarus (John 11:39), But it could not even begin its work in God's "Holy One!"

As it is written, God "raises the dead" (2 Cor 1:9), and thus particularly refused to leave Jesus in that domain. Ultimately, all of the dead will be raised, for, according to God's predetermination, "the earth shall cast out the dead" (Isa 26:19), and death will be "swallowed up I victory." Jesus, however, is "the firstfruits of them that slept" (2 Cor 15:20), and "the first begotten of the dead" (Rev 1:5). He is the first One of whom it could be said, "death hath no more dominion over Him" (Rom 6:9).

In order for the domain of death to be conquered, two things must take place. First, the grave must be overcome by the of the deceased coming out of it. When the body emerges from the grave, it must be inhabited by the soul of the one who possessed it. Therefore, that unseen part of man must emerge from the domain of death that it occupies. This is technically termed "Hades." In the King James Version, it is translated "hell." Other versions that also use "hell" in the place of "Hades" include the following: Basic Bible English (1949), Douay-Rheims (1899), Geneva (1599), Bishop's New Testament (1595), Revised Webster (1833). Tyndall's New Testament (1534), Living Bible (1971), and Wycliffe (1382).

Still other versions use the following words: "the grave," NIV "Sheol," CJB "The netherworld," NAB "among the dead," NLT "the unseen world," WEYMOUTH "Hades [the state of departed spirits]," AMPLIFIED "the unperceived," INTERLINEAR "the realm of the dead," ALT and "the world of the dead." GNB

The Greek word that is here translated "hell" is al[dhj (ha-daas). The word "Hades" is a transliteration of the Greek word. It is really not a translation, for there is no parallel English word that is suitable. The lexical meaning is, "literally unseen place, the place of the dead, underworld," FRIBERG "the world of the dead," UBS " a place or abode of the dead, including both the righteous and the unrighteous (in most contexts al[dhj is equivalent to the Hebrew term Sheol) - 'the world of the dead, Hades," LOUW-NIDA "Hades, the world below," LIDDELL-SCOTT "Hades, netherworld, hell," LEH and "(Heb. Sheol), the underworld as the place of the dead." GINGRICH

I have taken the time to give this brief review in order to confirm that the meaning of this word is determined by how it is used in Scripture – i.e. contextually. In the general sense of the word, it means an unseen domain – yet there are personalities in it. This, then, cannot be the grave, for no personalities are in it. Whatever Hades is, and wherever it is, it is the unseen part of man that resides there until the time the resurrection. Little additional information is given, for, it appears, we would gain no advantage from it.

Here, the word "soul" is used to denote the unseen part of man, and not in its most definitive sense. This is the sense in which the creation of man is explained: "And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen 2:7). And again, "And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul" (1 Cor 15:45). This ("living soul") is the part of Lazarus that was in Abraham's bosom, and the part of the rich man who, after he died, lifted up his eyes in hell (Lk 16:22-23).

The point to be seen here is that for the dead be raised, both the seen and unseen, or material and immaterial, parts of men must be brought from the domain of the dead. This is what took place when Jesus was raised from the dead. God refused to allow either the seen or unseen parts of Jesus to remain in the domain belonging to the dead. He thoroughly defeated death!

A MAN WHO SERVED HIS GENERATION

“ 36a For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God . . . ”

However, when it came to the body not seeing corruption, Paul will confirm this was not the experience of David, who particularly spoke of it, nor was it ever intended to be. For every person except Jesus, when the body is buried, it is “sown in corruption . . . dishonor . . . weakness,” and remains “a natural body” until the general resurrection

Paul will now elaborate on the uniqueness of Jesus’ resurrection. He will show that David, although he received the promises, and spoke in the first person concerning his soul not being left in Hades and his body not seeing corruption, the coming and suffering of Christ were really the subjects being addressed. Frequently David prophesied as though what he was the one who would experience what was declared: “For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption . . . My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me . . . I am a worm and no man . . . all that see me . . . saying, He trusted on the Lord that He would deliver him: let Him, deliver him, seeing He delighted in him . . . they pierced my hands and feet , , , They part my garments among them . . . They gave me also gall for my meat: and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink” (Psa 16:10; 22:1,6-8,16,18; 69:26). Isaiah did the same: “ I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting” (Isa 50:6). However, in both cases, and more, it was “the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow” (1 Pet 1:11).

In some decidedly diminished measure, the prophets, probably were introduced to some of these experiences, particularly those dealing with suffering. However, when it came to the body not seeing corruption, Paul will confirm this was not the experience of David, who particularly spoke of it, nor was it ever intended to be. For every person except Jesus, when the body is buried, it is “sown in corruption . . . dishonor . . . weakness,” and remains “a natural body” until the general resurrection (1 Cor 15:42-43).

DAVID SERVED HIS OWN GENERATION

“For David, after he had served his own generation . . . ” Other versions read, “having done . . . for his generation,” BBE “in his own generation ministered,” DARBY “serving the people of his time,” GWN “served in his lifetime,” NAB “had done,” NLT “served his time,” PNT and “having been useful to his own generation.” WEYMOUTH

There are two perspectives in this text, and both are important.

- First, in saying David served his generation, the intent is to show that the people of his time were truly advantaged by David’s life. He did not serve his generation by doing what they desired and meeting all of their demands. Rather, he served them by bringing certain advantages to them that others did not bring. This had chiefly to do with his relation to the Living God, and was reflected in the nature of his rule, the various revelations given to him, and the godly focus he established among the people.

- Second, “his own generation” was the environment in which he served the Lord, In this case, serving the Lord was the primary thing, and he did it in the midst of the people, as opposed to some form of isolation. That is, the priorities and reason for his entire life was found in the Lord.

While both of these are true, it appears to me that the accent is on the latter. This is accentuated by the fact that the time of his service is not the point of the text, but what took place “after” David had served his own generation – when he died.

In this regard, and under normal circumstances, death is viewed as an appointment – the appointed Divinely designated conclusion to one’s life. In a generation sense, the duration of human life approximates seventy or eighty years. As it is written, “The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away” (Psa 90:10). There are exceptions, just as there were during the time when men lived hundreds of years. At that time, there were a few who lived over nine hundred years – Adam (Gen 5:5); Seth (Gen 5:8), Enos (Gen 5:11), Cainan (Gen 5:14), Jared (Gen 5:20), Methuselah (Gen 5:27), and Noah (Gen 9:29). Even so, in our time, some live past 80, but they also are the exceptions. Thus, in this general sense, the length of life has been determined by God. Holy men, knowing this determination, have asked God to teach them how to number their days – that is, to have a sense of how long they will be in the world, that they may live properly. “So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom” (Psa 90:12).

HE SERVED BY THE WILL OF GOD

“ . . . by the will of God . . . ” Other versions read, “served the purpose of God in his own generation,” NASB “served God’s purpose in his own generation,” NIV “served the counsel of God in his own generation,” RSV “having done God’s work for his generation,” BBE “serving his own generation in God’s plan,” CSB “in his own generation ministered to the will of God,” DARBY “served in his generation, according to the will of God,” DOUAY “served his time by the counsel of God,” GENEVA “doing God’s will by serving the people of his time,” GWN “served the will of God in his lifetime,” NAB “his own generation having served by the will of God,” YLT and “served God’s will and purpose and counsel in his own generation.” AMPLIFIED

There is a sense in which this text is like a three-sided prism – a reality that can be seen from three differing perspectives. Each side is valid, but one is more glorious in its appearance.

- David served, or brought, certain advantages to his generation.
- David served God during his generation.
- It was God’s will that David bring advantages to his generation by serving Him, doing His will, and obeying His directives.

All of these are true. However, it seems to me that the latter yields the greater glory to the Lord, for David was a “prophet” – a spokesman for God (Acts 2:29-30). So far as the written record is concerned, David’s prophecies related to the coming Messiah, and he brought certain advantages to those of his time by declaring them (Psa 2:1-2,6-9; 24:7-10; 22:1-18,22; 16:9-11; 21:5-7; 34:20; 40:6-10; 45:6-7; 68:18; 69:9,21,26; 80:17; 96:13; 109:25; 110:1,3-4; 118:22-23; 132:11,17). In fact, by writing them down, he brought advantages to succeeding generations as well.

It ought to be noted that no person can truly minister to, or serve, the people who is not himself doing the will of God. Those so living will be used by God to “shine as lights in the world,” even “in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation” (Phil 2:15). Thus, serving the Lord is more than an obligation – although it is surely that, for we have all been “bought with a price” (1 Cor 6:20). However, in that service God is being honored, and those who take due heed to such a life are given opportunities and advantages.

AFTER

Paul draws particular attention to “after” David had “served his generation.” Although David did speak of himself being raised from the dead (Psa 49:15), he appeared to know through inspiration that this was not possible until the Messiah was raised from the dead (Psa 16:9-10). The general resurrection, although it is appointed, must necessarily be preceded by the resurrection of Christ as “the first begotten of the dead,” or “the firstborn from the dead” NKJV (Rev 1:5).

This is a point of sound doctrine. “And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by His own power” (1 Cor 6:14). And again, “Knowing that He which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you” (2 Cor 4:14). This word is an essential part of preaching.

DAVID FELL ASLEEP AND SAW CORRUPTION

“36b . . . fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption.” Paul is now elaborating on the fact that the body of Jesus was not subject to corruption – no decay ever was allowed to ravish the body of the Son of God. Not even when it lay for three days in the tomb.

DAVID FELL ON SLEEP

“ . . . fell on sleep . . .” Other versions read, “fell asleep,” NKJV “died,” NRSV “went to sleep,” BBE “slept,” DOUAY “was laid to rest,” GWN “went to rest,” MRD “fell asleep [in death],” AMPLIFIED and “was reposed.” INTERLINEAR

The words “fell on sleep” come from a single Greek word – evkoimh,qh . The lexical meaning of this word is: “to cause to sleep . . . metaphorically, and euphemistically equivalent to die,” THAYER “to fall asleep, to go to bed, to sleep . . . to remain somewhere during the night,” LEH and “fig., of death, fall asleep, die, pass away.” GINGRICH

In the Scriptures, death is frequently referred to as going to sleep (Deut 31:16; 1 Kgs 2:10; Job 3:13; 7:21; 14:12; Dan 12:2; Matt 27:52; John 11:11; Acts 13:36; 1 Cor 15:51; 1 Thess 4:14; 5:10).

David concluded his work and died, as Peter would say it, putting off his tabernacle (2 Pet 1:14). Or, as Paul would say it, he was “absent from the body” (2 Cor 5:8), or had “departed” from his mortal frame (Phil 1:23). His body was thus in lifeless repose, that is to say, was awaiting the resurrection from the dead, Properly viewed, death is to be the conclusion of a fruitful and beneficial life. Such a life is one that has been lived unto God. David lived that kind of life, and we are obliged to do so also.

Soul Sleeping Theory

Soul sleeping is a view of death that is held by a significant number of professing Christians. The following is a definition of this term, provided by those who embrace the doctrine of soul sleeping.

"The grave is not a place of consciousness. Since death is a sleep, the dead remain in a state of unconsciousness in the grave until the resurrection, when the grave (Hades) gives up its dead (Rev. 20:13)." SEVENTH DAY ADVENTIST, A BIBLICAL EXPOSITION OF 27 FUNDAMENTAL DOCTRINES

A modern theologian defines soul sleeping in these words: “ Following death, the soul of an individual sleeps until the resurrection." EMERY NESTER, Ed.D., D.Min

The Britannica Encyclopedia, 2008, provides this entry. “A second view, therefore, also prevailed: the sleep of the soul—i.e., the soul of the dead person enters into a sleeping state that continues until the Last Judgment, which will occur after the general resurrection.”

This view directly contradicts the

Some dismiss this account, saying that it was a parable, and not an actual account. However, such a supposition can by no means be substantiated, and Jesus did not refer to people by name in parables. Also, a parable is a parallel of spiritual realities with very real temporal circumstances. A person who embraces the soul-sleeping theory could not even speak in the manner in which Jesus did.

account of Jesus concerning Lazarus, the rich man, and Abraham (Luke 16:19-31). Jesus represented all three of these men as conscious and perceptive after they had died. Abraham and the rich man held a dialog, and Lazarus was comforted. Furthermore, Abraham is said to have referred to Moses and the prophets, who did not come into existence until hundreds of years after Abraham had died. Yet, he was knowledgeable of them and what they said, as well as the brothers of the rich man who were still alive in the world. Some dismiss this account, saying that it was a parable, and not an actual occurrence. However, such a supposition can by no means be substantiated, and Jesus did not refer to people by name in parables. Also, a parable is a parallel of spiritual realities with very real temporal circumstances. A person who embraces the soul-sleeping theory could not even speak in the manner in which Jesus did.

Second, Jesus revealed to John the activity of certain souls who had been “Slain for the word of God.” They asked the Lord a question, were given appropriate attire, and told to “rest yet a little season until their fellow servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled” (Rev 6:9-11).

Third, when Jesus was transfigured, Moses and Elijah appeared in glory with Him. Both had left the world hundreds of years before – Moses by death, and Elijah by being taken up into heaven. They spoke with Jesus “of His decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem” (Luke 9:31). When upon the earth, neither of them are reported to said so much as a single word about the death of the coming Messiah. Elijah did not say anything at all about the Messiah. Both of these persons were conscious, and knowledge of things they did not know while they remained in this world.

The Soul Is Never Said to Sleep

The very term “soul sleeping” is contrived, for, as regarding death, the soul is never said to sleep. John saw departed souls “under the altar,” and they were not sleeping, but talking. He also “saw the souls of them, that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus,” and they lived and reigned with Jesus (Rev 20:4). Without probing further into this language, it does not appear likely to me that the truth of God could be delivered to men in an erroneous container – i.e. a depiction of something that was not possible – and the language to which I have just referred would be a total misrepresentation if soul-sleeping was a proper doctrine.

It Is the Body that Sleeps

This is resurrection language. The body is said to “sleep,” lying in peaceful repose, because it is going to be raised from the dead. At that time “this corruptible must put in incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality” (1 Cor 15:53-54). Further, the thing that is “corruptible” is sown, or planted, into the earth – a clear reference to the body. “It is sown in corruption . . . It is sown in dishonor . . . It is sown in weakness . . . It is sown a natural body” (1 Cor 15:43-44).

Nowhere is the soul, at death, said to be “sown.” Further, the body is put into the earth, for it came from there originally. The soulish part of man did not come from earth, but was breathed into the body after God had fashioned it. Paul makes a special point of this: “The first man is of the earth, earthy” (1 Cor 15:47). It is for this reason that, following the sin of man, God said, “In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken : for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return ” (Gen 3:19).

Until that day, the body is “asleep” – without life and inactive. There is no spirit in the body when it is dead, for death is the result the absence of the human spirit. Thus the term “sleep” does not denote a mere unconscious state, but a lifeless one.

However, owing to the atoning death of Christ, death is viewed as a “sleep.” This is because even death is temporary. In Jesus, the body of every person, saved or lost, will be raised from the dead. Thus it is written, “For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive” (1 Cor 15:22). For those in Christ, this will be the ultimate advantage. For those who are not in Christ, it will be the consummate disadvantage. Thus Jesus said of the resurrection, “Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation” (John 5:29).

Until that day, the body is “asleep” – without life and inactive. There is no spirit in the body when it is dead, for death is the result the absence of the human spirit (James 2:27). Thus the term “sleep” does not denote a mere unconscious state, but a lifeless one. This condition, however, is never ascribed to the souls of the dead. The greater light of the Gospel makes this more clear.

UNTO HIS FATHERS

The term “laid unto” or “laid beside,” enlarges on the concept of the body sleeping.

At the time David was granted his desire to prepare for the building of the Temple, God told him, “And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers , I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom” (2 Sam 7:12).

First Kings 2:10 says “So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David ” (1 Kgs2:10). This was not Bethlehem, which is also referred to as “the city of David” (Lk 2:4). Rather, it was Zion, in the southern part of Jerusalem, where a fortress of the Jebusites once stood, and was forcibly taken by Davod. The account of that quest is found in First Chronicles 11:5: “And the inhabitants of Jebus said to David, Thou shalt not come hither. Nevertheless David took the castle of Zion, which is the city of David ” (1 Chron 11:5).

David was thirty years old when he began to reign, and died after reigning forty years (2 Sam 5:4), being seventy years of age. The account of David’s death and burial is found in First Kings 2:10 and First Chronicles 29:26-28.

Scriptures indicate that a special place was reserved for the burial of kings. “ And Hezekiah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David” (2 Chron 32:33). It appears that the burial of David was the point at which this custom commenced. The phrase “laid unto his fathers” does not refer to the precise place location – although it was in Canaan, the land of promise. “And the time that he reigned over Israel was forty years; seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jerusalem. And he died in a good old age, full of days, riches, and honor: and Solomon his son reigned in his stead” (1 Chr 29:27-28).

There are 105 accounts of, or statements made concerning David. His name is mentioned 1,085 times in Scripture: 1,027 from Ruth through Zechariah, and 58 times from Matthew through Revelation.

David's Last Words

The last words of David are recorded: "The spirit of the LORD spake by me, and his word was in my tongue. The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me, He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God. And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain. Although my house be not so with God; yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, and sure: for this is all my salvation, and all my desire, although he make it not to grow. But the sons of Belial shall be all of them as thorns thrust away, because they cannot be taken with hands: But the man that shall touch them must be fenced with iron and the staff of a spear; and they shall be utterly burned with fire in the same place" (2 Sam 23:2-7).

On the day of Pentecost Peter confirmed that the sepulcher of David remained with them – at least one thousand years after he had died (Acts 2:29).

DAVID SAW CORRUPTION

" . . . and saw corruption." Other versions read, "underwent decay," NASB "his body decayed," NIV "experienced corruption," NRSV "his body came to destruction," BBE and "he did see corruption and undergo putrefaction and dissolution [of the grave]." AMPLIFIED

Reasoning on this fact, Peter concluded that when David spoke about his body not seeing corruption, he could not have been speaking of himself. He was rather prophesying of the coming Christ. It was the Spirit of Christ in David that moved him to so speak , as was the case with other prophets (1 Peter 1:11). It is that same point that Paul is making. He will now elaborate on that critical reality, confirming both its power and relevance.

AN EXCEPTION TO THE RULE

" 37 But He, whom God raised again, saw no corruption."

Paul will now confirm that the real point of all sound doctrine is Jesus, and what God did to and for Him. This is a distinction that is being greatly obscured in our day, when the inhabitants of the earth are being presented as fundamental. With spiritual expertise Paul speaks of the reality of Christ being the proper focus, not the condition of men. This does not mean that people are unimportant. However, it does mean that their importance is measured by the Person of Christ, what He did, and what God did to Him. Take Jesus out of the picture, and men no longer have any genuine importance. Their entire existence is reduced to vanity – just as Solomon observed when he wrote of things "under the sun" (Eccl 1:2,14; 2:1,11,15,17,19,21,23,26; 3:19; 4:4,7,8,16; 5:10; 6:2,4,9,11; 7:15; 8:10,14; 9:9; 11:8,10; 12:8). Keep in mind that those expressions were uttered by a man who had wisdom, wealth, position, and pleasure that were unexcelled among men in the flesh.

BUT HE

"But He, whom God raised again . . ." Other versions read, "raised up," NKJV and "raised from the dead." NIV

In other words, after Jesus died, God preempted the natural process that follows death – decay – not allowing the body of Jesus to go through that procedure. A body was prepared for Jesus. However, the purpose for the body is that He might "taste death for every man" – not that the body itself might undergo decay.

The point to be seen here is that Jesus is the theme of proper exposition. The psychiatrist studies the human psyche. The sociologist analyzes human society. The philosopher examines ideas and possibilities. The scientist considers natural phenomenon. The mathematician peruses numbers, exponentiality, and how they bear upon problems and resolutions. But the spiritual thinker considers Jesus, what He did, what He experienced, what He is doing, and what He will do. That is the key of knowledge that allows for the proper assessment of all other things.

Paul is confirming that Jesus is the issue, not the human condition. His point is that what God did to Jesus in raising Him from the dead has immediate relevancy to all men. In fact, THE Person and work of Jesus Christ is the factor that makes things crucial, or of great importance.

SAW NO CORRUPTION

“ . . . saw no corruption.” Other versions read, “did not undergo decay,” NASB and “saw no corruption [did not experience putrefaction and dissolution of the grave].” AMPLIFIED

In other words, after Jesus died, God preempted the natural process that follows death – decay – not allowing the body of Jesus to go through that process. A body was prepared for Jesus (Heb 10:5). However, the purpose for the body is that He might “taste death for every man” (Heb 2:9) – not that the body itself might undergo decay.

Once Jesus bore our sins in His body on the tree, was cursed by God in the judgment of that sin, and buried, there was no further need for His body to undergo the curse. Thus, there was no requirement for decay to take place.

SOMETHING TO BE KNOWN

“ 38 Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins.” Having delineated the triumph of Jesus over “the last enemy” (1 Cor 15:26), Paul will declare the reality of remission. He will proclaim propitiation and announce amnesty. The resurrection of Christ announces that God received Christ’s “offering” (Eph 5:2; Heb 10:10,14). Now that Jesus has risen and is enthroned, remission can be proclaimed, for an acceptable sacrifice has been offered. Thus it is written, “And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin” (Heb 10:17-18).

BE IT KNOWN UNTO YOU

“Be it known unto you therefore . . .” Other versions read, “let it be known,” NKJV “I want you to know,” NIV “Let it be clear to you,” BBE “Know therefore,” MRD “I want you to realize,” NJB “Listen!” LIVING “you must understand,” IE “understand therefore,” WEYMOUTH “let it be clearly known and understood by you,” AMPLIFIED and “It is therefore imperative, men and brothers, that every one of you should realize.” PHILLIPS

Translated from the Greek word gnwsto.n , the word “known” means “make known, disclose . . . that which may be known of God,” THAYER “something clearly recognizable known, made known . . . well-known; substantively . . . of what can be known intelligible, knowable.” FRIBERG

This rather complex word includes a lot of intellectual and intuitive territory: that is, something that both the heart and the mind can grasp.

- First, Paul is declaring that what He is about to say is from God, and has been made accessible to men.
- Second, in view of this fact, what he will say is knowable, and can be apprehended.
- Third, that Paul has comprehended what he will declare, and will therefore be able to make it plain to the people.

- Fourth, that men are obligated to receive this knowledge, for when God has made something known, then sent someone to declare it to men, it is wrong for the hearers to reject it, remaining in ignorance about it.

Now, this sets before us the very nature of the Kingdom of God. It does not thrive in a culture of spiritual ignorance. Divine privilege is enjoyed primarily through “spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9), for what cannot be discerned, cannot be truly apprehended, enhancing the individual. In all of this, faith is the enabling factor.

It seems to me that this perception is not common among the churches of our time. There is too much contentment with ignorance, and thus too little quest for the truth and pressing toward the mark. It is time for those who wear the name of Jesus to have a more sober and sustained view of the truth of God, thrusting from them the dreadful religious twins of ignorance and indifference.

THROUGH THIS MAN

“ . . . men and brethren, that through this Man is preached unto you . . . ” Other versions read, “is proclaimed to you,” NASB “is offered to you,” BBE “I’m telling you,” GWN “declared,” YLT “announced to you,” WEYMOUTH and “is being down-messaged.” INTERLINEAR

The word translated “preached,” or “proclaimed,” comes from a Greek word that means, “to announce, declare, promulgate, make known; to proclaim publicly, publish . . . with the included idea of celebrating, commending,” THAYER “proclaim (solemnly), announce something,” FRIBERG “proclaim, make known, preach; teach, advocate,” UBS and “proclaim, make known, preach; teach, advocate.” LOUW-NIDA This is not an exposition, but a proclamation.

By saying “through this Man,” Paul is not merely saying by His authority. Jesus Himself is prominent in the very administration of this message. He is the One who sent the message through the Spirit to Paul, and He is the One who has authorized and empowered him to declare it with understanding. This is the language of Divine government. The door of opportunity has been opened by the exalted Christ, and the message is being declared at His discretion. To reject this message in any way is unspeakably serious! This message is to be comprehended and embraced with both hands, immediately and eagerly.

THE FORGIVENESS OF SINS

“ . . . the forgiveness of sins.” Other versions read, “remission of sins,” ASV “your sins can be forgiven,” GWN “forgiveness for your sins,” NLT “there is forgiveness for your sins,” LIVING “removal of sins,” AMPLIFIED and “Jesus can forgive your sins.” CEV

This is a fulfillment of the word of Jesus, delivered to His disciples prior to His ascension: “And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem” (Luke 24:47). Here it is being preached in Asia, in the city of Antioch, already spreading “among all nations.”

Some of the versions do not present the case clearly enough. Paul is not preaching possibility (i.e. “can be,” “can forgive”) but is declaring a reality to be received. The truth of the matter is that Jesus “put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself,” taking away “the sin of the world.” As Daniel said, He “finished” the transgression, and made “an end of sin” (Dan 9:24). The question is not whether or not God can forgive sin, and woe to the person who approaches the subject in such a frame of mind. Now the issue is whether or not men will receive what God has provided. Their ability to receive it is not even the issue, because enabling power accompanies the message. In order to reject this message, the individual must “put it” from them, “repudiate” NASB it, and “thrust it” RSV from themselves (Acts 13:46).

Technically speaking, the message is not an offer of salvation, but the declaration of it. The difference between an offer and a declaration is that a declaration emphasizes the necessity of faith – or believing the message. It is true that it must be received, and that is what faith will invariably do.

A SWEEPING STATEMENT

“ 39 And by Him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.”

Paul now makes a statement of epochal proportions. It is a word that many cannot be taken into the mouth of those who attempt to live by law. I come from a religious background where, apart from my good father, I do not have a clear recollection of this word ever being proclaimed. It simply was not the message of choice. In fact, there was often a prevailing ignorance of its very presence in the Word of God. However, this word was spoken by a man chosen and empowered by Jesus and sent forth by the Holy Spirit. Men are obliged to comprehend this word and continue to faithfully sound it forth.

BY HIM ALL

“And by Him all . . .” Other versions read, “through Him everyone,” NASB “by this Jesus everyone,” “God clears everyone,” CJB “in Him everyone,” DARBY “by this one everyone,” NET “in this one everyone,” YLT “through union with Him everyone,” WILLIAMS and “in this one.” INTERLINEAR

Who is the “Him” to which Paul refers – “by Him?” The word translated “by” is a primary preposition, and can be translated “in, on, at, with, by, or among .” THAYER Summarized, it speaks of the means through which something is accomplished. In this case, blessing that is pronounced comes by the means of Christ – or more particularly, by the means of being in, or identified with, Christ. Objectively viewed, it is God Himself who puts us into Christ. This is succinctly stated in First Corinthians: “. . . hath God chosen . . . That no flesh should glory in His presence. But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption” (1 Cor 1:28-30). From this perspective, “by Him” can refer to God – the One who justifies. This is a proper view and can be seen in this text.

Viewed subjectively, it is by means of faith that we are brought into Christ. Because faith always expresses itself, we are also said to be “baptized into Christ.” Thus it is written, “For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ” (Gal 3:26-27). From this view, Christ is the appointed means through which the promised blessing is realized. This also is a proper view, like the other side of a coin. It cannot be experienced apart from a very real identity with Jesus – an identity that is described as being put into Christ by God, and being baptized into Him. These actions are not mere formal routines.

THAT BELIEVE

“. . . all that believe . . .” Now that we have established that the locus of blessing is Christ Himself, we should have no difficulty with what is here stated: “all that believe.” Other versions read, “everyone who believes,” NKJV “everyone who has faith,” BBE “everyone who puts his trust in this Man,” CJB “everyone who believes in Him,” CSB “every believer,” NAB “everyone who is believing,” YLT “everyone who trusts in Him,” LIVING “every one of you who believes,” WILLIAMS and “everyone who believes [who acknowledges Jesus as his Savior and devotes himself to Him].” AMPLIFIED

This text cannot be altered to better fit into a preconceived theology: like saying, “all tho believe and . . .” Believing is the revealed stipulation, and the text must be taken as it stands for its intended truth to be apprehended. This is not a partial proclamation, but is rather a thorough summation. Behind the statement is the supposal that “believing” necessarily includes all that believing compels a person to do, for believing cannot be separate from what it does. It is not possible to be disadvantaged by hearing these words stated in this precise manner.

The necessity of having a correct view of this statement is confirmed by the promise that is attached to it.

JUSTIFIED FROM ALL THINGS

“ . . . are justified from all things . . . ” Other versions read, “is justified from all things,” NKJV “is freed from all things,” NASB “is justified from everything,” NIV “is set free from all those sins,” NRSV “is freed from everything,” RSV “made free from all those things,” BBE “clears everyone,” CJB “is justified,” DARBY “receives God’s approval,” GWN “declared right with God,” NLT “is declared righteous,” YLT “freed from all guilt and declared righteous,” LIVING “have forgiveness of all your sins,” IE “absolved from all offences,” WEYMOUTH “justified and freed from everything,” ISV “given right standing with God and freed from every charge,” WILLIAMS and “is absolved (cleared and freed) from every charge.” AMPLIFIED

The expression “justified from all things” is not the whole of justification. It is that part of justification that deals with sin and guilt. However, as declared elsewhere in Scripture, justification also involves the imputation of the righteousness of God. I say this because of the way several versions have interpreted this verse: “is justified,” DARBY/GENEVA/NAB “receives God’s approval,” GWN “declared right with God,” NLT “is declared righteous.” YLT Although this may be viewed as a pointless technicality, care must be taken not to leave an erroneous view of the salvation of God, or the justification that is realized in Christ Jesus. In saying “justified from all things . . . ” Paul is referring to the sins he previous said were now forgiven (v 38). He is not here declaring justification in its entirety, but the part that deals with the remission of sins.

There are two things that must be accomplished before anyone can be acceptable to God – and they are both realized in justification.

- Sin must be remitted, the person cleansed, and guilt removed (1 Cor 6:11). This includes being freed from the dominion of sin (Rom 6:7,14; Gal 5:1) as well as from the guilt of it. In this, the transgressions committed are no longer associated with the individual (Heb 8:12). They are considered to have been imputed to Christ, who bore the curse for them (2 Cor 5:21; Gal 3:13), taking them away (John 1:29).

- There must also be an imputation of the righteousness of God to the one being justified (Rom 4:6,23-24). This is the righteousness of God Himself, and is announced in the Gospel (Rom 1:16-17). Those to whom this righteousness is imputed are said to have been “made righteous” (Rom 5:19), and to have been “made the righteousness of God” in Christ (2 Cor 5:21).

By virtue of these two transactions, the person is made acceptable to God (Eph 1:6). The removal of sin and the imputation of righteousness constitute one a “new creature in Christ Jesus” (2 Cor 5:17). Being “made righteous” involves being created anew (Eph 2:10), or receiving a “new man,” which is to be “put on” (Eph 4:24; Col 3:10).

The remission of sins is in order to the imputation of righteousness, for righteousness cannot simply be placed over unrighteousness. While the forgiveness of sin includes the cleansing of the conscience – something that man must have in order to live acceptably before God – it also clears the way for man to be “made righteous.” Without that righteousness, man still cannot be accepted by God.

At this point, a lot of erroneous theology is exposed. There is an approach to Divine acceptance that leads men to believe He accepts them just as they are, “warts and all,” as some are wont to say. However, this is, at the very best, a very clumsy statement. God declares that no one can walk with Him who is not in agreement with Him (Amos 3:2-3). This is why men must be “reconciled to God” (Col 1:20-21) – a state in which they obtain the righteousness of God. Such expressions as “ungodly Christians,” “carnal Christians,” people who “have received Christ, but have not accepted Him as Lord,” etc., reflect a state of gross ignorance. It has been revealed that a condition in which a person can maintain a form of godliness, yet reject its power, is a fallen state, and constitutes great peril (2 Tim 3:15). In such a state it is imagined that a person can conduct their lives just as the world, being fundamentally self centered, all the while claiming to be a follower of Jesus. Such claims are totally false. There is not so much as a grain of truth in them.

NOT JUSTIFIED BY THE LAW OF MOSES

“ . . . from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.” Other versions read, “from which you could not be freed,” NASB “could not be cleared,” CJB “could not be made just,” NAB “something the law of Moses could never do,” NLT “not able . . . to be declared righteous,” YLT “could not make you right,” IE “could not be absolved,” WEYMOUTH “kept you from being justified,” ISV and “could not be justified and freed . . . and given a right standing with God.”
AMPLIFIED

The law was never intended to free men from sin, or provide a means through which remission could be enjoyed. Thus, after the most solemn day in the Jewish calendar – the day of atonement – men were left with an acute consciousness of guilt, never with a sense of forgiveness! There is a marvelous statement of the case in Hebrews 10:1-4: “FOR SINCE the Law has merely a rude outline (foreshadowing) of the good things to come—instead of fully expressing those things— It can never by offering the same sacrifices continually year after year make perfect those who approach [its altars]. For if it were otherwise, would

When the conscience is not cleansed, sin remains dominant, wielding the dominion over the sinner. This is why it is written, “the strength of sin if the Law”

[these sacrifices] not have stopped being offered? Since the worshipers had once for all been cleansed, they would no longer have any guilt or consciousness of sin. But [as it is] these sacrifices annually bring a fresh remembrance of sins [to be atoned for]. Because the blood of bulls and goats is powerless to take sins away.” AMPLIFIED

When the conscience is not cleansed, sin remains superior, wielding the dominion over the sinner. This is why it is written, “the strength of sin is the Law” (1 Cor 15:56). It is the Law that bludgeons the conscience, for “what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law: that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God ” (Rom 3:19). Only when the conscience has been cleansed can men “serve the living God” (Heb 9:14). This is what the law of Moses could never do, nor, indeed, was it ever intended to do it.

Thus Paul announces what is found through Christ that cannot be obtained elsewhere – particularly in the law of Moses. That was the ultimate law – the fundamental routine or procedure. What that law “could not do” (Rom 8:3) , cannot be done by any law. Those who offer inward peace, cleansing, and victory over sin by means of a law, rule, procedure, or plan, have actually contradicted the salvation that is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory – and that is a most serious matter. Others who teach people to confess what does not exist, repeating what God has said about the righteous as though it applies to them, have done much the same thing. This battery of false prophets tell the people they can call “those things that are not as though they were” (Rom 4:17). What they fail to tell the people is that this is a description of God, and is nowhere portrayed as something men do. The perpetrators of this doctrine say that faith can speak creative words, and cause things to happen. But which of these pretenders have ever commanded a purged conscience, or a strong heart, or made a person stand, as God can do?

If men are ever to be justified, they will have to be “made righteous,” and that is something that God alone can do – and He does it through and in Jesus. There is no justification without Divine activity – men are “made righteous.”

A SOLEMN WARNING

“ 40 Beware therefore, lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets; 41 Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you.”

Paul does not take for granted that his listeners will believe. If it was possible, this would have been an excellent time to speak of the people believing, even though they did not, thus creating faith in them – if such a thing was possible. But it is not, and that is why he speaks as he does.

BEWARE

“Beware therefore . . .” Other versions read, “Take heed therefore,” NASB “take care,” NIV “Watch out, then,” CJB “See therefore,” DARBY “So be careful,” NLT “see, therefore,” YLT “Oh, be careful,” LIVING “o ye beware,” INTERLINEAR “Therefore, be watching,” ALT and “Make sure that.” CEV

The word translated “beware” is blepete , and is a most solemn expression, in the imperative present active mode. In English,

- An “imperative” word denotes something that is an obligatory act or duty. It is some that is not to be avoided or evaded. MERRIAM-WEBSTER
- The “present” mode speaks of what is occurring in the present time and is used of what occurs or is true at the time of speaking, and is habitual or characteristic. MERRIAM-WEBSTER
- The “active” mode denotes express action that is ongoing. MERRIAM-WEBSTER

Whatever “beware” means, it is something that is indispensable and must be done. It is required at the time the word is heard, and is to be consistent. It is also to be on ongoing characteristic.

The Meaning of “Beware”

The lexical meaning of this word is, “to see, discern . . . to have the power of understanding . . . to turn the thoughts or direct the mind to a thing.” THAYER Here, then, is a word that denotes alertness and discernment, vigilance and understanding. Paul tells his listeners to comprehend their condition, ensuring that the circumstance he will mention is not found in them.

Other places where this precise word is used are as follows. They serve to confirm the weight of the word.

- “And He charged them, saying, Take heed, beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod” (Mark 8:15).
- “And He said unto them in his doctrine, Beware of the scribes, which love to go in long clothing, and love salutations in the marketplaces” (Mark 12:38).

Of course, for those who are unaware of what the prophets have said, they are put to a decided disadvantage. They could very well fall into the kind of state that God has revealed will be judged by Him.

“ Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision” (Phil 3:2).

• “ Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ” (Col 2:8).

Paul is now going to tell the people they do not have the luxury of ignoring the word he has delivered. He does not give them the option of treating that word with disdain or disinterest. This is a portion of the record God has given of His Son, and He holds men strictly accountable for their response to it. Let it be clear, men do not have the privilege of rejecting this message with impunity.

LEST THAT COME UPON YOU

“ . . . lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets . . .” Other versions read, “does not happen to you,” NIV “do not come true for you,” BBE “Don’t let . . . apply to you,” NLT “fall on you,” PNT “should come true of you,” WEYMOUTH “may be on-coming,” INTERLINEAR and “should come about.” ESV

Paul admonishes the listeners to avoid God saying of them what is written in the prophets – i.e. see to it that their condition does not parallel the circumstance described by the prophets.

The words of the prophets, then, are not mere history, and woe to that person who treats them as though they were. The prophets spoke of circumstances that could occur again and again. They described how God responded to such circumstances. Now, Paul tells the people that wherever those circumstances are found again, God will still respond in that manner. He lays the solemn responsibility upon the people to see to it that they avoid the category of people who are judged by God!

Of course, for those who are unaware of what the prophets have said, they are put to a decided disadvantage. They could very well fall into the kind of state that God has revealed will be judged by Him. It is a most pitiful condition when those who profess to know God are ignorant of what He has said. Unbeknown to them, they are walking in slippery place – in the devil’s domain without any good understanding of how God reacts to stubbornness and unbelief. However, their ignorance will not protect them, for God cannot deny Himself, or act in a manner that is inconsistent with His nature. This is precisely why historic records of Divine dealings are written. The incidents actually happened, or took place, for our learning. As it is written, “Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come” (1 Cor 10:11).

BEHOLD YE DESPISERS

“ 41 Behold, ye despisers . . .” Other versions read, “you scoffers,” NASB “you doubters,” BBE “you mockers,” CJB “depisers [of the truth],” LIVING “you scoffers and scornors,” AMPLIFIED and “people who make fun of God.” CEV

Lexically, the word “despisers” means, “despiser,” THAYER “scoffer, despiser, scorner,” FRIBERG “one who customarily feels contempt for something or someone - 'one who feels contempt, scoffer,” LOUW-NIDA and “scornful men.” LEH

However, what do these English words mean? They are not common in our day.

• DESPISER. To look down on with disdain, or aversion. To regard as worthless or distasteful.

• SCOFFER. To show one’s contempt in derision or mockery; stresses insolence, disrespect, or incredulity.

- SCORNER. To dislike and disrespect or derision often mixed with indignation.

The Passage of Reference

The word to which Paul refers is an obscure one in the book of Habakkuk. “Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvelously: for I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, though it be told you” (Hab 1:5). Paul quotes from the Septuagint version (The Hebrew Scriptures translated into Greek), which, translated into the English reads, “Behold, ye despisers, and look, and wonder marvelously, and vanish: for I work a work in your days, which ye will in no wise believe, though a man declare it to you. ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF THE SAEPTUAGINT

Habakkuk was warning Israel of the coming Babylonian captivity. It was a time when “violence” would overcome the people, as God raised up “the Chaldeans, that bitter and hasty nation, which shall march through the breadth of the land, to possess the dwellingplaces that are not theirs” (Hab 1:6). He told the people, “They shall come all for violence: their faces shall sup up as the east wind, and they shall gather the captivity as the sand” (Hab 1:9). A wicked nation would come and overwhelm the nation that had been chosen and cultured by God! It all made no sense to the people, and they paid no heed to Habakkuk, even though he made the message “plain” (Hab 2:2).

The people mocked God, continuing on in their insolence and drunkenness (Hab 2:15-16). “Spoiling and violence” continued in the land (Hab 1:3). The law was slacked, and judgment was not being executed, for the wicked gathered about the righteous, and God said, “wrong judgment proceedeth” (Hab 1:4).

WONDER AND PERISH

“ . . . and wonder, and perish . . .” Other versions say, “wonder and come to your end,” BBE “marvel and die,” CJB “wonder and vanish away,” CSB “be amazed and disappear,” NAB and “marvel and perish and vanish away.” AMPLIFIED

They are hearing the word of God regarding His great salvation, and they are not to mock God by spurning it! By rejecting that word, they are, in fact, saying that God has not told the truth about man’s need for as Savior, and has wasted His time in providing the way of salvation.

Because “God is not mocked” (Gal 6:7), as Paul quoted Habakkuk, the people would “vanish” from their land, being uprooted from it even though they were duly warned.

Now Paul warns the people to see to it that a similar thing does not happen to them. They are hearing the word of God regarding His great salvation, and they are not to mock God by spurning it! By rejecting that word, they are, in fact, saying that God has not told the truth about man’s need for as Savior, and has wasted His time in providing the way of salvation.

I WORK A WORK IN YOUR DAYS

“ . . . for I work a work in your days . . .” Habakkuk prophesied of a day of judgment and Divine retribution, when the Chaldeans, under the leadership of Nebuchadnezzar would devastate the land.

YE WILL IN NO WISE BELIEVE

“ . . . a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you.”

The work was of such a magnitude that the person who brought the word of it was considered nothing more than a madman. The people did not believe what he had to say. However, Nebuchadnezzar did come, ravish the nation, carry away the best of the land, and induct the seventy-year Babylonian captivity. God was not mocked! His word could not be despised and ignored without paying the price.

Now, Paul has declared that God has done a work, raising Jesus from the dead after the people had forthrightly rejected Him, and delivered him to death. He has associated Jesus with “the sure mercies of David,” and affirmed that now “the forgiveness of sins” is preached through Him. The work that has been accomplished is of such magnitude that “all that believe are justified from all things, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses.”

What will the people do with this message? Will they treat it as the people of old treated the message of Habakkuk? Will they despise it, turning aside to their own way, and refusing to believe and embrace it? Paul warns them not to do this, for then judgment will come upon them which first came upon Israel of old. For Israel, it was a seventy-year captivity, but this message has eternal consequences. The person who does not believe this word concerning Jesus “shall be damned,” and the wrath of God is abiding upon them (Mk 16:16; John 3:36). How will these people respond? What will be their mind toward this word? Their response will dictate how Paul speaks.

CONCLUSION

This text confirms the seriousness of being exposed to the Gospel of Christ. The Word of the Gospel is so unique and powerful that an immediate response to it is expected from the people. In a day when religious entertainment and novelty are so prominent, such an expectation is not considered reasonable. Also, this is a time when great value has been placed upon human understanding and the right to opinion. However, when we stand before God, natural understanding has no value, and men have no right to entertain a private view of what the Lord has said.

There is something else to consider on this matter. If the Lord has placed such a high priority on the Gospel, and invested it with such power, how appropriate is it to introduce other emphases to the body of Christ? Will not those who spurn the central message in preference for a tangential one be considered “despisers” before God? For to prefer another message over the one He has delivered is, in fact, to reject the word of the Lord. That is really how God considers the matter, and that fact necessitates that we do so also.

Lesson #60

THE GENTILES AND THE JEWS RESPOND

“ 13:42 And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath. 43 Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God. 44 And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God. 45 But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming. 46 Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. 47 For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth. 48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed. 49 And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region. 50 But the Jews stirred up the devout and honorable women, and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts. 51 But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Conium. 52 And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.” (Acts 13:42-52)

INTRODUCTION

As we should expect, the powerful message of Paul has an immediate influence upon the listeners, for the Gospel is associated with Divine power. As it is written, “For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek” (Rom 1:16). Again, it is said of the early church, “And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all ” (Acts 4:33). Speaking of the response of the Thessalonians to the preaching of the Gospel Paul wrote, “For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; as ye

And again, “For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe” (1 Thess 2:13).

Paul said of the believers in Colossae, “For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel; which is come unto you, as it is in all the world; and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth” (Col 1:5-6).

In my judgment, the great power of the Gospel has been largely ignored in our day. This is evident by the remarkable lack of its proclamation – particularly in the church. Substitute messages are being offered to the churches that purport to show men how to live, resolve their difficulties, and recover from their failures.

THE GOSPEL IN THE EPISTLES

To confirm that an absence of the consistent proclamation of the Gospel within the church is the cause for spiritual debility and weakness, the following illustrates how much of the Gospel is actually found in what the Spirit says to the churches. In fact, the vast majority of what He says concerning the Gospel is, in fact, addressed to those who are in Christ Jesus. Those are the ones to whom the Gospel is expounded, with its details being opened up, together with the purpose that conceived it.

CHRIST DIED

Christ's death, necessitated because of "our sins," is the subject of Divine elaboration. All of the points shown below are inherent in that death, and are the subject of extensive Divine exposition

1. He bore, or carried, our sins in His body on the tree (1 Pet 2:24).
2. He was made to be sin for us (2 Cor 5:21).
3. In His death, He was cursed by God (Gal 3:13).
4. He gave His life a ransom for many (Matt 20:28).
5. He took away the sins of the world (John 1:29).
6. He gave His life for the sheep (John 10:11).
7. No man took His life from Him, He laid it down that He might take it up again (John 10:17-18).
8. He purchased the church with His blood (Acts 20:28).
9. We are justified freely through the redemption of Christ (Rom 3:24).
10. God has set Jesus forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood (Rom 3:25).
11. God commended His love to us in the death of Jesus (Rom 5:8)
12. We are justified through His blood (Rom 5:9).
13. We are reconciled to God through the death of His son (Rom 5:10).
14. We are buried by baptism into Christ's death (Rom 6:3-4).
15. God condemned sin in the flesh of His Son (Rom 8:3).
16. God did not spare His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all (Rom 8:32).
17. In His death, Christ is our Passover, sacrificed for us (1 Cor 5:7).
18. We are bought with the price paid in Christ's death (1 Cor 6:20).
19. If One died for all, then all are dead (2 Cor 5:14).
20. He died that we might no longer live unto ourselves, but unto Him who died for us (2 Cor 5:15).
21. He gave Himself to deliver us from this present evil world (Gal 1:4).
22. In His death, He redeemed us from the curse of the Law (Gal 3:13).
23. We have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of sins (Eph 1:7).
24. We are made nigh unto God by the blood of Christ (Eph 2:13).
25. In His flesh, Jesus abolished the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances (Eph 2:15).
26. He gave Himself to sanctify and cleanse the church (Eph 5:26).
27. Christ died in order to present His church to Himself without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing (Eph 5:27).
28. He made peace through the blood of His cross (Col 1:20).

29. In the cross, He plundered principalities and powers, making a public display of them (Col 2:15).
30. In His death, he delivered us from the wrath to come (1 Thess 1:10).
31. He died for us that whether we wake or sleep, we might live together with Him (1 Thess 5:10).
32. He gave Himself to redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a special people, zealous of good works (Tit 2:14).
33. He tasted death for every man (Heb 2:9).
34. Through His death, He destroyed the devil (Heb 2:14).
35. He obtained eternal redemption for us (Heb 9:12).
36. Through Christ's blood, our conscience is cleansed, or purged, from dead works (Heb 9:14).
37. Through His death we receive the promise of an eternal inheritance (Heb 9:15).
38. The New Covenant, or "will," has been sanctified by the blood of Christ (Heb 10:10).
39. In offering Himself in death, Jesus has perfected forever all who are sanctified (Heb 10:14).
40. Through His blood, we enter into the holiest place-the very presence of God-Heb 10:19).
41. The way to God has been dedicated through Christ's death (Heb 10:20).
42. Through His blood, we are washed from our sins and made kings and priests unto God (Rev 1:5-6).

CHRIST WAS BURIED

The burial of Christ was not simply a technicality. He was active during the time He was buried. Too, it provided time to assure that He really did die, tasting death for every man in the fullest sense of the word. Here is also a point at which unity with Christ is realized.

1. In His burial He was "numbered with the transgressors" (Num 53:12).
2. While His body was in the tomb, He preached to the spirits that were disobedient in the days of Noah (1 Pet 3:18-20; 4:6).
3. In our baptism, we are "buried with Christ" (Rom 6:4; Col 2:12).
4. The burial of Christ was "the sign of the prophet Jonah" to an adulterous generation (Matt 12:39-40).
5. His grave was made with the wicked, and the rich as well (Isa 53:9).
6. The woman with the precious alabaster box of ointment anointed Jesus for His burial (Matt 26:7-12).
7. The grave was not capable of holding the body of Jesus (Acts 2:29-26-32).

I have provided these details because, in that Antioch synagogue, Paul preached the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. That is a message that is invested with Divine power. It is not the Gospel in all of its marvelous details, but is rather like the three pillars upon which all valid doctrine is founded.

CHRIST ROSE AGAIN

The resurrection of Christ is the engine of our salvation – the source of its power. Over and over this is affirmed in Scripture.

1. In regeneration, we are united with Him "in His resurrection" (Rom 6:5).
2. The desire to know the power of His resurrection dominates those living by faith (Phil 3:10).
3. Jesus was declared to be "the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead"(Rom 1:4).
4. We are begotten again to a living hope "by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead" (1 Pet 1:3).
5. The resurrection of Christ is what validates our baptism (1 Pet 3:21).
6. The resurrection of Christ validated His death, and inducted Him into His intercessory ministry (Rom 8:34).
7. We are reconciled by His death, and saved by His (resurrection) life (Rom 5:10).
8. He is able to save us because, being raised from the dead, He "ever lives to make intercession" for us (Heb 7:25).
9. The blood of the cross obtained its effectiveness when, after His resurrection, Jesus entered into heaven with it (Heb 9:12).
10. The risen Christ, having entered into heaven, is now appearing in the presence of God "for us" (Heb 9:24).
11. The power employed to raise Jesus from the dead, is precisely the power that is now devoted to those in Christ (Eph 1:19-21).
12. Jesus was "raised for our justification" (Rom 4:25).
13. His resurrection is God's pledge that we will also be raised (1 Cor 6:14; 2 Cor 4:14).
14. Jesus being raised from the dead, we can now be joined to Christ and bring forth fruit unto God (Rom 7:4).
15. The same Spirit that raised Jesus from the dead, dwells in believers, giving life to their mortal bodies (Rom 8:11).
16. Confessing the Lord Jesus with our mouth, and believing in our heart that God raised Him from the dead, results in our salvation (Rom 10:9).
17. If Christ is not raised, our faith is vain (1 Cor 15:17).
18. Believers are raised up together with Christ and made to sit with Him in heavenly places (Eph 2:6).

19. In His resurrection, we were "delivered from the wrath to come" (1 Thess 1:10).

I have provided these details because, in that Antioch synagogue, Paul preached the death (13:27-28), burial (13:29,37), and resurrection of Christ (13:30-34,37). That is a message that is invested with Divine power. It is not the Gospel in all of its marvelous details, but is rather like the three pillars upon which all valid doctrine is founded. The Gospel was preached in order to provoke further inquiry – inquiry driven by belief.

THE GOSPEL CANNOT BE IGNORED

When men are confronted with the powerful Gospel of Christ, it cannot be ignored. The Gospel is of such a nature that it elicits a response from the hearers – it is that kind of message. In Antioch a wave of focused interest will be expressed by the Gentiles. They will implore Paul to speak more of these words the next Sabbath. Their appetites had been whetted, even though his message closed with a stern warning. It was Paul's preaching that attracted them, not his person. His strategy was not the means through which they were reached, but the sounding forth of the word through which the Spirit could work.

This Gospel will decipher the hearts of men, discovering whether they are like paths upon which self and worldly wisdom traverses, or honest and good. It will uncover the preferences of the people – whether they driven by the cares of the world and the lust of other things, or a quest to know the Lord. The Gospel probes the heart, finding whether it is stony or soft and pliable. However, if this Gospel is not preached, men can only speculate about these conditions, and they will never be able to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion.

READING OF RESULTS

In our text, many of the Jews and proselytes followed after Paul and Barnabas, not wanting to separate from them. They were drawn to these men because of what they said. Perceiving their eagerness, the men of God will deliver an appropriate word to them. It is of interest to note their persuasive words, which did not emphasize recruitment, but devotion.

Accenting the power of the Word of God when it is given due attention, the next Sabbath day a multitude was present to hear the Word of God. A forthright proclamation of the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, together with a solemn word of warning stirred a multitude of people to hear more. Paul had delivered a message that could not be ignored. It was not spiced with things that appealed to the flesh. It was not aimed at the resolution of personal and social difficulties. Yet interest apparently surpassed any previous experience in that Jewish synagogue. Further, it will be confirmed that the better part of that city was keenly aware of that synagogue.

It was at this time that the unbelieving Jews launched their opposition. They did this because what was being heard conflicted with, and threatened, their approach to religion. A different approach to the Scriptures and the Messiah had been presented.

IN OUR TIME

In our time a new kind of message is being preached that is not critical or pivotal enough – that is, it is not crucial to the obtaining and maintenance of spiritual life. It allows for rejection, and permits disagreement. It does not have an urgent sound to it, and accentuates the human condition above Divine assessment and holy remedy.

THE RESPONSE OF THE GENTILES

“ 13:42 And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath.”

We will now be exposed to the manner in which honest and good hearts respond to “the word of the Gospel” (Acts 15:7). This is a clear word that presents Jesus from God’s point of view, declaring Him to have risen from the dead, fulfilling the various prophecies concerning Him. That word was also attended by a most solemn warning to avoid falling into the category of those who do not believe what the Lord has done, even though it is clearly declared to them.

I also want to call your attention to the absence of modern approaches to the initial deliverance of the Gospel. I do not wish to make more of this than is appropriate, lest there be a temptation to develop a stereotyped approach to preaching the Gospel. Nevertheless, in all of the messages and proclamations of Christ presented thus far in the book of Acts (2:14-36,38-40; 3:12-26; 4:8-12,19-20; 5:29-32; 7:2-53; 8:5-6,12; 8:31-37; 9:20,22; 10:34-43,47-48; 13:16-41) , there has not been any mention of the following.

- That God loved the people.
- That Jesus died because of His love for the people.
- That Jesus died for the sins of the people.
- That Jesus cared for the people.
- That Jesus wanted the people to have the very best.
- That Jesus could resolve their personal, domestic, or social problems.
- That Jesus was able to heal their diseases.

It is certainly not wrong to declare the love of God, or the love and compassion of His Christ. What I am saying is that, so far as sinners are concerned, these are not the messages that are presented as drawing the people. The primary declarations had to do with establishing who Jesus was.

Now, I am careful to say that these are not unlawful views, or that Jesus does not minister grace to those under difficult circumstances. It is certainly not wrong to declare the love of God, or the love and compassion of His Christ. What I am saying is that, so far as sinners are concerned, these are not the messages that are presented as drawing the people. The primary declarations had to do with establishing who Jesus was. This was consistently presented from two perspectives:

- What the prophets had foretold of Him (Acts 2:25,29,34; 3:18,22,24,25; 10:43; 13:27,34).
- How God had confirmed He was the One approved by Him (Acts 2:22,24,32; 3:15,26; 4:10; 5:30; 10:40; 13:30,33,34,37).

The truth of the matter is that the people, although many of them may have been exposed to Jesus personally, or heard extensive reports concerning Him, did not know who Jesus really was. At the worst, some thought He was nothing more than a blasphemer (Matt 9:3; John 10:33). At the best, some took Him for a prophet, and even considered the possibility that He was the promised Messiah (Lk 22:67; John 4:29,42; 7:41). However, it was His critical association with God Himself that had largely eluded them. Therefore that was the emphasis of the early proclamations of Jesus.

Even in Philip’s exposition of the 53 rd chapter of Isaiah, the relationship of the Christ to God Himself was the thrust of the prophecy.

- “Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the LORD revealed?” (53:1).
- “. . . stricken, smitten of God , and afflicted. But He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed” (53:5).

- “ . . . the LORD hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all” (53:6).

- “ . . . for the transgression of My people was He stricken” (Isa 53:8).

- “Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise Him; He hath put Him to grief : when thou shalt make His soul an offering for sin, He shall see His seed , He shall prolong His days , and the pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in his hand” (Isa 53:10).

- “ He shall see of the travail of His soul, and shall be satisfied : by his knowledge shall My righteous servant justify many; for He shall bear their iniquities” (Isa 53:11).

- “Therefore will I divide Him a portion with the great, and He shall divide the spoil with the strong; because He hath poured out His soul unto death: and He was numbered with the transgressors; and He bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors ” (Isa 53:12).

I do not believe a proper concept of Jesus can be obtained or maintained without some discernment of His relationship to the Father Himself. When He was upon earth the Son of God made clear that His primary association was with God the Father.

I do not believe a proper concept of Jesus can be obtained or maintained without some discernment of His relationship to the Father Himself. When He was upon earth the Son of God made clear that His primary association was with God the Father.

- “The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed Me . . . ” (Luke 4:18).

- “ . . . My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish His work ” (John 4:34).

- “ . . . He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent Me , hath everlasting life . . . ” (John 5:24).

- “ . . . I seek not Mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent Me ” (John 5:30).

- “But I have greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given Me to finish , the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent Me ” (John 5:36).

- “For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent Me ” (John 6:38).

- “ . . . My doctrine is not mine, but His that sent Me ” (John 7:16).

- “ , , , Ye both know Me, and ye know whence I am: and I am not come of myself, but He that sent me is true , whom ye know not” (John 7:28).

- “And yet if I judge, my judgment is true: for I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent Me ” (John 8:16)

- “I am one that bear witness of Myself, and the Father that sent Me beareth witness of Me” (John 8:18).

- “For I have not spoken of Myself; but the Father which sent Me , He gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak” (John 12:49).

- “Therefore doth My Father love Me, because I lay down My life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of My Father” (John 10:17-18).

These could be multiplied many times, for Jesus spoke continually in this manner.

Ponder the doctrinal representations of His association with God. He is referred to as “the Son of God” (Matt 14:33), “Christ of God” (Lk 9:20), “chosen of God” (1 Pet 2:4), “Lamb of God” (John 1:36), “Bread of God” (John 6:33), “the Power of God” and “the Wisdom of God” (1 Cor 1:24), “the Image of God” (2 Cor 4:4), and “the Word of God” (Rev 19:13).

It is this very association that had been obscured to the people – and it is no different in our time. A purported gospel is being served up that makes Christ’s association to the people the primary one, rather than His association with God, whose purpose Jesus is fulfilling. Ponder how frequently salvation is associated with Jesus bringing us into a productive association with God.

- Jesus delivered us from this present evil world “according to the will of our God and Father” NKJV (Gal 1:4).
- Jesus Christ has “redeemed us to God” (Rev 5:9).
- We were “reconciled to God” (Rom 5:10).
- In salvation we are made “alive unto God” (Rom 6:11).
- Being made free from sin through Jesus, we have become “servants to God” (Rom 6:22).
- We have become “dead to the law through the body of Christ,” that we “should bring forth fruit unto God” (Rom 7:4).
- Christ’s offering of Himself was a “sacrifice to God for a sweetsmelling savor” (Eph 5:2). He also offered Himself “without spot to God” (Heb 9:14).
- Salvation results in us to turning “to God” (1 Thess 1:9).
- Jesus is a “merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God” (Heb 2:17).
- We have even given a “better hope. . . by the which we draw nigh unto God” (Heb 7:19).
- Jesus is living to make intercession for “those that come unto God by Him” (Heb 7:25).
- Being reconciled to God, we “offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 2:5).
- Jesus suffered for our sins in order that He might “bring us to God” (1 Pet 3:18).
- In Christ we have been made “kings and priests unto God” (Rev 1:6).

I have labored this point because of its centrality in both the purpose of God and the Gospel of Jesus Christ. So far as the accomplishments of the Son of God, God Himself was at the heart of it all. Remove Him from the scene, and there is nothing for man at all.

To present Jesus Christ as though His primary objective was to satisfy the self-perceived needs of men is wholly wrong. He came to do the will of God. That is what He Himself affirmed again and again.

If you were asked to identify the personal needs or earthly circumstances of the people reported to have responded in faith to Gospel, precisely what would you say? How would you describe the personal, domestic, social, or political circumstances of the people who sought for Divine direction on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:36). What of those five thousand man who came to believe in Solomon’s porch (Acts 4:4). And, how would you describe the earthly lives of those in the city of Samaria, who believed what Philip preached, and were baptized (Acts 8:12). How would you describe the life of the Ethiopian eunuch, and the things that were resolved when he believed and was baptized (Acts 8:36-38). What about those who gathered at the house of Cornelius who heard the insightful words of Peter (Acts 10:44,48)? What of those who believed in the city of Antioch? What dilemmas in their earthly lives were resolved (Acts 11:21). What personal, domestic, or social challenges were addressed when Barnabas and Saul spent a whole year with the church in Antioch (Acts 11:23)?

What was there in any recorded proclamation of the Gospel that centered in the personal lives of the people?

In this very text we have an example of how men were addressed when it came to the preaching of Jesus. The emphasis focused the attention of the people upon God, and what He had accomplished through Jesus Christ. There can be no conjecture about this matter.

I do not doubt that those who were reconciled to God realized many benefits in their earthly lives. However, such benefits were not held out as an incentive to come to Christ, believe on Him, or obey the Gospel! We have the written record of the spread of the Gospel – an inspired record. In this very text we have an example of how men were addressed when it came to the preaching of Jesus. The emphasis focused the attention of the people upon God, and what He had accomplished through Jesus Christ. There can be no conjecture about this matter. The record is abundantly clear – and it stands in stark contradiction of many of the approaches of our day.

Why Say These Things?

These things need to be said because we are reading of a people who sought for more to be said concerning Jesus Christ. We will be exposed to adversarial responses to that message as well. Those who sought more did NOT do so because a promise was given concerning their various problems and circumstances being resolved. There was absolutely no proclamation of Jesus being the resolution to earthly dilemmas – none at all. We do not have the faintest idea of the kind of circumstances those people faced, or what kind of difficulties they were experiencing in the circumstances of everyday life.

It may sound very helpful, and even compassionate, to present Jesus as the solution to life's problems. Those who make such presentations of Christ may be perceived as kind and compassionate – people who have captured the essence of religion. However, I am challenging that notion, and am doing so because it does not mesh with either the doctrine of historical examples of Scripture. This is not the kind of thing that draws men to Christ.

I understand that there are those who say we should become acquainted with people, becoming their friends and helpers, before we present the Gospel to them. Then, we are told, they will be more inclined to believe. And, precisely who is the author of that idea? What is its source? Where is there an example of such an approach in Scripture, or a single word that suggests this is proper?

See, when God Himself is at the heart of the proclamation, it changes everything. At the core of the matter, Jesus was pleasing God, doing His will and providing a just basis through which men could be justified. As for men, it is their alienation from God that is addressed in salvation. Once that is accomplished, every other legitimate activity is sanctified and set in motion.

WHEN THE JEWS WERE GONE OUT

“And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue . . .” Other versions read, “when the Jews went out,” NKJV “as Paul and Barnabas were going out,” NASB “as Paul and Barnabas were leaving,” NIV “as they went out,” RSV “as they left,” CJB “when they were come out,” TNT “as the people left,” LIVING and “As they [Paul and Barnabas] went out [of the synagogue].” AMPLIFIED

The general idea is that the gathering was over, but there were some who had been impressed with the message, while others simply went their way. I gather that “the Jews” refers to those who were not interested in any further word from Barnabas and Saul.

The various versions present two different pictures, reflecting the persuasion of the translators. While this is certainly not a critical matter, I will deal briefly with it. The two possible meanings are:

- That at the conclusion of Paul’s message, the Jews left the synagogue, the proceedings of the day being completed. The Gentiles remained, however, and requested that more be said to them on the next Sabbath.
- That as soon as Paul finished his message, Barnabas and himself got up and left the synagogue, the proceedings being ended. As they were leaving the Gentiles made their request known.

I am proceeding persuaded that the later explanation is correct. The verse that follows appears to me to justify this conclusion. However, the matter is not worthy of any contention.

The general idea is that the gathering was over, but there were some who had been impressed with the message, while others simply went their way. I gather that “the Jews” refers to those who were not interested in any further word from Barnabas and Saul.

THE GENTILES SOUGHT

“ . . . the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath.” Other versions read, “the Gentiles begged,” NKJV “the people kept begging,” NASB “the people invited,” NIV “the people urged,” NRSV “they made a request,” BBE “were calling upon them,” YLT “they asked,” LIVING and “the people earnestly begged.” WEYMOUTH

Again, some versions read, “the people,” insinuating that it was the Jews who made the request. The Greek word translated “Gentiles” is e;qnh , which, as used here, has the following lexical meaning: “foreign nations not worshiping the true God, pagans, Gentiles,” THAYER and “Gentiles, nations, foreigners.” FRIBERG This word is used more than fifty times from Matthew through Revelation, and is consistently translated “Gentiles” (examples: Matt 6:32; Acts 10:46; Rom 2:14; 1 Cor 10:20; Gal 2:8; Eph 2:11; 1 Thess 4:5). I see no reason why it is not proper to view this text as a request from the Gentiles. This is buttressed by the fact that the same word is used in verse forty-six, when Paul said they were going to turn “to the Gentiles” (e;qnh).

This was not a mere academic request, or an effort to simply acquire some historical information. Rather, it was no doubt a response to Paul’s reference to the preaching of “the forgiveness of sins” and being “justified from all things” (vs 38-39). They were not seeking a history lesson, but the truth concerning the One God had raised from the dead. Their interest had no doubt peaked when Paul warned them concerning not believing his word (v 40).

MANY FOLLOWED PAUL AND BARNABAS

“ 43 Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God.”

Paul had completed his exhortation, which was apparently the final formality of the gathering. What follows will provide a commentary on the immediate effectiveness of his words.

THE CONGREGATION WAS BROKEN UP

“Now when the congregation was broken up . . .” Other versions read, “when the meeting of the synagogue had broken up,” NASB “when the congregation had been dismissed,” NIV “when the meeting had ended,” BBE “after the synagogue had been dismissed,” CSB “now when the congregation was dissolved,” GENEVA “After the congregation had dispersed,” NAB “the synagogue having been dismissed,” YLT “after the service,” CEV “after the people had left the meeting,” GNB and “being loosed.” INTERLINEAR

The words “broken up” are translated from the Greek word luqei,shj, which has the following lexical meaning: “to loose,” THAYER “free, release,” FRIBERG “to dissolve an assembly,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “to bring to an end.” LEH

There is much to be learned from this incidental phrase – “when the congregation was broken up.”

- The people had come together for a purpose. This is depicted in the frequent references to believers coming together (Acts 20:7; 1 Cor 11:17-20,33; 14:23,26).
- Being together, they had been focused on a single matter – the Scriptures. First they were read, and then they were expounded (13:15).
- Such a gathering provided a fitting context in which the Gospel could be preached, and an appeal made to reason.
- When the purpose for gathering had been completed, the group was dispersed.

Paul had delivered the final exhortation, and the synagogue gathering had been brought to an end. The crowd broke up, each going their separate way.

In our time there is a withdrawing from this kind of assembly. The trend has been developing for some time, so that the Scriptures have gradually been thrust into the background, with an environment resembling entertainment being developed. With the advent of modern “praise and worship” a kind of artificial spirituality is encouraged that allows for the prominence of novices and the propagation of fundamentally flawed views of life in Christ Jesus. It is not the kind of environment that is depicted in our text.

MANY FOLLOWED PAUL AND BARNABAS

“ . . . many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas . . .” Other versions read, “Jews and devout proselytes,” NKJV “Jews and God-fearing proselytes,” NASB “Jews and devout converts to Judaism,” NIV “Jews and . . . God-fearing Gentiles,” BBE “Jews and . . . worshipping proselytes,” DARBY “Jews and strangers who served God,” DOUAY “Jews and devout converts,” NLT “Jews and virtuous proselytes,” PNT “Jews and virtuous converts,” TNT and “Jews and godly Gentiles.” LIVING

It is important to note the caliber of people who were attracted to Paul and Barnabas. The attraction of these people was owing to the message that was delivered to them. They wanted to hear more, which confirms that toning the message down or using the wisdom of men to adapt it to the people is a purely human innovation. I am not sure that God has ordained any message that is directed to those who have no interest in Deity – at least we have no examples of such presentations. Even in Athens, Paul launched his word upon the basis of their religion, appealing to their devotion, even though it was in the wrong direction.

With unwavering consistency, neither John the Baptist, Jesus, the apostles, nor others sent forth by the Holy Spirit ever preached a gospel that was structured around human need.

With unwavering consistency, neither John the Baptist, Jesus, the apostles, nor others sent forth by the Holy Spirit ever preached a gospel that was structured around human need. In those cases that appear to address men in such a manner, the assessment was Divine, not human: i.e. “weary and heavy laden” (Matt 11:28), “the poor . . . the broken hearted . . . the captives . . . the blind . . . the bruised” (Lk 4:18). These conditions were addressed from the standpoint of a God-consciousness, not merely the resolution of human difficulties and challenges. If we fail to perceive this, we will be pushed in the wrong direction.

The words of Paul and Barnabas delivered to those who followed them confirms that the above assessment is correct.

THEY PERSUADED THEM

“ . . . who, speaking to them, persuaded them . . .” Other versions read, “urging them,” NASB “urged them,” NIV “put before them how important it was,” BBE “exhorted them,” GENEVA “begged them,” CEV and “encouraged them.” GNB

The Greek word translated “persuaded” is επειγον , and has the following lexical meaning: “persuasion,” THAYER “convince, persuade,” FRIBERG “to convince someone to believe something and to act on the basis of what is recommended - 'to persuade, to convince,” LOUW-NIDA and “prevail upon, win over, persuade.” LIDDELL-SCOTT The English word “persuade,” which is wholly appropriate here, means: “to move by argument, entreaty, or exhortation to a belief, position, or course of action.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER While the work of urging, encouraging, and exhorting is inherent in the word, the emphasis is more on the results than on the means through which the results were realized.

This was no doubt done “with many other words,” as Peter did on the day of Pentecost, after the people had confirmed their solid and sustained interest in what he had said (Acts 2:40).

Persuasion is a good work in which men and women of faith do well to become more expert. It has to do with reaching the hearts of the people, and moving them to act upon what they have heard. It includes the idea of clarification, so that the thing the people were persuaded to do makes sense to them, and to refuse to do it is unreasonable. Persuasion is being moved by perception, not emotion.

CONTINUE IN THE GRACE OF GOD

Other versions read, “keep on in the grace of God,” BBE “keep holding fast to the love and kindness of God,” CJB “continue in God’s good will,” GWN “adhere to the grace of God,” MRD “remain faithful to the grace of God,” NAB “continue to rely on the grace of God,” NLT “remain in the grace of God,” YLT “accept the mercies God was offering,” LIVING “continue living in the gracious love of God,” IE “hold fast to the grace of God,” WEYMOUTH “continue to rely on the unmerited favor of God;: WILLIAMS “continue [to trust themselves to and to stand fast] in the grace (the unmerited favor and blessing) of God,” AMPLIFIED “put their trust in the grace of God,” PHILLIPS and “to be toward remaining.” INTERLINEAR The majority of English translations preserve the expression, “continue in the grace of God” (KJV, NKJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV, RSV, ASV, CSB, DARBY, DOUAY, ERV, GENEVA, NAS, NAU, NIB, PNT, RWEB, TNT, WEB, ISV, MONTGOMERY, ALT, EMTV, ESV, LITV).

Precisely what is it that Paul and Barnabas persuaded the people to do? So far as the record is concerned, there had not yet been an obedient response to the Gospel. Although Paul and Barnabas had been asked to come the next Sabbath and speak once again, these followers were unwilling to wait for another week. They received what had been spoken, and instantly pursued these two messengers, seeking for more. Their appetites had been whetted, but they had not been assuaged.

There are matters that are particularly profitable areas of thought. Because of their fallen nature, men are too often prone to think upon the morose, and to dwell upon possible dangers and calamities. While there are times when such matters must be considered, they are not where we are to pitch the tent of contemplation.

It is challenging to consider what was intended by the persuasion to “continue in the grace of God?” As used here, the word “continue” means “to stay at or with, to tarry still, still to abide . . . persevere,” THAYER and “stay, remain . . . persist.” FRIBERG To “continue in the grace of God” is to remain focused upon it. It involves the thoughts being occupied with it. There is a difference between pondering what God has done, and what He can do. This has to do with a consideration of what God has done – in this case, His gracious dealings with Israel.

Grace in God’s Dealings with Israel

Consider the various things Paul said God did in regards to Israel.

- God “chose” the “fathers” of Israel (13:17a).
- God “exalted the people” when they were in Egypt (13:17b).
- God brought the people out of Egypt with a “high arm” (13:17c).
- God endured the wayward manners of Israel (13:18).
- God destroyed the seven nations that were occupying Canaan (13:19a).
- God divided the land of Canaan to Israel “by lot” (13:19b).
- God “gave” the people judges (13:20).
- God “gave” them Saul as their king, to rid them of the Philistines (13:21).
- God “raised up” David as their king (13:22).
- God “raised up” unto Israel a Savior (13:23).

All of these were expressions of God’s grace. God once said to Moses “I... will be gracious to whom I will be gracious” (Ex 33:19). That is, the expression of His grace will be according to His own will and purpose, and not merely the condition of the people. He was not gracious to the “seven nations” that occupied Canaan, but He was to Israel! He was not gracious to Sodom and Gomorrah, but He was to Israel!

Paul had avoided the expression of national pride, and had described Israel as a people blessed by a gracious God. Now, Paul and Barnabas persuade the people to continue in that line of thinking.

Grace Seen in the Savior

Ponder the presentation of the grace of God to which the people had been subjected – particularly as it regards the Lord Jesus Christ.

- A SAVIOR RAISED UP. “Of this man's seed hath God according to His promise raised unto Israel a Savior, Jesus ” (Acts 13:23).
- THE WORD OF SALVATION SENT. “Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent ” (Acts 13:26).
- THE PROMISE FULFILLED. “And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again . . . ” (Acts 13:32-33).
- SURE MERCIES. “And as concerning that He raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, He said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David” (Acts 13:34).

• THE FORGIVENESS OF SINS. “Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins ” (Acts 13:38).

• JUSTIFICATION. “And by Him all that believe are justified from all things , from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses” (Acts 13:39).

Here, to “continue in the grace of God” had to do with maintaining a focus upon the gracious words they had heard – seeking to comprehend and embrace them, and realize their fulfillment in themselves. What a marvelous depiction of the grace of God: A Savior, salvation, a fulfilled promise, sure mercies, forgiveness, and thorough justification! Those are all facets of the jewel of redemption, which is the ultimate expression of the grace of God.

When Thinking Is Most Profitable

There are matters that are particularly profitable areas of thought. Because of their fallen nature, men are too often prone to think upon the morose, and to dwell upon possible dangers and calamities. While there are times when such matters must be considered, they are not where we are to pitch the tent of contemplation.

Paul refers to the proper domain of extended thought in his epistle to the Philippians. “Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things” (Phil 4:8).

Continuing in the Grace of God

As used in this text, continuing in the grace of God involves dwelling on the things that He is declared to have done. For those in that Antioch synagogue, this involved two things. First, extended thought about God’s merciful choice and dealing with the nation of Israel. Second, and as a spiritually natural consequence of such thought, the contemplation of the position of Jesus in the Divine economy was required.

It is obvious that all of this was characterized by truth, honesty, righteousness, virtue, praise, purity, loveliness, and good report. Further, it is as the hearts and minds of the people focused on these realities that they would truly profit from them.

In view of this, the seriousness of distraction can be seen. When the heart and mind are removed from what the Lord has done, particularly in Christ Jesus, all of the benefits derived from those “wonderful works” (Acts 2:11) are at once forfeited. This because the removal of the heart and mind from these considerations causes faith to wither, for it cannot be sustained by imaginations of self-centeredness.

The failure of professing Christians to “grow up into Christ in all things” (Eph 4:15) is directly traceable to a deficiency in this area. Such people have been pulled aside to lesser things – temporal things – and the results have been spiritually catastrophic and devastating.

THE NEXT SABBATH

“ 44 And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God.”

Although the text does not say so, it is quite probable that Paul and Barnabas were busy declaring and expounding the Gospel throughout the city. When Paul was in Athens, it is written that he “disputed,” or reasoned “in the market daily with them that met with him” (Acts 17:10). Later, in Ephesus, he was found “reasoning daily in the school of Tyrannus” (Acts 19:9). There is no reason to doubt that this was his manner in Antioch as well. That, coupled with the testimony of those who heard Paul easily accounts for the statement of this text.

ALMOST THE WHOLE CITY CAME TOGETHER

“And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together . . .” Other versions read, “nearly the whole city,” NASB “the whole city assembled,” MRD “almost all the people in the city,” IE “almost the whole population of the city,” WEYMOUTH “almost the entire city,” MONTGOMERY and “almost everyone in the town.” CEV

We do not know the size of this gathering, but it must have been significant. The population of Antioch during that period of time is conservatively reported to have been around 100,000. All of this takes place without the kind of promotional tactics that are used by the world. I do not know that any person could substantiate that there was a concerted effort on the part of Paul and Barnabas to rally the people of Antioch together. So far as their circumstances were concerned, they were dealing with a Jewish synagogue that was also attended by several Gentile proselytes. They no doubt concentrated on speaking to “the many Jews and religious proselytes” that were following them, eager to hear more of the Word. The affectation of the entire city was probably more owing to the testimony of those followers. You may recall that a similar thing happened in Samaria, after Jesus was spoken to the woman at the well. Upon hearing His gracious words, “The woman then left her waterpot, and went her way into the city, and saith to the men, Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ? Then they went out of the city, and came unto Him” (John 4:28-30). Jesus described the approaching multitudes as fields that were “white already unto harvest” (John 4:35). Those Samaritans also sought extended exposure to Christ’s word, asking Him to tarry with them (John 4:40).

TO HEAR THE WORD OF GOD

“ . . . to hear the word of God.” Other versions read, “to hear the word of the Lord,” NIV “to give hearing to the word of God,” BBE “to hear the message about the Lord,” CSB “to hear the Lord’s Message,” WEYMOUTH “to hear God’s message,” WILLIAMS and “to hear the Word of God [concerning the attainment through Christ of salvation in the kingdom of God].” AMPLIFIED

So far as the record is concerned, Paul and Barnabas had worked no miracles at this time. Therefore, the people did not come to see some extraordinary phenomenon as they did elsewhere (John 6:2). They did not bring their sick to the these men, as was done elsewhere (Matt 4:24; Acts 5:15). Their objective was to hear the distinctive message of these men – a message that centered in God, proclaiming His choices, His activities, His promises, and His provisions. It was a word specifically directed to the Jews, yet which solicited the attention of Gentiles because it announced a general benefit.

The message delivered by Paul would not be accepted in our time as a proper means of drawing the people together. We know this is the case, because it is not being preached. Today, perceived relevancy is the drawing power – i.e. showing how God can help the people in their everyday lives. The reportedly successful church is meeting the people where they are at, so to speak, supplying all manner of personal, domestic, and social helps. They target the youth, those enslaved to various forms of spiritual bondage, and special groups of people who appear to be in a more serious condition. It all sounds good – at least to the uninformed! But where is that kind of thing in this text – or any other text?

Deity was at the heart of their message, and on the periphery as well.

Like the disciples on the day of Pentecost, these men had declared “the wonderful works of GOD.” There was no apparent adaptation to the circumstances of society. There was no appeal to any personal, domestic, or social conditions of the people. Yet, their message drew “almost the whole city” together in one place on the Sabbath day!

Paul spoke to those who feared GOD (13:16).

- Paul referred to “the GOD of this people” (13:17a).
- He referred to the choice of GOD (13:17b).
- He mentioned the response of GOD to the people (13:18).
- He spoke of the working of GOD in the behalf of the people (13:19).
- He said GOD provided judges for the people (13:20).
- He referred to GOD setting up king Saul and king David (13:21-22).
- He mentioned GOD removing king Saul (13:22).
- He declared that GOD raised up Jesus as a Savior (13:23).
- He said that GOD had sent the word of salvation to the people, declaring that this fulfilled the announcement of John the Baptist (13:26).
- He affirmed that after the people had crucified Jesus, GOD raised Him from the dead (13:27-30).
- He preached that GOD had fulfilled the promise HE made to the fathers (13:32-35).
- He reminded the people that David served his own generation by the will of GOD , then died and “saw corruption.” But GOD raised Jesus from the dead without Him seeing any corruption (13:36).
- He declared that through Jesus, GOD ’s Messiah, the forgiveness of sins was preached, and in Him justification from all, things was realized (13:35-36).
- He warned the people not to fall into the category of those who did not believe the report of a word GOD had done (13:46-47).

- Paul and Barnabas persuaded those who followed them to “continue in the grace of GOD ” (13:43).

Like the disciples on the day of Pentecost, these men had declared “the wonderful works of GOD ” (Acts 2:11). There was no apparent adaptation to the circumstances of society. There was no appeal to any personal, domestic, or social conditions of the people. Yet , their message drew “almost the whole city” together in one place on the Sabbath day!

Note Where They Gathered

It is also important to note where the people gathered: a place that was identified with the worship of God, prayer, and the reading and exposition of the Word of God. I understand that it is important not to draw an improper conclusion about this circumstance. However, it is equally important to note that it is possible for such a place to be so identified. Further, this is where Paul and Barnabas returned to deliver the Word of God.

A lot of questions concerning any gathering of people are answered by simply noting what they do when they come together. Whether or not people agree with those activities really has no bearing on the subject. You may rest assured that the devout Jews and Gentile proselytes did not go to the synagogues to reach out. They rather came to appropriate. What outsiders thought of their activity was not what compelled them to come together.

Concerning Proselytes

The fact of proselytes in Gentile cities confirms the faithfulness of at least some of the Jews. The prophet Isaiah spoke of a time when men would inquire concerning the God of the Jews. “Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the LORD thy God , and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee” (Isa 55:5). And again, “And the Gentiles shall come to thy light , and kings to the brightness of thy rising” (Isa 60:3). Zechariah did the same. “Thus saith the LORD of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you ” (Zech 8:23).

While the prophets were speaking of a time of greater glory, the existence of Gentile proselytes was a kind of first fruits of the fulfillment of that promise. They had not only received the truth, but were custodians of it. The Gentiles saw this. It is possible for a people to have an obvious association with God – one that is perceived by those around them.

THE JEWS WERE FILLED WITH ENVY

“ 45 But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming.”

The impact of Paul and Barnabas was not only realized among devout and earnest inquirers. It also sent spiritual tremors into the domain of darkness. It awakened the hostility of those Jews who gloried in their heritage rather than in their God.

THE JEWS WERE FILLED WITH ENVY

It is not coincidental that many of God’s servants have been considered in this manner. Because their word and work is not devoted to perpetrating the organization of choice, they are seen as competing against it. However, any perception that what is declared is not in line with the institution is not owing to the ones proclaiming the message, but to the message itself.

“But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy...” Other versions read, “saw the crowds they were filled with jealousy,” NASB “saw such a great number of people, they were full of envy,” BBE “saw the people, they were full of indignation,” PNT “having seen the multitudes, were filled with zeal,” YLT and “saw the crowds, they were completely overcome by their jealousy.” WILLIAMS

The synagogue belonged to the Jews, but those who did not believe could not rejoice in the presence of a multitude there. The message that Paul had preached did not mesh with the notions of these Jews. They were not among the ones who followed Paul and Barnabas. They had only endured what they said, no doubt hoping that any interest in their words would soon die out. Those who cannot sustain an interest in the Word of God are wholly intolerant of those who can. They are also opposed to any message that urges such commitment.

As used in this text, the word “envy” means, “an envious and contentious rivalry, jealousy” THAYER and “factionalism, party strife.” GINGRICH These men had no genuine interest in the truth, but were within the vise-like grip of sectarianism. Their own interests were primary, and they saw Paul and Barnabas as competitors, not servants of God.

It is not coincidental that many of God’s servants have been considered in this manner. Because their word and work is not devoted to perpetrating the organization of choice, they are seen as competing against it. However, any perception that what is declared is not in line with the institution is not owing to the ones proclaiming the message, but to the message itself. The truth of the matter is that Paul and Barnabas were delivering a message that was superior. However, these envious Jews could not see this, for their religion had blinded their hearts and minds.

THEY SPAKE AGAINST

“ . . . and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul . . . ” Other versions read, “opposing the things,” NKJV and “spoke up against what Paul was saying.” CJB

The words “spake against” mean to contradict, declare oneself to be against what the person is saying, and refuse to have anything to do with him . THAYER It includes the idea of disputation and the presentation of opposing arguments. This is the kind of resistance Stephen encountered in the synagogue of the Libertines (Acts 6:9-14). This was a public confrontation, and Paul will deal with it forthrightly and appropriately.

THEY CONTRADICTED AND BLASPHEMED

“ . . . contradicting and blaspheming.” Other versions read, “talked abusively against,” NIV “contradicted . . . and reviled him,” RSV “said evil words against,” BBE “spoke against what Paul was saying and insulted him,” CJB “contradicting and speaking injuriously,” DARBY “contrarying them, and railing on them,” GENEVA “slandered Paul and argued against whatever he said,” NLT and “they contradicted what was said by Paul and talked abusively [reviling and slandering him].” AMPLIFIED

This is the manner in which unbelievers oppose the truth of God. They not only reject what is actually being said, but seek to malign the one who is speaking it. This is the manner in which the critics of Jesus spoke when they said, “He has a demon and is mad. Why do you listen to Him?” NKJV (John 10:20). And again, “Do we not say rightly that You are a Samaritan and have a demon?” (John 8:48). The Jews also spoke against Stephen in this way: “For we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs which Moses delivered us” (Acts 6:14). In his epistle to the Romans, Paul referred to some who maligned him: “For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner? And not rather, (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) Let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just” (Rom 3:7-8).

When men who walk in the flesh – particularly religious men – cannot receive the Word of God, they not only are willing to openly oppose what is being declared, but are quite willing to cast aspersions on the proclaimers of truth. They misrepresent them in order to justify their own rejection of the truth.

When men who walk in the flesh – particularly religious men – cannot receive the Word of God, they not only are willing to openly oppose what is being declared, but are quite willing to cast aspersions on the proclaimers of truth. They misrepresent them in order to justify their own rejection of the truth. Oh, that is not how they view the matter They take a stand for the institution, representing the one they oppose as out of harmony with that institution. But all of that is nothing more than noxious smoke. The truth of the matter is that they do not have a love for the truth, and are angered when the pillars of their sect are shaken by it. The malignancy of their hearts is made known by their opposition of the truth.

PAUL AND BARNABAS WAXED BOLD

“ 46a Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you . . .”

The one who has discerned and embraced the truth does not back down when confronting the pressure of those who do not believe it.

PAUL AND BARNABAS WAXED BOLD

“Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold . . .” Other versions read, “grew bold,” NKJV “spoke out boldly,” NASB “answered them boldly,” NIV “without fear said,” BBE “said openly,” MRD “replied courageously,” NET “spoke out fearlessly,” NJB “became bold,” WEB “were very bold,” IE “throwing off all reserve,” WEYMOUTH “spoke out plainly and boldly.” AMPLIFIED “did not mince their words,” PHILLIPS “bravely said,” CEV “spoke out even more boldly,” GNB and “We felt it our duty to speak the message of God to you first.” PHILLIPS

The words “waxed bold” are translated from a single Greek word: parrhsias,menoi , . As used here, the lexical meaning of this word is “to use freedom in speaking, be free-spoken; to speak freely . . . to grow confident, have boldness, show assurance, assume a bold bearing,” THAYER “acting with an attitude of openness that comes from freedom and lack of fear,” FRIBERG “to speak openly about something and with complete confidence - 'to speak boldly,’” LOUW-NIDA

Rather than the public opposition causing Paul and Barnabas to shrink back in fear, it caused them to become more bold. The confrontation actually fueled their zeal, so that they became more bold and forthright. In some circles, this is not culturally acceptable. However, it is wholly a different matter when men are trafficking in the truth of Almighty God. This is why Paul asked the Ephesians brethren to pray for him: “And for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel, For which I am an ambassador in bonds: that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak ” (Eph 6:19-20).

A bold and confident proclamation of the truth is honoring to God and intimidating to the powers of darkness. When faith and perception are dominant in a person’s life, the proclamation of the truth becomes necessity – a necessity that is driven from within. It is the kind of circumstance that Jeremiah described in his unforgettable testimony: “Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name. But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay. For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side. Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him, and we shall take our revenge on him. But the LORD is with me as a mighty terrible one: therefore my persecutors shall stumble, and they shall not prevail: they shall be greatly ashamed; for they shall not prosper: their everlasting confusion shall never be forgotten” (Jer 20:9-11). This is the kind of spirit that compelled Paul and Barnabas to boldly reply to those who contended with them.

IT WAS NECESSARY

“ . . . and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you . . .” Other versions read, “We have to speak the word of God to you first,” NIV “it behoved us first to speak the word of God,” DARBY “To you first, ought the word of God to be spoken,” MRD “We had to proclaim the word of God to you first,” NJB “It was meet that the word of God should first have been spoken to you,” PNT “We were bound to proclaim God's Message to you first.” WEYMOUTH and “It was necessary that God’s message [concerning salvation through Christ] should be spoken to you first.” AMPLIFIED

As used here, the word “necessary” means, “what one cannot do without, indispensable,” THAYER “pressing,” FRIBERG “urgent,” UBS “Under compulsion.” LIDDELL-SCOTT This necessity was driven by the fact that all of the promises had been given to the Jews (Rom 9:4). The Messiah was sent specifically to them, and generally to the world (John 1:11). He was a Son born to them, and a Child given to them (Isa 9:6). He was the Seed of Abraham (Gal 3:16), the Star of Jacob (Num 24:17), and the Son of David (Matt 1:1). This is why the Gospel is “the power of God unto salvation to the Jew first ” (Rom 1:16). For Paul and Barnabas, this was a compulsion driven by discernment, and came from their hearts. They could conduct themselves in no other way.

JUDGING THEMSELVES UNWORTHY OF EVERLASTING LIFE

“ 46b . . . but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles.”

The obligation to deliver the Gospel “to the Jew first” by no means indicates that it is exclusive to them. Nor, indeed, does it justify continuing to proclaim it to them if they are unwilling to receive it. Furthermore, there is sensitivity in heaven to the rejection of the record God has given of His Son (1 John 5:10-11). Men may be indifferent to such a reaction, and even be willing to tolerate it – but that is not a proper response. Paul and Barnabas will speak forthrightly to this situation.

SEEING YE PUT IT FROM YOU

“ . . . but seeing ye put it from you . . .” Other versions read, “since you reject it,” NKJV “since you repudiate it,” NASB “Since you thrust it from you,” RSV “because you will have nothing to do with it,” BBE “since you are rejecting it,” CJB “because you repel it from you,” MRD “since you have rejected it,” NLT “you won’t listen,” IE “since you spurn it,” WEYMOUTH and “since you push it away from you,” MONTGOMERY

This is a strong word, and describes a spiritually violent action. The powerful Word of God is proclaimed, and its begins at once to penetrate the heart, distinguishing between the soul and the spirit, and exposing thoughts and intents of the heart (Heb 4:12). Because the hearts of those who are addressed are hard and calloused, they thrust the Good News from them, refusing to give heed to it, or entertain it or willingly welcome it into their thought processes.

This is no innocent reaction, but is evidence of hostility against God, and the forthright rejection of His Christ. When preached in truth, the Gospel is forceful, pushing its way into the thought processes of men. It forces men to make a decision concerning whether or not they receive the message.

For these hearers, this is the second time they have been exposed to a declaration of the Gospel of Christ. Marshaling all of their inner resources, they “put,” or “thrust” the Gospel from themselves, treating as though it was poison. It was obnoxious to them, and they saw no lasting value in it. It concerned a Person they would not receive, and a message they would not believe. The word that Paul had spoken a week earlier had come upon them, even though he warned them not to allow such a thing to happen: “Beware therefore, lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets; Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you” (Acts 13:40-41).

It requires determination and aggressiveness to reject the Gospel, failing to believe and embrace it. This is not something that can be done casually, and Paul and Barnabas knew it.

It requires determination and aggressiveness to reject the Gospel, failing to believe and embrace it. This is not something that can be done casually, and Paul and Barnabas knew it. There are spiritual forces at work whenever “the truth of the Gospel” is declared (Col 1:5). It is a fundamentally good message, and is accompanied by all of the power required to believe, embrace, and respond to it. Those who spurn this Gospel have extended themselves to do so. It is for this reason that Paul and Barnabas will speak as they do. They will speak with both certitude and passion.

JUDGE YOURSELVES UNWORTHY

“ . . . and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life . . .” Other versions read, “do not consider yourselves worthy of eternal life,” NIV “have no desire for eternal life,” BBE “are judging yourselves unworthy of eternal life,” CJB “decide, against yourselves, that ye are not worthy of life eternal,” MRD “do not think yourselves worthy of eternal life,” NJB “shown yourselves unworthy of eternal life,” LIVING “are deciding that you are unworthy of having eternal life,” IE “condemn yourselves as unworthy of eternal life,” NAB “show yourselves unworthy to receive eternal life,” WILLIAMS and “you pass this judgment on yourselves that you are unworthy of eternal life and out of your own mouth you will be judged.” AMPLIFIED

Some of the above versions are wholly misleading: i.e. “do not consider yourselves worthy,” NIV and “do not think yourselves worthy.” NJB While the translators may not have intended to convey this idea, they have left the reader with the impression that the hearers simply did not want eternal life. While there may be a grain of truth in that view, it is a very small one. The accent here is not on what the people thought about themselves. This is actually referring to them disqualifying themselves from obtaining eternal life. In other words, they pronounced their own condemnation. They were unfit to be saved, although they sorely needed salvation.

Thus Jesus, in His parable of the unfaithful steward, delineated what was involved in that man’s wrong assessment of his master. Upon being confronted by his master, and acknowledging that buried his master’s money in the ground, he said, “For I feared thee, because thou art an austere man: thou takest up that thou layedst not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow” (Luke 19:21). Clarifying the nature of stewardship, Jesus said the master replied, “And he saith unto him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. Thou knewest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow: Wherefore then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with usury?” (Luke 19:23). Jesus was pointing out that the man had lied. Had he really considered the master to be an austere man, he would have given extra diligence to see to it that his master was pleased with the manner in which he handled his goods. Now, the master would judge him by his own assessment – even though it was an improper one.

The point here is that the reaction of the unbelieving Jews to the Gospel determined their judgment from God. They were a chosen people – chosen by God. A Savior had been promised to them, and now they are hearing a message that announces He has come. The forgiveness of sins and justification from all things has been put before them, and it can be theirs for the taking. They have been given the privilege of being the first to hear the good news. Their choice has actually solidified their own judgment. They had treated Divine provisions as though they were unworthy of their embrace. Therefore, they will be disqualified from receiving them.

Salvation Is A Serious Matter

The salvation of God is, indeed, a serious matter. When the message of the Gospel announces it, the hearers are forthrightly told, “he that believeth not shall be damned” (Mk 16:16). Even those within the body of Christ are solemnly told, “And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Thess 1:7-8). We are also reminded that those who do not believe the Gospel have been blinded by the devil: “In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them” (2 Cor 4:4). Satan can maintain no hold on those whose hearts are enthralled with the Gospel, which moves them to embrace it in faith. But for those who do not believe, his grip upon them becomes more strong, and they are plunged even deeper into the caldron of unbelief.

It is important to note that this pronouncement was made after two exposures to the Gospel of Christ. Let no one doubt for a moment that God Almighty expects the people to respond in faith to the record He has given of His Son. Should they choose not to do so, they have, in a sense, judged themselves unworthy of obtaining eternal life. I do not know how anything can be more serious than that!

WE TURN TO THE GENTILES

“ . . . lo, we turn to the Gentiles.” Other versions read, “we are turning to the Gentiles,” NASB “we now turn to the Gentiles,” NIV “it will now be offered to the Gentiles,” BBE “we are now going to turn to people of other nations,” GWN “we will offer it to the Gentiles,” NLT and “we turn to the heathen.” WILLIAMS

When the Divine commission was first delivered to Saul of Tarsus, he was told: “But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear My name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel” (Acts 9:15). On recounting this event, Paul said, “And he said unto me, Depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles ” (Acts 22:21). The Gentiles were not the only ones to whom, he was commissioned to go. He was also to testify before “kings and the children of Israel.” Knowing that the Gospel must first be preached the Jews, to whom the promises had been made, Paul and Barnabas had done precisely that. However, now that their message had been rejected by those who were “a people,” now they would turn to those who were “not a people” (1 Pet 2:10). This would also be in fulfillment of a word delivered to the Israelites by Moses, just prior to his death. “They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God; they have provoked Me to anger with their vanities: and I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation ” (Deut 32:21). We see something of the character of God in this, and of His reaction rejecting His Word.

A LIGHT FOR THE GENTILES

“ 47 For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.”

To justify and buttress their statement about turning to the Gentiles, Paul and Barnabas appeal to the Scriptures. This was a consistent practice of John the Baptist, the Lord Jesus Christ, and those sent forth by Him. We do well to follow their example. It is never right to support a statement relating to the work of the Lord by appealing to the wisdom of men. Myriad is the number of those appealing to psychologically-defined differences between men and women, statistical studies, the codified experiences of men, the purported attention spans of people, etc. to support their statements. There is a generation of preachers who appeal to the wisdom of men to buttress their message, even though Scripture clearly states, “For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain. Therefore let no man glory in men. For all things are yours” (1 Cor 3:19-21).

THE LORD HAS COMMANDED US

The servants of the Lord make clear that they are operating under the authority of the Lord Himself. They have no regard for the contradicting requirements of men. Nor, indeed, will they spend time with Jewish leaders concerning the validity of their message.

“For so hath the Lord commanded us . . .” Other versions read, “this the Lord has commanded us,” NASB “this is what the Lord has commanded us,” NIV “so the Lord has given us orders,” BBE “For that is what Adonai has ordered us to do,” CJB “For thus has the Lord enjoined us,” DARBY “The Lord gave us the following order,” GWN “for such is the Lord’s command to us,” WEYMOUTH “here are the orders that the Lord has given us,” WILLIAMS “For so the Lord has charged us,” AMPLIFIED and “Indeed the Lord has commanded us to do so with the words.” PHILLIPS

The servants of the Lord make clear that they are operating under the authority of the Lord Himself. They have no regard for the contradicting requirements of men. Nor, indeed, will they spend time with Jewish leaders concerning the validity of their message. They have not been sent to form friendships, blend in with society, or in any way give dignity to the opposing opinions of men. They will preach to those who will hear and embrace their message.

SET TO BE A LIGHT

“ . . . saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.”

Although Paul was called into the apostleship by the glorified Christ Himself (Acts 9:17; 26:16), and although he and Barnabas had been set apart to the work they were doing by the Holy Spirit (Acts 13:2), they appeal to the Scriptures – particularly to the word of Isaiah the prophet. Throwing contextual limitations down to the ground, they affirm that what Isaiah wrote constituted a commandment delivered to them by the Lord Himself.

The statement quoted is taken from Isaiah 49:6. In this passage God is depicted as speaking to the Messiah, long before “the Word became flesh and dwelt among us” (John 1:4). The text reads, “And he said, It is a light thing that thou shouldest be My Servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth” (Isa 49:6). The passage from which this is taken is addressed to the nation of Israel: “And said unto me, Thou art My Servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified” (Isa 49:3).

Although it may appear on the surface that this prophecy pertains only to the nation of Israel, further perusal will confirm that it has a larger radius.

- God’s Servant is called from the womb (Isa 49:1a; Matt 1:20-21).
- His name is mentioned while He was yet in the womb (1b; Lk 1:31).
- His mouth was made like a sharp sword (49:2a; Rev 1:16).

- He was hidden in the shadow of the Lord's hand (49:2b; Lk 23:46).
- He was made like a polished shaft, or select arrow, and hidden in the quiver of the Lord (49:2c; Isa 50:4; John 7:15-17).
- The Servant was the One in whom God would be glorified (49:3; Matt 17:5; John 17:1,4).
- On the surface, it appeared as though the Servant had expended all of His strength, and had labored in vain (49:4a; Isa 53:1-3,8).
- Yet His judgment was with the Lord, and His work was with His God (49:4b; John 17:4; Phil 2:9-10).

He was formed in the womb to bring Jacob again to God (49:5a; Isa 56:8; Matt 15:24; Acts 10:36).

- Even if Israel was not totally gathered, yet the Servant would be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and God would be His strength (49:5b; Matt 23:37-39).
- It was “too small a thing” that the Servant should only raise up the tribes of Jacob. God would also give Him as a light to the Gentiles (49:6a; Isa 42:6; John 10:16).
- He would be God's salvation “unto the end of the earth” (49:6b; Isa 11:10; Lk 24:47-47).
- The Servant would be linked to “the Redeemer of Israel,” and kings and princes would worship Him (49:7; 1 Tim 6:15; Rev 11:15).
- The “acceptable time” and the “day of salvation” was linked to this Servant (49:8a; 2 Cor 6:2).
- God would preserve this Servant, and give Him for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth and cause to “inherit the desolate heritages” (49:8b; Isa 61:4; Lk 4:18-21).
- Through this servant the ultimate blessing would come to the people, and “all flesh” would come to know that God their “Savior,” “Redeemer,” and “the Mighty One of Jacob” (49:9-26; Isa 60:16; Rev 15:3-4).

There can be no doubt that the forty-ninth chapter of Isaiah refers to the time of the Savior, Jesus Christ – a time when the salvation of God would be carried out in the earth. The words of that chapter are a classic example of “the Spirit of Christ” being in the prophets and testifying of “the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow” (1 Pet 1:11).

PAUL AND BARNABAS JOIN IN THE WORK

Because Paul and Barnabas have become “workers together with God” (2 Cor 6:2), and “laborers together with God” (1 Cor 3:9), they have identified with the work He is doing in Jesus Christ. They take the word concerning the spread of salvation to the Gentiles – addressed to the Savior – as applicable to them as well. So far as they are concerned, the word written in Isaiah 49:6 was God speaking to them. That was, of course, the result of the working of the Holy Spirit, who employs the Word of God, working through it to reach the hearts of men, exposing and convicting.

This is an excellent example of holy reasoning – the reasoning of faith. It is founded upon the word of God, is accompanied by an understanding of what the Lord is doing, and is blended with one's personal placement in the body. As is obvious, this is something that cannot be systematized.

THEY GLORIFIED THE WORD OF THE LORD

“ 48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.”

We have here a sharp contrast between those who believe and those who do not. The Jews were expressly told that the word of salvation had been delivered to them first. The forgiveness of sins and being justified from all things was declared to be for them. Yet, they thrust that marvelous word from them, and spoke against what was declared, and maligned the messengers as well. Now, we are exposed to another group of people who had heard precisely the same words. Oh, how differently they respond.

They had been exposed to the same reading of Moses and the prophets. They have even heard the same men speak the same words that had incensed most of the Jews that were there. But their reaction was gloriously different!

WHEN THE GENTILES HEARD THIS

“And when the Gentiles heard this . . .”

And, what was the “this” that “the Gentiles heard”? It was this word: “I, we turn to the Gentiles . . . I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles.” That is the word that captured their attention!

When the Jews heard, “Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins: And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses” (Acts 13:38-39), they thrust it from themselves, contradicting and blaspheming. That is the effect their religion had upon them! That is the harvest of the teachings and traditions they had embraced. They had in their hands Moses and the Prophets who had precisely prophesied concerning the coming Messiah. They had heard an inspired exposition of the death and resurrection of Christ, and how they could be forgiven of the atrocities they had committed against the Lord’s Christ. However, they were so calloused in their hearts and conscience, that it all meant nothing to them.

However, here have another group of people. They were Gen tiles, but they had been going to the same synagogue as the Jews. They had been exposed to the same reading of Moses and the prophets. They have even heard the same men speak the same words that had incensed most of the Jews that were there. But their reaction was gloriously different!

It should not surprise us that the same kind of reactions continue to this very day. There are groups of people who hear the same word, and yet their reaction to it is significantly different. The reason for this circumstance is this: some are believers, and some are unbelievers. Some are hardhearted, while others are tenderhearted. Some are eager to hear, and others are opposed to hearing. No matter how a person may choose to evaluate a group that is comprised of these two categories of people, it is not possible that they are “one body,” or are all “accepted,” or are all “approved of God.” Religious institutionalism makes a valiant effort to consider these two categories as one, but they are not able to do it. Some are reconciled to God, and some are not. Some are following Jesus, and others are not. Some are seeking first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and some are not. That is simply the way things are, and Paul and Barnabas know it.

THEY WERE GLAD

“ . . . they were glad . . .” Other versions read, “they began rejoicing,” NASB “were very happy,” CJB “they rejoiced,” CSB “were pleased,” GWN “were delighted,” NAB “were very glad,” NLT and “listened with delight.” WEYMOUTH

The word translated “glad” is one of abundance, spiritual energy, and propriety. The lexical meaning of the original Greek word is, “to rejoice, be glad . . . in the properly, and strict sense,” THAYER – that is, as opposed to mere levity or light-heartedness; “be delighted.” FRIBERG It also includes the idea of happy acceptance , or receiving with joy what has been said. LIDDELL-SCOTT

In other words, this is a rational gladness that proceeds from the acceptance of a message that is perceived as bringing great advantages. When these proselytes heard that Paul and Barnabas were turning to the Gentiles, to deliver and expound this Gospel, they did not assume they meant only other Gentiles. They included themselves in that blessed number, concluding that the message was also intended for them, even though it was specially addressed to the Jews.

As illustrated in this text, there are times when assembling in the name of the Lord has special and unforeseen advantages for those who are present.

THEY GLORIFIED THE WORD OF THE LORD

“ . . . and glorified the word of the Lord . . .” Other versions read, “honored the word of the Lord,” NIV “praised the word of the Lord,” NRSV “gave glory to the word of God,” BBE “honored the message about the Lord,” CJB “praised the Lord’s word,” GWN “glorified God,” MRD “gave thanks to the Lord for His message,” NJB “thanked the Lord for His message,” NLT “rejoiced in Paul’s message,” LIVING “extolled the Lord’s message,” WEYMOUTH “giving the glory to God’s message,” WILLIAMS “glorified (praised and gave thanks for) the Word of God,” AMPLIFIED and “praised what they had heard about the Lord.” CEV

Those with even a casual acquaintance with religious gatherings will at once recognize the relative rarity of such a response. There are speakers who can raise the climate of a gathering to feverish pitch by their oratory. Some can move the audience to tears with their testimony, or some touching account. It is not unusual for contemporary musical concerts to produce an eruption of shouting and glee. But this is not the kind of thing recorded in this text.

These people did not glorify the messengers, but the message that they had delivered. That message was a rehearsal of something God Himself had spoken through the prophets: “I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth” (Acts 13:47). Furthermore, they were able to correlate that word with the message they had heard seven days earlier concerning the forgiveness of sins and being justified from all things.

The message was not that they could have health or wealth. It was not that their domestic problems would be resolved. They were not told that soon they would no longer be subject to Roman rule. It concerned the remission of their sins and being put in an acceptable and righteous standing with God by being justified “from all things.” It related to illumination, or light, being shed on the matter of salvation and the Person of God. That is the kind of word they honored, glorified, and praised.

By glorifying the word of the Lord, they took the message as being about God and from God. They recognized it as a gracious word that reached into the inner recesses of the heart. Now, there is something important to note here. Technically, the word to which Paul and Barnabas referred came from God through the Holy Spirit, to Isaiah (Isa 1:1). Isaiah then wrote what was revealed to him in a book (Isa 30:8). It is generally agreed that “The quotation is from the LXX. (Cod. Alex.),” or Septuagint version, which is the Greek translation of the Hebrew text. PULPIT COMMENTARY That word had no doubt been read in the synagogue in the Greek language, to accommodate the Gentiles who gathered there. Now it was spoken by Paul and Barnabas. Yet, those who heard and believed the message did not credit it to Isaiah. They gave no glory to the translators who had put it into their language. They did not even give the glory to Paul and Barnabas, who had been sent out to them by the Holy Spirit of God. They rather glorified the message as “the word of the Lord.”

Although the message had come from God through the Spirit, through Isaiah, through his writings, and finally through Paul and Barnabas, it had lost none of its power. It was properly credited to the Lord. This, of course, casts a dark shadow upon the reasoning of those who do not equate Scripture with the Word of God, and those who claim something has been lost as soon as the Word translated.

In Our Time

In our time, it is exceedingly rare to hear of anyone glorifying the word of the Lord. Of course, much of that is owing to the lack of hearing the Word of God. However, it is not unusual to hear men giving glory to the writings of men, concerning which they are hearing very much. There is a glaring absence of foundational references to the Word of the living God.

AS MANY AS WERE ORDAINED TO ETERNAL LIFE BELIEVED

“ . . . and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.”

Here is a text that is highly disruptive of great bodies of theology. Some are so offended by it that they have extended themselves to corrupt the text so it will fit into their stilted theology. However, the text is present, and is, for those who deem it important, consistent in all Greek manuscripts. It is out of order to read this text through the spectacles of sectarian dogma, or mere human reasoning. The aim of the student of God's Word is not to fit what is written into a personal persuasion. Rather, it is to derive one's persuasion from the Scriptures themselves. Therefore, I will approach this text with a mind to know what it means, and not with a determination to see if it contradicts some cherished human opinion. If it is true that the Holy Spirit “searches all things, yea, the deep things of God” (1 Cor 2:10), we can trust that He will know how to precisely state them to those to whom truth is being revealed.

Therefore, what is said to have been “ordained” took place in time past, and is already accomplished. This does not refer to something that is being done. Second, this is something that has an effect upon the individuals described. It does not refer to something they have done, but to something that has been done in reference to them.

ORDAINED TO ETERNAL LIFE

“ . . . and as many as were ordained to eternal life . . .” Other versions read, “ordained to eternal life,” KJV/RSV/ASV/DARBY/DOUAY/ERV/GENEVA/PNT/RWB/TNT/WEB/MONTGOMERY “appointed to eternal life,” NKJV/NASB/NIV/ALT/ESV/LITV/CJB/MRD/NAU “appointed for eternal life,” NIV/NIB “appointed to life age-during,” YLT “destined for eternal life,” NRSV/NAB/PHILLIPS/NJB “marked out by God for eternal life,” BBE “prepared for everlasting life,” GWN “chosen for eternal life,” NLT/CEV/GNB/NLT “wanted eternal life,” LIVING “appointed to have eternal like,” IE “destined to eternal life,” WILLIAMS “pre-destined to the Life of the Ages,” WEYMOUTH “were having been set into life eternal.” INTERLINEAR “destined (appointed and ordained) to eternal life,” AMPLIFIED and “before-ordained to everlasting life.” WYCLIFFE

I have taken the time to cite forty different versions of Scripture to confirm the remarkable consistency in the translation of the Greek text. Of the texts that I have, only the LIVING BIBLE places the emphasis on the people who believed – reading “wanted eternal life.” All of the other texts present the cause for believing to a pre-existent determination: “ordained – appointed – destined – marked out – prepared – chosen – pre-destined – having been set – before ordained.” While this is certainly not sufficient to establish the meaning of the text, it does confirm that translators of the text had no difficulty with the words of the text itself. It is only when the words clashed with a theological position that they were distorted, as seen in the Living Bible – which, like other paraphrased versions, is really more of a commentary.

The Meaning of the Word Used

Although it is a secondary consideration, the meaning of the Greek word employed here also confirms the nature of the expression. The Greek word translated “ordained” is tetagme, noi , and is consistent in all of the standard Greek texts. Linguistically, this word is a “verb participle perfect passive nominative masculine plural.” Of particular interest is the descriptions “perfect passive.” In both Greek and English these terms mean”

- “Perfect” – the action is completed.
- “Passive” – the subject is being acted upon.

Therefore, what is said to have been “ordained” took place in time past, and is already accomplished. This does not refer to something that is being done. Second, this is something that has an effect upon the individuals described. It does not refer to something they have done, but to something that has been done in reference to them.

As to the lexical meaning of the word translated “ordained,” it is as follows: “to put in place, to station . . . to arrange, to assign to a place, to appoint . . . to assign (appoint) a thing to one,” THAYER “assign to a place or task, appoint, decide,” FRIBERG “appoint, designate, set aside; command, order, direct,” UBS “to appoint, to designate, to assign, to give a task to . . . those who had been designated for eternal life became believers’ Ac 13.48,” LOUW-NIDA and “to be appointed to.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

This word is used eight times in Scripture. It will be profitable to see how the Holy Spirit uses it. I have highlighted the words translated from the Greek word used in our text. I have also underlined the ones upon whom the action was performed.

- “Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them” (Matt 28:16). Here, the eleven disciples met Jesus on a mountain that He had previously determined.

- “For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers, and I say unto one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it” (Luke 7:8). Here, authority had been assigned to this centurion by his superior.

- “And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed” (Acts 13:48).

- “When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question” (Acts 15:2). Here, the holy brethren made a determination that Paul and Silas should go to Jerusalem.

- “And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do” (Acts 22:10). Here, Jesus told Saul of Tarsus that a determination had already been made concerning what he was to do. When he went into the city, he would be told what had been determined.

- “And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening” (Acts 28:23). Here, the assignment of a certain day was made during which people could come and be taught by Paul.

- “Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God” (Rom 13:1). Here, civil government is depicted as having been put in place by God.

- “I beseech you, brethren, (ye know the house of Stephanas, that it is the firstfruits of Achaia, and that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints)” (1 Cor 16:15).

Here the tense is active – that is, this was something the household of Stephan were doing owing to a decision that they themselves had made in the past – to always minister to the saints.

With the exception of the last text, the word is always used to an influence wrought upon someone from outside of themselves. The one exception is made clear by the context in which it occurs. There, the intention is to show that their ministrations to the saints was not owing to an immediate response, but to a decision made apart from the circumstance itself, and at a prior time.

What Some Dissenters Have Said

This passage has proved very troublesome to some. Those who cannot accept it as it stands, have suggested the following meanings.

"The original word rendered 'ordained' is not once used in the Scriptures to express eternal predestination of any kind. The sense is that those, and those only, now ordained, now believed. Not that God rejected the rest; it was his will that they also should be saved, but they thrust salvation from them. Nor were those who then believed 'forced' to believe. Grace was offered to them and they did not thrust it away." – John Wesley

"It is God's ordination that those of humble, teachable, honest hearts, seeking the truth and life, shall come to life when it is offered, and such accepted the gospel on this occasion." B.W. Johnson

"Those of them who had, either through previous religious instruction, or through the influence of Paul's preaching, heartily determined for eternal life, were in a better frame of mind to appreciate the evidence in favor of that Christ through whom alone it could be obtained, than the others who were so undetermined upon the subject that they appeared to judge themselves unworthy of such a destiny. Such was the difference between the two classes in the audience, and Luke's object is to declare the result of the difference in the fact that the one class 'believed,'/ and the other thrust the word of God from them. To say that the difference had been wrought in them exclusively by divine agency would be to rob them of responsibility. Or to say that the favorably-disposed party had become so exclusively by their own self-determining energy would be to deny the influence of divine truth. Neither of these positions can be true; but, while it was an act of their own minds to determine for eternal life, it was God who had induced them to do so; at the same time, the other party determined against eternal life, in despite of the same divine influence exerted upon them." – J.W. McGarvey

“ . . . as many as had become disposed toward eternal life (possibly Acts 13.48) or all those who were appointed to eternal life (probably Acts 13.48). LOUW-NIDA LEXICON

First, let us establish that the cause for believing is traced back to Divine influence. While men do themselves believe, they do not do so independently of influences outside of themselves.

Believing Is Traced to Divine Influence

First, let us establish that the cause for believing is traced back to Divine influence. While men do themselves believe, they do not do so independently of influences outside of themselves.

- MEN ARE GRANTED TO BELIEVE. “For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ , not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake” (Phil 1:29). Other versions read, “granted on behalf of Christ.” NKJV Not only were we granted to be able to believe, the grant was given upon the basis of Christ, not our personal inclination – although that was present.

- THROUGH CHRIST WE BELIEVE IN GOD. “ Who by Him do believe in God , that raised Him up from the dead, and gave Him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God” (1 Pet 1:21). Other versions read, “through Him.” NKJV Thus, even our faith and trust in God is traceable to the work of Jesus.

• THE PRESENCE OF THE HAND OF THE LORD ACCOUNTS FOR THOSE WHO BELIEVE. “ And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord” (Acts 11:21).

• THE DOOR OF FAITH IS OPENED BY GOD. “And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles ” (Acts 14:27). Here the emphasis is on the Lord opening the means by which faith could come.

• HEARTS ARE OPENED BY GOD. “And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshiped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul” (Acts 16:14). The response of Lydia to the Gospel is said to have been owing to as act of God.

It ought to be apparent that believing the Gospel and having faith in God requires something more than natural aptitude. First, the message of the Gospel speaks of things that have already been done, and can in no way be substantiated by sensual evidence. Man has no natural aptitude that is able to convince him of the truth of the Gospel – and believing does have to do with being convinced, persuaded, and being fully assured.

Men Are Drawn to Jesus

Jesus publically taught that men are drawn to Him by influences outside of themselves.

• “No man can come to Me, except the Father which hath sent Me draw him : and I will raise him up at the last day. It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God . Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto Me . . . Therefore said I unto you, that no man can come unto Me, except it were given unto him of My Father ” (John 6:44-45,65).

The point here is that the very desire to come to Jesus, or to believe in Him, has a Divine dimension to it. This does not take away from the fact that we ourselves do come to Jesus. Rather, it provides us an explanation of why we do.

The point of the word “reprove,” or “convict,” is that the Spirit will straighten out the thinking of men on these three critical matters – enabling submissive souls to see them correctly, which, in turn, moves them to believe the Gospel and come to Christ.

Men Are Begotten and Born Again by the Will of God

Scriptures apprise us of the fact that we were begotten and born again by God’s will, not our own. While it is important not to take this further than the Spirit takes it, it is equally important that we do not quench the Spirit by rejecting or modifying what He has said.

• “But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name: Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God ” (John 1:12-13).

• “ Of His own will begat He us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures” (James 1:18).

Even in nature, no person makes an effort to trace the cause of conception to the one who is conceived. What would motivate anyone to attempt such a thing when it comes to the superior birth?

Preparatory Works Are Traced to Divine Influences

There are certain persuasions that precede any decision to embrace the Gospel. These are necessary because of the condition that was induced by sin. Apart from influences outside of themselves, the things of God are foolish to the unregenerate, and they cannot know, or be persuaded of them (Rom 8:7; 1 Cor 2:14).

Jesus taught that the work of the Spirit precedes the decisions of men, moving them to think properly. “Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you. And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment” (John 16:7-8). Other versions read, “He will convict,” NKJV “prove the world wrong,” NRSV “convince,” RSV “make the world conscious of,” BBE “bring demonstration to the world,” DARBY and “convict and convince the world and bring demonstration to it.” AMPLIFIED

The point of the word “reprove,” or “convict,” is that the Spirit will straighten out the thinking of men on these three critical matters – enabling submissive souls to see them correctly, which, in turn, moves them to believe the Gospel and come to Christ.

- SIN. “Of sin, because they believe not on me” (John 16:9). The Spirit gives a person to see that, in view of the Person and work of Jesus Christ, the paramount sin is not believing on Him – not trusting in, adhering to, and living for Him. The failure to believe on Jesus invalidates everything that a person thinks, says, and does, rendering them unacceptable to God.

- RIGHTEOUSNESS. “Of righteousness, because I go to My Father, and ye see Me no more” (John 16:10). The idea here is that Jesus Christ is Himself the embodiment and definition of righteousness. The world’s view of righteousness, or uprightness of thought and conduct, is totally wrong. In fact, it prohibits a person from seeking a righteousness that is from God, which Jesus demands that men do (John 6:33). By convincing the world of the real nature of righteousness, the Holy Spirit moves men into a quest for Divine approval, which is found in Jesus alone.

- JUDGMENT. “Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged” (John 16:11). Here “the prince of the power of the air,” and “the god of this world” (Eph 2:2; 2 Cor 4:4), is seen as being overthrown, and all of his manners and influences seen to be void and worthy of condemnation. This being true, the entire manner of this world must be abandoned, for the one who maintains it has been judged and consigned to perdition. It is axiomatic that if this is true, we must be delivered from this present evil world, otherwise we will be condemned with it. Those who do not quench the Spirit will come to a realization of this, and will flee to Jesus “for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us” (Heb 6:18).

Divine Choice Is Involved in the Salvation of Men

We cannot leave this subject without confirming that Divine choice is involved in the salvation of men. Some may prefer to debate concerning the nature, extent, means, and time of the choice – but none can successfully contest its fact. This is a matter of revelation.

- NOT EVERYONE WHO IS CALLED IS CHOSEN. “For many are called, but few are chosen ” (Matt 22:14).

- SPECIAL ACTIVITY IN VIEW OF THE CHOSEN ONES. “And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved: but for the elect's sake, whom He hath chosen , he hath shortened the days” (Mark 13:20).

- DIVINE CHOICE VERSUS HUMAN CHOICE. “Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you , and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you ” (John 15:16).

- CHOSEN OUT OF THE WORLD. “If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world , therefore the world hateth you” (John 15:19).

- CHOSEN IN THE LORD. “Salute Rufus chosen in the Lord , and his mother and mine” (Rom 16:13).

- CHOSEN IN CHRIST. “According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love” (Eph 1:4).

- CHOSEN IN ORDER TO SALVATION. “But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth” (2 Thess 2:13).

- CHOSEN TO BE A SOLDIER. “No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please Him who hath chosen him to be a soldier” (2 Tim 2:4).

- THOSE RICH IN FAITH ARE CHOSEN. “Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?” (James 2:5).

- A CHOSEN GENERATION. “But ye are a chosen generation , a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light” (1 Pet 2:9).

There is also the matter of those who have been elected by God. Here I merely want to establish the fact of election without perusing all of its implications. At this point, I am merely showing the soundness of saying someone was ordained to eternal life.

THOSE WITH CHRIST ARE CHOSEN. “These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen , and faithful” (Rev 17:14).

The Elect Ones

There is also the matter of those who have been elected by God. Here I merely want to establish the fact of election without perusing all of its implications. At this point, I am merely showing the soundness of saying someone was ordained to eternal life. Some versions use the word “chosen” or “choice.”

- THE ELECT CANNOT ULTIMATELY BE DECEIVED. “For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect ” (Matt 24:24).

- THE ELECT WILL BE FINALLY GATHERED TOGETHER. “And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together His elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other” (Matt 24:31).

- GOD WILL AVENGE HIS ELECT. “And shall not God avenge His own elect , which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them?” (Luke 18:7).

- NO ONE CAN EFFECTIVELY CHARGE GOD’S ELECT. “Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect ? It is God that justifieth” (Rom 8:33).

- THERE IS A PURPOSE IN ELECTION. “For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth” (Rom 9:11).

• THERE IS A REMNANT ACCORDING TO ELECTION. “Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace ” (Rom 11:5).

• THE ELECTION OBTAINS, AND THE REST ARE BLINDED. “What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it , and the rest were blinded ” (Rom 11:7).

• GOD’S ELECTION MAKES THE JEWS BELOVED FOR THE SAKE OF THEIR FATHERS. “As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes: but as touching the election , they are beloved for the fathers' sakes” (Rom 11:28).

• THOSE IN CHRIST ARE “THE ELECT OF GOD.” “Put on therefore, as the elect of God , holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering” (Col 3:12).

• THE ELECTION OF SOME CAN BE KNOWN. “Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God” (1 Thess 1:4).

• ELECTION IS ACCORDING TO GOD’S FOREKNOWLEDGE. “ Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied” (1 Pet 1:2).

• ONE’S OWN ELECTION CAN BE MADE SURE. “Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure : for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall” (2 Pet 1:10).

There Is Such a Thing as Predestination

Predestination is mentioned in Scripture, and it is our solemn obligation to have a working knowledge of what is meant by that term. All major versions use either the word “predestinated” “predestined,” or “destined.”

• GOD HAS PREDESTINATED THE CONFORMITY OF THOSE HE FOREKNEW TO THE IMAGE OF HIS SON. “For whom he did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren” (Rom 8:29).

• GOD CALLS THE ONES HE HAS PREDESTINATED. “Moreover whom He did predestinate, them He also called : and whom he called, them He also justified: and whom He justified, them He also glorified” (Rom 8:30).

• GOD HAS PREDESTINATED SOME TO BE ADOPTED. “Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will” (Eph 1:5).

• OUR INHERITANCE IS TRACED TO GOD’S PREDESTINATION. “In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will” (Eph 1:11).

I have taken the time to confirm the manner in which individuals are brought to salvation. While their wills are involved, they are the lesser part of the matter. They do make choices, but they are not the primary ones. If Jesus truly is “the Author and Finisher of our faith” (Heb 12:2), then there is a sense in which His activity, in regards to our believing, precedes ours.

It is to be admitted that everything about these matters has not be revealed. That circumstance must compel us to be content with what has been revealed, and to cease and desist from any efforts to view the Word of God through the interpretations of men. Let the text stand as it is stated: “As many as were ordained to eternal life believed.” If you have the full assurance of faith, rejoice at that revelation. If you do not yet possess that precious gem, then give diligence to make your calling and election sure, as you are enjoined to do (2 Pet 1:10). When you have completed that mission, then come back and revisit this text. Then, and only then, will it make sense to you, and prove to be a sweet elixir of comfort.

BELIEVED

“ . . . believed.” Other versions read, “became believers,” NRSV “had faith,” BBE “came to trust,” CJB “did believe,” YLT “believed (adhered to, trusted in, and relied on Jesus as the Christ and their Savior),” AMPLIFIED and “put their faith in the Lord.” CEV

Although this has already been established, the meaning of “believed” needs to be firmly fixed in our minds, for it is a most marvelous accomplishment. Believing is the verb form of faith. Faith is what is possessed, and believing is what it does, or how it is expressed. The verb form (“believe,” “believed,” “believing”) has the following lexical meaning. “to think to be true; to be persuaded of; to credit, place confidence in . . . have confidence” . . . as used in the New Covenant Scripture it means, “the conviction and trust to which a man is impelled by a certain inner and higher prerogative and law of his soul”; thus it stands a . absolutely to trust in Jesus or in God as able to aid either in obtaining or in doing something,” THAYER In the words of the Scriptures, believing is “being fully persuaded that, what He had promised, He was able also to perform” (Rom 4:21).

This kind of believing is done with the heart, not the mind. Therefore it is written, “For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness” (Rom 10:10). This persuasion compels the individual to do whatever is required of him – no matter what it is. For this reason, the Scriptures do not always detail the obedience of those who “believed” (i.e. Acts 9:42; 11:21; 13:12,48; 14:1; 17:12,34). Some who are unlearned seize upon this language and teach that believing is an end of itself, with nothing more being required. What they do not understand is that having faith, or believing, is to the heart what the spirit is to the body. It is the Divinely ordained actuating principle. This is why “whatsoever is not of faith is sin” (Rom 14:23).

It is to be understood that when these souls believed, they followed through with any requirements delivered to them – such as surely as those on the day of Pentecost, the people in the city of Samaria, the Ethiopian eunuch, the household of Cornelius, and the household of Lydia.

What Did They Believe

These people had heard that Jesus was raised from the dead by God, that salvation was being brought through Him, and through Him the forgiveness of sins was preached, and that whoever believed in Him would be justified from all things. That is what they believed, and that is what they acted upon! They were not offered health or wealth, or ease in life. What they heard, they believed.

THE WORD OF THE LORD WAS PUBLISHED

“ 49 And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region.”

What is the impact of believing the Gospel upon its spread throughout that region? We will see that it is significant.

The “publishing” of the Word presumes the involvement of men, laboring together with God. It is to be understood that this evoked various forms of godly creativity, zeal, commitment, and knowledge.

THE WORD OF THE LORD

“And the word of the Lord . . .”

This phrase can be viewed in two ways – and both are true. It was the word FROM the Lord, and was the word CONCERNING the Lord.

- It was from the Lord, being “sent” to the people, as was proclaimed (Acts 10:36; 13:26). A particular message was sent to a particular people – in this case, the Jews. This being the case, it was beyond all reason to reject or repudiate that word, being a sin of the greatest magnitude. The only obligation placed upon God to send this word was His own nature. He was moved from within Himself to send it. To spurn this gracious act reveals a hardness of heart that is beyond any form of sound reasoning.

- It was a word concerning the Lord – what He had done. In summary, it was the word concerning Jesus Christ – “preaching peace by Jesus Christ” (Acts 10:36). This was nothing less than the “record” of His Son – a message of forgiveness and justification (Acts 13:38-39) and salvation (Acts 4:12).

PUBLISHED THROUGHOUT THE REGION

“ . . . was published throughout all the region.” Other versions read, “spread,” NKJV “went,” BBE “carried,” DARBY “talked of,” MRD “continued to spread,” NAB “was being spread,” NAS “proclaimed,” RWB “went far and wide,” MONTGOMERY and “scattered and spread.”
AMPLIFIED

The word “published” comes from a word that means, “to bear or carry through any place, to carry different ways,” THAYER and “tell everywhere.” FRIBERG A certain spiritual climate was created when a body of people believed. The region was like a citadel of Satan that had been invaded by Gospel proclaimers and pervaded by light from heaven. In the wake of the spreading word there was a dispersion of darkness and a certain freedom – at least for a season. The entire region was submitted to the proclamation of the word of God. It appears from what takes place later that this caught the children of the wicked one off guard.

The “publishing” of the Word presumes the involvement of men, laboring together with God. It is to be understood that this evoked various forms of godly creativity, zeal, commitment, and knowledge.

It ought to be noted that we are living in a time when something other than “the word of the Lord” is being spread about the Christian community. This is a time when philosophy and world wisdom have been elevated. However, the work of the Lord cannot be accomplished without the word of the Lord.

THE AGGRESSION OF THE JEWS

“ 50 But the Jews stirred up the devout and honorable women, and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.”

The hardness of the hearts of “the Jews” is confirmed by their opposition of the rapid and effective spread of “the word of the Lord.” When the wicked one gains the dominance over someone, there is no extent to which they will not go to subdue holy influences. Cain will kill Abel, Ishmael will mock Isaac, and Esau will seek to kill Jacob. The ultimate example of this kind of opposition is the betrayal of Jesus, and the delivering of Him to be crucified.

THE JEWS STIRRED THEM UP

“But the Jews stirred up the devout and honorable women, and the chief men of the city . . .”

Other versions read, “the unbelieving Jews,” CJB and “the Jewish leaders.” LIVING

These were obviously not the “many” Jews who “followed Paul and Barnabas,” and were “persuaded . . . to continue in the grace of God.” There is a sense in which those noble Jewish souls, by continuing the grace of God, distanced themselves from the rest of the Jewish people. They were being drawn into a spiritual environment where Jewish identity is absolved (Gal 3:28).

Those, however, who chose to rest in the fleshly Jewish identity had no recourse but to vigorously oppose the men who had interrupted their stilted and conventional religion.

Stirred Up

Other versions read, “aroused,” NASB “incited,” NIV “urged,” ASV “working up the feelings,” BBE “excited,” DARBY “worked on,” NJB “moved,” PNT and “influenced.” WEYMOUTH

At once, these opponents of the Gospel set out to create a troubled environment. No doubt they sought to convince the people that the community was at a great disadvantage by the presence and teaching of Paul and Barnabas. In the political environment in which they found themselves, agitation and social unrest were dangerous. Quite unlike some of the governments of our day, social unrest would not be tolerated. Thus they convinced influential people that this is what was happening.

The words “stirred up” are translated from a single Greek word meaning, “to incite, stir up,” THAYER “to arouse in a negative sense,” FRIBERG “to stir up hostility against,” LOUW-NIDA and “to urge.” LIDDELL-SCOTT The picture is that of appealing to the emotions by associating Paul and Barnabas with threatening and despised things.

The devout and Honorable Women

Other versions read, “devout and prominent women,” “devout women of prominence,” NASB “God-fearing women of high standing,” NIV “women of honorable estate,” ASV “God-fearing women of high position,” BBE “women God-fearers of high social standing,” CJB “women of the upper classes who were worshipers,” DARBY “the opulent women who with them feared God,” MRD “the influential religious women,” NLT “some of the important religious women,” IE “gentlewomen women of rank who worshiped with them,” ISV and “religious and respectable women.” PHILLIPS

These were women of social prominence, who were also proselytes. They may very well have been among the “religious proselytes” who had followed Paul and Barnabas (13:43). These women, apparently not yet stable in the faith, were stirred up the unbelieving Jews. In Athens the Gospel attracted some “chief women” (Acts 17:4). In Berea, some who believed were “honorable women which were Greeks” (Acts 17:12).

And Chief Men of the City

Other versions read, “leading men of the city,” NASB “first people of the city,” DARBY “the officials of the city,” GWN “prominent men of the city,” NET and “outstanding men of the town.” AMPLIFIED

These men were some kind of officials in the city of Antioch – key people in the social and political fabric of the city. The unbelieving Jews targeted them also, apparently having some kind of significant acquaintance with them.

Viewed As Troublemakers

The charges leveled against Paul and Barnabas were no doubt similar to those that were often brought against believers. The charge of causing trouble was often raised against Gospel proclaimers.

The charges leveled against Paul and Barnabas were no doubt similar to those that were often brought against believers. The charge of causing trouble was often raised against Gospel proclaimers.

The Jews raised this charge against Jesus: “He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place” (Luke 23:5).

- False witnesses spoke against Stephen saying, “For we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs which Moses delivered us” (Acts 6:14).

- At Philippi the charge was raised against Paul and Silas, “These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city” (Acts 16:20).

- In Thessalonica the Jews cried out against Paul and Silas, “These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also” (Acts 17:6).

- In Jerusalem the Jews said of Paul, “This is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place: and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place” (Acts 21:28).

This tactic is employed to this very day – one which misrepresents faithful ministers as causing disruption, particularly within the religious community. Such teachers are represented as unconventional, and departing from traditional Christianity.

A PERSECUTION WAS RAISED AND PAUL AND BARNABAS WERE EXPELLED

“ . . . and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.”

Just as in Jerusalem, the agitation of the Jews caused a persecution – but this time it was leveled at only two people – “against Paul and Barnabas.” The details of this persecution are not given, but the results of it are.

The agitated people “expelled them out of their coasts.” Other versions read, “expelled them from their region,” NKJV “drive them out of their district,” NASB “cast them out of their borders,” ASV “driving them out of those parts,” BBE “threw them out of their territory,” GWN “ran them out of town,” NLT and “put them out from their borders.” YLT

The expulsion of Paul and Barnabas was not merely from the immediate environs, but from the region itself. What they were preaching was so offensive to these Jews that they did not want any of it within the area. Their action was similar to the request the Gadarene’s made of Jesus: “they besought Him that He would depart out of their coasts” (Matt 8:34).

I suppose you could build a case for the rejection of Paul and Barnabas – at least from a fleshly point of view. The leading Jews were against them. The prominent women of the city were stirred up against them. Also, the chief men of the city were moved against them. Under such conditions, those who seek popularity among the people would probably have to reevaluate their message. Perhaps, they might reason, they had been too negative, or too insistent, or too intolerant of the opinions of others. Flesh can always find a reason.

However, it was opponents of Paul and Barnabas who were wrong. These two were men who had been called into the work by the Holy Spirit of God. Paul himself had been separated to preach the Gospel. The word they had delivered had been sent by the Lord Himself. When the people rejected that word, they excluded themselves from eternal life. I hardly see how any circumstance could be more serious than that!

THEY SHOOK THE DUST OF THE FEET AGAINST THEM

“ 51 But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium.” Other versions read, “But they shook off the dust of their feet in protest against them,” NASB “shaking off the dust of that place from their feet,” BBE “In protest against these people, Paul and Barnabas shook the dust off their feet,” GWN “they shook the dust from their feet as a sign of rejection,” NLT and “they shook off the dust of their feet against the town.” LIVING

In a politically and religiously correct society, this kind of action is not acceptable. It is viewed as uncultured, burning your bridges behind you, and being impatient with the people. But after all of the objections to such an action have been registered, the voice of the Head of the church is heard above all such objections. When Jesus sent out the twelve He said, “And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear you, when ye depart thence, shake off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them . Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city” (Mark 6:11). When He later sent out the seventy He told them, “But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say, Even the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you : notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you. But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom, than for that city” (Luke 10:11-12). Is there really any question about how the Lord of glory feels about the rejection of the word He sends out and the messengers who carry it?

Some time later, when the Jews in Corinth opposed and blasphemed against Paul, “he shook his raiment, and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles” (Acts 18:6).

Let there be no mistake about this. Men may require preachers and teachers to either subdue their message, or be tolerant of the opposition of it. But this does not reflect the mind of the Lord.

THEY SHOOK OFF THE DUST

What is the significance of shaking the dust of the area off of one’s feet? This is an action that proclaims the defilement of the region, and an unwillingness to be associated with it any further. In doing this, Paul and Barnabas were affirming that the unbelieving Jews were worse than the Gentiles who did not know God. Even the soil of the region had been defiled by their unbelief, just as surely as the idolatry of both the Jews and the Gentiles of old had defiled God’s land (Lev 18:24-28).

The rejection of God’s word, and the raising of opposition against those who declare it remains a sin of staggering proportions. The tolerance level of such individuals is zero.

THEY CAME TO ICONIUM

Having been expelled from one region, and shaking the dust off of their feet as they left, Paul and Barnabas did not cease to preach. Nor, indeed, were they overcome with discouragement because they had not been received.

Although they were no doubt greatly pleased because of the hearty acceptance of their message by the Gentiles, and some of the Jews, they had not been preaching to please men, nor were they promoting their own popularity. Therefore, as they said they would do, they determined to take the message to those who would hear it. Therefore, they moved on to an adjacent location, Iconium, approximately seventy miles away.

This approach to preaching – going to those who will receive the message – transforms an individual’s thoughts about declaring the word of the Lord. First, this is how Jesus taught His disciples to preach. “And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet” (Matt 10:14). Later, when Paul would return to Jerusalem, Jesus would tell him to leave the city, because the people would not hear him: “And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance; and saw Him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning Me” (Acts 22:18).

On one occasion, as Jesus was en route to Jerusalem, he sent messengers into a village of the Samaritans, “to make ready for Him.” When “they did not receive Him,” “they went to another village” (Lk 9:53-56). This is how Jesus consistently conducted His work.

An approach to preaching the Gospel that has a person first establishing personal friendships, and then preaching within the context of personal acceptance, it, to say the least, open to question. In Scripture, the reason for either the acceptance or rejection of the messenger is the message that is brought, not personal acquaintance. A ministry that is founded upon the popularity of the individual will not be blessed by God, and any purported success that is claimed is to be ignored.

THE DISCIPLES WERE FILLED WITH JOY AND THE HOLY SPIRIT

“ 52 And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.” Other versions read, “continually filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit,” NASB “the disciples in Antioch continued to be full of joy and the Holy Spirit,” GWN “but the converts were filled with joy and the Holy Spirit,” NJB “the believers were filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit,” NLT “their converts were filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit,” LIVING “The followers were happy and full of the Holy Spirit,” IE “as for the disciples, they were more and more filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit,” WEYMOUTH and “the disciples were continually filled [throughout their souls] with joy and the Holy Spirit.” AMPLIFIED

“The disciples” refers to those in Antioch who had joyfully received the message delivered by Paul and Barnabas. Now, although the messengers that delivered the word were forced out of the region, these believers continued to be filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit. They had not been inordinately attached to the proclaimers, but had embraced the One who was preached. Although I do not doubt they were sad at the expulsion of Paul and Barnabas, they were able to continue in the faith because they had been built upon the rock. These believers were able to withstand the loss of their teachers because they had received the real thing.

Paul and Barnabas took heed how they built upon the foundation, carefully placing upon it “gold, silver, and precious stones” – people whose hearts had been touched by the Gospel, and had heartily embraced the Christ who was preached (1 Cor 3:10-12).

I know of no small number of professed Christian works that have not been able to stand after the ones who founded them were forced to leave. Let it be clear, that when it comes to the work of the Lord, the aim is to bring the people into close fellowship with the Lord . When, by the grace of God, this is accomplished, the people will be able to withstand occasions like that of our text.

You see that the joy of the Lord and the work of the Holy Spirit cannot be stifled in an environment of faith. When people are actually following the Lord – “disciples” – they will be sustained from heaven, even if outward circumstances are something less than ideal. This is a most blessed circumstance!

CONCLUSION

In the book of Acts, we are being exposed to the manner of the Kingdom. Primarily, we are seeing the advancement of the Word of God and the consistency of the followers of Jesus under all kinds of circumstances. When the disciples found favor with all of the people (Acts 2:47), they grew and advanced in the Lord, capitalizing on the situation. There is a generation of people who are thrown off course by the acceptance of the people. Even when fierce persecution broke out, and the disciples were scattered abroad, it did not dampen the proclamation of the Gospel, for they went everywhere preaching the word (Acts 8:4). Now, when godly teachers were forced out of region, the disciples continued to be filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit. Their spiritual lives were not interrupted because they were founded upon the rock. When the winds of adversity and the storms of trial came upon them, they did not fall. This is a view of real spiritual life. We are not obliged to accept any other view of the work of the Lord.

The Acts of the Apostles

Commentary

By: Given, O. Blakely

Lesson #61

PREACHING IN ICONIUM, LYSTRA, and DERBE

“ 14:1 And it came to pass in Iconium, that they went both together into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed. 2 But the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren. 3 Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord, which gave testimony unto the word of His grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands. 4 But the multitude of the city was divided: and part held with the Jews, and part with the apostles. 5 And when there was an assault made both of the Gentiles, and also of the Jews with their rulers, to use them despitefully, and to stone them, 6 They were ware of it, and fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about: 7 And there they preached the gospel.” (Acts 14:1-7)

INTRODUCTION

Having been forced out of Antioch, and leaving the disciples anchored in the Lord and filled with joy and the Holy Spirit, Paul and Barnabas come to Iconium. Although in a Antioch for a brief time, possible only a little over two weeks, yet the impact of their ministry was notable. Those who had believed their message were left filled with joy and the Holy Spirit. Although their obedience to the Gospel is not detailed, it is to be assumed, for God gives the Holy Spirit to those who “obey Him” (Acts 5:32), and Jesus is “the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him” (Heb 5:9). There is no salvation without obedience. Salvation is implemented “through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 1:2). The condition in which the disciples at Antioch were left confirms that all of this was wrought in them. That is why there was no need for the Spirit to move Luke to record all of the details of everyone’s obedience to the Gospel.

THE REPORT OF RESPONSES

Observe how the faithful responses to the Gospel are reported.

- WERE BAPTIZED. “Then they that gladly received his word were baptized ”

(Acts 2:41).

• BELIEVED. “Howbeit many of them which heard the word believed ; and the number of the men was about five thousand ” (Acts 4:4).

CONTENTS

• COMING TO ICONIUM, THEY “SO SPAKE” (14:1)

• THE UNBELIEVING JEWS (14:2)

• A LONG TIME THEY SPOKE BOLDLY IN THE LORD (14:3a)

• THE LORD GAVE TESTIMONY (14:3b)

• THE CITY WAS DIVIDED (14:4)

• AN ASSAULT WAS MADE BY THE GENTILES, JEWS, AND RULERS (14:5)

• WHEN THEY WERE AWARE OF IT (14:6)

• THERE THEY PREACHED THE GOSPEL (14:7)

• CONCLUSION

• BELIEVERS ADDED TO THE LORD. “And believers were the more added to the Lord , multitudes both of men and women” (Acts 5:14).

• NUMBER OF DISCIPLES MULTIPLIED. “And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied ” (Acts 6:1).

• OBEDIENT TO THE FAITH. “And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith” (Acts 6:7).

• WERE BAPTIZED. “But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women ” (Acts 8:12).

• TURNED TO THE LORD. “And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord ” (Acts 9:35)

• BELIEVED IN THE LORD. “And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord ” (Acts 9:42).

• BAPTIZED IN THE NAME OF THE LORD. “Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord ” (Acts 10:47-48).

• BELIEVED IN THE LORD JESUS CHRIST. “Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ ; what was I, that I could withstand God?” (Acts 11:17).

• BELIEVED AND TURNED UNTO THE LORD. “And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord ” (Acts 11:21).

• ADDED UNTO THE LORD. “For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord ” (Acts 11:24).

• BELIEVED. “Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed , being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord” (Acts 13:12).

The salvation of God is large – a “so great salvation” (Heb 2:3). It is improper to perceive its appropriation from a single point of view, or to attempt to so present it so that it is perceived as being simplistic and requiring only a minimal response from those who hear it.

• BELIEVED. “And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed ” (Acts 13:48).

• BELIEVED. “ . . . a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed ” (Acts 14:1).

• HEART OPENED, ATTENDED TO WHAT WAS SPOKEN, AND BAPTIZED. “ . . . Lydia . . . whose heart the Lord opened , that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul. And when she was baptized , and her household . . . ” (Acts 16:14-15).

• FRUITS MEET FOR REPENTANCE, AND WAS BAPTIZED. “And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway” (Acts 16:32-33).

• BELIEVED. “And some of them believed , and consorted with Paul and Silas . . . (Acts 17:4).

• BELIEVED. “Therefore many of them believed ; also of honorable women which were Greeks, and of men, not a few” (Acts 17:12).

• BELIEVED. “Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed . . . ” (Acts 17:34).

• BELIEVED AND WERE BAPTIZED. And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized ” (Acts 18:8).

• WERE BAPTIZED. “When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus” (Acts 19:5).

• BELIEVED, SHOWED DEEDS MEET FOR REPENTANCE. “And many that believed came, and confessed, and showed their deeds ” (Acts 19:18).

• BELIEVED. “And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not” (Acts 28:24).

One thing is glaringly apparent: the Spirit is not promoting a stereotyped manner of thinking. Be sure, neither is He opening the doors for the notion that salvation is appropriated in a variety of ways, for it is not. The salvation of God is large – a “so great salvation” (Heb 2:3). It is improper to perceive its appropriation from a single point of view, or to attempt to so present it so that it is perceived as being simplistic and requiring only a minimal response from those who hear it.

It ought to be apparent to every professed laborer with God that sin has made men self-centered. The fruit of a man-centered emphasis testifies to the folly of adopting it in the matter of reaching men for Christ.

Making Disciples

Those who “make disciples” must do at least two things. First, an obedience must be produced that leaves the individual conscious of the forgiveness of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit. Second, a mindset must be produced that ensures the disciple will continue in the faith. These will enable the Ethiopian eunuch to proceed to his native land without being accompanied by Philip (Acts 8:39). Philip, Peter, and John can, in such a case, move on from the city of Samaria after a brief period of time (Acts 8:25). It will allow Peter and those with him to leave the house of Cornelius after a few days (Acts 10:48).

THE IMPORTANCE OF A CORE MESSAGE

It is vitally important that those who represent the Lord deliver a message that is sound at its core. That means that God must be at the center of it, and not men. It is what God has done that is fundamental, not what man must do. It is God's view of Christ than enables men to have a profitable view of Him. This is also what allows for growth, expansion of the understanding, and rooting and grounding in the faith. If a person makes human need and response the primary thing, spiritual growth will be stifled, for such soil is too shallow. The message must be of the such a nature as promotes extended thought, which is at the center of the increase of both faith and commitment. I acknowledge that such an approach is not conducive to career development or the establishment of an institution. Those objectives require that humanity be central.

It ought to be apparent to every professed laborer with God that sin has made men self-centered. The fruit of a man-centered emphasis testifies to the folly of adopting it in the matter of reaching men for Christ.

AGAIN, THEY SEEK A RELIGIOUS AUDIENCE

Again Paul and Barnabas enter into the synagogue, and again they speak in the same manner as they had before. They do not reshape their message to avoid the hostility that was created in Antioch. They did not revise their approach because they encountered opposition in the precious city.

We will find that the message of the Gospel postulates that a certain effort is being exerted to find the Lord. It may take the form of idolatry, as in Athens (Acts 17:22-23), or devoutness as seen in the household of Cornelius (Acts 10:2), or devotion to prayer as seen in the household of Lydia (Acts 16:13). It may be disciples with imperfect knowledge, like those "certain disciples" in Ephesus (Acts 19:1-2).

This does not mean that those who are not engaged in any obvious quest to know God are excluded, for there are those like the Philippian jailor (Acts 16:29-31).

What I am saying is that there is an obvious emphasis on those with some kind of religious commitment. Actually, if one has some spiritual understanding, it will become apparent that there is more of this among the sons of men than is at first evident. One of the great distinctions of those early men who were working together with God was their ready perception of this circumstance. I find it to be a most refreshing thing to consider.

COMING TO ICONIUM, THEY "SO SPAKE"

"14:1 And it came to pass in Iconium, that they went both together into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed."

As soon as Paul and Barnabas arrive at their destination, they seek out a place in which they can proclaim word of the Lord. They are tenacious in their commitment to this work, remaining undeterred in their mission, even after they have been driven out of the previous region. They had a keen awareness that they had been called by the Holy Spirit.

THEY WENT IN TOGETHER

"And it came to pass in Iconium, that they went both together into the synagogue of the Jews . . ." Other versions read, "they went together to," NKJV "they entered . . . together," NASB "Paul and Barnabas went as usual into," NIV "Paul and Barnabas went into," NRSV "In Iconium the same thing happened- they went into the synagogue," CJB "it fortun'd in Iconium that they went both together into," TNT and "Much the same thing happened at Iconium. On their arrival they went to." PHILLIPS

Here, the meaning is that they did this in like manner as they did in Antioch. Therefore, some versions read “as usual,” NIV “the same thing happened,” CJB and “Much the same thing happened.” PHILLIPS This was not lifeless repetition or habit. It was their objective that drove them. Technically, they were not trying to produce results, but were carrying out the work to which the Spirit had called them. They were planting and watering, knowing that it is the Lord who gives the increase (1 Cor 3:6-7).

Again, we see the men of God targeting those with a preliminary knowledge of God. While they will not limit themselves to such, that is where they will begin – “to the Jew first.” In that process, they will also have access to certain Gentiles who had left idolatry and converted to Judaism. It is interesting to observe the frequency of Greeks, or Gentiles, being said to be in the synagogues (Acts 13:42; 14:1; 18:4,17).

The fact that Paul and Barnabas “went in together” is also worthy of note. The Spirit had separated them together (ACTS 13:2). Paul is frequently said to have journeyed with kindred spirits. Thus we read of “Paul and his company” (Acts 13:13), “Paul and Silas” (Acts 16:19), “Paul and Timotheus” (Phil 1:1), “Paul and Silvanus and Timotheus” (1 Thess 1:1). In the ministry, as in life in general, “two are better than one” (Eccl 4:9). For example, when Jesus first sent out the twelve, He sent them “by two by two” NKJV (Mk 6:7). He did the same with the seventy, sending them out “two by two” NKJV (Lk 10:1). When the Lord send Moses to Egypt to deliver the people of Israel, He paired him with his brother Aaron (Ex 4:14-15,20). In this way there is mutual encouragement, and the suppression of any temptation to be self-centered.

AND SO SPAKE

“ . . . and so spake . . . ” Other versions read, “spoke in such a manner,” NASB “spoke so effectively,” NIV “spoke in such a way,” NRSV “gave such a teaching,” BBE “preached with such power,” NLT and “spoke with such conviction.” PHILLIPS

The two words “so spake” are precisely translated from the Greek words lalh/sai ou[twj , which can be translated “to talk thus.” INTERLINEAR Here, the idea is that they spoke in such a manner as to produce the results that are declared. That is, they spoke with power and persuasion. As with the Lord Jesus Himself, their “word was with power” (Lk 4:32). They delivered words the Holy Spirit could use in His work of conviction (John 16:9-11). They also spoke in such a manner as to induce faith in those with ears to hear – the kind of faith that is declared in Scripture. The words could also have a secondary meaning – that they were after the same manner as they had delivered in the synagogue in Antioch. Essentially, that is saying the same thing, for in both places what and how they preached brought heavenly influences to bear upon the people, producing hostility in stony hearts, and faith in tender ones.

To this point in this book, as concerning God and His great salvation, the message of the Gospel has not been addressed to the totally uninformed – search and see.

The fact that they were once again in a synagogue moves me to the consideration of another circumstance that is being uncovered in this book. To this point in this book, as concerning God and His great salvation, the message of the Gospel has not been addressed to the totally uninformed – search and see. By that I mean the word is consistently represented as being declared to those who acknowledged the reality of a God, and were involved in some kind of commitment to their idea, even though it may have been somewhat flawed..

We have some notable examples of the details of a messenger from God speaking to those who had a flawed and unacceptable view of God.

PAUL IN ATHENS

When certain Athenian philosophers brought Paul to the Areopagus to hear his doctrine, he spoke to them of the following.

- GOD THE CREATOR. God created the world and all things therein.
- GOD THE LORD. God is Lord of heaven and earth.
- GOD IS NOT CONFINED TO A TEMPLE. God does not dwell in temples made with hands.
- GOD IS NOT WORSHIPED WITH MEN'S HANDS. God is not worshiped with men's hands as though He needed anything.
- GOD IS THE LIFE-GIVER. God gives life and breath to all things.
- GOD MADE ALL MEN. God made all men from one man.
- GOD PLACED ALL MEN. God strategically placed all men in both time and location, that they might seek Him.
- GOD OWNS ALL LIFE. All men live and move and have their being in God.
- MEN MUST THINK PROPERLY ABOUT GOD. Because men are God's offspring, they should not think of Him in terms of things crafted by men's hands.
- GOD HAS BEEN LONGSUFFERING, BUT NOW MEN MUST REPENT. God has overlooked the times of men's ignorance, but now commands all men everywhere to repent.
- GOD WILL JUDGE THE WORLD. God has appointed a day in which He will judge the world in righteousness by that Man He has ordained.
- GOD HAS APPROVED THE JUDGE. God has assured humanity of the approval of that Man by raising Him from the dead (Acts 17:18-31).

Although not precisely the same kind of situation, Paul also reasoned with a certain governor named Felix, moving him to tremble, and call for the ending of the session.

PAUL'S REASONING WITH FELIX

Having heard of Paul's arrest and defense before Agrippa, Felix came down with his wife Drusilla to Caesarea, and called for Paul. Luke informs us that Felix was "well acquainted" NIV with "the Way," or manner and message of Christians (Acts 24:22). We do not know the extent of his familiarity, but it appears to be more with the manner of the new life rather than the details of the apostles' doctrine. When Paul came he reasoned with Felix on the following points, which caused Felix to tremble. The text is Acts 24:25.

- RIGHTEOUSNESS : God's approval, GWN uprightness, NJB morality, MONTGOMERY doing right, CEV and goodness. GNB The meaning of the word used here is "the state of him who is such as he ought to be . . . virtue, purity of life, uprightness, correctness in thinking, feeling, and acting," THAYER This does not refer to the righteousness that is imputed to men through their faith. It rather refers to the Divine requirement of an upright life (Micah 6:8). Once convinced of this absolute requirement, the need for the righteousness that comes through faith is seen and pursued (Matt 6:33).

As soon as men tailor this Gospel for those who have no fundamental knowledge of God, they will be forced to distort it. The fundamental error in such an approach is caused by the failure to understand that the message of the Gospel is calculated to appeal to those who are sober minded and have engaged in some kind of effort to seek the Lord.

TEMPERANCE : self control, NKJV holiness, MRD self restraint, NAB purity of life and (the control of passions). AMPLIFIED God requires that men control their natural propensities. They are to have a high reason for living than fulfilling their own desires.

- JUDGMENT TO COME : future judgment, MRD and the coming day of judgment. NLT There is a day of ultimate accountability, and all men will be there. Men are to live with an acute awareness of this reality.

It is imperative that we carefully note the total absence of preaching a Gospel that is adapted to the circumstances. The message delivered in the synagogues, to the Athenian philosophers, and Felix, were not differing adaptations of the Gospel. All of them were designed to ready men for the Gospel, but differed significantly in the details that were delivered.

- THE SYNAGOGUES. When preaching to the Jews, Paul capitalized on the Scriptures of Moses and the prophets, confirming that God had readied them for the coming of the Savior.

- THE ATHENIANS. In addressing these philosophers, unlearned in the Scriptures, Paul did not appeal to Moses and the Prophets. He rather spoke from the perspective of the human conscience, and of certain realities that could be known through sound reasoning.

- FELIX. When speaking to Felix, Paul capitalized on his knowledge of “the way,” but stressed the necessity of living in a conscious effort to please God, and with an acute awareness of the day of judgment.

I realize that it has become quite fashionable in our time to present a “Christ” that is the resolution to personal, domestic, and social problems. However, this kind of presentation is not driven by spiritual understanding, nor is it in synch with the revealed will of God.

As soon as men tailor this Gospel for those who have no fundamental knowledge of God, they will be forced to distort it. The fundamental error in such an approach is caused by the failure to understand that the message of the Gospel is calculated to appeal to those who are sober minded and have engaged in some kind of effort to seek the Lord. It is addressed to those who have met with a certain frustration in their effort to do God’s will and realize His approval. This is precisely why Jesus said, “Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden , and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls” (Matt 11:28-29). His “yoke” is thus compared with that of the Law. Paul spoke in much the same manner in Antioch when he said, “And by Him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses” (Acts 13:39). When an appeal is made to men to receive Christ in order that their earthly circumstances can be improved, a distortion of the truth has taken place.

The reason for this is that the message of God is not one that is intended to be adapted to the circumstances. It is already adapted for men as they have been Divinely assessed. It offers an exchange of “beauty” for “ashes,” “the oil of joy” for “mourning,” and “the garment of praise” for “the spirit of heaviness” (Isa 61:3). It is tailored for “the poor,” “the brokenhearted,” “the captives,” and bruised” (Lk 4:18). Jesus associated His ministry with those who labored and were heavy laden (Matt 11:28). Elsewhere the Spirit speaks of those who have fled to Jesus fore refuge, to lay hold on the hope that has been set before them (Heb 6:18). The ongoing ministry of Jesus is said to be for those who are coming to God through Him (Heb 7:25).

Thus far in the book of Acts, the presentations of Jesus Christ declared Him as follows.

- A Man approved by God – Acts 2:22
- Delivered up by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God – Acts 2:23
- Raised from the dead by God – Acts 2:24-27; 5:30; 10:40; 13:30,33,37
- His body did not see corruption – Acts 2:24; 13:35-37

- Raised up to sit on David’s throne – Acts 2:30-31
- Exalted to the right hand of God – Acts 2:33-34
- Shedding forth the Holy Spirit – Acts 2:33
- Crucified by men – Acts 2:36; 3:15; 5:30; 7:52; 10:39; 13:28
- Made both Lord and Christ – Acts 2:36
- Glorified by God – Acts 3:13a
- Delivered up and denied by men – Acts 3:13b
- From heaven caused a lame man to walk – Acts 3:16
- Heaven will retain Him until the fulfillment of all the words of the prophets – Acts 3:21
- God sent Him to bless men, and turn them away from their iniquities – Acts 3:26
- Exalted to be a Prince and a Savior – Acts 5:31a
- Exalted to give repentance and forgiveness of sins – Acts 5:31b
- He is the Son of God – Acts 9:20
- He is Lord of all – Acts 10:36
- He was anointed with the Holy Spirit and power – Acts 10:38a
- Went about doing good , healing all who were oppressed of the devil – Acts 10:38
- After raised, he appeared to chosen witnesses – Acts 10:41; 13:31
- Commanded that He be preached to the people, that He will judge the living and the dead – Acts 10:41
- Prophets all give witness to Him, that whoever believes on Him will receive remission of sins – Acts 10:43
- Raised up among men according to God’s promise to David – Acts 13:23
- He was not known by those who knew the prophets – Acts 13:27
- Was laid in a sepulcher – Acts 13:29
- Forgiveness of sins is preached through Him – Acts 13:38
- All who believe on Him are justified from all things – Acts 13:39

How does this compare with the contemporary presentations of Jesus?

Then, there is the preparatory work of the Holy Spirit, who comes to convince men of sin, righteousness, and judgment. He confirms to their hearts the nature and jeopardy of sin, the reality and availability of the righteousness of God, and the futility of any and all living that is prompted by Satan.

THAT A GREAT MULTITUDE BELIEVED

“ . . . that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed.” Other versions read, “a great number . . . believed,” NIV “became believers,” NRSV “a great company,” RSV “a large number,” CJB “a large crowd,” GWN “a great number . . . came to believe,” NJB and “many.”
LIVING

The words “great multitude” are translated from two Greek words (polu. plh/qoj). The first word means “much, many, numerous, great.” THAYER The second word means “a multitude, a great number.” THAYER This is a kind of literary redundancy that accents a very large group that simultaneously believed. We might say a large crowd, or a very big group.

It is remarkable for a person to believe – like the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:36-37)), or Lydia (Acts 16:14), or Sergius Paulus (Acts 13:12). However, it is even more staggering to ponder a multitude of people believing simultaneously – like 3,000 on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:41), of 5,000 men in Solomon’s Porch (Acts 4:4), or the whole city of Samaria (Acts 8:12,14). Our text declares that “a great multitude believed.” Oh, it is marvelous to consider!

In this text, an impressive number of Jews and Greeks “believe” – grasping the truth of what had been declared, bring drawn to it, and eagerly embracing it. In the process of believing, they cast down any contradicting notions. They overcame the wicked one, who was seeking to blind their eyes. They abandoned any contradicting ways of thinking, and willingly stepped into an arena of thought that was new and fresh.

The Marvel of Believing

When we are aware of what is involved in believing, the greatness of the Gospel and of the Lord who sent it becomes very evident. When a lot of people believe, it is not the result of a human strategy, or a cunning presentation, or some humanly coordinated activity. I acknowledge that this is how it is often presented in the Christian world, but there is really nothing like that delivered to us in the Scriptures.

It is revealed that men are “given” to believe (Phil 1:29) – that is, without this Divine activity, believing is not even possible. Faith “comes,” it is not conjured up by men (Rom 10:17). Those who believe are said to have “believed through grace,” not through natural aptitude (Acts 18:27).

Then, there is the preparatory work of the Holy Spirit, who comes to convince men of sin, righteousness, and judgment. He confirms to their hearts the nature and jeopardy of sin, the reality and availability of the righteousness of God, and the futility of any and all living that is prompted by Satan.

Believing is the result of the heart being “opened” by God, so that the truth can be the more plainly seen, and a willingness and fervent desire are realized that moves the person to act upon what He has heard (Acts 16:14).

There is also the matter of repentance, in which the former way of life is renounced, and a determination is made to turn to and serve the Lord. There is a cessation of immoral expressions that is brought on by a hatred of sin, and a love for righteousness. This kind of repentance is consistently effective because it is given to the individual by the exalted Christ (Acts 5:31). From yet another point of view, it is “granted,” given, or caused to come to pass (Acts 5:31; 11:18).

If one looks back on believing, it ought to be apparent that it was because the Gospel came to the people “in power,” accompanied by the Holy Spirit, and with the kind of assurance that moves the people to act with confidence. That is why it is written, “For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance” (1 Thess 1:5). It also ought to be apparent that believing is preceded by a persuasion that what was heard was the truth of God which effectively works in those who believe. Again it is written, “For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe” (2 Thess 2:13).

It is exercise in vanity to attempt to explain believing in any other way. Add to the perspective the fact that it took place in the world, which is under the power of the wicked one (1 John 5:19), and by those who were under his dominion – “children of disobedience” and subject to the wrath of God (Eph 2:1-3). Those who were appropriately termed “servants of sin” (Rom 6:17,20), broke free from that servitude and yielded to a new Master. And how did all of that take place? They were MADE free by the Son of God, and were therefore “free indeed” (John 8:32,36).

The Environment of Truth

While it ought to be apparent, Divine workings require an environment of truth. God Himself is “a God of truth” (Deut 32:4), His works are “done in truth” (Psa 33:4), and His sanctifying power is realized by means of the truth (John 17:17,19). It is wrong to expect God to work where the truth is withheld from the people, distorted, or in some other way placed into the background. There are those who seek to work up an emotional state in the people, imagining that this is the kind of surrounding in which the God of heaven works. Others seek to produce a kind of scholastic environment, where the wisdom of men is set before the people, and all manner of worldly expertise is placed before the audience. There are even those who simply sit in silence, awaiting some illumination from above, postulating that God works in a kind of intellectual and spiritual vacuum.

If an effectual work is to be done in and among the people, the truth must be insightfully declared. It must be declared with discernment, and with a keen awareness that the individual is a steward, handling the truth, which belongs to the Lord (2 Tim 2:15).

The Presence of Greeks

Again, we find none-Jews in the synagogue. Here, they are referred to as “Greeks” in the sense of their language – not speaking Hebrew.

The fact that these Greeks were in the synagogue, confirmed they had some understanding of the Law and the Prophets, for they were regularly read in the synagogues (Acts 13:15,27; 15:21).

Here again, we see a people being targeted who had some acquaintance with Moses and the Prophets. These were not raw Gentiles who were totally uncultured in the ways of the Lord – although there are examples of such people being exposed to Gospel influences (Acts 28:4), and intellectuals who were totally unacquainted with the Scriptures (Acts 17:32).

The fact of the Gentiles being oriented for the Gospel through Jewish influences is reflected in the Epistles. There was a certain awareness of what was declared by Moses and the Prophets among converted Gentiles. What Paul could not say in Athens, he did say to churches that were largely Gentile.

With all of their deficiencies, the Jews had impressed those about them with the knowledge of God, which had been given exclusively to them (Rom 9:4-5). These proselytes were a kind of first fruits of a greater harvest of which the prophets spoke.

- “And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem” (Micah 4:2).

- “And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising” (Isa 60:3).

- “Thus saith the LORD of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you” (Zech 8:23).

This Phenomenon Reflected in the Epistles

The fact of the Gentiles being oriented for the Gospel through Jewish influences is reflected in the Epistles. There was a certain awareness of what was declared by Moses and the Prophets among converted Gentiles. What Paul could not say in Athens, he did say to churches that were largely Gentile, with a proportionately smaller percentage of Jews. Following are examples of references to Moses, the Law, the Prophets, and the Scriptures (which at that time were Genesis through Malachi).

• IN ROME, ITALY. Rom 1:2; 2:12-20; 3:19-21,28,31; 4:13-16; 5:13-14,20; 6:14,15; 7:1-14; 8:3-7; 9:4-5,15,31,32; 10:4-5,19; 13:8,10; 15:4; 16:26.

• IN CORINTH, GREECE. 1 Cor 7:39; 9:8-9,20-21; 10:2-11; 14:21,34; 15:3,4,5,6; 2 Cor 3:7-15

• IN GALATIA, ASIA. Gal 2:16,19,21; 3:2,5,10-13,17-24; 4:4-5,21; 5:4,14,18.

• IN EPHESUS, ASIA. Eph 2:13-19.

• PHILIPPI, ASIA. Phil 3:5,6,9

I suppose that one could postulate that Moses and the Prophets were aggressively taught in the Gentile churches, in order to acquaint them with those writings. However, it seems more likely to me that they already had a familiarity with them, being subjected to them within the context of the synagogues. In our time, professing Christians are not generally acquainted with the writings of Moses and the prophets.

Because of this, much of the reasoning found in the Epistles is foreign to their thinking, and they cannot make proper sense of many pivotal points made to Gentile churches. Among them is the unacceptability of a rule-oriented approach to godliness (Col 2:20-23), and the uniqueness of being justified by faith, versus being justified by the works of the Law (Rom 2:13; 3:20,26,28; Gal 2:16; 3:11,24; 5:4).

We know Jews and Gentiles heard apostolic preaching in synagogues in Cyprus (Acts 13:5), Antioch (13:14), Iconium (14:1), Thessalonica (17:1), Athens (17:17), Corinth (18:4), and Ephesus (18:19; 19:6). On the day of Pentecost, Peter preached to proselytes (Acts 2:10). One of the seven men chosen to administer the daily food distribution in Jerusalem was a proselyte (Acts 6:5). The Ethiopian eunuch had embraced Judaism (Acts 8:27). Cornelius was a proselyte (10:2). Lydia, a Gentile, worshiped the God of the Jews (16:14).

All of this supports the precision of the statement made to a largely Gentile church: “Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus” (Gal 3:24-26). Ignoring this circumstance, coupled with the prevailing ignorance of Moses and the Prophets, has compelled great numbers of professed preachers and evangelists to present Jesus within the context of contemporary human experience. From the standpoint of rightness, effectiveness, and Divine acceptance, I am not certain that this kind of representation is in any way acceptable with God. If this is true, then no acceptable results can be come from it.

THE UNBELIEVING JEWS

“2 But the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren.”

It is vitally important that we note what is here said, and how it is stated. This reflects a certain mindset that exists among those who have been reconciled to God, and have therefore rejected Christ.

THE UNBELIEVING JEWS

“But the unbelieving Jews . . .” Other versions read, “Jews who disbelieved,” NASB “Jews who refused to believe,” NIV “Jews that were disobedient,” ASV “Jews who had not the faith,” BBE “Jews who would not be persuaded,” CJB “Jews of the class of unbelievers,” MRD “Jews . . . spurned God’s message,” NLT “Jews who had refused obedience,” WEYMOUTH “Jews who refused to accept their message,” WILLIAMS “the unbelieving Jews [who rejected their message],” AMPLIFIED “Jews who would not believe,” GNB and “being stubborn Jews.” INTERLINEAR

The various versions certainly depict something that was done willingly: “refused . . . would not be . . . spurned . . . rejected . . . stubborn.” This reflects the meaning of the Greek word translated “unbelieving” – avpeiqh,santej . The root lexical meaning of the word is, “not to allow oneself to be persuaded to comply with,” THAYER “disobey; be an unbeliever,” UBS “not to allow oneself to be persuaded; not to comply with,” LOUW-NIDA and “to be disobedient, refuse compliance.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

Below I have listed the way in which this word is translated in other texts.

- “Believeth not” (John 3:36).
- “Unbelieving” (Acts 14:2).
- “Believed not” (Acts 17:5; 19:9; Heb 3:18; 11:31).
- “Not obey” (Rom 2:8).
- “Disobedient” (Rom 10:21; 1 Pet 2:7,8; 3:20).
- “Not believe” (Rom 11:30a; 15:31).
- “Unbelief” (Rom 11:30b).
- “Obey not” (1 Pet 3:1; 4:17).

This action is equivalent to the statement made concerning the “unbelieving Jews” in Antioch. Concerning their reaction to the proclamation of the Word, Paul said to them, “seeing ye put it from you,” KJV “since you reject it,” NKJV “since you repudiate it,” NASB and “since you thrust it from you.” RSV Unbelief is, in fact, a repudiation of the Gospel message.

Unbelief is an aggressive reaction to the truth. It is not the response of mere confusion, or not understanding what is said. It is evidence of the hostility that exists between the carnal mind and the Lord. As it is written, “For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God” (Rom 8:6-8).

As if this was not enough, the Spirit says of the unbelieving: “But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death” (Rev 21:8). Notice the sins that are classified with being unbelieving, not overlooking their appointed destiny.

Note how Luke does NOT refer to these “unbelieving Jews.” He does not call them legalistic Jews, or Jews with a differing opinion, or Jews that did not understand. He traces their response to the condition of their hearts. They refused to believe, choosing to align themselves against God’s messengers.

“Unbelief” prohibited Jesus from doing “many mighty works” in His own country (Matt 13:58). It caused the disciples to be powerless in dealing with a demon (Matt 17:20). Jesus upbraided His own disciples when “unbelief” was found in them (Mk 16:14). Unbelief causes a person to “stagger” at the promises of God (Rom 4:20). Some Israelites were “broken off” of the natural olive tree of Israel “because of unbelief” (Rom 11:20). An unbelieving heart is called “an evil heart of unbelief”

(Heb 3:12). Faithless Israelites could not enter the promised land “because of unbelief” (Heb 3:19; 4:6). Unbelief causes men to fall (Heb 4:11).

Note how Luke does NOT refer to these “unbelieving Jews.” He does not call them legalistic Jews, or Jews with a differing opinion, or Jews that did not understand. He traces their response to the condition of their hearts. They refused to believe, choosing to align themselves against God’s messengers.

STIRRED UP THE GENTILES

“ . . . stirred up the Gentiles . . .” Other versions read, “excited,” MRD “aroused,” WILLIAMS and “stirred up the feelings.” PHILLIPS

These Jews agitated the Gentiles – apparently those who were attending that synagogue. As Solomon well said, “a wrathful man stirreth up strife,” (Prov 15:18), and “a froward man soweth strife” (Prov 16:28). And again, “He loveth transgression that loveth strife” (Prov 17:19). James associated strife with lying “against the truth” (James 3:16). Unable to complete their sordid ambitions themselves, these “unbelieving Jews” agitate the Gentiles, therefore promoting their own sectarian stance, and depicting Paul and Barnabas as heretics. This is one of Satan’s most productive ploys.

MADE THEIR MINDS EVIL AFFECTED

“ . . . and made their minds evil affected . . .” Other versions read, “poisoned their minds,” NKJV “embittered them,” NASB “made the minds . . . bitter,” BBE “incensed their minds,” DOUAY “corrupted the minds,” GENEVA “embittered them,” NAU “unquieted the minds,” TNT “made evil the souls,” YLT “saying all sorts of evil things,” LIVING “made them persecute,” IE and “exasperated the minds.” WILLIAMS

The men caused the Gentiles to look disapprovingly upon Paul and Barnabas, painting them as corruptors, the cause for dissension, and perpetrators of lies. They moved these Gentiles to view those with a message of reconciliation as trouble-makers and intruders into their seemingly tranquil environment.

AGAINST THE BRETHREN

“ . . . against the brethren.” Other versions read, “against the brothers,” NIV “against the believers,” GWN and “against Paul and Barnabas.” NLT

This is an arresting statement, affirming that the “unbelieving Jews” stirred up the Gentiles against “the brethren.” The Greek word here leaves no doubt, being avdelfw/n, which is properly rendered “brothers.” THAYER Versions that have rendered it “Paul and Barnabas” (NLT, LIVING) have imposed their understanding on the text. The reaction of this agitation confirms that the fermentation did not focus on Paul and Barnabas alone, else they would have been forced out of the area as they were in Antioch.

Here the term refers to the believers, or the ones who had joined with Paul and Barnabas – “a great multitude of Jews and Greeks.” Thus, a kind of persecution was leveled at this body of disciples, as they were all painted as troubling influences. There seemed to be a sense in the “unbelieving Jews” that there were three groups present: the Jews, the Gentiles, and those who had embraced the Gospel, becoming disciples of Christ. Paul identifies these three groups in his letter to the Corinthians. “Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God” (1 Cor 10:32). It is true that there is a sense in which those in Christ are, in fact, another class of people. That is why they are referred to as “a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light” (1 Pet 2:9). The unbelieving Jews and Gentiles in Iconium recognized this distinction, and aligned themselves against the saints.

A LONG TIME THEY SPOKE BOLDLY IN THE LORD

“ 3a Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord . . . ”

The reaction of Paul and Barnabas to this situation confirms that the hostility was mostly talk, with no immediate persecution being leveled at them. What we have here is the enemy being held in check by the Lord. Like Corinth, there were no doubt “much people” in this area, and the Lord dictated that His two servants remain until they had been brought into the fold (Acts 18:10).

The mighty God of heaven has no difficulty subduing the enemies of His people. In fact, if He so desires, He can simply remove them – as He did Herod. There are, however, higher interests being served than the welfare of His servants. Therefore, He moves against the foe with Divine discretion, ensuring that His purposes are carried out to the fullest.

THEY REMAINED A LONG TIME

“ . . . Long time therefore abode they . . . ” Other versions read, “stayed there a long time,” NKJV “spent a long time there,” NASB “spent considerable time there,” NIV “remained for a long time,” NRSV “long time . . . tarried there,” ASV “kept there for a long time,” BBE “stayed there for some time,” CSB “stayed therefore a good while,” DARBY “stayed for a considerable period,” NAB and “they stayed in Iconium a long time.” IE

Notice how different this is from previous encounters with the Jews.

- After Stephen was martyred, an aggressive persecution scattered believers, forcing them out of Jerusalem (Acts 8:4).
- Paul was forced to leave Damascus because of Jewish opposition, being lowered over the wall in a basket (Acts 9:25).
- Paul and Barnabas were expelled from the coasts of Antioch by opposing Jews, whereupon they shook the dust of that place from their feet (Acts 13:50).

Here, however, although there was a fomentation of evil feelings against them, Paul and Barnabas stayed on for a considerable time in Iconium. It appears that the opposition was not aggressive as it was at Antioch – that is, no outward measures were taken to thrust them from the region. This was nothing less Divine restraint, for the Jews from Jerusalem to Antioch had demonstrated their willingness to go to any length to rid themselves of Gospel messengers.

God Can Subdue the Enemy

The mighty God of heaven has no difficulty subduing the enemies of His people. In fact, if He so desires, He can simply remove them – as He did Herod. There are, however, higher interests being served than the welfare of His servants. Therefore, He moves against the foe with Divine discretion, ensuring that His purposes are carried out to the fullest. If it is the appropriate time and place, He will fulfill the saying of Solomon: “When a man's ways please the LORD, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him” (Prov 16:7). That means precisely what it says: “makes!”

In this case, the enemies were held at bay, able to do nothing more than hold Paul and Barnabas in disdain, and agitate other people to think ill of them. However, for the time being, they could go no further than that. They could hate the messengers, but God would like allow them to touch them – just as He initially kept Satan from touching Job (Job 1:12).

The Reason for Them Lingerin

In Iconium, a large number of people had come to believe – “a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks” (14:1). The Lord would not leave this flock to be ravished by the hateful Jews in those quarters. He rather provided for their spiritual sustenance and stability, leaving Paul and Barnabas in their midst, for they were faithful laborers. Thus, it was with an interest for the flock that the shepherds were allowed to remain among them.

This was much like the situation that would take place in Corinth some time later. There Paul also faced opposition from the Jews (Acts 18:5-6). After Paul had said that he was going to turn to the Gentiles, Jesus later appeared to him in a vision and said, “Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace: For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city” (Acts 18:9-10).

That is precisely the kind of situation we find in this text.

The Priority of the Sheep

Unlike the hireling who flees at the presence of danger (John 10:12-13), and after the manner of Jesus, true shepherds remain with the sheep – even though their stay may be attended by forms of hostility. All of this confirms the priority of the sheep themselves – the people of God. Those who abandon the flock of God in preference for self interests have only betrayed their condition. Such are not shepherds at all. Wherever the people of God are not properly fed, or where they become malnourished, a most serious circumstance exists. Solemnly Jesus told the apostle to whom, He gave the keys of the kingdom of heaven, “Feed My lambs . . . Feed My sheep . . . Feed My sheep” (Matt 16:19; John 21:15-17). That very apostle wrote to the shepherds of the people of God, “Feed the flock of God which is among you” (1 Pet 5:2). Paul told the elders of Ephesus, “feed the church of God, which He hath purchased with his own blood” (Acts 20:28).

This is a word that needs to be declared in our time. Where the flock is not being fed, the godly must rise up and insist that it be done faithfully and effectively. If there is a refusal to do it, they need to leave that place and go where they can be nourished. I do not know how any person could successfully defend a refusal to do this – particularly since it is a matter concerning which the King has spoken.

SPEAKING BOLDLY IN THE LORD

“ . . . speaking boldly in the Lord . . .” Other versions read, “speaking boldly with reliance upon the Lord,” NASB “speaking boldly for the Lord,” NIV “taking heart in the Lord,” BBE “speaking boldly about the Lord,” CJB “speaking boldly, confiding in the Lord,” DARBY “dealing confidently in the Lord,” DOUAY “spoke openly concerning the Lord,” MRD “speaking out courageously for the Lord,” NET “preaching fearlessly in the Lord,” NJB “preaching boldly about the grace of the Lord,” NLT “quit themselves boldly, with the help of the Lord,” PNT “speaking boldly with the help of the Lord,” TNT “speaking freely and relying on the Lord,” WEYMOUTH “continued to speak with courage from the Lord,” WILLIAMS “speaking fearlessly in the Lord,” MONTGOMERY and “speaking freely and fearlessly and boldly in the Lord.” AMPLIFIED

The word “boldly” is translated from a word having the root meaning “to bear oneself boldly or confidently.” As used in this text, it means “to use freedom in speaking, be free-spoken; to speak freely,” THAYER “acting with an attitude of openness that comes from freedom and lack of fear,” FRIBERG “speak boldly or freely; have courage,” UBS “speak boldly or freely; have courage,” LOUW-NIDA and “speak freely, openly, fearlessly; express oneself freely.” GINGRICH

This is a word that perfectly comports with the nature of life in Christ Jesus. It involves speaking with the confidence that is gendered by faith and hope, and a freedom that has resulted from a purged conscience. There is an openness because of the absence of the fear of man, and a frankness that is driven by a persuasion of the truth and the support of the heaven.

This is not the kind of thing that can be taught, or learned from books and study. It is not characterized by the kind of confidence that comes from merely being acquainted with the subject being addressed – although that condition surely exists. Notwithstanding, a thorough familiarity with the matter being expounded cannot remove the fear of man, or enable one to confidently wade into the raging sea of opposition.

This kind of boldness comes from being more persuaded of the help that comes from heaven than the resistance that comes from men. It flows out of the persuasion that “the truth of the LORD endureth for ever. Praise ye the LORD” (Psa 117:2). It also springs forth from a hope that anchors the soul, assuring the individual of the ultimate triumph of the truth and the reward of the Lord.

Here Paul and Barnabas continued to stabilize the saints in the face of growing opposition, not fearing the opposition of their enemies. It was as though the battle was set in array, and they took up the weapons of their warfare, putting on whole armor of God, and taking the sword of the Spirit, leading and encouraging the saints. They labored while they were in the furnace, and continued in the face of hostility.

THE LORD GAVE TESTIMONY

“ 3b . . . which gave testimony unto the word of His grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands.”

The word of salvation is essentially a message of Divine beneficence. It is not the declaration of a new law, or a new way of life, as ordinarily perceived. He has made a way where there was no way (Heb 10:20). He has provided for raising people up from death in trespasses and sins

Paul and Barnabas were called and separated to a special work by the Holy Spirit (Acts 13:2). Owing their faithfulness to their mission, and the good handling of the Word of God, the Lord gave undeniable testimony to the reality of what they said.

THE LORD GAVE TESTIMONY TO HIS WORD

“ . . . which gave testimony unto the word of His grace . . . ”

Gave Testimony

Other versions read, “was bearing witness,” NKJV “confirmed,” NIV “attested,” NJB “proved,” NLT “kept affirming,” ISV “continued to bear testimony,” AMPLIFIED and “made it plain. PHILLIPS

The idea is that God established before the hearers that the message being preached by Paul and Barnabas was the truth. They had faithfully represented what God had said, and He buttressed it with visible confirmation.

Although it refers immediately to the twelve apostles, Mark 16:20 – the last verse of that book – refers to the same kind of testimony: “And they went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen.” Keep in mind that in this instance, Barnabas was not an apostle of Christ, yet God confirmed his word.

The Word of His Grace

The description of the message being preached is worthy of extended consideration – “the word of His grace.” Other versions read, “the message of His grace,” NIV “the message of His love and kindness,” CJB “the message about His good will,” GWN “all they said about His gift of grace,” NJB “about the grace of the Lord,” NLT “about how God forgives sin,” IE and “His gracious message.”
WILLIAMS

The word of salvation is essentially a message of Divine beneficence. It is not the declaration of a new law, or a new way of life, as ordinarily perceived. He has made a way where there was no way (Heb 10:20). He has provided for raising people up from death in trespasses and sins (Eph 2:1-2). He has, through His own power, and by His own Son, “put away sin” (Heb 9:26). Through Christ Jesus He has “destroyed” the devil (Heb 2:14), and blotted out “the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us” (Col 2:14). A reconciliation between the world and God has taken place, and it only has to be received (2 Cor 5:18-10).

While it is true that, for those who are in Christ Jesus, there is “grace to help in time of need” (Heb 4:16), the phrase “the word of His grace” concentrates on “the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory” (2 Tim 2:10). While Jesus is certainly present to help His people in their difficulties, that is not the focus of His grace. There are higher purposes that are also being served. A few statements from Scripture will confirm that this is the case.

- SAVED THROUGH GRACE. “But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved , even as they” (Acts 15:11).

- JUSTIFIED BY GRACE. “Being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus” (Rom 3:24).

- STANDING BY GRACE. “By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand , and rejoice in hope of the glory of God” (Rom 5:2).

- THE GIFT OF RIGHTEOUSNESS BY GRACE. “But not as the offence, so also is the free gift. For if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace , which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many . . . they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness . . .” (Rom 5:15,17).

- MADE RICH BEFORE GOD. “For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, (2 Cor 8:9).

- MADE ACCEPTED. “To the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein He hath made us accepted in the beloved” (Eph 1:6).

- THE AGES TO COME TO TESTIFY OF THE GREATNESS OF SALVATION BY GRACE. “That in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of His grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God ” (Eph 2:7-8).

- EVERLASTING CONSOLATION AND GOOD HOPE. “Now our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace” (2 Thess 2:16).

- THE RECEPTION OF FAITH AND LOVE. “And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus” (1 Tim 1:14).

- MADE HEIRS, “That being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life” (Titus 3:7).

“The word of His grace” is a message that pertains to the extrication of men from bondage to sin, giving them a new nature, and preparing them for glory. If men choose to depart from this emphasis, they will at once distort the grace of God, either seeing no fundamental need for it, or majoring on things that are not related to the display of grace in the ages to come.

SIGNS AND WONDERS GRANTED BY THEIR HANDS

“ . . . and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands.” Other versions read, “miraculous signs and wonders,” NIV “signs and miracles,” CJB Perform miracles and do amazing things,” GWN “do great miracles,” LIVING and “signs and marvels.” WEYMOUTH

Even those given the gift of “working miracles” (1 Cor 12:10), could not do them at will. Miracles have always been wrought according to Divine discretion. There have even been long periods during which godly men existed, yet no miracles were done (Judges 6:13). There have also been mighty men of God who “did no miracle,” like John the baptist (John 10:41). There were also places that were so permeated with unbelief, that Jesus Himself “could do no mighty work” (Mk 6:5). It is said of Christ’s work in His own country, “And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief” (Mat 13:58). Accenting the use of Divine discretion, it was written of one occasion during which the Son of God Himself was ministering, “and the power of the Lord was present to heal them” (Lk 5:17). Also, when the apostles were gathered together with the disciples for prayer – men through whom great miracles had been done (Acts 2:43) – they prayed that God would “grant that signs and wonders may be done by the name of Thy holy child Jesus” (Acts 4:30).

Similarly, in the text before us, the accent is placed on God’s will. He “granted signs and wonders to be done.” Other versions read, “enabling,” NIV “causing,” BBE “giving,” DARBY “having them perform,” GWN “He wrought by their hands,” MRD “allowing,” NJB “He helped them,” IE and “permitting,” WEYMOUTH

The word “granted” is translated from a word meaning, “of one’s own accord to give one something,” THAYER “of what is given by a person in superior position to one in subordinate position,” FRIBERG and “allow, permit, place, put.” UBS

No individual is free to go about the work of the Lord while adopting principles that conflict with those by which the Head of the church operates.

Owing to the nature of their message, together with the circumstances in which they found themselves, the Lord granted, or permitted, Paul and Barnabas to do “signs and wonders” – things that were outside the realm of natural laws. Keep in mind that Barnabas was not an apostle, and yet signs and wonders were granted to be done through his hands as well. By saying “by their hands,” it is suggested that the imposition of their hands was involved, although that may not have been true in every case. The point is that they did the works, and it was very evident they did them, else there would be no point to saying God was giving testimony to the word of grace which they were preaching.

The obvious lack of power in the church of our day may very well be directly related to the spurious message that it is too often delivered to the people. By spurious message, I mean a message that has not been determined and sent forth by God Himself – a message that does not have Christ in His redemptive role at the heart of the proclamation. When the church is more noted for its political stance, social involvements, philanthropic works, etc., what need is there for any Divine testimony concerning their word?

The Kingdom of God, Driven by the Will of God

In the Kingdom of God, His will forms the circumference within which God works. In this day of salvation, He is working through Jesus Christ, who is administering the Kingdom, and by the Holy Spirit. Everything that is being done by the Lord is within the boundaries of God’s will, which is “good, and acceptable, and perfect” (Rom 12:2). This is why no member of the body of Christ, regardless how gifted they are, or what position they occupy within the body, can function strictly in accord with their own will. Jesus Himself removed all question about this when He said, “I can of Mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and My judgment is just; because I seek not Mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent Me” (John 5:30).

This means than any Divinely empowered work is preceded by:

- The understanding that the work cannot proceed from the self-will of the individual: “I can of Mine own self do nothing.”
- There must be discerning hearing: “as I hear.”
- Judgment, or discretion, is involved: “I judge.”
- Judgment must be right, or righteous: “My judgment is just.”
- The individual must not be seeking his own will: “I seek not Mine own will.”
- It is the will of the Father that is to be sought “but of the Father.”
- The worker must have sent where He seeking to work by God: “the Father which hath sent Me.”

No individual is free to go about the work of the Lord while adopting principles that conflict with those by which the Head of the church operates. The Holy Spirit intercedes for us “according to the will of God” (Rom 8:26). Christ died to deliver us from this present evil world “according to the will of God” (Gal 1:4). Our adoption as children to God by Jesus is “according to the will of God” (Eph 1:5). All of this has been revealed, and therefore ought to be abundantly apparent.

Yet we live in a religious society in which the church itself often has difficulty with God’s will being primary, and to which all other things are unqualifiedly subject. This is precisely what has given rise to questions like: “Why do good things happen to bad people?” “Why do bad things happen to good people?” and “Why doesn’t God answer my prayers?” It is why people say they are angry with God. Even more importantly, it is why the Christian community is riven with divisions – doctrinal divisions, for it is what they teach that divides them. This is in glaring contradiction of the solemn summons: “be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment” (1 Cor 1:10). And again, “Fulfil ye my joy, that ye . . . of one mind” (Phil 2:2). And again, “Finally, be ye all of one mind . . .” (1 Pet 3:8).

In our text, Paul and Barnabas were of one mind, and spoke the same thing. Not only were they of one mind with one another, but with the Lord also, which brought Him into the scenario.

THE CITY WAS DIVIDED

“ 4 But the multitude of the city was divided: and part held with the Jews, and part with the apostles.”

Although the truth unites those who believe it, it divides those believing ones from those ho do not believe. It is wrong to engage in any effort that is calculated to avoid the divisive nature of the truth – like compromising the message, or neutralizing it with words that appeal to those with no heart for the truth.

Jesus once said, “Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter in law against her mother in law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household” (Matt 10:34-36). Solemnly Jesus told His disciples, “For from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three. The father shall be divided against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; the mother in law against her daughter in law, and the daughter in law against her mother in law” (Luke 12:51-53).

The division was not an end of itself, but was the appointed means of distinguishing between “the children of the kingdom” and “the children of the wicked one” (Matt 13:38). Jesus said His sheep hear His voice, and refuse to follow a stranger (John 10:5).

During Christ’s ministry, when He “dwelt among us” (John 1:14), he often caused division among the people.

- “So there was a division among the people because of Him ” (John 7:43).
- “Therefore said some of the Pharisees, This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabbath day. Others said, How can a man that is a sinner do such miracles? And there was a division among them ” (John 9:16).
- “There was a division therefore again among the Jews for these sayings ” (John 10:19).

It should not surprise us, therefore, when those whom He sent into the world also caused division by the word that they preached.

THE MULTITUDE OF THE CITY WERE DIVIDED

“But the multitude of the city was divided . . .” Other versions read, “the people of the city were divided,” NIV “the residents of the city were divided,” NRSV “the population of the city was divided,” NET “the mass of the city’s people was divided,” MONTGOMERY and “But the great mass of the people of the city were divided in their opinions.” PHILLIPS

Iconium was the capital city of Lycaonia, a region that was approximately twenty miles from east to west, and about thirteen miles from north to south. The population of the region, and of the city of Iconium in particular, is not known – at least I can find no figures. However, I assume that, because of Iconium’s status as capital of the region, a considerable number of people must have dwelt there. When, therefore, we read “the multitude of the city” being divided, we are to understand that an impressive number of people were involved. Keep in mind that from within the city, a “multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed.”

It is apparent that Paul and Barnabas had been diligent to fill the city with their doctrine, like the early disciples filled Jerusalem with the same teaching (Acts 5:28). Behold the power of the truth of the Gospel, that an entire city was noted for being divided over its acceptance. Paul and Barnabas had become so prominent in the region that they were the men over which the entire city was divided.

Place this along side of the reputation of the average group of professing Christians in our time. Remember, that the uniqueness of Paul and Barnabas was the message that they were preaching. It was not their political stance, or stand on social issues, or some other means of distinguishing one body of people from another.

PART HELD WITH THE JEWS

“ . . . and part held with the Jews . . .” Other versions read, “sided with the Jews,” NKJV “on the side of the Jews,” BBE “sided with the unbelieving Jews,” CJB “indeed held with the Jews,” DOUAY “were for the Jews,” GWN “supported the Jews,” NJB and “agreed with the Jewish leaders.” LIVING

This is a remarkable statement, indicating that the Jews had spread their venom throughout the city, and that Paul and Barnabas, together with those who were following them, had spread the word extensively also.

I doubt that holding with the Jews involved a direct repudiation of the Gospel. It rather appears to me that they joined the Jews in tagging Paul and Barnabas as trouble makers who had brought dissension into the city. We know from other accounts that this was the kind of report the Jews raised against those who were preaching the Gospel (Acts 16:20; 17:6; 28:22).

PART WITH THE APOSTLES

“ . . . and part with the apostles.” Other versions read, “the emissaries,” CJB “Paul and Barnabas.” IE Every other version that I have (forty) read “the apostles.”

It is certain that the reference is to Paul and Barnabas – and yet Barnabas was not an apostle, as ordinarily perceived. He was not an “apostle” in the sense of being placed as such in the church, for he, along with Saul, had been separated by the Holy Spirit for a special work (Acts 13:2). At this point, they were the apostles of the Holy Spirit, being sent forth by Him. This is confirmed by a later reference to them, with Barnabas’ being named first, as he was when the Spirit called them: “the apostles Barnabas and Paul” (Acts 14:14). These are the only two references to anyone other than the “twelve apostles” and Paul being referred to by that title. This indicates that Paul and Barnabas were still on the mission to which the Holy Spirit had called them, and for which they had been separated.

As a passing note, there is a line of reasoning that says signs and wonders were given to validate the words of the apostles of Christ alone. This is based on a statement made in Hebrews 2:3-4: “How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to His own will ?” That this is not intended to mean that was the exclusive experience of the apostles of Christ is apparent from the examples of Stephen (Acts 6:8), Philip (Acts 8:6), and the chapter we are now reviewing, in which the words of both Paul and Barnabas were accompanied with signs and wonders of confirmation. Further, this latter evidence extended over a period of time. “ Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord, which gave testimony unto the word of His grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands ” (Acts 14:3).

While this may appear a relatively minor point, it is significant to me because of how I had been taught in the schools, and by the leaders of the movement to which I belonged. There was a very deliberate and strong teaching that represented God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit, working exclusively through the apostles directly commissioned by Christ. This included a position concerning being baptized with the Holy Spirit, which experience was said to have been only for the apostles. Yet, in the tenth chapter of Acts, we have the testimony of Peter himself that this is what occurred at the house of Cornelius, causing him to recall what Jesus had said on the matter (Acts 11:16-17).

This erroneous view constrained some to say that God no longer worked in a miraculous manner – that this was something intended only for the beginning of the church. This was based on the words “at the first” in Hebrews 2:3. However, that text does not say only at the first ! Much of the teaching to which I refer was intended to confirm that those who emphasize miracles and being baptized in the Holy Spirit were wrong. That this emphasis is wrong cannot be denied. However, opposing arguments should be characterized by integrity and sound reasoning.

If it appears as though I have strong feelings on this matter, it is because that is precisely the case. I am offended that such an erroneous teaching penetrated so deeply into my reasoning.

My experience has confirmed to my spirit the absolute wrongness of a denominational approach to the truth, where official positions are developed and perpetrated just as though they were given by God. I am glad to maintain a hearty grasp of the truth, regardless of the messenger who brings it to me. I am also glad to abandon erroneous teaching with zeal, regardless of the individual who perpetrates that teaching. I find that many souls have had the same experience as myself, though it did not come in precisely the same form.

AN ASSAULT WAS MADE BY THE GENTILES, JEWS, AND RULERS

“ 5 And when there was an assault made both of the Gentiles, and also of the Jews with their rulers, to use them despitefully, and to stone them . . . ”

What is now described takes place after Paul and Barnabas had “spent a considerable time” NIV in Iconium. During that time they were “speaking boldly” of the grace of God, with the Lord confirming their words by granting “signs and wonders to be done by their hands” (4:3). We assume that the time was measured in terms of days, as opposed to “a whole year” Barnabas and Saul spent in Antioch (Acts 11:26), the “year and six months” Paul spent in Corinth (Acts 18:11), and two-to-three years he spent in Ephesus (Acts 19:10; 20:31). Our text suggests a somewhat shorter stay.

AN ASSAULT WAS MADE

“And when there was an assault made both of the Gentiles, and also of the Jews with their rulers . . .” Other versions read, “a violent attempt,” NKJV “an attempt was made,” NASB “there was a plot afoot,” NIV “there was made an onset,” ASV “made a move,” CJB “planned to attack,” NAB “decided to attack,” NLT “there was a purpose,” YLT “a plot to incite a mob,” LIVING “tried to hurt,” IE “a hostile movement was made,” WEYMOUTH “there was a movement,” WILLIAMS and “a hostile movement arose.” PHILLIPS

The hostility and aggressiveness of the enemies of God bears the characteristics of the devil himself, who motivates them. He is set to “make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ” (Rev 12:17). He moves people to develop stratagem against the people of God.

After sufficient time was spent stabilizing the saints and filling the area with the knowledge of the Gospel, opposition against Paul and Barnabas became more formal and aggressive. A planned attack was developed that involved both the Gentiles and the Jews “with their rulers.” This was precisely the same thing that took place years before, and miles away, in the city of Jerusalem. That time it was against the Lord’s Christ Himself: “For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together” (Acts 4:27). Now. The people from another area have the same response to the Christ’s messengers as men did to Him. That is because “as He is,” so were they “in the world” (1 John 4:17).

The hostility and aggressiveness of the enemies of God bears the characteristics of the devil himself, who motivates them. He is set to “make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ” (Rev 12:17). He moves people to develop stratagem against the people of God. David expressed such opposition in the thirty-eighth Psalm: “They also that seek after my life lay snares for me: and they that seek my hurt speak mischievous things, and imagine deceits all the day long” (Psa 38:12). And again he wrote, “The proud have hid a snare for me, and cords; they have spread a net by the wayside; they have set gins for me. Selah” (Psa 140:5).

TO USE THEM DESPITEFULLY

“ . . . to use them despitefully.” Other versions read, “to abuse,” NKJV “to mistreat,” NASB “to maltreat,” NIV “to molest,” RSV “to treat them shamefully,” ASV “to make an attack on them,” BBE “to assault,” CSB “to use them contumeliously,” DOUAY “to do them violence,” GENEVA “to insult them,” MRD “to do them violence,” PNT “to put them to shame,” TNT “to use them despitefully,” YLT and “molest [Paul and Barnabas].” AMPLIFIED

This type of treatment covered everything from speaking against Paul and Barnabas, misrepresenting them, withdrawing social privileges from them, and even beating and abusing them. The word suggests that these reproaches were planned, and specific strategies developed to carry them out.

The word “despitefully” is translated from a word meaning, “to be insolent; to behave insolently, wantonly, outrageously . . . to act insolently and shamefully toward one (so even Homer), to treat shamefully . . . of one who injures another by speaking evil of him,” THAYER “act to invade the sphere of another to his hurt,” FRIBERG “treat disgracefully, insult, mistreat,” UBS “to be abused, to be insulted, to suffer outrages,” LEH “treat in an arrogant or spiteful manner, mistreat, scoff at, insult.” GINGRICH

This type of treatment covered everything from speaking against Paul and Barnabas, misrepresenting them, withdrawing social privileges from them, and even beating and abusing them. The word suggests that these reproaches were planned, and specific strategies developed to carry them out. Like Pilate and Herod joined to conspired against Jesus (Lk 23:12) , so the Gentiles and the Jews joined in an aggressive opposition to Paul and Silas.

AND TO STONE THEM

“ . . . and to stone them . . . ”

The ultimate aim of these enemies was not merely to make life miserable for Paul and Barnabas, but to take their lives from them – “to stone them.”

Stoning was a form of capital punishment ordained under the Law of Moses. Those so punished included the following.

- Idolaters (Lev 20:2; Deut 17:2).
- Those who enticed others to idolatry (Deut 13:6).
- Blasphemers (Lev 24:10; 1 Kgs 21:10).
- Those who broke the Sabbath (Num 15:32).
- Fortune tellers and soothsayers (Lev 20:27).
- False prophets (Deut 13:6).
- Those who had shared in anything that had been cursed (Josh 7:25).
- Disobedient sons (Deut 21:18).
- A bride who was not a virgin (Deut 22:20-21).
- A man who seduced a bride-to-be (Deut 22:23).

Other nations also employed this method of capital punishment, including the Greeks, Spaniards, and Persians. During the Middle Ages, Germany practices stoning. McCLINTOK & STRONG’S With the Jews, this was the ordinary mode of execution (Ex 19:13; Lev 20:27; Josh 7:25; Lk 20:6; Acts 7:58; 14:5).

All of this confirms that the unbelieving Jews rallied the Gentiles together with them to do away with Paul and Barnabas. They did this because they were unable to negate what they were saying, or neutralize their influence in the city.

HATED BY THE WORLD

This is a classic example of the hatred the world has for the people of God – especially for those who declare the word of the Lord. There is a very real hostility of unbelievers against believers, and only the Lord can subdue the outbreak of it. It is totally unreasonable, because believers are not seeking to do harm, or destroy, any other people. Yet, the unregenerate are threatened by the presence of the godly, and therefore seek to rid themselves of their influence.

God's people must not be ignorant of this hatred, or set out to reduce it by a compromising stance. Both Jesus and the apostles spoke of this hatred, telling the people it ought not cause them to marvel.

- “And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved” (Mat 10:22).

- “Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake” (Luke 6:22).

- “If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you” (John 15:18).

- “I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world” (John 17:14).

- “Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you” (1 John 3:13).

This hatred will be proportionate to one's witness to the truth, and is owing to the hostility of the carnal mind against God Himself (Rom 8:7). Conversely, it is the result of being a friend of this present evil world (James 4:4).

WHEN THEY WERE AWARE OF IT

“ 6 They were ware of it, and fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about . . .”

Here we will behold how the Lord directs His people, and some of the involvements of one's steps being ordered of the Lord.

WHEN THEY WERE AWARE OF IT

“They were ware of it . . .” Other versions reads, “became aware of it,” NKJV “found out about it,” NIV “the apostles learned of it,” NRSV “got news of it,” BBE “understanding it,” DOUAY “knew it,” MRD “realized it,” NAB “apprised of it,” WEB “having become aware,” YLT “got wind of it,” MONTGOMERY “aware of the situation,” AMPLIFIED and “they got to know about it.” PHILLIPS

You may be sure that the enemies of Paul and Barnabas did not intend for them to know of their plotting, and their intention to put them to death. Notwithstanding, the Lord is “Head over all things to the church” (Eph 1:22), and manages the affairs of His people, working all things together for their good – both immediate and ultimate (Rom 8:28).

Speaking of the unveiling of evil intentions Solomon wrote, “Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bedchamber: for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter” (Eccl 10:20). That is, God will make known intentions as it is appropriate to His working. In this case, the news got to Paul and Barnabas that the Gentiles and Jews were involved in an aggressive conspiracy against them.

We have records of other plots that were made known to the people of God.

- “And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him: but their laying await was known of Saul. And they watched the gates day and night to kill him” (Acts 9:23-24).

- “But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people. And then immediately the brethren sent away Paul to go as it were to the sea: but Silas and Timotheus abode there still” (Acts 17:13-14).

One of the jeopardies of the age in which we live is the staggering number of distractions that confront us. There are whole generations that live their lives in complete isolation from reality, spending all of their time indulging in various forms of entertainment and self-indulgence. If some great catastrophe was about to happen, they would never know it, for they have retreated into their own private world of fantasy and delusion.

“And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul . . . And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul. Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him. So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee” (Acts 23:12-18).

SAFETY OFTEN DEPENDS ON ALERTNESS

God’s people cannot afford to wander through life in a kind of spiritual stupor, unaware of what is happening around them. There are dangers and snares to be avoided, and we must be alert to them. We are therefore admonished, “Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pet 5:8). Believers are also exhorted, “Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober” (1 Thess 5:6). And again, “Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 1:13).

One of the jeopardies of the age in which we live is the staggering number of distractions that confront us. There are whole generations that live their lives in complete isolation from reality, spending all of their time indulging in various forms of entertainment and self-indulgence. If some great catastrophe was about to happen, they would never know it, for they have retreated into their own private world of fantasy and delusion. This has also crept into the church. There is now a form of purported worship in which a person actually becomes insensitive to the realities of spiritual progress and warfare. In this religious delusion, the moment is everything, and eternity is nothing.

Unbeknown to the perpetrators of this spurious approach to religion, a certain naivete is being developed that makes the soul spiritually simple. People subjected to this kind of teaching begin to imagine that they live in a moral and spiritual vacuum, and thus become disarmed and vulnerable to the devices of the wicked one. They approach life in an overly-simplistic manner that diminishes the need for faith, and gives the advantage to the adversary.

There is a sense in which a person is not safe beyond the level of their own awareness. Had Paul and Barnabas been simplistic in their approach to life, they would probably never have known about the plots of their enemies. Enamored with what appeared to be institutional success, they would have fallen into the nets that were spread for them. However, praise the Lord, this was not their manner, and thus they were delivered from the plots that were against them.

THEY FLED

“ . . . and fled . . .” Other versions read, “went in flight,” BBE “escaped,” CJB “departed and fled,” MRD “went off for safety,” NJB and “left that town.” LIVING

The word “fled” is translated from the Greek word katefugon , which has the following lexical meaning: “flee away, flee for refuge,” THAYER and “to flee for safety,” LOUW-NIDA

We must not view this flight as a mere attempt to save their lives. It was rather an effort to further preach the Gospel, carrying out the work to which the Holy Spirit had called them.

We must not view this flight as a mere attempt to save their lives. It was rather an effort to further preach the Gospel, carrying out the work to which the Holy Spirit had called them. We know that it was not Paul's manner to count his life dear unto himself (Acts 20:24). It was his mission that compelled him, not longevity in this world. Of course, one of the requisites for serving the Lord is hating one's own life in this world (Lk 14:26). John saw a vision of those who "loved not their lives unto death" (Rev 12:11).

The Words and Example of Jesus

I do not doubt that they were aware of the words Jesus Himself delivered to His disciples where He first sent them out. "And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved. But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another : for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come. The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord" (Mat 10:22-24). Confirming that the disciple is to conduct himself as his Master, Jesus departed from regions in which enemies sought to take His life. "After these things Jesus walked in Galilee: for He would not walk in Jewry, because the Jews sought to kill Him" (John 7:1). Again it is written, "Therefore they sought again to take Him: but He escaped out of their hand, and went away again beyond Jordan into the place where John at first baptized; and there He abode" (John 10:40). And again, "Then from that day forth they took counsel together for to put Him to death. Jesus therefore walked no more openly among the Jews; but went thence unto a country near to the wilderness, into a city called Ephraim, and there continued with His disciples" (John 11:53-54).

However, when the time came for Christ's death, a time that had been appointed by God Himself, Jesus returned to Jerusalem, the citadel of Jewry (Matt 21). Commencing with the triumphal entry, Jesus was again in the presence of His enemies, and would remain there until His betrayal, arrest, and crucifixion. He did this because this was His enemies "hour" (Lk 22:53).

Until this time, two things took place.

- First, working through the circumstances, His enemies were frustrated in their attempts to take Him, because His hour had not yet come. It is written: "Then they sought to take him: but no man laid hands on him, because his hour was not yet come" (John 7:30). And again, "These words spake Jesus in the treasury, as he taught in the temple: and no man laid hands on him; for his hour was not yet come" (John 8:20).

- Second, because Jesus refused to "tempt" the Lord, He did not walk unwisely, putting Himself in circumstances that would provoke the enemy to be aggressive before the appointed time. He therefore withdrew when it was appropriate. This also displayed the Divine manner of not remaining where there is not a hunger and thirst for the Living God.

This same manner of thinking is seen in the conduct of Paul and Barnabas.

The Higher View

Viewed from the higher vantage point, the work of Paul and Barnabas in Iconium, at least for the time, had come to a close. That is the only reason their opponents were successful in marshaling the people against them. It is written in the Psalms, "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain" (Psa 76:10). The idea is that God controls the wrath of men so that it cannot break out of its appointed bounds. The Lord uses the wrath of men to accomplish His own purposes – as in the cases of Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar. But when that wrath interferes with Divine objectives, it is subdued and controlled from heaven, so that the purposes of men cannot be carried out as they desire.

For example, when the Jewish leaders opposed Christ, they were powerless to carry out their designs until the time appointed for Christ's death had arrived. Even then, they could not proceed one millimeter past the Divine appointment, but only fulfilled what was purposed in heaven (Acts 2:23; 4:26). The rest of their wrath was restrained. That is how the Lord works. It is why it is written, "Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to Him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator" (1 Pet 4:19).

There are circumstances from which we must flee, or run. Lot escaped from Sodom (Gen 19:17-23). Jacob fled from Esau (Gen 35:7). Joseph had to flee from Potiphar's wife (Gen 39:7). David fled from Saul (Psa 57:1). Although he did not fear the wrath of the king, Moses wisely fled from Pharaoh (Ex 2:15; Heb 11:27). Joseph, Mary, and the Holy Child were forced to flee to Egypt (Matt 2:13). Jesus told His disciples when they were persecuted in one city, to flee to another (Matt 10:23). Saul was forced to leave Damascus (Acts 9:26). Paul and Barnabas were expelled the th coasts around Antioch (Acts 13:50). Certain Jesus, including Aquila and Priscilla, were forced to leave Rome (Acts 18:2).

There are times when the appropriate action is to flee, removing oneself from the area of harm. Blessed is that person who is able to recognize such times and take the appropriate action.

LYSTRA, DERBE, AND CITIES OF LYCAONIA

" . . . unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about . . ."

Lystra and Derbe were not as far from Iconium as Iconium was from Antioch. In fact, Lystra was only 5-8 miles from Iconium, while Iconium was about 75 miles from Antioch. From this we see that the hostility against Paul and Barnabas that was raised in Iconium did not spread far at the first. There were some sheaves of spiritual wheat to be reaped in that area, therefore Paul and Barnabas remained in the general territory.

This area, according to historians, was a physically dry and arid domain, without refreshing streams, and subject to cooler temperatures. But it was also a spiritually arid realm that required the refreshing rain of the Gospel. Undaunted by the opposition they had faced in Iconium, Paul and Barnabas continue in their preaching ministry. They had "the spirit of faith," and therefore speak. As it is written, "we also believe, and therefore speak" (2 Cor 4:13; Psa 116:10).

THERE THEY PREACHED THE GOSPEL

" 7 And there they preached the gospel." Other versions read, "they were preaching the Gospel," NKJV "they .continued to preach the Gospel," NASB "they continued to preach the good news," NIV "they continued proclaiming the good news," NRSV "went on preaching the good news there," BBE "they kept evangelizing," CSB "they were announcing the glad tidings," DARBY "Spread the good news there," GWN "told the Good News there," IE and "kept telling the good news." WILLIAMS

The word "preaching" is translated from the Greek word euvaggelizo,menoi , which means "to bring good news, to announce glad tidings." THAYER The tense of the verb indicates extensive and continual activity. Their message was news , as compared with procedures and methodologies. It was an announcement , as compared with a recommendation. It was something that was told , as compared with a response to various inquiries concerning life in this world. It was a proclamation , as compared to a formula. Paul and Barnabas did not come as problem-solvers, or consultants, or counselors. They came as proclaimers – those who had a message to affirm that was fundamentally good. They did not come to start a work for the needy. Their mission was not to get the children off the streets, or fight against social injustices. It is not that such things are wrong of themselves. Rather, they are not what Jesus came to do, and they are not what was addressed in His atoning death and justifying resurrection. The Gospel is a message that will, if believed and obeyed, move men to be considerate and charitable among their peers. However, the issue in the message of the Gospel is the relation of men with God .

In our current Christian environment, the meaning of the word “Gospel” is scarcely known. Some imagine that it is the Scriptures themselves, so if a person preaches from the Bible, whether from Moses, Solomon, or other text, “the Gospel” is considered to have been preached. Others believe that the Gospel is the details of what is required for a person to be saved. Still others have heard the definition that was common among those with whom I companied. It was said, “The Gospel consists of facts to be believed, commands to be obeyed, and promised to be received.” All of those points are certainly true, but they emphatically do not comprise the Gospel.

In this day of salvation, it is the message itself that moves men to inquire about salvation, and to pursue those who have an understanding of it. The Holy Spirit uses the message to penetrate the hearts of men, exposing their thoughts and intents. It is the message through which the “door of faith” is opened (Acts 14:27), as well as “the door of hope” (Hos 2:15).

Although it is a bit cumbersome, it will be helpful to note what is said to have actually been preached to this point in the book of Acts. I provide this information in order that it can be compared with the ordinary concept of preaching. Keep in mind that this preaching produced the results recorded in this record. It was all centered outside of man himself, focusing on what the Lord had done and will do. Let it be clear that a man-centered gospel is “another gospel” (2 Cor 11:4; Gal 1:6). By “man-centered gospel,” I mean a message that makes humanity the heart of the matter. In such a case, the well being of men in this world is set forth as the fundamental advantage.

PETER

- The fulfillment of the prophecy of Joel (2:16-21; Joel 2:28-32).
- Jesus was a Man publically approved by God (2:22).
- Jesus was delivered up by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God (2:23a).
- The Jews crucified Jesus through wicked hands, but God nullified their judgment (2:23b).
- God raised Jesus from the dead, loosing Him from the pains of death (2:24a).
- It was not possible for Jesus to be held by death (2:24b).

Keep in mind that this preaching produced the results recorded in this record. It was all centered outside of man himself, focusing on what the Lord had done and will do. Let it be clear that a man-centered gospel is “another gospel” (2 Cor 11:4; Gal 1:6). By “man-centered gospel,” I mean a message that makes humanity the heart of the matter.

3The prophecy of David was fulfilled in Christ’s resurrection (2:25-31; Psa 16:8-11).

- God raised Jesus from the dead (2:32).
- Jesus shed forth the Holy Spirit (2:33).
- Jesus has fulfilled the prophecy of David concerning being seated at the right hand of God (2:33-35; Psa 110:1).
- God has made Jesus both Lord and Christ (2:36).
- The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob glorified His Son Jesus (3:13a).

- The Jews delivered up Jesus, denying Him when Pilate was determined to let Him go – yet God raised Him up (3:13-15).
- Faith in Jesus' name gave perfect soundness to a man who was lame from his mother's womb (3:16).
- In Jesus God fulfilled what He had foretold in the prophets (3:18).
- Sins can be blotted out, and times of refreshing come from the presence of the Lord (3:19).
- God will send Jesus, whom the heavens will retain until all the words of the prophets have been fulfilled (3:20-21).
- In Jesus, God has fulfilled the prophecy of Moses concerning a coming prophet (3:22; Deut 18:15-18).
- Whoever does not hear Jesus will be destroyed from among the people (3:23; Deut 18:19).
- All the prophets from Samuel foretold the times of Christ (3:24).
- According to His promise to Abraham, God raised up Jesus and sent Him to bless the people in turning them away from their iniquities (3:25-26).
- Jesus is the Stone whom the builders rejected, yet God made Him the Head of the corner (4:11; Psa 118:22-23; Isa 28:16y).
- There is salvation in none other but Jesus (4:12).
- God raised up the Jesus the Jews hanged on a tree (5:30).
- God exalted Jesus to give repentance and the forgiveness of sins (5:31).
- In the Temple and from house to house, they preached Jesus Christ (5:42).
- Peter and John "preached the word of the Lord" to the Samaritans (8:25).
- God accepts those in every nation who fear Him and work righteousness (10:35).
- God sent the message of preaching peace by Jesus Christ (10:36a).
- Jesus is "Lord of all" (10:36b).
- God anointed Jesus with the Holy Spirit and power (10:38a).
- Jesus went about doing good, and healing all who were oppressed of the devil (10:38b).
- The Jews slew Jesus and hanged Him on a tree, but God raised Him from the dead (10:39-40a).
- Following His resurrection, God showed Jesus openly, but only to selected witnesses (10:40b-41).
- Jesus commanded His disciples to preach and to testify that He had been ordained by God to judge the living and the dead (10:42).
- The prophets gave witness that whoever believed in Jesus would receive remission of sins (10:43).

STEPHEN

- The God of glory appeared to Abraham, giving Him the promise or future blessing (6:2-8).
- The patriarchs sold Joseph into Egypt, but God was with him, giving him favor in the eyes of Pharaoh, and raising him to prominence in the land, thereby providing for Israel's sustenance and development (6:9-16).

- When the time of the promise or Israel's deliverance drew nigh, the people began to grow and multiply, and were finally delivered from Egypt through the hand of Moses, who himself was raised in Egypt, and God sustained them in the wilderness for forty years (6:17-36).

- God promised Moses He would raise up a Prophet (6:37).

- God tolerated Israel's wayward ways in the wilderness, confirming they were fundamentally hard hearted (6:38-44).

- When Israel came into Canaan, God drove out the Gentiles before them, giving them the land (6:45).

- Solomon built a Temple for the Lord, even though it was not intended to be the permanent habitation of God (6:46-50).

- Israel continued to be stiff-necked, rejecting God's Savior (6:51-53).

THOSE SCATTERED BY PERSECUTION

- They went "everywhere, preaching the word" (8:4; 11:19).

- Preached the Lord Jesus (11:20).

PHILIP

- Philip "preached Christ" in the city of Samaria (8:5).

- Preached the things concerning the kingdom of God (8:12).

- Preached Jesus to the Ethiopian eunuch (8:35).

PAUL

- Preached that Christ was the Son of God (9:20).

- Proved that Jesus was "very Christ" (9:22).

- Paul, with Barnabas, preached the word of God (13:5).

- God chose Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, exalted the people who came from them, and delivered them from Egypt (13:17).

- God endured the wayward manner of the Israelites in the wilderness (13:18).

- God destroyed seven nations who occupied Canaan, and gave their land to Israel (13:19).

- God gave Israel Judges, King Saul, and King David 13:20-22).

- God raised up Jesus as David's promised Seed (13:23; 2 Sam 7:12-16).

- John the Baptist prepared the way for Jesus by preaching the baptism of repentance (13:24-25).

- Through Jesus, the word of salvation was sent to Israel (13:26).

- Even though the Scriptures were read every day in their synagogues, Israel rejected Jesus, fulfilling what was written of Him by hanging Him on a tree, and placing Him in a sepulcher (13:27-29).

- God raised Jesus from the dead, and He was seen by witnesses for many days, confirming He was alive (13:30-31).

- Declared glad tidings that the promise God made to the fathers was fulfilled in Jesus, guaranteeing that the sure mercies of David could be experienced (13:32-37).
- Through Jesus is preached the forgiveness of sins (13:38).
- By Jesus, all who believe on Him are justified from all things (13:39).
- It was necessary that the word of salvation first be preached to the Jews (13:46a).
- They turned to the Gentiles, because God commanded that the light of the Gospel be shined upon them (13:46b-47).
- The word of the Lord was published throughout the region of Antioch (14:49).
- Preached the word of God's grace in Iconium, with the Lord testifying to its truth by granting signs and wonders to be done through Paul and Barnabas (14:3).

BARNABAS

- Exhorted believers to cleave to the Lord with purpose of heart (11:23).

You will search in vain for a message that centered in the personal, domestic, social, or political problems of humanity. What God had done was consistently the heart of what was proclaimed.

AN EXCELLENT REPRESENTATION

The instances of preaching that have been reported thus far are an excellent representation. A variety of places, regions, and people, have been placed before us.

- CITIES. Jerusalem (5:28), Samaria (8:5), Damascus (9:27), Lydda (9:32), Caesarea (10:24), Joppa (9:42), Salamis (13:5), Paphos (13:6), Antioch (13:14), Iconium (14:1), Lystra (14:6), Derbe (14:6).
- LOCATIONS. Judaea, Samaria, and Galilee (9:31), cities (8:46), a desert (8:26; 14:6), Saron (9:35), Cyprus (13:4), Pisidia (13:14), Lycaonia (14:6).
- PLACES. The Temple (2:46; 5:20), synagogues (6:9; 9:20; 13:5; 14:1), houses (5:42; 10:22), a chariot (8:29-31), a deputies residence (13:7).
- GROUPS OF PEOPLE. Jews and Greeks (14:1), Gentiles (10:45; 13:42), Samaritans.

THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED

A careful perusal of these records will confirm the total absence of specialized ministries, social involvements, domestic solutions, and similar things, that are so common in our time. There is no involvement in the personal affairs or problems of the people. Aside from a daily ministration to believing widows (6:1), and the determination to send relief to the poor saints in Jerusalem (11:29), there is no strictly philanthropic work reported. It is certainly not that such activities are unlawful, nor do I suggest they were totally absent. However, they were not the focus of the spread of the Gospel. They were not set forth as a means of getting the people's attention, or breaking through to them. It is the priority and promotion of such activities that is questionable, not their existence. In other words, in our time, the preaching of the Gospel has actually been upstaged by activities that require no spiritual understanding or proclamation of "the glorious gospel of the blessed God" (1 Tim 1:11).

Furthermore, it ought to be abundantly evident that those who preached did not deliver a message that was conducive to exploitation. No one could build a career or institution on what was preached. No one promoted themselves, or even the body of believers they represented. It was spiritually unique, but did not have the traits required to promote purely fleshly interests. It is quite possible to read this book, and yet miss all of this because of the acceptance of sectarian views – views that throw a veil over the heart.

CONCLUSION

The spread of the Gospel during the first half of the first century is remarkable – particularly when compared with the efforts of the twentieth century church. Assuming that the brethren from other nations who were converted on the day of Pentecost eventually returned to their native lands, and taking into consideration the scattering of believers during the persecution that arose because of Stephen, together with the ministry of the apostles and other prophets and evangelists, the Gospel was declared in a geographical area approximately 2,200 miles east to west, and 950 miles north to south.

All of this was done without the technologies and modes of travel that are available to the church today. There was obviously something about that early church that differed vastly from the highly structured religious organizations of our day. Here are several considerations that I have pondered concerning that difference.

- The people had been genuinely converted, and possessed new hearts and spirits.
- The believers were united, being joined together with the same mind and the same judgment.
- Their lives were less cumbered with the affairs of this world.
- To the point of our text, professional religious people, while dominant in Judaism, had not yet come into the church.
- There was a greater familiarity with the Scriptures.
- A pure Gospel was preached that was not tainted with the traditions of men.
- Those who preached the Word were sensitive to the Lord, and could be directed by Him.
- The preachers and teachers were not driven by a desire to correct society, but were rather motivated by the greatness of the message they had received.
- They were convinced of what men were by nature, and what they could be by the grace of God.
- There was a greater awareness of what took place when Jesus took away the sins of the world.
- They were persuaded that God was with them.
- They had a prevailing confidence and assurance of the presence and power of the Lord.
- They were not seeking a position in the church, but were keenly aware of the one that had been assigned to them.
- They were not seeking to be popular with men.
- They did not count their own lives dear to themselves, but willingly denied self.

There are other things to be considered, but this will suffice to confirm that something of staggering proportions has taken place within the church since the time of our text. Its lack of power and commitment stares us in the face, and cannot be denied. The professing church has grown accustomed to vacillating and uncommitted church members, mediocre preaching, Scriptural illiteracy, and unanswered prayers. It now leans heavily upon the wisdom of men, and takes pleasure in the approval and accolades of those who give no evidence of identity with God through Christ. Jesus has now been upstaged by everything from scholarship to those who create the kind of programs and methodologies that please men.

What we are seeing in the book of Acts is the display of very real spiritual life. This is the kind of life that is produced when the Father and the Son take up Their abode in those who love Jesus and keep His words (John 14:21,23). There is no reason to imagine that the principles of spiritual life have changed, or that God now operates according to differing principles. This is life as it really is.

Lesson #62

EXPERIENCES IN LYSTRA

“ 14:8 And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked: 9 The same heard Paul speak: who steadfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed, 10 Said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked. 11 And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men. 12 And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker. 13 Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done sacrifice with the people. 14 Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out, 15 And saying, Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God, which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein: 16 Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways. 17 Nevertheless He left not Himself without witness, in that He did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness. 18 And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them. 19 And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people, and, having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead. 20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.” (Acts 14:8-20)

INTRODUCTION

Continuing in the work to which the Holy Spirit had called them, Paul and Barnabas remain in the area of Asia Minor (southern part of modern Turkey), filling the area with the Word of God. We are being exposed to the faithfulness of those who are characterized by their “work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope” (1 Thess 1:5), with their “work of faith” being fulfilled “with power” (2 Thess 1: 1 1). Their efforts were not the result of human strategies or plans. They were rather the direct result of a Divine calling, and the participation of the brethren in Antioch in that calling.

IMPORTANT THINGS TO NOTE

The record of the initiation of this work is important to note, for it provides us with a perspective of the manner in which the work of the Lord is carried out.

- The calling took place in a church where “certain prophets and teachers” were present (13:1).
- The calling was made known while the church “ministered to the Lord, and fasted” (13:2a).
- The calling, issued by the Holy Spirit, was specific, calling for the separation of Barnabas and Saul for the work unto which He had called them (13:2b).
- The church sent them forth to the work after they had fasted and prayed, laying their hands on them (13:3).

From this we learn several valuable lessons.

A SPIRITUAL ENVIRONMENT

The work of the Lord is done within a spiritually cultured environment, where some level of spiritual maturity exists, and insightful leaders are present. This is a surrounding in which there is an acute consciousness of God, as well as unquestioned commitment to Him. This is an environment in which the Lord can make Himself and His will known.

THE NECESSITY OF FAITHFULNESS

From the outset of the call of the Spirit, Paul and Barnabas proved themselves to be faithful ministers.

- Upon being called and set apart by the brethren in Antioch, they departed to the island of Cyprus (13:4).

Those who go about the ministry of the Word with a mind to please the people, or to build an institution, have been recalcitrant in their stewardship. They have failed to meet the requirement of a steward, which is absolute faithfulness to the Master who gave them their stewardship.

When they arrived on the island, they immediately began preaching the Gospel (13:5).

- They went throughout the island preaching the Word (13:6).
- Upon being called by the deputy of the island to hear the Word of God. They faithfully delivered it, even shutting down a certain sorcerer who sought turn away the deputy from the faith (13:12).
- Departing from Perga, Paul and Barnabas went to Antioch of Pisida, where they powerfully preached the Word (13:14-41).
- When certain Gentiles asked to hear more of the Word, these servants faithfully delivered it to them, exhorting them to continue in the grace of God. The word of God was published throughout the entire region (13:42-49).
- After being expelled from that region, Paul and Barnabas headed for Iconium, leaving the disciples in Antioch filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit (13:50-52).
- Arriving in Iconium, they faithfully preached the word again. They remained in Iconium for a long time, speaking boldly in the Lord (14:1-3).
- When they were finally forced to leave the area, they went to Lystra, where they faithfully continued to minister the Word (14:4-7).

The Divine Requirement

Stewards are required to be faithful – and there are no exceptions. “Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful” (1 Cor 4:2). Other versions read, “found trustworthy,” NASB “prove faithful,” NRSV “does just what his Master tells him to do,” LIVING “fidelity is what it required,” WEYMOUTH and “faithful [proving himself worthy of trust].” AMPLIFIED If the Lord grants insight to the steward, he must proclaim it. If he is commanded to feed the sheep, he must feed them. If he is required to preach the word instant in season and out of season, that is precisely what he must do.

In one of His parables, Jesus spoke of an unfaithful steward as someone who could “be no longer steward.” The knowledge of this inevitability moved the steward to take special measures to secure his position (Lk 16:2-8). In the end, unfaithful, slothful, and unprofitable servants will thrust from the presence of the Lord. The action is described in words that shake the lethargic soul. “And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth” (Matt 25:30). “But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; And shall begin to smite his fellowservants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth” (Mat 24:48-51). Unfaithful stewards are referred to as “wicked and slothful servants” (Matt 25:26).

Those who go about the ministry of the Word with a mind to please the people, or to build an institution, have been recalcitrant in their stewardship. They have failed to meet the requirement of a steward, which is absolute faithfulness to the Master who gave them their stewardship. That is not an excusable situation.

Paul and Barnabas are examples of faithful stewards – fulfilling their ministry in the face of opposition, always mindful of the One who commissioned them, and of the care of His people.

The point is that faithfulness is confirmed in the crucible of experience, whether favorable or unfavorable, pleasant or unpleasant. Men are not called to labor for the Lord in a kind of vacuum, where they are insulated from trouble and difficulty.

TOKENS OF APPROVAL

The faithfulness of a steward is demonstrable – i.e., it is seen in his response to the various circumstances confronted in his ministry. Paul cited several of these circumstances, showing that he had remained a faithful and approved steward through them. He referred to this as “approving ourselves as the ministers of God” (2 Cor 6:4-10).

- In much patience (endurance).
- During afflictions, or tribulations.
- In necessities, or times of need.
- In distresses, or calamities.
- When beaten with stripes.
- When imprisoned.
- During tumults, or commotion.
- In labors, or difficult work.
- During watching, or sleeplessness.
- During fastings, or times of hunger.
- By maintaining purity.
- By knowledge, or understanding.
- By longsuffering.
- By kindness, or gentleness.
- By submitting to the Spirit.
- By unfeigned, or unpretentious love.
- By speaking the truth.
- By laboring in the power of God.
- By being properly armed with righteousness.
- When honored or dishonored.
- When people spoke evil or well of him.
- When perceived as a deceiver by his enemies, or as true by the faithful.
- Whether he was unknown or well known.
- In dying to the world, yet living unto God.
- Enduring chastening, yet not killed.
- When sorrowful, yet always rejoicing.
- As being poor, yet making many rich.
- As having nothing, yet possessing all things.

Paul’s faithfulness as the steward of God was also seen in the following, as recorded in 2 Corinthians 4:2.

- Renouncing dishonest things.
- Not walking in craftiness.
- Not handling the Word of God deceitfully.
- Making the truth known.

- Commending himself to every man's conscience.

The point is that faithfulness is confirmed in the crucible of experience, whether favorable or unfavorable, pleasant or unpleasant. Men are not called to labor for the Lord in a kind of vacuum, where they are insulated from trouble and difficulty. That is not the circumstance under which our Lord ministered when He was among men, and it is not how His stewards are sent forth.

Oh, this is a matter that must be seen in our text. I have known many a person whom I felt was called to work for the Lord who fell beneath the weight of circumstance. They left the work like John Mark, when he departed from the mission, returning to Jerusalem from Perga – choosing to do so in the middle of the work (Acts 13:13). Like Demas, they forsook the work of the Lord because of their love for the world (2 Tim 4:10).

Not only are we being subjected to the history of the church, we are beholding how the work of the Lord is carried out by faithful stewards. We are witnessing the power of a devoted heart, and the stamina that is produced by cleaving to the Lord with purpose of heart. May the record of your appetite to be found faithful!

My prayer is that the necessity of faithfulness and consistency will be perceived by you, and that you will set your face steadfastly toward the Jerusalem that is above. Even then, the course you are called to navigate will be difficult and challenging, requiring all of your heart, soul, mind, and strength. Without that spiritual posture, you will simply not be able to finish the course, and will be dashed upon the rocks of despair.

Oh, being a Christian is serious business, because when you are “added to the Lord” (Acts 5:14), you are placed in His body, precisely where the Lord intends (1 Cor 12:18). You have been given something to do, and you are expected to do it. Further, just as in the case of Paul and Barnabas, you will be given everything that is required for the work – however, those supplies will be dispensed only within the context of absolute and unwavering faithfulness.

PAUL AND BARNABAS ENTER LYSTRA

In our text, Paul and Barnabas will enter Lystra. Upon entering Lystra, they confront a man cripple from his mother's womb, who listened to what Paul was saying. Paul, perceiving that the man had faith to be healed, shouted for him to stand on his feet. The man immediately leaped up and walked. This set in motion a series of circumstances that would confirm the character of both Paul and Barnabas. They would be put to the test concerning the receiving of undue honor, and the experience of hostile and aggressive opposition. In both cases, they will prove themselves to be men of God. They will not alter their message, nor will they cease to teach and preach.

This text confirms the management and control of the work of the Lord from heaven, and the inability of the foe to thwart Divine determinations. Of course, all of that is realized through faith. Furthermore, faith can only be maintained in an environment of faithful activity – fighting the good fight of faith, putting on the whole armor of God, and being “blameless as the steward of God” (Tit 1:7).

THE IMPOTENT MAN AT LYSTRA

“ 14:8 And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked: 9 The same heard Paul speak: who steadfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed, 10 Said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked.”

As soon as Paul and Barnabas entered into Lystra, the text indicates they began preaching. This time the details of what they said, and their specific location, are not provided. Rather, a specific incident is chronicled, together with the impact that it had upon the people of that region.

A CERTAIN MAN

“And there sat a certain man at Lystra . . .” The Greek word from which “man” is translated is avnh.r, and means “an adult male.” THAYER It is often used to denote a married man, emphasized someone of mature years. This accentuates what was involved in this man having never walked. His feet had been impotent for sufficient time for all of the muscles and ligaments to have deteriorated beyond repair.

HE HAD NEVER WALKED

“ . . . impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked . . .” Other versions read, “never having had the power of walking,” BBE “never been able to walk,” GWN and “never walked in his life.” NJB

The Scriptures contain a record of genuine miracles. They ought to play a prominent role in the formation of our ideas about miracles. To the point of our text, here is an overview of some of those miracles, particularly where specifics are given. There are also clusters of miracles where specifics are not given (2:43; 5:12; 6:8; 8:6; 14:3).

- Peter and John heal a man “lame from his mother’s womb” (3:1-8).
- Ananias and Sapphira were struck dead (5:5-10).
- People were brought to Peter on beds and couches, sick folks, and those vexed with unclean spirits, and they were all healed (5:15-16).
- The apostles are delivered from prison by an angel (5:19-23).
- Philip cast out evil spirits and healed the palsied and lame (8:7).
- Peter healed Aeneas, who had been bedfast for eight years (9:33-34).
- Peter raised Dorcas from the dead (9:39-41).
- Peter is delivered from prison by an angel (12:7-11).
- Paul strikes Elymas blind for a season (13:11).

With the exception of raising Dorcas from the dead and the apostles and Peter being delivered from prison, these were all public miracles. Even in the exceptions, confirmation of the unseen miracles was established among the people. In all of the instances, the cases were hopeless. It was not possible that what was wrought by God could have been accomplished in any other way, or by any other means. This is the case throughout the Scriptures.

Often, what is represented as the work of God Almighty is being represented as flawed, inefficient, and bearing a remarkable resemblance to the ordinary and the works of men.

A considerable amount of the modern day emphasis on the miraculous bears very little similarity to the signs and wonders recorded in Scripture. This by no means suggests a Divinely ordered cessation of miracles. It rather reveals the nature of the apostasy that exists in our time. Often, what is represented as the work of God Almighty is being represented as flawed, inefficient, and bearing a remarkable resemblance to the ordinary and the works of men.

HE HEARD PAUL SPEAK

“The same heard Paul speak . . .” Other versions read, “listened to Paul as he spoke,” NASB “listened to Paul as he was speaking,” NIV “giving ear to the preaching of Paul,” BBE “listened to

Paul preaching,” NJB “listening as Paul preached,” NLT “heard Paul preach,” TNT “listened to one of Paul’s sermons,” WEYMOUTH and “He was listening to Paul as he talked.” AMPLIFIED

The Greek word from which “speak” is translated is lalou/ntoj. The lexical meaning of the word is, “to emit a voice make oneself heard; hence to utter or form words with the mouth, to speak,” THAYER “to speak as with a message,” FRIBERG “preach, proclaim,” UBS “to proclaim.” GINGRICH

- The word is used of focused speaking – such as the teaching of our Lord (Matt 9:18; 12:46; 13:3,33; 23:1).
- The preaching of the apostles when first sent out by the Lord (Matt 10:19-20).
- The preaching of the apostles following Christ’s enthronement in heaven (Acts 4:1,20,29,31; 5:20).
- Stephen’s preaching (Acts 6:10), the preaching of Peter and John in villages of the Samaritans (Acts 8:25).
- The preaching of newly converted Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9:19).
- Peter’s preaching at the house of Cornelius (Acts 10:44).
- The request of the Gentiles in Antioch to have Paul preach the Gospel to them (Acts 13:42).

The word employed here does not emphasize the content of what was said, but the lifting up of the voice to make the message known. In other words, Paul was not holding a casual conversation with someone which this lame man overheard. Rather, Paul was engaged in the a public proclamation. The content of his message is not given, and there really is no need for us to have that information. We already know that Paul limited his speaking to matters pertaining to the salvation of God. He certainly was not delivering a political discourse, or rehearsing some of his personal experiences. Elsewhere he identified his preaching as consistently declaring “all the counsel of God” (Acts 20:27), and “witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come” (Acts 26:22).

Our text says the lame man “heard” Paul speaking. The word translated “heard” means “to attend to . . . consider what is or has been said . . . understand and perceive the sense of what is said.” THAYER This was not a casual hearing, but one in which what Paul was saying was actually being grasped by the man. We know this is the case by the words that follow.

Our times are marked by a decided reduction in the ability of people to hear the truth with interest and discernment. A kind of religion is being hawked that moves people to view the Word of God as either altogether irrelevant, or nothing more than something novel. This posture is what has enabled religious entertainers to make inroads into the professing church. It is what has given rise to the growing interest in, what is erroneously called, “praise and worship.” However, after all has been said and done, the surfacing of faith in the book of Acts is always the result of hearing insightful preaching (Acts 4:4; 8:12; 10:45; 11:20-21; 13:12,48; 14:1). And, as if the examples are not enough, we are categorically taught that faith comes by means of hearing the preaching of the Gospel by a person who has been sent by God (Rom 10:14-17).

PAUL PERCEIVED HE HAD FAITH TO BE HEALED

“ . . . who steadfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed . . . ”

As has already been confirmed, Paul was perceptive of his audience. Other preachers manifested this quality as well. This perception moved the speakers to speak in a certain manner, and with a particular focus.

- Peter (Acts 2:23; 3:12; 4:11; 8:21).
- Stephen (Acts 7:51).
- Paul (Acts 13:46).

Now, Paul perceives this lame man, and focuses upon him.

“Steadfastly Beholding Him”

Other versions read, “observing him intently,” NKJV “fixed his gaze upon him,” NASB “looked directly at him,” NIV “observing him closely,” CSB “stared intently at him,” NET “looking straight at him,” NLT “looking steadily at him,” WEYMOUTH “watched him closely,” ISV and “looking him straight in the eye.” PHILLIPS

The attentiveness of this man caused him to stand out to Paul, and he focused upon him. Something of Paul is revealed in this action. First, it is obvious that he sought for indications of interest. Second, he was not seeking the approbation of men, else he would have given his attention to influential or leading people. This was a lame man, and probably without any social prominence. Yet, his interest in the Word of the Lord distinguished him to Paul. This is a consistent quality in those who have spiritual understanding and are motivated by “the spirit of faith.” When the preacher has insight into the things of God, and himself has imbibed and is living by the Word he preaches, he is at once drawn to those who have an interest in that word.

Religious opportunists have other priorities, and therefore frequently ignore those who have a compelling interest in and love for the truth. This is a most serious circumstance. I do not know if it is possible to give a satisfactory assessment of the spiritual retardation that is directly traceable to the failure of professed preachers and teachers to detect and focus upon those who desire the truth. I know that during my formative years, when I first saw the magnitude of the truth, it was exceedingly difficult to find a teacher who could assuage my thirst, or gave any evidence of wanting to do so. The truth of the matter is that I was among a body of people who had little or no interest in the truth, which made those whose hearts craved the truth appear to be nothing more than temporary and impractical zealots.

Those who are able to peruse the religious environment with some measure of discernment know that most church programs are not tailored for those who have a compelling interest in the truth, desire to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord, or are seeking a city which has foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God.

However, this was not true of the proclaimers of truth who are mentioned in Scripture. Their message awakened a fervent quest in those who loved the truth, and the speakers had an intense interest in them.

We do not know the size of the audience to whom Paul was speaking. The fact that he fastened his eyes upon this lame man indicated that he was not the only one there.

“Perceiving He Had Faith”

Here is a most remarkable statement. As Paul steadfastly beheld this man, he perceived “he had faith to be healed.” Other versions read, “had seen that he had faith to be made well,” NASB “saw that he had faith to be healed,” NIV “seeing that he had faith to be made whole,” ASV “saw that the man believed he could be made well,” GWN “knew that he had faith to live,” MRD “saw that he had faith to be cured,” NJB “realized he had faith to be healed,” NLT and “saw that the man believed that God could heal him.” IE

This is another statement of Scripture that affirms the existence of certain factors are necessary healing: “he had faith to be healed.” Other qualifying statements pertain to the ultimate Worker, the Lord Jesus Christ.

- On one occasion, when Jesus was preaching in the wilderness, there was “a certain day” when “there were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by” while He was teaching. They had come “from every village of Galilee, and Judea, and Jerusalem.” It is said of that occasion, “and the power of the Lord was present to heal them” (Lk 5:17).

- The Spirit also mentions the inhibiting power of unbelief in the matter of miraculous works. “And He could there do no mighty work, save that He laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them. And He marveled because of their unbelief . And He went round about the villages, teaching” (Mark 6:5-6). Matthew says of that occasion, “And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief” (Matt 13:58).

Jesus frequently traced the healing of an individual to their faith.

- THE WOMAN WITH AN ISSUE OF BLOOD. “. . . Thy faith hath made thee whole” (Matt 9:22).

- A WOMAN WITH A VEXED DAUGHTER. “. . . O woman, great is thy faith : be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour” (Matt 15:28).

- BLIND BARTIMAEUS. “And Jesus said unto him, Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way” (Mark 10:52).

- A LEPER. “And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole” (Luke 17:19).

- THE WOMAN WHO ANOINTED HIM. “And he said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace” (Luke 7:50).

This was not always the case with those who were healed. The impotent man who was healed at the pool of Bethesda was not told of his faith – Jesus simply healed him. The man did not know who Jesus was (John 5:5-11). The same was true of the blind man whose eyes were anointed with clay, and was told to wash in the pool of Siloam. He did not know who Jesus was, but believed after he was healed (John 9:35-38).

Circumstances like these accent the spiritual sensitivity of Paul in seeing this man had “faith to be healed.” The enablement to know this doubtless came from heaven, even though there might have been some outward indications of keen interest.

HE SAID IN A LOUD VOICE

“Said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked.”

Saying one has faith and acting upon it are two different things. Because real faith is “substance” and “evidence,” it can move a person to confidently act upon it. A person who merely thinks it possible that one believes this or that cannot do what Paul said. Doubt will keep a person from speaking in such a manner for fear of embarrassment.

A Loud Voice

Remember, this is in a public arena, not in private quarters where the outcome would not be known. Before the people, Paul shouts out “with a loud voice.” Other versions read “called out,” NIV “called out in a loud voice,” NAB “shouted,” IE and “shouted aloud,” WILLIAMS The language indicates that the man was at a distance from him. Thus Paul lifts up his voice, and publicly calls out to the man. It was a shout of faith. It was a confident cry, and was in no sense an experiment.

Stand Upright

This man had been “cripple from his mother’s womb, who never had walked.” His feet were no doubt reduced in size, shriveled because of the atrophy of his muscles. However, Paul is speaking according to faith, not sight. He does not ask the man to stretch his feet out and attempt to move them. He calls for the totally unreasonable, the impossible – something beyond all reason. “Stand upright on thy feet!” Other versions read, “Stand up straight on your feet,” NKJV “Get up on your feet,” BBE “Get to your feet–stand up!” NJB “Get up on your feet and stand erect,” WILLIAMS and “Stand erect on your feet.” AMPLIFIED

This poor man’s feet had never had any power – he was “impotent in his feet,” without strength in his feet,” NKJV “could not use his feet,” NRSV and “had no power in his feet.” WEYMOUTH Yet, with a public shout, Paul commands him to get up on those powerless feet, and stand upright, with the weight of his body being supported by his feet. No one was asked to stand by to support him. Paul himself did not extend his hand to the man as Peter did to the crippled man at the Gate Beautiful (Acts 3:7). However, Paul had perceived that this man “had faith to be healed,” and faith never fails. In faith, as Jesus Himself said, “all things are possible to him that believeth” (Mk 9:23). Now, we will see if the man has faith.

He Leaped and Walked

The man responds instantly, for that is what faith – real faith – does. “And he leaped and walked.” Other versions read, “leaped up and began to walk,” NASB “jumped up and began to walk,” NIV “sprang up and began to walk,” NRSV and “leaped to his feet and started walking.” LIVING

The word “leaped” is translated from a word meaning “to spring up,” THAYER “of quick movement,” FRIBERG and “to jump into the air.” LOUW-NIDA It indicates a rapid and energetic movement in which this man suddenly jumped to his feet, suggesting that he even jumped up and down on his formerly impotent feet. He did not get up gingerly, testing out the strength of his feet, nor did he call for some assistance. He did, indeed, have “faith to be healed,” just as Paul had perceived.

The text says that he also “walked” – a man who had never once walked in his entire life. The word “walked” indicates that the man moved about freely, with no inhibitions, and with perfect freedom. He did not limp, nor did he require something to assist him in his walking. Ordinarily, even if a person who was paralyzed for something less than a lifetime, some type of therapy would be required to teach the person how to walk. No such assistance was required for this man.

THE PARALLEL TO THE HEALING OF THE SOUL

There is a healing of the soul. David once cried out, “LORD, be merciful unto me: heal my soul ; for I have sinned against Thee” (Psa 41:4). Peter once referred to this healing, when commenting on the nature of salvation. “Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed. For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls ” (1 Pet 2:24-25). It is not uncommon to hear men using this text to justify the view that bodily healing was in the atoning death of Christ. That view is wrong for several reasons.

- First, the healing of above reference is categorically said to relate to Christ bearing our sins in His body – not our diseases. Nowhere is it affirmed that Jesus died for our sicknesses. His death is consistently associated with our sins (Rom 5:8; 1 Cor 15:3), and that He died “for the ungodly,” not the sick (Rom 5:6).

The individual whose soul is healed, or who is born again, regenerated, or made a new creation, is able to instantly do things that he could never do before. There is not so much as a syllable of Scripture that suggests those who are “joined unto the Lord” begin tapering off in the committing of sin.

- Second, disease and infirmity did not separate men from God, and hence did not require the atoning death of Christ. Isaiah’s reference to Jesus bearing our sicknesses is categorically said to have been fulfilled with Jesus healed the sick during His ministry. “When the even was come, they brought unto Him many that were possessed with devils: and He cast out the spirits with His word, and healed all that were sick: That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses” (Mat 8:16-17; Isa 53:4).

- Third, the redemptive accomplishments of Christ are not related to the beatings that He endured prior to the cross. Redemption relates exclusively to what took place when Jesus was on the cross (1 Cor 1:17-18; Eph 2:16; Phil 2:8; Col 1:20; 2:14; Heb 12:2).

The individual whose soul is healed, or who is born again, regenerated, or made a new creation, is able to instantly do things that he could never do before. There is not so much as a syllable of Scripture that suggests those who are “joined unto the Lord” (1 Cor 6:17) begin tapering off in the committing of sin. There is no gradual cessation of sin. Saul of Tarsus, for example, immediately ceased from persecuting the church. This contradicts the psychological approach to moral recovery that has become common in many churches, but it is nevertheless the truth.

Spiritual immaturity does not have to do with continuing to live in sin in a kind of declining stance. It rather refers to growing up into Christ, apprehending the truth, and bearing fruit unto God. This distinction has been successfully obscured by the unlawful marriage between religion and psychiatry – which marriage is a form of adultery and unfaithfulness to Jesus.

The doctrine of Scripture, if it is perceived, will lead people to this conclusion.

- FREEDOM. “If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed” (John 8:36). “Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness” (Rom 6:18).

- SIN LOSES ITS DOMINION. “For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace” (Rom 6:14).

- IN CHRIST, SIN IS UNREASONABLE. “How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life” (Rom 6:2-4).

- THE TUTELAGE OF GRACE. “For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world” (Titus 2:11-12).

- THE LEADING OF THE SPIRIT. “For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God” (Rom 8:13-14).

Just as surely as that lame man leaped and walked, so those who are in Christ Jesus can walk in newness of life – from the very moment of their new birth. Their growth will be seen in the scope of that walk, but at no point does newness of life leave the individual vulnerable to sin and the devil.

The church has fallen on hard times when it becomes convinced that being freed from the dominion of sin is a process that extends over a period of time. Those who lead people to believe that they must learn to manage sin are leading them astray. It is not sin that is managed, but the flesh, or the old man. From the very start, we are to keep under our body and bring it under subjection (1 Cor 9:27). As we grow in our apprehension of the truth, we will define sin more precisely, to be sure. However, once a thing is known to be sin, the person in Christ is free from its dominion, and is under no obligation to commit it. As it is written, "Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh" (Rom 8:12).

No child of God can say they "have no sin" (1 John 1:8), or that they have no further need for an Advocate with the Father (1 John 2:1). However, those who confess their sin to God, as they are enjoined to do (1 John 1:9), will not say to God that they were powerless, and could not avoid committing sin. Woe to that person who teaches the people of God to be content to live with their sin, imagining that, through some form of regimentation, they will eventually gain the victory over their vices! That is not Gospel, but is delusion, and a most serious one at that!

A SOCIETY THAT WAS AWARE OF DEITY

" 11 And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men."

It is of interest to see how the people reacted to the healing of this crippled man. He was apparently known to the citizenry, like the man who was healed at the Temple gate (Acts 3). He was not a visitor in those parts, but someone who was well known to the inhabitants of Lystra.

WHEN THE PEOPLE SAW WHAT PAUL HAD DONE

"And when the people saw what Paul had done . . ." All of the versions read the same, affirming that the people "saw what Paul had done ," or "saw what Paul did." They did not see what Paul and Barnabas had done, but what Paul had done.

This was similar to what occurred on the day of Pentecost. When Peter stood up with the eleven, it was his voice that was lifted up as he delivered the word to the people. Also, when the multitude inquired of Peter "and the rest of the apostles" what they should do, it was Peter who delivered the word to them (Acts 2:14-40).

Again, when Peter and John went up to the Temple and confronted a lame man. Both Peter and John were present, but Peter was the one through whom the work was done (Acts 3:1-8). The healed man responded by clinging to both Peter and John, knowing the work involved them both, though it was wrought through Peter. Also, when the people took note of what had happened, Peter said "Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us , as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk?" (Acts 3:12).

When Peter and John went down to Samaria in order that the people might receive the Holy Spirit, they laid "their hands on them and they received the Holy Spirit." When Simon the sorcerer saw this, he sought to purchase the ability confer the Holy Spirit by the playing on of his hands, it was Peter who rebuked him, announcing that he had "neither part nor lot in this matter" (Acts 8:18-22).

The same type of response will be reported in this instance. Two men will be present, standing together, yet one will be the chief speaker or spokesman . This is a Kingdom manner that is worthy of note. There is a unity in the body of Christ that allows one person to speak for the whole, and to so with the complete and obvious support of the others.

THE GODS ARE COME DOWN

“ . . . they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.”

In Greek mythology, a pious Phrygian couple (Philemon and Baucis) who hospitably received Zeus and Hermes when their richer neighbors turned away the two gods, who were disguised as wayfarers. As a reward, they were saved from a flood that drowned the rest of the country; their cottage was turned into a temple, and at their own request they became priest and priestess of it. Long after, they were granted their wish to die at the same moment, being turned into trees.

As with the rest of the world, this area no doubt understood Greek, which was the universal language. Yet, they also retained the use of their native language. This was a common practice, as is evidenced on the day of Pentecost. There were people then present who had native tongues in which they spoke, and they understood the Greek tongue as well, and possibly the Hebrew tongue also. It is assumed that Paul had spoken to the lame man in the Greek language. However, it is also possible that, through the Spirit, he had spoken to him in his own native tongue. When Paul said to the Corinthians, “I speak in tongues more than ye all,” it is assumed that he was referring to his public ministry outside of the gathering of believers, and not to a private practice. I do not doubt that in his travels he often spoke in the language of the people.

So, in this text, a body of heathen people concluded that the gods had come down to visit them. They knew that something had happened that could not be accounted for by any purported law of nature or aptitude of man.

They thought the gods had come down to them “in the likeness of men.” It is interesting that this is the precise way in which the entrance of Jesus into this world is described: “But made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men ” (Phil 2:7). It is arresting to consider that this heathen culture saw one miraculous work and concluded they had been visited by “the gods,” while the Jews witnessed the multitudinous miracles of Jesus, and thought of Him as a fraud, delivering Him to be crucified. In fact, it was on His claim of being “the Son of the Blessed” that He was arraigned and found guilty of blasphemy (Mk 14:61-64). In this charge, the Jewish leaders stooped to a level beneath that of the heathen of our text.

A SIGNIFICANT TEXT

This is a significant passage that provides a kind of snapshot of the world. There was a general acceptance of the existence of Deity, and of visitations and even Divine retribution. During the time of Jonah, estimated to have been around 900 BC, there was an acute awareness of Deity. During Jonah’s attempt to run from the presence of the Lord in a ship, a storm arose on the sea. When the captain of the ship learned that Jonah was sleeping, he said to him, “What meanest thou, O sleeper? arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not” (Jonah 1:6). All heathen nations had “gods,” persuaded of the existence of Deity. Foolishly, they fashioned their gods after their own conceptions (Rom 1:22-25).

Later, on a barbaric island, when Paul was bitten by a snake, the barbarians reasoned, “No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live” (Acts 28:4).

Western atheism has its roots in Pre-Socratic philosophy, but did not emerge as a distinct world-view until the late Enlightenment." The 5th-century BCE Greek philosopher Diagoras is known as the "first atheist" and strongly criticized religion and mysticism. Critics viewed religion as a human invention used to frighten people into following moral order. Democritus attempted to explain the world in a purely materialistic way, without reference to the spiritual or mystical. Euhemerus (c. 330-260 BCE) published his view that the gods were only the deified rulers, conquerors and founders of the past, and that their cults and religions were in essence the continuation of vanished kingdoms and earlier political structures.

Though flawed in their concepts of God, the heathen were not atheists. They did not question the existence of God, or that He visited men. Their understanding was something less than perfect, to be sure, but they did confirm that man has a natural consciousness of God. Paul stated the case in this way: “For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves: (Which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another)” (Rom 2:14-15).

The existence of the conscience confirms that men know they are answerable to someone higher than themselves, for there is no other explanation for its existence. If men judged themselves strictly by their own developed values, there would be no condemning or approving conscience, for all they would have to do is change their values, and their conscience would bother them no longer. The conscience is evidence of man’s creation by God.

The existence of fear is also the confession that there are things men cannot control. Before men sought to deify the human mind, these things moved men to think of Deity, even though their conclusions were flawed.

Formalized or codified atheism is something that came into being late in human history – as late as the fifth century. Of course, living as though there is no God – practical atheism – has been a blight upon humanity all along. David wrote, “The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God” (Psa 14:1; 53:1). Living as though there is no God is a state of mind that compels the sinner to impose his own wishes upon his heart, so that he lives in complete disregard of the awareness of God – an awareness that is resident in every man by nature. It is as though he attempts to deify himself, living as though no person existed but himself. This is the result of the remarkable aggressiveness of unbelief.

The impact of “the Enlightenment” upon our society is staggering to consider. Unlike the people of our text, a considerable percentage of modern society do not default in their thinking to a consideration of Deity. The tendency is so pronounced that even among professing Christians, men are sought in the hour of crisis instead of God. In fact, professional religion has made a practice of providing man-made solutions that are represented as doing things that Scripture affirms come only from God: i.e. a change of character, or making one closer to God. Also, there is a kind of derision registered when anyone suggests that calamities may be a token of Divine judgment, or times of benefit a blessing from God. Even many professing Christians recoil at the idea of Deity intruding into the affairs of men. This is a sad circumstance, and confirms a level of spiritual death that is staggering to consider.

However, this is not the place to dwell on such a morose subject. I must move on with the text.

MISCONCEPTIONS OF BARNABAS AND PAUL

“ 12 And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker.” “Jupiter” and Mercurius” are the Latin forms of Greek terms “Zeus” and “Hermes.” These were the Roman names for Greek gods of reference, which they adopted as their own gods when they conquered Greece, as foretold by Daniel (Dan 2:31-40).

The significance of the work that was wrought by the hands of Paul is seen in the response of the people. They felt the gods had come down to them in the likeness of men – not just any god, but two of the most significant ones.

“Jupiter” was known to the Greeks as Zeus. This god is also mentioned in the nineteenth chapter, which records Paul’s experience in Ephesus. There the people referred to an “Image,” or statue, they thought “fell down from Jupiter” (Acts 19:35). In the Greek religion, Zeus, was chief deity of the pantheon, a sky and weather god who was identical with the Roman god Jupiter. Zeus was regarded as the sender of thunder and lightning, rain, and winds, and his traditional weapon was the thunder-bolt. He was called the father (i.e., the ruler and protector) of both gods and men.

The statue of Zeus was one of the seven wonders of the world. According to accounts, the statue was located at the western end of the temple. It was 22 feet wide and some 40 feet tall . . . plated with gold and ivory, represented the god sitting on an elaborate cedarwood throne ornamented with ebony, ivory, gold, and precious stones . . . The figure's skin was composed of ivory and the beard, hair and robe of gold. Construction was by the use of gold and ivory plates attached to a wooden frame . . . the statue was moved by wealthy Greeks to the city of Constantinople where it survived until destroyed by fire in 462 A.D. BRITANNICA ENCYCLOPEDIA

Mercurius, or Hermes, was the herald, or messenger, of the olympian gods, and the son of Zeus. “In the Odyssey, however, he appears mainly as the messenger of the gods and the conductor of the dead to Hades. Hermes was also a dream god, and the Greeks offered to him the last libation before sleep. As a messenger, he may also have become the god of roads and doorways, and he was the protector of travelers.” BRITANNICA ENCYCLOPEDIA

THE CHIEF SPEAKER

The crowd called Paul Mercurius, or Hermes, because he was “the chief speaker.” Other versions read, “did most of the talking.” CJB “took the lead in speaking,” DARBY “the principal speaker,” NJB “the preacher,” TNT “the leader in speaking,” YLT “the main speaker,” IE and “led in the discourse.” AMPLIFIED

As used here, the word “to lead, I. e. a. to go before ; to be a leader; to rule, command; to have authority over.” THAYER Here, the leadership was in regard to speaking (“speaker”). That is, he was the primary spokesman. Because the people viewed him as Hermes, the messenger of Zeus, they were viewing Paul as the primary spokesman for Deity – not merely first in the matter of sequence.

This assists us in understanding some things that Paul said regarding his speaking, as well as what some of his critics said of him.

- “For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words , lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect” (1 Cor 1:17).
- “And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom , declaring unto you the testimony of God” (1 Cor 2:1).
- “And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom , but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power” (1 Cor 2:4).
- “For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful; but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible ” (2 Cor 10:10).

There are those who have represented Paul has being very clumsy in speech, perhaps even stuttering or stammering. Based upon this text, and his presentations before dignitaries such as Agrippa and Felix, I do not do not believe this was the case at all. Paul’s meaning is that he did not employ high sounding philosophical arguments and oratory – things greatly valued by the Greek and Roman world . In an obviously studied and disciplined effort, Paul employed reasoning that declared man to be a creation of God, and therefore accountable to God. He appealed to the cross of Christ, together with its various implications. He made no attempt to color the truth so as to make it more palatable, or diminish its weight to make it more attractive.

I seriously doubt that these Lycaonians would have associated Paul with the Hermes the chief messenger of Zeus if his speech was halting and clumsy. Nor would they have thought of him as the “chief speaker.” Not even the heathen associate deity with fumbling speech and halting manners. Much less should this be the case with those whose understanding of God has been shaped by the true Son of God Himself.

Now, we will see how men of God react when undue honor is given to them – how seriously they regard such things. It will be very apparent that they are not seeking honor for themselves.

THE ATTEMPT TO WORSHIP PAUL AND BARNABAS, AND THEIR RESPONSE

“ 13 Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done sacrifice with the people. 14 Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out, 15 And saying, Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God, which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein. . .”

When people are serious about their religion, whether deceived or illuminated, they act upon it. People who say they are serious about God, yet do not act upon what they profess, have misrepresented themselves. God has made men so the views they embrace constrain them do act in harmony with those views. If they fail to do this, their conscience becomes seared.

So it is in our text: those who were convinced of the deity of Jupiter and Mercurius, act upon that persuasion, convinced that the two men standing before them – Paul and Barnabas – are these gods, come down to them in the likeness of men.

THE PRIEST OF JUPITER BROUGHT OXEN AND GARLANDS

“Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates . . .” Other versions read, “whose temple was in front of their city,” NKJV “whose temple was just outside the city,” NIV and “Then Jupiter’s Priest which dwelt before their city.” TNT

Before the City

It is to be understood that the “priest of Jupiter” resided in the temple built for idol. It was that temple that was “before the city,” or at the entrance point. This suggests that Jupiter was the god that had been adopted by the city of Lystra, as Diana was the goddess embraced by the city of Ephesus (Acts 19:28). We do not know if this priest was actually present when the crippled man was healed through the hands of Paul. If the crippled man was positioned just inside the gate, then the priest was no doubt personally aware of what had taken place.

Brought Oxen and Garlands

Other versions read, “brought bulls and wreathes,” NIV “took oxen and flowers,” BBE “bulls with flowery wreathes around their necks,” GWN “brought them cartloads of flowers and prepared to sacrifice oxen,” LIVING and “brought garlanded oxen.” PHILLIPS

The plurality of the oxen suggests that the priest intended to offer one ox, or bull, to Paul, and the other to Barnabas. The historian Kuinoel states that it was the practice of these idolators to decorate the sacrifice with “ribbons and chaplets of flowers.” ALBERT BARNES

Unto the Gates

The fact that the priest brought the oxen to the gates suggests that is where Paul and Barnabas were speaking. Also, it probably was where the crippled man had been sitting. Some say there was a large square just inside the gates where people would congregate. Others view these “gates” as around the house where Paul and Barnabas were dwelling.

I see this as being the gates of the city, which would have been close to the temple from which the priest came. That also would account for “the people” who witnessed the healing of the crippled man (v 11).

How must it appear in the heavenly places when people who profess to be in Christ suppress any public expression of their professed faith. What of those who are unwilling to separate from the world, or yield to the requirements of the true God?

HE WOULD HAVE MADE SACRIFICE

“ . . . and would have done sacrifice with the people. . . .” Other versions read, “intending to sacrifice with the multitudes,” NKJV “wanted to offer sacrifice with the crowds,” NASB “he and the crowd wanted to offer sacrifices to them,” NIV “with the multitudes did wish to sacrifice,” YLT and “wanted to join the people in offering sacrifice.” AMPLIFIED

The picture is one of religious excitement, and not mere tumult. Convinced that Paul and Barnabas were the gods come down to them in the likeness of men, the people desired to sacrifice to them, and the priest of Jupiter brought oxen and prepared to join them.

All of this seems quite radical and superstition to a society that has no firm persuasion of Deity, or objects to any outward expression that acknowledges God. This certainly was an improper response, to state the case very mildly. However, there is something to be learned here. There really is no extent to which men will not go to serve a god they are persuaded exists. Their persuasion may be flawed to the core, and even worthy of condemnation, as in Romans 1:25. Their corrupted wills may have ignored the testimony of the true God in preference for their own ideas of Deity – ideas that allowed them to continue in their own willful ways. However, once persuaded of the reality of the imaginary deity, they acted in comportment with the deception they had embraced. The priests of Baal would publically leap on an altar and even cut themselves, crying out for some expression from their god (1 Kgs 18:28). The worshipers of Molech, contrary nature, would offer their children as a burnt offering to that false god (Lev 18:21; 2 Kgs 16:3). Some who worshiped Diana, goddess of the Ephesians, were unashamed to shout out for the space of two hours, “Great is Diana of the Ephesians!” (Acts 19:34). And, what of some of our day, who stop to pray five times a day in honor to Allah, who is really no god at all? Or those who strap bombs to their bodies and become the means of killing a host of people in the hope of gaining the approval of the false god they worship?

How must it appear in the heavenly places when people who profess to be in Christ suppress any public expression of their professed faith. What of those who are unwilling to separate from the world, or yield to the requirements of the true God? Such people have stooped beneath the posture of the heathen. I do not doubt that the day of judgment will include the comparison of those who gave their lives for a false god, with those who said they believed in the true God, yet refused to give themselves wholly to Him.

BARNABAS AND PAUL HEARD

“Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of . . .” Other versions read, “heard of this,” NIV “when this came to the ears of,” BBE “having heard it,” DARBY and “heard what was happening,” GWN

Note, this is the second time Paul and Barnabas are referred to as “apostles” (14:4,14). As noted before, they were apostles of the Holy Spirit, being send forth by Him (Acts 13:13:2). This does not exclude the fact that Jesus, as Head of the church, sent them out. However, the apostles of Jesus are referred to as “the twelve apostles” (Matt 10:2; Lk 22:44; Rev 21:14), and “the twelve” (Acts 6:2; 1 Cor 15:5). Paul also, as one born out of due season, was an “apostle of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 1:1; Eph 1:1; Col 1:1; 1 Tim 1:1, etc). Here, Paul, together with Barnabas, is on a special mission, sent forth by the Holy Spirit. Unlike his apostleship from Jesus, this mission will be a temporary one, devoted to a work that will come to an end long before his departure from this world (Acts 14:26).

Being alert to their surroundings, Paul and Barnabas heard of the purposed sacrifice. We are not told how they heard, whether from the people, or through the priest himself who may have summoned them to the intended sacrifice. However they heard, two factors were present. First, the Lord was in the matter, directing His servants, and ensuring that no honor was given to them that contradicted what they were preaching. Second, “the apostles” were also aware of these contradicting actions and influence, and of their total unacceptability.

I find that this kind of alertness is not at all common in our time. This is what has allowed all manner of corruption to enter into the professed church.

THEY RAN AMONG THE PEOPLE

“ . . . they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out, 15 And saying, Sirs, why do ye these things?”

Paul and Barnabas do not hesitate to interfere with the proceedings. They will not receive honor that is not due them, nor will they allow another god to be worshiped in their presence, or receive the credit for what the Lord Jesus Christ has done.

They Rent Their Clothes

Other versions read, “tore their clothes,” NKJV “tore their robes,” NASB “tore their garments,” RSV and “rending their clothes.” DOUAY

It is good to compare the reaction of Paul and Barnabas to being treated as though they were gods, to the reaction of Herod to the same. After hearing a stirring oration by Herod, “the people gave a shout, saying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man” (Acts 12:22). Herod made no effort to deny the blasphemous statement, “And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory : and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost” (Acts 12:23).

Rejecting the sacrifice that was about to be made to them, Paul and Barnabas tore their clothing and ran into the crowd of people. The rending of the clothes can be an act fear, as Joseph’s brothers’ reaction to his silver cup being found in the sack of Benjamin, where Joseph had to placed (Gen 44:13). It can also be the response of revulsion at the actions of others, as when Joshua and Caleb tore their clothes when the Israelites believed the report of the ten faithless spies (Num 14:6). It also reflects great sadness and lamentation at bad news, as when Jacob rent his clothes when he thought Joseph had been killed (Gen 37:34). Others who tore their clothes at troubling news included Joshua (Josh 7:6), Jephthah (Judges 11:36), the king of Israel (1 Kgs 5:7), Hezekiah (2 Kgs 19:1), Josiah (2 Kgs 22:11), and Mordecai (Esth 4:1).

In this text, the rending of the clothes was an expression of outrage and holy fervor. Paul and Barnabas were repulsed by the very idea of people treating them as though they were god’s “come down in the likeness of men.” This revulsion was driven by the fact that they knew and were serving the true and living God. That is what made the proposed act of the priest reprehensible.

Why Do Ye These Things?

Other versions read, “why are you doing this?” NIV “what are you doing?” GWN and “what do you think you are doing?” NJB

This is drawing attention to the truly unreasonableness of what the people were doing – even though it was totally reasonable to them. What is wrong is never truly reasonable. That is, within the context of truth, as declared by God Almighty, nothing that contradicts the truth can possibly be proper. In his diabolical efforts to lure men into sin, Satan, through subtlety, leads the person to think that sin is reasonable, sensible, and to recommended.

The question “Why do ye these things?” was intended to interrupt the sacrificial proceedings, calling the people to soundness of thought. The people were profaning the name of the God of heaven, and did not know it. They were giving undue honor to men, and were unaware of it. Now Paul and Barnabas run among them, tearing their clothes and fervently calling upon them to consider that they were doing.

WE ARE MEN OF LIKE PASSIONS

“We also are men of like passions with you . . .” Other versions read, “men with the same natures,” NKJV “we too are only men, human like you” NIV “we are mortals must like you,” NRSV “men with the same feelings as you,” BBE “frail mortals like yourselves,” MRD “only human beings,” NLT “like-effected with you,” YLT “natures kindred top your own,” WEYMOUTH and “[only] human beings, of nature like your own.” AMPLIFIED

The phrase “of like passions” comes from a word with the following lexical meaning: “suffering the like with another, of like feelings or affections,” THAYER “of the same (human) nature, similar in experience, as opposed to having superhuman nature,” FRIBERG “like in every way,” UBS “pertaining to having the same kinds of feelings or desires - 'same kinds of feelings, same kinds of desires,” LOUW-NIDA and “with the same nature.” GINGRICH

Here, the meaning is not from the standpoint of sinfulness, but of human frailty – as compared to an eternal; and almighty God. Paul wrote to the Galatians concerning the frailty of his own flesh: “Ye know how through infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel unto you at the first” (Gal 4:13). The high priests of old were said to have been “compassed with infirmity,” or “subject to weakness,” NKJV or “beset with weakness” NASB (Heb 5:2). This is the kind of infirmity that causes us to be dependent upon God, who has no infirmity or weakness. There are areas in which all men are helpless and defenseless. Again, the point here is not morality, but mortality. Human weakness is evidenced by the experience of temptation, but it is not to be appealed to as an excuse for transgression. For believers, the time of temptation, while itself an evidence of weakness, can be successfully addressed by appealing to the Intercessor, who is able to be “touched with the feeling of our infirmities” (Heb 4:15-16).

One the marks of false gods is their impotence and powerlessness, as well as their likeness to the men who make them. “Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands. They have mouths, but they speak not : eyes have they, but they see not : they have ears, but they hear not : noses have they, but they smell not : they have hands, but they handle not : feet have they, but they walk not : neither speak they through their throat. They that make them are like unto them; so is every one that trusteth in them” (Psa 115:4-8).

The point here is that Paul and Barnabas needed God, they were not His peers. Their human condition required help and sustenance from God, therefore it was not possible that they were Divine – Immutable, Omniscient, Omnipotent, Omnipresent, or Eternal – all of which are required in the very concept of “God.”

The point here is that Paul and Barnabas needed God, they were not His peers. Their human condition required help and sustenance from God, therefore it was not possible that they were Divine – Immutable, Omniscient, Omnipotent, Omnipresent, or Eternal – all of which are required in the very concept of “God.” Therefore these holy men refused to accept worship, sacrifice, or anything that could properly be offered only to the true God Himself.

WE PREACH THAT YOU SHOULD TURN FROM VANITIES

“ . . . and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities . . .” Other versions read, “these useless things,” NKJV “these vain things,” NASB “these worthless things,” NIV “these vain things,” RSV “foolish things,” BBE “these idols,” NAB “these empty idols,” NJB “these unreal things,” WEYMOUTH “these foolish and vain things,” AMPLIFIED and “these meaningless things.” PHILLIPS

The word “vanities” comes from the Greek word matai,wn , which means: “devoid of force, truth, success, result . . . useless, to no purpose,” THAYER “empty, foolish . . . foolish, futile, useless, worthless,” FRIBERG “lacking in content,” LOUW-NIDA “trifling, frivolous,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “meaningless, worthless . . . vain, useless,” LEH and “empty.” GINGRICH

Paul and Barnabas apply the word “vanities” to the false gods of Jupiter and Mercurius. A statue of the false god Jupiter could no doubt be seen from where they were standing. Yet, as visible and imposing as that statue may have appeared, it was nothing more than vanity – powerless and worthless.

In Scripture idols are frequently referred to as “vanities” or “vanity.”

- “They have moved Me to jealousy with that which is not God; they have provoked Me to anger with their vanities . . .” (Deut 32:21).
- “For all the sins of Baasha, and the sins of Elah his son, by which they sinned, and by which they made Israel to sin, in provoking the LORD God of Israel to anger with their vanities ” (1 Kgs 16:13).
- “For he walked in all the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin, to provoke the LORD God of Israel to anger with their vanities ” (1 Kgs 16:26).
- “I have hated them that regard lying vanities : but I trust in the LORD” (Psa 31:6).
- “Behold the voice of the cry of the daughter of My people because of them that dwell in a far country: Is not the LORD in Zion? is not her king in her? Why have they provoked me to anger with their graven images, and with strange vanities ? “ (Jer 8:19).
- “But they are altogether brutish and foolish: the stock is a doctrine of vanities ” (Jer 10:8).
- “Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain? or can the heavens give showers? art not Thou He, O LORD our God? therefore we will wait upon Thee: for thou hast made all these things” (Jer 14:22).
- “Because my people hath forgotten me, they have burned incense to vanity , and they have caused them to stumble in their ways from the ancient paths, to walk in paths, in a way not cast up” (Jer 18:15).
- “They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy” (Jonah 2:8).

It is apparent that God is not indifferent to those who adopt “vanities” as their god.

- When those who wear His name adopt false gods, it provokes the true God to jealous and anger. DEUT 32:21
- All doctrine that is based upon a false god is itself vain teaching. JER 10:8
- God challenges all false gods to produce rain. JER 14:22

- Adopting a false god confirms the people have forgotten the true God. JER 18:15
- Those who worship “vanities” forsake mercy – it is no longer available to them.

JONAH 2:8

These conditions are why Paul and Barnabas preached that men ought to forsake serving false and powerless gods. This is not an option, but an absolute necessity.

The word used here for “preached” is the same as used in verse seven: “there they preached the Gospel.” The word means “to bring good news, to announce glad tidings.” THAYER The “good news” carries such an impact upon the heart of those who believe it that they will, in fact, turn “from idols to serve the living God” (1 Thess 1:9). Paul here declares, or preaches, that unequivocal requirement.

Paul reminded the Corinthians that in their past they were “carried away” to “dumb idols,” even as they were “led” by the demons who were behind those idols (1 Cor 10:20; 12:2).

Powerless Gods

A god who cannot do anything is a vanity. In view of this, it is arresting to consider how helpless many professing Christians appear to be – even by their own confession. Some are taught to say, after they have professedly embraced Christ, that their life is “out of control.” Others are taught that after they have come into Christ, they are still controlled by a generational curse, or some physiological deficiency – and some are even told they are being dominated by demons. Is it not possible that they have embraced a “vanity,” or have never even “turned from” the “vanities” they have served? Have they embraced a kind of scholastic religion, maintaining a form of godliness, yet denying its power, and thus dominated by the lusts of the flesh? We should not think of this as something that is impossible.

UNTO THE LIVING GOD

“ . . . unto the living God, which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein. . . ”

Turning to “the living God,” individuals are separated from death and impotence, or powerlessness. No longer do they serve a God that cannot hear, speak, or work. In Christ they have become aligned with the One who “created all things by Jesus Christ” (Eph 3:9). Now, by virtue of their union with Jesus, they have come into the realm of thorough adequacy. Not only are they not to serve other gods, there is no need to do so, for they are “complete in Him, which is the Head of all principality and power” (Col 2:10).

The fact that God “made heaven, and earth, and the sea, all things that are therein” makes humanity responsible to Him. Every man is, in a sense, living in property, and, by virtue of that fact alone, are obliged to submit themselves to Him. You can add to that, that all men are also God’s creation, for “it is He that hath made us, and not we ourselves” (Isa 100:3). On top of that, God “determined the times set for them and the exact places where they should live. God did this so that men would seek Him and perhaps reach out for Him and find Him, though He is not far from each one of us” (Acts 17:26-27). It simply is not possible to escape the personal responsibility to turn from vanities to the living God!

It is a transgression of enormous magnitude for any professing believer to seek help from anyone but the One who saves and keeps them! If God chided the Israelites for going down to Egypt for help, what will He do with those who return to the world for help after having been delivered from it (Gal 1:4).

The True God

When writing to those who are in Christ Jesus, John the apostle declared that the Son of “is come” – that is, has come and remains – and has “given us an understanding, that we might know Him that is true.” He then adds, “and we are in Him that is true, even in His Son Jesus Christ.” That is, in Jesus His own prayer is fulfilled: “That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us . . . I in them, and Thou in Me . . .” (John 17:23). This is the antithesis of a god that is properly referred to as a “vanity.”

The solemn obligation placed upon every offspring of Adam is to turn from “vanities” to the living God – from erroneous gods to the true One. No one is exempt from that requirement.

Keep Yourselves from Idols

After proclaiming the ministry of Jesus in bringing us to “know Him that is true,” John affirms, “This is the true God, and eternal life” (1 John 5:20b). That is, the God that is revealed to us by Jesus is the real God. All other gods are “vanities.” Additionally, the knowledge of God that results from the teaching of Jesus is, in fact, “eternal life.” This perfectly correlates with Jesus definition of eternal life: “And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent” (John 17:3). This is the “eternal life” that John wanted believers to know they possess. “These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life . . .” (1 John 5:13).

John concludes his first letter by saying, “Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen” (1 John 5:21). His admonition to keep ourselves “from idols” is a solemn warning to refuse to embrace an idea of God that has not been generated by Christ Jesus. The Son of God is, after all, the Divinely appointed Expositor of God (Matt 11:27).

Shortly after the middle of the first century, barely twenty hearts after the day of Pentecost, there were already some who were proclaiming “another Jesus,” “another Spirit,” and “another gospel” (2 Cor 11:4; Gal 1:6). Let it be clear, it is not possible for the power of God unto salvation to be attached to “another gospel.” It is not possible to be saved by “another Jesus.” Neither, indeed is it possible to receive “another Spirit,” and yet experience all of the benefits that are affirmed to result from His presence.

During this time of a great falling away, it is necessary to say to the church what Paul and Barnabas said to the Lycaonians. It is time for professing Christians to turn away from misconceptions of both Jesus and God, for in embracing them, they have aligned themselves with “vanities.”

As I have already pointed out, God Himself identifies idols, or “vanities,” by saying they cannot see, hear, speak, or work. In other words, they cannot do anything that is characteristic of one that is alive. It is the business of every professing Christian to be sure that is not the kind of God they have embraced. Like it or not, a powerless religion suggests that a god has been embraced that is really no god at all.

This Is A Must

Let me underscore this again. The solemn obligation placed upon every offspring of Adam is to turn from “vanities” to the living God – from erroneous gods to the true One. No one is exempt from that requirement. Paul will now reason upon this truth confirming the reasonableness of this necessity – to turn to the living God.

IN TIMES PAST

“16 Who in times past . . .” Other versions read, “in bygone generations,” NKJV “in the generations gone by,” NASB “in the past,” NIV “past generations,” NRSV and “in former ages.” MRD

The fact that there are “times past” means more than the reality of history. Paul and Barnabas will show that something has happened in time that has caused previous times to be “past” in a greater sense than simply not being present anymore. He will reason that something has occurred that requires that men separate themselves from their past.

Paul often uses the expression “times past” to make a comparison with the present condition.

- “For as ye in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief” (Rom 11:30).
- “For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted it” (Gal 1:13).
- “But they had heard only, That he which persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed” (Gal 1:23).
- “Wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience” (Eph 2:2).
- “Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others” (Eph 2:3).
- “Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands” (Eph 2:11).
- “God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds” (Heb 1:1-2).

Peter also spoke in this way. “Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy” (1 Pet 2:10). And again, “For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, ravelings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries” (1 Pet 4:3).

All of these texts are stated with the reality of a change having taking place – a change that requires a decision on the part of men. It is possible for past and present generations to have the same deplorable characteristics. Thus Israel is depicted as having been fundamentally wayward for a great number of generations (Deut 9:7,24; Isa 65:2; Jer 25:4; 35:15). This, however, is not the kind of approach that is being taken in our text. This by no means justifies the past idolatry of the heathen or the complacency of the Jews. It does mean, however, that something has been wrought by God that makes failing to turn to God from vanities absolutely inexcusable. Since the enthronement of the Son of God, erroneous religion is more wrong than it has ever been before. Failing to turn to God is infinitely more serious now than it was in times past – and it was serious then.

It is imperative that we have a spiritually intelligent view of the nature of the times in which we are living. We must not allow ourselves to be deceived.

DIVINE ALLOWANCES

“ . . . suffered all nations to walk in their own ways.”

Paul and Barnabas will now explain why nations embracing false gods were not removed – like the Amalekites. Why did an all-powerful God allow nations of men to continue to walk in ignorance?

How can we account for a righteous God not dispersing them as He did those who dwelt in the plain of Shinar (Gen 11:8), or destroying them as He did those living in Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen 19:28-29)? There are some who have reasoned on such conditions and concluded, “The Lord hath forsaken the earth, and the Lord seeth not” (Ezek 9:9). Others have thought, “God hath forgotten: He hideth His face; He will never see it” (Psa 10:11). And again flesh reasons, “The LORD shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it” (Psa 94:7). Even of old time God pronounces a woe upon those who reasoned, “Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?” (Isa 29:15). This is very flawed reasoning, whether it concerns the presence of evil, and the imaginations of wicked men that moved them to think they are not seen by an infinite God.

SUFFERED ALL NATIONS

“ . . . suffered all nations . . .” Other versions read, “allowed,” NKJV “permitted,” NASB and “let.” NIV

This is the language of Divine control, or Sovereignty, and concerns “all

The emphasis here is not that God simply tolerated them, but that He allowed them to do something, taking into account what they were doing, yet withholding the righteous judgment that was due to them.

nations,” not some nations. The word “suffered” means “to allow, permit, let . . . to suffer one to do what he wishes, not to restrain, let alone,” THAYER and “allowing something to be done . . . leaving someone or something alone.” FRIBERG The point is that God was fully capable of bringing an end to the deviate ways of the heathen by removing them, as He did the seven nations that dwelt in Canaan before Israel (Acts 13:19). That is a prerogative of “the only true God” (John 17:3). The emphasis here is not that God simply tolerated them, but that He allowed them to do something, taking into account what they were doing, yet withholding the righteous judgment that was due to them.

Because He did not interfere with their general comportment, they grew even more wicked in their ways, for decline is in the very nature the flesh (2 Tim 3:13). He gave them no law, no prophet, or no promises for their own. During the “times past,” and prior to Moses, God focused His total attention upon the Jews, speaking to them “by the prophets” (Heb 1:1). So far as the other nations were concerned, He treated them as He did all nations prior to Moses – He “allowed them . . .”

This is why it is dangerous beyond description to assume that if God does not stop a person or persons from doing something, it must be all right, or it is safe to do it. Many a slumbering soul has mistakenly thought in the manner described by Solomon: “Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil” (Eccl 8:11).

Also, Divine allowance is not an appropriate explanation for what men call “freewill” – an expression that God never uses in the manner to which men are accustomed. In fact, the word “freewill,” as used in Scripture (KJV), exclusively refers to the giving of a certain category of offerings under the Law (Lev 22:18,23; 23:38; Num 15:3; 29:36; Deut 12:6;16:10; 17; 23:23; 2 Chron 31:14; Psa 119:108; Ezra 1:4; 3:5. 7:13,16; 8:28). The same is true of the New King James Version, and the New International Version, The New American Standard Bible uses the words “free will” rather than “willingly” in Philemon 1:14. The Revised Standard Version uses “free will” in the same manner in 2 Corinthians 8:3 and Philemon 1:14.

TO WALK IN THEIR OWN WAYS

“ . . . to walk in their own ways.” Other versions read, “to go their own ways,” NASB “go their own way,” NIV “follow their own ways,” NRSV “go in the way which seemed good to them,” BBE “live as they pleased,” GWN “to go on in their ways,” YLT and “do what they wanted.” IE

When God permitted all nations to walk in their own ways, they lived according to their own perceptions and values. They formed their own objectives, and did what was right in their own eyes.

The word “ways” is translated from a word meaning, “a manner of thinking, feeling, deciding,” THAYER “a manner of living and acting: way of life,” FRIBERG “a way of doing, speaking,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “way of life, conduct.” LEH There are different “ways” mentioned in Scripture.

• “The way of the Lord” (Gen18:19; Judges 2:22; 2 Kgs 21:22; Prov 10:29; Isa 40:3; Jer 5:4,5; Ezek 18:25,29; 33:17,20; Matt 3:3; Mk 1:3; Lk 3:4; John 1:23; Acts 18:25).

- “The way of Jeroboam” (1 Kgs 15:34; 16:2,19,26).
- “The way of the house of Ahab” (2 Kgs 8:27).
- “The way of David” (2 Kgs 22:2; 2 Chron 11:17)
- “The way of Asa” (2 Chron 20:32).
- “The way of sinners” (Psa 1:1).
- “The way of the righteous” (Psa 1:6; Prov 8:20; 12:28; 16:31).
- “The way of His steps” (Psa 85:13).
- “The way of” God’s “testimonies” (Psa 119:14).
- “The way of” God’s “precepts” (Psa 119:27).
- “The way of lying” (Psa 119:29).
- “The way of truth” (Psa 119:30; 2 Pet 2:2).
- “The way of” God’s “commandments” (Psa 119:32).
- “The way of” God’s “statutes” (Psa 119:33).
- “The way of the wicked” (Psa 146:9).
- “The way of His saints” (Prov 2:8).
- “The way of the evil man” (Prov 2:12; 4:14).
- “The way of good men” (Prov 2:20).
- “The way of wisdom” (Prov 4:11).
- “The way of the wicked” (Prov 4:19; 12:26; 15:9; Jer 12:1).
- “The way of life” (Prov 6:23; 10:17; 15:24; Jer 21:8).
- “The way of understanding” (Prov 9:6; 21:16; Isa 40:14).
- “The way of a fool” (Prov 12:15).
- “The way of transgressors” (Prov 13:15).
- “The way of the slothful man” (Prov 15:19).
- “The way of a man” (Prov 21:2,8; Jer 10:23).
- “The way of the froward” (Prov 22:5).
- “The way of an adulterous woman” (Prov 30:20).
- “The way of the just” (Isa 26:7).

- “The way of” God’s “judgments” (Isa 26:8).
- “The way of holiness” (Isa 35:8).
- “The way of” man’s “heart” (Isa 57:17).
- “The way of peace” (Isa 59:8; Lk 1:79; Rom 3:17).
- “The way of the heathen” (Jer 10:2).
- “The way of death” (Jer 1:8).
- “The way of the meek” (Amos 2:7).
- “The way of the Gentiles” (Matt 10:5).
- “The way of righteousness” (Matt 21:32; 2 Pet 2:21).
- “The way of God” (Matt 22:16; Mk 12:14; Lk 20:21; Acts 18:26).
- “The way of salvation” (Acts 16:17).
- “The way of Cain” (Jude 1:11).

There is also mention of “the ways of the Lord” (2 Sam 22:22), “the ways of man” (Job 34:21), “the ways of God” (Job 40:19), “the ways of everyone that is greedy” (Prov 1:19), “the ways of darkness” (Prov 2:13), “the ways of pleasantness” (Prov 3:17), “the ways of death” (Prov 14:12), “the ways of judgment” (Prov 17:23), “the ways of the sons of men” (Jer 32:19), and “the ways of life” (Acts 2:26).

Solomon twice said, “There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death” (Prov 14:12; 16:25).

Their Own Ways

When God permitted all nations to walk in their own ways, they lived according to their own perceptions and values. They formed their own objectives, and did what was right in their own eyes. They had no mind to seek the Lord, even though that is the reason for the creation and placement of all men in both time and place (Acts 17:26). Even though there is, in fact, only one God, they chose their own gods, and willingly served them. Therefore we read of:

- “The gods of Egypt” (Ex 12:12).
- “The gods of the Amorites” (Josh 24:25).
- “The gods of Syria” (Judges 10:6).
- “Ashtgerpoth, the goddess of the Zikdonians” (1 Kgs 11:33a).
- “Chemosh, the god of the Moabites” (1 Kgs 11:33b).
- “Milcom the god of the children of Ammon” (1 Kgs 11:33c).
- “Adrammelech and Anammelech, the gods of Sepharvaim.” (2 Kgs 17:31)
- “The gods of the nations” (2 Kgs 18:33).
- “. . . where are the gods of Hamath, and of Arpad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah” (2 Ki 18:34)
- “The gods of the countries” (2 Kgs 18:35).
- “The gods of the children of Seir” (2 Chron 25:14).
- “The gods of Edom” (2 Chron 20).
- “The gods of Damascus” (2 Chron 28:23).

- “The vanities of the Gentiles” (Jer 14:22).
- “. . . gods of gold, and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone” (Dan 5:4).
- “The gods of the earth” (Zeph 2:11).
- There are also 63 references to the god Baal (ex: Num 22:41; Judges 2:13; 1 Kgs 16:31), and 8 references to Molech (ex: Lev 18:21; Lev 20:2; 1 Kgs 11:7; 23:10).
- Jupiter and Hermes are mentioned in our text.

All of these, and more were part of “the ways” of the nations. They developed the concept of their gods, then fashioned them according to their own desires. As it evidenced in our text, they also fashioned their lives around their gods, which were made according to their own lusts and fears.

The following page contains a listing of the gods of Greek and Roman mythology – 64 of them. These were prevalent at the time Paul was ministering, and were all included in the term “vanities.”

Viewed another way, God suffering, or permitting all nations to walk in their own ways is another way of saying He gave them over to their own desires. That He did, in fact, do this, is also affirmed in Scriptures.

In suffering, or allowing, all nations to walk in their own ways, the Lord confirmed the following to angelic hosts and the succeeding generations of men.

- The inadequacy of human understanding and wisdom (1 Cor 1:19-20).
- That it is not in man to direct his own steps (Jer 10:23).
- That the imaginations of the heart are only evil continually (Gen 8:21).
- That no man by searching can find God (Job 11:7; Psa 77:19; Eccl 3:11; Isa 40:26).
- That no man knows the Father except the Son (Matt 11:27).

VIEWED ANOTHER WAY

Viewed another way, God suffering, or permitting all nations to walk in their own ways is another way of saying He gave them over to their own desires. That He did, in fact, do this, is also affirmed in Scriptures.

- “So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels” (Psa 81:12) – of Israel.

- “Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets, O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness?” (Acts 7:42). – of Israel

- “Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies between themselves” (Rom 1:24).

- “For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections: for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature” (Rom 1:26).

- “And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient” (Rom 1:28).

The above conditions are precisely why, apart from Christ, the Gentile world is described as having “no hope” (Eph 2:12). That was the result of being delivered over to their own will – which was certainly not free.

In referring to the former lives of converted Gentiles, Peter said they were formerly guilty of carrying out the “will of the Gentiles,” which involved idolatry. “For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles , when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, ravelings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries ” (1 Pet 4:3). One might postulate that their will was free. However, Jesus affirmed “Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin ” (John 8:34). Paul affirms the same of the past lives of believers: “ye were the servants of sin ” (Rom 6:17,10). However one may choose to describe the condition in which people exist outside of Christ, it is one from which they must be freed or liberated (Luke 4:18; John 8:36).

In the case of idolatry, such a state is also one referred to as “ carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led ” (1 Cor 12:2).

One complication of idolatry that alters the manner in which it is considered is the fact that idols are associated with demons. This was taught by Moses, inspired Jewish writers, the Psalmist, and the Apostles.

• MOSES. “They provoked him to jealousy with strange gods, with abominations provoked they him to anger. They sacrificed unto devils (demons NKJV) , not to God; to gods whom they knew not , to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not” (Deut 32:16-17).

It is important to know the manner of the kingdom in such matters. Whether the commandment is to a man with a withered hand (“stretch forth thy hand”), an impotent man (“pick up thy bed and walk”), a dead man (“Lazarus, Come forth!”), or those who worship false gods (“turn from these vanities”), the Word is accompanied with power.

MOSES. “For the Levites left their suburbs and their possession, and came to Judah and Jerusalem: for Jeroboam and his sons had cast them off from executing the priest's office unto the LORD: and he ordained him priests for the high places, and for the devils (demons NKJV) , and for the calves which he had made.” (2 Chron 11:14-15).

• PSALMIST. “And they served their idols: which were a snare unto them. Yea, they sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils (demons NKJV) ” (Psa 106:36-37).

• PAUL. “But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils (demons NKJV) , and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils (demons NKJV) ” (1 Cor 10:20).

• JOHN. “And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils (demons NKJV) , and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk” (Rev 9:20).

The complicating factor in this is that, apart from God, men are never depicted as being able to resist or control demons. That was a domination that could only be broken by Divine power.

WHAT DOES ALL OF THIS MEAN?

All of this means that the requirement to “turn from these vanities” was equivalent to being freed from demonic power. It is like Jesus freeing the woman who was bowed over for eighteen years. She had been dominated by “a spirit of infirmity” being “bound” by Satan (Lk 13:11-16). It is like telling an impotent man, “Rise, take up thy bed and walk” (John 5:8).

How the Lord Works

It is important to know the manner of the kingdom in such matters. Whether the commandment is to a man with a withered hand (“stretch forth thy hand”), an impotent man (“pick up thy bed and walk”), a dead man (“Lazarus, Come forth!”), or those who worship false gods (“turn from these vanities”) , the Word is accompanied with power. Those who embrace that word will be enabled to fulfill its requirement, for it is God who works in the individual “both to will and to do of His good pleasure” (Phil 2:13). Those who “gladly receive the Word” will be able to do what it demands of them. The duration of their bondage is of no consequence – whether from the mother’s womb (Acts 3:2), eighteen years (Lk 13:11), eight years (Acts 9:33), from a child (Mk 9:21), or a long time (Lk 8:27).

The Relevancy of This View

Those in Christ have embraced him even though “they “were all their lifetime subject to bondage” (Heb 2:15). The commandments that are delivered to the children of God come with all of the required power to do them – just as surely as the word delivered in our text: “ye should turn from these vanities.” Ponder some of those commandments and exhortations.

- “Awake to righteousness, and sin not!” (1 Cor 15:34).
- “Come out from among them, and be ye separate” (2 Cor 6:17).
- “Mortify your members that are upon the earth” (Col 3:5).
- “Be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is” (Eph 5:17).
- “Be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might” (Eph 6:10).
- “Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pet 3:18).
- “Be not conformed to this world” (Rom 12:2).
- “Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free” (Gal 5:1).
- “Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life.” (1 Tim 6:12).
- “Keep yourselves from idols” (1 John 5:21).
- “Keep yourselves in the love of God” (Jude 1:21).

These are no less requirements than turning from false gods. Nor, indeed, are they lacking of the power required to fulfill them.

GOD DID NOT LEAVE HIMSELF WITHOUT WITNESS

“ 17 Nevertheless He left not Himself without witness, in that He did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness. 18 And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them.”

Paul and Barnabas will now reason with the people concerning the necessity of turning from vain and powerless gods. They knew this was not something that could be ignored with impunity, for those who refuse to turn from what is false to the true God are standing on the precipice of eternal ruin.

NEVERTHELESS

“Nevertheless . . .” Other versions read, “and yet,” NASB “but,” BBE “although,” CSB “though indeed,” DARBY and “but even then.” NJB

The word “nevertheless” comes from a Greek word meaning, “and yet, although indeed,” FRIBERG “although and yet,” USB and “markers of concession, with the probable implication of an additional component of contrast - 'although, even though, and yet.” LOUW-NIDA

The idea here is that God has revealed something of His own nature – something that, if seen, will constrain the individual to turn from vanities to Him, from the false to the true. Even though He had allowed the nations to walk in their own imaginations, God was not idle or indifference to their condition. More is involved than the mere assessment of the condition. It is possible for something to be done about it.

This confirms God that takes no delight in the death of the wicked, nor is He seeking a reason to condemn. For this reason He said to Israel, who had drifted from Him, “As I live, saith the Lord GOD, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?” (Ezek 33:11).

HE LEFT NOT HIMSELF WITHOUT WITNESS

“ . . . He left not Himself without witness . . .” Other versions read, “has not left Himself without testimony,” NIV “did not leave Himself without evidence of His nature,” CSB “He has given evidence of His existence,” GWN “without evidence of Himself,” NJB “did things to prove He is real,” IE “has not left His existence unattested,” WEYMOUTH “did not fail to furnish evidences,” WILLIAMS “did not neglect to leave some witness of Himself,” AMPLIFIED

The Psalmist wrote, “The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork” (Psa 19:1) – EVIDENCE! Paul the apostle wrote that there was a kind of intuitive knowledge of God that makes men inexcusable: “Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them ; for God hath showed it unto them” (Rom 1:19) – EVIDENCE! He added that men live in a testifying creation as well: “For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse” (Rom 1:20) – EVIDENCE!

However, our text goes even further than that, making the matter of God’s revelation more personal. God has gone to great extent to confirm His willingness to save, even though men, apart from grace, remain miserably ignorant of it.

HE DID GOOD

“ . . . in that He did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons . . .” Other versions read, “has shown kindness,” NIV “He does good things,” CJB “doing good,” DOUAY “showed His benefits,” PNT “His reminders – the kind things,” LIVING “bestowing His goodness,” NA “His beneficence,” WEYMOUTH “constantly showing His kindness,” WILLIAMS “did you good and [showed you] kindness,” AMPLIFIED and “shown kindnesses.” PHILLIPS

Although God allowed the nations to walk in their own ways, serving “vanities,” and ascribing Divine qualities to lifeless idols, He showed kindness toward them. Those kindnesses were confirming evidence of both His existence and His nature.

The good things declared are what informed men consider ordinary things: “rain and fruitful seasons.” Other versions read, “rain and crops in their seasons,” NIV “rain from heaven and times of fruit,” BBE “sent down the rain and made the fruits to grow in their seasons,” MRD “rain from heaven and seasons of fruitfulness,” NJB “rain and good crops,” LIVING and “rain from the sky and good harvests at the right times.” IE

The reference to rain relates to the reaping of produce at appropriate time – “the time of harvest” (Josh 3:15; Prov 25:13). Timely rains are not the result of the laws of nature, but of the beneficence of a gracious God. Fruitful seasons, or the reaping of crops, are not to be taken lightly, as though they occurred automatically. They are the provisions of a good God.

Men are prone to complain when it does not rain, yet fail to give thanks when it does. They are offended by droughts and famines, yet do not praise the Lord for rain and harvest, even though those things are the testimony of a good and considerate God. Heathen nations, similar to Israel of old, did not know that God Himself gave them “corn, and wine, and oil,” while they gave the credit for them to other gods (Hosea 2:8) – “vanities,” from which Paul and Barnabas now urged them to turn.

Jesus also associated rain with the mercy of God: “for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust” (Matt 5:45). No person who is aware of light and rain has a right to withhold the glory for them from God. It is a grievous sin to give for credit for such things to idols – whether they are gods of wood, stone, silver, and gold, or, what men refer to as, mother nature .

FILLING OUR HEARTS

“ . . . filling our hearts with food and gladness.” Other versions read, “satisfying your hearts with food and gladness,” NASB “provides you with plenty of food and fills your hearts with joy,” NIV “filling you with food, and your hearts with joy,” NRSV “filling you with food and your hearts with happiness,” CJB “filled you with nourishment and gladness for your hearts,” NAS and “giving you food and happiness to your hearts' content.” PHILLIPS

This is the ordinary lot of humanity – food and gladness, or the absence of moroseness. This is not true in every case, and Paul and Barnabas do not insinuate that it is. There remain droughts, floods, famine, and other disturbances of the course of nature. While we are saddened by the existence of such things, we are also chagrined that in most all of the nations experiencing such things there is idol worship and the embrace of false gods and erroneous religion. Some of those nations are even noted for witchcraft and all manner of the occult. However, even in those cases, every such place does not have rain withheld from it, nor are they always in a miserable condition.

Whether they are cognitive of it or not, all men are obligated to recognize the Lord as the Giver of, what men think are, the normal amenities of life. They alone ought to be sufficient reason to turn from idols to serve the living God, giving Him thanks and displaying gratefulness.

There are some times when stopping the further outbreak of sin becomes the most important thing. There are inspired records of such occasions.

In giving this word, Paul and Barnabas were showing how utterly unreasonable it was to serve idols, and even make an attempt to offer sacrifices to the men who wrought a miracle in their sight. Add to that the fact Paul and Barnabas had been preaching publically, and that the man that was healed had “faith to be healed.” This meant that sufficient had been said to induce faith in God. That means that the Gospel had been preached, for “faith” comes by hearing the word of the Gospel (Rom 19:14-17).

I do not believe enough is being made these days of the responsibility of men to seek the Lord and give Him glory.

SCARCELY RESTRAINED

“ And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them.” Other versions read, “with difficulty restrained,” NASB “had difficulty keeping the crowd from,” NIV “it was hard for them to keep the people from,” BBE “barely stopped,” CSB “scarce appeased,” GENEVA “with difficulty prevented,” MRD “scarcely persuaded,” NET “just managed to prevent,” NJB “The people still wanted to offer sacrifices to them, but Paul and Barnabas stopped them,” IE “it was all they could do to keep the crowds from,” ISV and “only just succeeded in restraining the crowd. PHILLIPS

After tearing their clothes, running among the crowd, asking why they were doing such a thing, and reasoning with them about the true God, they barely managed to stop the people from offering sacrifices to them. Nor, indeed, does our text suggest that this was done quickly. However, the “apostles” did not cease their efforts until they had succeeded in stopping the Lycaonians from offering sacrifice to them.

There are some times when stopping the further outbreak of sin becomes the most important thing. There are inspired records of such occasions.

• MOSES. Moses stops the sinful expressions at the foot of mount Sinai, removing the golden calf they were worshiping, grinding it into powder, scattering it upon the water, and making the children of Israel drink it (Ex 32:19-20). Before the day was over, 3,000 men died.

- AARON. Aaron runs through the Israelites with a censer, to stop a plague from the Lord. As he stood between the living and the dead, “the plague was stayed” (Num 16:46–48). Before he finished this work, 14,700 people died in the plague.

- PHINEHAS. Phinehas rose up from among the congregation, took his javelin, and pinned an adulterous couple to the floor of their tent, “so the plague was stayed from the children of Israel” 24,000 people died before he could do this (Num 25:7-8; Psa 106:30).

- DAVID. In a plague during which the angel of the Lord slew 70,000 men, David built an altar and offered burnt offerings and peace offerings, “and the plague was stayed from Israel” (2 Sam 24:25).

My point here is that there are times when stopping a wayward action takes the precedence. During such times, there is no extent available to men that is not worthy of the effort. Sometimes this action can avert Divine judgment, as in the cases cited above.

Paul and Barnabas acted in accordance with this. They knew the enormity of the transgression of offering sacrifice to those who are not God.

JEWS FROM ANTIOCH AND ICONIUM PURSUE AND STONE PAUL

“ 19 And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people, and, having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead.”

Confirming the malignancy that had corrupted the Jews, even though they had heard the glad tidings of good things, certain of them pursue Paul, catching up with him in Lystra.

JEWS FROM ANTIOCH AND ICONIUM

“And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium . . .” These were the two cities in which Paul and Barnabas had previous preached (Acts 13:14-41; 14:1-3). They had been in the synagogues of both cities, and had remained in Iconium for a “long time . . . speaking boldly in the Lord,” giving testimony to “the word of His grace,” with God confirming their word, granting “signs and wonders to be done by their hands” (14:3). They had been “expelled” from the coasts around Antioch, They were then “assaulted” by the Jews in Iconium, and fled to Lystra (14:5). Now the Jews come after them, pursuing them as though they were wild animals. The Jews of Thessalonica did the same thing later, when Paul was in Berea (17: 13).

WHO PERSUADED THE PEOPLE

“ . . . who persuaded the people...” Other versions read, “persuaded the multitudes,” NKJV “having won over the multitudes,” NASB “won the crowd over,” NIV “got control over the people,” BBE “excited the people against them,” MRD “turned the people against them,” NJB “obtained the peoples’ consent,” TNT “turned the crowds into a murderous mob,” LIVING and “turning the minds of the people against Paul.” PHILLIPS

Here we see the aggressiveness of the Jews, who could not receive what Paul and Barnabas were preaching. This is why Paul said of them, “ . . . the Jews: who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men” (1 Thess 2:14-15). This is what unbelief does to people. It not only hardens the heart, but leads to beastly conduct as well. This is because unbelief throws the door of the heart open to Satan, dulling the conscience and steeling the mind against the truth. Unbelief is like a great room in which Satan works freely, moving people to do things they would never do if they were in their right mind. Such poor souls are vassals of the devil, taken captive by him at his will (2 Tim 2:26).

Behold the fickleness of the citizens of Lystra. One moment they are attempting to offer sacrifices to Paul and Barnabas, persuaded they are the gods come down to them in the likeness of men. Then, aroused by Jews from two other cities, they become a raging mob, prepared to kill Paul and Barnabas as though they were unworthy to live another moment.

How could such a dramatic change take place in these people? It is because of the fundamental inconsistency and instability of the flesh. When it comes to the things of God and the people of God, “the natural man” is not capable of sound judgment (1 Cor 2:14). Oh, that professed Christians were more aware of the danger of trafficking in the wisdom of men and the arena of unbelief!

THEY STONED PAUL

“ . . . and, having stoned Paul ..” Other versions read, “they stoned Paul,” NKJV “after stoning Paul,” BBE “they tried to stone Paul to death,” GWN and “the people stoned Paul.” IE

It is well noted by some that the process of stoning, or how people went about it, is not mentioned in Scripture. McCLINTOK STRONG’S The Word of God does not glamorize violence, as men are prone to do, drawing attention to its details. The Jewish Talmud (traditional Jewish law) says that before stoning the individual, he was “wholly divested of clothing.” ISBE I do not know if this is what took place in our text. The very notation, however, confirms that a humiliating death was intended – humiliating because public, and because of the condition of the victim.

Paul refers to this experience in a listing of some of the perils that he faced, writing, “once I was stoned” (2 Cor 11:25). So far as the Scriptural record is concerned, no one else survived being stoned, for it was intended to terminate the life of the one so judged – it was a form of capital punishment (Lev 20:2,27; 24:16; Num 15:35; 35:17).

Only Paul is said to have been stoned – not Barnabas, even though he was thought to have been Jupiter, or Zeus, who was the greater god, Hermes, or Mercurius, being his mythical offspring. Paul, however, was taken to be the “chief speaker,” and the contention the Jews had with Paul and Barnabas was the Gospel that they preached.

It also ought to be noted that Paul suffered the same treatment that Stephen experienced – stoning: something to which Paul, when known as Saul, had given his consent (Acts 22:20). I seriously doubt that this is nothing more than coincidence. Yet, care must be taken not to take the matter too far.

THEY DREW HIM OUT OF THE CITY

“ . . . drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead.” Other versions read, “dragged him out fo the city, supposing him to be dead,” NKJV “dragged him outside the city,, thinking he was dead,” NIV “had him pulled out of town, supposing him to have died,” DARBY “dragged him out of the city, apparently dead,” LIVING and “The people thought they had killed him.” IE

The general consensus of the students of Scripture is that this is the incident to which Paul refers in Second Corinthians. If this is the case, and there is no strong reason to suppose that it is not, Paul himself was not sure whether he was dead or not. Here is his account from the Amplified Bible.

“TRUE, THERE is nothing to be gained by it, but [as I am obliged] to boast, I will go on to visions and revelations of the Lord. I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago—whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows—was caught up to the third heaven. And I know that this man—whether in the body or away from the body I do not know, God knows Was caught up into paradise, and he heard utterances beyond the power of man to put into words, which man is not permitted to utter. Of this same [man’s experiences] I will boast, but of myself (personally) I will not boast, except as regards my infirmities (my weaknesses)” (2 Cor 12:1-5).

The above text is a continuation of Paul’s defense of his apostleship. The previous chapter cited the sufferings and perils that he endured. In this text he deals with visions and revelations that he had received. Some have thought Paul was writing about some other person, but this is not a view that has been well thought out. In this passage, Paul is not writing about the experience of others, but of his own. He even says that he is himself boasting in “this same man’s experiences” – that is, they were his own. He then states that he was given a “thorn in the flesh” to keep him from “being puffed up and too elated by the exceeding greatness (preeminence) of these revelations” AMPLIFIED (2 Cor 12:7). There is no question, therefore, concerning Paul being the person of reference.

Paul states that he did not know whether he was “in the body” or “out of the body” – that is, whether he was dead or alive. A case may be built for him really being dead – namely, what reason would the people have had for ceasing the stoning if there was the slightest chance that he was not yet dead. However, all of that is nothing more than supposition, and it is not time well spent attempting to justify the conclusion.

I do not doubt that they pulled Paul outside of the city, leaving him to be consumed by vultures or other animals of prey. The heartlessness of the whole procedure is a striking demonstration of what unbelief can do to a person. There is a certain hardness and callousness that dominates the heart of the one who refuses to believe.

You may recall that the Jews twice “took up stones” to stone Jesus Himself, but could not carry it out (John 8:59; 10:31-39). Moses once cried out to the Lord, “What shall I do unto this people? they be almost ready to stone me” (Ex 17:4). On another occasion, David’s own people sought to stone him (1 Sam 30:6). Truly, there are times when, as Jesus Himself said, a man’s foes are the ones closest to him (Matt 10:36).

It is no wonder we are told, “Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God” (Heb 3:12).

THE DISCIPLES GATHER AROUND PAUL, AND HE ROSE UP

“ 20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.”

According to appearance, it surely looked as though the ministry of Paul was over. However, this was not the case. Only the Lord, who commissions the minister, can officially close his ministry.

THE DISCIPLES STOOD ROUND ABOUT HIM

“Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him . . .” Other versions read, “when the disciples gathered around him,” NKJV “while the disciples stood around him,” NASB “after the disciples had gathered around him,” NIV “when the disciples surrounded him,” NRSV “when the disciples came around him,” BBE “while the disciples encircled him,” DARBY “the disciples assembled around him,” GWN “the disciples came crowding round him,” NJB “the believers gathered around him,” RWB “the disciples, having surrounded him,” YLT “the disciples had collected round him,” WEYMOUTH “the disciples formed a circle around him,” ISV and “while the disciples were gathered in a circle round him.” PHILLIPS

It is of interest that there is a mention of “the disciples.” Who were they? Following their departure from Iconium, we are told that Paul and Barnabas “fled unto Lystra and Derbe,” preaching the Gospel there (14:6-7). There, in Lystra, Paul healed a cripple man who heard him speak, because he perceived the man “had faith to be healed.” Following that, the people of that region sought to offer sacrifices to them. There is no record of others who believed, or of any disciples being in that region who had formerly believed. Some people from Iconium may have continued with Paul and Barnabas, but we are not told that this was the case.

Not knowing how long Paul and Barnabas had preached in this region, and lacking any evidence that believers already were found in Lystra, I conclude that these disciples were new believers – like the crippled man who was healed.

Behold the devotion of these disciples, as well as their boldness! According to the flesh, they stood the risk of being stoned also. Yet they are deeply committed to the “minister” through whom they had believed (1 Cor 3:5). This is the manner of the kingdom, and no one should be surprised when genuine converts remain close to the ones who declared the truth of God to them. This is because the new birth is accompanied with a hunger and thirst for righteousness, together with a love for the truth.

- After Peter and John had healed the lame man at the Gate Beautiful, he “held on” to them, refusing to leave them (Acts 3:8,11,14).
- Following his conversion, when Paul went to Jerusalem, he joined the apostles “coming in and going out” with them (Acts 9:28).
- When the Gentiles were converted at the house of Cornelius at Peter’s preaching, they “asked him to stay a few days” NKJV (Acts 10:48).
- When Paul and Barnabas were in Antioch, “many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed them” (Acts 13:43).
- When Lydia was converted, she asked Paul and company to stay in her house (Acts 16:15).
- Later, when Paul would be in Athens, “certain men” would cleave to him (Acts 17:34).

This kind of attachment is common throughout the book of Acts. However, in our day there is a new kind of religion that does not require, or even encourage, extended exposure to holy men. In fact, within an institutional setting, there is often no convenient means through which new converts can be regularly around those who brought the word of the Lord to them,

In our text, not only were the disciples drawn to Paul, but surrounded him after he had been rejected, stoned, and pulled outside of the city. There is no evidence of any fear within them, but they are moved by the boldness of faith.

Some have conjectured that Paul was not really dead, and that these disciples gathered about him to pray for his healing. One commentator poses a most interesting situation, providing the view of others as well. “The probability is that he was stunned by a blow — perhaps a single blow and after a short time recovered from it. Nothing is more common than thus by a violent blow on the head to be rendered apparently lifeless, the effect of which soon is over, and the person restored to strength. Pricaeus and Wetstein suppose that Paul feigned himself to be dead, and when out of danger rose and returned to the city.” ALBERT BARNES Considering the reason for stoning – which was always to induce death – and the absolute and venomous hatred of the Jews, such an explanation is incredulous, and betrays a most uncomely manner of thinking. While it is remotely possible that Paul was not dead, as he himself appears to suggest in Second Corinthians, that could not have been the way he appeared, for the ones who stoned him were sure he was dead.

HE ROSE UP

“ . . . he rose up . . .” Other versions read, “he arose,” NASB “he got up,” NIV “as they did so he stood up” YLT and “Paul got up.” PHILLIPS

Whether Paul was dead or near death, this is a record of Divine intervention. It is inconceivable that someone who had just been stoned by a group of angry and aggressive Jews could, through natural means alone, get up on his feet and walk back to the city. I will, attribute this to the faith of these disciples who had gathered around him,

Whether Paul was dead or near death, this is a record of Divine intervention. It is inconceivable that someone who had just been stoned by a group of angry and aggressive Jews could, through natural means alone, get up on his feet and walk back to the city. I will, attribute this to the faith of these disciples who had gathered around him, and suggest that this is the reason they are referenced here, and never before or after mentioned.

AND CAME INTO THE CITY

“ . . . and came into the city . . .” Other versions read, “went into the city,” NKJV “entered the city,” NASB “went back into the city,” NIV “went into the town,” BBE and “went back into the town.” CJB

That is, Paul went back into Lystra, in which he had been stoned, and out of which he had been dragged. We are not told whether or not others saw him, but I do not doubt the possibility of such a thing. The fact that Paul did not immediately move on to another place suggests that he had no intention of hiding, or keeping aloof from those who had stoned him. It seems to me that we have every reason to believe that he confirmed the faith of those new converts as he was always inclined to do.

In his return to Lystra, we are exposed to Paul’s faith, courage, and determination to serve the Lord – and such things are refreshing to ponder.

HE DEPARTED WITH BARNABAS

“ . . . and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.” Viewed from the standpoint of nature, “the next day” would have found Paul with inflammation, soreness, and a stiffening of the muscles. After all, he had been “stoned.” I conclude, therefore, that he had been made whole. If the Hivites were so sore three days after they were circumcised that they were easily slain by the sons of Jacob (Gen 34:1-26), what would be the condition of a man who had been stoned, then dragged from the city and left for dead? At the least, he was on the verge of death.

We are not told how Barnabas escaped the stoning – or if it was even necessary for him to escape. I gather that Paul being the “chief speaker” accounted for his stoning, and for Barnabas not being stoned as well. At any rate, Paul and Barnabas resumed the mission to which they had been called, and went to Derbe to continue the work of the Lord. So far as their work for the Lord was concerned, it went forward just as though nothing of consequence had happened.

As is proved true throughout the book of Acts, our text has confirmed a number of things – things that must be perceived, and within the awareness of which the people of God are to conduct their lives. These realities do not center in humanity itself, but in the One who created it.

CONCLUSION

As is proved true throughout the book of Acts, our text has confirmed a number of things – things that must be perceived, and within the awareness of which the people of God are to conduct their lives. These realities do not center in humanity itself, but in the One who created it. The aim is primarily to bring glory to God, and secondarily to bring benefit to men.

- The power of the Gospel to save, and to discover the hearts of men.
- The effectiveness of faith.
- The nature of faith to obey.
- The impact of faith upon those who possess it.
- Faith in others can be perceived by those with spiritual insight.
- Spiritual misconceptions that lead people to improper action must be confronted and subdued.
- The impact of the faith of God's elect upon those who do not have it.
- The hostility of the flesh.
- The impotence of traditional religion.
- The power of the grace of God.
- The impact of unbelief on those dominated by it.
- The fickleness of the flesh.
- The tendency of men to be religious.
- The uncompromising responsibility of men to their Creator.
- The bond that forms between those who believe, and those who delivered the Word fo them.
- The power of God to sustain those who called into His work.
- The superiority of the work of the Lord.
- The uncompromising nature of faith.
- The compelling effect of the Holy Spirit upon those who do not quench or grieve Him.
- The seriousness of being wrong about the Living God and Jesus Christ.
- The persevering nature of faith.
- The effectiveness of the unity of the Spirit.
- Atheism is not natural.
- God has left abundant witness of His beneficence – enough that should move men to seek Him.
- The confirmation of believers is critical in the work of the Lord.

These observations confirm that the records in the book of Acts are the accounts of real spiritual life and its impact upon those who behold it. Luke does not give us philosophical views of life in Christ, but presents reality.

Thou shalt have no other gods before me. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth” (Ex 20:3-4)

Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: (Exo 20:4)

Lesson #63

THE WORD CONTINUES TO SPREAD

“ 14:21 And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, 22 Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. 23 And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed. 24 And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia. 25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia: 26 And thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled. 27 And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles. 28 And there they abode long time with the disciples.” (Acts 14:21-28)

INTRODUCTION

Throughout the book of Acts there is a marked emphasis on preaching and teaching. Thirty-seven times the book of Acts refers to preaching (3:20; 4:2; 5:42; 8:4,5,12,25,35,40; 9:27; 10:36,37,42; 11:19,20; 13:5,24,38,42; 14:7,15,21,25; 15:21,35,36; 16:6,10; 17:3,13,18; 19:13; 20:7,9,25; 28:31). Nineteen times it refers to teaching (1:1; 4:2,18; 5:21,25,28,42; 11:26; 13:1; 14:21; 15:1,35; 16:21; 18:11,25; 20:20; 21:28; 22:3; 28:31). In addition, there are references to reasoning (Acts 6:2; 17:2; 18:4,14,19; 24:25; 28:29), persuasion (13:43; 14:19; 18:4; 19:8,26; 21:14; 26:26,28; 28:23), disputation (9:29; 15:2; 17:17), declaring (8:33; 9:27; 10:8; 12:17; 13:32,41; 15:2,4, 12,14; 17:23; 20:27; 21:19; 25:14), exhorting (2:40; 11:23; 13:15; 14:22; 15:32; 18:27; 20:2; 27:22), and speaking (1:3,9; 2:46,7,11,16,22,29; 3:21,24; 4:17,18,20,29; 5:20,40; 6:11,13; 7:44; 8:24,34; 9:27; 10:32,46; 11:15; 13:40,43, 45,46; 14:3,9,12; 16:14; 17:19; 18:9,26; 19:36,41; 20:30; 21:37,39; 23:5,9; 24:10; 16:1,14,25,26,30; 27:11,35; 28:20,22,24, 25).

There is no entertainment quotient in Kingdom labors. No inspired efforts are intended to bring momentary satisfaction, or appeal to the emotion alone. Everything is calculated to awaken the deepest and most profound capacities of men, motivating them through reason, as compared with raw emotion. This is only fitting in view of the fact that we are made in the image of God.

All of this confirms that the work of the Lord is carried out within the arena of thought, consideration, and decision. It is associated with purpose, objective, intention, and the weighing of circumstances and alternatives. There are unalterable facts to be perused, promises to be pondered, and warnings to be considered.

The work of the Lord has to do with people being added to the Lord, then being established in Him. As will be confirmed in this text, care was taken not to leave believers in an uninformed and vulnerable state. A certain priority was placed upon their growth in Christ Jesus. This is because the objective of salvation is not simply to get us out of sin, but into glory as well – and that involves sanctification, in which a progressive change is made from one increasing stage of glory to another (2 Cor 3:18). It is essential that the carrying out of this objective be seen in the various initiatives that are reported in the book of Acts. To this point, these include the following.

- The initial tarrying in Jerusalem until the disciples were endued with power through the Holy Spirit (1:12-26).
- The activities on the day of Pentecost (2:14-41).
- The activities following the day of Pentecost (2:42-47).
- The activities in Solomon's porch (3:12-26).
- Peter's word to the Jewish leaders (4:8-12).
- Stephen's word to the Sanhedrin (7:2-53).
- Philip's preaching in Samaria (8:5-12).
- Philip's preaching to the Ethiopian eunuch (8:37-40).
- Saul preaching in the synagogues (9:20).
- Peter preaching at the house of Cornelius (10:34-48).
- Paul preaching in Antioch of Pisidia (13:16-41).

- The appeal to the idolaters in Lystra (14:15-17).
- The confirming of the souls in Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch (14:22).

In all of these cases there was a strong appeal to reason – to both the heart and the mind. There was no appeal to matters that were of a strictly personal nature. Even when people were healed, no time was spent diagnosing the disease or infirmity, or developing the various difficulties associated with it. With unwavering consistency what people were called to was accented, not what they were saved or delivered from.

Throughout all of the reports, no person of God is ever depicted as exploiting the people. The one individual who sought to gain fleshly advantage from the things of God was Simon the sorcerer – and he was soundly rebuked for his effort (8:20-23). Later, Paul will declare that charlatans would arise, seeking to draw disciples to themselves. They would come from the ranks of the leaders of the church, and they are referred to as “grievous wolves” who would not “spare the flock” (Acts 20:29-30). Today, such men are rather common – but they are still “grievous wolves,” and they still do not “spare the flock,” harming it rather than building it up.

All of this confirms that a great “falling away” has taken place, just as the Spirit said (2 Thess 2:3). While it is not fashionable to speak of such things, it is necessary to draw attention to the apostolic warnings of conditions that have now become common.

• DRAWING AWAY DISCIPLES. “For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw Think of it this way: the lofty examples that are chronicled in the book of Acts are conditions from which the modern church has fallen. The absence of the miraculous is not so much the point. As the absence of gladly away disciples after them” (Acts 20:29-30).

• A FORM OF GODLINESS. “This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, Without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof : from such turn away” (2 Tim 3:1-5).

• NOT ENDURE SOUND DOCTRINE. “For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears ; And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables” (2 Tim 4:4).

• BRING IN DAMNABLE HERESIES. “But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies , even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of” (2 Pet 2:1-2).

• A FALLING AWAY. “Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition” (2 Thess 2:3).

Think of it this way: the lofty examples that are chronicled in the book of Acts represent conditions from which the modern church has fallen. The absence of the miraculous is not so much the point. As the absence of gladly receiving the word, unwavering persuasion, and a commitment of the whole of life to the Lord. The nominal church now occupies lower ground, where such marvelous things do not take place with any degree of consistency. The fervor that does exist is too often institutional hype, and not that which is produced by faith – and even that is short-lived. It is a most tragic circumstance!

In this text, Paul and Barnabas continue spreading the Word in new regions. Then, they revisit the areas where there were disciples. Upon the completion of the work to which the Holy Spirit had called them, they returned to Antioch to give a report of what the Lord had done with them, and how the door of faith had been opened to the Gentiles. Thus we are provided an overview of the completion of a specific mission. It was carried out faithfully and effectively in the midst of inimical forces.

PREACHING AND TEACHING

“ 14:21a And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many . . .”

This is an inspired description of the activities of Paul and Barnabas in Derbe. The words have no meaning whatsoever in an institutional setting. This is because men have assigned their own preconceived meanings to preaching and teaching. In so doing, they have obscured both the nature and the substance of the activity of these men of God. They did not become embroiled in community activities, social needs, or personal crises. Nor, indeed did they target special people groups – all of which are primary in contemporary Christian outreaches.

PREACHED THE GOSPEL

“And when they had preached the gospel to that city . . .” Other versions read, “proclaimed,” NRSV “evangelized,” CSB “told the good news.” WILLIAMS

The words “preached the gospel” are translated from a single Greek word: Euvaggelisa,menoi, . The word evangelized is a transliteration of this word, which means “to bring good news, to announce glad tidings,” THAYER This word is used to describe the proclaiming of various messages of good things or glad tidings.

- The birth of Jesus (Lk 1:19).
- The “kingdom of God” (Lk 4:43; Lk 8:1; 16:16).
- “Jesus Christ” (Acts 5:42)
- “The word” (Acts 8:4).
- “The kingdom of God and the name of Jesus” (Acts 9:12).
- “Jesus” (Acts 8:35).
- “Peace by Jesus Christ” (Acts 10:36).
- “The Lord Jesus” (Acts 11:20).
- The fulfillment of “the promise which was made to the fathers” (Acts 13:32).
- That men should “turn from” idols “unto the living God” (Acts 14:15).
- “The word of the Lord” (Acts 15:35).
- “The gospel of peace” (Rom 10:15).
- “Of God” (2 Cor 11:7).
- “Him” (Jesus – Gal 1:16).
- “The faith” (Gal 1:23).
- “Peace” (Eph 2:17).
- “The unsearchable riches of Christ” (Eph 3:8).

From the standpoint of translation and precise language, each of the above expressions can be preceded by the phrase, “announced the glad tidings concerning.” Where a specific message is not mentioned, the proper translation of the expression is, “preached the gospel” (ex – Acts 8:40; 14:7,21; 16:16; Rom 1:15; 15:20; 1 Cor 1:17; 9:16,18; 2 Cor 10:16; 1 Pet 1:12).

There is an objectivity in what is preached that transcends a mere human solution, moral code, or sectarian stance. The message itself is not man-centered, but brings good tidings of Divine activity that regards men.

In Christ and the New Covenant, the word that is declared – the essential message – is a good one that produces gladness. That gladness is expressed in faith, hope, and love – all of which are anchored in eternity. The “glad tidings” are not the proclamation of a new way of life, an effective discipline of life, or the secret to happiness in this world. Christ is at the heart of the message, which is the declaration of His Person, redemptive achievements, current ministry, and return in glory. Anything and everything that is included in the message of the Gospel has its roots in those realities. At the point Christ Himself and what He has done and is doing becomes secondary, the message at once becomes erroneous, and the blessing of God can no longer be upon it. If Jesus is presented as the means of realizing personal ambitions, then “another Jesus” is being preached (2 Cor 11:4). If life in this world is the focus of the message, then it cannot possibly be true, for Jesus came to deliver us from “this present evil world” (Gal 1:4). A high regard for one’s self is not the objective of the Gospel. Rather, it is a high regard for the God who created men, requires their repentance, and confers life upon them – all through Jesus Christ, by means of faith, and in the enabling power of the Holy Spirit.

Throughout these lessons I have stressed the sad fact that much of the purported preaching of our time is not the proclamation of a message – a word that stands independently of human circumstance. Much of what is being said by Christian preachers and teachers is more akin to marketing than to proclamation. In the record before us, however, a message is being delivered that stands apart from human circumstance. It is not a word that is conveniently adapted to men, but an essentially good declaration to which men are to adapt their thoughts and lives.

TAUGHT MANY

“ . . . and had taught many . . .” Other versions read, “made many disciples,” NKJV “won a large number of disciples,” NIV “many people became followers,” IE “gaining a large number of converts,” WEYMOUTH and “winning many disciples.” WILLIAMS

The word “taught” is translated from the Greek word maqhteu,santej , which, as used here, has the following lexical meaning: “to make a disciple, to teach,” THAYER “make a disciple of someone, instruct, cause someone to become a follower,” FRIBERG and “to be a follower or a disciple of someone, in the sense of adhering to the teachings or instructions of a leader and in promoting the cause of such a leader - 'to follow, to be a disciple of.” LOUW-NIDA

Teaching has to do with instructing men in the implications of the Gospel. By implications, I mean the tone or spirit of the message, as compared with its content. Underlying the facts that are made known in the good news there are certain implications, or deductions. Some of the revealed implications are as follows.

- That the world is fundamentally evil, requiring that we be delivered from it (Gal 1:4).
- That, apart from Christ, the human condition is a hopeless one that cannot be corrected (Eph 2:12).
- That men, as the creation of God, are obligated to Him, and will be held in strict accountability for how they have lived (Acts 17:26-28).

- That, while God takes no delight in the death of the wicked, there is such a thing as damnation, which is to be zealously avoided (John 5:29; Rom 13:2).
- That time will yield to eternity, during which men will continue to exist in a conscious state (Eph 2:7; 3:21; Rev 4:10).
- That the purpose for life is to please God, not self (1 Cor 10:31; Col 3:17,23).
- That what God has revealed is intended to be understood (Eph 3:4; 5:17; Col 1:9).
- That an appetite for the things of God, which is essential, is inhibited, and finally altogether removed, by worldly involvements (1 John 2:15-17).
- That man is not capable of correcting his own condition, or making himself suitable to God – which must be done (Rom 3:10-18; 5:6).
- That identity with God through Christ trumps all other relationships (John 17:3; 1 Thess 4:1; Phil 3:7-11).
- That our bodies do not belong to us, and are to be used for the glory of God (1 Cor 6:13-15).
- That God has, in salvation, brought thorough provision to men (Col 2:10; 1 Pet 1:3).
- That men are obligated to become prepared for the day of judgment and oriented for glory (Matt 24:44; Rom 13:11).
- That all human relationships must be conducted in view of one's identity with God through Christ (Eph 5:2,23,25; 1 John 4:11; James 3:9-10).

Valid teaching and holy reasoning grow out of a cognitive acquaintance with the Gospel of Christ. When men think in terms of ideals, the ideal must have its root in the Gospel of Christ. Men are not allowed the luxury of defining their own ideals. After all, they are the creation of God, and have been redeemed by Him as well. In their best state, they are the servants of God. When men present teachings that have basically to do with human relationships and aspirations, they are not speaking in the behalf of God Almighty. However impressive their message may sound, it is nothing more than a distraction in the arena of life.

Teaching and Making Disciples

Teaching is not lecturing, or merely passing along interesting information. If the ones who hear the teaching do not conform their lives to it, they have not been taught, and they do not possess the knowledge God requires. While preaching the Gospel has to do with transformation, or the change of ones essential character, teaching relates to conformation, in which the individual actually becomes a conscious participant in the eternal purpose of God. In Christ, a “disciple” is one who has not only embraced the Teacher Himself, but what the Teacher has said and is doing. That is, the disciple is a follower of Jesus, making it a point to be where the Teacher is, and to hear what He is saying.

All of this relates to perceiving the implications of the Gospel, or making sense out of what is declared in the good news. No person will ever be able to be truly holy until it makes perfect sense for him to be so. It is not possible be separate from the world if that is not seen as the reasonable thing to do. No person will prepare for the day of judgement unless they are convinced it is utter insanity not to do so. Abstaining from sin makes no sense at all unless the requirement of Christ's death for it is perceived.

Being a disciple is an ongoing activity. The measure of one's discipleship is determined by what he has been taught, and how he has received that teaching. If, for example, the disciple does not understand his life really does not belong to him, he will continue to pursue self-interests to some extent, avoiding only those things that he is convinced are wrong. Such a person may seek for the Lord to help him realize his own objectives, thinking that redemption has basically to do with the Lord joining men in lawful pursuits.

An Example

Take, for example, the matter of fornication. Some heathen cultures practiced immorality as a matter of their religion. They actually considered fornication as an act of worship. In fact both the Greeks and the Romans worshiped a “goddess of love.” The Romans named this goddess “Venus,” and the Greeks called her “Aphrodite.” On the Greek mainland, Corinth was the chief center of her worship. History records that prostitutes considered this goddess to be their patron. BRITANNICA Above is a photo of a statue of Aphrodite with “cupid,” which is often depicted in American cartoons. The point is that the Greeks and Romans deified fleshly lust, thus giving dignity to the sin of fornication.

When Paul wrote to the Corinthians, he dealt with the sin of fornication at length. This was doubtless owing to the prevalence of this sin in the city of Corinth, practiced in the name of a false god. Some of the people in Corinth were not reasoning in a godly manner concerning this sin, and therefore Paul came to grips with it. He was “teaching” them, enlarging upon the implications of the Gospel. First, in calling for the abrupt cessation of the transgression, he taught them that sins of this sort excluded people from the kingdom of God: “Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God” (1 Cor 6:9-10). However, the mere prohibition of sensual sins was not enough to guarantee their cessation. Paul therefore reasoned with them concerning this matter, using the Gospel of Christ as the basis of his reasoning. This was teaching.

- They had been washed from these sins, being sanctified and justified, which made those sins totally unreasonable: “ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God” (1 Cor 6:11).

- The body is not intended for fornication, but for the Lord, and the Lord is for the body: “Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body. (1 Cor 6:13).

Some warn the transgressors of the danger of contracting some disease. Others refer to psychological problems that can be caused. Others promote total abstinence as a way of avoiding unwanted pregnancies or some disease. Others encourage purity in anticipation of marriage, and problems that may be incurred because of premarital intimacy.

There is the prospect of the resurrection of the dead, which confirms the Lord’s identity with the body: “And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power” (1 Cor 6:14).

- Our bodies are the members of Christ, making it unreasonable to give them to a harlot: “Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid” (1 Cor 6:15).

- We have been joined to the Lord, making us “one spirit” with Him. Fornication, therefore, involves committing adultery against the Lord: “What? know ye not that he which is joined to an harlot is one body? for two, saith he, shall be one flesh. But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit” (1 Cor 6:16-17).

- In committing fornication, one sins against their own body, which belongs to the Lord: “Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body” (1 Cor 6:18).

- In redemption, our bodies become the temple of the Holy Spirit, meaning that we are not our own. Therefore, fornication is a paramount sin against the Lord: “What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?” (1 Cor 6:19).

- In His death, Jesus purchased us, so that we are not our own. Therefore, God is to glorified in our bodies, making fornication unlawful: “For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's” (1 Cor 6:20).

That is a classic example of making disciples, or teaching. The rarity of such an activity is confirmed by the outbreak of immorality, and the manner in which even religious men deal with it. Some warn the transgressors of the danger of contracting some disease. Others refer to psychological problems that can be caused. Others promote total abstinence as a way of avoiding unwanted pregnancies or some disease. Others encourage purity in anticipation of marriage, and problems that may be incurred because of premarital intimacy. Still others speak of fornication as a mere indiscretion, or a mistake made in the heat of passion. Some even warn of the addictive nature of such activity, which heightens the danger of ongoing health problems.

All of these approaches, however wise they may appear, are flawed, for they do not address the matter as God does. Those employing such methods avoid the use of words like “fornication,” “sin,” “wantonness,” and “lust.” In so doing, they have removed themselves from Christ, who died for “sin,” not for mere mistakes, or errors in judgment.

In my judgment, the modern church has done a miserable job of teaching. Of course, it has not done well in preaching either, which is probably the reason she is not teaching, or making disciples. Legion is the name of professed Christians who are following their own desires, and consequently are not following Christ. They are not “disciples,” and they are not being taught to be so.

Procedural Religion

Concerning life in Christ Jesus, the word of God is very pointed about a procedural religion. It is represented as totally unreasonable, for it presumes a person in Christ is still alive to sin. Thus Paul reasons, “Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances” (Col 2:20). The real posture of life in Christ is one on which they are to reckon, or reason: “For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord” (Rom 6:11). The death of the believer to sin is just as real as Christ’s death for sin!

The purpose that drives all

There is no procedure, however meticulous it may be, that can accomplish these things. The best a fixed pattern of conduct can do is keep the person from expressing sin – and that is not enough.

procedural religion is to curb the outbreak of sin. This is conceptualized in the Law of Moses. It was to arrest the expression of particular weaknesses. As presented in our time, the aim is to try and make it through the day without caving in to some dominating weakness. Is this the purpose that drove the sending of Jesus into the world? Did He not come to “destroy the works of the devil?” (1 John 3:8). The aim of life is not to merely avoid living for self, but to engage in living “for Him who died for them and rose again” NKJV (2 Cor 5:15).

Where professing Christians are not living in such a manner, there is a requirement for teaching, or the making of disciples, as well as the response of faith to that teaching. The teaching is valid only to the degree that it intersects with the Gospel of Christ. Let it be clear that no person with an honest and good heart will continue to have losing bouts with sin! No person who takes sin seriously, confessing it to God, will remain in a condition where sin has the upper hand. There are at least two reasons for this.

- First, Jesus will not cast away or abandon the person who comes to Him. He promised, “him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out” (John 6:37). That means the person is not alone, has access to everything required to overcome sin and apprehend the good things that accompany salvation.

- Second, the Lord has promised certain advantages to those who confess their sins. “If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness” (1 John 1:9). The removal of the stain of sin has a direct bearing upon its power over us, for it deals with the conscience. Being cleansed “from all unrighteousness” has to do with the purging of the conscience (Heb 9:14). This involves the purification of the heart which frees men from the dominion of sin.

There is no procedure, however meticulous it may be, that can accomplish these things. The best a fixed pattern of conduct can do is keep the person from expressing sin – and that is not enough. Not only must sin be abandoned, but righteousness must be obtained, and God served. There is also the matter of fellowship with Christ.

THEY RETURNED AND CONFIRMED THE DISCIPLES

“ 21b . . . they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch. 22a Confirming the souls of the disciples. . . ”

Only after Paul and Barnabas had filled Derbe with the sound of the Gospel, and “taught many,” making disciples of them, did they leave. The region in which they had labored had been very hostile, but it did not impede the spread of the Gospel and the disciplining of those who heard it.

THEY RETURNED AGAIN

“ . . . they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch . . . ”

After leaving Cyprus, Paul and Barnabas had preached in Antioch (13:14), Iconium (13:51; 14:1), Lystra (14:6-7), and finally Derbe (14:20-21). They were “expelled out of” the coasts of Antioch due to the influence of hostile Jews, shaking the dust of that region from their feet as they left (13:50-51). After the Jews had stirred up the people in Iconium, Paul and Barnabas were forced to flee to the area in which Lystra and Derbe were located (14:5). In Lystra, certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium stirred to the people, and Paul was stoned, being dragged out of the city and left for dead (14:19). There is no record of them facing any hostilities in Derbe.

Now, however, Paul and Barnabas determine to return to the very cities in which they had faced unrelenting opposition: Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch. They will retrace their steps in the precise order in which their ministry had initially carried them. This time, however, they will have a different purpose. They will do in those cities what they had done in Derbe: teaching many, or making disciples.

This is what Jesus had instructed the twelve apostles to do: “Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them . . . ” or, as another version reads, “make disciples of all nations” NKJV (Matt 28:19). After preaching the Gospel, there is teaching to be done that leads to being baptized.

The process is described particularly in the second chapter of Acts: “Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls” (Acts 2:38-41). After declaring the Gospel (2:14-37), Peter taught the people, making disciples of them. Their response was to include repentance, being baptized in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins, and receiving the gift of the Holy Spirit. He buttressed his teaching by extensively testifying and exhorting the people, “Save yourselves from this untoward generation” (2:40). Only then did the people respond, conforming their lives to what Peter had declared. “Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls” (Acts 2:41). The people had been discipled, or taught!

This, however, was not the end of their discipleship, but was only the beginning. They continued to subject themselves to “the apostles’ doctrine,” enlarging the circumference of their discipleship (2:42). Now, Paul and Barnabas return to the disciples who had responded to the Gospel, to further teach them in the ways of the Lord.

Remember, this is the “work” to which the Holy Spirit had called them (13:2). The activities of which we now read is part of that work, and was integral to its fulfillment.

CONFIRMING THE SOULS OF THE DISCIPLES

“Confirming the souls of the disciples . . .” Other versions read, “strengthening the souls,” NKJV “making strong the souls,” BBE “strengthening the hearts,” CJB “establishing the souls,” DARBY “confirming the disciples’ hearts,” GENEVA “strengthening the spirits,” NAB “put fresh heart into the disciples,” NJB “helped the believers to grow in love for God and each other,” LIVING “made the followers stronger,” IE “establishing and strengthening the souls and the hearts,” AMPLIFIED and “put fresh heart into the disciples.” PHILLIPS

The word “confirmed” is translated from a word meaning, “to establish besides, strengthen more; to render more firm, confirm,” THAYER “cause someone to become stronger in the sense of more firm and unchanging in attitude or belief - 'to strengthen, to make more firm,” LOUW-NIDA and “to make to lean on.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

The very concept of “confirm” establishes that spiritual life does not advance automatically. Once a person is born again, growth into Christ does not occur without the actual willing and insightful involvement of the individual. Spiritual maturity is not guaranteed if a person simply remains a Christian for a long time.

The very concept of “confirm” establishes that spiritual life does not advance automatically. Once a person is born again, growth into Christ does not occur without the actual willing and insightful involvement of the individual. Spiritual maturity is not guaranteed if a person simply remains a Christian for a long time. Newness of life is not advanced in a moral and spiritual vacuum. Rather it is matured in “this present evil world,” while being assaulted by wicked principalities and powers, and with “the old man” resident in the body of the believer. Abiding in Christ, which is imperative, involves saying “No” to adversarial influences. It requires not being ignorant of Satan’s devices, and resisting his deceptive influences. Additionally, there are gifts and graces to be appropriated, and spiritual realities to be perceived. All of this requires that believers be “confirmed” – strengthened, made stable, and brought to see something of “the breadth, and length, and depth, and height” of God’s “great salvation,” and to “know the love of Christ which passeth all knowledge.” This is in order that they might be “filled with all of the fulness of God” (Eph 3:18-19). I find that language is not sufficient to express the seriousness of neglecting such confirmation.

The Priority of the Church

Our text substantiates the priority of the church – that body of people that is intended to be “the habitation of God through the Spirit.” Throughout Scripture, whether we are considering Moses, the Prophets, John the Baptist, the Apostles, or other Divinely sanctioned preachers and teachers, the care of the people of God was preeminent.

I have observed over the years that institutionalized religion cannot maintain this perspective. In fact, it tends to deride any emphasis upon those who are said to be in Christ. The thought is entertained that outreach requires the neglect of the saints – at least that is how things are being played out. This circumstance attests to the spiritual lifelessness of mere organization, as compared to something that is an organism. An organism is a life form, while an organization has no life of its own. An organism is fed in order to stay alive. An organization is maintained through rules and human wisdom.

As long as the church is neglected, not being confirmed and nourished, any professed outreach is, at the very best, deficient, and at the worst it is total vanity.

Paul and Barnabas Confirm the Souls of the Disciples

While there is place for ministering to the bodily and material needs of the brethren, it does not take the place of confirming their “souls.” The soul is particularly distinguished from the body. It is an immaterial and unseen part, yet is very real. The soul involves the intellect, emotion, and will. It is where thoughts and purposes are developed. This is the expressive part of the human nature and is distinguished from the spirit, which is the essential person. To confirm souls involves providing insight, understanding, encouragement, and comfort. Teaching is addressed to the soul, in which thoughts are processed and reasoning occurs.

Paul and Barnabas revisited the disciples, ensuring that they would be made strong, and fit for the good fight of faith. Knowing that they would be required to maintain their faith in hostile environs, they set out to make them strong, and able to “stand against the wiles of the devil” (Eph 6:11). This involved grounding them in the faith, strengthening their grasp of the truth, and encouraging them by firming up their hope. Unconfirmed disciples are vulnerable to the wicked one. Believers that are not established in the faith are prey for deceivers. Christians that are not grounded are not able to wrestle against the principalities and powers that are aligned against them.

Here is a work that is essential to spiritual life: confirming. This is what makes the difference between a bruised reed and a stable oak tree. It is the difference between a smoldering flax and a flaming bush. Confirmation moves a person from instability to stability, and from frailty to strength. The person who is confirmed will not be tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine (Eph 4:14). He will be “able to stand” in the face of opposition and difficulty (Eph 6:11).

The person who is confirmed will be least apt to experience the entrance of an “evil heart of unbelief” (Heb 3:12). They will not be “overtaken in a fault” (Gal 6:1), or “faint in the day of adversity” (Prov 24:10). They will not be the ones who are said to have “gone astray” (2 Pet 2:15). Such, like Abraham, will give more glory to God because of the strength of their faith (Rom 4:20).

Confirming the souls of the disciples is like digging and dunging a tree in order that it may grow and bear fruit (Lk 13:8-9). A confirmed soul is like a ship that is securely anchored in a troubled sea (Heb 6:19). These are the people who “grow up into” Christ “in all things” (Eph 4:15). They can see “afar off,” and do not forget they were “purged from their old sins” (2 Pet 1:9).

Those who are not confirmed are like the man who is “unstable in all of his ways” (James 1:8). They are more easily “beguiled” (2 Pet 2:14), and tend to “wrest,” or twist, the Scriptures (2 Pet 3:16). Their weakness makes them vulnerable, and therefore they are “led away with the error of the wicked,” falling from their own steadfastness (2 Pet 3:17).

The Role of Freshness and Renewal

Spiritual life requires freshness and renewal, both of which are most fully realized when the believer is regularly confirmed or established. Unlike life in the flesh, spiritual maturity must be maintained. In the world a person cannot revert to childhood – unless, through some abnormality, it be in the mind. However, in spiritual life, a person can go back to a state of infancy. This is because newness of life is maintained by faith. As it is written, “the just shall live by faith” (Rom 1:17; Gal 3:11; Heb 10:38). When faith is not maintained, or “kept,” a veil of obscurity falls over the heart, and the person begins to reason, at the very best, like a spiritual juvenile. If the condition remains unchecked, they will eventually begin to think like the world itself, and thus begin walking the course that leads to destruction.

This is why salvation includes the fact of continual renewal. This is reflected in the salient remark of Titus 3:5: “But when the kindness and the love of God our Savior toward man appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy He saved us, through the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit, whom He poured out on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior” NKJV (Titus 3:6).

We know from Second Corinthians 3:18 that the renewing, or “complete change for the better” THAYER that is wrought by Holy Spirit is one accomplished in stages. “And all of us, as with unveiled face, [because we] continued to behold [in the Word of God] as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are constantly being transfigured into His very own image in ever increasing splendor and from one degree of glory to another; [for this comes] from the Lord [Who is] the Spirit.” AMPLIFIED One of the means through which this constant transfiguration takes place is found in “confirming” the saints – through means of teaching stabilizing them in the faith and widening the circumference of their comprehension.

The American church has not done well in this ministry. It is rare, indeed, to find a significant number of confirmed and stable saints in any congregation. This has had a staggering impact on the rest of the world, for the type of deficient teaching taking place in American churches is being exported to the rest of the world. Should a kingdom laborer not fall in line with the stereotyped presentation so common in this country, he stands at risk of losing all of his support. I know of a few men that have actually experienced this.

Modern Day Blasphemy

There is a form of blasphemy that has become common in the nominal church. It has become quite fashionable to chide believers for meeting together often, admonishing them to take their religion “outside of the four walls” in which they meet. Sprinkled with a little carnal hype, it sounds like a good thing to some who hear it – but they are not thinking people. They do not realize that the implication of such a teaching is that real life can actually be contained. Ultimately, containment is evidence of death. Initially, it is revealed in an ebb, or decline, of life. Those who have been mesmerized by the deprecation of believers meeting together do not see a fundamental factor. People who have to be coerced to carry the Gospel outside of their own fellowship are the very people who should not do so. We do not need to perpetuate a religion that closes the mouths of the people, and makes them content to never rehearse the righteous acts of God outside the circle of their immediate friends. Such people need to be confirmed, not chided for failing to meet institutional objectives.

I am of the candid opinion that the prevailing ignorance of God, the failure to suppress immorality, and the staggering preponderance of false teaching among the churches is because those with a religion that is not “pure and undefiled” have, in fact, taken it “outside the four walls.”

Those who search the letters written to the churches will find a glaring absence of exhortations to, as men say, “reach the world for Christ.” None were rebuked for not winning more souls, or failing to garner more numbers. None were upbraided for being small in number, or commended for having a great number of members. Those are just the facts in the case.

I am of the candid opinion that the prevailing ignorance of God, the failure to suppress immorality, and the staggering preponderance of false teaching among the churches is because those with a religion that is not “pure and undefiled” have, in fact, taken it “outside the four walls.” There is a spiritual mediocrity that is being perpetuated by the nominal church and its theological schools – and it is attracting fundamentally infantile and lethargic souls. It is wrong for professing Christians to remain incapable of deep, extensive, and productive thought.

People who are not established have no business launching preaching and teaching initiatives. It is just as true today as it was when Jesus walked among men: “And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch” (Mat 15:14). I thank God for those with a heart to confirm those who are following Jesus!

THEY EXHORTED THEM TO CONTINUE IN THE FAITH

“ 22b . . . and exhorting them to continue in the faith . . . ”

Elaborating in the means through which the disciples were confirmed, the Spirit cites a specific activity, and the particular objective of that activity. The activity was “exhorting,” and the objective of it was for the disciples to “continue in the faith.” It is apparent that it is not enough to begin the race that is set before us. The full course of that race is to be completed, and done so in the stance of running, or making continual progress toward the goal (Heb 12:1-2). There is no point to a race that is not completed, for no “prize” will be dispensed to those coming short of the goal. Jesus will not pull us across the goal. Nor, indeed, will He continue to work in those who linger by the side of the road, or are turned aside to lesser things. The exhortation that follows is a needful one, else Paul and Barnabas would not have revisited the disciples who had embraced the glorious Gospel, they had preached to them.

EXHORTING THEM

“ . . . and exhorting them to continue in the faith . . . ” Other versions read, “encouraging them,” NASB “saying to them that they were to,” BBE “entreating them,” MRD “they helped them to,” IE “urging and warning and encouraging them,” AMPLIFIED “urging them,” PHILLIPS “admonishing them,” WYCLIFFE “begged them to,” CEV and “calling on them.” MKJV

As used here, the word “exhorting” is translated from a word that means, “to call for, summon . . . admonish, exhort . . . beg, entreat, beseech,” THAYER “speaking with persistence earnestly ask for, implore, beg,” FRIBERG and “to ask for something earnestly and with propriety – to ask for (earnestly), to request, to plead for, to appeal to, earnest request, appeal.” LOUW-NIDA

I prefer the word “exhort,” which has a stronger tone to it. To me, “encourage” is too weak to be used here, appearing to postulate discouragement or fatigue. The activity described here involves a kind of moral requirement – something that is pressed upon the people, though not in a legalistic or heartless way. It involves persuasion, imploration, and admonition.

The word from which “exhort” is translated is used several places in Scripture. The manner in which it is used will confirm its meaning involves moving the people to do something.

• SAVE YOURSELVES. “And with many other words did he testify and exhort , saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation” (Acts 2:40).

• CLEAVE UNTO THE LORD. “Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord ” (Acts 11:23).

• GATHER THE OFFERING. “Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up before hand your bounty , whereof ye had notice before, that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness” (2 Cor 9:5).

• WALK AND PLEASE GOD. “Furthermore then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more ” (1 Thess 4:1).

• WARN, COMFORT, SUPPORT, AND BE PATIENT. “Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient toward all men ” (1 Thess 5:14).

• WORK WITH QUIETNESS. “Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread ” (2 Thess 3:12).

• SUPPLICATIONS, PRAYERS AND, INTERCESSIONS. “I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men ” (1 Tim 2:1).

• SOBER MINDEDNESS. “Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded ” (Titus 2:6).

• OBEDIENCE. “ Exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things; not answering again ” (Titus 2:9).

• DESPISE NOT CHASTENING. “And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord , nor faint when thou art rebuked of him” (Heb 12:5).

• FEED THE FLOCK OF GOD. “The elders which are among you I exhort , who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: Feed the flock of God which is among you , taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind” (1 Pet 5:2).

• CONTEND FOR THE FAITH. “Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints” (Jude 1:3).

Because salvation involves bringing many sons from the world to glory, or from earth to heaven, progress is necessarily involved. This is because until we are actually liberated from the “body of this death” (Rom 7:24), being “absent” from it and “present with the Lord” (2 Cor 5:6,8), we are in a state of transition. This is depicted as running a race (Heb 12:1), wrestling against unseen adversaries (Eph 6:12), fighting a good fight and laying hold on eternal life (1 Tim 6:12), and finishing the course (2 Tim 4:7). It is also described as being changed from one stage of glory to another (2 Cor 3:18), being conformed to the image of God’s Son (Rom 8:29), and growing in the grace and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ (2 Pet 3:18). It is also seen as abiding in Christ (John 15:4,7), being steadfast and unmoveable (1 Cor 15:18), and growing up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:15). All of this activity is progressive. It involves advancement, and moving upward and onward. Because of the inimical influences within and without, exhortation is required to spur believers onward. They have not yet obtained the prize, or apprehended that for which they have been apprehended. Therefore, Paul and Barnabas return to those they had discipled, and exhorted them.

CONTINUE IN THE FAITH

“ . . . to continue in the faith.” Other versions read, “remain true to the faith,” NIV “keep the faith,” BBE “abide in the faith,” DARBY “remain faithful,” GWN “persevere in the faith,” PNT “remain in the faith,” YLT “stay in the faith,” IE “hold fast to the faith,” WEYMOUTH “hold to the faith,” MONTGOMERY “stand firm in the faith,” AMPLIFIED and “continuing firm in the faith.” ALT

To “continue” means, “to remain in... persevere in anything . . . be true to, abide in,” THAYER “stay in . . . continue firm in, persist in,” FRIBERG “to remain in the same place over a period of time,” LOUW-NIDA “remain fixed, stand fast,” LEH and “stay in, live in.” GINGRICH

Since “faith is the substance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen” (Heb 11:1), continuing in the faith involves remaining in a state where such things are perceived, and remain dominant in both heart and mind. As one continues in the faith, faith becomes stronger, enabling the individual to see more clearly and to understand more fully. One’s grasp upon the truth becomes more firm as progress is made toward the unveiling of eternity.

It is not to be assumed that everyone who obtains faith (2 Pet 1:1) remains in it. There is such a thing as departing from the faith (1 Tim 4:1), believing only “for a while” (Lk 8:13), and casting off one’s faith (1 Tim 5:12). The very possibility of such a departure is why Paul and Barnabas exhorted the disciples to “continue in the faith.” They knew that the very nature of spiritual life, and the arena in which it is being matured, requires a forward posture, consistent progress, and a growing apprehension of the truth.

Cyclical and seasonal faith brings no glory to God, for they are the antithesis of stability, establishment, steadfastness, and increasing conformity to the image of the Son of God. Nor, Indeed, can faith do its work within the person who does not continue in it. I do not believe it is possible to substantiate that faith can be maintained where confirmation and growth are not occurring. Faith is like a robust tree that must be cultivated and nourished. This is because, so far as life in this world is concerned, it is like a tree in a desert. It is fed with streams that issue from above, and nourished by the promises that have been given by God. It cannot live without these, and it is a gross distortion of thought to imagine that it can. The truth of the matter is that disciples that are not “confirmed” are more liable to fall, for they are weak because of a lack of understanding.

SOMETHING THAT MUST BE DONE

“ 22c . . . and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.”

It is imperative that the children of God be taught what is involved in entering and progressing in the Kingdom of God. Theoretically, this should not have to be said – at least not if it was natural for people to immediately perceive the stark contrast between life prior to being born again, and life after being “joined to the Lord.”

It is imperative that the children of God be taught what is involved in entering and progressing in the Kingdom of God. Theoretically, this should not have to be said – at least not if it was natural for people to immediately perceive the stark contrast between life prior to being born again, and life after being “joined to the Lord” (1 Cor 6:17). A lot of confusion in this matter is owing to the remarkable percentage of preaching and teaching that is saturated with worldly concepts and perspectives. In our time, there is a marked emphasis on life in this world. It ranges from having health, wealth, and worldly success to happy homes, gainful employment, and be accepted by the general populous. Too much room is being made for personal opinion and liberty in the flesh. This is found in the domain of musical preferences, what is declared from the pulpit, and the focus of the local congregation. In other words, we are now in a generation that does not know the real nature of spiritual life. What further compounds the problem is that a message is being delivered to the people that makes apostolic doctrine sound strange, and therefore appear undesirable.

WE MUST

“ . . . and that we must . . .” Other versions read, “we have to,” BBE “it is necessary,” CSB and “it behoveth us.” YLT The vast majority of the versions read “we must.”

The word “must” is translated from the Greek word dei / . As used here, this word means, “it is necessary, there is need of, it behooves, is right and proper . . . necessity in reference to what is required to attain some end . . . denoting especially that constraint which arises from divine appointment,” THAYER “as expressing compulsion, necessity, or inevitability in an event it is necessary, one must, one has to,” FRIBERG and “to be that which must necessarily take place, often with the implication of inevitability.” LOUW-NIDA Etymologically, something that “must” is an essentiality that cannot be avoided without forfeiting the stated objective: “enter the kingdom of God.”

Doctrinally, this is a requirement that is established by the nature of the Kingdom of God, as well as His word. This an area in which no room is made for human opinion. It is simply impossible to accomplish the stated objective without going through the experience that is identified.

THROUGH MUCH TRIBULATION

“ . . . through much tribulation . . .” Other versions read, “many tribulations,” NKJV “many hardships,” NIV “many persecutions,” NRSV “many troubles,” BBE “many afflictions,” GENEVA “suffer a lot,” GWN “suffer many things,” IE and “many hardships and tribulations.” AMPLIFIED

The word “much” means “many, numerous, and great.” THAYER It implies diversity as well as plentitude, as in “much people” (Acts 11:24). The word “tribulation” carries the idea of “pressure . . . oppression, affliction, tribulation, distress, straits,” THAYER and “difficult circumstances, trouble.” GINGRICH

From one point of view, this may not sound like a good message, but it is certainly a necessary one. Any believer who is not informed of this reality is surely at a disadvantage. We are not speaking of an occasional encounter of trouble and oppression, but of “much tribulation.”

This is the kind of “tribulation” that “works patience,” or “brings about perseverance” NASB (Rom 5:3). Although it is grievous – sometimes remarkably so – it is not capable of separating the believer from “the love of God which is in Christ Jesus” (Rom 8:35). This is something Jesus said His followers would endure: “In the world ye shall have tribulation : but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world” (John 16:33). Paul taught this to the churches : “For verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation ; even as it came to pass, and ye know” (1 Thess 3:4).

Why are many professing believers thrown off course by tribulation, suffering, and trouble? Why do some get angry with God, or question His love and care, when difficulties come upon them? Much of these responses have occurred because people have not been taught what Paul and Barnabas told the disciples who had believed what they preached. It was something that Jesus said as well, and yet it is being withheld from the churches, just as though it had never been stated.

ENTER THE KINGDOM OF GOD

“ . . . enter into the kingdom of God.” Other versions read, “come into the kingdom of God,” BBE “our way into the kingdom of God,” CSB “enter the reign of God,” YLT “on our way into God’s kingdom,” IE and “get into the kingdom of God,” WILLIAMS

In today's church, the very idea of entering the Kingdom of God sounds strange. To many, it appears merely theoretical and without practicality. But such notions are Satanic imaginations. They are like a spiritual axe that chops at the foundations of the faith. Jesus said the Kingdom of God was to be the dominate pursuit of all men: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness" (Matt 6:33).

This is not speaking about general sufferings – the troubles that are associated with being in this world (Job 5:7; Eccl 1:8; 2:22; 5:15-17). The general hardships of life are part and parcel of the fall, and are directly related to the curse of death, for such sufferings could not exist if death was not a reality.

The "much tribulation" of reference has to do with one's quest for the Kingdom of God – seeking it first because of the high priority placed upon it. Where there is no interest in the Kingdom of God, there is no comfort promised in tribulation. In fact, in such a case, suffering is to be considered the normal lot of life. Let me emphasize that we are not speaking particularly of famine, disease, natural calamity, and the likes. Such things would be applicable only if instigated by Satan because of ones identity with the Lord, as in the case of Job (Job 1:8-22; 2:1-10).

The Reality of Entering the Kingdom

It is important to note that we are speaking of an "everlasting kingdom" (Psa 146:13; Dan 4:3; 7:27; 1 Pet 1:11). This does not have to do with temporal preferences and quests, however valid and precious they may appear.

Jesus spoke frequently of entering "the Kingdom of God," or, as Matthew refers to it, "the Kingdom of heaven" (Matt 5:20; 7:21; 18:3; 19:23-24; Mk 9:47; 10:15,23-25; Lk 18:17; ,24-25; John 3:5). He even referred to some who were in the process of entering the Kingdom, yet were being inhibited by religious leaders: "But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in" (Matt 23:13). It is not possible to listen attentively to Jesus and come away thinking the Kingdom of God is of little or no consequence.

Ponder what Jesus said about entering the Kingdom of God.

- AN EXCEEDING RIGHTEOUSNESS IS REQUIRED. "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven " (Matt 5:20).

- DOING THE WILL OF GOD IS REQUIRED. "Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven ; but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in heaven" (Matt 7:21).

- A CHANGE OF LIFE AND BECOMING LIKE A LITTLE CHILD REQUIRED. "And said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven " (Matt 18:3).

Consider what is also said about this Kingdom in the apostles doctrine. It serves develop a sound view of what we are talking about – how critical the things are.

A RICH MAN CAN HARDLY ENTER IT. "Then said Jesus unto His disciples, Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven . And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God" (Mat 19:23-24).

- IT IS NECESSARY TO BE BORN OF THE WATER AND OF THE SPIRIT. "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God” (John 3:5).

There must come a time when the individual takes the words of Jesus seriously. He said that His words would “never pass away” (Matt 24:35). He also said that the words He spoke “are spirit, and they are life” (John 6:63). That is, they are conducive to the creation and maintenance of spiritual life. Jesus’ words are to man’s spirit what God’s breath was to Adam’s body.

The Gospels refer to the Kingdom of God 119 times, underscoring the importance of thinking upon it. Examples include the following: “kingdom of heaven” (23 times), “kingdom of God” (54 times), “My kingdom” (3 times), “Father’s kingdom” (1 time), “The kingdom” (7 times), “His kingdom” (3 times), “kingdom of their Father” (1 time), “kingdom of our father David” (1 time).

Jesus also spoke of “the gospel of the kingdom” (Matt 4:23), “ children of the kingdom” (Matt 8:12), “ mysteries of the kingdom” (Matt 13:11; “the word of the kingdom” (Matt 13:19), “the keys of the kingdom” (Matt 16:19), “the mystery of the kingdom” (Mk 4:11), and “ glad tidings of the kingdom” (Lk 8:1).

The book of Acts refers to “the kingdom of God” seven times. It refers to “the things pertaining to the kingdom of God” (Acts 1:3), “preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God” (Acts 8:12), entering “ the kingdom of God” (Acts 14:22), “the things concerning the kingdom of God” (Acts 19:8). “preaching the kingdom of God” (Acts 20:25; 28:31), and expounding and testifying “the kingdom of God” (Acts 28:23).

Consider what is also said about this Kingdom in the apostles doctrine – how pivotal the things are that are said of it.. It serves develop a sound view of what we are talking about.

- ASSOCIATED WITH RIGHTEOUSNESS, PEACE, AND JOY. “For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost” (Rom 14:17)

- IT IS NOT IN TALK. “For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power,” or “not a matter of talk” NIV (1 Cor 4:20).

- THE UNRIGHTEOUS WILL NOT INHERIT IT. “Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God?” (1 Cor 6:9).

- FLESH AND BLOOD CANNOT NOT ENTER IT. “Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption” (1 Cor 15:50).

- WE ARE TRANSLATED INTO IT. “Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son” (Col 1:13).

- IT IS ASSOCIATED WITH WORTHINESS. “Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer” (2 Thess 1:5).

- IT IS INHERITED. “Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?” (James 2:5).

- COMPANIONS ARE IN IT. “I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ” (Rev 1:9).

- IT IS ASSOCIATED WITH SALVATION. “And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast It also ought to be noted that entering the kingdom is not a single event that occurs at a single point in time. When we initially enter the kingdom, we are just inside the border of the promised land – as Israel was down, which accused them before our God day and night” (Rev 12:10).

How much is required to be written about a matter before it is preached and expounded to the people? Why is it that so very little is being said about the kingdom of God these days? Can it be that the message God has ordained has been upstaged by other emphases?

In Order to Enter

In order to enter this Kingdom, one must be moved from a condemned environment (John 3:18) into one in which there is no condemnation (Rom 8:1). There is a transition from darkness (Col 1:13; 5:5) to light (1 Pet 2:9), from death to life (John 5:24; 1 John 3:14), and the blindness (Eph 4:18) to sight (Eph 1:18). There are hostile forces that stand between these two circumstances, and personal impotence as well.

It is like passing through a time-warp when one enters into the Kingdom of God, passing, as it were from time to eternity. The devil is agitated by the experience, and “the flesh,” through which he works, is set against it. There are principalities and powers that are said to prohibit the transition as they work through the “children of the wicked one” (1 John 2:13).

These hostile forces contribute to the “much tribulation” endured by those who are entering the Kingdom. But there is more. There is also inward conflict that rises because of the incompatibility of the flesh and the Spirit (Gal 5:17), and the new man and the old man (Eph 4:22-24; Col 3:9-10). There is also “another law” at work in the “members” of the saved, “warring against” the law of their mind (Rom 7:23). Additionally, we presently occupy a body that is appropriately referred to as “the body of this death,” from which we long to be delivered (Rom 7:24). Also, ponder “our adversary,” who walks about as a roaring lion, “seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pet 5:8-9). We also, of necessity, wrestle “against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places” (Eph 6:12).

These influences are like thorns on the narrow entrance and way that “leads to life” NKJV (Matt 7:14). Those who “strive to enter in at the strait gate,” and to walk on the way that is “narrow” will experience tribulation. It is something that cannot possibly be avoided when entering the kingdom of God.

It also ought to be noted that entering the kingdom is not a single event that occurs at a single point in time. When we initially enter the kingdom, we are just inside the border of the promised land – as Israel was when they overcame Jericho. Just as there was a central city in Israel – Jerusalem – so there is a central location in the kingdom of God. It is the place where Jesus is, and where we will eventually be.

There is a sense in which we will enter the kingdom when we are gathered to the Lord Jesus. Peter referred to this as an “entrance” that will “ministered” to us “abundantly” (2 Pet 1:11). While there is a sense in which we are now seated with Christ Jesus in heavenly places (Eph 2:6), there is another sense in which we are “absent from the Lord” (2 Cor 5:6). We are now with the Lord by faith, but we are advancing toward the time when we will “ever be with the Lord” (1 Thess 4:17). That advancement is, in a very real sense, a kind of entrance – and there are tribulations associated with it.

No one living in the world is far enough in their journey to glory, to turn their attention to the affairs of this world, or allow it to dominate the mind. The race that has been set before us can only be run while we are “looking to Jesus” (Heb 12:1-2). Our text reveals the alertness of Paul and Barnabas to this situation. That is why they exhorted the people, declaring to them that “we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God” (Acts 14:22).

THEY ORDAINED ELDERS AND COMMENDED THEM TO THE LORD

“ 23 And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.”

How does one leave the disciples after they have been confirmed, and reminded that “we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God?” Is that sufficient? Will disciples automatically proceed to “grow up into Christ in all things,” as God intends (Eph 4:15). Does the fact that a local congregation is appropriately termed “the body of Christ” (1 Cor 12:27) mean they have no spiritually prominent members? The action of Paul and Barnabas, engaged in a work to which the Holy Spirit had called them, will provide some insight into this matter.

THEY ORDAINED ELDERS IN EVERY CHURCH

“And when they had ordained them elders in every church . . .” Other versions read, “appointed elders,” NKJV “made selection of some to be rulers,” BBE “in every congregation,” CJB “chosen them elders in every assembly,” DARBY “had the disciples in each church choose spiritual leaders,” GWN “ordained to them priests in every church,” DOUAY “appointed presbyters for them,” NAB “selected elders by show of hands,” WEYMOUTH “helped them select elders,” WILLIAMS and “appointed and ordained elders.” AMPLIFIED

Here the various versions present quite different pictures.

- Paul and Barnabas “ordained them elders.” KJV
- Paul and Barnabas “appointed” elders.” NKJV
- Paul and Barnabas “selected” some to be rulers. BBE
- Paul and Barnabas “having chosen them elders.” DARBY
- Paul and Barnabas “ordained to them priests.” DOUAY
- Paul and Barnabas “had the disciples . . . choose spiritual leaders.” GWN
- Paul and Barnabas “appointed presbyters.” NAB
- Paul and Barnabas “selected elders by a show of hands.” WEYMOUTH
- Paul and Barnabas “helped them select elders.” WILLIAMS
- Paul and Barnabas “appointed and ordained elders for them.” AMPLIFIED

In order for scholarship to have any validity, it must provide for the clear practices and doctrinal implications of Scripture.

The word translated “ordained” can be used in a variety of ways. It’s lexical meaning is, “to vote by stretching out the hand . . . to appoint or create by vote . . . to elect, appoint, create,” (Acts 14:23)” THAYER “choose, elect by raising a hand to signify a vote, generally appoint, install in an office (Acts 14:23),” FRIBERG “appoint, choose,” UBS “to choose or select, presumably by a group and possibly by the actual raising of the hand - to choose, to elect, to select,” LOUW-NIDA “to stretch out the hand, for the purpose of voting . . . appointment by,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “to choose or elect (by raising hands), appoint (Acts 14:23).” GINGRICH

Thus, two possibilities loom before us, and they are quite different in both statement and implication.

- First, the text can mean that Paul and Barnabas had the people select the elders by voting, and then sanctioned their choice – something like the procedure employed in the selection of the first deacons (Acts 6:1-6). In this case the “they” would be the people in the churches, and not Paul and Barnabas. Also, the word “ordained” would refer only to the selection process, saying nothing about the actual appointment to the office – which appears to me to be the whole point of the text.

- Second, the text can mean that the choice was made by Paul and Barnabas, in the manner described in Paul’s instructions to Titus (Tit 1:5). In this case the “they” refers to Paul and Barnabas, not to the disciples. That concurs with the remainder of the text that states Paul and Barnabas (1) confirmed the souls of the disciples, (2) exhorted the disciples to continue in the faith, (3) informed the disciples that the kingdom of God is entered through much tribulation, (4) had prayer and fasting with them, and (5) commended them to the Lord (Acts 14:23). It seems to me that the flow of the text is interrupted if the process involved in the ordaining of elders was actually accomplished by the disciples themselves.

The Greek word used here (ceirotonei) is found only one other place in the Scriptures, and refers to the choosing of Titus to join in the gathering of an offering for the poor saints in Jerusalem: “And not that only, but who was also chosen of the churches to travel with us with this grace, which is administered by us to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind” (2 Cor 8:19). However, in that text, the choice is said to have been that of “the churches.” Our text traces the activity to Paul and Barnabas.

Doctrinally, we know that elders are “made overseers” by the Holy Spirit, not by the consensus of the people (Acts 20:28). These are the “pastors and teachers” (a single office) that are given to the church by the Head, not by the people (Eph 4:11). They are among the spiritual gifts that are placed in the church as God has pleased. And are among those who are third in rank in the body of Christ – “teachers” (1 Cor 12:4-5, 18, 28).

If it is countered that the disciples chose out the first deacons, and the apostles set them apart for the work, and that this is what happened in our text, there are certain things to consider. First, those seven men were not chosen to teach or lead the church, but to “serve tables.” Second, their office was driven by a kind of crisis, not an ongoing need – such as feeding the flock of God, and taking care of the house of God.

While I do not mean to be contentious on this matter, it seems to me that something more is required to establish the meaning of an activity mentioned in Scripture than a lexical meaning that can only be said to be possible, or be some kind of alternative. I am persuaded that the translators who gave this questionable meaning to the text were recreant to their solemn duty, deferring to linguistics rather than doctrinal implications. In order for scholarship to have any validity, it must provide for the clear practices and doctrinal implications of Scripture.

I concur with others who see our text as recording the activity of Paul and Barnabas in the choosing and ordaining of elders in all the churches. Even reliable lexicographers say this is the meaning of the text: i.e., that Paul and Barnabas appointed elders (Thayer, Friberg, Gingrich).

The Consideration of the Church Together

The existence of “elders” presumes the gathering together of the church. It does not postulate the feeding of a people who have gone their separate ways and do not come together. In the ministry of Jesus, there were individuals who were personally taught by Him, with no others being present: Nicodemus (John 3:1-21) and the woman at the well (John 4:7-25). Owing to the nature and extent of Paul’s apostleship, Jesus taught him personally (Gal 1:12; 1 Cor 11:23). Once He taught four of His disciples: Peter, James, John, and Andrew (Mk 13:3-37). His extensive teaching was limited to the twelve apostles being together (ex: Matt 13:36-52; Mk 9:31; Lk 11:1; John 13:1-16:33). The sermon on the mount was delivered to the broader number of “His disciples” (Matt 5:1). His dissertation concerning the necessity of imbibing His life was delivered to a gathering of His disciples in a synagogue in Capernaum (John 6:24-59).

While there is certainly nothing wrong with one-on-one instruction – as in the case of Philip and the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:27-39) – the ordinary environment of feeding is when they are together: “the flock of God.” Paul spoke of the church being “gathered together ” (1 Cor 5:4), and when they “come together ” (1 Cor 11:17,18,20,33; 14:23,26). The body of Christ is “tempered together ,” so that mutual benefits in the faith can be realized (1 Cor 12:24-27). The church, as a “building” placed upon the foundation of Christ, is “fitly framed together ,” and grows as a result (Eph 2:20-22). Further,

In the last analysis, the appointment of elders related directly to teaching the flock, or the assembly, of believers. Among other considerations, that is a primary reason for the necessity of their maturity in the faith, and grasp of the nature and content of the Gospel.

they are “fitly joined together ” by every part or function when they come together (Eph 4:16). It is inconceivable that a body of people who are “knit together in love” (Col 2:2) would not seek to come together in order to be “knit together ” by the various ministries of the body (Col 2:19). The very concept of “the body of Christ” assumes the members are together – not only in attitude or thought, but in practice as well. After all, the local congregations are admonished, “Wherefore comfort yourselves together , and edify one another, even as also ye do” (1 Thess 5:11). Believers are even admonished, “And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together , as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching” (Heb 10:24-25).

Jesus promised His presence when His disciples were “gathered together ” (Matt 18:20). Even when addressing the crisis of opposition, the early church “assembled together ” (Acts 4:31). In Antioch, Paul and Barnabas “assembled themselves with the church” for “a while year,”: teaching “much people” (Acts 11:26). Certain men were chosen to accompany Paul and Barnabas, being selected when the disciples were “assembled with one accord” (Acts 15:26).

Why Mention This?

It is necessary to mention this because of the nature of the function elders. They are to “feed the flock of God” (1 Pet 5:2), and “feed the church of God” (Acts 20:28) – both of which postulate the assembly of the saints. It is particularly during the assembly of the saints that all things are to be “unto edifying” (1 Cor 14:26). Even the Jews, the only nation in the history of the world that was cultured by God, had an office called “the ruler of the synagogue” (Mk 5:22,36,38; Lk 8:41; 13:14,15; Acts 13:15; 18:8,17). Neither Jesus nor the apostles questioned the validity of this office. The “synagogue,” while meeting in a structure, was not limited to the structure itself, but the people who gathered there.

The point is that from the beginning God has dealt with the aggregate of His people, not focusing on personal or family gatherings, even though some personal attention was given to them – as in the Passover (Ex 12:2-4). I do not know that it is possible to justify the existence of elders apart from the assembly of the saints.

In the last analysis, the appointment of elders related directly to teaching the flock, or the assembly, of believers. Among other considerations, that is a primary reason for the necessity of their maturity in the faith, and grasp of the nature and content of the Gospel. Due to the nature of their function, whatever they taught, if accepted, would tend to proliferate.

This perspective has nearly been altogether removed because of the thrust of the nominal church. It is becoming exceedingly rare to hear of a congregation that actually gathers to be taught, or of elders that really engage in the public feeding of the flock of God. Now we have a kind of entertaining approach to praise in which the people are often said to “have fun.” Much of the public speaking, what little there is, is often given over to social and political concerns, just as though this world was the primary one, and there was no day of judgment on the horizon. In other words, people are being taught how to address life in this world rather than how prepare to live in “the world to come.” However, this kind of instruction does not promote spiritual growth, does not require the whole armor of God, or the ongoing sanctifying ministry of the Holy Spirit of God. The idea of feeding the flock of God has become very nebulous in the minds of the people. This is a serious circumstance, for it sharply conflicts with everything that is reported in the book of Acts – which is a record of Divine workings and spiritual advance.

THEY PRAYED WITH FASTING

“ . . . and had prayed with fasting . . .” Other versions read, “with prayer and fasting,” NIV “while they fasted with them and prayed,” MRD “prayed for them with fasting,” LIVING and “the believers fasted and prayed for these men.” IE

In the Scriptures there are frequent mentioning of prayer and fasting.

- When Nehemiah heard of the devastation of Jerusalem, he “ fasted and prayed before the God of heaven” (Neh 1:4).
- Daniel set his face to seek the Lord “by prayer and supplication, with fasting ” (Dan 9:3).
- Jesus told His disciples there were some demons that could only be expelled by “ prayer and fasting ” (Matt 17:21).
- When Barnabas and Paul were sent out by the church in Antioch, it was after they had “ fasted and prayed ” (Acts 13:3).
- The giving of the married to “ pray and fasting” is a reason for temporarily suspending marital intimacy (1 Cor 7:5).

The combination of prayer and fasting is intriguing to consider, and provides a most precise glimpse of the nature of spiritual life.

PRAYER

PRAYER has to do with the marshaling and focusing of all of one’s powers toward the Lord. In this case, it is associated with seeking the Lord, particularly in regards to blessing and sanctifying certain chosen servants. It is a way of setting the workers aside for the work, and calling upon the Lord to invest them with the resources required for the accomplishment of that work. There is a sense in which prayer is like the hand of faith reaching upward, seeking to know the Lord in a more effectual way. More Divine power is needed. A closer relationship with the Lord is necessary. The work is of such a nature that a more ready awareness of the Lord is imperative.

FASTING

FASTING has to do with abstinence from things associated with this world – things that tend to distract and draw the attention away from the Lord. There are matters that require the believer to withdraw from even the formalities of the world – things that, under ordinary circumstances, would be lawful and right. However, some matters pertaining to life and godliness do not allow for ordinary involvements with the world – such as eating and drinking, or maintaining lawful relationships.

Every activity related to living in this world tends to deplete spiritual resources. At this point I am not speaking of sinful activities, but of those that are technically lawful, yet spiritually impractical. There are some godly matters that require the total attention of the individual. They may have to do with spiritual survival, advancement, or the fulfillment of an objective. Whatever they may be, there is no room for distraction, competition, or mediocrity in them. For example, before entering into His ministry among men, Jesus was “led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. And when He had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungered” (Matt 4:1-2). Prior to the selection of His apostles, Jesus “went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God” (Luke 6:12).

The activity associated with the prayer and fasting of Paul and Barnabas is stated in the next clause.

THEY COMMENDED THEM TO THE LORD

“ . . . they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.” Other versions read, “committed them to the Lord,” NIV “entrusted them to the Lord,” NRSV “put them into the care of the Lord,” BBE “turned the elders over to the care of the Lord,” NLT and “These men had put their trust in the Lord . So, Paul and Barnabas put them in the Lord's care.” LIVING

This kind of sensitivity to the Lord is greatly to be coveted. It is one of the factors that accounts for the consistency and productivity of the early church. It was their unwavering reliance upon the Lord that enabled them.

The word “commended” comes from a Greek word that, as used here, means, “to commend one to another for protection, safety, etc,” THAYER and “give over, entrust, commend.” GINGRICH

In Scripture, this word is used in a number of places.

- When Jesus said from the cross, “Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit: and having said thus, He gave up the ghost” (Luke 23:46).
- Paul also used it in his last gathering with the elders from Ephesus: “And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace” (Acts 20:32).
- Paul used it when speaking to Timothy concerning the charge delivered to him: “This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare” (1 Tim 1:18).
- He also used it when speaking of the responsibility of Timothy to see to it there others who could deliver the Word of God in the public arena: “And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also” (2 Tim 2:2).
- Peter used this word in a word delivered to suffering believers: “Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator” (1 Pet 4:19).

In all of these either a person or a charge was delivered to someone else for thoughtful consideration and care. In our text, the ones who were ordained to be elders were “commended” to the Lord for protection, care, direction, and instruction. Paul and Barnabas were acutely aware of the Divine involvements in the care and feeding of His “heritage” (1 Pet 5:3). Therefore, they formally turned these elders over to the Lord Himself, that He might “think upon” them, as Nehemiah sought Him to do to himself (Neh 5:19). This is also the Divine consideration that David sought when he prayed, “Remember, O LORD, Thy tender mercies and Thy lovingkindnesses; for they have been ever of old” (Psa 25:6).

This kind of sensitivity to the Lord is greatly to be coveted. It is one of the factors that accounts for the consistency and productivity of the early church. It was their unwavering reliance upon the Lord that enabled them. That trust is what is interrupted, and finally removed, by the traditions of men.

THEY CONTINUED UNTIL THE WORK WAS FULFILLED

“ 24 And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia. 25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia: 26 And thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled.”

Following the confirming of the disciples, the ordaining of elders, and commending those of Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch to the Lord, Paul and Barnabas passed throughout the region of Pisidia, and came to Pamphylia.

THEY CAME TO PAMPHYLIA

“And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia . . .” Other versions read, “going through,” NIV “went through,” BBE “went throughout,” GENEVA “had gone through,” GWN “had traveled over,” MRD and “had gone throughout.” PNT

The idea here is that Paul and Barnabas went through the region to their destination. The word used here suggested that they walked through the region. Pisidia is the area in which Antioch was located, the last place they revisited before this report (13:14; 14:21). It was a mountainous region, desolate, and reported to have been “held by tribes of wild and warlike highlanders, who were the terror of the whole surrounding country.” McCLINTOK & STRONG’S Some have conjecture that this may have been one of the places Paul was “in perils of robbers” (2 Cor 11:26). This was the same region through which Paul and Barnabas had passed when they journeyed from Perga, to which they are now returning (13:14).

THEY PREACHED THE WORD IN PERGA

25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia . . .” Perga was located in Pamphylia, and was one of its important cities. This was the place where John Mark had abandoned the work, returning from there to Jerusalem (13:13). There is no record of Paul and Barnabas preaching in Perga at that time. The record stated that they “departed from Perga” and “came to Antioch in Pisidia” (13:14).

Now, however, they preach the Word in Perga. I want to again draw to your attention to what Paul and Barnabas preached, declared, or announced.

- When they started this mission, they “preached the word of God” in Salamis (13:5).
- The “preached” through Jesus “ the forgiveness of sins ” in Antioch (13:38).
- The Gentiles in Antioch besought Paul and Barnabas to preach those words to them again the next Sabbath (13:42).
- They “preached the Gospel ” in “the cities of Lycaonia” (14:7).
- In Lystra they “preached” that they should “ turn from these vanities unto the living God ” (14:15).

Preaching the Word is not synonymous with simply preaching from the Scriptures. For example, as the term “word” is used in the book of Acts, it does not have reference to scattered texts in the Law of Moses, or the Proverbs of Solomon. As used in Luke’s report, the expression “word” refers to a message, not merely a text. Thus we read of “the word of this salvation ” (13:26), “the word of His grace ” (14:3; 20:32), “the word of the Gospel ” (15:7), and “the word of the Lord Jesus ” (19:10). When they “preached the word,” or “the word of the Lord” (8:25; 15:36), they particularly declared the words that had foretold a coming Savior, the remission of sins, and those things relating to salvation and the New Covenant. That was the thrust of their preaching.

It ought to be noted that Paul and Barnabas were doing the work to which the Holy Spirit had called them (13:2). They had, then, been called to the work of preaching. Not philanthropy, but preaching ! Not serving tables, but preaching ! Not to plant churches, but to preach ! All of their recognized successes could be traced directly to their preaching – not their organizational skills, but their preaching ! If the Holy Spirit, who was carrying out the will of the Head of the church, has such a high regard for preaching , what can be said of those who evidence a lack of regard for this holy activity?

Having preached the word in Perga, Paul and Barnabas went south to Attalia, “ a maritime city of Pamphylia,” which was used as a port, “useful for trade with Egypt and Syria.” McCLINTOK & STRONG’S There is no record of them preaching in this city.

THEY RETURNED WHERE THEY HAD BEEN RECOMMENDED

“And thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God . . .” Other versions read “commended to the grace of God,” NKJV “committed to the grace of God,” NIV “handed over to the grace of God,” BBE “handed over to the care of God,” CJB “entrusted to the grace of God,” CSB “delivered to the grace of God,” DOUAY “sent them out with God’s gracious love,” IE and “committed to God’s favor.” WILLIAMS

When they initially came to this area, they had landed in Perga, having sailed from Paphos, a city on the island of Cyprus. That was apparently the route take by the ships. However, in returning, they would disembark from Attalia, in Pamphylia which was located southwest of Perga. The reason for choosing this city is not made known. It could have been owing to the route taken by ships sailing to Antioch, or because of differing shipping schedules owing to the time of the year. For whatever reason, Paul and Barnabas were able to make the proper choice, being fully adapted for the work to which they had been called – even confidently knowing the proper port of exit.

Thus they began the last leg of their journey, returning to Antioch in Syria, from whence they had been sent by the Holy Spirit and the brethren who had submitted to Him. They had been commended to the grace of God – a grace that made them sufficient to do the work, empowering them to complete it, and protecting them from the devices of the devil. The Holy Spirit also works within the environment of the grace of God, guiding into the truth (John 16:13), strengthening them in the inner man (Eph 3:16), granting them righteousness, peace, and joy (Rom 14:17), and filling them with all joy and peace in believing (Rom 15:13).

It was the grace and favor of God that enabled the workers to know what to say, where to go, how to respond to rejection, how to deal with inquirers, and how to sustain the work – even though many times it looked as though that could not be done.

THE WORK WAS FULFILLED

“ . . . for the work which they fulfilled.” Other versions read, “which they had completed,” NKJV “that they had accomplished,” NASB “they had now completed,” NIV and “the work they had now finished.” GWN

When these two men were initially called, the Holy Spirit said, “Separate Me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them ” (Acts 13:2). It is estimated that they left Antioch during A.D. 45, and returned in A.D. 47. There is no way to fully substantiate this postulate. It does, however, give us an idea of the magnitude of this mission – one that required about two years. During that period, they went throughout the island of Cyprus (13:6), remained a “long time” in Iconium (14:3), and preached throughout the region of Lycaonia (14:6).

How did Paul and Barnabas know when they had completed the work? This is not something that can be answered to the satisfaction of the flesh. However, in some way, the Spirit, who told them when to start the work, also made them aware of when it had been completed. All of this presumes these men were alive in the Spirit and walking in the Spirit as well (Gal 5:25), for those are the only people the Spirit directs. They were not men who quenched or grieved the Spirit. When the Spirit strove against the flesh, they consistently yielded to the Spirit. That is why they could be directed.

The work of God is not accomplished within the framework of humanly conceived strategies. It can neither be initiated nor maintained by means of the wisdom of men. Those who are living by faith and walking in the Spirit sense the truth of this. For all others, it is nothing more than confusion. There is a certain enabling power in faith that cannot be codified or stated in a manner than makes sense to men. However, for those who are actually involved in the work of God, there is a knowledge similar to that experienced by those servants who filled the water pots with water during the wedding feast in Cana of Galilee. After they did what Jesus said, filling the pots with water, and when that water was turned into wine, it confounded the ruler of the feast. However, “the servants which drew the water knew” (John 2:9). It was no mystery to them, for they were involved in the work itself. So it is with those who are serving the Lord Jesus Christ. It is in the work that they see many things.

THEY REHEARSED ALL THAT GOD HAD DONE

“ 27 And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles. 28 And there they abode long time with the disciples.”

It would be worthy of an extensive effort for noble souls to engage in a disciplined effort to compare the church revealed in the book of Acts to the one of our time.

As we proceed through the book of Acts, it becomes apparent that the lives of those early disciples revolved around the Lord and His work. They preferred one another in brotherly love, met often together, and centered their attention on the Word of God. The early church bore little, if any, similarity to modern representations of the church. Organized and stereotyped religion produced people who were irritated by that early church, and could not tolerate their message or their manners. However, those of tender heart were drawn to them. Those who had a mind for the Word wanted to be around them. It would be worthy of an extensive effort for noble souls to engage in a disciplined effort to compare the church revealed in the book of Acts to the one of our time.

THEY GATHER THE CHURCH TOGETHER

“And when they were come, and had gathered the church together . . .” Other versions read, “they called the church together,” NRSV “they got the church together,” BBE “brought together the assembly,” DARBY “collected together the whole church,” MRD and “assembled the church.” NJB

Keep in mind, this is as much as two years after they had left Antioch to do the work to which the Spirit had called them. It is evident that the brethren in Antioch had kept the faith, maintaining their association with the Lord and one another. Paul and Barnabas apparently had no difficulty calling them together, Nothing in the text suggests that only a handful of people turned out. Throughout the years, and with few exceptions, I have noted that few churches appear to be really interested in reports of the working of the Lord. I understand that not all reports are of the works of God. However, I have been present when some have been reported to rather large congregations –yet a meager group was present to hear it. That circumstance speaks of the caliber of Christians that are being cultured by the modern church.

There is a vast difference in the conduct and response of a people who are enthralled with the Lord and His great salvation, and are living unto Him as He has ordained (2 Cor 5:15).

THEY REHEARSED ALL THAT GOD HAD DONE WITH THEM

When the early church assembled, there was a lot of speaking. Here we read of rehearsing. Other forms of speaking were preaching (Rom 1:15), teaching (1 Cor 14:19), prophesying (1 Cor 14:24), exhorting (Rom 12:8), comforting (1 Thess 4:18), and admonishing (Col 3:16). All of this suggests that the assembly of the saints is one that is fundamentally rational, engaging both the heart and the mind. It is conducive to sound thought, weighing matters, perceiving, and determining. An assembly that is primarily one of entertainment and catering to the whims of the people is not one in which the work of the Lord is being done.

They Rehearsed

“ . . . they rehearsed . . .” Other versions read, “they reported,” NKJV “began to report,” NASB “related,” NRSV “declared,” RSV “gave them an account,” BBE and “narrated.” MRD

The word “rehearsed” comes from a word meaning, “to announce, to make known . . . to report, bring back tidings, rehearse,” THAYER “carrying back news of happenings report, inform,” FRIBERG “to provide information, with the possible implication of considerable detail - 'to announce, to inform, to tell,” LOUW-NIDA “to recount.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

Again, note the effort to make things known to the people of God – to inform them of certain facts that provide a kind of index to both the nature and the will of the Lord.

There is also another thing to be seen here. Behold the absence of self-centeredness. The people come together to hear what someone else has done in another place. The ones who are reporting declare what the Lord has done, not drawing undue attention to themselves.

All That God Had Done With Them

“ . . . all that God had done with them . . .” Other versions read, “all things that God had done with them,” NASB “all that God had done through them,” NIV “everything God had done with them,” CSB “what great things God had done with them,” DOUAY “all that God had wrought with them,” MRD “reported on their trip,” LIVING “in detail all that God, working with them,” WEYMOUTH and “all that God had accomplished with them.” AMPLIFIED

Paul and Barnabas did not merely relate their personal experiences, but focused on what the Lord had done through them. This did not consist of developing a plan, then reporting how the Lord enabled them to carry it out. It rather dealt with a work to which they were called by the Holy Spirit, and how the Lord carried it out through them.

They provided the details of everything the Lord did. When Joshua, in the strength of the Lord “discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword,” the Lord called Moses to Himself. He told him to write the record of this triumph in a book and “rehearse it in the ears of Joshua” (Ex 17:14). Those who were delivered during the times of the judges were told to “rehearse the righteous acts of the Lord” (Judges 5:11). When Peter reported the events that took place at the house of Cornelius, he “rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order” to the brethren in Jerusalem (Acts 11:4).

All of this indicates that considerable detail is involved in a rehearsal of the works of the Lord. In that detail the Lord’s will and manners are made better known. If, as the Psalmist says, God has “made His wonderful works to be remembered” (Psa 111:4), then it is reasonably for godly people to rehearse them, as shown in our text.

It is also marvelous to consider how God works through His people. Some know only of God working on His people, but know little of Him working through them. They think only in terms of personal deliverance or advantage. While God does work in this manner – such as Israel being delivered from Egypt – He also works through them – as when Israel subdued the enemies in Canaan. Perceiving the priority of the latter represents a fundamental change in the way of thinking.

HE HAD OPENED THE DOOR OF FAITH

“ . . . and how He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.” Other versions read, “opened a door of faith to,” NASB “opened a door of faith for,” NRSV “made open a door of faith to,” BBE and “given . . . the opportunity to believe.” GWN

This is a most intriguing expression. It includes Divine activity: God “opened.” There is also something in particular that was opened, or made available: “door of faith.” There was even a particular society for which this door was opened (“the Gentiles”).

First, this was a particular kind of door, relating to “faith.” Paul referred to a “door of utterance,” or an opportunity to preach the Gospel (Col 4:3; 2 Cor 2:12). This “door” relates to an opportunity to believe. One might imagine that this door has always been open – available for everyone to enter. However, this was not at all the case. Previously, God focused on the Jews, giving them every revealed advantage (Rom 9:4-5), Paul refers to the door of faith being shut – even to them. “But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed ” (Gal 3:23). Other versions read, “kept under guard by the law, kept for the faith which would afterward be revealed,” NKJV “held prisoners by the law, locked up until faith should be revealed,” NIV “imprisoned and guarded by the law until faith would be revealed,” NRSV “confined under the law, kept under restraint until faith should be revealed” RSV and “perpetually guarded under the Law, kept in custody in preparation for the faith that was destined to be revealed (unveiled, disclosed).” AMPLIFIED

Objectively speaking, the door of faith was closed, or not revealed – and unless God revealed it, it could not be known. Subjectively, the Law was a place of confinement in which they could not obtain the faith that justifies and sanctifies. No person, whether Jew or Gentile, that has a religion of law, is capable of believing, or having faith. If the primary moral code, “the Law,” was “not of faith,” neither gendering nor sustaining it, you may be sure no man can contrive a law that can do so. Law is antithetical to faith, for it does not have to do with believing, but rather confines one to doing (Gal 3:12).

However, the Jews were confined by the Law in prospect of the coming faith. That is, the Law kept them from descending too far into the quagmire of iniquity. It was not a willing confinement, but more like being imprisoned, forced to live in “the fear of death” if they disobeyed or displeased God. Speaking of this, the Scriptures say, “Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage ” (Heb 2:14-15). In this condition they were “shut up” to faith – that is, they could not obtain it. They were confined by the law itself.

This is a picture of “the door of faith” being shut – that is, there was not even an opportunity to believe, in the sense of being reconciled to God. The situation was this: until sin had been taken out of the way the door of faith remained closed, and humanity remained confined. The Jews were confined under the bondage of the Law. The Gentiles were confined by their fundamental ignorance of God. As it is written, “This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them , because of the blindness of their heart” (Eph 4:18). Bondage under the Law shut the door of faith for the Jews, and the ignorance of God shut it for the Gentiles.

Only God Could Open the Door

Only God could “open the door of faith” to the Gentiles. This means that the door was not automatically opened when Jesus died for the sins of the world, and was raised for our justification. The time during which our text took place was nearly twenty years after the enthronement of Jesus at the right hand of God – and “the door of faith” had not yet been opened for the Gentiles to whom Paul and Barnabas were sent. If God had not addressed this circumstance, the door never would have been opened!

In Scripture, believers are frequently reminded of the Source of their faith. It is not merely an exercise of the intellect – like believing a history book or some mathematical theorem. In the text that spoke of the Jews being “shut up to the faith,” the Spirit continues by referring to the time “faith came .” “But before faith came , we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed” (Gal 3:23). And again, “But after that faith is come , we are no longer under a schoolmaster” (Gal 3:25). All versions project this before/after view. Some read slightly different, while maintaining the stated perspective: i.e. “Before this faith came . . . Now that faith has come.” NIV

The coming of faith is a line of demarcation between death and life, Law and grace, and spiritual impotence and power. It divides alienation from reconciliation, and being hostile against God from being at peace with Him. That kind of significance cannot possibly have its origin in man. The person who needs to be saved cannot effect that salvation himself.

This situation is precisely why those who believe are said to have “believed through grace” (Acts 18:27). It is why “the faith” is said to have been “delivered to the saints,” or “entrusted” to them (Jude 1:3). This is the faith that is to be “kept” (2 Tim 4:7). It is the faith that has been “obtained . . . through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pet 1:1). This is also what it means to be “given to . . . believe” (Phil 1:29).

The opening of the door of faith has very much to do with the preaching of the Gospel. There is evidence in Scripture that suggests that this preaching is strictly managed in heaven. Take, for example, when Paul and Silas were “forbidden by the Holy Spirit to preach the Word in Asia” (Acts 16:6). Eager to preach the Gospel to every creature, as Jesus had commanded (Mk 16:15), they “assayed (or “tried” NKJV) to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not,” or “did not permit them” NKJV (Acts 16:7). No explanation for these prohibitions is given – but you may be sure there were holy reasons. The church is strictly governed by Jesus, who is appropriately called “the Head of the body, the church” (Col 1:16). Strictly speaking, the Holy Spirit is working for Him, not for men. That is why He is referred to as “the Spirit of Christ” (1 Pet 1:11), not “the Spirit of the church.” We are not told how Paul and Silas knew the Spirit did not permit them to preach in Asia or go into Bithynia – whether it was by a word, or through their own sensitivity to the circumstances. From a practical point of view, it seems to me that the absolute inability of a servant of God to carry out noble and godly ambitions is to be interpreted as the Spirit not allowing it.

The Role of Preaching

The opening of the door of faith was directly related to the preaching of the Gospel. It was not the result of seeing the excellent lives of Paul and Barnabas – although there is no question that they lived such lives. It was not the result of a philanthropic work they performed, like relieving the afflicted, or ministering to the needy. It is certainly not that such things are not good. Rather, it is that they do not open the door of faith.

I suggest that “hearing BY the word of” is equivalent to the opening of the door of faith in our text. That is, “the word” is the directive from God/Christ to deliver the Gospel, rather than the Gospel itself. It equates to the preacher being “sent,” and therefore bringing glad tidings from God Himself.

The old wives fable about “seeing a sermon” being better than hearing one, is nothing but a lot of nonsense. If it was possible for sermons to be seen, what can be said of the life of Jesus Christ? And what of holy lives like those of Moses, or Samuel, or all of the holy prophets. What of John the Baptist, and the holy apostles? Why did these men elicit such hostility from the very people who were subjected to their influence? Those who spout theological folklore really need to explain such phenomena, for it contradicts their foolish sayings.

When commenting on the presence of faith, or believing on Jesus, the Scriptures do not trace it back to influential lives or the presence of humanitarian works, however good they may have been. So far as the activity of men is concerning, the stimulus for faith is rather traced back to preaching. Thus it is written, “For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! But they have not all obeyed the gospel. For Esaias saith, Lord, who hath believed our report? So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God” (Rom 10:17).

The seventeenth verse is often quoted as though it said, “faith comes by hearing, and hearing the Word of God.” However, that is not what the verse says. The word “by,” that follows the word hearing, is in the Greek text, and is the translation of the word dia. . . This word means, “through,” THAYER “through, by way of,” FRIBERG “on the account of, because of, by reason of,” LEH and “of means, instrument, agency by means of, through.” GINGRICH

The idea is that both faith and hearing “come.” Faith comes by means of hearing, and hearing comes by means of “the Word of God,” or “the Word of Christ.” ASV But what is “the word of God,” or “the word of Christ”? Is it the word about God, or the word about Christ?

I suggest that “hearing BY the word of” is equivalent to the opening of the door of faith in our text. That is, “the word” is the directive from God/Christ to deliver the Gospel, rather than the Gospel itself. It equates to the preacher being “sent,” and therefore bringing glad tidings from God Himself.

This explains why the Romans text continues, “But I say, Have they not heard? Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world” (Rom 10:18). That is, the preaching of Gospel does not automatically produce the “hearing” of reference, which, in turn, is the means through which faith comes. Multitudes have heard the Gospel with the hearing of the ear, but not “the hearing of faith” (Gal 3:2,5). Why is this so? It cannot be because some sought the Lord and some did not, for the text adds, “But Esaias is very bold, and saith, I was found of them that sought Me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after Me” (Rom 10:20). What made this difference? It is simply this, “God opened the door of faith” by sending messengers to proclaim His Gospel – just as He did Paul and Barnabas.

All of this makes perfect sense when we consider that it is God who gives “the hearing ear” (Prov 20:12). To put it another way, He circumcises the ear so the person can hear (Jer 6:10), or gives them ears to hear (Isa 50:4), while not giving that aptitude to others (Deut 29:4). Jesus said there are some to whom it is “given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven,” while there are others unto whom “it is not given” (Matt 13:11).

God has not revealed all that is involved in opening the door of faith, forbidding to allow some regions to hear the Gospel, giving a hearing ear, and giving some to know, while withholding that privilege from others. However, these circumstances do exist, understood or not. Once they are received and mixed with faith, one will have no difficulty with hearing that the Lord opened the door of faith to the Gentiles.

THERE THEY ABODE LONG TIME

“And there they abode long time with the disciples.” Other versions read, “they spent a long time with the disciples,” NASB “And they stayed there with the disciples for some time,” NRSV “spent a considerable time with the disciples,” CSB “tarried no little time with the disciples,” ERV and “they stayed no little time with the disciples.” AMPLIFIED

The exact length of time Paul and Barnabas spent in Antioch is not made known. However, based on what is fairly clear, it was a considerable length of time. It is generally thought that the “work” they had just completed took place between A.D. 45-47. We hear no more of them until the time of the conference in Jerusalem, to which the church in Antioch sent Paul and Barnabas (Acts 15:1-2). It is estimated that this conference took place around A.D. 51-53. If these are reasonable dates, the “long time” of Acts 14:28 consisted of approximately 5-8 years. None of these can be fully substantiated, but they do, even if very general, confirm that a “long time” was, in fact, a “long time.”

It is evident that there was a profound love of the brethren in Antioch for Paul and Barnabas, and that it was reciprocated by them. Prior to going their mission, they spent “a whole year” in Antioch. As it is written, “Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!” (Psa 133:1). This is evidence of genuine spiritual life, and how wonderfully it seen in this text.

CONCLUSION

We have been exposed to an account of a charge being carried out that was commissioned by the Holy Spirit. The servants were faithful, carrying our the work to its completion, or fulfillment. We have been made privy to the activities of faithful stewards, and to the kinds of experience they encountered in fulfilling their mission.

The accompanying chart shows the remarkable extent of the journey of Paul and Barnabas. I have marked the cities in which they preached, together with the sequence in which the visits occurred. Even in the context of our time, with all of its advancements in technology and travel, this would be a noteworthy work.

WHAT DID THEY DO?

- Preached the Word of God in the synagogue in Salamis (13:5).
- Went through the island of Cyprus preaching (13:6).
- Having been summoned by him, preached the Word to the proconsul of the island (13:7,12).
- Struck a sorcerer blind who was seeking to turn the proconsul from the faith (13:8-11).
- Preached the Word in the synagogue of Antioch of Pisidia (13:14-40).
- Warned the Jews in that synagogue to avoid unbelief (13:41).
- Persuaded inquiring Gentiles to continue in the grace of God (13:43).
- Preached the Word in that synagogue the next Sabbath (13:45).
- Rebuked contradicting Jews and announced they were turning to the Gentiles (13:46-47).

- Published the Word of God throughout the region (13:49).
- Preached the Word in the synagogue of Iconium (14:1).
- Remained a long time in Iconium, speaking boldly in the Lord (14:2).
- Preached the Word in the region around Lystra and Derbe (14:6-7).
- After perceiving he had faith to be healed, Paul healed a crippled man in Lystra (14:8-10).
- Stopped the Lycaonians from offering sacrifice to them, and declared the necessity of them turning from vain gods to the living God (14:15-18).
- Preached the Gospel in Derbe (14:20-21).
- Revisited Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the souls of the disciples (14:21-22).
- Exhorted the disciples to continue in the faith, and declared that through much tribulation we enter into the kingdom of God (14:22).
- Ordained elders in every church (14:23a).
- Prayed with fasting, and commended the disciples to the Lord on whom, they had believed (14:23b).
- Preached the word of God in Perga (14:25).
- Returned to Antioch from which they were sent to the work, and rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how He had opened the door of faith to the Gentiles (14:27).

May God be praised for workers such as Paul and Barnabas, who carry out what they have been given to do, then faithfully report to the saints what God has done through them.

It seems to me that it is good to pursue such experiences, and to “seek first” the kingdom of God in the sense of being productively involved in its various workings. After all, believers are said to be “companions in the kingdom and patience of Christ” (Rev 1:9).

Lesson #64

DEALING WITH TEACHERS OF CIRCUMCISION, #1

“ 15:1 And certain men which came down from Judaea taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved. 2 When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question. 3 And being brought on their way by the church, they passed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the conversion of the Gentiles: and they caused great joy unto all the brethren. 4 And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders, and they declared all things that God had done with them. 5 But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed, saying, That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses. 6 And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter. 7 And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe. 8 And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us; 9 And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith. 10 Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear? 11 But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they. 12 Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them.” (Acts 11:1-12)

INTRODUCTION

The practical transition from the Old Covenant to the New was not a simplistic one. Beyond all question, the accomplishments of Christ were thorough, pleasing to God, and completely effective. Salvation could never have been effected if this was not true. The extrication of men from the power of darkness, and their translation into the Kingdom of Christ could not commence until all of the Divine requirements had been met. While the conformity of men to the image of Jesus (Rom 8:29) was a process that required a continual change (2 Cor 3:18) , the basis of salvation could not be something that was gradually built over a period of time.

Even though the things that Jesus accomplished are known among us, it is essential that they be stated again and again. This is because there is nothing in human history that precisely parallels them. Their implications extend beyond the perimeter of the human intellect. Allow me to restate some of them in order that their magnitude can be again confirmed to your heart. All of these things were done in accordance with the Scriptures.

WHAT MUST BE ACCOMPLISHED

- Divinity must enter into the world clothed with human frailty, being made like unto the ones who would be saved (Isa 7:14; 9:6-7; John 1:14; Rom 8:3; Phil 2:6-7; Heb 2:16-17).
- Before His work as Captain of our salvation began, the Savior must have been tempted in all points like as we are, yet be without sin. This was in order that He might fulfill His ongoing intercession (Heb 2:18; 4:15).
- He must defeat the devil as a Man, overcoming the adversary in his own territory thoroughly and effectively. This He did by resisting the devil's temptations (Matt 4:1-11), casting demons out of those they victimized (Lk 11:20), as a man, exposing men to the pure glory of God (John 1:14; Matt 4:16; John 14:9), and living the entirety of His life in the world without so much as a single sin (2 Cor 5:21; Heb 4:15; 1 Pet 2:22; 1 John 3:5).

- He must confirm before the eyes of men that He was superior to nature, which can by no means be controlled by men (Matt 8:27; 14:25).

Even though the things that Jesus accomplished are known among us, it is essential that they be stated again and again. This is because there is nothing in human history that precisely parallels them. Their implications extend beyond the perimeter of the human intellect.

While in this world as a Man, He must confirm His authority over the powers of darkness (Mk 1:27; 9:25 Lk 13:11-12).

- The totality of sin – “the sins of the world” – must be taken away, made an end of, and destroyed (Dan 9:24; John 1:29; 1 John 3:5).

- In order for sin to be dealt with effectively, it had to be laid upon Jesus en mass, carried in His body, while He was, in reality, “made to be sin for us” (Isa 53:6; 2 Cor 5:21; 1 Pet 2:24).

- Sin must be cursed in the body of Jesus, with the full judgment of God against sin being experienced by Him (Rom 8:3; Gal 3:13).

- Satan had to be destroyed, so that he obtained no more power to retain men in bondage once they were united to Christ (Gen 3:15; Heb 2:14).

- Satan, as the accuser of the brethren, had to be expelled from the heavenly realms (Rev 12:9-10).

- The principalities and powers that held sway over the entirety of the mankind had to be plundered and their captives freed (Col 2:15).

- The demands of the Law had to be fully satisfied by a man, so that it was no longer the standard of righteousness, and thus could not condemn those received by God (Matt 5:17; Rom 10:4).

- Peace had to be made between God and man (Col 1:20).

- The handwriting of ordinances that was against us had to be blotted out, so that they condemned us no more (Col 2:4).

- The new and living way to God had to be raised up and sanctified for men (Heb 10:20).

- The Old Covenant had to be terminated, and a New Covenant instituted by which men could draw near to God (2 Cor 3:3-11; Heb 6:19; 8:1-13).

- A single Mediator had to be established in heaven through whom the New Covenant could be fully enacted (1 Tim 2:5; Heb 8:6; 12:24).

- An intercessor must be established in heaven that always lived to intercede for the redeemed (Rom 8:34; Heb 7:25).

- The Savior had to be invested with all power in heaven and earth, be seated in heaven, and be the effective Captain of our salvation (Acts 2:34-36; 10:36; Heb 2:10; 1 Pet 3:22).

- A work must be done prior to men being saved that is so thorough that it allows God to be “just” or righteous in justifying sinners (Rom 3:26).

In spiritual life, one can only know what is clearly seen by faith. Further, one’s faith cannot extend beyond their personal involvement in the good and acceptable and perfect will of God. In other words, the knowledge of God is not like a sort of manual of facts that we memorize.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THESE THINGS

While the perfection of men extends over a lengthy period of time (2 Cor 3:18), the laying of the Foundation for their salvation cannot be done on that basis. Although numerous prophecies and preparatory works preceded the laying of the Foundation Stone, the placement of the Stone itself cannot be on that basis. Furthermore, the Foundation Stone could not be put into place until God had been fully satisfied regarding the matter of sin. Salvation could not be based upon Divine sympathy. The salvation itself must be an expression of the righteousness of God. Therefore Peter wrote, “Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ ” (2 Pet 1:1). With God, an unjust “eternal salvation” (Heb 5:9) is not possible. Should such a condition be possible, the devil could continue to accuse to God those who were saved, and could not have been justly expelled from heaven.

Both faith and hope require a satisfactorily completed foundation, or basis, for salvation. There can be no question about the provision of salvation, even though doubts may exist concerning one’s experience of it. Even in that theoretical case, the doubt must eventually be removed, for its very existence is a reproach to God and an evidence of unbelief.

WHY SAY THESE THINGS?

Is all of this nothing more than a needless technicality? Indeed not! What we are seeing in the book of Acts is the working out of the purpose of God among those who had understanding of what had been accomplished by the Savior. That is why the messengers were so bold. It is why the Lord worked with them. It is why they were able to overturn erroneous ideas.

However, having said all of that, there is something else that is being made known in the record we are reviewing. In spiritual life, one can only know what is clearly seen by faith. Further, one’s faith cannot extend beyond their personal involvement in the good and acceptable and perfect will of God. In other words, the knowledge of God is not like a sort of manual of facts that we memorize. There are aspects of the Kingdom of God that can only be fully known by arriving at proper conclusions. In fact, this is the very thing that will be confirmed in our text. While it is mandatory that men have a knowledge of the Scripture, their proper use of that knowledge is based upon their reasoning and perception, not their acquisition of the facts.

With men, extended research on a matter often uncovers flaws or imperfections. That is because whatever natural men do carries with it something of their own imperfections. However, this is not true of the Word of God. The more you consider the Word with a pure heart and in faith, the more you will see. Also, the more you integrate it with human experience, the more thoroughly life in Christ is understood.

AT THE TIME OF OUR TEXT

At the time of our text, it was approximately seventeen years after the New Covenant had been inaugurated, and Jesus began its mediation. Yet, there was such a marked contrast between the Old and the New that many did not perceive it as fully as possible.

These were people whose minds had been bathed in Scripture, and while there were many prophecies of the New Covenant, they lacked clarity until the time of their fulfillment arrived. Daniel was told of this Divine manner in Daniel 12:4. Throughout God’s dealings with men, this had been His style – to open up the understanding of certain prophecies during the time they are actually being fulfilled. Prior to their fulfillment, a limitation was placed on man’s understanding of those things. Their reality was not questioned, but the intricacies and manner of their outworking was not known. The uniqueness of the New Covenant message lies in the fact that it is a “more sure word of prophecy”

– i.e. “the prophetic word confirmed,” NKJV or fulfilled. The message of the New Covenant is not one of possibilities, but of accomplishments. It is one that promotes and maintains faith, not speculation.

In the text for this lesson, there will be sharp contention about circumcision and keeping the Law of Moses – particularly among Gentile converts. Holy men will meet and discuss this matter until it becomes clear to them. Such clarity is also the manner of the New Covenant.

It is important to note that the contention concerned religious matters, not domestic, social, or political issues. It further had to do with something that God Himself had originated and affirmed in the text of Scripture, not tradition.

Among other things, this will show us that early believers did not allow for contradicting views of the Scripture. They determined to settle issues regarding the will and commandments of God. In our time, such resolutions are rarely sought. Instead, men form a denomination around their crystalized views of Scripture, and begin to compete in the market of religious ideas. It is understood that every divergent view does not require extensive investigation. That is because the harmony or variance of some theological views are more pronounced than others. However, even in those cases, the truth of Scripture and the will of God must be firmly established.

BRETHREN TAUGHT THE WRONG THING

“ 15:1 And certain men which came down from Judaea taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.”

Remember, Paul and Barnabas are in Antioch, and that is the city to which some now had come. There had doubtless been a report throughout Judaea of the marvelous works that issued forth from the church there. They not only had a number of teachers and prophets, but were involved in an extensive outreach that was directed by the Holy Spirit of God. That certainly was enough to get the attention of surrounding areas, particularly in Judea. Now, an entourage of men come “down” from the high country of Judea, endeavoring to instruct the brethren more perfectly in the ways of the Lord. It ought to be noted that those who are serious about their religion, whether right or wrong, tend to be aggressive about it.

AN AGGRESSIVE MANNER

“And certain men which came down from Judaea taught the brethren...”

This group of men did not come to “evangelize,” but to teach “the brethren.” They felt there were some doctrinal and practical; deficiencies in Antioch, and therefore sought to correct them. Being Jews, they no doubt were persuaded they had a more thorough grasp of Kingdom matters than those from that area. Of course, they conveniently ignored the fact that there were prophets and teachers there, and that the Holy Spirit had used some of them in a rather extensive work in Gentile regions – a work that extended over about two years. Yet, these “men” felt it necessary to come from Judaea to deliver what they felt to be a critical point of teaching. We will find that it was not an illuminated view, but one that was driven by minds without spiritual understanding.

A MOSAIC REQUIREMENT

“ . . . and said, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.” Other versions read, “Unless you are circumcised according to the custom of Moses, you cannot be saved,” NKJV and “Unless you are circumcised, according to the custom taught by Moses, you cannot be saved.” NIV

The necessity for spiritual understanding, as opposed to a mere scholastic grasp of Scripture, can be seen in the matter before us: the binding of circumcision, as described by Moses, upon believers in Christ.

This is the first expression of an ongoing thorn in the side of the early church. Before beginning my remarks on this matter, it is necessary to say a few things about the religious environment of that time. It was vastly different from the church culture of our day.

- A certain seriousness existed in the converted Jewish community concerning Divine requirements.
- There was a level of Scriptural literacy among these people that is virtually unknown in our time.
- There was a commitment to doing what was perceived to be the will of God.

I say these things understanding that there was also a sectarian and factious spirit that existed among some. Whether or not that was the case with those to whom we are now introduced will be established by their response to the recorded discussions that follow. As we will see, however, this was not a mere religious haranguing over the personal opinions of people who has no commitment to the Lord.

The necessity for spiritual understanding, as opposed to a mere scholastic grasp of Scripture, can be seen in the matter before us: the binding of circumcision, as described by Moses, upon believers in Christ.

The Origin of the Circumcision of Reference

Established Initially with Abraham

God instituted circumcision when He made a covenant with Abraham – a covenant made with the future in mind: “As for Me, behold, My covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations . . . And I will establish My covenant between Me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God” (Gen 17:4,7-8). This covenant has to do with Abraham and his seed, or progeny. It consisted primarily of two things. First, that God would be “a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee” (Gen 17:7). Second, that He would give them “all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession” (Gen 17:8).

Circumcision became the means of distinguishing the Jews from the Gentiles. The Jews were referred to as “the circumcision,” or those who were “circumcised”

Those Who Were not Circumcised Were Punished

In regards to this covenant, it was established by the rite of circumcision. “This is My covenant, which ye shall keep, between Me and you and thy seed after thee; Every man child among you shall be circumcised. And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt Me and you. And he that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man child in your generations, he that is born in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed . . . And the uncircumcised man child whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant ” (Gen 17:10-14).

Codified and Bound Upon the People

by Moses

In the Law, circumcision was formally bound upon the people: “Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a woman have conceived seed, and born a man child: then she shall be unclean seven days; according to the days of the separation for her infirmity shall she be unclean. And in the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised ” (Lev 12:3).

Circumcision Required to Eat the Passover

Circumcision was required for one to eat the Passover – even if he was a stranger in the land: “And when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the Passover to the LORD, let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one that is born in the land: for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof ” (Ex 12:48).

Distinguished the Jews from the Gentiles

Circumcision became the means of distinguishing the Jews from the Gentiles. The Jews were referred to as “the circumcision,” or those who were “circumcised” (Jer 9:25; Acts 10:45; 11:2; Rom 3:30; 4:9,12;. 15:8; Gal 2:7-9; Eph 2:11; Col 4:11; Tit 1:10), and the Gentiles as “the uncircumcision” or “uncircumcised” (Gen 34:14; Judges 14:3; 15:18; 1 Sam 17:26; 1 Sam 31:4; Jer 9:26; Rom 3:30; 4:9; Eph 2:11).

John the Baptist and Jesus

John the Baptist and Jesus Circumcised

John the Baptist was circumcised in strict accord with this law. “And it came to pass, that on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child ; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father. And his mother answered and said, Not so; but he shall be called John” (Luke 1:59-60). On the eighth day, he infant Jesus was circumcised according to this law: “And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child , his name was called JESUS, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb” (Luke 2:21).

Jesus Referred to Circumcision

Jesus referred to this rite: “Moses therefore gave unto you circumcision; (not because it is of Moses, but of the fathers;) and ye on the sabbath day circumcise a man” (John 7:22).

Stephen Referred to Circumcision

Stephen referred to it when he addressed the Jewish council: “And he gave him the covenant of circumcision: and so Abraham begat Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs” (Acts 7:8).

Paul Referred to Circumcision

Paul also referred to it in his teaching: “And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also” (Rom 4:11).

Some Mitigating Factors

There was no specific word contained in Moses and the Prophets that said the rite of circumcision would become obsolete, or by a decree of God would no longer be required. There were some indirect statements that spoke of another kind of circumcision.

- UNCIRCUMCISED LIPS. “And Moses spake before the LORD, saying, Behold, the children of Israel have not hearkened unto me; how then shall Pharaoh hear me, who am of uncircumcised lips ?” (Ex 6:12).

- CIRCUMCISION OF THE HEART. “Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart, and be no more stiffnecked” (Deut 10:16). “And the LORD thy God will circumcise thine heart . . .” (Deut 30:6). “Circumcise yourselves to the LORD, and take away the foreskins of your heart . . .” (Jer 4:4). “Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, and the children of Ammon, and Moab, and all that are in the utmost corners, that dwell in the wilderness: for all these nations are uncircumcised, and all the house of Israel are uncircumcised in the heart ” (Jer 9:26).

- UNCIRCUMCISED EARS. “To whom shall I speak, and give warning, that they may hear? behold, their ear is uncircumcised, and they cannot hearken . . .” (Jer 6:10).

Although these statements may be clear to those in Christ who have understanding, there was not a syllable of Scripture that suggested that a new circumcision would invalidate the old – just as the New Covenant made the first old, and ready to vanish away (Heb 8:13). That is something that would be made known in the crucible of disputation and reasoning. It would also be revealed more fully to Paul, who would enlarge upon the reason why circumcision could not be bound upon believers.

WHY SAY THESE THINGS?

I have taken the time to point out these things to show the necessity of obtaining true wisdom and spiritual understanding. When these men came down from Judea and taught some that they could not be saved unless they were circumcised after the manner of Moses, their reasoning must have appeared to be very weighty. They could point out in Scripture that this is what God required. They could further have seemingly established that any Gentiles that were accepted by God had, in fact, become identified with the Jews, thus requiring their circumcision.

The prophets spoke of the coming identity of the Gentiles with the Jews .

- “And in that day there shall be a root These men from Judea did not simply say the Gentiles ought to be circumcised – that would have been bad enough. Now, however, they extend their reasoning into the area of salvation, which is administered of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek : and His rest shall be glorious” (Isa 11:10).

- “I the LORD have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles ” (Isa 42:6).

- “Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders” (Isa 49:22).

- “The Gentiles shall come to thy light . . . the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee ” (Isa 60:3,5).

- “And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the LORD shall name” (Isa 62:2).

- “O LORD, my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit” (Jer 16:19).

- “Thus saith the LORD of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you ” (Zech 8:23).

For that matter, the New Covenant was clearly prophesied as being made “with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah” (Jer 31:31).

WHAT THESE MEN SAID

These men from Judea did not simply say the Gentiles ought to be circumcised – that would have been bad enough. Now, however, they extend their reasoning into the area of salvation, which is administered by the Lord Jesus – something that neither Moses nor the prophets associated with circumcision. Supposing that their reasoning was sound, and no doubt buttressing their word with all manner of Scripture, they affirmed, “Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved ” (Acts 15:1) – and they were talking about the salvation that is in Christ, for Moses promised no salvation under the Law. They said this in the presence of the brethren in Antioch, among whom were several teachers and prophets.

PAUL AND BARNABAS DISPUTED WITH THEM

“ 2 When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question.”

Here we are exposed to the manner in which doctrinal controversy was addressed by the early church. First, what was said to be required was taken seriously. Further, it was not assumed that because a person or persons felt what they said was true, that they were at liberty to bind it upon others. What was preached was not left to human discretion. Further, what was questioned was not left in the domain of human opinion. We will see that an aggressive effort was made to suppress error, and to arrive at a sound expression of the truth.

This is not a common approach in our time. There are matters of religious controversy that have existed for centuries, never being hammered out to a satisfactory conclusion, as in this text. For example, in the movement with which I have been identified, there is a line of teaching that states singing to God cannot be accompanied by a musical instrument. The division is sharp, extending into the reasoning of our text – associating the matter with salvation. Yet, for at least one hundred and fifty years, the controversy has continued without an uninterrupted quest for the matter to be resolved. There have been debates – such as the one Paul and Barnabas will have with these men from Judea. However, there has not been a determination such as the one recorded in this text. I conclude that this record has to do with men who evidenced more interest in the truth, as opposed to maintaining a sectarian position.

NO SMALL DISSENSION AND DISPUTATION

“When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them . . .” Other versions read, “great dissension and debate,” NASB “sharp dispute and debate,” NIV “no small dissensions and questioning,” ASV “no little argument and discussion with them,” BBE “no small measure of discord and dispute,” CJB “engaged them in serious argument and debate,” CSB “great dissension, and disputation,” GWN “had a major argument and debate with them,” NET “sharp dispute and debate with them,” NIB “had a long argument with these men,” NJB “disagreed with them, arguing vehemently,” NLT “argued and discussed this with them at length,” LIVING “were very much opposed to this teaching. They argued with these men about it,” IE and “dire disturbance and a serious discussion had been created.” MONTGOMERY

The words “dissension” and “disputation” are strong words. They are certainly not associated with any casual or passive activity. Here, they speak of a holy aggression. “Dissension” has to do with strong disagreement. In this case, Paul and Barnabas not only were in disagreement concerning the teaching of circumcision brought down from Jerusalem, but refused to let it go unchallenged.

“Disputation” relates to the articulation of that disagreement, and the presentation of strong arguments against what was being taught: namely, “Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.” This was an activity in which both sides presented justification for their view. It was apparently heated, though not driven by “the wrath of man,” which “worketh not the righteousness of God” (James 12:20). The prolonged and aggressive nature of this exchange is depicted by the words, “no small dissension and disputation.”

While disputation is not a preferred activity for men of God, it is often a necessary one. This is because of the nature of spiritual life. First, contradicting thoughts produce a kind of climate in which the fruit of righteousness is diminished – for “the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace among those that make peace” (James 3:18). Second, where there is doctrinal conflict there is error, for “sound doctrine” is never self-contradictory. This is because it issues forth from God, “with whom is no variableness” (James 1:17). Third, anything declared to be related to salvation is a critical matter, for no subject is of any greater importance than “the salvation of God” (Psa 50:23; Lk 3:6; Acts 28:28).

- RELATED TO GOD. Anything and everything that relates to salvation also connects with God, who is appropriately described as “the God of salvation” (Psa 68:2).

- RELATED TO JESUS. It also is associated with Jesus, who is “the Captain” of “salvation” (Heb 2:10).

- RELATED TO THE HOLY SPIRIT. It also is united with the Holy Spirit, through whom salvation is implemented – through “the sanction of the Spirit” (1 Thess 2:13); and spiritual birth as well – being “born of the Spirit” (John 3:8).

- RELATED TO THE HOLY ANGELS. Additionally anything having to do with salvation involves the holy angels, who are ministers to those who are “the heirs of salvation” (Heb 1:14).

- RELATED TO THE GRACE OF GOD. On top of all of that, whatever is affiliated with salvation has to do with “the grace of God,” which “brings salvation” NKJV (Tit 2:11).

- RELATED TO THE GOSPEL. It also directly relates to the Gospel, which is God’s “power unto salvation” (Rom 1:16), and is the “Gospel of your salvation” (Eph 1:13).

- RELATED TO HOPE. Things represented as being related to salvation also relate to hope, for saints possess “the hope of salvation” (1 Thess 5:8; Eph 6:17).

All of these relationships are critical to salvation itself. It is not possible that anything unrelated to them could be associated with salvation. As the Architect of salvation, anything connected with that salvation must, of

If all of heaven is involved in salvation, men do well to be sober and perceptive regarding anything they say pertains to that salvation. No person can afford to have distorted thoughts about the salvation of God.

necessity come from God the Father. As the Implementer of salvation, everything inherent in that salvation must be administered by Jesus Christ. I find it exceedingly difficult to imagine anything having greater implications than something said to be associated with salvation. In this matter we are not speaking of a novel religious idea, or a unique doctrine of a particular church. This is not something in which men are allowed latitude for opinion. If all of heaven is involved in salvation, men do well to be sober and perceptive regarding anything they say pertains to that salvation. No person can afford to have distorted thoughts about the salvation of God. If salvation has to do with the extrication of men from sin, reconciling them to God, and making them suitable to obtain an “eternal inheritance” (Heb 9:15), then our representations of it must be proper, reflecting “the mind of the Lord.”

Salvation must neither be oversimplified nor laden with requirements that did not originate with God. Ponder the things that have been associated with being “saved.”

- ENDURING TO THE END. “And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved .” (Matt 10:22). “But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved ” (Mat 24:13).

- BELIEVING AND BEING BAPTIZED. “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved ; but he that believeth not shall be damned” (Mark 16:16).

- ENTERING BY JESUS. “I am the door: by Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved , and shall go in and out, and find pasture” (John 10:9).

- THROUGH THE NAME OF JESUS. “Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved ” (Acts 4:12).

- CALLING UPON THE NAME OF THE LORD. “And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved ” (Acts 2:21). “ For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved” (Rom 10:13).

- THROUGH THE GRACE OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST. “But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they” (Acts 15:11). “ Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved)” (Eph 2:5).

- BELIEVING ON THE LORD JESUS CHRIST. “And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved , and thy house” (Acts 16:31).

- BY THE PRESENT LIFE OF CHRIST. “Much more then, being now justified by His blood, we shall be saved from wrath through Him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life” (Rom 5:9-10).

- BY THE FIRE OF DIVINE JUDGMENT. “If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire” (1 Cor 3:15).

- BY HOPE. “For we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?” (Rom 8:24).

- BY THE GOSPEL. “By which also ye are saved , if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain” (1 Cor 15:2).

- BY BAPTISM. “The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 3:21).

- BY BELIEVING AND CONFESSION. “That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved ” (Rom 10:9).

- BY GRACE THROUGH FAITH. “For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God” (Eph 2:8).

- BY THE LOVE OF THE TRUTH. “And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved ” (2 Thess 2:10).

• ACCORDING TO GOD’S MERCY, BY THE WASHING OF REGENERATION AND THE RENEWING OF THE HOLY SPIRIT. “Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy He saved us , by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost” (Titus 3:5).

You can look at these as a series of sequential steps – but it ought to be apparent that no such view is declaring concerning them in Scripture. They may also simply be viewed as requirements that must all be met – and there certainly is some element of truth to that. However, it seems to me that the point being revealed in these matters is the marvelous complexity of salvation, and the consequent necessity for Divine involvement. It would be a blasphemous addition to accept what was being taught by certain men from Jerusalem: “Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.” Such a statement cannot be blended with the revelations stated above. However these men were considering salvation, it was wholly unacceptable. It clashed with both the nature and purpose of salvation, and therefore Paul and Barnabas refused to allow such statements to go unchallenged. The statement of these men from Galilee betrayed their ignorance of the salvation of God. Left unchallenged, it would drive a wedge between the people and God.

THEY DETERMINED TO

“ . . . they determined . . . ” Other versions read, “the brethren determined,” NASB “appointed,” NIV “made a decision to,” BBE “the congregation assigned,” CJB “they arranged,” CSB “they ordained,” GENEVA and “it was decided.” NAB

The word “determined” is translated from a word meaning, “to appoint, ordain, order,” THAYER “to assign to a place or task, to decide,” FRIBERG and “designate, set aside, command, order, direct.” UBS

Here is another example of the need for discernment. A decision had to be made that did not allow for the present situation to continue, and yet the matter could not be resolved by the wisdom and arguments of those present. However, that was not sufficient reason to table the discussion for another time. I get the distinct impression that the work of the Lord could not move forward until unanimity on this matter regarding appropriating salvation was accomplished.

Also, we see how entrenched these men from Jerusalem were in their persuasion. Even after Paul and Barnabas had engaged them in a lengthy disputation – men who were called and directed by the Holy Spirit of God – yet the issue they were professing was not resolved.

However, the matter could not simply be dropped, while brethren agreed to speak only of those things on which they agreed – something that is advocated today among some who are sharply divided in what they relate to salvation. Questionable teachings that are represented as being associated with salvation cannot be ignored, or left to the people to figure out. Everything about salvation is built upon a sure foundation – one that can be embraced by faith. Faith cannot take hold of doubt, for it is the antithesis of faith. Salvation by grace through faith cannot take place if faith is not grounded in Christ – and that grounding is wholly dependent upon the Word of God, particularly the Gospel.

One more thing about this: there appears to have been no threat to any of the brethren by the action that was taken. No one objected to sending Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem about this matter, as though it might uproot their tradition or void their preaching. Of course, when they obtained an answer, it would require the cessation of any teaching that contradicted it.

SEND PAUL AND BARNABAS TO JERUSALEM

“ ...that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them . . . ”

They did not call for some supposedly unbiased person from outside of their group. Instead, they chose Paul and Barnabas, who had initially been with them for a “whole year” (Acts 11:26), and had remained with them for a “long time” after completing the mission to which the Spirit had called them (Acts 14:28). In addition they sent specific men from their own number, or some of the others of the number.” AMPLIFIED

Here, we get a feel concerning the caliber of brethren in the Antioch church. Luke has already related there were certain teachers and prophets in that assembly. Among them were “Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul” (Acts 13:1). It certainly is not a coincidence that “the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch” (11:26). They apparently projected a picture of total commitment to Christ, as well as thorough acquaintance with His teaching. Of course, it is not possible to firmly establish one’s identity with Christ if the people are neither committed to Him nor knowledgeable of His ways.

TO JERUSALEM

“ . . . should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders...”

There are sixty references to Jerusalem in the book of Acts (1:4, 8,12,19; 2:5,14; 4:6,16; 5:16,28; 6:7; 8:1, 14,25,26,27; 9:2,13,21,26,28; 10:39; 11:2, 22,27; 12:25; 13:13,27,31; 15:2,4; 16:4; 18:21; 19:21; 20:16,22; 21:4,11,12,13,5, 17,31; 22:5,17,18; 23:11; 24:11; 25:1,3,7, 9,15,20,24; 26:4,10,20; 28:17). There were a number of prophecies regarding the centrality of Jerusalem during the inauguration of the New Covenant.

- “And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem” (Isa 2:3).
- “For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and they that escape out of mount Zion: the zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this” (Isa 37:32).
- “The first shall say to Zion, Behold, behold them: and I will give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings” (Isa 41:27).
- “That confirmeth the word of His servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built, and I will raise up the decayed places thereof” (Isa 44:26).
- “At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the LORD; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the LORD, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart” (Jer 3:17).
- “The LORD also shall roar out of Zion, and utter His voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the LORD will be the hope of His people, and the strength of the children of Israel” (Joel 3:16).
- “And he said, The LORD will roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither” (Amos 1:2).
- “And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem ” (Micah 4:2).
- “And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem ; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: in summer and in winter shall it be” (Zech 14:8).

ABOUT THIS QUESTION

“ . . . about this question.” Other versions read, “concerning this issue,” NASB “to discuss this question,” NRSV “concerning this controversy,” CSB “about this claim,” GWN “about this point of disagreement,” NET and “on this matter.” WEYMOUTH

The question was whether or not a person could be saved without being circumcised “after the manner of Moses,” or in strict accord with the ordinance of the Law. According to that ordinance, male children within Israel, whether born of an Israelite or a stranger, were to be circumcised on the eighth day following their birth (Lev 12:3). Strangers sojourning with the Israelites had to be circumcised in order to partake of the Passover (Ex 12:48). So far as procedures are concerned, that is the extent of Moses’ instruction on circumcision.

- In all of the Law (Exodus through Deuteronomy), there are only six uses of the word circumcision in its various forms (circumcise—Deut 10:16; 30:6; circumcised – Ex 12:44,48; Lev 12:3; circumcision—Ex 4:26).

Without the further illumination that would accompany the day of salvation, these texts, combined with the few given by Moses, were all the people had. They all presumed the prominence of Abraham’s offspring, and the necessity of anyone seeking an association with God being identified with them.

- Circumcision is referenced fifteen times in Genesis (17:10,11,12,13,14, 23,24,25,26,27; 21:4; 34:15,17,22,24).

- It is mentioned five times from Joshua through the Song of Solomon (Josh 5:2,3,4,5,6,7,8).

- It is mentioned in the Prophets (Isaiah through Malachi) two times (Jer 4:4; 9:25).

- There are thirty-four references to “uncircumcised” and “circumcised” – thirty-four times from Genesis through Ezekiel (Gen 17:14; 34:14; Ex 6:12,30; 12:48; Lev 19:13; 26:41; Josh 5:7; Judges 14:3; 15:18; 1 Sam 14:6; 17:26,36; 31:4; 2 Sam 1:20; 1 Chron 10:4; Isa 52:1; Jer 6:10; 9:25,26; Ezek 28:10; 31:18; 32:19,21,24,25,26,27,28, 29,30,32; 44:7,9).

On the surface, that does not appear to be enough to formulate a teaching such as, “Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.” Yet, the strength of what was said is seen in words that God delivered to Abraham concerning this ordinance.

- A COVENANT TO BE KEPT. “ This is My covenant, which ye shall keep, between Me and you and thy seed after thee ; Every man child among you shall be circumcised” (Gen 17:10).

- A TOKEN OF THE COVENANT. “And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt Me and you ” (Gen 17:11).

- A COVENANT IN THEIR FLESH. “He that is born in thy house, and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised: and My covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant ” (Gen 17:13).

- THE PENALTY FOR NOT BEING CIRCUMCISED. “And the uncircumcised man child whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken My covenant ” (Gen 17:14).

Without the further illumination that would accompany the day of salvation, these texts, combined with the few given by Moses, were all the people had. They all presumed the prominence of Abraham's offspring, and the necessity of anyone seeking an association with God being identified with them.

The "question" that had to be resolved was whether or not the Gentiles had to be circumcised to be saved. It could not be resolved with an existing text of Scripture. Further, they did not pray for an answer – at least there is no record of them doing so. The matter would have to be resolved through the consideration of men who had a fuller understanding of the nature of life in Christ Jesus, together with those who had been, according to His own selection, personally involved in the work of God. It appears that those who presented this teaching submitted to the determination to resolve the issue. Thus the stage is set for the determined resolution of this controversy about circumcision.

THEY WERE BROUGHT ON THEIR WAY AND DECLARED THE CONVERSION OF THE GENTILES

“ 3 And being brought on their way by the church, they passed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the conversion of the Gentiles: and they caused great joy unto all the brethren.”

BROUGHT ON THEIR WAY

“And being brought on their way by the church . . .” Other versions read, “sent on their way,” NKJV “sent off by the congregation,” CJB “sent on their journey,” NAB “members of the church saw them off,” NJB “having been sent forward,” YLT “the entire congregation escorted them out of the city,” LIVING “helped the men with what they needed,” IE “accompanied for a short distance by some other members,” WEYMOUTH “they were endorsed and sent,” ISV and “being fitted out and sent on their way by the church.” AMPLIFIED

The words “brought on their way” are translated from a single Greek word (propemfque,ntej). This word has a complex meaning, portions of which are reflected in the various translations. Lexically the word can mean, “accompany, escort . . . help on one's journey, send on one's way,” THAYER and “as furnishing things necessary for someone's travel help on one's journey, send on one's way.” FRIBERG

The idea here is that the whole congregation was involved in this matter, confirming their interest in doctrinal purity and a proper representation of the salvation that is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory. They all agreed concerning the ones who were selected for the journey. They no doubt supplied what was required to make the trip, which was by land, and would require some time. They also escorted them, probably to the outskirts of the city, perhaps accompanying them for a for a short while.

Here we see the unanimity that existed among the brethren at Antioch. One could hardly conceive of a contemporary church taking that much interest in the resolution of a doctrinal matter. Could you, for example, imagine staff members like youth ministers, senior ministers, family ministers, counselors, and praise team members being part of the activities of our text? Of course, those type of positions are not mentioned in the chronicles of the early church. Their interest was quite different than those that are fostered by the institutional church. I mention these things to accent the glaring difference between the church set forth in the book of Acts, and what has come to be known as “the church” of our time.

THEY PASSED THROUGH PHENICE AND SAMARIA

“ . . . they passed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the conversion of the Gentiles . . .”

“Phenice” is the same as Phoenicia, being an older way of English spelling. This was a region comprising parts of southern Syria and northern Palestine. Brethren who were scattered by “the persecution that arose about Stephen” had traveled to this region “preaching the word to none but the Jews only” (Acts 11:19). The cities of Tyre and Sidon were in that region. Samaria was the central region of Canaan. Traveling by land, Paul, Barnabas, and company passed through these regions en route to Jerusalem – a trip of around three hundred miles.

Declaring the Conversion of the Gentiles

Other versions read, “describing the conversion,” NKJV “describing in detail the conversion,” NASB “how the Gentiles had been converted,” NIV “reported the conversion,” NRSV “giving news of the salvation of,” BBE “recounting in detail how the Gentiles had turned to God,” CJB “relating the conversion,” DARBY and “how non-Jewish people were turning to God.” GWN

Conversion has to do with turning from one manner of living to another, abandoning one kind of life in order to embrace another. To be converted means to “turn toward, turning about,” FRIBERG and “to come to believe, to come to accept.” LOUW-NIDA It speaks of change – a moral change that involves the heart, mind, words, and deeds. It is a thorough change that is bounded by death to sin on the one side and coming alive to God on the other. Going through Phenicia and Samaria, the travelers told of the conversion of the Gentiles, obviously reporting it to the believers in those areas.

Since the psychiatrists and psychologists, together with their band of counselors, have invaded the church, there are fewer reports of conversion. Now people are being taught to manage sin instead of turn from it and die to it. The are being led to struggle with sin by regimen, rather than gaining the victory over it by sinning “no more.”

Since the psychiatrists and psychologists, together with their band of counselors, have invaded the church, there are fewer reports of conversion. Now people are being taught to manage sin instead of turn from it and die to it. The are being led to struggle with sin by regimen, rather than gaining the victory over it by sinning “no more.” Group therapy and personal counseling have now upstaged preaching, admonition, exhortation, and edification. Such human impositions were not in place during the time of our text. Preaching and teaching was being done, and conversions were the result.

THEY CAUSED GREAT JOY

“ . . . and they caused great joy unto all the brethren.” Other versions read, “were bringing joy,” NASB “this news made all the brothers glad,” NIV “created great joy,” CSB “this news was received with the great satisfaction,” NJB “This made all the brothers very happy,” IE “inspired all the brethren with great joy,” WEYMOUTH and “all the brothers were overjoyed to hear about it.” PHILLIPS

Passing through the areas of Phenice and Samaria, the company of travelers reported the works of the Lord to the people of God – “the brethren.” The text does not say they reported how they were on their way to Jerusalem to settle the question about circumcision. They would address that problem, to be sure, but it had not consumed their minds, nor was it something that would cause joy among the brethren.

The text affirms “they caused great joy unto all the brethren.” That is, they “caused” it by “declaring the conversion of the Gentiles” – how they had turned to the Lord. It was the posture of the Gentiles toward the Lord that constituted their conversion, and that is what caused all of the brethren to be glad. It is what they said, or reported, not what they did.

Behold the unity of the brethren in those areas. Truly, they were “of one heart and of one soul” (Acts 4:32). They all rejoiced because they knew, “This is the LORD'S doing; it is marvelous in our eyes” (Psa 118:23). Here is an example of the brethren being “of one mind and of one judgment” (1 Cor 1:10), and dwelling “together in unity” (Psa 133:1-3). Of course, the implications of this must have had a powerful effect upon the travelers, for it related directly to the issue that mandated their trip to Jerusalem. While some men were dickering about binding circumcision on Gentile converts, these brethren were reporting their conversion – which certainly implied their acceptance by God. One would have a great deal of difficulty supporting the notion that people could be converted, turning to the Lord, and yet fall short in meeting the requirements. The very posture of turning to the Lord puts the individual in a state in which a favorable response to the Lord is assured. Looking to the Lord brings spiritual aptitude.

There are no examples in Scripture of people who turned to the Lord, yet refused to do what He required of them. The other alternative would be that Paul; and Barnabas had not instructed them properly. Of course, if that was the case, how could they have been converted, for conversion does not come through a flawed presentation of the Gospel. The brethren who heard the report knew this, and so they had “great joy.” They did not inquire whether or not they had been circumcised, or if they knew they had to be circumcised to be saved. They were able to think more soundly.

THE BRETHREN IN JERUSALEM RECEIVED THEM

“ 4 And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders, and they declared all things that God had done with them.”

We do not know how long it took Paul, Barnabas, and those with them to get to Jerusalem – particularly since they reported to the brethren along the way. If they traveled by sea, there were coastal cities in Phenice and Samaria where they could have disembarked (Sodom, Tyre, Caesarea, and Joppa). The language “passed through Phenice and Samaria,” however, strongly suggests that they traveled on the land. Now, at length, they arrive. It is quite possible that no advance message was sent to the brethren in Jerusalem, notifying them that they were coming.

THEY WERE RECEIVED OF THE CHURCH, APOSTLES, AND ELDERS

“And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders. . .” Other versions read, “they were welcomed,” NIV “they had a meeting with,” BBE “they met with,” LIVING “were cordially received,” WEYMOUTH and “were heartily welcomed.” AMPLIFIED

The word translated “received” has the following lexical meaning: “to grant one access to oneself in the capacity in which he wishes to be regarded, e. g. as the messenger of others.” THAYER and “as understanding and receiving a message favorably receive, accept.” FRIBERG The idea here is that they were received in the capacity in which they had been sent – to discuss the matter of whether or not circumcision was compulsory for one to be saved. In other words, the whole church generally, and the apostles and elders specifically, agreed to deal with this matter.

The picture here is not one of the whole church in Jerusalem, together with the apostles and elders and the brethren with Paul and Barnabas, meeting together to decide the matter at hand by consensus. This was not a subject for general discussion. The question of the necessity of circumcision in order to be saved was taken up with the “apostles and elders.” The principle contributors in the discussion from those in Antioch would come from Paul and Barnabas. It is possible that some of the prophets from Antioch participated also, although that is open to question. It is certain that the men who came from Judea and disseminated the doctrine in question were not with those coming from Antioch. Those accompanying Paul and Barnabas are said to have been of the number of brethren in Antioch (15:2).

Now we will have a circumstance described in First Corinthians. Things will be uttered by the few, yet all will learn. As it is written, “Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge. If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace. For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted. And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets” (1 Cor 14:29-32). This is a matter that will impact directly on how brethren among the Gentiles will be taught. The issue must be decided by those with understanding, who have participated in the work of the Lord by Divine appointment.

The Elders

This is only the second time “the elders” at Jerusalem have been mentioned in the book of Acts. The first time we read of them is when the churches sent relief to the brethren in Jerusalem by the hands of Barnabas and Saul, sending it “to the elders” (11:30). Now, however, “the elders” in Jerusalem are joined with the apostles in the determination of a critical matter. Here we read that they joined in the welcoming of the group from Antioch in the capacity in which they had been sent. Verse six informs us that they came together with the apostles to consider the matter at hand. Verses twenty-two and twenty-three finds them joining with the apostles in sending letters of instruction to the Gentile churches.

We have very little information on “the elders” in Jerusalem – only that they were capable of dealing with critical issues, and were prominent in the church. I gather that they were, as indicated by the instructions concerning elders, competent spiritual men, noted for their understanding of the mysteries of the Kingdom, and able to exhort and convince the gainsayers (Acts 20:28; 1 Tim 3:1-7; Tit 1:5-9; James 5:14-15; 1 Pet 5:1-5).

THEY DECLARED ALL THINGS

“ . . . and they declared all things” Other versions read, “reported all things,” NKJV “reported everything,” NIV “rehearsed all things,” ASV “related all,” DARBY “declaring how great things,” DOUAY “recounted all,” MRD “gave an account of all,” NJB and “told about all the things.” IE

The account was given by Paul and Barnabas, and related to the mission to which the Spirit had called them, and which they fulfilled (13:2; 14:26). It was the same report they had given to the brethren in Phenice and Samaria, except more in detail. They reported all of the particulars of their work, like Peter reported the events that took place at the house of Cornelius (11:4-17). I gather that they, like Peter, commenced with their calling, then related all that was involved in the fulfilling of that call.

GOD HAD DONE WITH THEM

“ . . . that God had done with them.” Other versions read, “that God had done through them,” NIV “that God had wrought with them,” DARBY “that God had wrought by them,” MRD “God had done by them,” TNT “as many things as God did with them,” YLT “what God had been doing through their ministry,” LIVING “all that God, working with them, had done,” WEYMOUTH “what God had done through them as instruments,” WILLIAMS “all that God had accomplished through them,” AMPLIFIED and “how greatly God had worked with them.” PHILLIPS

The nature of this report is to be duly noted. It was not a mere relating of chronological events, or the various experiences they had. The point of the account was not what they had done, but what God had done through them. Now, that does require some discernment. These days, there are a lot of things being reported as coming from God that, in fact, have had their origin with men. I do not doubt that those endued with understanding weighed what was being reported, as Paul enjoined the prophets to do in Corinth (1 Cor 14:29).

It is understood that God always acts in strict harmony with both His character and His Word. It is, however, necessary that such a correlation be discerned. Therefore, the report of things God had wrought, or accomplished, through Paul and Barnabas must yield apparent glory to God. This will be attested in the results that were yielded by what they did. The effects of the preaching of Paul and Barnabas will be reported – effects that God alone could work. I do not doubt they were very conscious of how godly men would reason on their report, and whether or not they would conclude that God was at work.

THE ACCOUNT IN GALATIANS

Paul alludes to this gathering in his letter to the Galatians. He states there that he went up to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and that Titus went with him also. He also states this was “by revelation,” which confirms the determination of the brethren in Antioch was by the Lord, and not merely by men. Here is what Paul recorded. “Then fourteen years after I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also. And I went up by revelation, and communicated unto them that gospel which I preach among the Gentiles, but privately to them which were of reputation, lest by any means I should run, or had run, in vain” (Gal 2:1-2). It is evident that much took place during this epochal gathering. It is on the part of wisdom to carefully examine it.

CERTAIN SAID THEY SHOULD BE CIRCUMCISED AND KEEP THE LAW OF MOSES

“ 5 But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed, saying, That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses.”

During this report, “the whole church” NLT was in the assembly, together with the apostles and elders, and Paul, Barnabas, and certain brethren from Antioch who were with them. The conclusions of this assembly will have an effect on the entire body of Christ, both in Jerusalem and wherever the Gospel was believed and obeyed. Now we find that everyone in the assembly did not have the same understanding. However, it is imperative that they work toward this objective, which thing God requires (1 Cor 1:10).

CERTAIN OF THE SECT OF THE PHARISEES

“But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed . . .” Other versions read, “believers who belonged to the party of the Pharisees,” NIV “believers who belonged to the sect of the Pharisees,” NRSV “some of the Pharisees, who were of the faith,” BBE “certain members of the Pharisees' party who had become believers objected,” NJB “some of the men who had been Pharisees before their conversion stood to their feet,” LIVING “Some of the believers had belonged to the Pharisee sect. They stood up and claimed, IE “certain men who had belonged to the sect of the Pharisees but were now believers,” WEYMOUTH and “some who believed [who acknowledged Jesus as their Savior and devoted themselves to Him] belonged to the sect of the Pharisees.”
AMPLIFIED

This phrase does not suggest that the men who objected were still

Here were men who came from the same background as Paul, yet had not made the same progress. Later we will find that these men “held their peace,” and were finally “pleased” with the decision of the apostles and elders (15:13,22). Yet, at the point of our text, these men still held on to views that truth would eventually show to be erroneous.

Pharisees, maintaining that position in the Jewish community. It rather is intended to identify their background. In the past they were “of the sect of the Pharisees.” Luke states that “the church” welcomed the group from Antioch. This was not a public gathering that could be attended by those who were not members of the body of Christ.

Here were men who came from the same background as Paul, yet had not made the same progress. Later we will find that these men “held their peace,” and were finally “pleased” with the decision of the apostles and elders (15:13,22). Yet, at the point of our text, these men still held on to views that truth would eventually show to be erroneous. Those who have been under the grip of religious tradition often find it clinging to them. Paul is an example that confirms such restraint is not necessary. Of course, he also was characterized by driving compulsion to “forget” the things behind him, count everything loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, and press toward the mark of the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus with everything that he had (Phil 3:7-14). That, of course, is a frame of mind that proves very difficult for many professed believers.

IT WAS NEEDFUL

“ . . . saying, That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses.” Other versions read, “it is necessary . . . and to direct” NKJV “the Gentiles must be and required,” NIV “it is necessary . . . and ordered,” NRSV “it is necessary . . . and to charge,” RSV “they ought to . . . and enjoin them,” DARBY and “insisting that Gentiles should . . . and instructed to.” NJB

First, there are things that ARE “needful.” Speaking of giving attendance to what He Himself said, Jesus said “one thing is needful” (Lk 10:42). In view of the situation existing in his time, Jude said it was “needful” for him to exhort the brethren to “earnestly contend for the faith” (Jude 1:3). Paul and Barnabas said it was “necessary” to preach the word of God to the Jews first (Acts 13:46). In the very conference covered in this text, the apostles and elders will conclude that there were “necessary things” that must be followed by Gentile believers (15:28). There are also certain things that are to be “kept.” Among them are “the faith” (2 Tim 4:7), the memory of the Gospel (1 Cor 15:2), “the unity of the Spirit” (Eph 4:3), “purity” (1 Tim 5:22), a condition in which we are “unspotted from the world” (James 1:27), and “His commandments” (1 John 2:3; 3:22). However, none of the things that are to be “kept” or “commanded” can be originated by men. All such things must clearly be required by the Lord Himself, who is the “Head of the body, the church” (Col 1:18).

It is as though these men were responding to the report of Paul and Barnabas, declaring that something more was required of those who had believed their message and obeyed the Gospel.

Now, these believers, who had come from “the sect of the Pharisees,” which was the most strict sect of all the Jews (Acts 26:5), affirmed that it was essential for Gentiles to be circumcised, and to keep the Law of Moses. It is as though these men were responding to the report of Paul and Barnabas, declaring that something more was required of those who had believed their message and obeyed the Gospel.

Now, we will see how the apostles and elders respond to the affirmation of these believers who had been Pharisees. Will they treat the matter casually, or allow for the brethren to hold various opinions of it? Will they break forth in argument, or will they “try the spirits” to see if they are of God?

THE APOSTLES AND ELDERS CAME TOGETHER TO CONSIDER THE MATTER

“ 6 And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter.”

Immediately, the statement of those insisting that circumcision and keeping the law of Moses was required for the Gentiles, was put under scrutiny . The matter will not be left in a state of intellectual limbo, nor will every person be allowed the privilege of a private opinion on the matter, Things that are said to be “necessary,” and bound upon other believers must be examined, and a valid determination made concerning their propriety. No person, regardless of their acumen or devotion will be allowed to dictate to the body of Christ. Absolute requirements must be justified by both Scripture and sound reasoning. In this case, there will be an emphasis on reasoning, and arriving at a proper conclusion. That conclusion must also be perceived by those with discernment, and the appropriate action be taken.

THE APOSTLES AND ELDERS

“And the apostles and elders came together . . .” Other versions read, “came together,” NASB “met,” “were gathered together,” RSV “came together,” BBE “assembled,” CSB “met together,” NLT “set a further meeting,” LIVING and “were assembled together.” AMPLIFIED

We know that the apostles and elders were not isolated in this meeting. Verse twelve states that a “multitude” was present. It is also written that this multitude listened to the testimony of Paul and Barnabas during the gathering (15:12). Verse twenty-two refers to those present as “the apostles and elders, with the whole church.” The focus of this gathering, however, were the apostles and elders.

TO CONSIDER THE MATTER

“ . . . for to consider of this matter.” Other versions read, “to look into this matter,” NASB “consider this question,” “to consider this matter,” RSV “gave thought to the question,” BBE “to resolve this issue,” NLT “to decide this question,” LIVING “to study this problem,” IE and “to look into and consider this matter.” AMPLIFIED

It is evident that there was a determination to resolve the issue, not merely review it with no decisive action. Was circumcision necessary for Gentile believers or not? Were they required to keep the Law of Moses or not? Some had said these things were necessary, and some disagreed. Now they will engage in an extensive dialog in the matter. They will bring things that are known to bear upon things that are not known. They will listen, weigh, and consider.

AFTER MUCH DISPUTING, PETER ROSE UP AND SPOKE

“ 7 And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.”

When men do not know one another after the flesh (2 Cor 5:16), and have a prevailing love of the truth (2 Thess 2:10), they can have profitable disputation. Such is the case in this text. It provides us a slice of life in Christ that is not the most pleasant, and yet yields great benefit.

MUCH DISPUTING

“And when there had been much disputing . . .” Other versions read, “much debate,” NASB “much discussion,” NIV “much questioning,” ASV “lengthy debate,” CJB “a long discussion,” NJB and “an exhaustive inquiry.” PHILLIPS

The word “disputing” is translated from a word meaning, “questioning, disputation, discussion,” THAYER “heated discussion, debate, dispute,” FRIBERG “argument,” UBS and “to express forceful differences of opinion without necessarily having a presumed goal of seeking a solution - to dispute, dispute.” LOUW-NIDA

The picture here is not that of two opposing parties trying to prove their preconceived notions. Rather, it is of men of understanding making an effort to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion concerning something considered to be critical. There is a difference in two contradicting parties trying to overturn the arguments of the other, and two parties of differing views attempting to arrive at the truth. The latter is what we have here. Where there are religious men who lack thoughtful convictions, such a discussion rarely takes place. In fact, some make every effort to avoid such an occasion, compromising their stance to avoid controversy. Under normal circumstances, and where there are issues at stake that are matters of conscience, this might be appropriate. However, when it comes to matters related to being “saved,” to things that are “needful,” and to commandments that are to be kept, varying views cannot be maintained. Such issues must be settled in order that inappropriate demands are not placed upon the people of God.

Therefore, our text speaks of an extended period of disputation. Yet, some additional testimony was required from those who actually had been involved in the conversion of Gentiles. Now, our attention is turned to such people.

PETER RISES UP TO SPEAK

“Peter rose up, and said unto them . . .” Other versions read, “Peter stood up and said,” NASB and “Peter got up and addressed them.” NIV

This is the man to whom Jesus said, “And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven” (Matt 16:19). This means that in matters relating to salvation and entrance into the Kingdom of God, Peter had superior understanding, coupled with the ability to articulate Divine requirements.

However, when Peter speaks, he will not draw attention to his authority, but to what God did through him. He knows that God cannot conduct Himself in contradiction of His nature or His Word, and therefore he will report what the Lord did following Peter’s preaching.

However, when Peter speaks, he will not draw attention to his authority, but to what God did through him. He knows that God cannot conduct Himself in contradiction of His nature or His Word, and therefore he will report what the Lord did following Peter’s preaching.

GOD MADE CHOICE AMONG US

“ . . . Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us . . .” Other versions read, “God chose among us,” NKJV “God made a choice among you,” NASB “it was God’s pleasure,” BBE “among us God chose out,” GENEVA “God made His choice,” NAB and “God made a choice or selection.” AMPLIFIED

When it comes to the instruction or teaching of the people of God, the matter is not left to mere human choice. This is something that is very obvious in the Scriptural record.

- God chose Moses to be the man through whom He gave the Law (Ex 24:12; Deut 5:1-3; John 1:17).
- God chose the priesthood to teach the people to differentiate between good and evil (Lev 10:8-11).
- God raised up Judges to deliver and teach the people (Judges 2:16,18).
- All of the prophets were chosen by God, and given a message to proclaim (2 Chron 24:19; Jer 7:25; Zech 7:12; Heb 11:1).
- All of the apostles were chosen and sent by the Lord (Lk 6:13; Eph 3:5).
- The instructive ministries are set first in the church, as it has pleased God: apostles, prophets, and teachers (1 Cor 12:18,28).
- Those with teaching and declaring ministries are gifts given to the church by Jesus: apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastor/teachers (Eph 4:11).
- Elders are said to be made overseers by the Holy Spirit (Acts 20:28).

- Those who preach the Gospel are “sent” by the Lord (Rom 10:15).

Even within the framework of these called and appointed people, God decides which ones will be used for pivotal ministries. Generally speaking, the twelve apostles were sent, but not limited, to the circumcision, or the Jews (Matt 19:28; Gal 2:7). Now, Peter will declare that God had chosen him for a special task. Earlier in this book we learned that the Holy Spirit separated Barnabas and Saul for a special work (13:2).

THE GENTILES SHOULD HEAR AND BELIEVE

“ . . . that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.”

What is here referred to as hearing the word of the Gospel and believing is also referred to as God granting repentance unto life to the Gentiles (Acts 11:18).

The reference is to the house of Cornelius believing the Gospel as preached to them through Peter. Peter now states that this was the result of a Divine choice. First, the Lord directed the Gentile Cornelius to send for Peter, who would tell him words whereby he would be saved (Acts 10:1-6). Second, an angel was sent to Peter to instruct him of the correctness of preaching to the Gentiles, and to direct him to go with the men sent from Cornelius to his house (Acts 10:9-23). The desire to summon Peter to his house did not originate with Cornelius – it was a revelation. The desire to go with the messengers from Cornelius, and preach to his household did not originate with Peter – it was a revelation. Had the Lord not orchestrated that whole event, it is doubtful that either man would ever have been aware of the other one. Peter’s explanation of the whole incident was this: “God made a choice among you, that by my mouth the Gentiles should hear the word of the gospel and believe.” NASB

Because this was an event managed from heaven, the outcome of it will be critical to beholding the will of the Lord concerning the Gentiles. Whatever Peter preached is what the Lord intended for him to say, for God spoke by his “mouth.” If circumcision is essential, Peter will say that it is, for he had the keys to the Kingdom.

Furthermore, his words were directly related to salvation itself – words, the angel told Cornelius, “whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved ” (Acts 11:14). Peter’s personal testimony, therefore, is pertinent to the discussion at hand, having to do with the appropriation of salvation.

THE GENTILES RECEIVED THE HOLY SPIRIT EVEN AS THE DISCIPLES

“ 8 And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as He did unto us.”

As confirmed in the actual account of the event, the rehearsal of it to the brethren in Jerusalem, and in our text, he said nothing concerning circumcision at that time. Yet, God Himself responded in a way that dissolves all doubt about whether or not a person is required to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses in order to be saved.

Because the matter under consideration had to do with salvation, the work of God as well as the Word of God must be brought to bare upon it. Peter will relate an event common to the church in Jerusalem, for several years earlier he had reported it in detail to them – and it was then recognized to have been an example of God granting people repentance “unto life,” which equates to “repentance to salvation” (Acts 11:18; 2 Cor 7:10). Furthermore, the message that was delivered to the house of Cornelius is described as “words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved” (Acts 11:14). As confirmed in the actual account of the event, the rehearsal of it to the brethren in Jerusalem, and in our text, he said nothing concerning circumcision at that time. Yet, God Himself responded in a way that dissolves all doubt about whether or not a person is required to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses in order to be saved.

GOD, WHO KNOWS THE HEARTS

“ And God, which knoweth the hearts . . . ” Other versions read, “knows the heart,” NKJV “knows the human heart,” NRSV “the searcher of hearts,” BBE “the heart-knowing God,” DARBY “knows everyone’s thoughts,” GWN “ knoweth what is in hearts,” MRD “knows people’s hearts,” NLT and “Who is acquainted with and understands the heart.” AMPLIFIED

One of the invariable traits of the Lord is that He looks on the hearts of men – the citadel of their persons. Here, men are seen for what they are, and the eye of the Lord discovers it. How frequently the Holy Spirit makes a point of this.

- “ . . . for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the LORD looketh on the heart ” (1 Sam 16:7).

- “ . . . give to every man according to his ways, whose heart Thou knowest ; (for thou, even thou only, knowest the hearts of all the children of men)” (1 Kgs 8:39).

- “ . . . for the LORD searcheth all hearts , and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts: if thou seek Him, He will be found of thee; but if thou forsake Him, He will cast thee off for ever” (1 Chron 28:9).

- “I know also, my God, that Thou triest the heart , and hast pleasure in uprightness . . . ” (1 Chr 29:17).

- “Shall not God search this out? for He knoweth the secrets of the heart ” (Psa 44:21).

- “But, O LORD of hosts, that judgest righteously, that triest the reins and the heart . . . ” (Jer 11:20).

- “I the LORD search the heart , I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings” (Jer 17:10).

- “But, O LORD of hosts, that triest the righteous, and seest the reins and the heart . . . ” (Jer 20:12).

- “ . . . Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do” (Heb 4:13).

How will the God of heaven, who knows all things, and particular the heart of man, respond to people believing a message that does NOT impose circumcision upon them? There were some among the brethren in Jerusalem, formerly Pharisees, who declared it was necessary for believing Gentiles to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses. Certain men from Judaea had gone to Antioch and confidently declared, “Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved” (Acts 15:1). Will God confirm that this requirement reflects His mind? Will He stand behind such a declaration? Will He save a person who believes the Gospel, even though they are not circumcised? If He will, then the statement cannot possibly be true!

Now, the things that took place at the house of Cornelius have proved controversial in some circles, for it is most difficult to fit the Divine response into a stereotyped theology. However, we must not allow ourselves to be confused on the matter. This is an account that relates to salvation, for that was the subject under consideration – whether or not circumcision and the keeping of the Law of Moses was necessary to be saved.

GOD BARE THEM WITNESS

“bare them witness . . .” Other versions read, “God . . . acknowledging them,” NKJV “God . . . showed that He accepted them,” NIV “God . . . testified to them,” NRSV “God . . . gave testimony,” DOUAY “showed that He approved of people who aren’t Jewish,” GWN “showed His approval of them,” NJB “confirmed that He accepts Gentiles,” NLT “confirmed the fact that He accepts Gentiles,” LIVING “He accepted these non-Jewish people,” IE “showed them He approved,” ISV “gave this testimony in their behalf,” MONTGOMERY and “has plainly shown that this is so, for when He had cleansed their hearts though their faith.” PHILLIPS

The phrase “bare them witness,” means that God set His mark of approval upon those hearing the Word at Cornelius’ house. He confirmed their hearts were right, that they had unreservedly received the Gospel, and that He had received them. The confirmation was necessary for Peter and those who were with him, for this was the first group of pure Gentiles that were saved. Although the Samaritans had also believed the Gospel, they were a mixed race, and not Gentile proselytes like those present at Cornelius’ house.

These people were accepted, and that without being circumcised or keeping the Law of Moses.

HOW GOD BORE THEM WITNESS?

“ . . . giving them the Holy Ghost, even as He did unto us.”

Not a single one of these texts is referring to some miraculous enduement, or to an experience that is unique to only some of the saved. And, indeed, if that was the case, the whole incident would have had no relevance to the matter being disputed in Jerusalem.

Not only is Peter relating what God did at the house of Cornelius, he is showing its relevance to the matter of salvation. He will, by inspiration, interpret what took place there. He will not speak of the miraculous gift of the Holy Spirit, or the conferment of spiritual gifts. Rather, he will speak in language that relates to salvation itself, not some experience extraneous to it – for salvation is the whole point of the discussion at hand.

Giving Them The Holy Spirit

“ . . . giving them the Holy Ghost . . .” Other versions read, “giving the Holy Spirit to them,” NIV “gave the Holy Spirit to them,” MRD “granting them the Holy Spirit,” NAB “bestowing the Holy Spirit upon them,” WEYMOUTH and “He gave the Holy Spirit to the Gentiles.” PHILLIPS

This is language that is common to all who are in Christ Jesus – God gives them the Holy Spirit.

- “And hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us” (Rom 5:5).
- “Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts” (2 Cor 1:22).
- “Now He that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit” (2 Cor 5:5).
- “He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit” (1 Thess 4:8).
- “And he that keepeth His commandments dwelleth in Him, and He in him. And hereby we know that He abideth in us, by the Spirit which He hath given us” (1 John 3:24).
- “Hereby know we that we dwell in Him, and He in us, because He hath given us of his Spirit” (1 John 4:13).

Not a single one of these texts is referring to some miraculous enduement, or to an experience that is unique to only some of the saved. And, indeed, if that was the case, the whole incident would have had no relevance to the matter being disputed in Jerusalem. They did not come together to discuss spiritual gifts, or the ability to work miracles, or what happened when the apostles laid their hands on people. It was the affirmation that circumcision was essential to salvation that caused this gathering to convene. It was also fueled by the statement that the law of Moses also had to be kept.

Men may make valiant attempts to distinguish the giving of the Spirit to those on the day of Pentecost from all other experiences. Peter, however, extends himself to show this was not the case – and his whole argument relates to salvation.

Now, Peter, who had the keys to the kingdom of heaven, felt the conversion (not the miraculous endowment) of those at the house of Cornelius was germane to this discussion. He states that God gave the Holy Spirit to those brethren, and that He did it as One who knew their hearts. Luke's account of the event reads, "While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word" (Acts 10:44). In his report of the event, Peter used the same terminology: "the Holy Ghost fell on them" (Acts 11:15). He added that when this happened he remembered what Jesus had said: "Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that He said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 11:16). He then concluded, "Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as He did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God?" (Acts 11:17). Those who heard his explanation, which included apostles (11:1), did not conclude from this that those gathered at the house of Cornelius had received miraculous gifts. Rather, this is their conclusion, and it is included in Scripture to attest to its truth: "When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life" (Acts 11:18). Notice, their saying "glorified God." They said this was evidence that God had granted them "repentance unto life" – and that relates to salvation, not spiritual gifts. It also confirmed that Jesus had done what He was exalted to do, as Peter declared to the Jewish council: "Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins" (Acts 5:31). The incident at Cornelius' house confirmed the giving of repentance was not ONLY to Israel. That is why this report was relevant to the discussion.

Even as He Did Unto Us

" . . . even as He did unto us." Other versions read, "just as He did to us," NKJV "just as He also did to us," NASB "as He gave the Holy Spirit to us," GWN and "exactly as He did to us." PHILLIPS

Men may make valiant attempts to distinguish the giving of the Spirit to those on the day of Pentecost from all other experiences. Peter, however, extends himself to show this was not the case – and his whole argument relates to salvation.

- When the event took place, Peter said, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" (Acts 10:47).
- When reporting the event, He said it moved him to recall the words of the King Himself, "John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 11:16; 1:5). John the Baptist also taught this to the multitudes (Mk 1:8).
- He also said, "God gave them the like gift as He did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 11:17).
- Now, years later, Peter again reports that God gave the people at Cornelius' house "the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us."

He makes no reference to those at Cornelius house speaking with tongues and magnifying God. The reason for this is that this testified to God's acceptance of them. It was more of a sign to Peter and those with him that God had received the Gentiles. The manner in which God did this confirmed that circumcision and conformity to the law of Moses was NOT a requisite to salvation – which is Peter’s whole point.

Now, Peter will make a further observation – one that was not made when he was at the house of Cornelius, or when he originally reported the event to the brethren in Jerusalem. Also, the response of the brethren to his report did not include this observation. However, it is one worthy of much consideration.

THEIR HEARTS WERE PURIFIED BY FAITH

“ 9 And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith.”

It is possible to read of the events that took place at the house of Cornelius, and suppose we are obligated to harmonize it with our own notions of salvation, or with our idea of what the Scriptures teach about being saved. Such an effort will yield certain frustration, moving one to take an extreme position that completely neuters the text, making it pointless. The same God who knows the hearts of men has no interest in how His actions or words fit into our ideas. The purpose of His Word is not to support the teachings or positions of men – whatever they are. It is the business of every believer to see to it that they receive the Word of God AS His Word, and not as a proof text to support what they are saying. You will detect immediately that Peter has no interest in defending a personal position. He is justifying God, and showing that what God did overthrew the error that was being perpetrated by certain from Judaea, and by believers who had been of “the sect of the Pharisees.”

PUT NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN US AND THEM

“And put no difference between us and them . . .” Other versions read, “made no distinction between us and them,” NKJV “making no division between them and us,” BBE “God doesn’t discriminate between Jewish and non-Jewish people,” GWN and “God did the same thing for them that He did for us.” LIVING

Therefore, there is not one gospel for the Jews, and another for the Gentiles. There is not one gift of the Spirit for the apostles, and another for others – for the same word delivered to the apostles concerning the giving of the Spirit is applied to those of the house of Cornelius. Further, this whole matter has to do with the appropriation of salvation, which was the issue being discussed.

In all of this, the gift of the Spirit is the point, not the abilities that He confers at His will. The same Spirit who made the apostles apostles, enables others to fulfill their role in the body. The apostles were placed “first” in the body, but “the same Spirit” works differently in other members of the body (1 Cor 12:4,8,9). In the First Corinthians text, what the various members DID was the point. In our text, the Spirit Himself is the point – and He is not given independently of salvation.

Peter used a similar form of reasoning when accounting for the commonality of faith among all believers, including the apostles. “Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pet 1:1). Other versions read, “a faith of the same kind as ours,” NASB and “a faith of equal standing with ours.” RSV That faith was not of the same “measure” – that is, it was not designed to do the same thing in everyone (Rom 12:3-6). However, it was a “common faith,” not differing in substance, but in function.

Although the salvation wrought at the house of Cornelius was a “common salvation” (Jude 1:3), the faith they enjoyed was a “common faith” (Tit 1:4), and the gift of the Spirit was “like” the one received “at the first” (Acts 11:15) this was an epoch of sorts. The tent of salvation was being “enlarged,” its curtains were being “stretched forth,” its “cords lengthened,” and its “stakes strengthened”

This is also true of the gift of the Holy Spirit. Peter told his hearers on the day of Pentecost that, upon repenting and being baptized, they would receive “the gift of the Holy Spirit” NKJV (Acts 2:38). It was the same Holy Spirit that had seen “shed forth” before their very eyes – a gift that was promised before (Acts 2:33). That gift of the Holy Spirit was the “promise” that was made to their children (Acts 2:39). Peter also said that what the hearers at the house of Cornelius received was this “gift” (Acts 10:46; 11:17).

To my knowledge, there is no place in Scripture that affirms there is more than one “gift of the Holy Spirit.” There are “gifts” imparted by the Spirit (1 Cor 12:4-11), but they are distinguished from the gift of the Holy Spirit Himself, which is common to all who are in Christ Jesus.

PURIFYING THEIR HEARTS BY FAITH

“ . . . purifying their hearts by faith.” Other versions read, “cleansing their hearts by faith,” NASB “making clean their hearts by faith,” BBE “cleansed non-Jewish people through faith,” GWN “cleansed their lives through faith,” LIVING “made their hearts pure,” IE and “cleansed their hearts by faith (by a strong and welcome conviction that Jesus is the Messiah, through Whom we obtain eternal salvation in the kingdom of God).” AMPLIFIED

What does it mean for the heart to be purified or cleansed? Here we deal with the root of cleansing, which is “faith in the operation of God” (Col 2:12). According to the Colossians text, this occurs when a person is buried with Christ in baptism. Yet, the Holy Spirit was given to those in Cornelius’ house before they were baptized. For some, this proves to be an insurmountable problem, but it need not be so.

There is no need to try and rid ourselves of the Cornelius factor. Peter is clearly associating this text with salvation. He does not do so by citing everything that took place at that time. He does not even mention his own preaching, or that the people had gathered to hear words whereby they would be saved. He is providing us an overview, not a detailed picture. He is speaking of causes, not the means through which the causes were made known to the recipients.

Although the salvation wrought at the house of Cornelius was a “common salvation” (Jude 1:3), the faith they enjoyed was a “common faith” (Tit 1:4), and the gift of the Spirit was “like” the one received “at the first” (Acts 11:15) this was an epoch of sorts. The tent of salvation was being “enlarged,” its curtains were being “stretched forth,” its “cords lengthened,” and its “stakes strengthened” (Isa 54:2). The Gentiles were being brought into the household according to the ancient promises (Isa 11:10; 42:6; 49:6,22; 60:3; 66:19; Mal 1:11). This rapid expansion of the church, although it was foretold centuries before, had not yet penetrated the hearts of even the apostles. God worked at the house of Cornelius to substantiate to Peter and his brethren what was happening before their eyes. Repentance was being granted, faith was in motion, hearts were being purified, and they were receiving the Holy Spirit. None of this was unique to the Gentiles. This was not a different salvation, nor had they heard a different Gospel. Their repentance was not unique, nor was their faith. Having witnessed all of this, Peter knew this was not intended to obviate the necessity of baptism. He therefore “commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord” (Acts 10:48). It was no doubt at that time that those in the house of Cornelius became personally aware of their cleansing, for baptism is related to the obtaining of a pure conscience (1 Pet 3:21).

He does, and He cannot work in contradiction of what He says. It is impossible for Him to either speak or work in a manner that opposes His character.

The Time Of Greater Demand

The time of the early church was one of greater demand. Commencing with John the Baptist, the objective was never to merely baptize people. Those who were baptized had to be qualified. On the day of Pentecost, Peter told the people it had to be preceded by repentance (Acts 2:38). Philip told the Ethiopian eunuch that it was necessary for him first to believe with all of his heart (Acts 8:37). In our text, the point was Divine acceptance or approval, based upon God's survey of the heart. Peter would not have people baptized unless he was convinced it was appropriate – and these were Gentiles, whom he had formerly considered “unclean.” Now God confirmed to him and those with him that those Gentiles had been cleansed and made acceptable.

In all of this there were realities that are common to everyone who is saved: faith, cleansing, acceptance, and the receiving of the Holy Spirit – that is, it is a “common salvation.”

The Matter of Tongues

Those with inordinate affection for speaking in tongues, and those with a determination to oppose it, deal extensively with the fact that those at the house of Cornelius were heard to “speak in tongues and magnify God” (Acts 10:46). However, in his initial report of his experience at Cornelius' house, Peter did not even mention that they spoke “in tongues” (Acts 11:5-18). Now, in his second report of the event, he also fails to mention the Gentiles speaking in tongues. This certainly does not constitute a denial that they did, in fact, speak in tongues, for Peter and those with Him heard them so speaking. However, it does mean that this was not a pivotal point in the whole event. I question both the integrity and the motives of those who champion the necessity of speaking in tongues. To me, they are of the same order as those certain men who came down from Judaea, together with the former Pharisees, who said it was necessary to be circumcised.

For those who are simple enough to imagine that baptism is in the same category as circumcision, let them remember that Peter “commanded” those Gentiles to be “baptized in the name of the Lord” (Acts 10:48). Owing to the clear confirmation of Divine acceptance, however, he did not command them to be circumcised. Those who demand a strict sequence of procedure will simply have to wrestle with the text until they can see with greater clarity. Try as you may, you will not find the 1-2-3-4-5 approach to obtaining salvation in Scripture. It is therefore incumbent upon everyone who represents the Lord to see to it they do not violate any word or work of Almighty God – and that includes them all.

God cannot speak in contradiction of what He does, and He cannot work in contradiction of what He says. It is impossible for Him to either speak or work in a manner that opposes His character. Furthermore, there is no valid doctrine or doctrinal emphasis that remotely suggests those possibilities.

WHY DO YOU TEMPT GOD?

“ 10 Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?”

Peter will now reason on the facts of the case, showing the unreasonableness of the attempt to bind circumcision and the keeping of the law upon the Gentile converts. Unlike mere human ideas, the truth of God loses none of its potency when men reason upon it with pure hearts. In fact, the further you delve into the truth, the more, solid it becomes, supporting the soul, bringing confidence, and exposing the folly of error. I am greatly disappointed that so few leading people in Christian circles find joy in reasoning upon the truth. Too often the locus of their reasoning is the circumference of their own opinion.

There is something else to be seen here. Peter is basing his reasoning upon what God DID, not what He said. He can do this because God never works in contradiction of what He says. That is, in His working at the house of Cornelius He did what He had said He was committed to doing. He saved those of humble and contrite spirit (Psa 34:18), focused on those who trembled at His word (Isa 66:2), and caused those who heard to live (Isa 55:3). It goes without saying that it is not wise to question the way God does about fulfilling His word.

WHY DO YOU TEMPT GOD?

“Now therefore why tempt ye God . . .” Other versions read, “why do you test God,” NKJV “put God to the test,” NASB “try to test God,” NIV “make trial of God,” RSV “challenging God,” NLT “going to correct God,” LIVING “try an experiment upon God,” WEYMOUTH and “strain the patience of God.” PHILLIPS

This is a most arresting text – both sobering and challenging. It must be remembered that it is written, “Ye shall not tempt the LORD your God, as ye tempted Him in Massah” (Deut 6:16). The event of reference took place when Israel was journeying through the wilderness en route to Canaan. It is written that they pitched their tents in Rephidim, “and there was no water for the people to drink.” Discontent with the situation, “the people did chide with Moses, and said, Give us water that we may drink. And Moses said unto them, Why chide ye with me? wherefore do ye tempt the LORD ?” (Ex 17:2). They “murmured against Moses,” asking him why he brought them out of Egypt to kill them with thirst. Moses cried out to the Lord saying, “What shall I do unto this people? they be almost ready to stone me” (Ex 17:4). It was there that Moses was directed by God to smite a rock with his rod. God promised him, “there shall come water out of it, that the people may drink” (Ex 17:7). It is written of that occasion, “And he called the name of the place Massah, and Meribah, because of the chiding of the children of Israel, and because they tempted the LORD , saying, Is the LORD among us, or not?” (Ex 17:7). It was in view of this that Moses, prior to his death, said “You shall not put the LORD your God to the test, as you tested Him at Massah” NASB (Deut 6:16).

What does it mean to “tempt God,” or put Him “to the test?” You may recall that Jesus quoted this text to the devil when he tempted the Lord to jump off the pinnacle the Temple, trusting that God would send His angels to rescue Him (Matt 4:6-7).

Behind this solemn warning is the fact that God has an absolute hatred for sin. This hatred is so pronounced that sin constitutes a testing of God’s longsuffering. It is like forcing Him to confront and deal with what is the very antithesis of His nature. His wrath is against “all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men,” and there is absolutely no question about it. There has been measured and relatively minor outbreaks of this wrath throughout history. I say relatively as compared to the ultimate outpouring of His wrath, when Jesus returns in glory. Men were introduced to the wrath of God breaking out against sin in the flood of Noah’s day (Gen 7:21). It was seen in the destruction of Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim, sparing only Zoar, in which Lot sought refuge (Gen 19:23-24; 29:23).

There is such a thing as provoking God to anger – that is the result of tempting the Lord to the point of provocation. When Corinth was attempting to eat from the table of demons and the table of the Lord at the same time, Paul wrote to them, “Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than He?” (1 Cor 10:2). They were tempting God, and that was a very foolish thing to do!

In their attempts to bind circumcision and keeping the law of Moses upon the Gentile converts, the men who had caused this council were tempting God. They were seeking to impose things upon the Gentiles that God did not require. They were treating the household of God as though it was their own. They were conducting themselves as lord’s over the heritage of God – touching the apple of His eye (Zech 2:8). Consequently, they were in a most dangerous position.

A YOKE THEY COULD NOT BEAR

“ . . . to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?"

The people of God are already called to take up their cross daily, dying to self and the world (Lk 9:23). In addition they are to take Christ's yoke upon themselves, getting under it with Him, and engaging in His work. It is within this yoke that we are taught by Jesus, coming to know the Father and appropriating wisdom and spiritual understanding (Matt 11:29-30).

As if this was not enough, some were not attempting to put an additional yoke upon the neck of the disciples, increasing their load, and offering no corresponding relief. This was the yoke of Law – the Law that is appropriately called “the ministration of death” and “of condemnation” (2 Cor 3:7,9). It was a yoke of rules, laws, and ordinances –the yoke of DOING, that was not accompanied with the spirit of power, love, and a sound mind. It was a law that did not demand faith (Gal 3:12), did not clear the conscience (Heb 9:9), and gave no access to the grace of God.

It may be countered that these men were sincere, and were really attempting to do what was right. And, indeed, I do not doubt that this was the case. But that did not alter the fact that they were tempting God in seeking to impose an unbearable yoke upon His people. They were trying God's patience and longsuffering with their action – provoking Him.

By saying neither their fathers nor themselves were able to bear the yoke of the Law, Peter meant that they were unable to fulfill it. After they had extended their best and most consistent effort, the verdict was, “There is none righteous,

Such people are tempting God – provoking Him to anger because they have usurped His Son, who has all power in heaven and earth. Such teachers are to cease and desist from tempting God.

no, not one : There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one ” (Rom 3:10-12). Not only is the Law “not made for a righteous man” (1 Tim 1:9), it cannot produce a righteous man, “for if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain” (Gal 2:21). The truth of the matter is that the person who chooses to live by Law has no perceived need of Jesus – and Jesus' death is not effective for him as long as he chooses that course.

At least these men sought to impose the law of Moses upon believers – not “the tradition of the elders” (Matt 15:2). What can be said of those who seek to impose the rules of men upon believers today? They have stooped beneath the men of our text, choosing inferior laws. What may be said of those who recommend and promote rules arranged by men, yet which are guaranteed by them to resolve problems caused by sin? What can be said of them? What of those who impose concepts of praise and worship upon the church that God has not imposed. What may be said of those who bind their ideas of music, or singing, or other forms of expression upon the saints? Such people are tempting God – provoking Him to anger because they have usurped His Son, who has all power in heaven and earth. Such teachers are to cease and desist from tempting God. Provoking the Lord is certainly not wise. It is a betrayal of the worst kind of ignorance. As it is written, “Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than He?” (1 Cor 10:22).

SAVED THROUGH THE GRACE OF GOD

“ 11 But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.”

Here Peter reasons in a most unusual way – at least to those who are not acquainted with Kingdom manners. Rather than seeking to correct the thinking of the new Gentile believers, he endeavors to correct the wayward thinking of some of the believers in the Jerusalem church.

WE BELIEVE

“But we believe . . .” Other versions read, “No! We believe,” NIV “On the contrary, we believe,” NRSV “But we have faith,” BBE “We certainly believe,” GWN “In fact, we believe,” WILLIAMS and “Surely the fact is that.” PHILLIPS

This is not the statement of a creedal persuasion; i.e. “Here is what our group believes.” This is the confession of an inner and solid persuasion. This is something buttressed by both “substance” and “evidence” (Heb 11:1). This is a conviction concerning which there is no question or doubt.

SAVED THROUGH THE GRACE OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST

“ . . . that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.”

Under the circumstances, and considering that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation “to the Jew first, and also to the Greek” (Rom 1:16), one might imagine that Peter would have said just the opposite – i.e. “THEY will be saved through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ even as WE .” However, this is not the manner of his reasoning. With the skill of a spiritual tactician, he raises the thinking of his hearers outside of the confinement of traditional Judaistic thinking. Peter knows that the propensity to think in terms of doing, as opposed to believing, is a fundamental weakness. Man’s doing caused the fall, but it is not the means of his recovery! Doing – man’s doing – is not the principle activity in New Covenant, although it is involved. In the matter of salvation, Christ’s doing is the fundamental activity, and believing is man’s fundamental responsibility. Rather than freeing man from the obligation of doing, believing raises both the possibility and quality of the doing of men. When “the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ” is fundamental, doing the will of God is not only possible, it becomes the preference and driving compulsion of men. When there is little understanding of the grace of God, doing is attended with a greater degree of difficulty, and sin is given an advantage.

Normally, we think of grace in association with God the Father (Lk 2:40; Acts 11:23; 13:43; 14:26; 15:40; 20:24; Rom 5:15; 1 Cor 1:4; 3:10; 15:10; 2 Cor 1:12; 2 Cor 6:1; 8:1; 2 Cor 9:14; Gal 2:21; Eph 3:2,7; Col 1:6; Tit 2:11; Heb 2:9; 12:15; 1 Pet 4:10; 5:12; Jude 1:4).

There is also reference to “the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Thess 1:12).

However, there are also references to “the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ” (Rom 16:20,24; 1 Cor 16:23; 2 Cor 8:9; 13:14; Gal 6:18; Phil 4:23; 1 Thess 5:28; 2 Thess 3:18; Phile 1:25; Rev 22:21), and to the “grace of Christ” (Gal 1:5). This accents that, in redemption, Jesus is the Means through which the grace of God is realized, or experienced.

This is only the sixth time the word “grace” has been mentioned in the book of Acts. The first use of the word “grace” is specifically said to have been associated with obtaining salvation. It is apparent to me that there was a growing perception of the significance of the grace of God in redemption. Previous references to “grace” are as follows.

- “And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all ” (Acts 4:33).

- “Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God , was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord” (Acts 11:23).

- “Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God ” (Acts 13:43).

- “Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord, which gave testimony unto the word of his grace , and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands” (Acts 14:3).

- “And thence sailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled” (Acts 14:26).

It seems to me that as the church progressed, there was a growing perception of the prominence of the grace of God in salvation. Acts 18:27 states that those who believed did so through grace: “And when he (Apollos) was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him: who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace .” Paul confessed to the elders of Ephesus that he had been directed by Jesus to preach “the gospel of the grace of God” (Acts 20:24). When he left them, he commended them “to God, and to the word of His grace” (Acts 20:32). Conceptually, there was a keen awareness of the grace of God, but the understanding of its prominence in the life of faith grew the more men were consciously involved in the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.

By comparison, the epistles contain one hundred and fourteen references to grace. James contains one reference to God giving “more grace” (4:6). Jude contains one reference to men corrupting “the grace of our God” (1:4). Second John contains one reference to “grace” (1:3). Peter’s epistles contain ten references to “grace,” excluding a reference to “the grace of life” in 1 Peter 3:7 (1 Pet 1:2,10,13; 4:10; 5:5,10,12; 2 Pet 1:2; 3:18). The epistles written by Paul contain ninety-nine references to “grace,” eleven of which are found in Hebrews (for those who doubt Hebrews was written by Paul). The book of the Revelation contains two references to “grace” – one being the last verse of the Bible (1:4; 22:21). The phrase “grace of God” is not mentioned in the Bible until Luke 2:40. Of the thirty-nine times “grace” is used from Genesis through Malachi, the burden of the references refer to finding favor with God in the normalities of life. There is no specified association of “grace” with being “saved” until our text, Acts 15:11.

The word “grace” is mentioned 131 times in the New Testament Scriptures – 128 are to God’s grace. Four of them are found in the Gospels, which all apply to Jesus Himself (Lk 2:40; John 1:14,16,16,17). It is mentioned ten times in the book of Acts (4:33; 11:23; 13:43; 14:3,26; 15:11,40; 18:27; 20:24,32). Including the book of Hebrews, 99 of the 128 references to “grace” are made by Paul. Excluding the book of Hebrews (8 times), the percentage is 71%.

“GRACE” ASSOCIATED WITH JESUS AND SALVATION

The Gospels 4 times

Acts 10 times

Paul’s writings 99 times

Peter’s writings 10 times

Jude 1 time

James 1 time

John’s writings 3 times

I have taken the time to give this brief review of the references to the grace of God to confirm the insight that was given to Peter at this time. This is the first time in the Scriptures that such a clear and succinct statement is made concerning salvation being by “grace” – and it is tied directly to “the Lord Jesus Christ.” This also confirms it was at a critical juncture in the history of the church, when the nature and extensiveness of salvation was being opened more fully to the church. The acceptance of the Gentiles was an epoch in history, and its association with the grace of God was a critical matter. Peter's statement in this verse is the first clear and unquestionable association of the salvation of God with His grace. It is the first time anything is said to have been done "through" or "by" God's grace. To me, this underscores the remarkable things happening at this time.

It ought to be noted that to this very day there remains a veil over the hearts of men concerning the grace of God. Precious few people see it as a means through which God actually does something. Too often, it is not associated with Divine accomplishments, but is rather viewed as God overlooking the human condition. Grace has to do with changing the human condition, not tolerating or overlooking it. Paul accounted for the remarkable change he experienced when he said, "But by the grace of God I am what I am: and His grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I labored more abundantly than they all : yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me" (1 Cor 15:10). People who remain under the grip of sin, or are unproductive in the Kingdom of God are out of order speaking about the grace of God. God's grace is always related to God doing something, not to Him tolerating or enduring something. It has to do with bringing people higher, not leaving them in a low estate, and enduring their deficiencies. Grace changes and empowers people, not leaving them as they were. Where there is no change, grace has not been received.

THEY KEPT SILENCE AND LISTENED TO BARNABAS AND PAUL

" 12 Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them."

It will be apparent that there was more influence among these people than that of Peter. He had, indeed, spoken truth, but the power of his words was not owing to his person, but to his Lord. God stands behind those who speak the truth insightfully, and are bold to stand in "the defense of the Gospel" (Phil 1:17). Where the speaking is discerning and the people possess honest and good hearts, controversy will be brought to an end. That such is the case is abundantly evident in this text.

There is something of importance to be seen here. The substance and manner of the teaching that had taken place to this time did not contain a lot of direct references to the grace of God. There is no record of any extensive exposition of the grace of God.

ALL THE MULTITUDE KEPT SILENCE

"Then all the multitude kept silence . . ." Other versions read, "the whole assembly became silent," NIV "all the people were quiet," BBE "the whole assembly kept still," CJB "the whole assembly fell, silent," CSB "all the multitude held their peace," DOUAY "Everyone listened quietly," NLT "there was no further discussion," LIVING "the whole assembly remained silent," WEYMOUTH and "by this he quieted the whole congregation." WILLIAMS

Until Peter had spoken, the whole assembly was anything but silent. Until that time there had been "much disputing," or "debate." NASB However, the hearts of the people were ahead of their minds, and their love for the Lord exceeded devotion to their tradition, which had not been clearly overturned by their view of the text of Scripture.

Even though Moses and the Prophets did not elucidate on the grace of God, John the Baptist said no word about it, and the Lord Jesus Christ Himself made no direct reference to it, there appeared to be a prevailing sense of its reality among these people. Within the book of Acts, there has, to this point, been no record of delineation, or exposition, of God's grace. We read about God's grace being on the people (4:33), seeing the grace of God (11:23), an exhortation to continue in the grace of God (13:43), testimony being given to the "word of His grace" (14:3), and being recommended to the grace of God (14:26). Now, Peter has said for the first recorded time that we are "saved through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ."

There is something of importance to be seen here. The substance and manner of the teaching that had taken place to this time did not contain a lot of direct references to the grace of God. There is no record of any extensive exposition of the grace of God. Certainly, at the very best, Moses and the Prophets only provided veiled references to grace. John the Baptist, so far as the record is concerned did not even mention the word. The recorded words of Jesus contain not a single reference to “grace.” For those enamored of academia, such circumstances would introduce great difficulty for those hearing the words, “we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved.” However, this “multitude” was not stymied by the words of Peter, and no group rose up to dispute with him about that statement. Why was this so?

There are at least two factors that caused the flaming controversy that had been raging to cease with the words of Peter. One of them was NOT a profound academic understanding of the grace of God. Moses provided no such understanding nor did the prophets, nor John the Baptist. Jesus displayed the grace of God in His words and deeds, not by a scholastic definition or dissertation. However, the nature and effectiveness of grace is woven into the fabric of salvation. Divine favor and love are evident in the nature of salvation. Even though a person may not have heard much about “grace,” there is a sense of it that is integral to the Gospel itself, and to the experience of salvation.

Those who continue to argue concerning the necessity of the deeds of the Law after they have heard about the grace of God only confirm the hardness of their own hearts. When Peter clearly said we are “saved by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ,” it was a confirming word to those who had experienced salvation. That was the first time of Scriptural record that such words were ever uttered! The fact that they quelled the disputation among that vast body of people confirms that they had really tasted of the grace of God, even though it may not have been clear to them.

The words Peter were expertly spoken, reminding me of a statement

Much of the ongoing contention that exists in the professed Christian community is traceable to a fundamental ignorance of the Scriptures, and the questionable commitment of the people to the Lord. If there ever comes a time when those two mitigating factors are resolved, significant progress will be made in the arena of religious disputation and controversy.

made by Solomon: “The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, which are given from one shepherd” (Eccl 12:11). The Amplified Bible reads, “The words of the wise are like prodding goads, and firmly fixed [in the mind] like nails are the collected sayings which are given [as proceeding] from one Shepherd.” In this text, the Lord was speaking to His people – and they quieted themselves to listen.

A Word About Our Times

Our times are not at all like those being chronicled in our text. Unlike those ancient days, our times are not marked by a clear proclamation of the truth – a proclamation that pointedly confronts religious error and the traditions of men. Also, there is a glaring absence of a strong devotion to the Lord and His Word, together with a staggering ignorance of the text of Scripture itself. Much of the ongoing contention that exists in the professed Christian community is traceable to a fundamental ignorance of the Scriptures, and the questionable commitment of the people to the Lord. If there ever comes a time when those two mitigating factors are resolved, significant progress will be made in the arena of religious disputation and controversy.

THEY GAVE AUDIENCE TO BARNABAS AND PAUL

“ . . . and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them.” Other versions read, “and listened to,” NKJV “they were listening to,” NASB “they hearkened to,” ASV “they heard,” DOUAY “listened quietly,” NLT

“hearkened to,” RWB “were hearkening,” YLT and “they listened attentively.” AMPLIFIED

The word “gave audience” are translated from a single Greek word (ἡκούω) which means: “to attend to, consider what is or has been said . . . understand, perceive the sense of what is said,” THAYER and “heed, listen to, understand, learn of, give someone a hearing,” GINGRICH

The marvelous capacity to listen, weigh, and discern what is being said is fast becoming a lost art in our time. Our generation is largely a thoughtless one. This has given rise to much frivolity. Entertainment has now become so dominant in religious circles that there is scarcely anything said that requires concentrated hearing or understanding. This was not the case in our text. After hearing Peter’s insightful words concerning salvation by God’s grace being common to both the Gentile and the Jew, the minds of the people were settled down. The fire of controversy ceased to burn. The agitation of sectarianism and prejudice was no longer present. Now, the people were ready to hear the report of the working of the Lord – a working that would confirm that salvation is by grace, and that circumcision and the keeping of the Law are not requirements for salvation.

Barnabas and Paul Report

Now, with the hearts and minds focused on Barnabas and Paul, they declare “what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them.” Other versions read, “how many miracles and wonders God had worked through them among the Gentiles,” NKJV “relating what signs and wonders God had done through them among the Gentiles,” NASB “telling about the miraculous signs and wonders God had done among the Gentiles through them,” NIV and “rehearsed what signs and wonders God had performed through them among the Gentiles.” AMPLIFIED

Notice the care with which this report is given. Barnabas and Paul did not report the miracles and wonders that they did, but the ones God had wrought through them. They did not shine the spotlight of attention upon their activity, but on what the Lord had done through them. They had already declared to the brethren at Antioch, “all that God had done with them” during the mission to which they were called from that very city (Acts 14:27). When they later arrived in Jerusalem they also “declared all things that God had done with them” to the church, the apostles, and the elders (Acts 15:4). Now, to the special assembly that had been convened to consider what was to be taught to the Gentiles, they provide even more details concerning the working of the Lord, “relating what signs and wonders God had done through them among the Gentiles.” NASB

“Oh how the soul hung upon the ear; how the countenances brightened, while they related their progress from city to city, from province to province; how the word of the Lord had been glorified, and how miracles had been effected by his arm. How princes and nobles, and multitudes of the people had been converted without either number or record; and how the unbelieving jews in all places had stirred up the misguided populace to outrage, imprison, and stone them for the sake of Christ. But in all storms and conflicts, they were more than conquerors through him that loved them. All this was a gentile glory, reflected back on the church of the firstborn.”

Joseph Sutcliffe, 1834

- On the island of Crete, Paul had struck a sorcerer blind who sought to turn a listener away from the faith (Acts 13:9-11).
- Paul and Barnabas had remained “a long time” in Iconium, “speaking boldly in the Lord, which gave testimony unto the word of His grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands” (Acts 14:3).
- In Lystra, Paul had healed a man who was “cripple from his mother’s womb” (Acts 14:9-10).

- When Paul was stoned and left for dead outside the city of Lystra, the disciples stood around him, and he rose up and went into the city (Acts 14:19-20).

Thus, the required testimonies have been given by those whom the Head of the church Himself had involved in the work. Peter, Barnabas, and Paul were all solicited and empowered for the work from heaven. Their work was not initiated by the church, but a special call was issued to Peter (Acts 10:9-20), as well as Barnabas and Paul (Acts 13:2). Both calls were to minister to the Gentiles. Both missions were blessed by the Lord with extensive results, being confirmed by the Head of the church Himself. Both were spiritual epochs. Now, all of the required facts are now in.

CONCLUSION

The book of Acts is a record of Kingdom epochs – events orchestrated from heaven that turned the history of the world. Consider them! They all postulate an exalted and reigning Christ, and a Divine purpose that is being executed with exacting precision. All of heaven is involved. God the Father, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit, the holy angels, and even a great cloud of witnesses who are referred to as “just men made perfect” (Heb 12:23). The work is being driven by an eternal purpose, conceived before the world began. And, everything is working together for the good of those who love God and are the called according to His purpose.

Ponder some of the epochal things that are recorded in this book. The consideration of them has a sanctifying effect upon the soul. They tug at the heart and challenge the mind, provoking one to introspection as well as contemplation. They all confirm that Christ is, indeed, reigning in glory, administering “the day of salvation,” and “bringing many sons to glory.”

- The ascension of Jesus (1:9-11).
- The choosing of an apostle to fill the bishopric vacated by Judas (1:15-26).
- The day of Pentecost, and 3,000 being added to the church (2:1-41).
- The garnering of 5,000 souls in Solomon’s porch (4:4).
- Great grace given to the church in the time of opposition (4:33).
- The intervention of heaven against corruption (5:1-11).
- The miraculous release of Peter and John from prison (5:18-20).
- The stoning of Stephen, and the consequent spread of the Word (7:54-8:4).
- The conversion of the city of Samaria (8:5-25).
- The conversion of the Ethiopian eunuch while en route to Ethiopia (8:26-38).
- The calling and conversion of Saul of Tarsus (9:3-20).
- The conversion of the household and others at the home of Cornelius 10:1-48).
- The miraculous release of Peter from prison (12:4-17).
- Herod is stricken dead after being lifted up with pride (12:21-24)
- Barnabas and Saul are called to a special mission, now being reported (13:1-2).

This is unquestionably a book that chronicles the work of the enthroned and empowered Christ from heaven. It is a record of Jesus working through those who have been reconciled to God and are living by faith. It also confirms the ultimate overthrow of inimical forces, corroborating the inferiority of the powers of darkness. There is, indeed, great consolation and encouragement to be had by ingesting and cogitating on the events that are reported in the Acts of the apostles – God working through them.

DEALING WITH TEACHERS OF CIRCUMCISION, #2

THE RESPONSE OF JAMES

“ 15:13 And after they had held their peace, James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me: 14 Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. 15 And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, 16 After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up: 17 That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. 18 Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world. 19 Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God: 20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood. 21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day.” (Acts 11:13-21)

INTRODUCTION

After hearing the reports of Peter and Paul and Barnabas, the matter is seen clearly by James, a “pillar” in the Jerusalem church – even though he was not an apostle. He correlates what the Lord had done with what the Lord had promised He would do through the prophets. Not only does he perceive the whole matter, but he is able to articulate it in a manner that will “keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace,” maintaining the proper focus, and yielding no ground to the flesh.

Right here is where the spiritually mature are separated from the novices and inexperienced in things pertaining to life and godliness. A satisfactory resolution of the problem taken up in Jerusalem could not be achieved by education, natural aptitude, a pooling of analytical skills, or some other form of “the wisdom of men.” Just as in the work of recovering those who have been overtaken in a fault, those involved in the solution must be “spiritual,” or acquainted with, and discerning of, spiritual realities. On this matter Paul wrought, “Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted” versions read, “you who have received the Spirit,” NRSV “you who are of the Spirit,” and BBE “you who are godly.” NLT Most of the version s use the word “spiritual.” In this case, a “spiritual” person is one who thinks in concert with the Spirit, which thinking is directed by the Spirit. While the circumstances in our text differ slightly from those in Galatians, the principles remain the same. A position had been taken that stated circumcision and keeping the law of Moses was required for Gentile believers. However devoted those advocates were to that position, it was wholly wrong. Some had apparently sensed it, and therefore sought measures through which the facts of the matter could be discerned and substantiated.

This is a sterling example of how the Lord works in and through those who are yielded to Him. The disciples at Antioch did not pray for illumination. It appears as though they sensed that God had already spoken to this issue – it was just that they did not see it. They had the spiritual coinage required for the resolution of this challenge, and therefore they went about in a godly manner to find that coinage – like the woman who swept her house diligently for her lost coin (Lk 15:8). Many professing Christians remain in the dark about critical matters, unable to determine what is right, simply because they have not pursued the truth as they ought. That, of course, can very well be a symptom of not receiving a love for the truth – a condition that will eventually, if not corrected, lead to “strong delusion” and consequent damnation (2 Thess 2:10-11). In order to produce sobriety among the saints, the Spirit has made known the priority of spiritual understanding, comprehension, and sound doctrine.

- THE TRANSFORMING EFFECTS OF SPIRITUAL KNOWLEDGE. “And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind , that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God” (Rom 12:2).
- THE MANDATE OF MATURE UNDERSTANDING. “Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men ” (1 Cor 14:20).

If, prior to being in Christ, the state of alienation from God was produced BY being ignorant of Him, what can be said of extended and prolonged ignorance concerning His ways after we have come into Christ?

THE OBJECTIVE OF BEING ABLE TO COMPREHEND. “That He would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God” (Eph 3:16-19).

- THE ALIENATING EFFECTS OF IGNORANCE. “This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind, having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart” (Eph 4:17-18).

• THE DIVINE DEMAND TO HAVE UNDERSTANDING. “Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is” (Eph 5:17).

• A REVEALED OBJECTIVE. “For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9).

THINGS TO BE PONDERED

If, prior to being in Christ, the state of alienation from God was produced BY being ignorant of Him, what can be said of extended and prolonged ignorance concerning His ways after we have come into Christ? What should be our view of preaching and teaching that does not produce spiritual understanding in those who receive it? What about theological schools that graduate people they say are to serve the Lord, yet remain in a state of fundamental ignorance concerning God, His will, and His great salvation? How are we to assess a theological system that can be embraced, yet must be overcome to obtain a mature understanding?

Precisely what can be said of a system of religious thought that causes the apostolic writings to actually sound strange? How does one go about justifying such a system? How can it be possible that a person can be converted by a doctrine that does not further a mature spiritual understanding? How can it be established that such a thing is even possible?

When Paul received news of the spiritual retrogression that was taking place in Corinth, he knew that something abnormal was taking place. He knew that neither Christ Himself nor the Gospel that makes Him known contributes to such a condition. He concluded that they had embraced “another Jesus,” “another gospel,” and “another Spirit” (2 Cor 11:4). When the Galatians began to embrace an erroneous view of salvation, Paul knew they had been taught something false, and that their teachers had bewitched them, turned them away from Christ, and induced a fall from grace (Gal 1:6-9; 3:1). When Jude wrote to the saints, he earnestly desired to speak of the “common salvation,” but he could not do so because of the teaching to which they were being subjected. Ungodly men had “crept in unawares” among them. They spoke of things concerning which they knew nothing, followed the way of Cain, ran after the way of Balaam who prophesied for gain, spoke arrogantly, and flattered people (Jude 1:4,10-16).

Because of the love of the truth and commitment to Jesus that was present in the church at Antioch, they were not thrown off course by the teachers from Judea. Because of the spirit that prevailed among the disciples in Jerusalem, the misconception that was voiced by some former Pharisees – themselves believers – did not cause the disciples there to be misdirected.

These very things could have taken place in the church at Antioch if they had responded to the Judaistic teachers as churches today respond to the erroneous doctrines to which they are subjected.

When those within the church give heed to what they are taught, yet remain in spiritual infancy, or regress to carnal ways of thinking, they have not been taught “the truth” as it “is in Jesus” (Eph 4:21). It simply is not possible to embrace the truth and find it failing to promote and maintain spiritual maturity. The truth is a sanctifying agent (John 17:17,19), and the love of it contributes to spiritual advancement (2 Thess 2:10-11).

THE IMPACT OF HERESIES

“Heresies” are more than wrong sayings or teachings – although they are surely that! “Heresies” are teachings that divide. The word “heresies” is a transliteration of the Greek word ai`re,seij (haire-seis). The lexical meaning of the word is, “a body of men separating themselves from others and following their own tenets . . . dissensions arising from diversity of opinions and aims ” THAYER “of a separatist group characterized by loyalty to a certain school of thought and practice,” FRIBERG “religious party; division, faction; false party or teaching,” UBS and “division or group based upon different doctrinal opinions and/or loyalties and hence by implication in certain contexts an unjustified party or group.” LOUW-NIDA

Through the Spirit, Paul taught that there was an objective served by the introduction of heresies – a kind of appointed ministry that they have. “For there must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you” (1 Cor 11:19). The Amplified Bible reads, “ For doubtless there have to be factions or parties among you in order that they who are genuine and of approved fitness may become evident and plainly recognized among you.”

In our text, because of the love of the truth, purity of heart, and an acquaintance with Scripture, the heresy will be aborted, and all will come into accord. It ought to be obvious that where this does not happen, a different kind of people are present. In such a case, the heresies are embraced by those who are not genuine or approved. I realize this is a hard saying, but it is a revealed truth.

LIVED OUT IN OUR TEXT

These realities are being lived out in our text. Because of the love of the truth and commitment to Jesus that was present in the church at Antioch, they were not thrown off course by the teachers from Judea. Because of the spirit that prevailed among the disciples in Jerusalem, the misconception that was voiced by some former Pharisees – themselves believers – did not cause the disciples there to be misdirected. Nor, indeed, was it the occasion of starting a new group of disciples, or church, that championed the teaching of circumcision and the keeping of the Law.

What, then, has caused the staggering number of divisions within the professed church of our day? How can there be so many differing and contradicting schools of theological thought – bodies of teaching that are glaringly at odds with one another? How can these things be?

It is the direct result of spiritual infancy – and that is the most favorable view. One of the blessed conditions that is produced when men grow up into Christ is that they can no longer be pulled aside or caused to go astray by erroneous teachings. Paul said it this way: “. . . until we all attain to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a mature man , to the measure of the stature which belongs to the fulness of Christ. As a result , we are no longer to be children, tossed here and there by waves, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the trickery of men, by craftiness in deceitful scheming; but speaking the truth in love, we are to grow up in all aspects into Him , who is the head, even Christ” NASB (Eph 4:13-15).

Paul goes on to say that the growth of reference results in the whole body edifying itself in love: “from whom the whole body, being fitted and held together by that which every joint supplies, according to the proper working of each individual part, causes the growth of the body for the building up of itself in love” (Eph 4:16). This “building up,” or “edifying,” KJV comes from the contribution of mature and insightful brethren. Jesus works through them to direct the thinking and reasoning of His people.

This process is being lived out in our text. Those who were more mature in Christ contributed their insights, bringing edification to the body, and enabling them to draw proper conclusions, thereby providing appropriate direction. First Peter spoke, then Paul and Barnabas spoke, and now James will speak. It is in this manner that the Lord directed the church.

AN ILLUMINATING TEXT

The text before us also, as light is designed to do, illuminates the religious pretension of our time, which leads men to continually live with division without addressing it with the mind of Christ. Even though the Divine mandate is, “that there be no divisions among you” (1 Cor 1:10), some have taken an approach to divisions that actually allows them to continue. They talk, but without any satisfactory resolution concerning what divides them. In this, they differ significantly from those in our text. Whatever they may have, it is not what the brethren in our text possessed.

There is much food for the soul in this report, and we all do well to take it into our hearts and muse upon the things that are made known, and the reasoning behind them. The manner of reasoning that is displayed by James gives us an index of what it means to “comprehend.” Comprehension does not always come by means of a special and independent revelation – as when Peter perceived Jesus was the Christ the Son of the Living God (Matt 16:16-17). Sometimes it is brought by means of a godly analysis, and the correlation of the reports of the works of God with what He has said.

This is the marvelous process that is reported in our text. It is obvious that this requires a submitted and godly mind and heart.

AFTER THEY HAD HELD THEIR PEACE, JAMES ANSWERED

“ 15:13 And after they had held their peace, James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me . . .”

The entire tone of the Jerusalem assembly now changes. There “had been much disputing,” or “debate,” NASB with various statements apparently being made that were intended to buttress contradicting views. In due time, the audience listened to the report and reasoning of Peter, and then to the testimony of Paul and Barnabas. They had all been involved in the conversion of Gentiles, and their involvement had been directed by the Lord. They did not deliver a scholastic presentation of the various meanings of words, contextual studies, and the likes. The quality of their presentation, and the response of the hearers, speak of the nature of that solemn assembly.

AFTER THEY HAD HELD THEIR PEACE

“And after they had held their peace . . .” Other versions read, “after they had become silent,” NKJV “after they had stopped speaking,” NASB “when they had finished,” NIV “when they had come to an end,” BBE “after a time of silence,” IE and “silence again followed their words.” PHILLIPS

Notice the orderliness of the assembly, fulfilling the Pauline word, “Let all things be done decently and in order” (1 Cor 14:40). All of the facts were in, and a time of weighing and

There was apparently nothing more that could profitably be said on either side of the question put before them: should the Gentiles be circumcised and keep the law of Moses? Those who are wise know when it is time to cease presenting arguments and begin to draw some sanctified conclusions.

deliberation now took place. Although the words were not actually said, the spirit of Paul’s admonition to Timothy was present: “Consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things” (2 Tim 2:7).

There was apparently nothing more that could profitably be said on either side of the question put before them: should the Gentiles be circumcised and keep the law of Moses? Those who are wise know when it is time to cease presenting arguments and begin to draw some sanctified conclusions.

When theological issues remain unsettled for years, even centuries, someone that is involved does not have an honest and good heart. Someone is not seeking the truth. Someone is not interested in the will of the Lord. Godly sincerity will not divide people. The love of the truth does not set men at variance with one another. The salvation of God does not promote contention among those who are participating in it.

What Has Been Said to This Point

What do the hearers have to work with? What words have they heard? Here are some of the things they will process in the realm of godly thought.

- They had heard “the things that God had done” through Paul and Barnabas (15:4).
- Certain former Pharisees had affirmed of the Gentiles, “That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses” (Acts 15:5).
- Peter reminded them that God chose him to be the one through whom the Gentiles believed (15:7).
- Peter reported that God gave the Holy Spirit to the Gentiles who heard him speak (15:8).
- Peter said God purified the hearts of those Gentiles “by faith” (15:9).
- Peter challenged the notion that they should put a yoke upon the neck of the Gentiles that neither they nor their fathers were able to bear (15:10).
- Peter affirmed that the Jews would be saved “through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ,” just as the Gentiles (15:11).
- Barnabas and Paul declared “what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them” (15:12).

After a period of silence, it was apparent that no one had any further input into the matter at hand. James will now present his reasoning on the matter, speaking as a master of the assembly (Eccl 12:11). It will be apparent that the Lord Jesus, the “Head of the body,” is speaking through James.

Now we have a critical issue being raised that pertains to the salvation of God. The apostles (we presume all of them) are present, and have heard the factual reports of the Lord’s working among the Gentiles. The report has not come from mere observers, but from those who were actually involved in the work.

JAMES ANSWERED

“James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me . . .” Other versions read, “listen to me,” NKJV “give ear to me,” BBE and “hear what I have to say.” CJB

James draws the attention of the brethren to what he is going to say. They have heard the view of those believers who were from the sect of the Pharisees. They have heard the testimony of Peter. They have also heard the report of Paul and Barnabas. Now, it is time for some godly conclusions to be drawn. There must be an exit from the room of controversy into the holy of holies, where sound conclusions can be reached.

The word “answered” is translated from the Greek word avpekri,qh . The word means “to give an answer to a question proposed, to answer.” THAYER James, after weighing what had been said, gives an assessment of the situation. Technically, he is not an apostle –not one of the original twelve. It is assumed that the other ten (not counting Peter), were present, excluding James the brother of John, who had been martyred (Acts 12:2). This being true, it means that 1 John, one of the inner circle of disciples, was present (Matt 17:1; Mk 5:37), together with 2 Andrew, 3 Philip, 4 Bartholomew, 5 Thomas, 6 Matthew, 7 James the son of Alpheus, 8 Lebbaeus [surnamed Thaddeus], 9 Simon the Canaanite, and 10 Matthias [who replaced Judas] (Matt 10:22-4; Acts 1:26). Of “the twelve apostles,” only Peter, James, and John are mentioned in Scripture after Acts 1:13, where the eleven are named. James is mentioned once more in reference to his martyrdom by Herod (Acts 12:2). Prior to James' death, "the twelve" are mentioned in Acts 6:2 and 7:8. "The apostles" as a group, excluding Paul, are referenced in numerous texts (Acts 1:2,37,42,43; 4:33,35,36,37; 5:2,12, 18,34, 40; 6:6; 8:1,14, 18; 9:27; 11:1; 14:4, 4; 15:2, 4,6,22, 23,33; 16:4; Rom 16:7; 1 Cor 15:7; Gal 1:19; 1 Thess 2:6; 2 Pet 3:2; Jude 1:17). The expression "apostles," as including Paul, is also used (1 Cor 4:9; 15:9; Eph 2:20).

Following John 21:25, we do not have a single word spoken, or deed done of any individual apostle except Peter and John. There are references to their joint activity (Acts 2:37,42,43; 4:33,35,36, 37; 5:2,12,18,29,34,40; 6:6; 8:1,14; 9:27; 11:1; 15:2,4,6,22,23,33; 16:4).

Now we have a critical issue being raised that pertains to the salvation of God. The apostles (we presume all of them) are present, and have heard the factual reports of the Lord's working among the Gentiles. The report has not come from mere observers, but from those who were actually involved in the work. It is imperative that a decision be made concerning statements that had been made concerning salvation: "And certain men which came down from Judaea taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved," and "That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses" (Acts 15:1,5). To this point, the critical decisions have come from the apostles (Acts 4:35; 6:2; 8:14). Further, it was their "doctrine" in which the early disciples continued (Acts 2:42). Now, with such a critical matter at stake, one of the twelve does not step forth, but James.

JAMES

We know from Paul's letter to the Galatians that this was "James, the Lord's brother" (Gal 1:19), where Paul made some remarks about this conference. He was one of Jesus' four half-brothers (James, Joses [Joseph], Simon, and Judas (Matt 13:55)). He is the only one of them of whom specific things are reported, even though all of them eventually believed on Jesus (Acts 1:14), although well into His ministry, they did not (John 7:5). Paul states in his epistle to the Corinthians that the Lord's "brethren" journeyed in their labors for Christ with their wives (1 Cor 9:5).

Paul also reports that the resurrected Christ made a special appearance to James: "After that, He was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that, He was seen of James; then of all the apostles" (1 Cor 15:6-7). This man was of such significance, that he is classed with Peter and John, long after James [the brother of John] had been martyred. Perhaps speaking of the very occasion chronicled in this text, Paul says of him, "And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision" (Gal 2:9). James sent brethren to Antioch to settle the dispute concerning circumcision (Gal 2:12). Paul later went to him, reporting of his ministry among the Gentiles (Acts 21:18-19). James even counseled Paul concerning his conduct among the Jewish believers, which counsel Paul received (Acts 21:20-26).

This is also the James who wrote the letter bearing his name (James 1:1). In his epistle, as in the records of his personal counsel, he did not refer to his fleshly relation through Mary to Jesus. In other words, he did not know Jesus "after the flesh" (2 Cor 5:16).

When we expose our minds to the words of James, we must see them as being the result of Divine tutelage. The Head of the body delivered this pertinent word to the church through someone who was not one of the twelve apostles, nor, so far as the inspired record is concerned, was he called to be one as was Paul. There are some who feel that the other apostles chose James, the Lord's brother, to take the place of James the brother of John, who was martyred. This is based upon a statement Paul made in Galatians 1:19: "But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother" (Gal 1:19).

The arguments presented for this case are not weighty, and are too distracting to state at this time. That is because there is too much of man in them, and too little of God.

James here delivers a Divine

ASSESSING GOD'S WORK AT THE HOUSE OF CORNELIUS

Assessments of this event: “While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. . . . For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter” (Acts 10:44,46)

- The Holy Spirit fell on them who heard the Word (10:44). – Luke
- They received the Holy Spirit as did the disciples on Pentecost (10:47). – Peter
- The Spirit fell on them as on the disciples at the beginning (11:15). – Peter
- Peter remembered the promise of Jesus that they would be baptized with the Holy Spirit (11:16). – Peter
- God gave them the same gift as He did the disciples (11:17a). – Peter
- They had believed on the Lord Jesus Christ (11:17b). – Peter
- God granted them repentance unto life (11:18). – disciples
- God gave them the Holy Spirit, as He did the disciples (15:7). – Peter
- God bare them witness, giving them the Holy Spirit as He did the disciples (15:8). – Peter
- God purified their hearts by faith (15:9). Peter
- They were saved by the grace of God (15:11). – Peter
- God visited the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name (15:14). – James
- These were people, who from the Gentiles, are turned to God (15:19) – James perspective that apparently was not clear until this time. We know it was not apparent to the prophets and teachers in Antioch, and even Barnabas and Paul are not reported as having made this association. Had this been clear to them, there would have been no need to bring the question under consideration to the apostles and elders at Jerusalem.

This is a circumstance that cannot be exploited by men who would have us believe they also have a word from the Lord – an additional word. This is a work of God, and will eventually be recognized as such by those who are present. This will. Now involve assessing what God has done, correlating it with what He has said. It is good for us to also recognize it in that way. In this text we have a confirmation that the Lord does not always work in a way that can be foreseen by men, or concluded from their awareness of the Scriptures.

Sometimes, the only way to obtain this kind of understanding is to be present when the facts are presented.

GOD VISITED THE GENTILES

“ 14 Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for His name.”

Throughout the years, I have both read and heard numerous explanations of what took place at the house of Cornelius. I must admit that most of them appear to have been biased, and few of them dealt with what has been said in Scripture of that occasion. For some, who are inclined toward an institutional way of thinking, the whole text is very difficult. However, the Holy Spirit has provided several statements made concerning the reports that were given – statements that enable those with an honest and good heart to form a proper concept of what was done at that time. Of course, the Lord has no interest in buttressing the doctrines of men, and will not even provide information in the shadowy haze of the positions of men.

Here James, after hearing the reports of Peter, Paul, and Barnabas, will assess the facts, then make a statement of the case. He will correlate it with the Word of God, and bring an abrupt end to the controversy. He will not reason as a man, but as one who thinks in concert with God. He has no mind to take sides on the issue, but rather to direct the brethren to think properly, and with due regard for what the Lord is doing through Jesus Christ.

GOD VISITED THE GENTILES

“Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles . . .” Other versions read, “concerned Himself about . . . the Gentiles,” NASB “showed His concern by,” NIV “looked favorably upon the Gentiles,” NRSV “God was first pleased,” BBE “began to show His concern,” CJB “first intervened,” CSB “first visited,” DARBY “began to elect,” MRD “arranged to enlist,” NJB “did look after,” YLT “for the first time God accepted,” IE “first looked graciously on,” WEYMOUTH and “first graciously visited.” WILLIAMS

Some of the versions so dilute the text with scholasticism that one hardly knows what is being said. When we read “concerned Himself about,” showed His concern for,” and “looked favorably upon,” there is a kind of aloofness that is depicted with no aggressive corresponding action. The word from which “visit” is translated can have a variety of meanings depending the context. Lexically, and as used here, the word means, “to look upon or after, to inspect, examine with the eyes, in order to see how he is,” THAYER and “visit, come to help.” FRIBERG The Greek word can mean to look upon, examine, inspect, etc – but that is not its meaning here. Here, the point is not God merely looking or considering the Gentiles, but showing up among them. This was not an expression of concern, but of purpose and Divine determination. In other words, this text is describing what God did, not what He thought – even though what He did was driven by His thoughts.

Peter declared what God had done . Paul and Barnabas also affirmed what the Lord had done . Now James gives an obviously inspired and discerning assessment of what the Lord was doing at the house of Cornelius, and among the Gentiles to whom Paul and Barnabas had preached.

TO TAKE OUT OF THEM

“ . . . to take out of them . . .” Other versions read, “taking from among the Gentiles,” NASB “taking from the Gentiles,” NIV “take out of the nations,” DARBY “taking from non-Jewish people” GWN “to elect a people . . . from among the Gentiles,” MRD “acquiring from among the Gentiles,” NAB “select from among the Gentiles,” NET “to enlist a people . . . out of the Gentiles,” NJB and “receive of the Gentiles.” PNT

James will make an observation that has not been made to this point – God taking a people for Himself out of the masses of people. Peter alludes to this Divine activity in His first epistle: “But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light” (1 Pet 2:9). Here, an even stronger word is spoken – as compared with “called out,” James says “take out.” The “call” is the means, and “take out” is the accomplished objective.

This activity is presented in other ways in Scripture – depicting salvation as something God Himself does. We are involved in the process, but only as recipients, and are in no way initiators.

• WASHED, SANCTIFIED, AND JUSTIFIED. “And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God” (1 Cor 6:11).

• QUICKENED, OR MADE ALIVE. “And you hath He quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins” (Eph 2:1).

• SALVATION DEPICTED AS BEING APPREHENDED. “Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus” (Phil 3:12).

• MADE MEET, OR QUALIFIED. “Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light” (Col 1:12).

• DELIVERED AND TRANSLATED. “Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of His dear Son” (Col 1:13).

• DELIVERED FROM THE WRATH TO COME. “And to wait for His Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come” (1 Thess 1:10).

• SAVED AND CALLED ACCORDING TO HIS PURPOSE. “Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began” (2 Tim 1:9).

• SAVED US. “Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy He saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost” (Titus 3:5).

• BEGAT US WITH HIS WORD ACCORDING TO HIS OWN WILL. “Of His own will begat He us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of His creatures” (James 1:18).

• WASHED AND MADE KINGS AND PRIESTS. “. . . Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and His Father; to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen” (Rev 1:5-6).

Try as you may, you cannot trace the initiation and accomplishment of these marvelous realities to the activities of men. They are too grand for men to achieve. They require power that men do not possess. They are eternal in nature, and thus absolutely beyond the scope of human aptitude. They require the overthrow of “the prince of this world,” who has victimized and dominated every person who has lived, with the solitary exception of Jesus of Nazareth.

You would think that this perspective of salvation would be constantly held before the saints, and always on the lips of those who speak in the name of Christ. However, who among us does not know that this is not the case at all. Nearly everyone I know that has come to perceive these things, including myself, had to overcome their former way of thinking to do so. However, this will not be the case in our text.

The World Is Not the Ultimate Place

It ought to be apparent that the world – “this present evil world” (Gal 1:4) – is not the ultimate place! Furthermore, being among the people is not the ultimate objective of redemption. Not only have we been delivered from the domain of the world, we have been delivered from its culture as well – “the Gentiles,” or “the nations.”

A PEOPLE FOR HIS NAME

“. . . a people for His name.” Other versions read, “a people for Himself,” NIV “a people to bear

His name,” CJB “a people unto His name,” GENEVA “those who would honor His name,” GWN “people His name,” TNT “a people to bring honor to His name,” LIVING “made them His own people,” IE “a People to be called by His name,” WEYMOUTH and “a people [to bear and honor] His name.” AMPLIFIED

For what purpose did the Lord take a people from among the Gentiles? What is He achieving by such a thing? Is mere separation the point – to make the people different from others, which is actually accomplished. It ought to be obvious that it is not to make the world a better place to live, because the deliverance is from the world itself.

James concludes, and rightly so, that the people are taken out of the peoples (nations or Gentiles) for God Himself . They are intended to be His habitation (Eph 2:22), as well as workers together with Him (2 Cor 6:1). He does not take the people out in order to identify with them in their objectives, but in order for them to become identified with His objective. While there is sense in which He is identifying with them (“I will be their God”) , the more fundamental identity is, “and they shall be My people” (Jer 31:33), or “shall be unto Me a people” (Heb 8:10). Their chief inheritance is God Himself. As it is written, “And if children, then heirs; heirs of God . . .” (Rom 8:17).

In one brief sentence, James encapsulated the very essence of salvation – man’s identity with the Living God! Ponder the many statements that are made concerning this matter.

In the last analysis, our relationship with one another either confirms or denies the validity of a claim to be associated with God, which is the primary relationship

RECONCILED TO GOD. “For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life” (Rom 5:10).

- ALIVE UNTO GOD. “Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord” (Rom 6:11).
- FRUIT UNTO GOD. “Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God ” (Rom 7:4).
- BODIES PRESENTED TO GOD. “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God , which is your reasonable service” (Rom 12:1).
- LIVING UNTO GOD. “For I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God ” (Gal 2:19).
- A HABITATION OF GOD. “In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit” (Eph 2:22).
- COMING TO GOD. “Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them” (Heb 7:25).
- KINGS AND PRIESTS UNTO GOD. “And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood, And hath made us kings and priests unto God and His Father ; to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen” (Rev 1:5-6).

While there are critical relationships to be maintained between the saved and their peers, they are not the fundamental ones, nor are they the emphasis. In the last analysis, our relationship with one another either confirms or denies the validity of a claim to be associated with God , which is the primary relationship (1 John 2:10; 1 John 4:8,20).

Today there are a staggering number of professed “ministries” that major on life in this world. Some make marriage and the home their emphasis. Others choose to focus on national or political identity. Still others throw all of their resources into the correction of social ills or circumstances. There are also those who major on the recovery of wayward youth, or the recovery of people from debilitating enslavement to sins of indulgence. None of these things are wrong of themselves. All of them are wrong as a spiritual focus.

I know of no text of Scripture, or doctrinal insinuation, that speaks of any revealed work of God focusing on a segment of society: married, widows, youth, drunkards, drug addicts, the homeless, ghettos, etc. This by no means suggests it is proper to neglect such people, or to engage in an effort to bring help and hope to them. I am speaking about Divine intention, and of the clear revelation of that intention. I am saying that if our primary objectives in matters pertaining the Christ differ from those that are of God, they cannot be proper. If our fundamental aim is to correct a temporal condition, we are missing the mark. There is nothing in the Scriptures, either by doctrine or example, concerning making such things primary, or neglecting the Word of God or the saints of God to accomplish them. Throughout Scriptural history, when the saints were strong, and people were living unto God, such things were addressed with God-glorifying wisdom (Acts 6:1-3; 11:29; Rom 15:26). However, they were never allowed to be the focus of attention.

Men have no right to shift the emphasis of salvation to something that makes identity with the Living God secondary. That ought to be abundantly apparent. However, all too often it is a rare consideration. This, of course, is why the modern church has become spiritually weak. It is its emphasis that has birthed its condition. That emphasis does not present identity with God as being primary.

God did not visit the nations to take out a people in order to reform the world. Rather, He did so to gather a people for Himself. He did not take them out to address the ills of a world, which is destined to be destroyed, or to resolve all of its problems. He took them out in order to walk and work with Himself – a condition extending into eternity, and “the ages to come.” It is serious beyond comprehension to adopt a view of the work of God that obscures this fact by fastening our attention on the here and now.

THIS AGREES WITH THE WORDS OF THE PROPHETS

“ 15 And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, 16 After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up . . . ”

James now fastens down securely what he has proclaimed. He is like a wise man who uses words as “nails,” “fastening” them like “masters of assemblies” (Eccl 12:11). He handles “aright” the word of God, confirming that it fully supports that what has been reported is nothing less than the work of God. It ought to here be stated that if what men teach concerning salvation is not supported by the prophets, it cannot possibly be true. Paul himself said of his preaching, “Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come” (Acts 26:22). Were this practice to be strictly followed in our time, it would eliminate a staggering percentage of what is being preached concerning the salvation of God.

TO THIS AGREE THE WORDS OF THE PROPHETS

“And to this agree the words of the prophets . . .” Other versions read, “with this the words of the prophets agree,” NKJV “the words of the prophets are in agreement with this,” NIV “the words of the Prophets are in complete harmony with this,” CJB “with this the words of the prophets accord,” MRD “is entirely in harmony with the words of the prophets,” NJB “agrees with what the prophets predicted,” LIVING “this is in harmony with the language of the Prophets,” WEYMOUTH “with this the predictions of the prophets agree,” AMPLIFIED and “This is in full agreement with what the prophets wrote.” PHILLIPS

And what is it that is in full accord with what the prophets said? It is this word: “God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for His name” (Acts 15:14). Peter said that God put no difference between the Jew and the Gentile, “purifying their hearts by faith” (15:9).

It is evident in this text that, while the prophets did serve their generation, that is not all they did. They spoke and wrote in such a manner as to enable those in the ages that followed them to recognize the working of God in “the day of salvation.”

I WILL RETURN AND BUILD THE TABERNACLE OF DAVID

“ . . . as it is written, 16 After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David . . .” Other versions read, “return and rebuild the tabernacle of David,” NKJV “return and rebuild David’s . . . tent,” NIV “return and rebuild the dwelling of David,” NRSV “I will come back, and will put up the tent of David,” BBE “I will return. I will set up David's fallen tent again,” GWN “I shall return and rebuild the fallen hut of David,” NJB “I will return and renew the . . . contract with David,” LIVING “I will build David's house again,” IE and “I will come back, and will rebuild the house of David.” AMPLIFIED

The prophecy of reference is found in Amos 9:11-12: “In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old: that they may possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen, which are called by My name , saith the LORD that doeth this” (Amos 9:11-12).

The “tabernacle” of David, according to the promise delivered to Him, was actually a “house,” or family: “And as since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel, and have caused thee to rest from all thine enemies. Also the LORD telleth thee that He will make thee an house ” (2 Sam 7:11). David said of that promise, “For thou, O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, hast revealed to thy servant, saying, I will build thee an house : therefore hath thy servant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee” (2 Sam 7:27).

The promise God made to David, to build him a house, appeared to have been vacated. The last king in the Davidic lineage was Zedekiah, whose reign was interrupted by the commencement of the Babylonian captivity. From that time until this very day, no one has reigned as an earthly king upon David’s throne. His kingly progeny appears to have disappeared, and his tabernacle, or house, fallen down to the ground.

However, through Amos, the promise God had made to David was revived. Although it was stated in somewhat vague language, James was given to see what it meant. Amos said David’s lineage would possess “the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen which” were called by God’s name. Knowing that Jesus is the One who had been raised up to sit on David’s throne, as Peter declared on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:30-37), James reasons that the acceptance of the Gentiles, as reported by Peter, Paul, and Barnabas, is actually the household of David being enlarged to include them. His house was being rebuilt, but would be significantly larger.

Through Isaiah, God declared that restoring Israel to Himself would be accomplished through Christ, but that this was too small to justify the atonement that was achieved by Jesus. Here is what he said, “It is too small a thing that You should be My Servant To raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved ones of Israel; I will also make You a light of the nations So that My salvation may reach to the end of the earth” NASB (Isa 49:6). This word – a Divine word – is destructive of much erroneous theology. There is a strain of thinking afoot in the Christian world that states Jesus would have died for the sins of the world, even if only one person was saved as a result. This is not only pure folklore, but reproaches the God of heaven. It reflects upon His eternal purpose, His Divine power, and the effectiveness of Christ’s death. Those who speak so glibly cannot even conceive of the rebuilding of David’s house after it had fallen down.

I WILL BUILD THE RUINS AND SET IT UP

“ . . . which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up . . . ”

What looked like spiritual shambles would be rebuilt – and, as Hosea foretold, the latter house would have greater glory than the former one. “The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the LORD of hosts: and in this place will I give peace, saith the LORD of hosts” (Hag 2:9). Haggai was speaking of the rebuilding of the Temple by Zeubbabel, but his words contained more than that. Ultimately, this referred to the “greater glory” of the New Covenant (2 Cor 3:9,10).

Which Is Fallen Down

This refers to David’s kingly lineage and the occupation of his throne. For nearly five hundred years it was vacant, and there appeared no hope on the horizon until Jesus appeared, who was the real “Son of David” (Matt 1:1). Clarifying the whole matter, the glorified Christ told John that He was not only the “Root,” or Source, of David, but His “Offspring,” or Son, as well: “I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star” (Rev 22:16).

Until Jesus was born, David’s Messianic house looked as though it could never be raised up again. Several generations passed without any significant person appearing in Israel who had an clear connection with David. His promised house appeared to have fallen down, never to be rebuilt.

I Will Build the Ruins Again

So far as David’s kingly lineage was concerned, it lay in “ruins,” like Jerusalem and its walls did during the days of Nehemiah (Neh 2:3,13). However, God is a great Builder and Restorer, and He committed Himself to the reestablishment of David’s throne, raising it up, so to speak, from the ashes of defeat and neglect.

I Will Set It Up

According to the prophecy of Amos, the rebuilt house would first involve the Jews themselves. Then they would possess “the remnant of the heathen.” In other words, the Jews would be the first to be blessed, and would extend the blessing out to the Gentiles.

This, of course, is precisely what happened. According to His promise, God extended His salvation “to the Jew first,” taking the first fruits from their field. The feast of Pentecost, on which the New Covenant was inaugurated, was a feast of first fruits, because the first loaves made from the new grain were offered unto the Lord at that time (Ex 23:16; Lev 23:16-20; Num 28:26-31). It only lasted for one day, as compared to the other main feasts, which lasted for several days.

The first fruits of the Jews – not the final harvest – were reaped on the day of Pentecost [the feast of first fruits], with three thousand souls gladly receiving the Word, being baptized, and added to the church by the Lord Himself (Acts 2:41). Thus the house of salvation had been raised up, and was initially inhabited and made ready for extensive occupancy. For some time the house continued to be populated with growing numbers of Jews (Acts 2:47; 4:4; 5:14; 6:7).

It was necessary for this to take place before salvation could be offered to the Gentiles. The Jews were like husbandmen who must first be partaker of the fruits (2 Tim 2:6). To them had been given the field of preparation: "to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen" (Rom 9:4-5). The "fountain" of salvation was thus "opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness" (Zech 13:1).

According to the promise, they must first have the promise fulfilled to them, for the promise was "also" [in addition to the Jews] to those who were afar off – the Gentiles (Acts 2:39). This postulated the initial priority of the Jews. The remaining harvest of the Jews has not yet taken place, but it is as sure as the harvesting of the first fruits, and the Gentiles as well (Isa 19:24-25; 54:4-19; 55:3; Jer 32:37-38; Ezek 37:21-28; Hos 2:14-19; Zech 12:10; Rom 11:18).

In salvation, the Gentiles are occupying a dwelling belonging to Israel. The Jews' abode has been enlarged for their occupancy, as declared in Isaiah 54:1-3. Paul referred to this as the Gentiles being grafted into the Jewish olive tree, among the Jewish branches (Rom 11:17-32). In that remarkable passage Paul reasons on the affiliation of Gentile believers with the Jews.

- Gentile believers were grafted in their tree "among them" (11:17a).

Those who teach that the Jews have been forever cast off contradict the very word of God. He has specifically addressed the matter of them being cut off, and of its duration.

- With the Jews, the Gentiles "partake of the root and fatness" of their "olive tree" (11:17b).
- It is the Jewish "root" that bears the Gentile believers (11:18).
- If the Jews do not abide in unbelief, they will be grafted in again, to their own tree – yes, God is able to do this (11:23).
- If, contrary to nature, the wild and uncultured Gentiles were grafted into the olive tree, God is able to again graft in its natural branches into their own olive tree (11:24)
- Israel's present blindness is only in part, and only unto "the fulness of the Gentiles be come in" (11:25).
- All Israel will be saved. "The Deliverer will come out of Zion and turn ungodliness from Jacob" – a term not applied to the church (11:26).
- God's covenant to Israel is to "take away their sins" (11:27).
- Presently, concerning the Gospel, the Jews are enemies for the sake of the Gentiles, thus giving them an opportunity to be saved. However, concerning God's election, they remain "beloved" for the sake of "the fathers," to whom the promises were made. This is because "the gifts and calling of God are without repentance" (11:28-29).
- Just as the Gentiles have obtained mercy through the unbelief of the Jews, so through the mercy extended to the Gentiles, the Jews will obtain mercy. This is all by Divine intent (11:30-32).

The salvation of the Gentiles is within the context of the salvation promised to the Jews. Their salvation is not one that replaced the salvation promised to Jacob, but is an extension of it. The Gentiles have been added to the Jews, they do not replace them (Isa 2:2-5; 11:10; 42:1,6; 49:6,22-23; 54:3; 60:3,5,11; 66:12,19; Jer 16:19; Mal 1:11).

Even apostolic doctrine teaches that Gentile believers have been joined to the Jews, now forming “one body” and a “new man,” being built “together” for a “habitation of God through the Spirit” (Eph 2:13-22). Even the New Covenant, which is the basis of our salvation, was promised to be made “with the house of Israel” (Jer 31:31-34; Heb 8:10). The promise of the Holy Spirit that is offered to the Gentiles – “those who are afar off” – was given to the Jews (Joel 2:28-29; Acts 2:39).

Those who teach that the Jews have been forever cast off contradict the very word of God. He has specifically addressed the matter of them being cut off, and of its duration.

- This statement was made immediately following the promise of the New Covenant (Jer 31:31-34) we enjoy in Christ. “Thus saith the LORD, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; The LORD of hosts is his name: If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the LORD, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever. Thus saith the LORD; If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the LORD ” (Jer 31:35-37).

- Based on a prophecy made by Isaiah (Isa 1:9), Paul reasons that Israel has NOT been altogether cut off, else they would have been like Sodom. “And as Esaias said before, Except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a seed, we had been as Sodoma, and been made like unto Gomorrah” (Rom 9:29).

- God promised Israel He would not made “a full end” of them (Jer 5:18; 46:28).

- Jesus said Jerusalem would be “trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled” (Luke 21:24).

- Paul said the blindness of Israel, which is “in part,” would be “until the fulness of the Gentiles [the full number NIV] be come in” (Rom 11:25).

The Reasoning of James

James now reasons that the Gentiles’ conversion is in accordance with the promises of God and His declared purpose. His reasoning requires that the Jews be the ones to whom the promises were initially made, and that the Gentiles are partakers of their benefits. Such reasoning would be wholly erroneous if the promises were ever depicted as being withdrawn from the Israelites. If the promises no longer belong to them, they would also be withdrawn from the Gentiles as well, for they have been partakers with the Jews. If this is not the case, God’s gifts and callings are not without repentance.

THAT THE RESIDUE OF MEN MIGHT SEEK AFTER THE LORD

“ 17 That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things.”

James has seen the Divine rationale behind the acceptance of the Gentiles WITHOUT a requirement for them being circumcised. He sees that the issue is not what the Gentiles are supposed to do, but whether or not they have been accepted by God, or are included in the canopy of salvation. With the expertise of the master of an assembly, he is weaving a tapestry of truth with Scripture, rightly dividing it, or handling it aright (2 Tim 2:15). Keep in mind, he is not an apostle, and that the same Jesus who chose and commissioned the apostles is now speaking through him. His appointed prominence is confirmed by the risen Christ’s special appearance to him.

THE RESIDUE OF MEN

“That the residue of men might seek after the Lord . . .” Other versions read, “the rest of mankind,” NKJV “the remnant of men,” NIV “all other peoples,” NRSV “the rest of man,” RSV “those who are left of mankind,” BBE “the survivors of all the people,” GWN “Gentiles,” LIVING and “other men,” WYCLIFFE “the remaining peoples,” ALT “other nations,” CEV and “the rest of the human race.” GNB

The word “residue” is translated from a word that has the following lexical meaning: “left, remaining,” THAYER “the rest,” UBS “pertaining to the part of a whole which remains or continues, and thus constitutes the rest of the whole - rest, remaining, what remains,” LOUW-NIDA and “remnant, rest of the people.” LEH

Amos’ prophecy referred to “the remnant of Edom and of all the heathen ,” or, the offspring of Esau (who had some knowledge of God), and the rest of the world (Amos 9:11). Here we are provided with a Divine perspective of the human race. God gives it through Amos, His prophet, and James now ratifies it under the administration of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of God.

The Divine Perspective of Humanity

It deals a devastating blow to the philosophical notion that God sees everyone alike. The mass of mankind – the Gentiles, of non-Jews – are viewed as “the residue” of humanity; the remnant, the remaining part, the rest of the people, and everyone else.

Here, in both Amos and the words of James, we have the Divine perspective of humanity. It deals a devastating blow to the philosophical notion that God sees everyone alike. The mass of mankind – the Gentiles, of non-Jews – are viewed as “the residue” of humanity; the remnant, the remaining part, the rest of the people, and everyone else. They are not the main people, but the “ rest of the men.” RSV They are not the most important people but “ other peoples.” NRSV They are not the primary nations, but the “ other nations.” CEV

This should take no person by surprise, or be abrasive to their thinking. God has spoken concerning this matter – this matter of flesh-and-blood people.

- “For thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God: the LORD thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth ” (Deut 7:6).

- “Thou shalt be blessed above all people : there shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle” (Deut 7:14).

- “Only the LORD had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and He chose their seed after them, even you above all people , as it is this day” (Deut 10:15).

- “For thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God, and the LORD hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto Himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth ” (Deut 14:2).

- “And the LORD hath avouched thee this day to be His peculiar people , as He hath promised thee, and that thou shouldest keep all His commandments; and to make thee high above all nations which He hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honor; and that thou mayest be an holy people unto the LORD thy God, as he hath spoken ” (Deut 26:18-19).

- “For the LORD hath chosen Jacob unto Himself, and Israel for His peculiar treasure ” (Psa 135:4).

- “For I am the LORD thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Savior: I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee. Since thou wast precious in My sight, thou hast been honorable, and I have loved thee: therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy life” (Isa 43:3-4).

Paul describes the Jews as those “who are Israelites, to whom belongs the adoption as sons and the glory and the covenants and the giving of the Law and the temple service and the promises, whose are the fathers, and from whom is the Christ according to the flesh, who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen” NASB (Rom 9:4-5). Presently, he affirms, they are “enemies” for the sake of the Gentiles – that is, in order that he Gentiles may be included in their promises. However, when it comes to the determination God has made concerning them as a people, “they are beloved for the father’s sakes” (Rom 11:28).

Moses affirmed that the peoples of the world were divided and apportioned their inheritance in consideration of the children of Israel. During his valedictory address he said, “Remember the days of old, consider the years of many generations: ask thy father, and he will show thee; thy elders, and they will tell thee. When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when He separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the LORD’S portion is His people; Jacob is the lot of His inheritance” (Deut 32:8-9). Other versions read, “He set the boundaries of the peoples according to the number of the children of Israel,” NKJV “He had the limits of the peoples marked out, keeping in mind the number of the children of Israel,” BBE “He assigned the boundaries of peoples according to Isra’el’s population,” CJB “He appointed the bounds of people according to the number of the children of Israel,” GENEVA and “He set the bounds of the peoples according to the number of the Israelites.” AMPLIFIED In other words, by Divine intention, the land of Israel was established as the crossroads of the world, and remains so to this very day.

Some versions, reflecting the spurious theology of their translators do not refer to “the children of Israel.” Instead, they read as follows: “according to the number of the gods,” NRSV “according to the number of the sons of God,” RSV “according to the number of the angels of God,” SEPTUAGINT “according to the number of the heavenly assembly,” NET “according to the number of the children of God,” NJB “He gave to each of them a supervising angel.” LIVING These all represent a departure from the standard translations, and totally ignore the verse that follows: “For the LORD’S portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance” (Deut 32:9).

It is clear, therefore, that when it comes to the consideration of men as flesh and blood, all Gentiles are a remnant, even though they are the majority. This reflects the manner in which God assesses people. Those who belong to Him are reckoned as the majority, and the remaining as a remnant, or the residue. Employing this manner of reasoning, Paul wrote of the vast majority of Israelites who did not believe the Gospel. “What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision? Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God. For what if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?” (Rom 3:1-3). Even though well into the first century, the majority of the Jews had not believed the Gospel, Paul said, “they have not all obeyed the Gospel” (Rom 10:16) – language that, to men, suggests that most did. Of those Jews who did not believe Paul said, “some of the branches were broken off” (Rom 11:17).

The point of the text is that those who embrace the truth of God are counted as the majority before Him. Everyone else falls into the category of “residue” or “remnant.” Of course, if God really does see all men alike, love them all the same, and regard them all as equals, this kind of language is foolish and grossly misleading.

THE GENTILES, UPON WHOM MY NAME IS CALLED

“... and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called...” Other versions read, “all the Gentiles who are called by My name,” NKJV “all the Gentiles who bear My name,” NIV “over whom My name has been called,” NRSV “on whom My name is named,” BBE “on whom My name is invoked,” DARBY “over whom My name is spoken,” GWN “who are called by My name,” NAB “I have called to be My own,” NET “who bear My name,” NIB “once called Mine,” NJB “all those I have called to be Mine,” NLT “all those marked by My name,” LIVING “My name has been called upon them,” ALT “be My chosen ones,” CEV “over whom My name is spoken,” GW and “on whom has been on-called the name of Me on them.” INTERLINEAR

This text does not refer to the Gentiles who have called upon the name of the Lord. It rather refers to them – “the residue” – as those over whom the name of the Lord has been called or spoken . This is referring to something very unique. It does not say “among whom My name has been called upon,” but “ upon whom My name has been called.”

It was a Divine initiative that resulted in Cornelius and the Gentiles in Asia hearing the Gospel. Heaven directed Cornelius to call for Peter. It also instructed Peter to respond to the inspired directive of Cornelius. It also called for Barnabas and Saul to be separated for a work that involved preaching to the Gentiles.

The word “upon” is translated from the Greek word εϋϋ , which means “upon,” referring to “the Gentiles” – not to something they do, but to something that is done upon them. The phrase “whom my name is called” is translated from the Greek word εϋπικε,κλῆται , which, as used here, means “upon whom the name has been invoked (to indicate that the persons involved belong to the one named),” GINGRICH “to put a name upon, to surname.” THAYER

The refers to a Divine activity which is also spoken of in this way: “I am sought of them that asked not for Me; I am found of them that sought Me not: I said, Behold Me, behold me, unto a nation that was not called by My name” (Isa 65:1). Paul referred to this very text in accounting for the inclusion of the Gentiles in salvation: “But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you. But Esaias is very bold, and saith, I was found of them that sought Me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after Me ” (Rom 10:19-20).

Isaiah also spoke of the coming of the Gentiles independently of a diligent quest: “He will lift up a banner to the nations from afar, And will whistle to them from the end of the earth; Surely they shall come with speed, swiftly ” NKJV (Isa 5:26). This expression equates to the statements “ He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles” (Acts 14:27), and “ God at the first did visit the Gentiles , to take out of them a people for his name” (Acts 15:14).

It was a Divine initiative that resulted in Cornelius and the Gentiles in Asia hearing the Gospel. Heaven directed Cornelius to call for Peter. It also instructed Peter to respond to the inspired directive of Cornelius. It also called for Barnabas and Saul to be separated for a work that involved preaching to the Gentiles.

God called His own name over the Gentiles, dispelling the powers of darkness so they could no longer hold them captive. That call is what loosed the angels for their work of intervention, and the Spirit for giving His direction.

WHO DOTH THESE THINGS

“ . . . , saith the Lord who doeth all these things.” Other versions read, “Says the Lord who does all these things,” NKJV “Thus says the Lord who accomplishes these things,” NAB “ saith the Lord, who is doing all these things,” YLT “And He is the One who does all these things,” IE and “He is the one who has been doing these things.” ISV

The point is that the things that have been reported are the works of the Lord, not merely human activity. That includes not only the response of the Gentiles to the Gospel, but the means by which that response was provoked. Jonah was precisely correct when he said, “Salvation is of the Lord” (Jonah 2:9).

- If men hear the Gospel, it is because God has “sent” a “preacher” to them (Rom 10:14).
- If they are convinced of the guilt of sin, of the righteousness of Christ, and of the judgment of Satan, it is because the Holy Spirit has convinced them (John 16:8-11).
- If their heart is receptive to the message, it is because God has “opened” their heart (Acts 16:14).
- If they repent, it is because God has “granted them repentance unto life” (Acts 11:18), because Jesus has been exalted to give repentance (Acts 5:31).
- If they believe, it is because it was “given” to them to do so (Phil 1:29).
- If they can insightfully “say that Jesus is Lord,” it is “by the Holy Spirit” (1 Cor 12:3).

All of these things are evidence of Divine visitation: i.e. “God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for His name” (Acts 15:14). This was a Divine initiative, not a human quest. James saw this clearly. Do you?

KNOWN UNTO GOD ARE ALL OF HIS WORKS

“ 18 Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.” Other versions read, “Known to God from eternity are all His works,” NKJV “says the Lord, who makes these things known from of old,” NASB “. . . the Lord who does these things that have been known for ages,” NIV “Thus says the Lord, who has been making these things known from long ago,” NRSV “says the Lord, who has made these things known from of old,” RSV “says the Lord, who has made these things clear from the earliest times,” BBE “All this has been known for ages,” CJB “known from eternity,” DARBY “To the Lord was his own work known from the beginning of the world,” DOUAY “who maketh these things known from the beginning of the world,” ERV “From the beginning of the world, God knoweth all his works,” GENEVA “He is the one who will do these things that have always been known!” GWN “known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world,” PNT “Known from the ages to God are all His works,” YLT “Who reveals His plans made from the beginning,” LIVING “These things have been known from the beginning of time,” IE “who has been making these things known from ages long past,” WEYMOUTH “that have always been known,” ISV and “who has been making this known from the beginning of the world.” AMPLIFIED

As you can see, the various translations present two distinct thoughts – and they are contradictory of one another.

- The first is that the works of God have been known to Himself from the very beginning.
- The second is that He has been making them known from the very beginning.

The second thought presented by the various versions – namely that God has been making His works known from the beginning – is an inexcusable contradiction of several express statements of Scripture.

Here is a confirmation of the fact that those who handle the Word of God, particularly in the translation of it, must have an understanding of Scripture. The second thought presented by the various versions – namely that God has been making His works known from the beginning – is an inexcusable contradiction of several express statements of Scripture. God has NOT been making known His works from the foundation of the works – particularly the ones regarding His great salvation, which is the point of pour text.

Paul states that God is now making known His purposes that were previously not made known:

- “Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfil the word of God; even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations , but now is made manifest to His saints: to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory” (Col 1:25-27).

- “Now to Him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began , but now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith” (Rom 16:25-26).

- “But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom , which God ordained before the world unto our glory” (1 Cor 2:7).

- “How that by revelation He made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ). Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men , as it is now revealed unto His holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit” (Eph 3:3-5).

- “Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began, but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ , who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel” (2 Tim 1:9-10).

- “In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began; but hath in due times manifested His word through preaching , which is committed unto me according to the commandment of God our Savior” (Titus 1:3).

Speaking of this salvation, Jesus Himself said, “For verily I say unto you, That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them ” (Matt 13:17; Lk 10:24).

The point of the text is that God was doing was what He had always purposed to do, and that the purpose had not been revealed, as it is now that Christ is mediating the New Covenant. This, of course, in in strict keeping with God’s nature, for He “works all things according to the counsel of His will” NKJV (Eph 1:11).

The opening of the door of faith to the Gentiles was not God’s reaction to the Jews rejection of Christ. He provided some indication that He was going to lift up His hand to the Gentiles, accepting them as His own. However, this was not at all clear, or revealed, else it would not have been necessary to it known to the early church.

Even though Israel had been given all of the things related to identity with God (Rom 9:4-5), this did not mean that God would never look with favor upon the Gentiles, or call them to Himself. He had always purposed to bring them into His family. Provision for their inclusion was found in the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. Therefore, in the acceptance of the Gentiles, God was acting in perfect accord with both His character and His purpose.

This has been confirmed by the manner in which the Gentiles received the Gospel. It is also seen in the signs that accompanied their acceptance. And to this, add the fact that there was no demand made for them to be circumcised. Although those who preached to them were filled with the Spirit, He did not direct them to say one syllable about the necessity of circumcision to the Gentiles.

Now, with James, as with Paul and Barnabas, this was clear proof that circumcision was not a requirement to be saved. Nor, indeed, was it necessary to keep the law of Moses in order to be saved. God's works proved this to be true, for He confirmed their acceptance without requiring them to be circumcised.

TROUBLE THEM NOT

“ 19 Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God...”

Now that James has assessed the situation, weighing the facts and correlating them with the Word of God, he provides a word of wisdom. Men are to act upon their decisions and not allow them to remain idle.

Now that James has assessed the situation, weighing the facts and correlating them with the Word of God, he provides a word of wisdom. Men are to act upon their decisions and not allow them to remain idle.

MY SENTENCE IS

“ Wherefore my sentence is . . .” Other versions read, “I judge that,” NKJV “it is my judgment,” NASB “I have reached the decision,” NRSV “for this reason my decision is,” BBE “my opinion is,” CJB “I judge,” DOUAY “I’ve decided,” GWN “I say unto you,” MRD “I conclude,” NET “my verdict is,” NJB “I think,” IE “I am firmly of the opinion,” PHILLIPS “I am judging,” INTERLINEAR and “I don’t think we should.” CEV

I must say that I have a growing disdain for dubbed down and simplistic language being imposed upon the text of Scripture. Our text is an occasion during which both the thrust and the view of the church will be altered, bringing it more into accord with the Lord. They are not dealing with matters of mere human opinion, but with an issue that has to do with what is required to be saved. Language like “my opinion is,” CJB “I’ve decided,” GWN “I think,” IE , and “I am firmly of the opinion,” PHILLIPS have too much of the flesh in them. They do not carry the message of our text to a generation that is weak on thinking in the first place. Any person who imagines that the Holy Spirit of God would allow human opinion to be recorded as a decisive and binding thought has really taken leave of their senses. There are versions of Scripture that culture a mind-set that is at variance with the Word and purpose of God. They tend to obscure pivotal matters, such as that which concerns our text. James was a manifest “pillar” of the church in Jerusalem (Gal 2:9). You may be sure it was not because of his opinions!

The word that James delivers – his “sentence” – is an expression of his insight – insight that was the result of the illumination of the Spirit and consequent discernment. If this was not the case, the Spirit would have not have left the matter here, but would have produced a more credible witness. The men who came down from Judea gave their opinion – that men had to be circumcised after the manner of Moses to be saved (15:1). Their words were challenged. In Jerusalem, certain believers who were formerly Pharisees gave their opinion, that the Gentiles were required to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses. Their words were also challenged. The words of James were not challenged – and there were apostles and elders present.

Oh, the bane of weak language. Thinking does not necessarily involve a decision. The word “opinion” has too much flesh in it. There is a higher form of reasoning than mere opinion. As it is used here, the Greek word translated “my sentence is” (kri,nw) means, “to determine, resolve, decree, to judge . . . of those who act the part of judges or arbiters in matters of common life, or pass judgment on the deeds and words of others, to rule, govern, to preside over with the power of giving judicial decisions,” THAYER and “to come to a conclusion in the process of thinking and thus to be in a position to make a decision - 'to come to a conclusion, to decide.” LOUW-NIDA

James does not bring the problem to himself, musing upon it as though it belonged to him, then rendering a personal opinion on the matter. He rather sheds the light of Scripture and spiritual understanding upon it. This meeting was not convened to obtain the opinion of certain dignitaries in Jerusalem. The brethren in Antioch were dealing with a problem that had to do with salvation – and that is not something concerning which opinions or private views are of value.

THAT WE TROUBLE NOT THEM

“ . . . that we trouble not them. . .” Other versions read, “not make it difficult,” NIV “put trouble in the way,” BBE “put obstacles in the way,” CJB “cause difficulties,” CSB “be disquieted,” DOUAY “crush those,” MRD “cause extra difficulty,” NET “making things more difficult,” NJB “inflicting unexpected annoyance,” WEYMOUTH and “put obstacles in the way of and annoy and disturb.” AMPLIFIED

Notice how James describes the teaching with which they are dealing – namely, that the Gentiles should be circumcised and keep the law of Moses. The imposition of this teaching was a troubling and inhibiting requirement placed on the Gentiles. It was an obstacle in their path, hindering them on their way to glory. It was a gigantic rock thrown into their course. It was of such magnitude, that they would not be able to get to their destination unless it was removed. It would not merely slow their progress, but stop it altogether.

Troubling Religion

There is a form of religion that is troubling to the soul. It is like an imposing obstacle on the path to glory, and a heavy yoke that makes travel difficult and life cumbersome. It appears innocent on the surface, and the proponents of the approach claim to be seeking the welfare of men in the name of the Lord. In our text, those who were seeking to impose the Law upon the Gentiles were not like the factionists of our day. We know this is the case because they were assuaged after the reasoning of James. However, had their heresy not been addressed, they probably would have hindered many souls, and become more firmly fixed in faulty their persuasion.

You see how the brethren contended with those who brought this teaching to Antioch from Judaea (15:2). Then, after an entourage from Antioch was sent to Jerusalem, others espoused the same view, and they too confronted opposition from the brethren (15:5-7). They were seeking to impose the burden of the Law upon the newly converted Gentiles. However, it was one that they themselves were unable to bear.

Many within the professed church are also imposing burdens of religious regimentation on the people. They do not impose the Law of Moses, which is really the only Law that could be imposed, were such an imposition required. These new merchants of law invent their own rules, then place them upon men, telling the people they are effective to restrain the flesh. Some even boast that they are in harmony with the Scriptures, even though they must admit they are not found in them. These human laws teach men to live artificially – contrary to their basic desires. What they do not see is that wayward men do not need more rules. What they need is a new heart – the kind on which the laws of God are written. Then a minimum of rules for living is required. This also is confirmed in our text.

WHICH FROM THE GENTILES HAVE TURNED TO GOD

“ . . . which from among the Gentiles are turned to God . . .” Other versions read, “are turning,” NKJV/NASB/NIV/NRSV and “are converted to God.” DOUAY

Previously, James said that God “did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name” (15:14). Peter said that God had made a choice among them that through him the Gentiles “should hear the word of the Gospel and believe” (15:7). He also said that God put no difference between the Jews and the Gentiles, “purifying their hearts by faith” (15:9). All of these are referring to the same thing: the acceptance of the Gentiles – looking at it from differing perspectives.

• Objective – DIVINE INITIATIVE : God visiting the Gentiles. This was seen The expression “turn to the Lord” denotes a condition in which the Lord captures the attention of the individual. It is accompanied by an unwavering desire to do the will of in the calling of Peter to go to Cornelius, and the calling of Barnabas and Saul to go to Asia.

• Objective – DIVINE OBJECTIVE: To take out a people for His name. The aim of God was not merely to present an opportunity, but to garner a people for Himself.

• Objective – DIVINE ACCOMPLISHMENT: Purifying their hearts by faith. More was involved that the preaching of the messengers and the hearing of their subjects.

• Subjective – THEIR RESPONSE: hear and believe the Gospel. Their unreserved and zealous response was owing to the presence of the Lord.

• Subjective – THEIR FOCUS: Turn to God. They turned to God because they were keenly aware of Him – and He is “invisible.” They experienced what insightful Jews prayed: “Turn us again, O God, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved” (Psa 80:3,7,18; 85:4). For the Jews, turning to the Lord was a restoration. For the Gentiles, it was an initial turning.

The expression “turn to the Lord” denotes a condition in which the Lord captures the attention of the individual. It is accompanied by an unwavering desire to do the will of the Lord, and is frequently accompanied by inquiries concerning what the people should do (Acts 2:37; 8:36; 9:6; 16:30).

This is the factor that is missing in much of the professed Christianity of our day. People have not turned to the Lord, and therefore are not on the initiative to please Him. To address this uncomely dilemma, pretentious preachers and teachers attempt to motivate the people to consider the Lord. Sometimes they resort to a kind of salesmanship that is designed to move the people to be a part of their church. Some more polished pretenders adjust the external environment, supposing to make it more conducive to thoughtful consideration – like lowering the lights, moving the little children to another area, and seeking to touch the hearts of the people with stories and various illustrations from contemporary life. However, notwithstanding the commonness of such approaches in our time, you will find nothing remotely resembling them in the book of Acts. That is an account of God working among men. It is an effectual work that finds the people heartily turning to the Lord.

BUT THAT WE WRITE UNTO THEM

“ 20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood. 21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day.”

Being wise in the ways of the Lord, and a “pillar” in the Jerusalem church (Gal 2:9), James knew that new converts cannot simply be left to themselves – particularly when they are in a heathen society. This is one reason why Paul and those with him made a practice of ordaining elders in the churches – men who would ensure the proper direction and nourishment of the saints (Acts 14:23; Tit 1:5). This is also why Paul wrote epistles to Gentile churches (Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians). John did the same, as directed by Jesus, in writing to the churches in Asia (Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea – Rev 1:11).

James gives his inspired counsel, understanding the nature of spiritual life in its beginning stages, and the corrupt environment in which believers are to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling.

WRITE TO THEM

“But that we write unto them . . .” Other versions read, “give them orders,” BBE “write them a letter,” CJB “send unto them,” GENEVA “let word be sent to them,” MRD “write and tell them,” NLT and “send word to them in writing.” AMPLIFIED

In addition to personal preaching and teaching, writing is a way in which the Lord has ordained that His will and works be made known to people.

- When Israel defeated the Amalekites, God told Moses, “ Write this for a memorial in a book” (Ex 17:14).

- After God had given the entirety of the Law, He told Moses, “ Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel” (Ex 34:27).

- Because of the hardness of the hearts of the Israelites, God spoke of them writing His Law: “And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates” (Deut 6:9).

- In Nehemiah’s day, when the people made a covenant to serve the Lord, they wrote it down: “And because of all this we make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, Levites, and priests, seal unto it” (Neh 9:38).

- When God gave revelations to Isaiah, He told him to “write” them down (Isa 8:1; 30:8).

- When God revealed things to Jeremiah, He told him, “ Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book” (Jer 30:2).

- After revealing the details of a temple, God told Ezekiel, “ write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them” (Ezek 43:11).

- After giving a vision to Habbakuk the Lord said, “ Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it” (Hab 2:2).

- After John had been given the Revelation he was told, “ Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter” (Rev 1:19).

The Gospels report Jesus referring eighteen times to what was “written” (Matt 4:4,7,10; 11:10; 21:13; 26:24,31; Mk 7:6; 9:12,13; 14:21,27; Lk 4:4,8; 7:27; 19:46; 24:46; John 6:45). The epistles contain the word “written” thirty-three times (Rom 1:15; 2:24; 3:4,10; 4:17; 8:36; 9:13,33; 10:15; 11:8,26; 12:19; 14:11; 15:3,9,21; 1 Cor 1:19,31; 2:9; 3:19; 9:9; 10:7; 14:21; 15:45; 2 Cor 4:13; 8:15; 9:9; Gal 3:10,13; 4:22,27; Heb 10:7; 1 Pet 1:16).

When a thought is “written,” it is, so to speak, embalmed in print. Because of this, among thoughtful men, extensive consideration precedes writing down a thought. Many words that are spoken freely would never be said if it was known that they were going to be written down. Of course, it is to be questioned if words that ought not be written should be spoken at all.

There is something else here that is of interest. It is that the Gentiles, particularly in Antioch, were far from being mere novices. When the apostles heard that the city of Samaria had turned to the Lord, they sent Peter and John there (Acts 8:14). When a large number of people first believed in Antioch, the brethren in Jerusalem “sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch” (Acts 11:22). This time, however, because of the controversy that had risen over circumcision and the keeping of the Law, they sent a letter with certain brethren.

What is false pollutes whatever is offered to it. That includes images, that are idols. It also includes ideas that are idolatrous – like covetousness, “which is idolatry” (Col 3:5). Just as the image of a god pollutes what is offered to it, so whatever is offered to the idol of self-gratification is polluted by that false idea.

Concerning the first people who came to Antioch, saying that the believers could not be saved unless they were circumcised, there is no record of whether or not they remained there. However, now some representatives from Jerusalem would accompany Paul, Barnabas, and those with them. They would be bringing a letter of instruction with them, with all of the ones returning being privy to the reports and discussion that preceded the writing of the letter. That circumstance confirms how seriously the early church took the dissemination of false doctrine.

ABSTAIN FROM POLLUTION

OF IDOLS

“ . . . that they abstain from pollutions of idols . . .” Other versions read, “things polluted by idols,” NKJV “contaminated by idols,” NASB “foods polluted by idols,” NIV “things offered to false gods,” BBE “filthiness of idols,” GENEVA “defilement of a sacrifice [to idols],” MRD “food offered to idols,” NLT “filthiness of images,” TNT “meat sacrificed to idols,” LIVING “things polluted by connection with idolatry,” WEYMOUTH “everything that is contaminated by idols,” WILLIAMS “anything that has been polluted by being offered to idols,” AMPLIFIED and “ceremonial pollution of the idols,” INTERLINEAR

While the versions vary widely in their representation of this verse, there is no need for such a circumstance. The meaning of the phrase is clearly stated in verse twenty-nine: “abstain from meats offered to idols.” Other versions read “things offered,” NKJV “things sacrificed,” NASB “food sacrificed,” NIV and “what has been sacrificed.” NRSV Verse twenty views the effect of the idol upon what was offered to it – pollution, or defilement. Verse twenty-nine stresses what was offered, or presented to the idol. It is understood that the reference is to animal sacrifices, as expressed in Exodus 34:15: “For thou shalt worship no other god: for the LORD, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God: Lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, and they go a whoring after their gods, and do sacrifice unto their gods, and one call thee, and thou eat of his sacrifice” (Ex 34:14-15). When the children of Israel sinned with the Moabites, they became involved in eating what was offered to their false gods: “And Israel abode in Shittim, and the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab. And they called the people unto the sacrifices of their gods: and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods” (Num 25:2).

The Fact of Pollution

What is false pollutes whatever is offered to it. That includes images, that are idols. It also includes ideas that are idolatrous – like covetousness, “which is idolatry” (Col 3:5). Just as the image of a god pollutes what is offered to it, so whatever is offered to the idol of self-gratification is polluted by that false idea. This approach has become very fashionable in our religious world – the appeal to self gratification, pleasure, security in this world, etc. Anything that is done with a preeminent regard for self becomes defiled by that aberrant desire.

Paul's Instruction to the Corinthians

This prohibition may appear to contradict the teaching of Paul to the Corinthians. "As concerning therefore the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,) But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him" (1 Cor 8:6). He went on to say that the person eating meat that had been offered to idols was not necessarily defiled by it: "But meat commendeth us not to God: for neither, if we eat, are we the better; neither, if we eat not, are we the worse" (1 Cor 8:8). He even told the brethren to eat what was "sold in the shambles (meat market) , asking no question for conscience sake" (1 Cor 10:25).

However, more was involved in the matter than mere eating. In this, there was the matter of the conscience. In Corinth, for example, everyone in the church did not discern the fact of a single God – the true God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. It was, Paul said, shameful that such a condition could exist in the church – but it did exist, and the brethren were to be mindful of it.

However, more was involved in the matter than mere eating. In this, there was the matter of the conscience. In Corinth, for example, everyone in the church did not discern the fact of a single God – the true God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. It was, Paul said, shameful that such a condition could exist in the church – but it did exist, and the brethren were to be mindful of it. "But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him. Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge : for some with conscience of the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conscience being weak is defiled . . . some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame" (1 Cor 8:6-7; 15:34). The same condition probably existed in other churches, where people had turned from idols to serve the living God, yet their conscience was not yet mature.

Two Circumstances Are Addressed

This requirement would address two circumstances.

- The new believer who did not yet know that idols were not really gods, but only images that could not see, speak, hear, smell, handle, or walk (Psa 115:4-7). Such a person was to avoid the ingestion of anything that was offered to idols, for it would awaken his conscience concerning that idol.

- There also were those who did possess the knowledge of God, and were fully aware that eating meat did not affect one's relationship to God. However, they were to be mindful of the brethren who lacked this knowledge. Paul spoke of this manner of life to the Corinthians: "For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols; And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died? But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend" (1 Cor 8:10-13). Eating in an idol's temple suggests that the "shambles," or meat market, was part of the idol's temple. The meat was sold in something similar to our restaurants.

This is an example of abstaining "from all appearance of evil" (1 Thess 5:22). In our text, the idea is not that the person who sees your action considers what you are doing to be evil. Rather, it is that the one who beholds your conduct personally has a corrupt view of what you are doing, thinking that you are serving someone other than the God and Father or our Lord Jesus Christ. The service of idols may be evil to you, but it is not to him, and therefore he misinterprets what you do as being obeisance to another God.

ABSTAIN FROM FORNICATION

“and from fornication . . .” Other versions read, “sexual immorality,” NKJV “unchastity,” RSV “evil desires of the body,” BBE “sexual sins,” GWN “whoredom,” MRD “unlawful marriage,” NAB “illicit marriages,” NJB “lewdness,” WEB “any kind of sexual sin,” IE and “all sexual impurity.”
AMPLIFIED

The word “abstain” means to “go away from, depart.” THAYER It involves the personal responsibility to stay away from something. The reason for such a prohibition is that to follow some things, you must leave Jesus – leave His Person, His presence, and His protection. Fornication is such a transgression. A person must blot Christ from his/her mind, and place the flesh on the throne of the heart in order to commit it. It is never innocent, never inadvertent, and always with deliberate and aggressive intention.

It is unfortunate that the word “fornication” has lost much of its meaning in our time. Through his subtlety Satan has corrupted vocabulary to dull the seriousness of transgression. In my judgment, men should have left this word alone, and the preachers and teachers so defined it that whenever it was spoken Divine associations were summoned into the mind.

Fornication has to do with the gratification of fleshly lusts outside of the bounds of marriage. It involves the prostituting of the body, which is “for the Lord, and the Lord is for the body” (1 Cor 6:13). In the Grecian and Roman cultures, sins of this sort were committed in the name of religion. Now they are committed for purely self-interests and fleshly gratification. Speaking of this category of sins the Spirit says, “But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints” (Eph 5:3). Other versions read, “must not be even a hint,” NIV and “must not even be mentioned among you.” NRSV Yet, they have become quite common in church circles, even among professed Christian leaders. No person can afford to ignore this warning, for it is attended by eternal consequences. Ponder what is said of fornicators. “Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind” (1 Cor 6:9). “Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; Adultery, fornication . . . they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God” (Gal 5:19-21).

ABSTAIN FROM THINGS STRANGLLED AND FROM BLOOD

“ . . . and from things strangled, and from blood.” Other versions read, “the flesh of animals put to death in ways against the law,” BBE “unbled meat,” LIVING and “meat killed by strangling.”
WEYMOUTH

The word “strangled” is translated from a word meaning, “choked; of animals killed by strangling, so that the blood is not drained from them.” THAYER Prior to the Law, during the time commencing with Noah after the flood, God prohibited the eating of an animal whose blood had not been drained. “But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat” (Gen 9:4). The NIV reads, “But you must not eat meat that has its lifeblood still in it” (Gen 9:4). Jews, because they were a people illuminated by God, could not eat any animal that “died of itself” (Deut 14:21).

Both of the prohibitions concerning blood were enacted prior to the giving of the Law, and were therefore not confined to the Law.

Confirming that it was the blood that was not to be ingested, the prohibitions include the eating of blood. This ban also started with Noah (Gen 9:4). It was codified in the Law: “Moreover ye shall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast, in any of your dwellings” (Lev 7:26). The reason this was personally offensive to God, is stated in Leviticus 17:10-11: “And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood; I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life of the flesh is in the blood : and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul ” (Lev 17:11).

The Law specified that when an animal was slain for food, its blood was to be poured out upon the ground: “Only ye shall not eat the blood; ye shall pour it upon the earth as water” (Deut 12:16).

Were These Instructions Compulsory?

Some are of the opinion that these prohibitions, particularly the last two, were given only with the intention of not offending Jewish believers. However, this clashes sharply with the whole intention of this conference, which was to deal with things said to be required for salvation. It is incredulous to imagine that these brethren wrote a letter to the Gentiles that really had nothing to do with salvation, but only reflected the necessity of being mindful of the Jewish brethren.

Under the Law, blood was not allowed to be ingested because it was associated with life and atonement (Lev 17:11). It seems to me that this is still the case – except the atoning blood is now that of Jesus Christ. This law assists in protecting men from developing casual and self-centered attitudes concerning the means by which they have been redeemed to God. If this is not the case, and the Gentile believers were merely being told to be mindful of their Jewish brethren, it seems to me that a different view would have been taken concerning circumcision. In such a case, they would have been admonished to honor the practice of circumcision to appease their Jewish brethren, yet know in their hearts that it was not related to their salvation.

Both of the prohibitions concerning blood were enacted prior to the giving of the Law, and were therefore not confined to the Law. Those who know that they have been redeemed “to God” with blood – even “the precious blood of Christ” (1 Pet 1:19; Rev 5:9) – should have no difficulty understanding this. Any practice that minimizes the significance of blood cannot be proper.

THERE ARE THOSE WHO PREACH MOSES

“ For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day.”

Some have said this verse buttresses the supposition that the Gentiles were only being admonished in order that they might get along with the Jews. However, this conference was called in reference to the Jew’s attitude toward the Gentiles, and not vice versa. The sense of this text is that the Jews already knew of these prohibitions, for they were read regularly every Sabbath day. These were not rules that required special instruction to the Jews.

It is true that there is a sense in which the ceremonial law was not removed at once from the Jewish mind – at least that is what appears to be the case later, when James said to Paul, “many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous of the law” (Acts 21:20). However, this conference was convened to determine the necessity of circumcision and the keeping of the Law to be saved – not how the Gentiles were to respond to Jewish believers. Besides this, the record of the church in Antioch suggests that they were meeting apart from the local synagogue (Acts 11:26; 13:1; 14:27; 15:3). I conclude, therefore, that this verse is referring to the Jews already being familiar with the restrictions that are now specified to the Gentiles. They required no further knowledge of these restrictions.

CONCLUSION

In this text, the priority of the church – those who are in Christ Jesus – is once again established. Incorrect doctrine among the saints – particularly as it regards the matter of salvation – cannot be tolerated. In our text, something was introduced to the brethren in Antioch that had not been included in the preaching they had heard, and to which they had responded. They were told that they could not be saved unless they were circumcised. Even though those who made this demand were from Judaea, their words were challenged by Paul and Barnabas. After extensive disputation, when it was apparent that the matter could not be settled in Antioch, some trusted brethren were sent with Paul and Barnabas to take up the matter with the apostles and elders in Jerusalem.

Even when they arrive in Jerusalem, some of the believers who were formerly Pharisees, and experts in Scripture, affirmed that it was necessary for the converted Gentiles to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses. Now, that was two witnesses, and would have settled the matter for a novice. In our time, the leaders would have obliged the people by starting two groups – those who practiced circumcision and kept the law of Moses, and those who did not. After all, that would have allowed every person to honor their own conscience, keeping peace. However, this is not at all the way these men addressed the subject.

If Paul is referring to this occasion in the book of Galatians, there was pressure put on him to have Titus circumcised. He said of that occasion: “But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised: and that because of false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage: to whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour; that the truth of the gospel might continue with you” (Gal 2:3-5).

The strength with which Paul writes of this occasion is most arresting.

- The circumcision of Titus was demanded by “false brethren unawares brought in.”
- Those “false brethren” came to “spy out” the liberty which the Gentile believers had experienced in Christ Jesus.
- Paul and company did not submit to these men for so much as a single hour.

I see a glaring absence in our day of this kind of commitment to doctrinal purity. Too many charlatans are being given access to the body of Christ. A kind of theology is being promoted that does not enable the people to sense the presence of error, and to question its promotion. In my judgment, this condition exists because a kind of marriage has been promoted between the nominal church and the world. It has adopted the world’s manners and preferences, and has allowed them to filter into their assemblies. This has caused the people to be anaesthetized, so that they cannot detect doctrinal error and propensities to legalism.

Lesson #66

A LETTER IS PREPARED AND DELIVERED

“ 15:22 “Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed Barsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren: 23 And they wrote letters by them after this manner; The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia: 24 Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom we gave no such commandment: 25 It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul, 26 Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. 27 We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth. 28 For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; 29 That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well. 30 So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle: 31 Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the consolation.” (Acts 15:22-31)

INTRODUCTION

Realizing the gravity of the situation the apostles and elders are confronting, and the seriousness of right doctrine, James has delivered a word that will result in protecting the Gentile believers against the encroachment of false teachers. Throughout the book of Acts, the church, or body of Christ, is consistently given high priority. There was an awareness that these people belong to God, having been purchased by Jesus' own blood (Acts 20:28). They were the “body of Christ” (1 Cor 12:27; Eph 4:12; 5:30). These are the people who are being built together for a habitation of God, and are the repository into which the fulness of Christ is being poured. As it is written, “And hath put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be the head over all things to the church, which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all . . . Now therefore ye are . . . of the household of God; And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone; In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord : in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit” (Eph 1:22-23; 2:19-22).

GOD WILL NOT GIVE HIS GLORY TO ANOTHER

In order to maintain an institutional emphasis in which the organization is primary, the awareness of these blessed realities is necessarily forfeited. As He has declared, God will not share His glory with another (Isa 42:8; 48:11) – not even an institution that purports to wear His name.

By saying that He will not give His glory to another, God means, among other things, that His Divine attributes will not be devoted to something He did not originate. His power will not undergird an agenda or program that was not initiated by Him. He will not work salvation through something created by men. He will not give sanctifying power to a message that does not reflect His mind, or through which He is said to implement His purpose.

This is not a mere technicality. The God “who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will” (Eph 1:11), does not depart from that manner in any aspect of salvation, whether it pertains to it initially, or in its ongoing perfection in this world. Those who say their methods bring one closer to God, or enable one to obtain more grace, have not told the truth. Permit me to give you a few statements from men who claim to have instituted a procedure through which things accredited to Divine power are claimed to be accomplished.

- “ We open the door to recovery by sharing our experience, strength, and hope with one another. This leads to a greater capacity for accepting God’s grace and movement in our lives as we are working through issues that have robbed us of all hope for a better future.”

My purpose is to show that the matter with which our text is dealing has not ceased to exist. There are still those who are not content for men to be complete in Christ. They offer additional means through which Divine objectives can be realized.

“The recovery process enables us to move toward greater freedom from addictive, compulsive and dysfunctional behaviors . The freedom creates a peace, serenity, joy, and most importantly, a stronger personal relationship with God and others.”

- “The purpose of . . . is to fellowship and celebrate God’s healing power in our lives through ‘8 recovery principles.’ This experience allows us to ‘be changed.’ By working and applying these Biblical principles, we begin to grow spiritually . . . As we progress through the program we discover our personal, loving and forgiving High Power – Jesus Christ , the only and only true High Power.”

• “Over the years I’ve witnessed how the Holy Spirit has used this program to transform literally thousands of lives . . .”

• Of the Beatitudes: "But when you fully understand what Jesus is saying, you’ll realize that these eight principles are God’s road to recovery, wholeness, growth, and spiritual maturity .”

• “Use of the CR Bible is strongly encouraged due to the fact that it is the only Bible that directly corresponds to the CR curriculum. The CR Bible has been designed to work with the resources developed and tested in the national and international ministry of CR .”

• “The answer to the way we are changed is by seeing that we continue to fall short of the glory of God - Rom. 3:23. The present tense of the verb there points to ongoing action. The humbling of confessing our sins works to conform us to be like Jesus who was humble and without sin.

Currently, the above programs have been instituted in nearly every state of the USA, as well as numerous foreign countries with thousands of churches having adopted them. Is it really true that these programs, and others like them open the door to recovery, lead to a greater capacity for accepting God’s grace, and create peace? Is it possible for a program instituted by men to create a stronger relationship with God, cause one to “be changed,” and discover Christ? Can such a program really transform lives, and be the road to spiritual growth and maturity. Precisely what kind of program requires that a special Bible be “designed to work with the resources” provided in that program?

My purpose is to show that the matter with which our text is dealing has not ceased to exist. There are still those who are not content for men to be complete in Christ. They offer additional means through which Divine objectives can be realized. However, here is the caveat in the whole matter: they are not Divinely revealed means. If they are, in fact, valid, then God has given His glory to “another.” In such a case, achievements that are credited to faith in Christ can actually be accomplished by adherence to a humanly devised procedure – and it is an extended procedure in which it is best to use a special Bible. How true can that be?”

Exactly what is the substantive difference between that approach and requiring believers to “be circumcised, and keep the law of Moses”? How is it that what is said to be accomplished by faith, can also be accomplished by following a list of special rules, or being circumcised, or keeping the law of Moses? If we are really “complete” in Christ, as Colossians 2:10 affirms, then how is it possible for transformation, peace, spiritual growth, and a personal relationship with God to be achieved by any other means?

This is the matter that is being resolved in our text. Certain Jews had required more than Christ to be saved – and recovery, transformation, obtaining grace, finding peace, and coming into a relationship with God, are all facets of salvation.

In order for this text to be profitable to us, we must see the principles that are being addressed in it, and see their bearing on special burdens that are being imposed on believers in our time.

I want to again remind you of the associations that have been made to this point with the salvation of the Gentiles.

To this point, the only things the Gentiles themselves were said to have done were:

- Hear the Word (Acts 10:44).
- Believed on the Lord Jesus Christ (Acts 11:17).
- Turned to God (Acts 15:19).

God is said to have given them the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 11:17; 15:7-8), granted them repentance (Acts 11:18), purified their hearts (Acts 15:9), was saving them by His grace (Acts 15:11), and had taken out of the Gentiles a people for His name (Acts 15:14).

ASSESSING GOD'S WORK AT THE HOUSE OF CORNELIUS

Assessments of this event: “While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. . . . For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter” (Acts 10:44,46)

- The Holy Spirit fell on them who heard the Word (10:44). – Luke
- They received the Holy Spirit as did the disciples on Pentecost (10:47). – Peter
- The Spirit fell on them as on the disciples at the beginning (11:15). – Peter
- Peter remembered the promise of Jesus that they would be baptized with the Holy Spirit (11:16). – Peter
- God gave them the same gift as He did the disciples (11:17a). – Peter
- They had believed on the Lord Jesus Christ (11:17b). – Peter
- God granted them repentance unto life (11:18). – disciples
- God gave them the Holy Spirit, as He did the disciples (15:7). – Peter
- God bare them witness, giving them the Holy Spirit as He did the disciples (15:8). – Peter
- God purified their hearts by faith (15:9). – Peter
- They were saved by the grace of God (15:11). – Peter
- God visited the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name (15:14). – James
- These were people, who from the Gentiles, are turned to God (15:19) – James

Exactly where does being circumcised and keeping the Law of Moses fit into that kind of description?

The point to be seen here is that theological difficulties, and issues pertaining to salvation, can only be resolved within the context of Divine working, and the understanding of what God is actually doing in salvation. All of that is set within the context of God's Word, which brings lucidity to the subject. This circumstance provides no room for men to receive glory, or for their wayward ideas to be dignified by being invested with Divine power.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN LAW AND GRACE

The brethren in our text recognized the distinction between Law and grace, as well as what constitutes an unnecessary burden upon the believers. Peter boldly announced, “But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they” (Acts 15:11). He referred to the Law, as a means of salvation, in this way: “Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?” (Acts 15:10).

James saw the imposition of Law upon the Gentile believers as a troubling influence: “Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God” (Acts 15:19).

Throughout the last 40-50 years, I have become increasingly aware of the obtuseness of the modern church concerning the distinction between Law and grace. There is a vast difference between being saved by doing and saved by believing. Those who are unlearned in this matter suggest that being saved by grace through faith eliminates doing, blissfully unaware of the fact that it is really the only means through which acceptable doing can be accomplished. At the summary level, salvation is “by grace through faith” (Eph 2:8). At the foundational level men are “justified by faith without the deeds of the law” (Rom 3:28). When it comes to what men “must” do, the commandments all relate to an appropriate response to the Gospel itself, not to humanly devised plans, or the deeds of the law. Thus we read of obeying “the Gospel” (Rom 10:16; 2 Thess 1:8), and obeying “the form of the doctrine of the Gospel” (Rom 6:17). Being circumcised and keeping the Law of Moses does not fall into that category.

THE LESSER GLORY

The Old Covenant, that was based upon the Ten Commandments, which were “the words of the covenant” (Ex 34:28), did have a glory. That Old Covenant was, Paul said, “glorious” (2 Cor 3:7,9,10,11). However, it was an inferior glory that was caused to pass away by the greater glory of the New Covenant – like the light of the sun causes the moon to lose its glory. The New Covenant is said to be “rather glorious” (2 Cor 3:8), and to “exceed in glory” (2 Cor 3:9). It has a glory that remains, and cannot possibly be superseded by any covenant that has a greater glory (2 Cor 3:11). Something that has a lesser glory cannot possibly make a contribution to the effectiveness of what possesses the greater glory.

The Old Covenant was the ultimate moral code, and stands for all such law. It was the solitary example of what it means to live by rules, or codified law. It is not possible to come up with a better code of outward conduct that was provided in “the Law of Moses.” You may be sure that if it makes no contribution to salvation, no law originated by men can do so. If it cannot bring transformation, peace, and fellowship with God, precisely who is the man who would presume to introduce a law, principle, or rule, claiming that it is capable of doing so.

If men really prefer a procedurally driven religion, then they must adopt the Law of Moses, for that is the only ordained Law of that sort. In the keeping of it, nothing can ever be omitted. Absolute perfect and unwavering compliance is required (Ex 23:22; Lev 18:5; 20:22; 26:14-16; Num 15:40; Deut 6:24-25; 11:22,32; 13:18; 15:5; 19:9; 28:1). Of course, once a person engages in a conscientious effort to keep all of the commandments of the Law without any exception, and to do so in a consistent, perfect, and unwavering manner, he will come to the conclusion that he requires a Savior. Only a single infraction produces this condition, to say nothing of continuing to live in such a manner, coming short of the glory of God (Rom 3:23).

One of the characteristics of man-made programs is that they allow for infractions, even though they may not be condoned. The person is thought to be making progress if they do not fall as often, or may even be able to go for a considerable time without falling. The difficulty with such an arrangement is that the person never really sees the need for a Savior. They are taught to maintain the view that they will eventually be able to control, or manage, their flaws. As I am seeking not to be overly abrasive, this is an error of unspeakable magnitude, flying the face of the Divine assessment of humanity, as well as the message of the Gospel itself.

It is in its conviction of the absolute helplessness of the sinner that the Law “is our schoolmaster, to bring us to Christ” (Gal 3:24). Of course, once brought to Christ, when faith has come, “We are no longer under a schoolmaster” (Gal 3:25). Those, therefore, who perpetrate “schoolmaster” type programs are reintroducing bondage to the people, not freedom. The perception of this circumstance is seen in this text.

Something to Be Seen

The response of Peter and James, together with the letters that are being sent out, postulates a keen awareness of the adverse impact of powerless rules and regulations upon the human spirit. This circumstance was one that could not be ignored, or tabled because of the imagined priority of saving lost souls. Souls that have been delivered, yet have returned to a code of law, are in a more serious condition than those who have never believed at all. Paul says that Christ has “become of no effect” to such people, and that they have “fallen from grace” (Gal 5:4). In such a case, he writes, “Christ will profit you nothing” (Gal 5:2).

Such statements have some alarming implications. The point here is that the people at this conference now saw it, and were prepared to do something decisive about it.

THEY WERE ALL TOGETHER

Here is an example of keeping “the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” (Eph 4:3). The Scriptural record of godly people is an example of the doctrine being lived out. The “doctrine of Christ” is not philosophical, but is the expression of truth that is accompanied with Divine power. If what men say they believe does not direct how they think and what they do, it is of no practical value, even though it may technically be called the truth. Salvation is not delivering men from the power of darkness and translating them into the kingdom of Christ in spite of their response to the Gospel. Their response, as constrained by faith and through the Spirit, is the appointed means of effecting the salvation of God.

In a grand display of keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, there is perfect accord among the apostles, elders, and the whole church in Jerusalem. Keeping in mind that the answer to the dilemma they were facing was not perceived immediately – either in Antioch or Jerusalem – we are being made privy to the marvelous working of the Lord among His people. It is all done with decency and order, all the while with the brethren maintaining sound minds and yielded hearts.

EVERYONE WAS PLEASED

“15:22a “Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church . . .” Other versions read, “seemed good,” NASB “decided to choose,” NIV “with the consent of,” NRSV “decided to,” CJB “in agreement with,” NAB “with the whole congregation,” TNT “with the whole assembly,” YLT “voted to,” LIVING “wanted to,” IE “with the approval of,” WEYMOUTH “in cooperation with,” WILLIAMS and “together with the whole resolved.” AMPLIFIED “agreed to,” PHILLIPS “then it seemed to the,” INTERLINEAR and “seemed best to.” EMTV

The words “Then pleased it” are translated from the two Greek words To,te e;doxe. The first word means “Then, at that time,” THAYER and “thereupon,” FRIBERG. The second word means, “to think . . . to judge,” THAYER “to express one's will or pleasure it seems best or good, decide,” FRIBERG “be disposed,” UBS “to regard something as presumably true,” LOUW-NIDA and “to whom it may seem good, to whom it is a pleasure, to whom may be disposed in their heart.” LEH. What took place after the speech of James was a most marvelous work. There is no record of further dialog following the words of James. What he said was not thrown open to discussion. Instead, there was immediate and perfect accord among everyone present – the apostles, the elders, and the whole church. We know this included Paul and Barnabas, and those brethren who came with them from Antioch.

We do not know how many brethren constituted “the whole church” in Jerusalem. Indications are that there was a considerable number. Some time later, when Paul returned to Jerusalem, James referred to “many thousands of Jews” in Jerusalem, described as being believers – a term applied exclusively to those who were in Christ (Acts 21:20).

Not only were there probably a vast number of people present, there were also appointed and seasoned leaders: apostles and elders. Prophets were also present, Barnabas being one, and at least two more who will be named later. Yet, after a single statement made by James, there is perfect accord among these brethren – large in number, and broad in experience and insight.

There are a number of things that are made known in this circumstance – things that confirm the truth of the doctrine that was held by the brethren.

- THE UNITY OF THE SPIRIT. Here is an example of “the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” (Eph 4:3). Unity involves thinking alike as well as being together.

- THE UNITY OF THE FAITH. We also have an example of “the unity of the faith” (Eph 4:13). Faith enables the minds of those possessing it to focus on the same thing and arrive at the same conclusions.

- THE SAME MIND AND THE SAME JUDGMENT. Considering the number of the people and the scope of their experience, here is a marvelous example of the people of God having “the same mind and the same judgment” (1 Cor 1:10). This is what the prophet referred to when he said, “for they shall see eye to eye, when the LORD shall bring again Zion” (Isa 52:8).

- ONE ACCORD AND ONE MIND. This is an example of being “likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind” (Phil 2:2). Likemindedness is the result of having “the mind of the Lord” (Lev 24:12), or “the mind of Christ” (1 Cor 2:16).

- ONE BODY. This is also a wonderful commentary on what is meant by the expression “one body.” Not only is the body single, there is a harmony or accord, within it. Just as surely as there is a certain accord in a healthy human body, so there is harmony among those who comprise the body of Jesus Christ.

The absence of this kind of harmony in the modern church is largely owing to its diversion to the personal needs of individuals. While there is certainly nothing wrong with meeting the earthly and personal needs of individuals, that is not the thrust of the work of the ministry. We are not left to conjecture on this. God has revealed the proper objective, and it is the business of the professed church to embrace it. The aim of appointed gifts given to the church is, “for the equipping of the saints for the work of service, to the building up of the body of Christ ; until we all attain to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a mature man, to the measure of the stature which belongs to the fulness of Christ. As a result, we are no longer to be children, tossed here and there by waves, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the trickery of men, by craftiness in deceitful scheming; but speaking the truth in love, we are to grow up in all aspects into Him, who is the head, even Christ, from whom the whole body , being fitted and held together by that which every joint supplies, according to the proper working of each individual part , causes the growth of the body for the building up of itself in love” NASB (Eph 4:12-16).

While all of this does involve each individual, it is THE BODY that is the point. It ought to be apparent why this is so. No individual is given everything belonging to the whole body. For one thing, no single person can contain the whole of the blessing. That is a capability belonging to Christ alone. Second, the Head of the body ministers to the individual parts in order that they might minister to the others. That is simply the way He works.

In this body of believers, three pivotal testimonies have been given by Peter, Paul, and Barnabas – with Paul and Barnabas delivering a joint testimony. After due consideration and due illumination, a single conclusion was delivered by James. Yet, through the words of these men, the hearts and minds of the others were brought into perfect accord.

At the conclusion of James' word, there was not a single dissenting word! There you have evidence of the effectiveness of focusing on the salvation of God through faith, and the soundness of mind that it produces. In a very real way that is a protecting focus.

CHOSEN MEN SENT

“ 22b . . . to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas . . . ”

With unregenerate men, or with the spiritually immature, the more people that deal with an issue, the more possibility there is for disagreement. However, no such threat is apparent in the handling of the case before us. First, the church in Antioch sent some of their number with Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem. Now, the brethren at Jerusalem will send some of their number with those from Antioch, as they return to deliver letters of instruction to the brethren.

MEN OF THEIR OWN COMPANY

Other versions read, “men from among them,” NASB “some of their own men,” NIV “men from among their members,” NRSV “men out of their company,” ASV “men from among themselves,” CJB “some of their men,” GWN “representatives,” NAB “delegates,” NLT and “some of their number.” MONTGOMERY

It is apparent that the early believers had congregations, as opposed to being a mass of people who did not meet together, or that only met in small groups. These brethren determined to send men from their own “company,” assembly, or congregation. They were men with whom the people were familiar, and who had ministered among them. This is not the first time a choice was made from within a known group of believers.

- Matthias was chosen from among the disciples who assembled together (Acts 1:23-26).
- Seven men were chosen from among the brethren to administer the daily distribution of food (Acts 6:3,5).
- Peter and John were sent by Jerusalem to Samaria (Acts 8:14).
- Barnabas was sent from Jerusalem to Antioch (Acts 11:22).

The brethren in Antioch send relief to the brethren in Judaea by the hands of Barnabas and Saul (Acts 11:30).

- Certain members of the Antioch church were sent with Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem concerning the question of the necessity of circumcision and keeping the Law (Acts 15:2).
- Now certain brethren are chosen to be sent back with the entourage from Antioch with letters for the brethren (Acts 15:22).

Note, there was perfect accord in each of these cases. No disruption or disagreement was found among the saints.

JUDAS AND SILAS

In being a “Servant” Jesus was not meeting the desires of the people, giving them what they preferred, and carrying out their will. He was fundamentally the Servant of God, doing His will and promoting the Divinely revealed interests of the people.

“ . . . namely, Judas surnamed Barsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren.” Other versions read, “leading men among the brethren,” NKJV “leaders among the brothers,” NIV “leading men in the brotherhood,” NJB “two of the church leaders.” NLT

“Chief Men”

There is such a thing as leading individuals – prominent for their work and insight. The Gentile world has “chief captains” (Gen 21:22), “chief of the butlers” (Gen 40:2), the “chief baker” (Gen 40:16)

Among the Jews there were “chief men” (Lev 21:4), “chief of the house” or “household” (Num 3:24), “chief over the Levites” (Num 3:32), “Moses and Aaron the chief of Israel” (Num 4:46), “chief fathers of the congregation” (Num 31:26), “chief of the tribes” (Deut 1:15), “chief rulers” (2 Sam 8:18), “chief among the captains” (2 Sam 23:8), “chief of Solomon’s officers” (1 Kgs 5:16), “chief of the guard” (1 Kgs 14:27), “chief porters” (1 Chron 9:26), “chief of the singers” (Neh 12:46), “the chief musician ” (Psa 4:1), and “the chief priest” (Jer 52:24).

Jesus spoke of those who would be “chief” among His disciples (Matt 20:27). Paul was perceived as a “chief speaker” (Acts 14:12). There were “chief women” in Athens who “believed and consorted with Paul and Silas” (Acts 17:4).

The technical definition of “chief” is “To lead, I. e. a. to go before; b. to be a leader; to rule, command; to have authority over,” THAYER “leading, governing,” FRIBERG and “to go before, lead the way.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

Jesus defined the manner in which this word is used among those who fear the Lord: “And He said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve” (Luke 22:26).

A “chief” person is a servant – “he that doth serve.” The best way to more precisely define servant is to consider Jesus, who Himself is described as a “Servant” (Isa 42:1; 49:6; 50:10; 52:13; 53:11; Zech 3:8; Matt 12:18; Acts 3:13,26; 4:27,30). In being a “Servant” Jesus was not meeting the desires of the people, giving them what they preferred, and carrying out their will. He was fundamentally the Servant of God, doing His will and promoting the Divinely revealed interests of the people. He also pioneered the way to God, opening up a new and living way, and is leading the people in that proper way.

“Chief men” among the saints are those who lead the people in the ways of the Lord. They are the first to perceive the will and ways of God, then delivering them to the people. These are the people through whom the Lord speaks in new and spiritually refreshing ways. They are among those who perceive the will of the Lord more quickly. They can detect the encroachment of error in time to warn the people. Of themselves they are not better than the other people, but are more profitable to them. Their wisdom and insight does not promote their self interests, pride, or undue veneration.

“Judas Surnamed Barsabas”

“Judas” is the Greek form of Judah (Matt 1:2), and means “he shall be praised.” He is surnamed, a way of distinguishing him from other men with the same name. “Barsabas” means “son of [Bar] Sabas.” One of the men qualified to fill the place vacated by Judas was Joseph, also called “Barsabas,” or a son of Sabas (Acts 1:23). If this is the same Sabas, he certainly had two distinguished sons.

PEOPLE WITH THE NAME JUDAH/JUDAS

1. The patriarch Judah, son of Jacob – Gen 29:35; Matthew 1:2, 3.
2. One of the priests exiled to Babylon – Ezra 10:23.
3. Another priest during the time of Nehemiah – Neh 12:8.
4. A Benjamite, a ruler in Jerusalem during the time of Nehemiah – Neh 11:9.
5. A priest who assisted in the dedication of the rebuilt wall of Jerusalem – Neh 12:34,36
6. One of the Levites who renounced his Gentile wife after the Babylonian captivity – Ezra 10:23.
7. One of Jesus' brothers – Matt 13:55.
8. A person surnamed " the Galilean " – Acts 5:37
9. Son of Simon– John 6:71; 13:2, 26, surnamed (always in the other Gospels) ISCARIOT, to distinguish him from the other apostle of the same name.
10. The brother of James and an apostle– Lk 6:16; Acts 1:13
11. A disciple who entertained Paul – Acts 9:11

Other such designations include "Barjona" (son of Jonah – Matt 15:17), "Barabbas" (son of Abba – Matt 27:16), "Bartholomew" (son of Tolmai – Mk 3:18), "Bartimaeus" (son of Timaeus – Mk 10:46), and "Barnabas" (son of consolation – Acts 4:36).

"Silas"

This is the first reference to this man. He is mentioned thirteen times in the book of Acts (15:22,27,32,34,40; 16:19,25, 29; 17:4,10,14,15; 18:5). A considerable number of Scriptural and language scholars are of the opinion that "Silas" is a contraction of the name "Silvanus," who is identified as laboring with Paul (2 Cor 1:19; 1 Thess 1:1; 2 Thess 1:1; 1 Pet 5:12). To my knowledge, there has not been a satisfactory refutation of this view. "Silvanus" is considered to be the Latin form of "Silas." He was certainly a prominent figure in the labors of Paul.

A REMINDER

It is necessary to remember how the early church addressed the intrusion of questionable doctrine. It was treated in such a manner as to allow the discovery of the true nature of the doctrine. In other words, it was a way through which the Lord could make the truth known. The following reveals something of the nature of their approach.

- THEY CONTENDED FOR THE TRUTH. First, those with some understanding disputed against the statement that it was necessary to be circumcised to be saved (15:2a).
- THEY SOUGHT FOR FURTHER UNDERSTANDING. Second, with the absence of total agreement, the brethren determined to send Paul and Barnabas, with certain of their own number, to the apostles and elders in Jerusalem "about this question" (15:2b).
- THEY REPORTED WHAT THE LORD HAD DONE. On their way, they declared the conversion of the Gentiles, causing "great joy among the brethren" (15:3).
- THEY DECLARED WHAT GOD HAD DONE THROUGH THEM. When they arrived in Jerusalem, and were received by the church and the apostles and elders, they "declared all things that God had done with them" (15:4).
- THEY CONSIDERED THE MATTER. When some arose, affirming that circumcision and the keeping of "the law of Moses" were bound upon the Gentiles, "the apostles and elders came together for to consider this matter" (15:5-6).

• THEY ENGAGED IN GODLY DISPUTATION. Unwilling to accept this view, there was much disputation among the brethren over the matter, each presenting the opposing views (15:7).

• PETER REPORTED WHAT GOD HAD DONE THROUGH HIM. After the discussion was finished, Peter reminded them that God had chosen him to open the door of faith to the Gentiles, again reporting what had taken place at that time (15:7-11).

• HOLY CONCLUSIONS WERE DRAWN. Peter also presented some inspired conclusions:

- God gave the Gentiles the Holy Spirit as He did to the disciples (15:8).

- God purified their hearts by faith (15:9).

- That it would be tempting God to impose a yoke upon the Gentiles that the Jews themselves were “unable to bear” (15:10).

- The Jews would be saved “through the grace of God,” even as the Gentiles (15:11).

• MORE REPORTS OF WHAT THE LORD HAD DONE AMONG THE GENTILES. Paul and Barnabas declared “what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them” (15:12).

• MORE GODLY CONCLUSIONS. After every one had held their peace, James responded giving some more inspired conclusions.

- God had visited the Gentiles to “take out of them a people for His name” (15:14).

- This was in perfect accord with the declaration of the prophets (15:15-17).

- The works of God are known to Him “from the beginning” (15:18).

- They should not trouble those who had turned to God from among the Gentiles (15:19).

- It would be appropriate to send letters to the Gentiles clarifying what was really necessary (15:19-21).

What a marvelous example of arriving at a condition of both heart and mind where the people have the same mind and judgment! The natural man cannot do such things, for he is basically self-centered. Only those with honest and good hearts can do this.

THE MANNER OF THE LETTERS

“ 23 And they wrote letters by them after this manner; The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia.”

Unlike many, these brethren carried out what they had determined to do. You may recall that the church in Corinth had to be admonished to actually take up the funds they had said they would give to the poor saints in Jerusalem (2 Cor 8:10-11). No such admonition was required here. They did what they saw was right, not tarrying. Those who desire for God to “make no tarrying” (Psa 40:17; 70:5), should not themselves be noted for delaying and procrastinating. Even under the Law, the Lord told the people, “Thou shalt not delay to offer the first of thy ripe fruits, and of thy liquors: the firstborn of thy sons shalt thou give unto me” (Ex 22:29). Those who linger in a state of indecision or inactivity are not wise.

THEY WROTE LETTERS AFTER THIS MANNER

This reflects the nature of life in Christ Jesus, which desires the blessing and benefit of those who are in the Son. Even though there are times when believers must be corrected, there is an overriding desire for their benefit and the increase of their joy.

“And they wrote letters by them after this manner . . .” Other versions read, “wrote this letter,” NKJV “sent this letter,” NASB “sent the following letter,” NIV and “wrote thus.” ASV

The words “after this manner” mean “as follows, or “thus,” THAYER and “this (one) here,” FRIBERG In other words, this is not an interpretation of what was said, or a certain view of what it might have meant. This is what was actually written with no modification.

THE APOSTLES, ELDERS, AND BRETHREN

“The apostles and elders and brethren . . .” Other versions read, “the apostles and the brethren who are elders,” NASB “the apostles and elders, your brothers,” NIV “the brothers, both the apostles and elders,” NRSV “apostles and the elders, brethren,” ASV “Apostles and the older brothers,” BBE “emissaries and the elders, your brothers,” CJB “apostles, and the elders, and the brethren,” DARBY “ APOSTLES , and the Elders, and the brethren,” GENEVA “from the apostles and elders, your brothers in Jerusalem,” NLT “apostles, and the elders, and the brethren,” YLT “The apostles, elders and brothers at Jerusalem,” LIVING and “The brethren, both the apostles and the elders.” AMPLIFIED

I do not concur with some of the translations that represent the word “brethren,” or “brothers,” as applying only to the apostles and elders, or even to only the elders. While the Greek grammar can be construed to mean this, it appears to me that it is not a fair representation of the case. First, it was the decision of “the apostles, and elders, with the whole church” to send the letter (15:22). They all participated in choosing and sending the men who were to deliver the letter. I do not know what purpose is served by suggesting the letter was only from the apostles and elders.

It is quite true that the brethren in Antioch had sent their inquiry to “the apostles and elders” at Jerusalem (15:2). However, it presents a more accurate picture of the body of Christ to affirm the unanimity of the brethren in Jerusalem on this matter. The Gentiles would not be asked to do something – namely, yield to the counsel of the apostles and elders – that the rest of the brethren in Jerusalem had not done themselves. The strength of the letter is not only in the fact that it involved the assessment of the apostles and elders. That assessment also resulted in a conclusion and response that reflected the mind-set of the entire church in Jerusalem. There we have the mind of Christ received by all.

GREETING

“ . . . send greeting . . .” Other versions read, “Greetings,” NKJV “may joy be with you,” BBE “Dear brothers and sisters,” GWN “Dear brothers,” IE and “send their greetings.” PHILLIPS

The Greek word translated “greeting” is cairein (khai-ee-ro), which means “to rejoice, be glad in the proper and strict sense,” THAYER “be delighted,” FRIBERG and “to enjoy a state of happiness and well-being.” LOUW-NIDA

This reflects the nature of life in Christ Jesus, which desires the blessing and benefit of those who are in the Son. Even though there are times when believers must be corrected, there is an overriding desire for their benefit and the increase of their joy. The fundamental trait of the New Covenant is not to uncover flaws and deficiencies, but to bring about blessing. That is what compelled holy men of God to deliver rebukes and administer correction when it was required.

There is an approach to life in Christ that only seeks to address trouble and eliminate error. While such things are necessary, they are the means to a higher and everlasting state of blessing. In light of this kind of approach error is seen as a hindrance to blessing, and not merely the path to cursing. This by no means tones down the approach to correction – something that is taking place in this very text. Even under the Law this kind of desire was made known.

• THE AARONIC BLESSING. “The LORD bless thee, and keep thee: The LORD make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee: The LORD lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace” (Num 6:24-26).

• THE DAVIDIC BLESSING. “The LORD hear thee in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob defend thee; Send thee help from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Zion; Remember all thy offerings, and accept thy burnt sacrifice; Selah. Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel” (Psa 20:1-4).

Apostolic greetings in the epistles also reflect this profound desire for the welfare and spiritual advanced of the people of God.

• A PAULINE GREETING. “Grace to you and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ” (Rom 1:7).

• A GREETING FROM PETER. “Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord” (2 Pet 1:2).

Wherever there is an institutional spirit, such as that reflected in spiritual Babylon, there is a total absence of this kind of spirit. It is not unusual to find sensitive souls languishing for lack of spiritual nourishment amidst the teeming activity of a church that is off course. Such a condition is an affront to the truth of God, and the evidence of aloofness from Christ.

UNTO THE BRETHREN

“ . . . unto the brethren . . .” Other versions read, “the Gentile believers,” NIV “the believers of Gentile origin,” NRSV “the brothers from among the Gentiles,” CSB “their non-Jewish brothers and sisters,” GWN “Gentile brothers and sisters,” NET “the brothers of Gentile birth,” NJB “who are of the nations,” YLT and “the Gentile brotherhood.” MONTGOMERY

There is more in this recognition than lies on the surface of the text. When Peter went to the house of Cornelius, he spoke of his former mind-set – one from which he had then been delivered. “Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean” (Acts 10:28). In this letter, there is not the slightest evidence that this thought was now present in Jerusalem. Now, after much disputation, discussion, and testimony, the people had seen that God was at work among the Gentiles. That perception overthrew any imagination they may have had concerning the supposed inferiority of Gentile believers.

ANTIOCH, SYRIA, AND CILICIA

“ . . . which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia.”

Antioch was a city, and Syria and Cilicia were regions. Syria was a province and kingdom in Western Asia. When Jesus went about doing good and healing all who were oppressed of the devil (Acts 10:36), “His fame went throughout all Syria” (Matt 4:24). Luke says that at the time of the birth of Jesus, “Cyrenius was the governor of Syria” (Lk 2:2). Later, Paul would go throughout Syria “confirming the churches” (Acts 15:41; Gal 1:21).

Syria was situated directly North of Galilee. It extended from the Mediterranean Sea to the Tigris River, and from Canaan to Mount Taurus. Some Biblical cities located in Syria include Laodicea, Sidon, Tyre, Damascus, Joppa, Ashdod, and Gaza. One of the better known mounts in that area is Mount Nebo from which Moses saw the promised land (Deut 32:49).

Cilicia was bounded on the West by Pamphylia, with the Cilicia Sea on the South (Acts 27:5). When Stephen disputed with those in the synagogue of the Libertines, some aligned against him were from Cilicia (Acts 6:9). Tarsus, the home city of the Apostle Paul, is described as “a city in Cilicia” (Acts 21:39; 22:3; 23:34).

Prior to His ascension, when Jesus spoke to His disciples, He told them to be “witnesses” unto Him in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth” (Acts 1:8). Our text reveals the manner in which this commission was carried out. The disciples did not disperse in a disorderly manner, hopscotching, as it were, from place to place. They moved Northward into adjoining areas, saturating them with the Gospel. Then they moved Westward, covering every area with the good news of the Gospel. It was a kind of saturation of a vast segment of the world.

This was the manner in which Christ’s direction was fulfilled. It confirms that the Gospel was, indeed, for “every creature” (Matt 16:15). The only places they did not go is where the Spirit forbade them to go (Acts 6:6-7).

Knowledge of the Work of God

It is also important to note that the believers had extensive knowledge of the work of the Lord in other areas. They met together, but their groups were not self-centered or self-contained.

They Were Concerned About Believers

It is also evident the early church was concerned about believers in others areas, determined to assist them in the apprehension of the truth, and protect them against the intrusion of false doctrines. Of course, this type of concern has nearly been obliterated by sectarianism. As soon as the institutionalized church moves in, the concern for those outside of its own self-determined boundaries are forgotten. This is because a sectarian spirit is fundamentally carnal, or fleshly, and cannot think of the whole body – in synch with the Holy Spirit.

THE IMPACT OF FALSE TEACHING

“ 24 Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom we gave no such commandment . . . ”

How will the apostles, elders, and brethren in Jerusalem frame their response to the situation with the Gentiles. How will they refer to those who delivered an erroneous message? What will be the assessment of that message and its impact upon those who heard it? How will they describe their association with the propagators of the message that provoked the brethren in Antioch to send men to Jerusalem about the matter? The answers to these questions will provides us with a glimpse of true spiritual life, and of its regard for relationships with those who wear the name of Christ.

CERTAIN WENT OUT FROM US

“Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us . . .” Other versions read, “some of our number,” NASB “Some persons from us,” RSV “went out from amongst us,” DARBY “some individuals who came from us,” GWN “people coming from here,” NJB “which departed from us,” TNT and “having gone forth from us.” YLT

The record of those who delivered the initial message of issue said they “came down from Judaea” (15:1). That might lead to the conclusion that they were not actually a part of the Jerusalem church, but were isolated from it. However, James makes clear this was not the case. They were identified with the church, as were Ananias and Sapphira. And, like that pair who were judged of God, had been with them for some time with no apparent offense.

This is the first account of any doctrinal dissension in the early church, and even then, these men had not apparently expressed their erroneous view among the brethren. However, upon hearing that some Gentiles had turned to the Lord, their own faulty view surfaced, and they thought it expedient to make an effort to bind it upon, what they conceived to be, weaker brethren. Apparently, until this time, with the majority of the church being Jewish, there had been no issue raised about circumcision. That is, it had not been associated with the salvation that is in Christ Jesus. The greatness of the salvation itself had overshadowed any flawed views of these brethren. However now, according to what seems to me to be Divine providence, their defective understanding had surfaced.

A Principle to be Seen

Certain issues can be introduced that force faulty theology to be expressed. In this case, it was the conversion of the Gentiles – a fact that many had not comprehended was going to take place. This unexpected event caused the erroneous views of certain to rise to the surface.

In our day, a similar thing has taken place. God has called His people to be holy (1 Pet 1:15-16; 1 Thess 4:7). There has also been considerable instruction given concerning the necessity of holiness (Rom 6:19,22; 2 Cor 7:1; 1 Thess 3:13; Heb 12:14). Yet, in spite of this clear emphasis, a staggering measure of unholiness has pervaded the professing church. As Jesus said it would, iniquity is abounding, and the love of many has waxed cold (Matt 24:12).

The rise of this condition has caused many who have embraced corrupt views to surface, and to peddle their theological wares. Those who have a twisted view of the security of the believer have stepped forward and are aggressive to teach that it is not possible to fall once a person professes faith. Others have been bold to offer solutions to a lack of holiness that are nothing more than expressions of the wisdom of men. It is now easier for them to sell their psychological ideas, procedural recovery plans, and the likes. Because the church is not growing as well as it could, some have also stepped forward to propagate their church growth and church planting programs, just as though they came from God. Others, seeing the fabric of the marriage and the family come apart, have risen to promote their ideas that life in this world is the primary life, and domestic life is the fundamental life.

Those who are marketing these approaches probably entertained flawed views all along. However, there came a time when circumstances were introduced within the professed church that allowed them to promote those views with ungodly aggression. What was formerly held as an opinion is now declared as a Divinely sanctioned methodology. It is not possible to overstate the seriousness of this situation.

TROUBLED YOU WITH WORDS

“ . . . have troubled you with words . . . ” Other versions read, “disturbed you,” NASB “upset you,” CJB “confused you,” GWN “disquieted you,” MRD and “unsettling your minds.” AMPLIFIED

Here, the impact of false teaching is stated: troubling, disturbing, agitating, upsetting, disquieting, unsettling, distracting! As it is used here, the word from which “troubled” is translated has the following lexical meaning: “to cause one inward commotion, take away his calmness of mind, disturb his equanimity; to disquiet, make restless.” THAYER and “cause mental or spiritual agitation, disturb, unsettle, throw into confusion.” FRIBERG

If it is true that the peace of God will “keep your hearts and minds through Jesus Christ” (Phil 4:7), what can be said of the unsettling and agitation of the believer? Such troubling is an intrusion that causes peace to go away, and the heart and mind to become unstable. Do not doubt that such a thing can happen! There are difficult times through which faith will lead us, and peace will maintain its sensitive rule during such times. However, false teaching changes the spiritual environment from calmness to storm, and from tranquility to disruption. It is not of the same order as the winds of adversity that blow upon us “for righteousness sake.” False doctrine is the breath of Satan blowing upon the people of God, unsettling the environment, and causing all manner of adverse reactions within the hearts and minds of the people. It causes a spiritual fog that blurs the vision, throwing things into a state of confusion.

The brethren in Jerusalem did not rush to the aid of the ones who taught the necessity of circumcision and keeping the law of Moses. They rather came to the assistance of those who were being impacted by what they taught. Here is an excellent example of not having respect of persons. Ordinarily, men think of such “respect” as not despising the lowly. But it also applies to not giving undue veneration to those who appear to have been exalted. The troubling effects of the teaching of these men who went out from the brethren in Jerusalem put their persons into the background, and brought the ones effected by their teaching into the foreground.

SUBVERTING YOUR SOULS

“ . . . subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law . . .” Other versions read, “unsettling your souls,” NKJV “troubling your minds,” NIV “unsettled your minds,” NRSV “putting your souls in doubt,” BBE “unsettled your hearts,” CSB “upsetting your souls,” DARBY “cumbered your minds,” GENEVA “disturbed your peace of mind,” NAB “questioned your salvation,” LIVING and “throwing you into confusion.” AMPLIFIED

The Greek word, from which “subverting” is translated. is different from the Greek word for “troubled.” It’s meaning is, “to turn away violently from a right state, to unsettle, subvert,” THAYER “tear down, upset, unsettle,” FRIBERG “to break up one's camp, march away.” LIDDELL-SCOTT In the English language, the word “subvert” means “to overturn or overthrow from the foundation: RUIN.” WEBSTER

Here we go beyond agitation and confusion. It is possible for a ship to maintain its course in a storm, even though it will done with considerable difficulty. A driver can get to his destination, even if his vehicle is faulty, requiring frequent stops and repairs. But when the person navigating the ship is on the course leading in the wrong direction, or the driver of a land vehicle is on the a road going in another direction, there is no hope of arriving at the desired destination. There are roads that, if traveled, guarantee you will not arrive at the proper destination. A person desiring to journey to a southern city can travel forever on an East-West road, rendering it impossible to ever arrive at a Southern goal. A ship master can have his boat placed in a body of water that does not even have a docking point where he desires to go. If he aims to sail to India, and places his ship in Lake Michigan, or even the Mediterranean Sea, there is no possible way to arrive at India on those bodies of water.

Even so, there are doctrines that, even though they may be apparently simplistic and uncomplicated, manage to get the person on the wrong doctrinal road, or place them in the wrong sea of teaching. They get the people off-course, so they begin to think differently. They will read the Bible differently, see God in a faulty way, and see salvation incorrectly.

Teaching that Gentile converts must be circumcised and keep the law of Moses did precisely that. Pursued to its logical conclusion that would lead to erroneous decisions. Here are some examples of such determinations.

- That the Old Covenant did not have a lesser glory, and was never intended to be overshadowed by a covenant of greater glory (2 Cor 3:6-18).
- That the New Covenant is really not new at all, but simply a kind of update of the Old Covenant (Heb 8:8-13).
- That what is outward supercedes what is inward (Rom 2:29).

- That faith does not accomplish what is declared of it (Acts 15:9; Rom 1:16; 5:1; 1 Pet 1:5).

In Our Time

Our time is marked by the dissemination of doctrines that throw the people of God off-course, heading them the wrong direction. Doctrines such as the teaching that we are locked into salvation, or that we can recover from sin procedurally, or that we remain fundamentally sinful after we are born again. Such doctrines are not innocent. They tend to move the one who receives them off the narrow road that leads to life. It does this by changing, or refocusing, their attention. In regeneration one's attention is fixed upon Christ. Working through the powerful Gospel, the Spirit shows the individual the Lord Jesus, who is the appointed means of obtaining remission and glory – and those two go together. Immediately, Satan goes to work to move the attention of the individual from Jesus to things, and other matters that center in self and this world. His effort is successful when the person is subverted, exiting the “highway of holiness” that leads to glory, to take a road that eventually merges with the broad road that leads to destruction (Matt 7:13).

WE GAVE NO SUCH COMMANDMENT

“ . . . to whom we gave no such commandment . . . ” Other versions read, “to whom we gave no instruction,” NASB “without our authorization,” NIV “with no instruction from us,” NRSV “we gave no such order,” BBE “we did not authorize these men to speak,” GWN “without any mandate from us,” NAB “acting without any authority from ourselves,” NJB “we did give no charge,” YLT “we didn't tell them to do this,” IE and “we gave them no express orders or instructions [on the points in question].” AMPLIFIED

At this point, the ones sending the letter make no apology for the expression of the troubling teachers who went out from them. Neither do they attempt to justify them or offer some kind of explanation that will reduce the seriousness of what they had taught. It was the souls of the Gentile brethren that were at stake here, and therefore they made clear that the teaching to which they had been subjected did not originate with them – and the apostles had been given special knowledge to lay the foundation. James had also been given special insight on the matter before them. This is of significance, because the church is built upon “the foundation of the apostles and prophets” (Eph 2:20). Any teaching that was at variance with theirs could not possibly have been proper. The church is built upon the foundation they have put in place. That is the point that is being made. This remains true in our generation. The men who had delivered the erroneous word had taken upon themselves to speak for God.

IT SEEMED GOOD TO US TO SEND CHOSEN MEN

“ 25 It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul, 26 Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. 27 We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth.”

The letter introduces the additional men who were being sent from Jerusalem. It will be interesting to take special note of their credentials. It reveals now the early brethren thought about Kingdom laborers.

IT SEEMED GOOD UNTO US

“ It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord . . . ” Other versions read, “it seemed good to us, having become of one mind,” “we all agreed,” NIV “we decided unanimously,” NRSV “it seemed good to us, having come to one accord,” RSV “we have unanimously decided,” CJB “we all have thought fit, when assembled,” MRD “we have with one accord decided,” NAB “So we decided, having come to complete agreement,” NLT “it seemed to us a good thing, when we were come together with one accord,” PNT “we have passed a unanimous resolution,” WILLIAMS and “It has been resolved by us in assembly” AMPLIFIED

The words “seemed good” speaks of the conclusion of deliberation, or sober thought. After considering the matter there was perfect unanimity among the Jerusalem brethren. This was a choice that pleased them all, for “seemed good” means that what was decided satisfied all of the brethren. They saw the propriety of what was being done and all agreed that it was the best thing to do. This was done when they were all in assembly.

Thus, “the unity of the Spirit” is articulated, giving an example to the Gentile believers of being of the same mind and the same judgment. This was done after hearing all of the facts and issues involved and carefully weighing them in a public setting. Some church leaders have rarely, if even, been in a gathering with this kind of accord. This was not a miracle, but the result of people cleaving to the Lord with purpose of heart, having a high regard for the will of God, and a profound love for the people of God.

SENDING CHOSEN MEN

“ . . . to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul . . .” Other versions read, “select men,” NASB “To choose some men,” NIV “choose representatives,” NRSV “official representatives,” NLT and “select certain men.” WILLIAMS

I suppose that no one is fully able to delineate the effect of unseasoned leaders in the church, or the practice of vaulting novices to offices of leadership. That is not something that was practiced by the early church, and it ought not to be practiced by the church of our time.

While there are not distinctions within the body of Christ such as Jew and Gentile, male and female, and bond and free (Gal 3:28), there are spiritual distinctions . John referred to “fathers,” “young men,” and “little children” (1 John 2:13-14). Paul distinguished those who were “spiritual,” as being able to restore one who had been “overtaken in a fault” (Gal 6:1). He also referred to those who were “perfect,” or mature (1 Cor 2:6; Phil 3:15), and those who “are strong,” as compared with “the weak” (Rom 15:1). A distinction is also made between those who are “teachers” and those who must be taught “the first principles of the oracles of God” – between those who “have need of milk,” and those who can subsist on “strong meat” (Heb 5:12).

These distinctions are not static, or ones into which believers is locked. They represent stages of development that are integral to growing up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:15), being changed from glory to glory by the Spirit of God (2 Cor 3:18), or being conformed to the image of Christ (Rom 8:29). It is refreshing to read of a vast assembly of people who considered it “good” to select spiritually competent men for the work of the Lord.

The point here is that the church in Jerusalem did not send novices to accompany the brethren who came from Antioch. It was necessary that mature men be able to witness to the truth of the counsel that was being delivered, as well as the unanimity of the brethren in Jerusalem.

I suppose that no one is fully able to delineate the effect of unseasoned leaders in the church, or the practice of vaulting novices to offices of leadership. That is not something that was practiced by the early church, and it ought not to be practiced by the church of our time. It is good to consider that clarification and spiritual maturity are not necessarily united with advanced age. There are young men like Timothy who, taking advantage of the grace made available to all believers, advanced beyond the normal boundaries of his years. There are children like Samuel, Daniel, Hananiah, Mishel, and Azariah, whose spiritual advancement was unusual for their age. With all of the youth leaders and programs that are in place these days, you might think we would have a harvest of spiritually mature and informed young people. However, as a rule, there is little or no sign of such things. People have mistaken youthful zeal for spirituality, and they are not at all the same thing.

This kind of commitment is only possible when people give themselves wholly to the Lord, living “unto” Him who died for them and rose again.

THEY HAZARDED THEIR LIVES

“Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.” Other versions read, “risked their lives,” NKJV “given up their lives,” BBE “dedicated their lives,” CJB “committed their lives,” NJB “jeoparded their lives,” TNT and “endangered their very lives,” WEYMOUTH

The word “hazarded” is translated from the Greek word paradedwko,si, which has the following lexical meaning: “to give over . . . properly, to give into the hands (of another) . . . to give over into (one's) power or use,” THAYER “of a self-sacrificial love give up, yield up, risk (one's life),” FRIBERG

This commendation pertains to Barnabas and Paul, who had subjected themselves to great danger for the name of Christ (Acts 13:50; 14:19). They were living examples of men who had given their lives to Christ, and were willing to go wherever they were sent, and deliver the words given to them to speak. Paul verbalized this attitude when he spoke to the elders from Ephesus: “neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God” (Acts 20:24). Again, he wrote To the Galatians, “I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me” (Gal 2:20).

This kind of commitment is only possible when people give themselves wholly to the Lord, living “unto” Him who died for them and rose again (2 Cor 5:15). While this is the objective for all of those in Christ Jesus, those who have actually done this have always been distinguished for it. Particularly in our time, living solely for the Lord is an exceedingly rare phenomenon. For many, even the slightest inconvenience causes them to draw back, ceasing to press forward. It is a sad circumstance, and has brought the weight of sorrow upon many laborers who have sought to benefit the saints of God. As for myself, I have a growing disdain for any message, or approach to preaching and teaching, that contributes to such an attitude. There is a kind of casual spirit that is being cultured in our day that is of great concern to me. People are actually being led into mediocrity by the pied pipers of faddish religion.

JUDAS AND SILAS

“We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth.”

The intention was for Judas and Silas to bear personal testimony to the things that were written in the letters. There would be a perfect accord of their words with the instructions contained in the letters being delivered. This was because of their insight and spiritual understanding, not their mere familiarity with the letters.

I doubt that it was necessary for them to study the letters on the way to make sure they could rehearse them properly. Their attesting words were not intended to be a mere rehearsal of what was read. Rather, their independent comments on the subject would be in perfect accord with what was written. Should they be interrogated about the matter, there would be no conflict of their reply with the letters. That is because they were men of spiritual understanding.

IT SEEMED GOOD TO THE HOLY SPIRIT

“ 28 For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things . . .”

In this text, we are being exposed to spiritual minds – the godly way of thinking. We will find that the spiritual mind is in perfect accord with the Spirit of God. A religion that permits men to maintain a mind that is at variance with the Word of God cannot be true. Redemption brings accords between God and men, dispelling the variance that exists by nature. This accord is spelled out in the New Covenant. “For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest” (Heb 8:10-11).

- The mind is impacted: “ I will put My laws into their mind.”
- The heart is made new: “ I will...write them in their hearts.”
- God will be personalized to them, and be their preference: “ I will be to them a God.”
- God will be inclined to them: “ they shall be to Me a people.”
- There will be an experiential acquaintance with God: “they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know Me, from the least to the greatest.”

These descriptions are not theoretical, or in the abstract. They actually take place in the new Covenant. What we will now read is the result of this declared unanimity between God and man through Jesus Christ.

IT SEEMED GOOD TO THE HOLY SPIRIT AND US

“For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us . . .” Other versions read, “It seemed good to the Holy Spirit and unto us,” NASB “it was the Holy Spirit's decision—and ours—” CSB “The Holy Spirit and we have agreed,” GWN “it seemed best to the Holy Spirit and to us,” NET “It has been decided by the Holy Spirit and by ourselves,” NJB “The Holy Spirit thinks you should have no more burdens. We agree,” LIVING and “it has seemed right to the Holy Spirit and to us.” PHILLIPS

Perhaps you have heard men say of some word from God, “That is not the way I would have said it.” Or, some have referred to a Divine requirement and added, “But you know how we are, we just do not want to do what God says.” Ignorant men have a way of saying such things and making them sound intelligent, or reflective of the Christian norm. It is staggering to consider how much of this kind of talk is being heard these days.

However, our text presents a true picture of the thinking of those who are in Christ Jesus. Keep in mind that the “us” of the letter are “the apostles and elders, with the whole church ” in Jerusalem (Acts 15:22). The group is described as “all the multitude” (Acts 15:12).

Here is an example of “one mind and one mouth” (Rom 15:6), and being “of one mind” (2 Cor 13:11; Phil 1:27; 2:2; 1 Pet 3:8). When was it that the Spirit’s mind on this matter was made known? It was doubtless when James spoke, following the discussions and the reports of Peter, Paul, and Barnabas (15:13-21). It is written that following James’ words, “the apostles and elders, with the whole church,” were “pleased” to have the letters James recommended to be written and sent to “the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia” (15:22). Now, the letters confirm that the Jerusalem brethren had considered the words of James to be the expression of the Holy Spirit

Himself. Being themselves a spiritual people, they were in perfect agreement with the directive of the Holy Spirit. I acknowledge that this kind of accord makes no sense at all to an institutional mind-set. However, it makes perfect sense to those who have “the mind of Christ” (1 Cor 2:16).

NO GREATER BURDEN

“ . . . to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things . . .” Other versions read, “no greater burden than these essentials,” NASB “not to burden you with anything beyond the following requirements,” NIV “not to lay any heavier burden on you than the following requirements,” CJB “You only need to do these things,” IE and “not to lay upon you any greater burden than these indispensable requirements.” AMPLIFIED 0

This is not intended to encompass the totality of spiritual life, but only prohibitions spelled out by the Law. Note, there is no reference to living by faith (Heb 10:38), walking in the Spirit (Gal 5:25), resisting the devil (James 4:7), pursuing holiness (Heb 12:14), seeking the things that are above (Col 3:1-2), or working out ones own salvation with fear and trembling (Phil 2:12). Nothing is said about fearing God (1 Pet 2:17), desiring the sincere milk of the word (1 Pet 2:2), or keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace (Eph 4:3). There is no reference to growing in the grace and knowledge of the Lord Jesus (2 Pet 3:18), or putting on the whole armor of God (Eph 6:10-17). They are not told of the necessity of loving God (1 John 5:2), or believing Him (Rom 15:13; 1 Pet 1:8), or watching for the coming of the Lord (James 5:7-8).

No one should suspect for a moment that if all one did was “abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication” (Acts 15:29), they would have fulfilled all that is required of believers, and be doing very well.

Keep in mind that the church in Antioch was an exemplary one. They had teachers and prophets (Acts 13:1). Barnabas and Paul had remained there for a whole year, teaching much people (Acts 11:26). This is the church from which Barnabas and Saul were called by the Holy Spirit whole the church was fasting and ministering to the Lord. After completing the mission to which they were called, and returning to Antioch, Paul and Barnabas remained “a long time with the disciples” (Acts 14:27) – possible 4-8 years.

However, something had occurred for the first time there. Jewish teachers from Judaea had come and taught them that they could not be saved without be circumcised after the manner of Moses. This was the first time such teaching had been confronted and weighed. Even though there were prophets and teachers there, not the least of which were Paul and Barnabas, the matter was not sufficiently clear to arrive at an acceptable conclusion. They did not have the epistles of Paul to consult. Further, heaven did not send them a special word on the matter through their prophets.

The nature of the association of the church with Judaism was not clearly seen at that time. In fact, it was not until some time later that special insight on this association was given to Paul for proclamation.

The nature of the association of the church with Judaism was not clearly seen at that time. In fact, it was not until some time later that special insight on this association was given to Paul for proclamation (Rom 11:17;18; Eph 2:12-22| 3:3-6; Col 1:26-27).

- In Christ, the Gentiles partake of the “root and fatness of the olive tree,” which is technically a Jewish tree. What is more, it is the “root” of that tree (the promises made to Abraham), that supports Gentile believers (Rom 11:17-18).

- Gentiles, formerly “without God in the world,” have been brought close to God by the blood of Christ (Eph 2:12-13).

- The Old Covenant, which was a wall separating Jew and Gentile, has been broken down in Christ (Eph 2:14-15).
- From the Jews and the Gentiles, and in Christ Jesus, God has made “one new man” – a new creation, and new generation, or family (Eph 2:15).
- Both Jews and Gentiles are “reconciled unto God in one body” (Eph 2:16).
- Together, as “one new man” and “one body” those in Christ have “access by one Spirit unto the Father” (Eph 2:18).
- In Christ Gentiles are “no more foreigners,” but are “fellow citizens with the saints and household of God,” which was formerly limited to the Jews (Eph 2:19).
- This means that all of the promises of newness that were given exclusively to the Jews, belong to the Gentiles who have lost their former identity, and, in Christ, have become “fellowheirs” (Eph 3:6).
- Now, even though Christ was promised to the Jews alone (Deut 18: Isa 9:6-7), in Him the Gentiles enjoy “the riches of the of the glory of this mystery, which is Christ in you, the hope of glory” (Col 1:26-27).

The word that was delivered to the Gentile brethren in Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia was against the backdrop of this circumstance. Even the believers in Jerusalem had not seen the ramifications of this prior to this occasion. That is why some of them sought to impose the ceremonial law upon the Gentiles, rather than emphasizing the blessing that had been promised to Abraham and his seed (Gen 12:2; 18:18; 22:18; 26:4; 28:14). Also, until the Lord clarified this matter through James, and later through Paul, early believers did not see it clearly – namely that it was “the blessing of Abraham” (Gen 28:4) that was realized in Christ, not the inclusion of the Gentiles under the regulations of the First Covenant. Later, Paul said it this way in his epistle to the Galatians: “Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree: that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith” (Gal 3:14). Notice that this “blessing,” which was not spelled out to Abraham, involves receiving the Holy Spirit – something that Peter had attested took place among the Gentiles at the house of Cornelius.

Continued Difficulty

To this day, professing Christians have considerable difficulty distinguishing precisely what it is that is realized in Christ Jesus. Men continue to approach the subject as though morality was the fundamental issue, and that morality is enforced by laws and ordinances. They fail to see that such an approach is precisely what was done under the Old Covenant. They also forget, if they have ever known, that the administration of the Law did not make a single soul better, stronger, or more capable of obeying the Law of God. Of course, that is not why it was given. It was rather given “that every mouth might be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God” (Rom 3:19). The Old Covenant identified the need, but did not supply the remedy. During the initial development of the church, this was not so apparent. However, because of the nature of spiritual life, and the revelation of God, some clarity finally was realized. However, even then, corrective teaching was required because of the difficulties associated with failing to see the superiority of living by faith (Rom 6-8; Gal 3:2-5). Extensive teaching was also delivered to Jewish believers concerning the superiority of Christ Jesus and His priesthood (the book of Hebrews).

Continued Confusion

Our own time is marked by a pronounced ignorance on this subject – namely, the merging of Jew and Gentile into “one new man” in Christ Jesus. There simply is not much teaching being done on this subject. This is particularly reflected in an expression that has become quite common in our time

– “Judeo-Christian.” Having been incorporated into politically-correct speech, this term is defined as follows: “Judeo-Christian: having historical roots in both Judaism and Christianity. ” MERRIAM-WEBSTER A further explanation is: "A term used to describe the body of concepts and values which are thought to be held in common by Judaism and Christianity . . . historians use the term Judeo-Christian to refer to the influence of the Hebrew Bible and New Testament on Protestant thought and values . . ." WIKIPEDIA

This is not a Scriptural view of the situation. The moral, or ethical principles revealed in Moses and the Prophets are not Jewish. They are Divine, and were given to the Jews. But they were not confined to them. They were required of all men prior to the giving of the Law (Gen 4:11-12; 9:6; 18:20; 20:3). During the administration of the Old Covenant, they were also required to the heathen (Isa 13:1; 15:1; 17:1; 19:1; 21:11; 23:1; Dan 4:32; 5:22-23; Nah 1:1; Zech 9:1). It promotes inaccurate understanding when men refer to the Law, or the Ten Commandments, as “Jewish.” Because it was given through Moses, it is referred to as “the law of Moses” (Mal 4:4; John 1:17). However, in the most precise sense, it is “the law of God” (Josh 24:26; Neh 8:8; Rom 7:25), or “the law of the Lord” (Psa 1:2); Amos 2:4). When used, the expression “the law of the Jews” refers to the ceremonial law, not the tables of the covenant.

The Scriptures do not approach ethics from the standpoint of the Jews and the Christians. Nor does it postulate that the Jews and the Christians hold the same moral values and worship the same God. That is not how these things are presented by revealed truth. When men associate ethics – matters dealing with good and bad, and moral duty – with the Jews and the Christians, they have failed to accentuate the God who alone defines morality. They have unwittingly cast the issue of morality into the caldron of human opinion.

It is quite true that Paul once said, “Is He the God of the Jews only? is He not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also: Seeing it is one God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith” (Rom 3:29-30). This expression, however is not saying that the Jews and the Gentiles have the same moral values or spiritual principles. It is rather affirming that God justified them in the same manner – by faith. In order to do this, He had to show a new thing to the Gentiles, enabling them to find what they were not seeking (Isa 65:1; Rom 10:20). Further, He also justified the Jews by faith, which contradicted the folly of them seeking to obtain righteousness by their own works (Rom 9:31-32).

This unfortunate environment (ignorance of the relationship of Jews and Gentiles) has also produced a gross neglect of the writings of Moses and the Prophets. Whether by outright profession, or simply by practice, those writings (Genesis through Malachi) are imagined to have little to do with life in Christ. They are seen as pertaining to another time, and intended to be limited to the Jews. The effect of this misconception has yielded a distortion of God, His purpose, Christ Jesus, salvation, and the nature of life in Him. It has caused division in the body of God, blinded men’s eyes, and caused the simple to embrace doctrines that contradict the truth of God.

Had the early church not addressed this matter as they did, they would have put a yoke upon themselves that transcended anything they could have imagined. Yet, with the clear record of their insight, religious men have still stumbled into all manner of error. They have done it because a different mind-set is being promoted – one that does not have Christ at its center, heaven in its eye, of God’s Law in their heart.

IF YOU DO THIS, YOU WILL DO WELL

“ 29 That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.”

The brevity that characterizes these prohibitions is noteworthy. It confirms abstinence itself was the point,

When the hearts of men are good and honest, they are in Christ, and the Holy Spirit has taken up residence in them – in that context, teaching like that of our text can be followed with confidence and effectiveness.

not how it was carried out. The Ten commandments were characterized by this kind of transience. Like the directions that are given here, they were brief and to the point (Ex 20:3-17). For those who can receive it, there is a point at which extended explanations tend to obscure what is being said. This accounts for the relative impotence of the “how-to” books and methodologies that have flooded the American churches. With all of the professed expertise, explanations, and detailed procedures, sin is not diminishing in the churches. Marriage seminars ad infinitum have not diminished the growing number of divorces. Child-rearing techniques have not produced a generation of godly young people. And why is this so? Because there is too much of men in this type of teaching, and too little of God. God is not honoring these methodologies with Divine power, because they have not come from Him.

When the hearts of men are good and honest, they are in Christ, and the Holy Spirit has taken up residence in them – in that context, teaching like that of our text can be followed with confidence and effectiveness. However, if this is not true of the people, or they are addressed as though it is true, the human wisdom that is presented will overshadow the Word itself – and the Word is the means that is used by Spirit in dealing with the hearts of men (Eph 6:17). It must not be in the background!

THE PROHIBITIONS

“That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication. . .”

The determination that was made verbally, is the one that was written down: “ they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood” (Acts 15:20).

• Religious Pollution: “That ye abstain from meats offered to idols.” A proper concept of God Almighty is absolutely essential, for eternal life is knowing God, and Jesus Christ whom He sent (John 17:3). If an essential aspect of the New Covenant is, “they shall all know Me” (Jer 31:34; Heb 8:11), the understanding of God cannot remain deficient, as though there were competing gods. The truth of the matter is that repeated willing exposure to something that was presented to another god tends to produce uncomely circumstances. Thus Paul reasoned with the Corinthians concerning the technicalities of being free to eat all meats: “Eat whatever is sold in the meat market, asking no questions for conscience' sake ; for ‘the earth is the Lord's, and all its fullness’” NKJV (1 Cor 10:25-26). This was such a sensitive matter, that it even involved eating with an unbeliever: “If any of those who do not believe invites you to dinner, and you desire to go, eat whatever is set before you, asking no question for conscience' sake. But if anyone says to you , ‘This was offered to idols,’ do not eat it for the sake of the one who told you, and for conscience' sake; for ‘the earth is the Lord's, and all its fullness’ NKJV (1 Cor 10:28). Although the believer was personally aware that an idol was nothing, and that he was receiving the meat in thanksgiving to God, yet the open acknowledgment that the meat was sacrificed to an idol altered the circumstance. The impression would be left that the believer was acknowledging the idol in eating the meat (1 Cor 10:29-33), and such an impression must not be left!.

I gather from this that the instruction to the Gentiles was not intended to provoke them to ask whether or not the meat was offered to idols. They were simply to eat the meat giving thanks to God for it. If they knew it was offered to a false God, they were to avoid it, for it would detract from giving glory to God (1 Cor 10:33).

• Disdain for Life: “ and from blood, and from things strangled . . .” Life comes from God (Acts 17:26). Although life is encapsulated in the word “breath” (Acts 17:26), physiologically “the life of the flesh is in the blood” (Lev 17:11). Add to this the fact that redemption and atonement are associated with blood (Ex 30:10; Lev 17:11; Rev 5:9). In tutoring Israel under the Law, God taught them to maintain an absolute respect for blood. Nothing must be allowed to diminish that respect, or cause the people to look upon it as though it was common.

• Moral Pollution: “. . . and from fornication. . .” Although “all unrighteousness is sin,” fornication is among those sins that particularly live out self-love, as well as a disdain for others. Therefore, the child of God is told “Flee fornication,” for “Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body” (1 Cor 6:18). The body is to be a vehicle for the glory of God, not fleshly gratification. In Christ, the body has been purchased (1 Cor 6:19), and is considered to be a “member of Christ” (1 Cor 6:15). In fact, we have been bought with a price, and do not belong to ourselves. Thus the Spirit reasons, “For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's” (1 Cor 6:20). All of this teaching is inherent in the words “abstain from fornication.” When the Gentiles take that admonition seriously, they will, through the Spirit, come to reason in this manner.

It is important to note that the apostles and elders did not go beyond the boundaries established by God's Word. Often, when professed Christian teachers direct people on how to live, details are provided that are not contained in Scripture. Of course, the strength and selling point of their systems are those details. Although they may profess they are founded on Scripture, they are not the Word of God itself. In this letter, the prohibitions were obviously based upon what the Lord had said.

- Abstain from meats offered to idols – Ex 34:15; Psa 106:28.
- Fornication – Ex 24:14; Lev 18:20-23; 20:13-16; Deut 23:17; 27:20-23;
- Abstaining from blood – Gen 9:4; Lev 3:17; 7:26; Deut 15:23.
- Things strangled – Lev 17:15; 22:8; Deut 14:21.

YE SHALL DO WELL

“. . . from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well.” Other versions read, “it shall be well with you,” ASV “you will be doing the right thing,” CJB “it shall be well with you,” ERV “you will prosper,” WILLIAMS and “you will make good progress.” PHILLIPS

The phrase “do well” means more than simply doing “the right thing,” as some versions read. Nor, indeed, does doing well speak of a manner of life in which one simply continues to keep the rules. The phrase used in this letter to the churches suggests growth and advancement in Christ – spiritual progression. Some versions pick up on this implication: “you will prosper,” WILLIAMS and “you will make good progress.” PHILLIPS

This by no means suggests that spiritual life allows for breaking the rules. Such a notion is too foolish to require any further explanation.

Of itself, there is no lasting value in rule-keeping. Jesus indicated this when He said, “ Will any man of you who has a servant plowing or tending sheep say to him when he has come in from the field, Come at once and take your place at the table? Will he not instead tell him, Get my supper ready and gird yourself and serve me while I eat and drink; then afterward you yourself shall eat and drink? Is he grateful and does he praise the servant because he did what he was ordered to do? Even so on your part, when you have done everything that was assigned and commanded you, say, We are unworthy servants [possessing no merit, for we have not gone beyond our obligation]; we have [merely] done what was our duty to do” (Lk 17:7-10).

This is such a different way of thinking, that Christians in our country might even object to what Jesus plainly declared. There are entire programs, that identify themselves with Christ, that teach people to be highly pleased with their conduct because they have managed to do what they were told. Thus a person who was in bondage to strong drink is praised because he has not taken a drink for a period of time. This kind of mentality is built into the very fabric of these programs. I was raised in a religious culture in which people were praised and awarded because they regularly attended the assembly – something that is required of every believer (Heb 10:25). Perspectives like this fail to consider spiritual growth. To those who advocate them, growing in Christ is being able to go a longer time without falling unto sin. But this is total nonsense, for it violates the words of the Lord and teaches men to attach worth to abstinence instead of attainment.

Spiritual growth involves the addition of spiritual qualities, not the subduing of ungodly ones (1 Pet 1:5-8). In Christ we “have escaped from the corruption that is in the world through lust,” in order that we might appropriate what is in the kingdom of God through grace (1 Pet 1:4). Where abstinence from sin is not matched by the apprehension of the truth and its associated benefits, no advancement has been made. Transformation does not consist of dropping old habits, but of being “changed into the same image” (2 Cor 3:18).

This whole matter is being greatly obscured by the modern thrust on recovery, abstinence, and self-discipline. It is an extremely serious situation, for it is impeding growth in Christ Jesus. The Savior has taught us that the absence of fruit precedes being removed from the Vine, which is Christ Himself. “Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit He taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, He purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit . . . If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned . . . Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be My disciples . . . Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in My name, He may give it you” (John 15:2,6,8,16).

Fruit is not the absence of blight or some other plant disease. Even so, spiritual fruit is not the absence of sin, or overcoming a bad habit. From the personal perspective, refraining from sin may appear to be a gigantic accomplishment, and worthy of all praise. But that is not at all the case. Not sinning is the ground level, not the structure. It is only to the degree that we do not sin that we can add spiritual qualities to our lives. It is only to the degree that we are not giving ourselves to the flesh that we can give ourselves to the Spirit.

Flesh and spirit cannot mingle. Sin and righteousness cannot merge. Carnality and holiness cannot combine. This is why Jesus said, “No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon” (Matt 6:24). This is why Paul commanded the people to rid themselves of all filthiness and flesh and spirit, in order that they might perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord. “Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God” (2 Cor 6:17-7:1).

Advancement in spiritual life postulates a corresponding lack of involvement in sin and distraction. Thus it is written, “Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God” (Heb 12:1-2). The person who imagines that they can fix their eyes on Jesus (for that is what looking to Him means), while they indulge in sin or continue to carry distracting weights, has not thought correctly.

The Purpose of the Letters

The letters delivered to the Gentile believers were intended to assist them in ridding themselves of things that take away from spiritual life. Unholy involvements require God given capabilities – the heart, the mind, the body. They require thinking, purposing, devotion, and willingness. All of these are to be given to God, and when they are not, one's capacity for God is reduced. What is given to the flesh cannot be given to God, for we cannot serve two masters.

On the other hand, refraining from the matters that have been specified must be matched by giving themselves to the things God has provided “for life and godliness” (2 Pet 1:3). All of that is wrapped in the words, “ye shall do well.”

FARE YE WELL

“Fare ye well.” Other versions read, “Farewell,” NKJV “May you be happy,” BBE “Shalom,” CJB “Be ye steadfast in the Lord,” MRD “So fare well,” PNT “be strong,” YLT “Now we say good-bye,” LIVING “Goodbye,” ISV and “Farewell [be strong]! AMPLIFIED

The Greek word translated “fare ye well” is Errwsqe . As used here, its lexical meaning is, “to be strong, to thrive, prosper; hence, the second person (singular) imperative is the usual formula in closing a letter, e;rrwso , farewell,” THAYER

This final word had particular reference to the statement, “from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well .” The idea is that they would be strong and consistent in the fulfilling of the exhortation, for their growth in Christ depended on their success in that endeavor. The reason for this circumstance is that indulging in forbidden activity is not simply wrong. It takes something from the transgressor. In order to sin, the person has to let go of something, refocus his attention away from Christ, and allow his own interests to supercede those of the One who has purchased him.

The idea conveyed in this text is that the brethren in Jerusalem not only saw the necessity of delivering a protective word to the Gentiles. They also fervently desired that they do well in carrying out that word. In this, the real servants of God are distinguished from those who are little more than hirelings.

Some of the versions do a great injustice to the text by representing it as a kind of cultural saying – i.e. “Good-bye,” LIVING/IE and “be happy.” BBE Such representations are wholly inappropriate. The reason is that a Jewish “Farewell” differed from that of any other nation. This was a nation that had been Divinely cultured. By Divine decree and influence, their entire lives revolved around their association with God. Nothing was excluded. Some examples will suffice to establish this point.

- The Aaronic Blessing. “Speak unto Aaron and unto his sons, saying, On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel, saying unto them, The LORD bless thee, and keep thee: The LORD make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee: The LORD lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace” (Num 6:23-27).

- The Blessing of Melchisedec. “And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth” (Gen 14:19).

- A Davidic Blessing. “To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David. The LORD hear thee in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob defend thee; Send thee help from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Zion; Remember all thy offerings, and accept thy burnt sacrifice; Selah. Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel” (Psa 20:1-4).

- A Psalmic Blessing. “The LORD that made heaven and earth bless thee out of Zion” (Psa 134:3).

- The Commendation of Paul. “And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified” (Acts 20:32).

The idea conveyed in this text is that the brethren in Jerusalem not only saw the necessity of delivering a protective word to the Gentiles. They also fervently desired that they do well in carrying out that word. In this, the real servants of God are distinguished from those who are little more than hirelings. They possess a genuine interest in the people of God, desiring their maturity and stability. A person who does not possess this care cannot minister to the people of God.

A Crucial Perspective

There is another perspective here, and it has to do with conducting oneself wisely. When the people have demonstrated their commitment to the Lord, it is not wise to continue to labor and pray as though this was not the case. When people have left all to follow Jesus, it is not wise to continue to admonish them to forsake all, or to pray that God will lead them into a deeper level of commitment to Him. If people have an obvious commitment to holiness, and are clearly in the process of separating themselves from the world, that is not the time to speak to them of forming a wider gap between themselves and the world. It is far better to ask the Lord to bless the people in their manifested endeavors to please Him. People are to be encouraged to do well, or “fare well” in their efforts.

There is a good reason for proceeding in this manner. When people are living by faith, a certain culturing of the soul is taking place. Such a life is duly noted by the Lord of glory, for His eyes are “upon the righteous” (Psa 34:15). Holy angels are dispatched to minister to those who are the “heirs of salvation” (Heb 1:13-14). The Holy Spirit is leading them to mortify the deeds of the body (Rom 8:13-14), and to cause them to abound in joy (Rom 15:13). Jesus is manifesting Himself to them, because they love Him and are keeping His word (John 14:21,23). Such people are to be urged to “continue in God’s goodness” (Rom 11:22), to “continue in the faith” (Col 1:23), and to “let brotherly love continue” (Heb 13:1).

This is the spirit in which this letter was written to the Gentiles, expressing the desire of the Jerusalem brethren to put no greater burden on the Gentile believers. This approach does require the wisdom that is from above, but that is available to all of the saints (James 1:25).

THEY REJOICED FOR CONSOLATION

“ 30 So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle: 31 Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the consolation.”

The decision has been made concerning the inquiry from the church in Antioch. Letters have been written, and men have been chosen to accompany the entourage from Antioch.

WHEN THEY WERE DISMISSED

Note that they gathered all of the people together, not just the leaders or elders. The entire church convened to hear the word that was sent from Jerusalem. Similarly, the whole church had also convened in Jerusalem.

“So when they were dismissed. . .” Other versions read, “were sent off,” NKJV “sent away,” NASB “being let go,” DARBY “when they were departed,” GENEVA “sent on their way,” GWN “the party left,” NJB “the messengers went at once,” NLT “having been let go,” YLT “went at once,”

LIVING “having been solemnly sent,” WEYMOUTH and “when they had been dispatched.”
MONTGOMERY

The idea here is not that the meeting had concluded and every man went his own way. Neither is the text simply saying that the company left Jerusalem and headed for Antioch. Rather, these men left as representatives of the Jerusalem church. They left to bring the answer to the inquiry that was sent to Jerusalem by the brethren in Antioch. God had answered the matter through James, and had done so after all those present had heard the facts in the case – which facts consisted of what the Lord had done among the Gentiles.

THEY GATHERED THE MULTITUDE TOGETHER

“ . . . they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together . . .” Other versions read, “having gathered the congregation together,” NASB “they gathered the church together,” NIV “having got the people together,” BBE “they gathered the group together,” CJB “After gathering the assembly,” CSB “assembled all the people,” MRD “after gathering the entire group together,” NET “they summoned the whole community,” NJB and “they called a general meeting of the believers.” NLT

Note that they gathered all of the people together, not just the leaders or elders. The entire church convened to hear the word that was sent from Jerusalem. Similarly, the whole church had also convened in Jerusalem. If you have ever been part of a conventional church, can you remember a single time when the entire church came together to hear a word? I have personally ministered to congregations who could not manage to do this on the Lord’s Day. Some places stand a slight chance of doing this on Christmas or Easter, or perhaps for some general church outing. Candidly, I cannot conceive of this event happening in the average church.

But it did take place in the Antioch church, and there was a reason for it. Things relating to salvation were taken seriously. When teaching was introduced that was different, yet claimed to be directly related to salvation, a satisfactory and authoritative answer was sought on the issue. They came together because they were accustomed to meeting together. They did not forsake the assembling of themselves together – and this was several years after that work was commenced under the ministry of Barnabas and Saul.

THEY DELIVERED THE EPISTLE

“ . . . they delivered the epistle...” Other versions read, “They delivered the letter,” NKJV “they gave them the letter,” BBE and “handed them the letter.” MONTGOMERY

The letter was delivered, as we will see, to be read by some one in the Antioch assembly. This was a common practice among the early churches. Paul charged the Colossian brethren to read his epistle to them, and then to see to it that it was “read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye read the epistle from Laodicea” (Col 4:16). He also spoke of the Ephesians reading his letter to them (Eph 3:4). That is, these letters were not mere reference manuals, like much of the churches treat the epistles.

Let me again underscore that the entire assembly came together for this reading. The truth of God applies to the whole body. I cannot conceive of the young people being excused from this gathering on the supposition that it would be over their head. Anyone who is old enough to believe and be baptized is old enough to listen to what is being said in the assembly. Those who had little ones no doubt had them there also, for that was the manner of the God-cultured Jews (Deut 29:10-11; 31:12; Josh 8:35; 2 Chron 20:13; Ezra 10:1) – and things got started in Antioch in a synagogue (Acts 13:14).

THEY REJOICED WITH CONSOLATION

This incident confirms the troubling effects of false teaching – even when it is delivered by seemingly sincere, yet uninformed, people. Those who taught the necessity of being circumcised after the manner of Moses brought a spiritual tempest upon the church in Antioch.

“Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the consolation.” Other versions read, “they rejoiced over its encouragement,” NKJV “they rejoiced because of its encouragement,” NASB “they were glad over its encouraging message,” NIV “they rejoiced at the exhortation,” NRSV “were delighted with the encouragement it gave them,” NJB “there was great joy throughout the church that day as they read it,” LIVING “they were happy. It encouraged them,” IE “they were delighted with the exhortation,” NAB “were delighted with the comfort it brought them,” WEYMOUTH “they were pleased with the encouragement it brought them,” ISV and “the people rejoiced at the consolation and encouragement [it brought them]” AMPLIFIED

The response of these brethren to the letters read to them confirms several things.

- They delighted in the law of God after the inward man (Rom 7:11).
- With their minds they themselves served the law of God (Rom 7:25).
- They had received the love of the truth (2 Thess 2:10-11).
- The law had been put into their hearts (Heb 10:16a).
- The Law had been written in their minds (Heb 10:16b).
- They did not refuse Him who was speaking from heaven (Heb 12:25).
- They desired the sincere milk of the Word, and were thus able to grow through it (1 Pet 2:2).
- They took heed unto the Word, and the day dawned, and the Day Star rose in their hearts – that is, they were able to see the truth of what was said (2 Pet 1:19). That is why they delighted in it.

This incident confirms the troubling effects of false teaching – even when it is delivered by seemingly sincere, yet uninformed, people. Those who taught the necessity of being circumcised after the manner of Moses brought a spiritual tempest upon the church in Antioch – like the storm that arose on Galilee when the disciples were going to the other side. They no doubt caused doubts and fears to arise. See, these were real converts, and the thought that they may not have done everything required to be initially saved was troubling to them. Yet, they were not gullible like some in Corinth, accepting what erroneous teachers delivered to them (2 Cor 11:4). The appointed objective “of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned” (1 Tim 1:5). The possession of those benefits will protect the soul against the intrusion of error.

This account confirms the wonderful reality that the secret to profiting from the Word of God is to receive it, mixing it with faith (Heb 4:2). That is what the brethren in Antioch did when they heard the letters from Jerusalem read to them. They say the truth of them, and it relieved them of the burden cause by false teaching.

CONCLUSION

We have been given the record of how the early church handled a thorny problem – wrongly instructing Gentile converts. The intrusive teachers came down from Judea, and were associated with the church in Jerusalem. They no doubt came with noble intentions, but their teaching was wrong. Good intentions do not diminish the adverse impact of faulty doctrine.

The teaching in question was, was, “Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved” (Acts 15:1). As soon as the teaching was heard, Paul and Barnabas sensed that it was not true, and had “no small dissension and disputation” with the ones bringing the doctrine. Following this disputation, the matter had not been settled. The brethren in Antioch, however, were not willing to let the matter go. Something had been taught that pertained to salvation, and it had to be settled. That is a subject concerning which God has provided no margin for error. Salvation comes from God, and He is the One who determines the terms of its acceptance.

At this point we see the value of informed and mature believers – spiritual leaders. Knowing that such existed in Jerusalem, they send some brethren with Paul and Barnabas to inquire concerning this matter. They did not hold a vote among the brethren concerning the issue, with a majority vote determining what would be taught.

Upon arriving in Jerusalem and being received, it was discovered that several in that body of believers held to the same doctrine – namely that circumcision was required to be saved. These men, formerly from among the Pharisees, stepped forward and affirmed their position, adding that the Gentiles were also required “to keep the law of Moses” (15:5). Up to this time, this had not apparently been an issue. However, with the influx of Gentiles, the variance now surfaced.

I am persuaded if there was an environment of spiritual maturity and eagerness to obtain the truth in the church, we would find far less erroneous views surfacing. What took place in Antioch with the teachers from Judaea was not their normal experience.

However, when the church busies itself with resolving personal, domestic, and social issues, there will not be much talk about matters pertaining to the identity of the people with God – and that is the issue of salvation. When a problem-solving mentality grips the church, sound doctrine begins to fade away. This is because the purpose of salvation is not to rectify all of the problems associated with living in this world. The overriding objective of salvation of God is to prepare people for the passing of the heavens and the earth, the day of judgment, and eternity with the Lord. Where these things are not seen and practiced, the door is open to false teachers.

Allow me to underscore that the problem that was raised in Antioch, and then in Jerusalem, did not pertain to church order, domestic ideals, or social involvements. The type of difficulty the church confronted, together with their response to it, indicated the thrust of that fellowship. Also, the sincerity of their hearts is seen in their agreement concerning sending men to the apostles and elders in Jerusalem.

The necessity of disputing against questionable teaching should also be noted. The perpetrators must be able to stand behind their teaching, and others must be called in when necessary. However, there is one complicating factor. If there are no mature brethren in the congregation, or those devoted enough to the Lord to refuse to accept something that has not been duly substantiated, error will have its own way with the people.

Allow me to once again rehearse the events associated with the resolution of this problem.

- The people in Antioch were devoted enough to the Lord to draw the attention of people who thought they knew the truth (15:1).
- When questionable teaching was introduced, Paul and Barnabas immediately contended with those delivering it (15:2a).
- The brethren determined to send some of their own number with Paul and Barnabas to the apostles and elders in Jerusalem “about this question” (15:2b).
- On their way to Jerusalem they declared the conversion of the Gentiles in Phenice and Samaria, causing “great joy among the brethren” (15:3).
- Having arrived in Jerusalem, and being received by the church, the apostles, and elders, Paul and Barnabas “declared all things that God had done with them” (15:4).

- At this time certain believers of the sect of the Pharisees said “That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses” (Acts 15:5).

- The apostles and elders then came together to “consider the matter ” (15:6).

- There was “much disputing” about this issue (15:7a).

- After the disputation, Peter got up and testified of how the Lord had called and used him in delivering the Gospel to the Gentiles, and how they had believed (15:7).

- He reported that God gave them the Holy Spirit, just as He did the disciples (15:8).

- He said God put no difference between the Jew and Gentile, purifying their hearts by faith (15:9).

- It declared it unreasonable to place a yoke upon the Gentiles that the Jews themselves were not able to bear (15:10).

- He affirmed that the Jews would be saved by the grace of God, just as the Gentiles were (15:11).

- This silenced the multitude (15:12a).

- Paul and Barnabas then rehearsed “what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them” (15:12).

- This again silenced the multitude, and they “held their peace” (15:13a).

- James then delivered a response to the people (15:13b).

- He said that God had visited the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name (15:14).

- He declared that this was in agreement with the prophets, who spoke of God building again the tabernacle of David in order that the Gentiles might seek the Lord (15:15-17).

- He affirmed that what God is doing has been known to Him from the beginning of the world (15:18).

- His sentence was that the brethren not trouble the Gentiles who had “turned to God” (15:19).

- He determination was that letters be sent to the Gentiles declaring critical matters concerning abstinence (15:20-21).

- The saying of James pleased “the apostles and elders, with the whole church” (15:22).

- “Chief men” were chosen from Jerusalem, namely Judas and Silas, to accompany the brethren back to Antioch (15:22).

- The required letters were written, affirming that the men who had taught that circumcision was necessary had, indeed, come from their congregation. However they had received no authority from the leaders to speak as they did (15:23-14).

- The letters affirmed that everyone had agreed to say these things, and that their instructions were from the Holy Spirit (15:25-29a).

- They said that if the Gentiles fulfilled these instructions, they would be doing well (15:29b).

- The letters were delivered to the brethren in Antioch (15:30).

- The letters were read, and the brethren “rejoiced with consolation” (15:31).

There is a marvelous example of everything being worked together for good. Note the absence of anything that continued to divide the people. Observe how there was total agreement, and how that agreement required some to alter their thinking, which they willingly did. Behold how the brethren were profited by what as done.

Lesson #67

THE WORD SPREADS, BARNABAS AND SAUL DIVIDED

“ 15:32 And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them. 33 And after they had tarried there a space, they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles. 34 Notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still. 35 Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also. 36 And some days after Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do. 37 And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whose surname was Mark. 38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work. 39 And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus; 40 And Paul chose Silas, and departed, being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God. 41 And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches. ” (Acts 15:32-41)

INTRODUCTION

Again, the priority of the body of Christ is confirmed. I will continue to draw your attention to this precedence throughout the book of Acts. This by no means suggests that the disciples failed to preach the Gospel to every creature. However, it does appear that they were specifically directed into this holy activity, and did not simply roam about at random. There were times when they purposed to go here and there, preaching the Word where Jesus had not been named. However, even in those purposes, a due regard was given to the churches.

As excellent example of this is found in the life of Paul – certainly one of the premier propagators of the Gospel to the whole world. Because of serious doctrinal and behavioral deficiencies in Corinth, Paul especially endeavored to establish them, holding his other plans in abeyance until this was accomplished. He wrote to them declaring he had, “hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly, to preach the gospel in the regions beyond you . . .” (2 Cor 10:15-16). Other versions read, “we have the hope and confident expectation that as your faith continues to grow, our field among you may be greatly enlarged, still within the limits of our commission, So that [we may even] preach the Gospel in lands [lying] beyond you, without making a boast of work already done in another [man's] sphere of activity [before we came on the scene],” AMPLIFIED “so that we can preach the gospel in the regions beyond you,” NIV “ so that we may proclaim the good news in lands beyond you,” NRSV and “ Then we will be able to go and preach the Good News in other places far beyond you.” NLT

The reason for this priority should be very evident. The church is the depository for all the fulness of Christ – the place where He imparts both His nature and graces. As it is written, “And hath put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be the head over all things to the church, which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all ” (Eph 1:22-23). Jesus has, in fact, been made the head over all things “ for the church,” NIV/NRSV/RSV That is, He has been given “to the church” in the capacity of “Head over all,” in order that He might impart Himself to it. The reason for this is seen in the words of verse twenty-three, “Which is His body, the fullness of Him Who fills all in all [for in that body lives the full measure of Him Who makes everything complete, and Who fills everything everywhere with Himself].” AMPLIFIED

This church, which is Christ's body, is what every convert is “added to” (Acts 2:47). If that church is weak and emaciated, it is a living contradiction of the revealed purpose of God, to conform the people to the image of His Son (Rom 8:29). Adding people to such a contradiction leads to the perpetuation of spiritual mediocrity, which is antithetical to the Divine Nature itself.

It is questionable whether or not it is even right for a weak and uninformed church to be engaged in any kind of outreach ministry. Precisely what is it that they have to offer? Such a group is like a half-baked cake (Hos 7:8), or a tree that requires urgent attention (Lk 13:7). I realize that such a view will be highly offensive to some. However, that does not change the facts in the case.

The objectives are progressive in nature, and are designed to bring the whole body into a stable and productive condition – one in which they are not tossed about by “every wind of doctrine,” and are capable of edifying one another.

The revealed objective for the church is as follows: “For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love” (Eph 4:12-16).

The objectives are progressive in nature, and are designed to bring the whole body into a stable and productive condition – one in which they are not tossed about by “every wind of doctrine,” and are capable of edifying one another. Here is the Divine logic of the matter.

EPHESIANS 4:12-16

- The perfecting (maturing) of the saints (verse 12a).
- In order that they may engage in the work of the ministry (verse 12b).
- In order that the body may be edified (verse 12c).
- Until we all come into the unity of the faith (verse 13a).
- Until we all come into the unity of the knowledge of the Son of God (verse 13b).
- Until we collectively reflect the image of Christ (verse 13c).
- Until each individual is matured in their “measure” of the “fulness of Christ” (verse 13d).
- In order that no one remains childlike, and moved about by erroneous teaching (verse 14).
 - In order that the truth may be spoken in unmitigated love (verse 15a).
 - In order that all may grow up into Christ in all things (verse 15b).
 - In order that the body might be fitly joined together (verse 16a).
 - In order that the body may be compacted, or made solid, by what every “joint” supplies (verse 16b).
 - This is in strict accord with the effectual working of the Lord in every part of the body (verse 16c).
 - In order to the increase of the body.
 - In order to the edifying of itself in love (verse 16d).

Do you see any provision in that marvelous statement for prolonged juvenileness? Is there any room for perpetual mediocrity, or the continued lack of spiritual productivity. Does this statement of Divine purpose suggest that the objective for the church is to be a kind of spiritual hospital for correcting deviate behavior? Is there the slightest hint of this kind of emphasis?

The church is a place where souls are fed and cultured for glory. It is more of a place for transformation than recovery, and for advancement than reform – and those terms are not synonymous. Jesus is “bringing many sons to glory” (Heb 2:10), not merely resolving moral and spiritual difficulties in the people. To be sure, that sort of work is included, but it is not the thrust of Divine effort, and it certainly ought not to be ours. Even in nature, once a debilitating infection is arrested, it is necessary to build up and strengthen the individual. More precisely, when raising children, the most important thing is not to continue teaching them to stay out of the street and not put their hands in the fire – especially when they are forty years old. The children must be brought to know how to be in the proper places, and to put their hands to noble and God-honoring works.

EXPANDING THE NUCLEUS

A proper view of “church growth,” if I may use that hackneyed term, involves the expansion of the nucleus, not the enlargement of the periphery. It is not simply to get larger crowds, or more names on the roll, but to rather prepare the people to serve the Lord here, and stand confidently before Him there. I do not know how it is possible to perceive Ephesians 4:11-16 in any other way.

LIVED OUT IN THE TEXT

The particular point here is that this what the workers in our text were doing. That is why they remained with the churches, then went out to visit other churches. They were not simply promoted camaraderie, but were seeking to promote spiritual advancement. That is what God has declared He is doing, and they were joining in the work.

Judas and Silas, prophets from Jerusalem exhorted and confirmed the Antioch brethren, attesting to both the nature and content of the letters sent from Jerusalem. Paul and Barnabas also remained in Antioch, preaching the Word. Behold both their interest in the brethren in Antioch, as well as their obvious delight with their fellowship. Those who have enjoyed the richness and benefit of godly association can understand why these brethren wanted to be together. They were the better for it, and it tended to prepare them for the work into which they would be directed. Here we see “the mind of Christ” (1 Cor 2:16) at work, for He also preferred to be around His disciples (Matt 20:17; Mk 3:7; 8:10; 10:46; Lk 22:15; John 6:3; 11:54). All of His post-resurrection appearances were to His disciples (Mk 16:9; Matt 28:9; Lk 24:15; 24:36; Acts 1:3-8; 1 Cor 15:5-8).

Soon Paul determined to revisit the churches, seeing how they were doing. It was during this occasion that Barnabas wanted to take John Mark with them. However, Paul recoiled at the suggestion, remembering the instability of John Mark when they first went into that region. The contention was so strong that the two men separated, Barnabas taking Mark with him to his home country of Cyprus. It was at this point that Paul chose Silas as a companion. They left for Syria and Cilicia with the commendation of the brethren – something not said of Barnabas and Mark. This is a remarkable and clear account of concern for the churches – a concern Paul would always maintain!

JUDAS AND SILAS EXHORT THE BRETHREN

“ 15:32 And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them.”

After it was clear that the words sent from the apostles and elders had been gladly received, Judas and Silas spoke to the Antioch brethren. They spoke in their God-ordained capacity, and did so with purpose.

BEING PROPHETS

“And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves . . .” Other versions read “gifted speakers,” LIVING “prophets (inspired interpreters of the will and purposes of God),” AMPLIFIED

Due to the lack of sound doctrine, and the consequence of a church that is not established, both the concept and ministry of a prophet has been blurred. Even though God has clearly placed “prophets” in the church (1 Cor 12:28), there is little talk about them, and no apparent place made for them. This is a ministry fulfilled in the local assembly, or congregation of saints.

- “Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy , let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith” (Rom 12:6).

- “Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy ” (1 Cor 14:1).

- “Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge. If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace. For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted. And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets ” (1 Cor 14:29-32).

- “Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy , and forbid not to speak with tongues” (1 Cor 14:39).

- “And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets ; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers” (Eph 4:11).

- “Despise not prophesyings ” (1 Thess 5:20),

The word “prophet” is a transliteration of the Greek word profh,thj (prof-ay-tas). That is, there was no precisely parallel English word that conveyed the Scriptural use of this Greek word.

Etymological Definitions

As defined by the English dictionary, it means the following.

Original use was during the twelfth century

1. “One who utters divinely inspired revelations:
 - a. As often capitalized, the writer of one of the books of the Bible.
 - b. One regarded by a group of followers as the final authoritative revealer of God's will; Muhammad, the Prophet of Allah.
2. One gifted with more than ordinary spiritual and moral insight ; especially an inspired poet.
3. One who foretells future events.
4. An effective or leading spokesman for a cause, doctrine, or group.
5. Christian Science
 - a. A spiritual seer
 - b. Disappearance of material sense before the conscious facts of spiritual Truth.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

However, this is not the lexical meaning of the word as used in Scripture. The root meaning of the Greek word is, “to speak forth, speak out; hence, one who speaks forth.” In the Septuagint version the root meaning is “to divulge, make known, announce . . . therefore properly, equivalent to interpreter.” As used in Scripture, the word is lexically understood to mean, “hence, an interpreter or spokesman for God; one through whom God speaks . . . one who speaks forth by divine inspiration.” THAYER “generally one who speaks for God, proclaiming what God wants to make known,” FRIBERG “of one who has insight into the divine will and possesses the power of inspired utterance,” UBS

The Louw-Nida Greek lexicon wisely adds, “ There is a tendency in a number of languages to translate profh,thj only in the sense of 'one who foretells the future,' but foretelling the future was only a relatively minor aspect of the prophet's function, though gradually it became more important.

Patristic authors [post-apostolic church fathers] defined the function of a prophet mainly in terms of foretelling the future. In New Testament times, however, the focus was upon the inspired utterance proclaimed on behalf of and on the authority of God.

Whatever value may be attached to etymological definitions, it cannot be allowed to be superior in nature. In the Word of God itself, although there were often people present to spoke in a differing languages, key words were never defined from the standpoint of mere language. They were rather expounded doctrinally.

The Source of the Prophet

The word of God informs us of the origin of the prophet. A prophet is not produced by education or natural giftedness. It is not someone who has been trained to be a prophet. In no sense is the prophet self-made.

It is of interest to note that much of the preaching of John the Baptist is referred to as “his exhortation” (Luke 3:18). That is, he pressed the people to do something about what he was preaching.

Particularly in this day of salvation, the administration of the New Covenant, the prophet is a gift from God. Thus it is written, Therefore He says: “When He ascended on high, He led captivity captive, And gave gifts to men... And He Himself gave some to be apostles, some prophets , some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers” (Eph 4:9-11). NKJV

The book of First Corinthians views these gifts, as well as others, as Divine placements, ranking “prophets” as second, superceded only by the apostles. “And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers . . .” (1 Cor 12:28).

Ministry Associated with Faith

The epistle to the Romans also speaks of this gift. Rather than referring to the individual prophet himself, there what is said is emphasized: “Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith ” (Rom 12:6). Note that what is said by the prophet is directly related to his faith. That is, a New Covenant prophet does not speak without the engagement of his heart and mind. He has been enlightened, yet speaks from personal insight and understanding that have been acquired from God.

A More Particular Analysis

An even more particular analysis of the prophet is provided in the first epistle to the Corinthians. There the teaching is couched in a discourse that stresses the importance of understanding what is said in the assembly. The statement concerning prophesy relates to its effects, as compared to its source, and is quite revealing. “But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort” (1 Cor 14:3). Other versions read, “ edification, and exhortation, and consolation ,” NASB “strengthening, encouragement and comfort,” NIV “upbuilding and encouragement and consolation,” NRSV and “upbuilding and constructive spiritual progress and encouragement and consolation.” AMPLIFIED

These effects are what made prophesying the superior gift. It is why Paul taught the Corinthians to prefer it above other gifts: “Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy” (1 Cor 14:1). I have known several people who have expressed a fervent desire to speak in tongues. I do not know how it is possible to take hold of this text and engage in such a quest.

The use of the words “prophesy” or “prophecy” in Scripture is in perfect accord with the doctrine concerning prophets. The prophet, although he may foretell the future (Acts 11:28), is by no means limited to that function in his work.

- The 31st chapter of Proverbs concerning a virtuous woman, is defined as “the prophecy” that Lemuel’s mother “taught him” (Prov 31:1).
- The “prophecy of Oded the prophet” was a word of encouragement and exhortation to king Asa (2 Chron 15:1-8).

Note the three principle effects of prophesying: edification, exhortation, and comfort.

- Edification: This has to do with building up and strengthening the understanding of the believers. In such a case, the truth is seen more clearly, and thus the truth sanctifies and stabilizes the people. Paul also associated edification with the power of God that was given (2 Cor 13:8,10).

- Exhortation: In this ministry the souls of the people are moved to do something that directly relates to their identity with the Lord.

- Comfort: This is a rational comfort, and does not refer to a mere feeling. It relates to encouragement that causes hope to flourish.

The “prophet,” being a speaker, is one in whom insight and the ability of precise spiritual expression have been merged. Where these effects have been realized, the people have heard a prophet.

Like all spiritual gifts, prophesy is the outworking of a member of the body holding to the Head, from whom all spiritual nourishment originates. As the prophet maintains the vital fellowship with the Son, into which he is called (1 Cor 1:9), his gift is made functional. He is given various insights into the truth, all of which are integral to God’s eternal purpose. This is all done in direct relation to his “proportion of faith” (Rom 12:6), or “measure of faith” (Rom 12:3). The “measure” is not a quantitative one, but one that is adapted for a particular role in the body of Christ. In accordance with that faith, the truth is not only perceived, but it is merged with the ability to articulate it. It is that expression, if delivered in strict accord with the “proportion of faith,” that causes the saints of God to be edified, exhorted, and comforted. The people of God are matured, motivated, and stilled within. They are made adequate to fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life (1 Tim 6:12). Confidence and assurance are also realized in increasing measure.

That is what real prophets do. Now, we will see this lived out in our text. Judas and Silas, “being prophets,” will do what prophets are prone to do.

EXHORTED THE BRETHREN

“ , , , exhorted the brethren . . .” Other versions read, “encouraged,” NASB “gave teaching,” BBE “comforted,” DOUAY “strengthened,” MRD “preached,” LIVING and “urged and warned and consoled and encouraged.” AMPLIFIED

These men were prophets, and they “exhorted.” They did not foretell the future, or have a conference on last things. They “exhorted the people,” calling them into deeper and sustained involvement “with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ” (1 John 1:3).

- Some years before, Barnabas had come to the church in Antioch, being sent from the church in Jerusalem. During that time, he “ exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord” (Acts 11:23).

- On the day of Pentecost, following his response to their question, “What shall we do,” it is written that Peter “with many other words did he testify and exhort , saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation” (Acts 2:40). It was after this exhortation that those “that gladly received his word were baptized” (Acts 2:41).

- Paul reminded the Thessalonians how he had “ exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, that ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory” (1 Thess 2:11-12).

- Paul wrote to the Thessalonians, “Furthermore .. We beseech you and exhort you by the Lord Jesus that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more” (1 Thess 4:1).

- In a remarkably detailed exhortation, Paul told the Thessalonians, “Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men. Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you. Quench not the Spirit. Despise not prophesying. Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil” (1 Thess 5:22).

- Paul told Timothy, “I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; For kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior” (1 Tim 2:3).

- Paul told Titus, “Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded” (Tit 2:6).

- Peter wrote to elders, “ . . . I exhort you . . . Feed the flock of God which is among you . . .” (1 Pet 5:1-2).

- Jude wrote to some sluggardly believers, “unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints” (Jude 1:3).

A spirit of independence has arisen within the professed church that is offended by any demands being placed upon it. This condition is largely owing to inferior, and sometimes erroneous, preaching. A message is being preached that leaves the impression that response is not an urgent matter.

Behold the marvelous scope of exhortation – moving the people of God to do something. Allow me to briefly recap the reports I have just recounted. These were things the people of God were EXHORTED to do – for exhortation always relates to the people DOING something.

- Save yourselves from this untoward, perverse and corrupt, generation.
- Walk worthy of God.
- Walk and please God more and more.
- Warn them that are unruly (insubordinate).
- Comfort the feebleminded (fainthearted or timid).
- Support the weak.
- Be patient, or longsuffering with all men.
- Do not repay evil for evil to any man.
- Always rejoice.
- Pray without ceasing, or with perseverance, not fainting.
- In everything give thanks.
- Do not quench the Spirit.

- Do not despise prophecies.
- Test all things.
- Hold fast what is good.
- Abstain from all appearance of evil.
- Supplication, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be given for all men (1 Tim 2:1).
- That such prayers be made for kings and for those who are in authority (1 Tim 2:2).
- For young men to be sober.
- To feed the flock of God.
- To earnestly contend for the faith.

There are twenty-one facets of spiritual life in which the people of God are urged participate more fully. It should be apparent to you that there is a certain strangeness in the tone of such words – at least to those who have been unduly influenced by our generation. A spirit of independence has arisen within the professed church that is offended by any demands being placed upon it. This condition is largely owing to inferior, and sometimes erroneous, preaching. A message is being preached that leaves the impression that response is not an urgent matter. The impression is being left that men have a lot of time to sort things out, work on their deficiencies, and decide whether or not they want to give themselves wholly to the Lord. The very fact that God has placed the gift of exhortation in the church confirms that this is an erroneous impression. Unless men are rescued from it, there is no hope of them being saved. That is why it is written, “Today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation” (Heb 3:15). And again, “And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed” (Rom 13:11).

WITH MANY WORDS

“ . . . with many words . . .” Other versions read, “with a lengthy message,” NASB “said much,” NIV “with a long message,” CSB “much discourse,” DARBY “spoke a long time,” GWN “abundant discourse,” MRD “a long speech,” NET “spoke at length,” NLT “much preaching,” TNT “long sermons,” LIVING “a long . . . talk,” WEYMOUTH “many a good counsel,” MONTGOMERY and “many talks.” PHILLIPS

As Peter did, Judas and Silas exhorted “with many words” (Acts 2:40). Their words were not brief, as though they were not essential, or were already accepted by the audience. There are at least two reasons for this.

- First, the letter they brought dealt with matters pertaining to salvation, and nothing can be more important than that. If the matter of salvation is shrouded with mystery, or if its nature and scope do not have some clarity, the disciples will be thrown into a state of constant jeopardy.
- Second, as confirmed in the accounts of actual exhortations, there are many areas that are addressed by faith. Believers cannot remain in a state of inactivity, thinking that the benefits related to being in Christ will simply come to them. As with Paul, it is necessary to apprehend the things for which Christ has apprehended us (Phil 3:12-13). Exhortation has to do with compelling believers to do precisely that.

CONFIRMED THEM

“ . . . and confirmed them.” Other versions read, “strengthened,” NKJV “made them strong,” BBE “established,” MRD and “make them stronger.” IE

The word “confirmed” is translated from the Greek word επιβεβαιωσις (ep-ee-stay-rid). The word means, “to establish besides, strengthen more; to render more firm, confirm,” THAYER “cause to be firm,” FRIBERG and “to cause someone to become stronger in the sense of more firm and unchanging in attitude or belief.” LOUW-NIDA In the English language, the word means “to make firm or firmer.”

In this sense, the word is used several times in the book of Acts.

- “. . . they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God” (Acts 14:21-22).
- “And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them” (Acts 15:32).
- “And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches” (Acts 15:41).
- The word is also translated “strengthening” – “And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples” (Acts 18:23).

The state of being “confirmed” is the opposite of being “unstable” (James 1:8; 2 Pet 2:13; 3:16). Those who are not “confirmed” are “tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive” (Eph 4:14). Unconfirmed disciples can be “drawn away” after false teachers (Acts 20:30) – like the teachers who came to Antioch from Judaea, teaching the believers that unless they were circumcised after the manner of Moses, they could not be saved. Such poor souls are susceptible to teachings that deal with “another Jesus,” “another gospel,” and “another Spirit” (2 Cor 11:4). Those who are not confirmed are like a tender sapling, as compared to a strong and mature tree. The winds of adversity and doctrinal error toss them about, and will eventually break them. These are the people who can be “beguiled with enticing words” (Col 2:4). Their love waxes cold when iniquity abounds (Matt 24:12). They have great difficulty holding their profession “without wavering” (Heb 10:23).

There is only one answer to a wavering and unstable state: confirmation, or being made “strong in faith” and “able to stand against the wiles of the devil” (Rom 4:20; Eph 6:11). Such a state is the objective of the various gifts that have been given to the church. The aim of those gifts is to bring the people to a state “are no more children,” but “grow up into Christ in all things” (Eph 4:15). This means more than a reduction in the frequency of sin. That kind of thing happens when a person begins to “comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God” (Eph 3:18-19). That, of course, is the direct result of God strengthening the saints with might by His Spirit in the inner man, so that Christ can dwell in their hearts by faith. Then, being “rooted and grounded” in the love of God, they will realize what it means to be “confirmed.”

In an extended effort, and with many words, Judas and Silas spoke to the brethren in a manner that contributed to their stability and maturity in Christ. Giving heed to their words would ensure they would not have such difficulty if any other false teachers came among them. Being mature in Christ, they would be “filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9). They would be confirmed, stable, strong in the faith, and able to stand against the various winds that would assault them.

I have noted over the years what a small percentage of professed preachers and teachers are concerned with confirming the saints. For many years, the situation has been very disconcerting to me. Very rarely does one confront a believer who has, in fact, been confirmed, and is strong in faith, giving glory to God. When such a soul is found, they have generally become firm in spite of the teaching and fellowship to which they have been subjected. All who stand before the saints of God do well to take their confirmation and spiritual stability into consideration. This will not come by brief and shallow homilies. It will not be produced by purported praise and worship services that are little more than a folic in the fields lacking spiritual sustenance. In this text we are exposed to a very real and profitable ministry to the people of God.

THEY TARRIED IN ANTIOCH FOR A TIME

“ 33 And after they had tarried there a space, they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles.”

Here, we are being exposed to the manner of spiritual life. It is not a life of fits and starts, or the mingling of activity with inactivity. Wherever such a life is encouraged or promoted, the Lord is not the one who is at work.

Hungry souls are not content with teachers who remain for only a short time. They delight in continued exposure to the words and insights of such men. This spirit is revealed in the text before us, confirming the value that those who love the truth have for the ones who declare it.

THEY TARRIED THERE A SPACE

“And after they had tarried there a space . . .” Other versions read, “for a time,” NKJV “spent time there,” NASB “spending some time there,” NIV “passed some time there,” DARBY “stayed in Antioch for some time,” GWN “stayed for a while,” NLT “stayed several days,” LIVING and “continuing for a time.” LITV

As used here, the word “tarried” means more than simply lingering. It carries the idea of continuing to do something – in this case, delivering words of exhortation. Technically, the word translated “tarried” (poih,santej) carries the idea of productivity: “to produce, construct, form, fashion,” THAYER “a basic meaning make, do,” FRIBERG and “make, do, cause, effect, bring about, accomplish.” UBS The idea here is that Judas and Silas continued to confirm the disciples with many words.

There are instances in Scripture of those who desired the one ministering to remain with them. They did not simply enjoy the company of such people, but desired for them to continue what they were doing.

- The Samaritans asked Jesus to remain with them (John 4:40).
- After hearing the words of Jesus, the two on the road to Emmaus constrained Jesus saying, “Abide with us” (Lk 24:29).
- Those converted at the house of Cornelis asked Peter to “tarry certain days” with them (Acts 10:48).
- Lydia besought Paul and Silas, “come into my house and abide there” Acts 16:15).
- After the Philippi an jailor had been baptized, he brought Paul and Silas into his house, set food before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all of his house (Acts 16:34).
- When Paul left the elders from Ephesus, they fell on his neck and wept, because he had told them they would not see him again (Acts 20:37).

Here, we are being exposed to the manner of spiritual life. It is not a life of fits and starts, or the mingling of activity with inactivity. Wherever such a life is encouraged or promoted, the Lord is not the one who is at work.

THEY WERE LET GO IN PEACE

“ . . . they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles.” Other versions read, “they were sent back with greetings from the brethren to the apostles,” NKJV “they were sent off by the brothers with the blessing of peace to return to those who had sent them.” NIV

Here, the idea is that the brethren in Antioch recognized that the issue that had arisen there had now been resolved. That is why they dismissed the brethren after they had remained there for some time. They did not accept a correction of their challenge by stages or installments. The matter was too critical. When dealing with an issue that has to do with salvation, this is not a matter to be studied out over an extended period of time, or by a series of protracted courses. If such an approach had been taken, some might have been called away, or departed to another place in a state of delusion. They may even have spread the delusion, or even been so confused they cast the faith overboard.

Now, however, the issue had been resolved, and there was great jubilation among the disciples because of it. No follower of Jesus thrives on controversy, or delights to remain in the dark about the salvation of God. Therefore the brethren were released to return to Jerusalem and the apostles, with the blessing of peace upon them. Here are some examples of the conferment of peace upon the righteous.

- “For my brethren and companions' sakes, I will now say, Peace be within thee” (Psa 122:8).
- “ . . . peace shall be upon Israel” (Psa 125:5).
- “And said, O man greatly beloved, fear not: peace be unto thee, be strong, yea, be strong . . .” (Dan 10:19).
- “Now the God of peace be with you all. Amen” (Rom 15:33).
- “And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God” (Gal 6:16).

In new covenant life, or “newness of life,” there is a keen interest in the welfare of the saints of God.

SILAS DECIDED TO STAY FOR A WHILE

“ 34 Notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still.”

This text marks a new epoch in the book of Acts – one that will involve the labors of Silas with the apostle Paul.

This verse is omitted in the following versions: NIV, NRSV, RSV, CJB, CSB, DARBY, ERV, GWN, NAB, NIB, NLT, and LIVING. The reason for this omission is that it is missing in the Syriac, Alexandrian, Arabic, and Coptic versions . PULPIT COMMENTARY/BARNES It is surmised that Silas returned with Judas, then came back later to Antioch, at which time Paul chose him. However, if this was the case, Paul would have made his choice of Silas based upon a relatively brief period of time with him. This interpretation also has to be forced into the text, causing it to read in a kind of random way. It simply does not blend with the nature of this whole passage. I will proceed with the assumption that this was a providential working of the Lord, in preparation for the works that follow. I see no value in adopting the variant view represented by the removal of this verse from the text. Further, where there is no genuine advantage to such an alteration, I find it difficult to justify taking such an action.

This is another example of God working all things together for the good of His people – not only for Silas himself, but for those in Antioch and the surrounding territories.

NOTWITHSTANDING

“Notwithstanding . . .” Other versions read, “However,” NKJV and “But.” NASB

The word “notwithstanding” marks a departure from the general course of action. Judas and Silas had been freed to return to Jerusalem, with the peace of God conferred upon them. However, Silas chose not to do so, preferring to take another course. There are times when what can be done is not always the best, or preferred thing to be done.

IT PLEASSED SILAS

“ . . . it pleased Silas to abide there still.” Other versions read, “it seemed good,” NKJV “thought good,” GENEVA “it was the pleasure of,” MRD and “decided to stay.” AMPLIFIED

It is obvious that, for Silas, it was “good and pleasant” to dwell among the Antioch brethren. In addition, he must have seen time spent with Paul an advantage as well. He did not stay out of a sense of obligation, for his mission there had been fulfilled. However, probably unknown to him at this time, there was future work to be done in which he would play a significant role. Therefore, it seems to me that God can be seen in this whole matter, orchestrating the affairs of His people for His own glory and the betterment of the body of Christ. This is another example of God working all things together for the good of His people – not only for Silas himself, but for those in Antioch and the surrounding territories. This is also a sterling commentary on the spiritual attractiveness and profitability of the brethren in Antioch.

PAUL AND BARNABAS REMAINED IN ANTIOCH, TEACHING AND PREACHING THE WORD

“ 35 Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also.”

Many of the great works that are recorded in this book were preceded by an extended time, during which brethren were meeting together.

- The events of the day of Pentecost (Luke 24:53; Acts 1:14; 2:1-4).
- The rapid spread of the Word throughout Jerusalem and the surrounding areas (Acts 2:42,44,46; 4:31; 4:4; 5:14; 6:1,7).
- The scattering of the disciples, when they went everywhere preaching the Word (Acts 8:1-4).
- The events that took place at the house of Cornelius (Acts 9:36-43; 10:1-48).
- Paul and Barnabas called to a special work by the Holy Spirit (Acts 11:26; 13:1-2).

The church is “the fulness of Him that filleth all in all” (Eph 1:23), and nourishment is ministered within that church while they are holding to the Head (Eph 4:15-16; Col 2:19). It is also true that when they come together Christ said He was especially among them (Matt 18:20). These things being true, we should expect great things to take place within, and because of, the assembling of the saints. This manner is seen throughout the book of Acts, where newness of life is being lived out.

PAUL AND BARNABAS CONTINUED THERE ALSO

“Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch . . .”

Here again is a protracted stay of Paul and Barnabas in Antioch. It is the third such occasion.

- The first is when they spend “a whole year” there, assembling with the brethren, and teaching “much people” (11:26).

- The second is when they returned from the work to which the Spirit had called them – a time estimated to have been between four and eight years (14:28). It was the period of time between their return and the trip to Jerusalem that is covered in the fifteenth chapter.

- The third is the period described in our text, where they are said to have “continued in Antioch.”

- A fourth occasion took place when Paul left Ephesus, going to Caesarea, then going down to Antioch and spending “some time there” (18:22).

This was also the place where Peter came, when Paul withstood him to the face (Gal 2:11).

So far as the book of Acts is concerned, this church ranked second only to the church in Jerusalem, the general residence of the apostles themselves. Considering that this was a Gentile church, this is a most remarkable circumstance, confirming that wherever there is a love of the truth and faith in Christ, great progress can be made.

There are still congregations of believers that are particularly attractive to sensitive and informed souls. Those who are engaged in the good fight of faith and the work of the Lord, are willing to go out of their way to be with such people. They also will spend considerable time in such places. In my judgment, it is good for a congregation to determine to be this kind of fellowship. It seems to me that any other kind of congregation is deficient in many ways.

TIME SPENT WITH BELIEVERS

1. Saul spent time with the disciples in Damascus – 9:19
2. Peter tarried certain days with those who believed at the house of Cornelius – 10:48
3. Paul and Barnabas spend a whole year with the church in Antioch – 11:26
4. Paul visited the churches, confirming the souls of the disciples – 14:22
5. Paul and Barnabas spend a “long time” with the church in Antioch – 14:28
6. Judas and Silas confirmed the brethren in Antioch – 15:32
7. Paul and Barnabas continued in Antioch teaching and preaching the Word – 15:35
8. Paul went throughout Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches – 15:41
9. Paul went throughout the cities, and the churches established in the faith – 16:5
10. Paul spent a year and six months teaching the brethren in Corinth – 18:11
11. Paul strengthened all the disciples in all the country of Galatia and Phrygia – 18:23
12. Apollos helped the disciples in Achai who had believed through grace – 18:27
13. Paul ministered to the disciples in Troaz – 20:7
14. Paul spent three years with the church in Ephesus, warning them with tears – 20:31

TEACHING AND PREACHING THE WORD

“ . . . teaching and preaching the word of the Lord . . . ”

Other versions read, “taught and proclaimed,” NRSV “teaching and announcing the glad tidings,” DARBY “taught people about the Lord's word and spread the Good News,” GWN “telling the Good News and teaching the people the message of the Lord,” LIVING “continued to teach the Lord's message and to tell the good news,” WILLIAMS and “continued teaching and proclaiming the good news, the Word of the Lord [concerning the attainment through Christ of eternal salvation in God’s kingdom].” AMPLIFIED

What does it mean to preach and teach? For some, it means speaking to sinners (preach), and to saints (teach). Is this the case here? Remember, Paul and Barnabas had spent years in Antioch. Does this mean they had not preached throughout the city, or that the church in Antioch was fundamentally uninformed?

Preaching

Preaching is the means by which faith is both initiated and maintained. Faith comes by hearing – hearing a message, not a list of instructions. Faith rests on affirmations, not explanations, as Romans 10:14-17 affirms. No believer will reach a point in this world where there is no longer a need for affirmation, for preaching, and for announcement and proclamation. Gospel affirmations found in the epistles are staggering in number – declarations that have to do with:

- Who Jesus IS (Rom 10:4; Eph 5:23; Phil 2:11; Col 1:19; 2:9,10; 3:12; Heb 8:1; 1 John 4:5). None of these facts can be enhanced or enlarged. They do not have to do with Christ progressing or advancing. It is our apprehension of these facts that grows. That is why they are proclaimed, announced, and preached.

- What Jesus HAS ACCOMPLISHED (Rom 10:4; Gal 3:13; 5:1; Col 1:20; 2:15; Heb 2:14; 9:26; 1 Pet 4:1; Rev 1:5-6), and what He is doing (Heb 2:10; 7:25; 13:20; 1 Pet 3:22). None of these things can be improved. None of them are in the process of change. Again, it is our comprehension of them that expands, and that can only be done when they are declared.

- What He WILL DO (Matt 3:12; 10:32; 13:41; 25:31-33; Acts 17:31; Phil 3:20-21; Col 3:4; Heb 9:28; Rev 22:12). Again, none of these things are in a state of development. They are simply awaiting the time when they will be fulfilled. Their proclamation fuels hope and brings assurance to the hearts of the trusting ones. They are to be preached, or reported.

No believer will ever come to the point where both preaching and teaching cease to be required. There is no stage of spiritual life in which it is no longer necessary to hear the unchanging and unalterable facts pertaining to who Jesus is, what He has done, what He is doing, and what He will do. Equally true, there is no point where those facts no longer need to be expounded.

Again, these are the things that cause faith to come, then maintain and mature it.

Teaching

Strictly speaking, teaching, or doctrine, is the exposition of the facts regarding “the salvation that is in Christ Jesus” (2 Tim 2:10). That is why it is often related to “wisdom” (1 Cor 2:13; Col 1:28; 3:16). The person who is “taught in the Word” (Gal 6:6) is not merely told what the Word says, but is brought to discern what is implied by the Word. That is, they come to the point where they can “handle” the Word of God, or correlate it with living in a manner that honors and pleases the Lord.

Jesus Himself is depicted as teaching the truth to us. “But ye have not so learned Christ; If so be that ye have heard Him, and have been taught by Him, as the truth is in Jesus” (Eph 4:20-21). What is “taught” is specified in the next three verses: “That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness” (Eph 4:22-24). In other words, you might say that the written word is incarnated, or embodied, in the lives of those who are taught by Jesus. Teaching has to do with that kind of accomplishment.

Another example of the nature of teaching is found in First Thessalonians: “But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another” (1 Thess 4:9). Again, the teaching has to do with apprehending the truth, and being able to live it out to the glory of God.

When it comes to the teaching of holy men, the same principle is made known. The people hear the exposition of the facts related to the Gospel in such a way as enables those who receive the teaching to live in a manner that adorns the doctrine. Several apostolic expressions highlight this.

- “Rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught , abounding therein with thanksgiving” (Col 2:7).
- “Holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught , that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers” (Titus 1:9).
- “Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught , whether by word, or our epistle” (2 Thess 2:15).

No believer will ever come to the point where both preaching and teaching cease to be required. There is no stage of spiritual life in which it is no longer necessary to hear the unchanging and unalterable facts pertaining to who Jesus is, what He has done, what He is doing, and what He will do. Equally true, there is no point where those facts no longer need to be expounded. Furthermore, as soon as the message being delivered by those who preach and teach centers in the people themselves, it ceases to be profitable. That is, when life in this world is seen as the primary life, the way that leads to eternal life has been abandoned. I realize this has some alarming implications.

WITH MANY OTHERS ALSO

“ . . . with many others also.” Other versions read, “and many others also,” NASB “with a number of others,” BBE “along with many others,” CSB “in company with many others,” MONTGOMERY and “as did many others.” ISV

In preaching and teaching, Paul and Barnabas were joined by “many others.” The “others” were competent preachers and teachers. This does not refer to casual discussions.

It is to be understood that the assembly in Antioch was the locus of these extended activities of preaching and teaching – for these gifts have been given to the church and for the church. They are for the edifying of the body of Christ (Eph 4:11-16; 1 Cor 12:7,28). While they are not confined to the church, that is where they yield their greatest benefit – as Jesus teaching His disciples was His most focused and productive teaching.

This is a commentary on the character of the congregation in Antioch. Our introduction to that church is found in these words: “Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul” (Acts 13:1). It appears that this number of leaders had grown. Silas is now added to the number as well.

What a marvelous congregation to have such an appetite for the Word of the Lord! In this regard, it was much like the church in Jerusalem. Such assemblies are exceedingly rare, and apparently have been unusual throughout church history.

The Word of Truth Fellowship

It is a great source of blessing to me to see this kind of congregation being developed in The Word of Truth Fellowship in Joplin, Missouri. Frequent gatherings take place in which “many others” contribute to the edification of the saints through preaching and teaching. We even have additional gatherings through the year during which preaching and teaching extend over several days. These annual gatherings include The Refreshing Waters Renewal, The Table In the Wilderness, and The Preaching Festival. All of these gatherings focus on the Gospel of Christ and its implications. They are held to nourish the saints because of their increased love and appetite for the truth of God.

In my judgment, what is occurring here is representative of what is possible wherever honest and good hearts are found. It confirms how the truth of God works within those who love it, and by faith subject themselves to it. It invariable produces fruit.

Currently, we have a number of competent teachers and prophets. These include Aaron Hutchcraft, Ricky Sims, Robert Cobb, Gene Hutchcraft, Jeremy Williams, Michael Blakely, Tony Parker, Jonathan Blakely, and Matthew Cobb. Additional teachers who speak with less frequency include LaVaine Murphy, Isaac Murphy, and Tobiah Murphy. There are also a number of insightful sisters who deliver words of benefit to the assembly: June Blakely, Barbara Hutchcraft, Tasha Sims, Nichole Williams, Amanda Miller, Nicole Cobb, Melissa Parker, Pat Jones, Mattie Blakely, Debbie Hutchcraft, Michele Blakely, Eva Blakely, and Logan Williams.

This is a most remarkable circumstance. It is worthy of note because it represents the kind of life that was found in the church in Antioch. For many of us, it has proved to be an environment in which spiritual growth, stability, and expression are being encouraged and cultured. The contributions of these saints is also heard throughout the world. In my judgment, what is occurring here is representative of what is possible wherever honest and good hearts are found. It confirms how the truth of God works within those who love it, and by faith subject themselves to it. It invariable produces fruit.

PAUL DETERMINES TO VISIT THE CHURCHES

“ 36 And some days after Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.”

One of the marks of a truly spiritual leader is a profound concern for the churches – for those who are “in Christ Jesus” (Rom 8:1; 1 Cor 1:30; Eph 1:1). Christ Himself “nourishes and cherishes” NKJV the church (Eph 5:29), being the “great Shepherd of the sheep” (Heb 13:20). It is not surprising, therefore, that those who are “workers together with Him” (2 Cor 6:1) maintain an interest in His flock.

LET US GO AGAIN AND VISIT OUR BRETHREN

“And some days after Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren. . .” Other versions read, “let us now go back,” NKJV “”Let us return,” NASB “we should go back,” IE and “let us go back and again visit and help and minister to the brethren.” AMPLIFIED

After spending “some days,” or “some time” NIV preaching and teaching in Antioch, Paul speaks to Barnabas about the places where they had preached during the fulfillment of the “work” to which the Spirit had formerly called them. They had “fulfilled” that work (Acts 14:25), and yet did not forget it.

Initially, they had proceeded throughout the island of Cyprus, and up into Asia, going into the regions of Pisidia, Lycaonia, and Cilicia (13:14-14:21a). Then they had returned through those regions from Derbe, ministering to all of the churches again (14:21b-25). Now, Paul determines to go the region a third time.

IN EVERY CITY

“ . . . in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord . . . ” Other versions read, “proclaimed the word of the Lord,” NASB “given the word of God,” BBE “proclaimed the message about the Lord,” CJB “announced the word of the Lord,” DARBY “spread the Lord’s word,” GWN “showed the words of the Lord,” TNT and “made known the Lord’s message.” WEYMOUTH

The cities in which they ministered that are specifically named include the following: Salamis (13:5), Paphos (13:6-12), Antioch of Pisidia (13:14), Iconium (13:51-14:3), Lystra and Derbe (14:6-23). It is also written that they preached “throughout all the region” surrounding Antioch (13:49), and the region of Lycaonia as well (14:6-7). They had also “ordained them elders in every church.” and commending “them to the Lord, on whom they believed” (14:25).

AND SEE HOW THEY DO

“ . . . and see how they do.” Other versions read, “see how they are doing,” NKJV “see how they are,” NASB “see how they are getting on,” DARBY “see how they fare,” ERV “getting along,” LIVING “whether they are prospering.” WEYMOUTH and “how they are having.” INTERLINEAR

If the individual can profit from the salvation of God apart from a very real association with Jesus, then exactly what is the purpose of that association?

This language suggests there are certain expectations concerning the progress of the churches. Ordinary men may settle for the churches simply remaining in a state of peace, or not falling into reprehensible conduct. But that is not enough for the man of God. You may be sure, Paul was not thinking about how many people were attending the churches in Asia, or the extensive nature of their mission program, youth ministry, or community outreach.

Jesus taught His disciples that both growth and fruit are expected of those who are in Him (John 15:1-11). He associated these conditions with the following:

- Either remaining in Him or being removed from Him (15:1).
- Bearing fruit (15:4-5).
- Being cast into the fire if not abiding in Him (15:6).
- Having prayers answered (15:7).
- Glorifying God (15:8a).
- Being His disciples (15:8b).
- Experiencing Jesus’ love (15:9a).
- Continuing in His love (15:9b).
- Keeping His commandments (15:10).
- His joy remaining in the disciple (15:11a).
- The joy of the disciple being full (15:11b).

If this is all we knew about this subject, it would be enough to promote sobriety and hearty effort. Nothing about Christ’s words suggest the acceptability of casualness or lack of advancement. Additionally, the very thought of abiding in Christ yet failing to grow is too absurd to be entertained for a moment. There is not the slightest hint in Scripture that so much as one benefit can pass from Christ to the person who remains at a distance from Him. Furthermore, once God puts the individual into Christ (1 Cor 1:30), he is expected to remain there, else all of the benefits realized through Christ will be forfeited. If this was not true, there would be no real purpose to being joined to the Lord in the first place. If the individual can profit from the salvation of God apart from a very real association with Jesus, then exactly what is the purpose of that association?

Ponder the revelation that has been given concerning the nature of spiritual life, and what is intended to take place within it. Here are a few of the expectations – things salvation is calculated to produce.

- “To be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man, that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith ” (Eph 3:16-17).
- “That ye being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height” (Eph 3:17-18).
- “That ye might know the love of Christ , which passeth knowledge” (Eph 3:19a).
- “That ye might be filled with all the fulness of God ” (Eph 3:19b).
- “The perfecting of the saints” (Eph 4:12a).
- “For the work of the ministry ” (Eph 4:12b).
- “Till we all come to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God ” (4:13a).
- “Unto a perfect man , unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ” (Eph 4:13b).
- “That we be no more children ” (4:14).
- “ Grow up into Him in all things” (Eph 4:15).
- “The increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love ” (Eph 4:16).
- “That ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil” (Eph 6:11).
- “To be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9).
- “That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing” (Col 1:10a).
- “Being fruitful in every good work , and increasing in the knowledge of God ” (Col 1:10b).
- “Strengthened with all might, according to His glorious power, unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness ” (Col 1:11).

You might summarize these words, and more, by saying, “For whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son , that He might be the firstborn among many brethren” (Rom 8:29).

In rebuking some of the Jewish believers, the Holy Spirit addressed this matter of what is expected in believers. “For when for the time ye ought to be teachers , ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat” (Heb 5:12).

IN THIS TEXT

Paul is not suggesting they ought to visit the churches to see if they have been overcome, or fallen into some deep sin, and in other ways were coming short of the glory of God. If those conditions did exist, they would be made known in a process described as “see how they do” – not “see how they are not doing.”

The word translated “do” is an interested one (e;cousin). Lexically the word means, “to have, or to hold . . . to be in such and such a condition,” THAYER and “literally and figuratively, as holding something safely keep, preserve.” FRIBERG Robertson’s Word Pictures says of this expression:

“How they fare (pô's echousin). Indirect question, "how they have it." The precariousness of the life of new converts in pagan lands is shown in all of Paul's Epistles (Furneaux).”

There are certain things in which the believer is to have marked growth and advancement. As in nature, spiritual life is expected to grow and mature. As it is used here, the expression “see how they do” means “see how they are progressing,” or “see if they are holding firmly to the things to which they were called.” Here are a few of the areas in which how we are doing is to be considered.

- Keeping the faith (1 Tim 6:12; 2 Tim 4:7).
- Keep the rejoicing of the hope (Heb 3:6).
- Abiding in Christ (John 15:4,7; 1 John 2:27,28).
- Running the race with patience, or endurance (Heb 12:12).
- Growing up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:15).
- Growing in the grace and knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ (2 Pet 3:18).
- Being steadfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord (1 Cor 15:58).
- Being strong 1 Cor 16:13. Eph 6:10).
- Putting on the whole armor of God (Eph 6:11).
- Adding to your faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity (2 Pet 1:5-8).
- Setting your affection on things above, and not on things the earth (Col 3:1-2).

Thus Paul expresses his desire to see how the churches are progressing in the faith. It was this matter that was addressed on all of his letters to the churches – letters that contained many exhortations directly related to spiritual growth (Rom 6:12,17; 12:2; 1 Cor 4:16; 11:1; 14:20; 15:58; 2 Cor 6:14; 7:2; Gal 5:1-2, 19-25; Eph 4:22-24,26,32; 5:1,17; Phil 1:7,27; 2:2,12-15; Col 1:9-10; 3:5; 4:6; 1 Thess 4:1; 5:14-22; 2 Thess 3:12). Paul expressed this frame of mind when he said, “Beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches” (2 Cor 11:28).

Peter expressed this same concern in his letters to believers (1 Pet 1:22; 2:2,21; 3:9; 2 Pet 1:5-9; 3:2,14). John did the same as well (1 John 1:7; 2:6; 3:11,23; 4:7,11).

THE EMPHASIS IS ON THE BODY OF CHRIST

Although it is clear from both the doctrine and the historical record that the Divine emphasis has been placed upon the church, this point has been greatly obscured by the professing church itself. Ponder, for example, the ministry of the Lord Jesus Himself. The burden of His present ministry is represented as being toward His body.

- He is bringing many sons to glory (Heb 2:10).
- He is the Head of the body, which is the church (Col. 1:18).
- His body is the repository for all of His fulness (Eph 1:22-23).
- He is making intercession for those who are coming to God through Him (Heb 7:25).
- He is the Mediator of the New Covenant, which is the “better hope” by which we draw near to God (Heb 7:19; 12:25).

- He is loving and nourishing the church (Eph 5:29).
- He has been given to the church as Head over all things (Eph 1:20-22).
- He is the “great Shepherd of the sheep” (Heb 13:20).

Add to this the fact that all apostolic writing has been addressed to the saints. The Holy Spirit has been sent into the hearts of those who are now “sons” of God (Gal 4:6). The grace of God is engaged in tutoring those whom Jesus has redeemed from all iniquity to Himself, in order that they might be peculiarly His own (Tit 2:11-14).

How serious is it when there is not a prevailing interest in the body of Christ – not in assisting them in the resolution of their problems, but in their growth up into Christ? There are all kinds of religious professionals who specialize in improving interpersonal relationships, recovering from moral failure, and restructuring a dissembled life. However, you could take everything the Word of God has to say on these subjects, and the compilation of them all would barely qualify for a tract. Such problems are addressed in Scripture, to be sure. However, the manner in which they are handled is quite different than modern methodologies. A problem solving routine is absent in the doctrine. Allow me to give a few examples.

- “But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof ” (Rom 13:14).

- “Awake to righteousness, and sin not ; for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame” (1 Cor 15:34).

- “But ye have not so learned Christ; If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus: That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts ; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man , which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness” (Eph 4:21-24).

- “Wherefore putting away lying , speak every man truth with his neighbor: for we are members one of another” (Eph 4:25).

- “ Neither give place to the devil ” (Eph 4:27).

- “But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you , as becometh saints” (Eph 5:3).

- “Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you , with all malice” (Eph 4:31).

- “But now ye also put off all these ; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds” (Col 3:8-9).

- “Abstain from all appearance of evil” (1 Thess 5:22).

- “Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil , and he will flee from you” (James 4:7).

- “Wherefore laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby” (1 Pet 2:1-2).

- “My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not . And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous” (1 John 2:1).

The thrust of apostolic doctrine dealt with the clarification of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, together with the exposition of the circumstances that required it. Ponder some of these teachings that dealt with matters that were greater in scope than the individuals to whom they were addressed. This is only a very general sampling of the teaching concerning objective realities. These were addressed to the churches.

- The condition of humanity that required a great salvation (Rom 1:19-3:10).
- The nature of justification (Rom 3:21-5:21; Gal 3:20-4:7).
- The implications of baptism into Christ (Rom 6:1-23).
- The reality of the inner conflict created by regeneration (Rom 7:1-25).

Teaching of this sort makes for spiritual maturity and stability. This is because it provides things that can be grasped by faith. Once apprehended to some measurable degree, these provide a context in which believers can work out their own salvation with fear and trembling.

The extensive nature of a salvation that is ungirded by Divine power (Rom 8:1-39).

- Reasoning concerning Divine involvements with, and commitments to, the children of Israel (Rom 9-11).
- The nature and purpose of spiritual gifts (1 Cor 12-14).
- The resurrection of the dead, and its association with the resurrection of Christ (1 Cor 15:1-58).
- The glory of the New Covenant (2 Cor 3:1-23).
- The resurrection body (2 Cor 5:1-8).
- The logic of new creatureship, and what God has accomplished in Christ Jesus (2 Cor 5:14-21; Col 1:13-22).
- The nature of the freedom that is in Christ Jesus (Gal 5:1-26).
- The purpose of God (Eph 1:4-23).
- What God is doing in Christ Jesus (Eph 2:1-4:16).
- The nature of spiritual life (Rom 12:1-21; Eph 4:17-6:24; Phil 2:12-16; 3:3-16; 4:4-9; Col 1:9-12; 2:6-3:1-25; 1 Thess 5:14-28).
- What was involved in Jesus coming into the world (Phil 2:1-8).
- The fact and implications of the exaltation of Christ (Phil 2:9-11).
- The coming of the Lord (Phil 3:20-21; 1 Thess 4:13-5:11; 2 Thess 1:7-10; 2:1-9; 2 Pet 3:10-13).

Teaching of this sort makes for spiritual maturity and stability. This is because it provides things that can be grasped by faith. Once apprehended to some measurable degree, these provide a context in which believers can work out their own salvation with fear and trembling (Phil 2:12). Such a requirement cannot be addressed by confining both teaching and effort to avoiding sin, or recovering from it. Whenever sin is defeated at the temptation level, or recovery is realized from the Satan's captivity, there must be a corresponding apprehension of the objective realities of the Kingdom.

I understand the phrase "see how they do" to refer to this apprehension. It has to do with progress in the matter of being conformed to the image of God's Son. As Paul said it, "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus" (Phil 3:12). Other versions read, "in order that I may lay hold of that for which also I was laid hold of by Christ Jesus," NASB "to take hold of that for which Christ Jesus took hold of me," NIV and "to lay hold of (grasp) and make my own, that for which Christ Jesus (the Messiah) has laid hold of me and made me His own." AMPLIFIED Spiritual progress has to do with the apprehension, or taking hold of, the things for which Jesus has taken hold of us. That is the thing Paul is looking for in the churches where they have ministered.

A SOLEMN THOUGHT

In this case, neglecting the people of God would involve failing to see how they are progressing. The thought of neglecting the people upon whom so much Divine and commissioned interest is focused causes me to shudder. I recall the solemn words of the apostle Paul concerning defiling the body of people in whom God dwells . “If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are” (1 Cor 3:17).

This day is a time requiring a solemn emphasis of this reality!

BARNABAS WANTS TO TAKE MARK, BUT PAUL DID NOT THINK THAT WAS GOOD

“ 37 And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whose surname was Mark. 38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.”

This passage has been the subject of considerable controversy in the Christian community. Some have said that Barnabas made the right decision, and others affirm that Paul’s assessment of the situation was the correct one. I shall view this text within the context of how heaven reacted to the whole matter – whose work was chronicled after this event, and whose was not. I will also assess the purpose of the mission that was undertaken, and the bearing that had on this matter.

BARNABAS DETERMINED TO TAKE JOHN

“And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whose surname was Mark.” Other versions read, “was desirous of taking John,” NASB “”wanted to take John,” NIV “was minded to take,” ASV “proposed to take,” DARBY “counseled to take,” GENEVA “suggested taking,” NJB “was bent on taking,” WEYMOUTH and “persisted in wanting.” ISV

The Greek word translated “determined” is evbou,leto . The lexical meaning of this word, as used here, is, “to deliberate with oneself consider . . . resolve,” THAYER “to resolve on, to determine with oneself.” LEH This was a personal decision on the part of Barnabas – something he himself had determined. Of itself, this does not make the decision wrong, for this word is used at least once of a proper decision resulting from personal consideration (2 Cor 1:17). However, most of the time it is used, it clearly reflects personal reasoning, as compared with Divine direction (Lk 14:31; John 12:10; Acts 5:33; 12:4).

It must be remembered that John was Barnabas’ nephew – the son of his own sister (Col 4:10). It appears as though Barnabas was moved by his personal relationship to Mark – at least that is the consensus of the commentators (Expositor’s Bible, Albert Barnes, Pulpit Commentary, John Gill, John Benson, Matthew Henry, John Calvin). Of itself, this is not enough to form a satisfactory view of the text. I only mention it to confirm there have been numerous godly men who have viewed this text in this manner.

I will proceed with the assumption that Barnabas was thinking primarily of his nephew, no doubt desiring to give him the opportunity to be more firmly established. Of itself, this was good. However, it is questionable in view of the work on which they were embarking.

PAUL THOUGHT IT NOT GOOD

“But Paul thought not good to take him with them . . .” Other versions read, “Paul insisted they should not,” NKJV “did not think it wise,” NIV “decided not to,” NRSV “thought best not to,” RSV “did not think it appropriate,” CSB “thought it not meet,” GENEVA “didn’t think it was right,” GWN “was not willing,” MRD “insisted that they should not take” NAB “kept insisting,” NET “disagreed strongly,” NLT “would not take him,” PNT “didn’t like the idea at all,” LIVING “deemed it undesirable, ” WEYMOUTH “did not consider such a man fit,” WILLIAMS and “strongly disapproved.” PHILLIPS
