- After rising from the dead, Jesus spoke to His disciples “ of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God” (Acts 1:3).

- Philip preached “things concerning the kingdom of God” (Acts 8:12).
- Paul preached in Ephesus “disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God” (Acts 19:8).
- Paul preached the kingdom of God (Acts 20:25; 28:23,31).
- In distinction to mere rules, the kingdom of God is declared to be “righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost” (Rom 14:17).
- The “kingdom of God is not in word, but in power” (1 Cor 4:20).
- God translated us into the “kingdom of His dear Son” (Col 1:13).
- God has called us “unto His kingdom and glory” (1 Thess 2:12).
- Those in Christ have “received a kingdom which cannot be moved” (Heb 12:28).

This is a description of substantive preaching. Such declarations place the emphasis on the right things, and this brings a great glory to God. They constrain men to come to Christ for the right reasons, and to live with proper objectives. This is what enables them to endure and at last obtain the prize. I question that godly endurance is possible apart from the awareness of these things.

THE COMPLETENESS OF PAUL’S MINISTRY

“ 26 Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. 27 For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God.”

It is a grand day when a laborer can attest to his own faithfulness to the commission given to him. While this is not a common practice in our time, there is really no acceptable excuse for not being able to truthfully speak in this manner. As in all valid ministries, this statement postulates a working familiarity with the Person and purpose of God and Jesus Christ. It presumes an acquaintance with the “great salvation,” the Gospel that affirms it, and the doctrine that expounds it. Where this is lacking, it is not even possible to speak in such a manner.

I TAKE YOU TO RECORD

“Wherefore I take you to record this day . . .” Other versions read, “I testify to you this day,” NKJV “I declare to you this day,” NIV “I say to you this day,” BBE “I witness to you this day,” DARBY “I solemnly declare to you this day,” NAB “so on this very day I swear,” NJB “I call you to witness this day,” WEB “Let me say plainly,” LIVING “I can tell you one thing I am sure of,” IE “I protest to you today,” WILLIAMS and “I testify and protest to you on this [our parting] day.” AMPLIFIED

In this saying, Paul is not merely testifying to the clearness of his own conscience, as some versions suggest. He is rather appealing to their conscience, not to his. They were well acquainted with his ministry, its manner, and its substance. They could attest to the truth of what he will say. Here he expresses himself much as he did to the Corinthians when he wrote, “commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God” (2 Cor 4:2). There is a twofold appeal here: first, to the conscience of the Ephesian elders, and second he speaks with a full awareness of the attention of God to what he is saying.

I AM PURE FROM THE BLOOD OF ALL MEN

“ . . . that I am pure from the blood of all men . . .” Other versions read, “I am innocent from,” NKJV “not responsible for,” NRSV “I am clean from,” BBE “I am clear from,” DOUAY “my conscience is clear,” NJB “If anyone suffers eternal death, it's not my fault,” NLT “I’m not to blame if any of you will not be saved,” IE and “I am clean and innocent and not responsible for.” AMPLIFIED

Here, the appeal is to something declared to Ezekiel. It speaks of the responsibility of men who speak in the behalf of God. God spoke solemnly to Ezekiel about faithfulness in declaring what he was given by Him to say. “ “When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul . Again, When a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumblingblock before him, he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou hast delivered thy soul ” (Ezek 3:18-21).

It is most unfortunate that much theological education conveniently omits this fact. Were this matter pressed upon would-be preachers, many of them would no longer consider what they conceive to be a religious profession or career.

If the Lord denounces certain manners that are found in the people, whether in the leaders or those who are taught, the people are to be told. Failure to do this will be duly noted by the Lord, and the one charged with the responsibility of warning the sinner will be held accountable for failing to speak.

The truth of the matter is that what God has said about both righteousness and unrighteousness is to be communicated to the people. If the Lord denounces certain manners that are found in the people, whether in the leaders or those who are taught, the people are to be told. Failure to do this will be duly noted by the Lord, and the one charged with the responsibility of warning the sinner will be held accountable for failing to speak. Admittedly, there may be objections on the part of those being warned, but that is not to cause the one doing the warning to keep silence. His own soul is at stake in the matter as well as that of the transgressor.

The one doing the warning, telling the sinner that God has said he will “surely die,” may be charged with being insensitive, crude, and unwise – but he must speak anyway. He may be charged with not speaking in love – but he must speak anyway. When sinners lay the fault of their sin at the feet of other people, they must be told that God’s word to them is, “Thou shalt surely die.” That word is just as sure as it was when spoken to Adam (Gen 2:17).

Paul is saying that he has conducted his ministry within an acute awareness of what he was given to say – whether it was comfortable or convicting. Until this is done, the professing preacher or teacher IS in some way responsible for the condition of the people, and will be held accountable for their demise.

I HAVE NOT SHUNNED TO DECLARE THE WHOLE COUNSEL OF GOD

“ . . . For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God.” Other versions read, “For I did not shrink from declaring to you the whole purpose of God,” NASB “did not hesitate to proclaim to you the whole will of God,” NIV “I have not kept back from you anything of the purpose of God,” BBE “the whole plan of God,” CSB “have not shunned to acquaint you with all the will of God,” MRD “did not shrink from proclaiming to you the entire plan of God,” NAB “I have without faltering put before you the whole of God's purpose,” NJB “all that God wants you to know,” NLT “all God’s message,” LIVING “God’s whole truth,” WEYMOUTH “I never shrank or kept back or fell short from declaring to you the whole purpose and plan and counsel of God,” AMPLIFIED and “the complete will of God.” PHILLIPS

What is “the whole counsel of God?” I well remember being taught that this referred to the “plan of salvation,” the steps purported to be necessary to be initially saved. While what is required to forgiven of sin and reconciled to God is certainly essential, this is not the point of reference in this text. He was speaking to the elders of the church of Ephesus, and he certainly was not telling them he had faithfully conveyed to them how to be saved, as asked in Acts 16:31.

The word “counsel” is translated from a word meaning, “purpose . . . especially of the purpose of God respecting the salvation of men through Christ,” THAYER “intention,” UBS “that which has been purposed and planned,” LOUW-NIDA “design,”

As used here, the word “counsel” does not refer to the process through which one is saved, but rather to the reason or objective of salvation. It is what is accomplished in salvation that is the point here – the reason behind it.

LIDDELL-SCOTT , and “motive.” GINGRICH

As used here, the word “counsel” does not refer to the process through which one is saved, but rather to the reason or objective of salvation. It is what is accomplished in salvation that is the point here – the reason behind it. This is stated in a number of different ways, and assists the people in thinking correctly about the salvation that is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory (2 Tim 2:10).

- CONFORMITY TO THE IMAGE OF CHRIST. “For whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren” (Rom 8:29).

- PRESENTATION AS A CHASTE VIRGIN. “For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ” (2 Cor 11:2).

- GATHER TOGETHER ALL THINGS IN ONE. “That in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in Him” (Eph 1:10).

- SHOW THE RICHES OF HIS GRACE IN THE AGES TO COME. “That in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of His grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus” (Eph 2:7).

- THROUGH THE CHURCH TO SHOW GOD’S WISDOM TO PRINCIPALITIES AND POWERS. “To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God” (Eph 3:10).

- FILLED WITH THE FULNESS OF GOD. “And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God” (Eph 3:19).

- GROW UP INTO HIM IN ALL THINGS. “But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ” (Eph 4:15).

- A GLORIOUS CHURCH WITHOUT SPOT OR WRINKLE. “That He might present it to Himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish” (Eph 5:27).

- FILLED WITH THE KNOWLEDGE OF HIS WILL, “For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9).

- REIGN WITH CHRIST. “If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him: if we deny Him, He also will deny us” (2 Tim 2:12).

- BRING MANY SONS TO GLORY. “For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings” (Heb 2:10).

• PRESENT US FAULTLESS BEFORE HIS GLORY. “Now unto Him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy” (Jude 1:24).

This is the kind of “counsel” that is made known elsewhere by Paul. “In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will ” (Eph 1:11).

There are untold numbers of professed believers who have been exposed to very little of the counsel of God – certainly not to “the whole counsel of God.” It is not an innocent situation, or one to be passed off as unimportant. The very manner in which Paul expressed himself in this text confirms this to be true.

CONCLUSION

It is obvious from the tone of this text that Paul is addressing matters of a most serious nature. He is being faithful to his stewardship of the truth, alerting the saints of God to things concerning which they are not to be kept ignorant. As Paul heads into the last stage of his life, he speaks to the leaders of matters that bear directly upon the purpose of God – the driving force behind His great salvation. As he proceeds in this address, the tone grows even more serious. It will not at all agree with the watered-down messages of our day. It will become apparent that Paul is concerned with issues that have nothing whatsoever to do with institutionalism, the culturing of an earthly career, or the maintenance of favor with the people. This is a real man of God, delivering the real will of God, to the real people of God! In this text, we are not dealing with theory but with spiritual realities. In this passage men are not groping for the will of God, but are fulfilling it. This is a slice of genuine spiritual life – of a very real accord with the God of salvation.

Lesson #85

MEETING WITH THE ELDERS OF EPHESUS, #2

“ 20:28 ”Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which He hath purchased with His own blood. 29 For I know this, that after my ing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. 30 Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. 31 Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears. 32 And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of His grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified. 33 I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel. 34 Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me. 35 I have showed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive. 36 And when he had thus spoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all. 37 And they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him, 38 Sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ship.” (Acts 20:28-38)

INTRODUCTION

A SUMMATION OF THE TEXT

Paul's admonition to the elders is within the context of Divine purpose (Rom 8:28; Eph 1:11), Divine placement in the body (1 Cor 12:18), and the giving of gifts to the church (Eph 4:8-11). What is spelled out to them is not simply a matter of duty, but relates to the purpose God has for the church, and the means through which it is made suitable for a dwelling place for Himself (Eph 2:21). Within the body of Christ, leaders and teachers can only be considered within the framework of God's objective for the church. Such people are not culturing personal careers, or fulfilling their own natural wills. They are serving the purpose of Almighty God, and as soon as this ceases to be done, there really is no place for them within the body of Christ. Thus, Paul speaks with serious tones and a sense of urgency. He affirms that danger is looming on the horizon of time – dark and ominous clouds that contradict what God has revealed to be the purpose for his church. The elders are to be alert, and ready themselves and the people for what is coming. They cannot ignore Paul's solemn warning with impunity. They must give heed to it.

THE HEART OF A LEADER

In Paul we have the epitomization of the heart of a true leader. He does not build around himself, but focuses the attention of the people upon spiritually stable things.

- Key men taking heed to themselves.
- Spiritual leaders taking heed to the flock, over which the Holy Spirit has made them overseers.
- Feeding the church of God, which He has purchased with His own blood.
- Warning them of coming encroachments.
- Remembering the warnings of holy men.
- Reminding them that the grace of God can build them up.
- Reminding them that the grace of God can give them an inheritance among those who are sanctified.
- Remembering that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

REVEALED PRIORITY

Notice the priority of the people of Lord in all of these things Paul mentioned to the elders (20:19-38).

- “Serving the Lord ” 19
- “Repentance toward God ” 21
- “Faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ ” 21
- “The Holy Spirit witnesses” 23
- “The ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus ” 24
- “The gospel of the grace of God ” 24

- “The kingdom of God ” 25
- “All the counsel of God ” 27
- “The Holy Spirit hath made you overseers” 28
- “The church of God ” 28
- “ He hath purchased with His own blood ” 28
- “The word of His grace ” 32
- “The words of the Lord Jesus .” 35

In the body of Christ, people do not have a right to their own opinion concerning something on which the Lord has spoken. In fact, the warning issued in this text precisely pertains to that kind of thing.

Who cannot see the accent of Paul’s words? He speaks with a priority that is scarcely known during our time. There is absolutely no sectarian agenda or denominational emphasis. You become keenly aware of the total absence of involvement in the personal affairs of men. He is not promoting a special work, or sharing his personal needs. In all of this we are beholding how a person who is living for Christ speaks. We are witnessing the manner of his reasoning, the things that concern him, and his care for the church of the Lord Jesus Christ.

THE SAINTS THEMSELVES

It is the saints themselves, the “household of faith,” that Paul sets before the elders of Ephesus, as well as their responsibility to it. He does not tell them to be mindful of sinners, or the lost, or status in this world. He does not speak of health and wealth, the realization of personal “dreams,” or the expansion of the number of disciples. Such things have the stench of institutionalism upon them.

All of the things of which Paul speaks assume the thoroughness of Christ and our completeness in Him (Col 2:10). Thus, the solidification of our association with the Lord’s Christ is the stress, from which all valid activity will flow. The church must be kept in a state of good spiritual health. It must be nourished by alert and insightful leaders.

Anything that endangers the body of Christ, or lends itself to its weakening or confusion, is from the devil, and is to be vigorously opposed, regardless of the one who propagates it. Whatever introduces confusion, robs the people of spiritual understanding, or thrusts them into a state of uncertainty is to be viewed as grave and unsafe.

In the church, absolutely no tolerance is displayed for human opinions that divide, or fleshly perspectives of spiritual realities. In the body of Christ, people do not have a right to their own opinion concerning something on which the Lord has spoken. In fact, the warning issued in this text precisely pertains to that kind of thing. Paul warns that things will be spoken that are “perverse,” corrupt, and distorted views that were nothing more than lies dressed up human opinions. The thing that made them perverse was the injection of human wisdom.

THE ERODING EFFECTS OF FALSITY

In view of the means through which humanity fell, it should be apparent that a religious lie, though false to the core, nevertheless has power to subvert, undermine, and weaken the faith of those who hear it.

Jesus warned His disciples, “Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees” (Matt 16:6). Although they did not grasp the significance of what He said, later His disciples were given to see that Jesus was speaking about “the doctrine of the Pharisees and the Sadducees” (Matt 16:12). Paul warned Timothy that the teaching of certain intruders “will eat as a canker,” and will “overthrow the faith of some” (2 Tim 2:17). In view of the means through which humanity fell, it should be apparent that a religious lie, though false to the core, nevertheless has power to subvert, undermine, and weaken the faith of those who hear it. This takes place even if the individual is not aware of this inevitable effect. What can be said of those who willingly subject their minds to misrepresentations of the mind and will of the Lord – who, in the name of politeness and tolerance, listen to corruptions of the Word of God as it is spewed from the pulpits of the land like the venom of the “old serpent” himself (Rev 12:9; 20:2). Do such people imagine that they are impervious to the devices of the wicked one? Are they more equipped to subject themselves to his lies than Eve, who was in a state of absolute moral innocence when she listened to the devil?

The fact that such naive people listen to perverse things with their friends does not diminish the power of the lie. When someone is known to be delivering a false or skewed message, the people of God are directed, “from such withdraw thyself” (1 Tim 1:3-5). These are teachers who “teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words.” That is, their fundamental message is not the Gospel, and their expositions really have nothing to do with the Lord Jesus Christ or the edification of His “brethren.”

This tutelage is more than relating a formal sectarian routine. Here we are dealing with spiritual life, not mere human preferences. If men “live by every word of God” (Lk 4:4), then they had better be hearing and responding to that word. If “all Scripture is given by the inspiration of God,” and is “profitable” in order that “the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work,” then what possible reason can be given for delivering some other message? Lest any be confused on this matter, we are further told that the Scriptures “are able to make” us “wise unto salvation through faith that is in Christ Jesus” (2 Tim 3:15). This is not speaking of initial faith, or the commencement of salvation. There is a whole body of spiritual verity that is related to this salvation which is “with eternal glory” (2 Tim 2:10), and leads to an “eternal inheritance” (Heb 9:15). While God’s word does deal with human conduct and interpersonal relationships, that is not its intended thrust. If God is not known, and the individual is fundamentally unacquainted with the ways and purpose of Almighty God, nothing else is of any real consequence.

It is not right for professing church leaders to take it upon themselves to assist people in the resolution of their personal difficulties. No such thrust is found in Scripture. In fact, I do not believe you can find a solitary record of an incident in the Word of God where the everyday difficulties of life are addressed. Apart from his life toward God, and His ministry for God, we do not have a single record of the daily life of Jesus Himself. The same is true of the twelve disciples, Paul, Stephen, Philip, Timothy, and other key individuals in Scripture. There are no “how-to” details of living pertaining to the requirements of domestic, social, or political life. Admonitions pertaining TO such areas are remarkably general – something that cannot be systematized or organized. It has proved to be so confusing to religious sophists that they have developed their own routines and laws, being dependent upon the same.

The words of Paul to the Ephesian elders are an excellent example of these things. Notice the thrust of what he says to them, and what he considers to be imminent danger. Ask yourself if this is the kind of thing that is being delivered to the churches today. Ponder why the agenda that dominated Paul’s ministry is so little known today. In our culture, the words of our text have a strange sound. That circumstance is most serious.

TAKE HEED UNTO YOURSELVES AND THE FLOCK

“ 20:28a Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers . . .”

Elders are addressed concerning their capacity in the body. They occupy an office for which they are responsible, and they must be reminded of it. It is time for elders to cease directing those who faithfully preach the word (something that is outside of the circumference of their responsibility), and it is also time for those who know and preach the truth to address the elders. They are not figureheads in the body of Christ, but have certain responsibilities. On one occasion, Paul told Timothy, “Rebuke not an elder, but entreat him as a father; and the younger men as brethren . . . Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses” (1 Tim 5:1,19). Paul then said, “Them that sin rebuke before all , that others also may fear” (1 Tim 5:20). Even though Timothy was relatively young, he did have a grasp of the truth, and was therefore told to “entreat” elders politely, as though they were his father. To “entreat” is to “exhort,” NKJV or “appeal to,” NASB and has to do with correction. GWN The word includes the idea of instructing and teaching. THAYER This is precisely what Paul does here, and he does it in solemn tones and with the greatest sobriety.

TAKE HEED UNTO YOURSELVES

“Take heed therefore unto yourselves . . .” Other versions read, “be on guard for yourselves,” NASB “keep watch over yourselves,” NIV “give attention to yourselves,” BBE “watch out for yourselves,” CJB “pay careful attention to yourselves,” ESV “and now, beware,” LIVING “Take care and be on guard for yourselves.” AMPLIFIED and “look after yourselves.” CEV

The words “take heed” are translated from a single Greek word – prose,cete . The lexical meaning of this word is, “to turn the mind to, attend to, be attentive to a person or thing . . . to attend to oneself, I. e. to give heed to oneself . . . to guard oneself, I. e. to beware,” THAYER “watch out for, beware (of), be on guard (against), take care,” FRIBERG and “to be in a continuous state of readiness to learn of any future danger, need, or error, and to respond appropriately - to pay attention to, to keep on the lookout for, to be alert for, to be on one's guard against.” LOUW-NIDA

Timothy was apparently an evangelist (2 Tim 4:5), and he also was told: “Take heed unto thyself” (1 Tim 4:16). God also told the Israelites, “Take heed unto yourselves” (Deut 4:23). The person who sits at the Lord’s table is admonished to “examine himself” (1 Cor 11:28). All believers are told, “examine yourselves” (2 Cor 13:5). Those in Christ are exhorted to “take heed lest he also spare not thee” (Rom 11:21). Those engaged in building the body of Christ are told, “take heed how he buildeth” on the foundation (1 Cor 3:10). The person who thinks he stands is told to “take heed lest he fall” (1 Cor 10:12). All believers are admonished, “Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God” (Heb 3:12).

Why Is Taking Heed to Self So Important?

As you can see, whether it is the elders, the brethren in general, or the brethren collectively, taking heed, or being in a continual state of readiness and alertness, is necessary. Why is this so? It is obvious from the religious environment of our time, that professed Christians have not discerned a reason that necessitates this posture. In fact, that is what has allowed false teachers to enter, and people to believe them.

Outside of Christ there are certain distinctions that exist. The only sweeping distinction is one that God Himself imposed upon the human race: Jew and Gentile. Now that Jesus has removed sin and reconciled the world to God, the “middle wall of partition” that divided them has been broken down in Christ Jesus, and no longer exists

In reality, our relationship to God is cultured through a variety of means. The maintenance of our faith is the primary means (2 Cor 13:5; 2 Cor 4:7). There is also the sustenance of hope (Rom 8:24; Heb 3:6). Among these appointed means is the ongoing examination of self, and taking heed to ourselves. This is because faith does not maintain itself. Nor, indeed, is the Lord pledged to keep one’s faith robust, even though it is neglected. While this appears to me to be abundantly clear in Scripture, it seems to me that great and staggering numbers of professing Christians remain ignorant of this fact. This is especially true of elders, who are charged with the care of the church. I do not know how it is possible to account for a “falling away” apart from a failure to be vigilant in this matter. How is it that false teaching has so easily penetrated the professed church? How can erroneous doctrines be initiated and rapidly perpetuated with little apparent difficulty? Why do masses of professed Christians remain in a state of spiritual infancy and naivete, even though they may have been among that group for a good number of years?

Not only have leaders failed to “take heed unto themselves,” much of the teaching that is taking place during their watch is not at all conducive to self-examination. In fact, it is the teaching itself, seemingly noble motives notwithstanding, that have produced the woefully deficient state in which the nominal church finds itself.

Contributing to this condition is the fact that the fatal flaw of sectarianism is that the sect takes the place of Christ, and trust is therefore placed in being a part of it instead of being joined to the Lord. This should not require extended commentary, owing to its apparency to those of humble heart.

TAKE HEED TO ALL THE FLOCK

“Take heed . . . to all the flock . . .” Other versions read, “the whole flock,” DOUAY “the entire flock,” GWN “God’s people,” NLT “all the people of God,” IE “everyone,” CEV and “your congregation.” MESSAGE The larger percentage of all versions read, “all the flock.”

Outside of Christ there are certain distinctions that exist. The only sweeping distinction is one that God Himself imposed upon the human race: Jew and Gentile. Now that Jesus has removed sin and reconciled the world to God, the “middle wall of partition” that divided them has been broken down in Christ Jesus, and no longer exists (Gal 3:28; Eph:15). With great pungency the Spirit reveals, “There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus” (Gal 3:28). Men have had the audacity to add to these distinctions, shaping their ministries around differentiations that, before God, do not even exist. Now, in addition to the ones stated in Galatians 3:28, men have added “married and unmarried,” “husbands and wives,” “adults and youth,” “educated and uneducated,” “old and young,” “rich and poor,” “black and white,” etc. Not only have these distinctions been imposed upon the church, religious careers, systems of lower and high education, and innumerable volumes of books have been shaped around these distinctions. Let no one be foolish enough to rise to the defense of such professed “ministries,” for they are nothing more than a flagrant contradiction of our text.

It is thoroughly wrong to have a religious environment in which a twelve-year old can be raised without being conversant with the things of God – as the Master was when He was twelve Leaders are to take heed to “all the flock,” not a portion of it. Just as the same manna sustained all of Israel, whether young or old, married or single, or master or servant, so the same spiritual nourishment sustains “all the flock.” The only difference is in the amount that is consumed, not in the substance of the spiritual nourishment itself.

It is thoroughly wrong to have a religious environment in which a twelve-year old can be raised without being conversant with the things of God – as the Master was when He was twelve (Lk 2:40-49). No person is capable of justifying an approach to religion that does not permit a child to become “wise unto salvation,” as did Timothy (2 Tim 3:15). How can any approach to spiritual culture be right that does not allow for young Samuel and old Eli to be together in the service of the Lord? (1 Sam 2:18-21). I have rarely seen a so-called “church” where such a thing could happen – and this is the day of the “better thing” (Heb 11:40).

There are modern-day assemblies in which the burden of teaching and admonition is addressed to married couples with children. There are others where the emphasis is place upon the youth. Still others speak of nothing more than outreach and recruitment. Yet, above all of the religious noise that is being made about such approaches, a loud voice rings out from the heavenly chambers: “Take heed unto all the flock!” No person in possession of their faculties can say this word is no longer relevant, or that it has become obsolete, or been forced to give way to a more contemporary emphasis. Should such a person arise and demand that we listen to him, we must refuse to do so, and request that he either submit to the word of the Lord or leave our presence.

These so-called specialized ministries are bleeding off the resources that have been given to “all the flock.” By centering on certain people groups, they are neglecting the whole body. Men who pioneer these views have carved out a convenient career for themselves, but the flock of God has suffered because of what they are doing – notwithstanding their pretentious claims.

Foreshadowed in the False Shepherds of Israel

The damaging effects of false shepherds is confirmed in the nation of Israel. Their defection from the Lord and moral deficiencies are traced to their own prophets and teachers. As it is written, “My people hath been lost sheep: their shepherds have caused them to go astray, they have turned them away on the mountains: they have gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their restingplace” (Jer 50:6). The absence of good shepherds equates to having no shepherds at all. Here is how the Lord stated the case through Ezekiel: “The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them. And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd : and they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when they were scattered. My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them” (Ezek 34:4-6).

Through Jeremiah, the Lord revealed that the false prophets and teachers had actually loosed the hordes of opportunists and evil workers who did remarkable damage to the people of God. “I have seen also in the prophets of Jerusalem an horrible thing: they commit adultery, and walk in lies: they strengthen also the hands of evildoers , that none doth return from his wickedness: they are all of them unto me as Sodom, and the inhabitants thereof as Gomorrah” (Jer 23:14). How is it, in our day, that such a remarkable number of religious opportunists have risen to exploit the Christian community? What has caused this flood of strange doctrines, erroneous emphases, and distorted representations of God? It is the brand of religion that has been hawked by the preachers, teachers, and educators, who have conspired together to fulfill their own agenda – an agenda that has been fostered by spiritual blindness. They have not taught the people in such a manner as promoted spiritual growth; They have glossed sin by attributed immorality to genetic, physiological, and habitual causes. They have not distributed cool and refreshing waters from the depths of the wells of salvation. They have dabbled in culture, strode through the domestic chamber, and feigned real interest in the political climate. They have neglected the proclamation and exposition of the Gospel in favor of dealing with contemporary issues. They have allowed the world to set the tone and agenda of the church by adopting its passing fads and interests. In so doing, they have produced an environment tailored for opportunists and those who seek to exploit the people of God for personal advantage. They have opened the door for those to whom the door is closed by Christ Himself. They warble like a lovely song-bird that appeals to the people. As the prophet Ezekiel said, “And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not” (Ezek 33:32). The people clap and chant when they hear about Jesus coming to gather a glorious church – but they avoid the things that cause the glory. When the religious orators tell them what they ought to be, then add that they themselves are among those who come short of the aim, the people shout and cheer, as though there was some kind of merit in intellectually assenting to the truth, while failing to live it out.

All of this is evidence of that what is required of spiritual leaders is being ignored: “take heed to all the flock.” Is there anyone of sound mind who imagines that God Almighty will ignore such insolence among those who claim to represent Him? When has the Lord ever said anything that was of no relevance, or made a requirement that He did not intend for men to fulfill?

THE HOLY SPIRIT MADE YOU OVERSEERS

“ . . . over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers . . .” Other versions read, “the Holy Spirit has made you overseers,” NASB “made you bishops,” ASV “given into your care,” BBE “appointed you overseers,” NAB “made you the guardians,” NJB “appointed you as elders,” NLT “holding you responsible as overseers,” LIVING “to guard this flock,” IE “to take the oversight for Him,” WEYMOUTH and “has appointed you bishops and guardians.” AMPLIFIED

By its very nature, this office cannot be filled by the consensus of the people. They are the ones who require care, and how can such people have the determining word concerning who cares for them? The only circumstance under which their input is valid is if they are hungry and thirsty for righteousness

In addition to their revealed responsibility, Paul tells the elders of the source of their office. These were not men elected by the people, but positioned by the Holy Spirit of God. No person who cannot be so described can possibly be an elder – whatever else may be said of him. Further, the Holy Spirit did not position them so they could gradually become overseers, that is what they were when He duly endowed them. He is the administrator of the spiritual gifts, of which the elders, or “pastors and teachers,” are one (Eph 4:11; 1 Cor 12:4,7-11,28).

The word “overseers” is translated from the Greek word επισκοποι . The lexical meaning of this word is, “an overseer, a man charged with the duty of seeing that things to be done by others are done rightly, any curator, guardian, or superintendent . . . guardian of souls, one who watches over their welfare” THAYER/LOUW-NIDA

The means by which this guidance and care are carried out is specified in the next clause. Caring for the flock is the primary matter here – seeing to it that they are properly prepared to face the Lord, as compared to them carrying out the will of the overseer . Such a person is to see to it that the “all the flock” measures up to Divine expectations , for if that does not happen, their own future becomes rather gloomy.

By its very nature, this office cannot be filled by the consensus of the people. They are the ones who require care, and how can such people have the determining word concerning who cares for them? The only circumstance under which their input is valid is if they are hungry and thirsty for righteousness (Matt 5:6), and are actually seeking for honor, glory, and immortality (Rom 2:7). In such a case, they have a right to demand that their leaders provide the nourishment for which their renewed spirits long. However, the choice of who this will be is made by the Holy Spirit. He, and He alone, can make a person an overseer, equipping him with what is necessary for that work. No one should be so naive as to think that the Spirit underwrites the decisions of men. It is men who are obligated to discern the choices made by the Spirit. This is an example of the Lord placing each member in the body “as it hath pleased Him” (1 Cor 12:18).

It also ought to be noted that the care of “all the flock” requires some discernment of what God has purposed for His people. Caring for the flock has to do with them receiving what God has provided, and growing up into the kind of people He describes as His objective. This objective is not defined by world societies and purported experts. If God has not revealed a specific thing to be His objective, it cannot be presented as though He had. No matter what kind of arguments and proofs are presented to justify such a presentation, it simply cannot be true, and it is certainly not to be received as though it was.

FEED THE CHURCH OF GOD!

It is at this point that the manner in which care is administered to the flock is defined. Let it be clear, it is not by resolving their personal issues, as though they themselves had no access to God – much less, as though they did not have that access “with confidence” (Eph 3:12). Making business decisions, giving personal advice to those with personal and domestic problems, and the likes, is not an appropriate description of caring for the flock. This is not a matter of philosophy, but of revelation. God has spoken directly to this issue, and any contradicting answer is simply not allowable, and therefore ought not to be spoken or heard.

The role of feeding in the matter of caring and shepherding the flock of God is also seen in the Psalmist’s description of the Lord being His Shepherd. This is found in the 23rd Psalm.

TO FEED THE CHURCH OF GOD

“. . . to feed the church of God . . .” Other versions read, “to shepherd,” NKJV “to care for,” NRSV “give food to,” BBE “to rule,” DOUAY “tend,” NAB “feed and shepherd,” NLT and shepherd (tend and feed and guide.” AMPLIFIED

What does it mean to “feed the church of God.” Most of the standard versions read “feed.” Some read “shepherd,” and others “tend.” There are even some that translate the word “rule.” Does anyone really imagine that this is a general word, leaving the whole matter of its meaning to human opinion?

First, God spoke concerning this activity to Israel when He addressed the matter of false shepherds – those who had inserted themselves into the office. When speaking of their failure He stated it in this way.

- He chided them, “Son of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD unto the shepherds; Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the flocks?” (Ezek 34:2).
- “Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock” (Ezek 34:3).
- The shepherds “fed themselves and fed not My flock” (Ezek 34:8).

The care of the Lord’s sheep is summarized in feeding them, for if that is not accomplished, nothing else really matters. In the case of the false shepherds, they took advantage of the flock for their own good, but gave them nothing of substance to eat.

The role of feeding in the matter of caring and shepherding the flock of God is also seen in the Psalmist’s description of the Lord being His Shepherd. This is found in the 23 rd Psalm.

- Would not “want,” or be without needed resources (23:1).
- Lie down in green pastures (23:2a).
- Lead beside still waters (23:2b).
- Restoreth my soul (23:3a).
- Lead in the paths of righteousness (23:3b).
- Prepare a table before me (23:5a).
- My cup runneth over (23:5b).

These, then, are the proper definitions of a shepherd. Such a one is charged with the feeding, nourishment, and protection of the people of God.

The Lord further defines what this means in the book of Hebrews. There He refers to those who care for the flock.

- They have “spoken to you the word of God” (Heb 13:7a).
- Their “faith” is to be followed (13:7b).
- The outcome of their life of faith is to be favorably considered, and is more specifically defined as “Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today, and forever” (13:7c).
- They watch for the souls of the people as those who will give an account for their condition (13:17).

Peter fortifies Paul’s words in his admonition to elders. “The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock” (1 Pet 5:1-3).

The role of elders in the body of Christ is not merely to see to it that the flock is fed, doing it, so to speak, by proxy by hiring someone to do that work. They are to “feed the church of God” themselves, delivering the Word of God to them, and caring for them. How can a person who is not competent to teach determine who does meet that qualification? Such a thought is nothing more than an expression of absurdity. That is like saying a man who has never practiced carpentry can be proficient in detecting who really is expert in that craft.

The Nature of Eternal Life Demands This Kind of Ministry

“FEED My lambs . . . FEED my sheep . . . FEED My sheep” (John 21:15-17). “Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to FEED the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood” (Acts 20:28). “FEED the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind” (1 Pet 5:2).

In his High Priestly prayer to the Father on the eve of His betrayal, Jesus defined the purpose of God, and clearly stated His own role in that objective. “These words spake Jesus, and lifted up His eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify Thy Son, that Thy Son also may glorify Thee: As Thou hast given Him power over all flesh, THAT HE SHOULD GIVE ETERNAL LIFE to as many as thou hast given Him” (John 17:1-2).

Here the ultimate matter was the glorification of God Himself. This intended glory would be accomplished through the glorification and consequent ministry of Jesus Himself. The appointed means through which this would be accomplished was Jesus Christ giving eternal life to those whom the Father had given to Him.

Although it was certainly involved, the straightening out of the people was not the aim. Delivering them from uncomely habits and tendencies would not fulfill the objective, although that fruit would be found within the real purpose. God did not send Jesus into the world to build successful marriages, or to resolve marital issues. He did not send Him to guarantee His people would have a lot of things belonging to the world, from which Jesus would deliver them (Gal 1:4). THE GIVING OF ETERNAL LIFE WAS THE POINT, and if that was not accomplished, what God intended would not be achieved, and Jesus would be proved disobedient in the whole process. This is precisely why Jesus prayed with such a sense of urgency.

The modern church has managed to hide this appointed agenda from the people. By becoming immersed in the temporal lives of individuals, the attention has been turned from eternity to time, and from heaven to earth. Oh, it all sounds very intelligent, and even has a tone of spirituality about it. But it is off-center, and is failing to prepare the people for two appointments they cannot avoid – death and judgment (Heb 9:27). Eternal life IS the issue. That is what Jesus came to give, and the matter cannot be ignored with impunity. No person is justified in being turned aside to the personal lives of people, at the expense of them coming short of eternal life.

We are not left to speculate about the meaning of “eternal life.” Jesus Himself defined it – not to men, but to God the Father. “And THIS is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent” (John 17:3). There are two sides to eternal life, and neither of them has to do with life in this world. The first is knowing God, and the second is knowing Jesus Christ, His Son. Apart from these, there is no eternal life.

Knowing God and His Son whom He has sent, involves acquaintance with God, or familiarity with both Him and His Son (Job 22:21). It involves being able to understand His Word, and being inclined to His will. It includes having the mind of Christ (1 Cor 2:16). There is also the matter of having fellowship with Christ – a fellowship into which we have been called.

Knowing God and His Son whom He has sent, involves acquaintance with God, or familiarity with both Him and His Son (Job 22:21). It involves being able to understand His Word, and being inclined to His will. It includes having the mind of Christ (1 Cor 2:16). There is also the matter of having fellowship with Christ – a fellowship into which we have been called (1 Cor 1:9). It also includes knowing the “good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God” (Rom 12:2), having His nature (Heb 3:14; 2 Pet 1:4), and becoming pure as Jesus is pure (1 John 3:3). Those who know God and His Son “walk in the light as He is in the light” (1 John 1:7). While others are confused about God and Christ, those who are given eternal life possess “the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ” (Col 2:2).

It is precisely this circumstance that requires that the flock of God be fed, nourished, and built up in the most holy faith. Familiarity with God cannot be realized intuitively, or through the realization of worldly abundance. It is something that is accomplished within the domain of cognition, knowledge, or understanding. It also includes the ideas of awareness and judgment. None of these things are related to intuition, habit, or mindless routine. They all involve thought, discernment, and comprehension.

Feeding the church of God has to do with such things, because it immediately relates to the possession of eternal life. When the people of God are fed, they become spiritually intelligent. It ought to be clear that the agenda of preachers, teachers, prophets, and elders, cannot differ from, or compete with, the appointed objective of Jesus. Yet, when I peruse the religious landscape, I see all manner of agendas that are in sharp conflict with what Jesus is revealed to be doing, rather than in strict harmony with it.

WHICH HE HATH PURCHASED

“ . . . which He hath purchased with His own blood.” Other versions read, “bought with His own blood,” NIV “obtained with the blood of His own Son,” NRSV “for which He gave His blood,” BBE “which He won for Himself at the cost of His own Son's blood,” CJB “purchased with the blood of His own,” DARBY “acquired with His own blood,” GWN “He obtained for Himself [buying it and saving it for Himself] with His own blood,” AMPLIFIED and “God himself thought they were worth dying for.” MESSAGE

This expression – “His own blood” – has provoked a variety of responses. Since the antecedent to the verse is “the church of God,” the word “His” obviously refers to God. The difficulty is that “God is not a man,” and hence has no “blood.” Some have actually translated it “the blood of God,” which, within a certain framework of thought, does not make sense. Some have addressed the dilemma by translating the verse, “the blood of His own Son,” BBE/NET/NJB/CEV “His own son’s blood,” CJB and “the blood of His Son.” GNB The difficulty with this interpretation is that this is not how the text reads, either in the original or the English.

However, the difficulty is easily resolved if we take the word “God” to refer to Christ Jesus Himself. This should not be a strange view to anyone, for the Father Himself refers to the Son as “God.” As it is written, “And again, when he bringeth in the firstbegotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him. And of the angels he saith, Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire. But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O GOD, is for ever and ever: a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom” (Heb 1:6-8). Again, when Thomas confronted the risen Christ, and was challenged, “Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: and be not faithless, but believing,” he responded, “My Lord and MY GOD” (John 20:27-28) – and was not rebuked for doing so. Again, when speaking of the revelation of Christ at His second coming, Paul ascribes to Him the attributes that belong to God. “Which in His times He shall show, who IS the blessed and ONLY POTENTATE, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; WHO ONLY HATH IMMORTALITY, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see: to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen” (1 Tim 6:15-16). In addition to this, the Father and the Son are “One” – as Jesus said in His prayer, “We are one” (John 17:22).

THE POINT OF THE TEXT

The point of this text is not a technical argument, but an indisputable fact. The church – “all of flock” – belongs to God, not men. It has been purchased as His possession through Christ, and He has given the church to Christ as His bride-to-be. In view of that circumstance, the work of the elders is not to make sure the traditions that distinguish them as a group are maintained. Their role is not to ensure that the church contributes to the community in which it is located, or that it participates in key events hosted by that community. It is not that any of these things are wrong of themselves. However, that is not why elders have been placed in the body. They are there to take heed unto themselves and to “all the flock.” Their primary activity is to “feed the church of God,” ensuring that they grow up into Christ in all things, and are no longer children, tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine (Eph 4:14-15). The aim is for every member of the body to be a participant when the body is assembled together – for an unassembled body has no real value. The fact that this kind of eldership is not common does not change this requirement. It still exists, and is to be heeded by the people of God. Ignorance of this cannot be justified.

AFTER MY DEPARTING

Is it possible for a single man to make a significant difference in the spiritual condition of people? Indeed it is! Of old time, the preservation of wayward Israel was traceable to a single man – Moses. Israel took the whole land of Canaan under the leadership of a single man – Joshua.

“29 For I know this, that after my DEPARTING shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock.” This is one of the most sobering statements concerning the church itself that is found in Scripture. Nothing – absolutely nothing – about the passage is in anyway tolerant or accommodating. It constitutes a solemn warning of things that had not yet occurred – things for which the elders must prepare themselves.

AFTER MY DEPARTING

“For I know this, that after my DEPARTING . . .” Other versions read, “after my departure,”

NKJV “after I leave,” NIV and “after I have gone.” NRSV

Paul is not speaking directly of his death, but of his departure for Jerusalem, and of the fact that these elders from Ephesus would never see him again. The events that follow will eventually lead to his martyrdom, and I do not doubt that his words have a secondary reference to that, although the details of that occasion were apparently not made known to him at that time. However, here he is specifically referring to the future, and what would take place in his absence.

Is it possible for a single man to make a significant difference in the spiritual condition of people? Indeed it is! Of old time, the preservation of wayward Israel was traceable to a single man – Moses (Ex 32:12-14, 30-32). Israel took the whole land of Canaan under the leadership of a single man – Joshua (Josh 1:23). The entire city of Samaria believed because of the preaching of one man – Philip (Acts 8:12). One man – Apollos – “helped them much which had believed through grace” (Acts 18:27).

Indeed, one person can make a difference! Spiritually insightful men are like a barrier that guards the flock. Where such men are absent, there is a certain vulnerability that can scarcely be imagined. This very text substantiates that this is the case.

GRIEVOUS WOLVES SHALL ENTER

“ . . . shall grievous wolves enter in among you . . .” Other versions read, “savage wolves,” NKJV “fierce wolves,” RSV “evil wolves,” BBE “ravaging wolves,” DOUAY “vicious wolves,” NLT “cruel wolves,” WEYMOUTH and “ferocious wolves.” AMPLIFIED

This is extraordinarily strong language. The reason for its strength is that the nature of these spiritual intruders are not at all apparent. Jesus said such men were “inwardly ravaging wolves,” but appeared “in sheep’s clothing” (Matt 7:15). The scribes and Pharisees were such men, that “outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity” (Matt 23:28). Their appearance was meticulously clean. As Jesus said, “Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess” (Matt 23:25).

Those who evaluate such men from an apparent point of view may be impressed by their credentials, the seeming success of their ministry, and their polished manner and acquaintance with the things valued by the world. But all of that is nothing more than a facade, designed to attract those who lack “wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9). Those who naively receive such people are the worst for it. They will be robbed of such resources as they have, few though they may be.

The word “grievous,” as used in this text, means, “burdensome . . . violent, cruel, unsparing,” THAYER “fierce,” FRIBERG those who “fix heavy loads that are hard to carry and tie them on people's backs,” LOUW-NIDA and “fierce, savage.” GINGRICH

This is a spiritual assessment of these “wolves,” who are devouring in nature. Under their leadership the sheep are not fed, and consequently do not grow up into Christ. Rather, they are moved to adopt an approach that is burdensome to the sensitive of heart. These men are like rabid dogs who leave the people incapacitated, so that they cannot do the will of the Lord “from the

JESUS SPEAKS OF FALSE TEACHERS

- Inwardly they are ravening wolves (Matt 7:15).
- They are hypocrites (Matt 15:7).
- They are blind leaders (Matt 15:14).
- They bind heavy burdens on the people (Matt 23:4).
- All their works are done to be seen of men (Matt 23:5).
- They love to occupy the significant places, and to be greeted in public (Matt 23:6-7).
- They shut up the kingdom of God against men (Matt 23:13).
- They devour widows houses (Matt 23:14).
- They are pretentious in their prayers (Matt 23:14).
- They work diligently to convert people, then make them a child of hell (Matt 23:15).
- They are “fools and blind” (Matt 23:19).
- They omit the weightier matters (Matt 23:23).
- They appear beautiful, but are full of all manner of uncleanness (Matt 23:27).
- They are a generation of vipers (Matt 23:32).
- They take away the key of knowledge (Lk 11:52).
- There shall rise false Christs (Matt Matt24:24).
- They shall show great signs and wonders so powerful that, if it were possible, they would deceive the very elect (Matt 24:24b).

THE APOSTLES DOCTRINE CONCERNING FALSE TEACHERS

- They are grievous, or savage wolves (Acts 20:29a)
- They will not spare the flock, have no mercy upon them, MRD and do them damage BBE (Acts 20:29b).
- They will speak perverse things (Acts 20:30a).
- They will draw away disciples from Christ to themselves (Acts 20:30b).
- They cause divisions and offences (Rom 16:17).
- They serve not our Lord Jesus Christ (Rom 16:18).
- They serve their own belly (Rom 16:18).
- They deceive the hearts of the simple (Rom 16:18).
- They defile the temple of God (1 Cor 3:14-16).
- They preach another Jesus, another spirit, and another gospel (2 Cor 11:4).
- They are false apostles and deceitful workers (2 Cor 11:13).
- They are Satan’s ministers “transformed as ministers of righteousness” (2 Cor 11:15a).

- Their end is destruction (2 Cor 11:15b).
- They are “fools” (2 Cor 11:19).
- They “bewitch” the people (Gal 3:1).
- They zealously affect the people, but not well (Gal 4:17).
- They “hinder” the people (Gal 5:7).
- They are “dogs” (Phil 3:2a).
- They are “evil workers” (Phil 3:2b).
- They “beguile” the people with “enticing words” (Col 2:4).

They perpetrate “the traditions of men” and the rudimentary knowledge of the world

They “spoil” the people with “philosophy and vain deceit” (Col 2:8).

• They perpetrate “the traditions of men” and the rudimentary knowledge of the world (Col 2:8b).

• They desire to be teachers of the law, yet understand “neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm” (1 Tim 1:7).

• They have erred from the truth (2 Tim 2:18).

• They are “ever learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth” (2 Tim 3:5).

- They are “unruly and vain talkers” (Tit 1:10).
- They “subvert whole houses” (Tit 1:11).
- They have “turned from the truth” (Tit 1:14).
- They bring in “damnable heresies ” (2 Pet 2:1).
- They set “pernicious ways” before the people (2 Pet 2:2).
- Through covetousness, they “make merchandise” of the people (2 Pet 2:3).
- They “walk after the flesh” (2 Pet 2:10).
- They are “as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed” (2 Pet 2:12a).
- They speak evil of things they do not understand (2 Pet 2:12b).
- They have eyes full of adultery and cannot cease from sin (2 Pet 2:14a).
- Their heart is exercised in covetousness (2 Pet 2:14b).

- They are “cursed children” (2 Pet 2:14c).”
- They have forsaken the right way (2 Pet 15).
- They are “wells without water” (2 Pet 2:17a).
- They are “clouds that are carried with a tempest” (2 Pet 2:17b).
- They speak with “great swelling words of vanity” (2 Pet 2:18a).
- They allure through “the lusts of the flesh” (2 Pet 2:18b).
- They promise liberty, yet themselves are “the servants of corruption” (2 Pet 2:19).
- They “wrest” the Scriptures because they are “unlearned and unstable” (2 Pet 3:16).
- They “seduce” the people (1 John 2:26).
- They are “ungodly men” who are “ordained” unto condemnation (Jude 1:4a).
- They are “ungodly men” (Jude 1:4b).
- They “turn the grace of God into lasciviousness” Jude 1:4c).
- They have “gone the way of Cain” (Jude 1:11a).
- They have ran “greedily after the way of Balaam” (Jude 1:11b).
- They are “spots” in feasts of charity (Jude 1:12a).
- They “feed themselves without fear” (Jude 1:12b).
- They are “clouds that are without water, carried about of winds” (Jude 1:12c).
- They are trees whose fruit withers (Jude 1:12d).
- They are trees “without fruit” (Jude 1:12e).
- They are trees that are “twice dead, plucked up by the roots” (Jude 1:12f).
- They are “raging waves of the sea, foaming out their shame” (Jude 1:13a).
- They are “wandering stars, to whom is reserved the darkness forever ” (Jude 1:13b).
- Their mouth “speaks great swelling words, having men’s persons in admiration because of advantage” (Jude 1:18).

There are eighty-four statements made concerning false prophets. None of them are favorable. None of them are hopeful. All of them are in the context of warning. All of them are certain.

Observation

If this could happen after the consistent, faithful, and thorough ministry of Paul, what ought we to expect from weak and insipid ministries that do not ground people in the faith, or mature them in Christ Jesus? How easily can those with a weak faith, who are unlearned and ignorant in the ways of the Lord, be deceived?

The salvation of God equips men with a new heart and spirit, so that, under the tutelage of the Holy Spirit, they can “know all things” (1 John 2:20). They can detect aberrant teaching and abide in Christ (1 John 2:27). There is no valid reason for those in Christ being deceived, or failing to appropriate the knowledge of the truth.

NOT SPARING THE FLOCK

“ . . . not sparing the flock.” Other versions read, “doing damage to the flock,” BBE “will have no mercy on the flock,” MRD “trying to destroy the flock,” IE and “without mercy for the flock.”
PHILLIPS

Examples of “not sparing the flock” are seen in the leaders of Israel during former times. The language through which such leaders were reprimanded is most arresting. “Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of My pasture ! saith the LORD. Therefore thus saith the LORD God of Israel against the pastors that feed My people; Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them : behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the LORD” (Jer 23:1-2).

If this could happen after the consistent, faithful, and thorough ministry of Paul, what ought we to expect from weak and insipid ministries that do not ground people in the faith, or mature them in Christ Jesus? How easily can those with a weak faith, who are unlearned and ignorant in the ways of the Lord, be deceived?

Ezekiel is even more harsh in his inspired denunciation of the shepherds of Israel. “Son of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD unto the shepherds; Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves ! should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed : but ye feed not the flock. The diseased have ye not strengthened , neither have ye healed that which was sick , neither have ye bound up that which was broken , neither have ye brought again that which was driven away , neither have ye sought that which was lost ; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them . And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd : and they became meat to all the beasts of the field , when they were scattered. My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth , and none did search or seek after them. Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD; As I live, saith the Lord GOD, surely because My flock became a prey , and My flock became meat to every beast of the field , because there was no shepherd, neither did my shepherds search for my flock , but the shepherds fed themselves , and fed not my flock ; Therefore, O ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD; Thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I am against the shepherds ; and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them” (Ezek 34:2-10).

Zechariah said, “Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock! the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye: his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened” (Zech 11:17).

Thus, in these few examples of “not sparing” the flock of God, the following has been mentioned.

- They destroyed and scattered the sheep of God’s pasture.
- They drive them away.
- They did not visit them.
- They fed themselves.
- They killed them that were fed.
- They did not feed the flock.
- They did not strengthen the diseased.
- They did not heal the sick.
- They did not bind up the broken.
- They did not bring again those who were driven away.
- They did not seek those who were lost.
- They ruled the sheep with force and cruelty.

- The people were left without a shepherd.
- They became prey to predators.
- They caused the sheep to wander.
- The sheep were scattered throughout the earth.

Some few souls rightly lament the present scattering of the people of God, and the grievous divisions that exist among them. However, we must remember that men have caused these circumstances. Their contrived doctrines have been the instruments of scattering, starving, and making the people vulnerable to the devices of the wicked ones.

Some few souls rightly lament the present scattering of the people of God, and the grievous divisions that exist among them. However, we must remember that men have caused these circumstances. Their contrived doctrines have been the instruments of scattering, starving, and making the people vulnerable to the devices of the wicked ones. It is precisely what has been taught that has caused the condition. Rather than nourishing the sheep, and enabling them to be strong, their word had eaten like a malignant cancer, wreaking havoc among those who wear the name of the Lord. It really is not an innocent or tolerable circumstance!

REMEMBER!

Remember, we are speaking of “The flock of God” (1 Pet 5:2), or “God’s heritage” (1 Pet 5:3). While that may seem to suggest such people are beyond the place of harm, this is not all the case. As long as the people of God are immature, they are vulnerable to the devices of the wicked one. It is true that during their initial infancy in Christ, the Good Shepherd often carries them, and gently leads them (Isa 40:11), warding off the preying wolves that are prowling in their vicinity. However, there are also duly placed under-shepherds, whose duty is to oversee and feed the flock of God so they are no longer vulnerable to the heralds of corrupt teaching. The protection of the sheep is found within the framework of “wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9). These are facilitated by feeding them “the good knowledge of the Lord” (2 Chron 30:22).

In the text before us, a warning is given concerning those who do damage to the sheep by leaving them in worse shape than they were when God first delivered them from the power of darkness, and translated them into the kingdom of His dear Son (Col 1:13). Rather than facilitating their growth “up into Christ in all things” (Eph 4:15), they major in life in the very world from which Jesus has delivered them (Gal 1:4). However noble their intentions may appear, they do not mesh with the revealed ministries that have been placed within the church.

The Tragedy of Religious Exploitation

As unpopular as it may be to affirm, God has not appointed problem-solvers in the body of Christ. ALL of the spiritual gifts have to do with equipping the saints to grow up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:11-16). Here are some of the gifts God has placed within the church, which is the body of Christ.

- ROMANS 12:3-8
- 01–Prophecy
- 02–Ministry (service)
- 03–Exhorting
- 04–Ruling
- 05–Showing mercy
- 1 CORINTHIANS 12:6-10

- 06–The word of wisdom
- 07–The word of knowledge
- 08–Faith
- 09–Gifts of healing
- 10–Working of miracles
- Prophecy (duplicate)
- 11–Discerning of spirits
- 12–Diversity of tongues (languages)
- 13– Interpretation of tongues
- 1 CORINTHIANS 12:28
- 14–Apostles
- Prophets (duplicate)
- 15–Teachers
- Miracles (duplicate)
- Gifts of healing (duplicate)
- 16–Helps
- 17–Governments
- Diversities of tongues (duplicate)
- EPHESIANS 4:11-16
- Apostles (Duplicate)
- Prophets (duplicate)
- 18– Evangelists
- 19–Pastors/Teachers
- 1 PETER 4:10-11
- 20– Speaking
- Minister (serve)–duplicate

While some of these gifts may be construed to be related to problem solving and counseling (word of wisdom, word of knowledge, teachers), none are clearly affirmed to be for that purpose. That kind of activity is actually fulfilled by personal identity: fellowship with Christ (1 Cor 1:9), living by faith (Heb 10:38), walking in the Spirit (Gal 5:16,25), and drawing near to God to obtain mercy and find grace to help in the time of need (Heb 4:16).

The intention of the gifts is clearly stated in Ephesians 4:11-16.

- For the perfecting of the saints.
- For the work of the ministry.
- For the edifying of the body of Christ.
- Coming to the unity of the faith.
- Coming to the unity of the knowledge of the Son of God.
- Collectively coming to be a mature body, with each part effectively projecting their measure of the fulness of Christ.

- That we be no more children, tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine.
- That, speaking the truth in love, the saints may grow up into Christ in all things.
- That the body of Christ maybe compacted together by he effective ministration of every part.
- That the body may increase in the good work of edifying itself in love.

Those professed ministers, preachers, and teachers who are not contributing to the realization of these objectives are doing harm to the people of God – “not sparing the flock.”

The truth of the matter is that too many religious men are capitalizing on the weaknesses of the people professing allegiance to Christ Jesus. The very existence of their profession suggests that men are not complete in Christ (Col 2:10). For such men, the domain of religion offers an opportunity for a career, a business, or some work that is closer to this world than the world to come – which is the subject of apostolic exposition (Heb 2:5). This is not at all an innocent situation. When due care is not given to the flock of God, the future becomes very gloomy.

These days there is a marked tendency to neglect the people of God. Rather than proving a haven for the people of God, there is actually a focused effort on bringing the world into the church. It has even become popular to refer to churches “without walls,” as though that reflected a heavenly preference for the church. As noble as it is to have a genuine heart for the conversion of sinners, when the body of Christ assembles, it is not to reach the lost, but to remember Jesus and edify one another (1 Cor 11:17-20; 14:23,26; Col 3:16; 1 Thess 5:11; Heb 10:24-25).

The influence of the men who teach “perverse” things leads the people away from the emphasis established by God. Therefore, it causes the sheep to become vulnerable to the devices of Satan.

THE ENVIRONMENT FROM WHICH THE PERVERSE SPEAKERS COME

“ 30 Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them.”

Paul now warns the elders from Ephesus of impending corruption that would rise in the church. He identifies the source of the corruption, its nature, and the intent that drives it.

OF YOUR OWN SELVES

“Also of your own selves shall men arise . . .” Other versions read: “from among yourselves,” NKJV “even from your own number,” NIV “Some even from your own group,” NRSV “from your own ranks,” NJB and “Even some of you.” NLT

The most dangerous enemies of the church have risen from its own environment! Danger comes from defectors, not mere intruders. Ishmael was in the house with Isaac. Esau was in the womb and the home with Jacob. Joseph’s brothers, who were so aligned against him, were raised in the same house as himself. Judas, noted for his betrayal of the Lord and for being under the dominance of Satan, was “numbered with” the twelve apostles, partaking of their unique ministry (Acts 1:17). John spoke of some false prophets who “went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us” (1 John 2:19).

Thus, Paul warns these “elders” that some of their own number would break away from the Lord and the Divine agenda, and would use their position to promote their own cause. In order to do this, they will have to depart from “the apostles doctrine” (Acts 2:42), and develop a unique message that serves their own corrupt interests.

SPEAKING PERVERSE THINGS

“ . . . speaking perverse things. . .” Other versions read, “distort the truth,” NIV “distorting the truth,” NRSV “give wrong teaching,” BBE “speaking twisted things,” ESV “perverting the truth,” NAB and “with a travesty of the truth.” NJB

The words “perverse things” are translated from the single Greek work diestramme,na , which means “to distort, turn aside . . . to turn aside from the right path, to pervert, corrupt,” THAYER “become misshapen; figuratively pervert, corrupt, distort; passive, of the truth be perverted, be distorted,” FRIBERG “pervert, distort (crooked, wrong); divert, turn away; mislead, lead astray,” UBS and “to cause someone to believe something that is quite different - 'to cause someone to turn away from a belief, to mislead.” LOUW-NIDA “Perverse things” are teachings that take men off the narrow way that leads men to life. They are not necessarily perverse in appearance. They may not discard Scriptures, but actually profess to rely upon them. However, they are like a doctrinal caricature that accents the wrong thing, bringing distortion to the understanding.

There is an approach to Scripture that places the accent on the wrong thing. From the most concentrated perspective, the accent of Scripture is God Himself. Technically, the Word of God is the revelation of Himself, His purpose, and His will. Insofar as the implementation of that will, or purpose, is concerned, Jesus Christ is the Subject, for the Scriptures testify, or bear witness, to Him (John 5:39; Rev 19:10). Jesus is presented within the context of God’s “eternal purpose” (Eph 3:11), apart from which He has no relevance to mankind. His birth, life, ministry, death, burial, resurrection, ascension, enthronement, and present rule all relate directly to that purpose.

“Perverse things” pull men away from that purpose, and thus away from Christ Himself – who relates directly to that purpose. When this diversion takes place, Christ is no longer at the helm of teaching, nor is He its focus. He is thus assigned a secondary role (at the best), which is designed to support what men have presented as the primary objective, doctrines, perspectives, emphases. Now, however, their primary objective reflects nothing more than corrupt human understanding, and tends to accrue to the ultimate advantage of its perpetrator. Some current doctrinal thrusts that can be properly referred to as “perverse things” include the following. These all are wrong in the sense of being the emphasis, of thrust, of the teaching. None of them are wrong of themselves, or are intended to be excluded from sound teaching and doctrine. However, when they become the emphasis, or accentuation of the teaching, Christ is moved from the perceived place of prominence.

- The conversion of the lost.
- The means through which men are saved.
- The optimization of the married state.
- The proper rearing of the family.
- The happiness of the individual.
- Gaining control of one’s life.
- Following a prescribed and exact pattern in worship.
- The public praise and worship of God.
- The realization of personal desires and ambitions.
- Success and dominance in this world.

- The Attainment of Health and wealth.
- The relief of the poor and oppressed.
- Doctrines that CENTER in such things as the Sabbath, meats and drinks, fasting, feast days, etc.

None of these matters directly relate to Christ Himself, His return in glory, or preparation for the day of judgment. They do not depend upon Christ. They are not fostered by faith, do not require grace, nor are they represented as being administered by the Holy Spirit. As an emphasis, they are primarily related to this world and time. The aforementioned matters are valid only as they are placed within the context of God, Christ, and the revealed “eternal purpose” of God. No revealed spiritual gift or aptitude is said to be related to such things. All specialists in such fields must subscribe to disciplines and approaches developed by men. Each person majoring on such things must determine if this is the proper thing to do.

The truth itself will not induce men to develop a teaching that can be described as “perverse things.” No statement or thrust of Scripture will produce a sectarian – not so much as an isolated syllable! That circumstance is precisely what requires the development of special doctrines that will promote the cause of the one speaking “perverse things.”

TO DRAW AWAY DISCIPLES

“ . . . to draw away disciples after them.” Other versions read, “to entice the disciples to follow them,” NRSV “turning away the disciples after them,” BBE “in order to drag away the talmidim after themselves,” CJB “to lure the disciples into following them,” CSB “to induce the disciples to follow them,” NJB “to draw a following,” NLT

As I have already stated, the Gospel is not conducive to promote a human cause, or to build a personal following. That undeniable circumstance is the reason for these men delivering unique and flawed dogmas – it is the only way they can increase the number of people following them. For example, who is the person willing to affirm that “the Gospel of Christ” would lead a person to be a Baptist, Methodist, Lutheran, Presbyterian, or member of the Christian Church? What person would dare to allege that “the apostles’ doctrine” would make a person a premillennialist, a charismatic, or a Seventh Day Adventist?

When once a preacher or teacher establishes an agenda of his own, or adopts the agenda of another, it is at once essential to have a unique doctrine that promotes that agenda. This is because God’s “doctrine” (Deut 32:2) does not promote priorities developed by men. It is only relevant within the context of His revealed purpose.

The Philosophy of Making Disciples

A word is in order concerning the philosophy of making disciples. Precisely what is the reason for Christ’s words, “teach all nations,” KJV or “make disciples of all the nations” NKJV (Matt 28:19). Is it merely to increase the total number of disciples? Surely it does not require any extraordinary degree of intelligence to see that He is not referring to inflating the numbers of denomination “A” or “B.” Is His purpose to get more people to recite the “sinner’s prayer”? – which phraseology is not even found in Scripture.

First and foremost, it is the Lord’s harvest into which the laborers are sent. Thus Jesus admonished His disciples, “Then saith He unto His disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth laborers into His harvest” (Matt 9:38). Notice that the harvest was ready – “plenteous,” or “great” (Lk 10:2). Elsewhere, Jesus saw a great company from the city of the Samaritans approaching Him, and referred to them as being fields that were “white unto harvest” – like ripened grain (John 4:35). He was describing a people who had been made ready for the Lord – someone had planted and sowed, and the time for increase had come. A great multitude of people who are yet in trespasses and sins do not constitute a field that is white unto harvest. A multitude of such people existed in Asia, yet the Lord, at one point in time, forbade any attempt to reap there (Acts 16:6). The same was true in the region of Bithynia (Acts 16:7). At that time, the fields were white in Macedonia (Acts 16:9-10). Later, the fields were whitened in Asia, and the Lord sent laborers to reap it (Acts 19:26). Another time, when the fields did not look white in Corinth, Jesus appeared to Paul and informed him that it was time to reap, and that he ought to remain in Corinth, guaranteeing him of safety from the Jews, who often sought his life (Acts 18:9-11).

The modern church has wasted a lot of time and resources attempting to reap where there was no harvest. It has studied maps, and trends, and statistics – none of which drove the spread of the Gospel and the increase of converts in the first century.

The modern church has wasted a lot of time and resources attempting to reap where there was no harvest. It has studied maps, and trends, and statistics – none of which drove the spread of the Gospel and the increase of converts in the first century. Of course, there is no comparison in the results, either. This is largely because of insensitivity to the Lord Himself, and a lack of acquaintance with His manners.

Only God can give the increase, and He does not do it through the imaginations and doctrines of men. Genuine seed must have been planted and authentic watering must have taken place BEFORE God gives the increase. This is not necessarily related to time.

Further the aim of salvation is not merely to bring a cessation to immorality and enslavement to sin. That is involved, to be sure, but it is not at the core of the purpose. Reconciliation to God, or oneness with Him is the revealed objective (Rom 5:10; 2 Cor 5:18-20; Col 1:20–21). There is also the matter of being a “partaker of Christ” (Heb 3:14), and being “partakers of the Divine nature” (2 Pet 1:4) – i.e. becoming a new creation (2 Cor 6:17; Eph 2:10), and receiving a new man that is “created in righteousness and true holiness” (Eph 4:24), being “renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him” (Col 3:10). When men do not “grow up into Christ in all things” (Eph 4:15), there is no point to the remission of sins or deliverance from servitude to sin.

In the salvation of God – the “great salvation” – the revelation of participation is not found in what men do NOT do, or what they are attempting to overcome. It is rather found in their fellowship, or participation, in Christ (1 Cor 1:9; Eph 4:15), and their conformity to His image (Rom 8:19); 2 Cor 3:18). If men do not have what salvation offers, then it is not possible to confirm that they are saved. That is why all believers are admonished, “Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?” (2 Cor 13:5). That text confirms that every professing believer is either accepted or rejected, in or out, a participant of a non-participant – and none of those conditions is to be assumed.

We do not have to inquire into whether or not such noble and revealed objectives are being served by the church at large. The current condition of the professed church belies any profession of being a new creation. The fruit of current church work does not even suggest that the revealed purpose is even known, much less that men have been consciously joined to the purpose itself. When men say that God is moving them to do this or that, the results will confirm whether their claim to Divine guidance is correct or not. I do not believe this perspective is common among professing believers. However, it is the truth. It is ever true, “Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.” (Mat 7:20).

WATCH AND REMEMBER

“ 31 Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears.”

Paul does not simply declare that false teachers will come, letting the matter drop with a prophecy. He does not suggest that whatever will be, will be, and therefore the elders from Ephesus should not be surprised when what he declares comes to pass. Men often reason in such a manner, but they are neither holy nor inspired men. When a period of spiritual corruption is foretold, those who hear the word are to see to it they are not caught in the tide of defection. They are also to be vigilant so those under their care are not put at a disadvantage by such teachers. As I see things, this kind of posture is glaringly absent in today’s “church” culture.

When a period of spiritual corruption is foretold, those who hear the word are to see to it they are not caught in the tide of defection. They are also to be vigilant so those under their care are not put at a disadvantage by such teachers. As I see things, this kind of posture is glaringly absent in today’s “church” culture.

THEREFORE WATCH

“Therefore watch . . .” Other versions read, “be on the alert,” NASB “be on your guard,” NIV “keep watch,” BBE “be ye vigilant,” NAB “Watch out!” NLT “awake,” TNT and “be always alert and on your guard.” AMPLIFIED

The word “watch” means, “to give strict attention to, be cautious, active; to take heed lest through remission and indolence some destructive calamity suddenly overtake one,” THAYER “to keep awake,” UBS “give strict attention to, be cautious, active; to take heed lest through remission and indolence some destructive calamity suddenly overtake one,” LOUW-NIDA and “to be or become fully awake, to watch.” LEH

The word “watch,” as used in this text, is mentioned twenty-three times from Matthew through Revelation. Jesus used the word on two critical occasions.

• REGARDING HIS SECOND COMING. “ Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come” (Matt 24:42; 25:13; Mk 13:34-37; Lk 12:37-39).

• ASKING HIS DISCIPLES TO JOIN HIM IN PRAYING ON THE EVE OF HIS BETRAYAL. “Then saith He unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with Me” (Matt 26:38,40,41; Mk 14:34,37,38).

The “apostles’ doctrine” also includes this word, clearly associating it with alertness, vigilance, and taking heed to matters of a most solemn nature.

• SPIRITUAL STABILITY. “ Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong” (1 Cor 16:13).

• BEING ALERT IN PRAYERFULNESS. “Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving” (Col 4:2).

• ALERTNESS TO THE DANGERS ABOUT US. “Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober” (1 Thess 5:6).

• BEING KEENLY AWARE OF THE NATURE AND INTENTIONS OF THE DEVIL. “Be sober, be vigilant ; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pet 5:8).

• BEING AWARE OF OUR CONDITION BEFORE THE LORD. “Be watchful , and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God” (Rev 3:2).

• AVOIDING BEING FOUND IN AN UNACCEPTABLE STATE. “Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee” (Rev 3:3).

• READINESS FOR THE APPEARING OF THE LORD. “Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame” (Rev 16:15).

The intention of Paul’s exhortation is clear. A defection from the truth will take place under the leadership and teaching of some wayward church leaders. The intention of that defection will be to build an organization around men that will promote their cause. In order for this to occur, “perverse things” must be taught, for the truth itself cannot be employed for such purposes. The elders from Ephesus were to be alert for this intrusion, remaining in a state of constant readiness, lest it take place while they were spiritually asleep.

Elsewhere Paul refers to this defection from the standpoint of the hearers. “For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears” (2 Tim 4:3). This demand by the hearers is the result of embracing the “perverse things” introduced by the teachers of which Paul was warning the elders. Once the erroneous teaching was introduced, it would rapidly spread through the church, corrupting the thinking of the people. It is the influence of false teaching that has moved professing Christians to demand froth and flesh-pleasing preaching.

AND REMEMBER

“ . . . and remember . . .” Other versions read, “remembering,” NASB “having in mind,” BBE “keeping in memory,” DOUAY “always remember,” IE and “be mindful.” AMPLIFIED

The word “remember” involves the will, as well as some degree of understanding or discernment. It has to do with recollecting, and to keep in memory constantly, not allowing the matter at hand to slip away from the mind. The thing to be remembered is what Paul had said concerning the coming defection of certain leaders, and the introduction of erroneous teaching that would do damage to the flock of God.

Jesus told His disciples of this phenomenon. “And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many. And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold” (Matt 24:11-12). He continued, “For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect” (Matt 24:24).

• Paul also taught that these false teachers would actually be taught by demons – that their doctrines were spawned, so to speak, in hell. “Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall fall from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils [demons NKJV]; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron” (1 Tim 4:2).

• Peter said they would “bring in damnable heresies,” that many would “follow their pernicious ways,” and that their teaching would cause men to speak evil of “the way of truth” (2 Pet 2:1-2).

• John referred to them “many antichrists” who had severed their association with those who spoke the truth (1 John 2:18).

• Jude said they were “ungodly men, turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ” (Jude 1:4).

I do not know how a circumstance could be any more serious – unless it be the day of judgment in which these men will stand before God to give an account for their reprehensible manners and doctrines. The men themselves are not the point, but their contemptible doctrines. Remember, Peter said they were “damnable.” Other versions read, “destructive,” NKJV “For your destruction,” BBE “sects of perdition,” DOUAY “disruptive views,” NJB “destructive sects,” YLT “fatal divisions,” WEYMOUTH “harmful lies,” CEV and “perversions of the truth.” PHILLIPS These doctrines would not appear to be so serious – that is why the warnings were issued. If they were very apparent, there would be no need for such exhortations.

As you can detect from the various versions, there is a marked tendency among modern translators to avoid the obvious harshness of the text. Although the word “destruction” is an acceptable technical definition, yet it lacks the potency of the word “damnation” – which is an obvious action of God Himself, for no man can “damn.” The Greek word from which “damnable” is translated is αἰώνιος. As used here, the lexical meaning of the word is: “a destroying, utter destruction . . . perishing, ruin . . . the destruction which consists in the loss of eternal life, eternal misery, perdition,” THAYER “(utter) ruin, (complete) loss; as the eternal punishment of the wicked,” FRIBERG “one bound to be lost or one destined for hell.” UBS

Other Scriptural uses of this word are as follows.

The teachings, or message, of these false teachers, who speak “perverse things,” are of a most serious nature. What they teach actually is leading men into eternal ruination. Just as the Gospel is God’s power unto salvation (Rom 1:16), these “damnable heresies” are one of Satan’s means of drawing people into hell. This is not an opinion, but a matter of written revelation.

“Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat” (Mat 7:13).

- “While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled” (John 17:12).
- “But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money” (Acts 8:20).
- “What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much longsuffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction” (Rom 9:22).
- “And in nothing terrified by your adversaries: which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God” (Phil 1:28).
- “Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things” (Phil 3:19).
- “Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition” (2 Thess 2:3).
- “But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition” (1 Tim 6:9).
- “But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul” (Heb 10:39).
- “But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men” (2 Pet 3:7),

The teachings, or message, of these false teachers, who speak “perverse things,” are of a most serious nature. What they teach actually is leading men into eternal ruination. Just as the Gospel is God’s power unto salvation (Rom 1:16), these “damnable heresies” are one of Satan’s means of drawing people into hell. This is not an opinion, but is a matter of written revelation.

Now we are living over two thousand years past the time in which Paul spoke these words. The men of which he warned entered long ago, and now we are in an era in which the Christianity of the masses has been largely shaped by the teaching of false prophets. Error is so pervasive within the professed church that it is staggering. There is hardly a Scriptural subject that has not been grossly distorted. “Diverse and strange doctrines” (Heb 13:9), together with corrupt emphases and an off-centered focus are common. There is no quadrant of the globe where these condition cannot be found. The doctrines of reference have truly eaten as a cancer.

FOR THREE YEARS I WARNED EVERYONE

“ . . . that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one . . .” Other versions read, “for three years I did not cease to warn,” NKJV “a period of three years I did not cease to admonish,” NASB “for three years I never stopped warning,” NIV and “I never stopped . . . to admonish and advise and exhort you one by one.” AMPLIFIED

“Three years” was the length of time Paul labored in Ephesus, using it as his base of operation. This is divided into three sections of time – two of them precise, and one general.

I suppose some might have considered this a negative message – but such an imagination only betrays a high level of ignorance. This was involved in caring for the flock of God –something Paul has admonished the elders of Ephesus to do. He now adds this word to provide an example of faithfulness in this area. He steadfastly conducted his ministry among them in the precise frame of spirit, and with the same care, that he now requires of the elders. This is the manner in which he ministered everywhere, providing an example of how and what to minister (Phil 3:17; 2 Thess 3:9).

During the pioneer days of our country, there were vast wastelands that had pools of contaminated water. Thoughtful souls who knew the condition of this water would post a warning sign for weary travelers, lest they drunk from that polluted water. Oh, that men were more faithful to warn the people of God of dangerous teachings that cause men to swerve aside, falling into damnable ways of thinking.

Here are a few ensamples of erroneous messages that were already being preached near the middle of the first century.

- That the resurrection is already past (2 Tim 2:16).
- Forbidding to marry (1 Tim 4:3).
- Commanding to abstain from meats that God has created (1 Tim 4:3).
- Presenting gain as godliness (1 Tim 6:5).
- Voluntary humility, or self-abasement, and the worship of angels (Col 2:18).
- Another Jesus, another gospel, and another spirit (2 Cor 11:4; Gal 1:6).

When men embrace something that is a lie, it is not harmless. Do not imagine that such poor souls will simply grow out of the delusion. This is not possible, because the delusion itself forces men into a path that ultimately leads to condemnation. Even when it appears that men have read or studied their way out of error, a careful examination will find that their path had been crossed by some faithful soul who gave a word that proved to be a challenge to their way of thinking. I understand that it is necessary to employ godly wisdom, and to show the conflict of the false teaching with the truth of God – but something must be said. If what I have just said is not the expression of a proper perception, then how do we account for the faithfulness of Paul in addressing this subject for a period of three years?

NIGHT AND DAY WITH TEARS

“ . . . night and day with tears.” Other versions read, “with weeping,” BBE “with tears in my eyes,” CJB “tears for you,” NLT “many tears for you,” LIVING and “I often cried over you.” IE

The very thought of deficiency in the people of God, whether a current circumstance or a potential one, has been the cause of many holy men weeping – and even the Lord Jesus, when He “dwelt among us.”

• JESUS, AT THE UNBELIEF PRESENT WHEN LAZARUS DIED: “When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, He groaned in the spirit, and was troubled, And said, Where have ye laid him? They said unto Him, Lord, come and see. Jesus wept ” (John 11:33-35).

• JESUS OVER JERUSALEM: “And when He was come near, He beheld the city, and wept over it , Saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes” (Luke 19:41-42).

• JEREMIAH THE PROPHET AT THE CONDITION OF ISRAEL. “ Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!” (Jer 9:1). “But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride; and mine eye shall weep sore, and run down with tears , because the Lord's flock is carried away captive” (Jer 13:17).

• ELISHA, WHEN HE KNEW THE EVIL THAT WOULD BE DONE TO THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL. “And he settled his countenance steadfastly, until he was ashamed: and the man of God wept . And Hazeal said, Why weepeth my lord? And he answered, Because I know the evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Israel: their strong holds wilt thou set on fire, and their young men wilt thou slay with the sword, and wilt dash their children, and rip up their women with child” (2 Kgs 8:11-12).

• EZRA, WHEN CONFESSING THE SINS OF THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL. “Now when Ezra had prayed, and when he had confessed, weeping and casting himself down before the house of God , there assembled unto him out of Israel a very great congregation of men and women and children: for the people wept very sore” (Ezra 10:1).

• NEHEMIAH, UPON HEARING OF THE RUINATION OF JERUSALEM AND THE STATE OF THE PEOPLE. “And it came to pass, when I heard these words, that I sat down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted, and prayed before the God of heaven” (Neh 1:4).

• PAUL AT THE CONDITION OF THE CORINTHIAN CHURCH. “For out of much affliction and anguish of heart I wrote unto you with many tears ; not that ye should be grieved, but that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you” (2 Cor 2:4).

• PAUL, WHEN CONSIDERING THE PRESENCE OF FALSE TEACHERS. “For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping , that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things” (Phil 3:18-19).

• TIMOTHY DURING HIS LABORS. “Greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears , that I may be filled with joy” (2 Tim 1:4).

Today, there is a glaring absence of this kind of concern in the churches, and among their leaders. Erroneous doctrines are abounding in the land – all presented as coming from God. There is a tidal wave of darkness and ignorance that has veiled the revelation of God, all the while pretending to be a new word from the Lord. The religious concerns that are being taught and marketed by this corrupt breed of teachers has little to do with eternity, the condition of men before the Lord, eternal life, or the danger of everlasting destruction. In the name of Christ, men are being immersed into the details of life in this world in a way that causes them to actually ignore eternal matters. Even though, in conversion, God raises us up and causes us to be seated with Christ in the heavenly places (Eph 2:6), the general emphases of modern Christendom is pulling them back down into the arena out of which they were delivered and raised.

There is such a thing as ultimate reality. As used in Scripture, it pertains to what will survive the demise of the world, and remain after death has been swallowed up in victory. Truth cannot be changed or altered. If this were not so, God, Christ Jesus, and the Holy Spirit could not Themselves be described as “truth.”

The consequences have been disastrous. Now, sin is more prominent, human weakness is more prevalent, and spiritual ignorance is at an astounding level – in the professed church! All of this has happened under the watch of educated, polished, and refined ministers whose primary message is questionable, to say the very least. If it is true that “Ye shall know them by their fruits” (Matt 7:16,20), exactly what are these conditions telling us?

THE TRUTH

The seriousness of false and erroneous teaching is seen in the nature of truth itself.

Defining truth is not as simplistic as it may at first appear. MCCLINTOCK & STRONG’S CYCLOPEDIA defines truth in this way: “The foundation of all truth is in truth of being--that truth by which a thing is what it is, by which it has its own nature and properties; and has not merely the appearance, but reality , of being. Truth, as predicated of knowledge, is the conformity of our knowledge with the reality of the object known; for, as knowledge is the knowledge of something, when a thing is known as it is that knowledge is formally true.”

In other words, truth is reality, or the way things really are. In Scripture, the way things really are is defined by God. It is His assessment that confirms the reality of a thing. When it comes to the things of God, or the assessment of things that pertain to life and godliness, exclusive definitions and teaching belong to God Himself, coming through Christ Jesus and the Holy Spirit. With Him, there is no such thing as philosophy, speculation, or opinion. He only speaks what actually IS, and His assessments are the ONLY ones that are flawless, perfectly conforming to ultimate reality.

The word “true” – for truth pertains to what is “true” THAYER – is lexically defined as follows: “that which has not only the name and semblance, but the real nature corresponding to the name,” THAYER “of words that conform to facts true, correct, dependable; of what conforms to reality genuine, real, true,” FRIBERG and “of words that conform to facts true, correct, dependable; of what conforms to reality genuine, real, true.” LOUW-NIDA

There is such a thing as ultimate reality. As used in Scripture, it pertains to what will survive the demise of the world, and remain after death has been swallowed up in victory. Truth cannot be changed or altered. If this were not so, God, Christ Jesus, and the Holy Spirit could not Themselves be described as “truth.”

With that in mind, here is how the word of God speaks of “truth.”

- Truth belongs to God – it is “His truth” (Gen 24:27; Psa 57:3; 91:4; 96:13; 98:3; 100:5).
- God is “abundant in truth” (Ex 34:6).
- God is a “God of truth” (Deut 32:4; Psa 31:5).

- God is to be served “in truth” (Josh 24:14; 1 Sam 12:24).
- Men are to walk before the Lord “in truth with all of their heart” (1 Kgs 2:4).
- Truth is to be spoken “in the heart” (Psa 15:2).
- All the paths of the Lord are “truth” (Psa 25:10).
- All of God’s works are “done in truth” (Psa 33:4).
- God desires “truth in the inward parts” (Psa 51:6).
- God’s salvation is characterized by truth (Psa 69:13).
- Jesus Christ is “full of grace and truth” (John 1:14).

In order to be saved, men must receive “the love of the truth.” If they do not, God will send them “strong delusion,” and they will be “damned”

- “Truth . . . came by Jesus Christ” (John 1:17).
- Those who worship God must do so “in truth” (John 4:24).
- The truth, when known, “shall make you free” (John 8:32).
- Jesus Himself is “the truth” (John 14:6).
- The Holy Spirit is “the Spirit of truth” (John 14:17; 15:26; 16:13).
- The Holy Spirit guides “into all truth” (John 16:13).
- God sanctifies men “through” His “truth” (John 17:17,19).
- God’s word “is truth” (John 17:17).
- Jesus came to “bear witness unto the truth” (John 18:37).
- The wrath of God is revealed against those who hold back the truth (Rom 1:18).
- Those who “changed the truth” were given up by God to vile affections (Rom 1:25-26).
- The judgment of God is “according to truth” (Rom 2:2).
- Indignation and wrath are reserved for those who “do not obey the truth” (Rom 2:8).
- Truth is to be obeyed, and men are faulted by God if they do not do so (Gal 3:1; 5:7).
- The Gospel of salvation is called “the word of truth” (Eph 1:13).
- The truth is to be spoken (Eph 4:15,25).
- The “fruit of the Spirit is in all . . . truth” (Eph 5:9).
- In order to be saved, men must receive “the love of the truth.” If they do not, God will send them “strong delusion,” and they will be “damned” (2 Thess 2:10-12).
- Salvation involves coming “into the knowledge of the truth” (1 Tim 2:4).
- The church is “the pillar and ground of the truth” (1 Tim 3:15).
- When God gives repentance, there is an acknowledging of the truth (2 Tim 2:25).
- God begets His children “with the word of truth” (James 1:18).
- Erring from the truth requires that such a person be “converted” (James 5:19).
- Men purify their souls by “obeying the truth through the Spirit” (1 Pet 1:22).
- Men are “established” in the truth (2 Pet 1:12).

- The way that leads to life is “the way of truth” (2 Pet 2:2).
- No lie is “of the truth” (1 John 2:21).
- The “Spirit is truth” (1 John 5:6).
- The people of God “walk in the truth” (2 John 1:4; 3 John 1:4).
- The faithful have a good report “of the truth itself” (3 John 1:12).

Is it possible that permission is given to men to venture into the arena of opinion when addressing the subjects of God, Christ, the Word of truth, the things of God, the salvation of God, or the purpose of God? Has God really given men leniency in such matters, so they can consult with the wisdom of men, promote their own opinions, or allow for varying and contradicting views of something God has revealed?

Who would dare to postulate such folly, and what would be the purpose of doing so? Without lingering on the subject, what about the coming of the Lord? Within the Christian community there are least four independent and isolated areas of thought on the subject: Premillennialism, Postmillennialism, Amillennialism, and Preterism. None of these views can be merged, and none will allow the acceptance of the other views. Whole bodies of theology are incorporated into these contradicting views. The human opinions concerning these areas of thought include the following. This is not intended to be a complete listing.

- The coming of the Lord itself.
- The enthronement and reign of Christ.
- The resurrection of the dead.
- The day of judgment.
- A period of tribulation.
- The coming of antichrist.
- The matter of rewards.
- The visibility of Christ’s return.
- The separation of the godly from the ungodly.
- The conversion of sinners.

j

- The conversion of the Jews.
- The work of the Holy Spirit.
- The preaching Gospel of Christ.
- The existence of the world.
- The prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Haggai, Daniel, Zechariah, Malachi, Paul, and John – with several others.

It is difficult to conceive of a subject that touches more matters than these – and God has spoken particularly about each one of the above.

No person can afford to be wrong about what God has revealed – or, to be more precise, to REMAIN wrong about what God has revealed. This is of particular importance when it comes to views of Christ and the salvation that He has effected.

Further, they are all deal with critical subjects.

In these positions concerning the coming of the Lord, there is a readiness to equate the opinions of men with the affirmations of God. Further, there is little consciousness of the seriousness of sifting the Word of the Lord through the maze of human judgment. Additionally, allowance is made for the saints accepting one of these views to the exclusion of others. Such tolerance is even affirmed to be done with sincerity and a pure heart.

How serious is it to approach the Word of God in such a manner? Is it possible that contradicting representations of the will and way of the Lord are harmonious? Will God really work through a word that is not true – that does not conform to ultimate reality? The real situation is this: whatever is not left standing after the present heavens and earth have passed away, and death has been swallowed up in victory, cannot possibly have been true – and that is precisely how men will be forced to think as they stand before the Judge of all the earth.

No person can afford to be wrong about what God has revealed – or, to be more precise, to REMAIN wrong about what God has revealed. This is of particular importance when it comes to views of Christ and the salvation that He has effected. Those subjects account for the burden of Divine revelation. This is precisely why the saints of God must be fed a proper and beneficial diet. Those leaders who refuse to do this must be expelled now. Unless they repent of their doing, they WILL be expelled at the great separation, just as Paul affirmed (2 Cor 11:15; Phil 3:19). Any other position on this matter is indefensible, and must be forthrightly abandoned.

The highest value must be placed on the truth itself, and whatever does not conform precisely to it is a lie, and is to be so viewed.

COMMENDED TO GOD AND THE WORD OF HIS GRACE

“ 32 And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of His grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified.”

Now that Paul is leaving these brethren, and has duly warned them of the impending defection of some of their own number, what does he desire for them? How do you speak to people after issuing such a solemn warning? The manner of the kingdom and the nature of salvation is revealed in what Paul now says to these leaders.

I COMMEND YOU TO GOD

“And now, brethren, I commend you to God . . .” Other versions read, “commit you to God,” NIV “give you into the care of God,” BBE “entrusting you to God,” GWN “I commit you to God [I deposit you in His charge, entrusting you to His protection and care],” AMPLIFIED “I am giving you to God,” IE “I commend you to the Lord,” PHILLIPS and “I am turning you over to God.” MESSAGE

To “commend” is to “place near, or set beside . . . to deposit, to intrust, commit to one’s charge . . . to be cared for . . . to commend one to another for protection, safety, etc.” THAYER

There are several critical matters that are assumed when someone is commended to the Lord.

- That the Lord is capable of taking care of the people involved.
- That the people being commended to the Lord are themselves committed to Him.
- That the one doing the commending is familiar with the Lord, and has some understanding of what the Lord is doing.
- That there are hostile influences and forces that transcend the natural abilities of the ones being commended to the Lord.

- That there is some worthy objective for which the people being commended to the Lord are being prepared.

- That in the absence of the one doing the commending, the people involved will be subjected to some form of increased hostility.

- That the presence of the one doing the commending gave the believers certain advantages they did not have while he was not in their presence.

While this is not the place to develop these thoughts, the mentioning of them will be apparent to those with spiritual understanding. Even in his absence, Paul was thinking of the flock, and took care of it by commending the people to the Lord Himself, knowing full well that He cares for the righteous (1 Pet 5:7), and is “able” to keep them from falling, and present them faultless before His presence with exceeding joy (Jude 1:24-25).

I COMMEND YOU TO THE WORD OF HIS GRACE

“ . . . and to the word of His grace . . . ” Other versions read, “the message of His grace,” NRSV “the message of His love and kindness,” CJB “His message that tells how kind He is,” GWN “that gracious word of His,” NAB “His wonderful words,” LIVING “the message of God’s gracious love,” IE “the message of His favor,” WILLIAMS “the Word of His grace [to the commands and counsels and promises of His unmerited favor],” AMPLIFIED “the message about His great kindness, CEV and “the saying of His grace.” INTERLINEAR

The term “word” is taken from the Greek word logos, which means, “those things which are put together in thought, as of those which, having been thought I. e. gathered together in the mind, are expressed in words,” THAYER and a word “that embodies a conception or idea . . . the sayings of God . . . doctrine, teaching . . . a narrative . . . the thing spoken of or talked about,” GINGRICH Men use the term in this way when they say, “This is my word to you,” or “Do you have a word for us?”

The “word of His grace” is what God has said about His grace – it is the Divine teaching, or doctrine, concerning the grace of God – the message of what His grace has accomplished, what it does and what it brings to the believer.

It is interesting that Paul does not commend them to the word of God’s requirements – even though there is such a word. However, commandments do not go as far as grace, nor do they contain the resources made available through grace . The commandments of God are to be obeyed, to be sure, and woe to that person who disdains them, or withholds them from the people. However, they have more to do with the outer court than with the holy of holies. They are more related to the approach to God than the fellowship of Jesus. They are not the appointed means through which we become “partakers of the Divine nature.” That sharing is through God’s “precious promises,” which are the expression of His grace, and through which resources are acquired that assist us in being conformed to the image of God’s Son (Rom 8:29; 2 Pet 1:4).

The “word of His grace” is the message concerning His “precious promises,” the blessings that come “down from above,” and all the things that meet our “need,” as defined by the Lord.

Associations of Grace

This “grace” is associated with things relating to the fulfillment of God’s purpose in His people. Here is a partial listing of the matters revealed in Scripture to be directly related to the grace of God.

- The experience of being justified (Rom 3:24).
- Salvation by faith (Rom 4:16).
- Access by faith (Rom 5:2).

- Abounding favor (Rom 5:15,20).
- Abundance (Rom 5:17).
- Men reigning (Rom 5:21).
- Being freed from the dominion of sin (Rom 6:14).
- The election of God (Rom 11:5).
- Distinguishing salvation from a system of works (Rom 11:6).
- Spiritual gifts (Rom 12:6).
- Being a wise master-builder (1 Cor 3:10).
- Being a prodigious laborer (1 Cor 15:10).
- A godly life (2 Cor 1:12).
- The humility of Christ (2 Cor 8:9).
- Sufficiency (2 Cor 12:9).
- What we are called to (Gal 1:6).
- Being called by God (Gal 2:9).
- Being made accepted (Eph 1:6).
- The forgiveness of sin (Eph 1:7).
- Being made alive with Jesus (Eph 2:5).
- God's kindness toward us (Eph 2:7).
- Being saved (Eph 2:8).
- The measure of the gift of Christ (Eph 4:7).
- Spiritual knowledge (Col 1:6).
- Consolation and hope (2 Thess 2:16).
- The gifts of faith and love (1 Tim 1:14).
- Being strong (2 Tim 2:1).
- Bringing salvation (Tit 2:11).
- Teaching us how to deny sin and live godly (Tit 2:12).
- Christ tasting of death for every man (Heb 2:9).
- Divine help (Heb 4:16).
- Serving God acceptably (Heb 12:28).
- Establishment (Heb 13:9).
- The final revelation of Christ (1 Pet 1:15).
- Being stewards (1 Pet 4:10).
- Standing (1 Pet 5:12).
- Growth (2 Pet 3:16).

What can really be said of a message that does not leave people thinking about and depending upon the grace of God. How is it possible for the Holy Spirit to have inspired so much to be said about God's grace, yet professing believers to be so ignorant about it? The answer is simple, although it is by no means pleasant. It is because an erroneous message has been preached!

What can really be said of a message that does not leave people thinking about and depending upon the grace of God. How is it possible for the Holy Spirit to have inspired so much to be said about God's grace, yet professing believers to be so ignorant about it? The answer is simple, although it is by no means pleasant. It is because an erroneous message has been preached! I do not believe it is possible for those with good and honest hearts to avoid this conclusion. A graceless message is not only indefensible, it is a message that leads people away from God, for it is a word through which God will not work.

WHICH IS ABLE TO BUILD YOU UP

“ . . . which is able to build you up . . . ” Other versions read, “which is able to make you strong,” BBE “able to build further,” GENEVA “help you grow,” GWN “Able to build further,” TNT “able to build your faith,” LIVING “can help you,” CEV and “can make you into what He wants you to be.” MESSAGE The great majority of the versions read “build you up.”

And what does it mean to be built up? The words “build you up” are translated from a single Greek word – εὑποικδομῆ/σαι . This word means “to finish the structure of which the foundation has already been laid, I. e. in plain language, to give constant increase in Christian knowledge and in a life conformed thereto,” THAYER “build up, make more able, cause to be strong,” FRIBERG

The idea of building upon the foundation of Christ is declared in other places. In his first letter to the Corinthians, Paul refers to the church being “God’s building ” (3:9). He speaks of those who build upon the foundation that has been put in place (3:10), declaring that care must be taken on HOW and WHAT is built upon that foundation (3:10-12). In his letter to the Ephesians Paul states that the church is “ built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief cornerstone” (2:20). He states that the building is “fitly framed together,” growing together “unto a holy temple in the Lord” (2:21). He further states that the church is “ builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit” (2:22).

This building has to do with growing up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:15). It is going on to perfection (Heb 6:1), and coming into spiritual maturity. It relates to being “men in understanding,” and comprehending “with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God” (Eph 3:18-19).

There really is no point to an immature church, for it contradicts the very purpose for its existence. In His doctrine, Jesus made clear that maturity relates to fruit bearing, and that bearing fruit to God is a principle point of being saved. This is confirmed in the parable of the sower. Of the four soils upon which the seed was sown, only one yielded a harvest. One soil yielded no response at all, and thus the birds ate up the seed sown upon it. Two soils showed some signs of life, but did not bring forth fruit “to perfection” (Lk 8:11-15).

Romans 7:4 states, “Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God ” (Rom 7:4). It is inconceivable and foolish to the point of absurdity to infer that the purpose for salvation could not be met, and yet its effects remain.

If the word of God’s grace is able to build us up, then it ought to be constantly affirmed. There is no excuse for people being Christians for years, yet hearing very little about the grace of God and what it provides. I personally had to overcome the doctrine of the church with which I was affiliated to come to any satisfactory understanding of God’s grace. I lament that this was the case, but it was, and it is time for people with similar experiences to declare it. If the means through which spiritual maturity is reached is withheld from the people, we should not be surprised when we see professing Christians remaining in juvenileness for the greater part of their life. It is uncomely for such a state to exist, and there should be an instant abandonment of anything that sustains such a miserable condition.

WHICH IS ABLE TO GIVE YOU AN INHERITANCE

“ . . . and to give you an inheritance . . .” Other versions read, “give you your heritage,” BBE “give you all the inheritance,” LIVING “give you the blessings,” IE “give you your inheritance,” WEYMOUTH “give you your proper possession,” WILLIAMS “give you [your rightful] inheritance,” AMPLIFIED “give you what belongs to God’s people,” CEV “give you everything you possibly need,” MESSAGE and “give you your place.” PHILLIPS

Salvation is not completed until the inheritance is obtained. While we remain in the body, and in this world, we have “the firstfruits of the Spirit” (Rom 8:23), and not the whole of the inheritance. The inheritance of this text is an “eternal inheritance” (Heb 9:15). The aim of all valid ministry is to bring the saints to “receive” that inheritance (Acts 26:18). All who are immoral are excluded from this inheritance (1 Cor 6:9-10; Gal 5:21; Eph 5:5). The inheritance is “obtained” because men have been “predestinated according to the purpose of Him that worketh all things after the counsel of His own will” (Eph 1:11). Presently, we have the “earnest,” or down payment, of that inheritance, “until the redemption of the purchased possession” (our bodies) – not the whole of it (Eph 1:14). Further, we have been begotten in order to obtain that inheritance (1 Pet 1:3-4). To come short of that obtainment is to have lived in total vanity.

THEM THAT ARE SANCTIFIED

“ . . . among all them which are sanctified.” This inheritance will be realized by “all them which are sanctified.” Other versions read, “among all the saints,” BBE “all those who have been set apart for God,” CJB “all of God’s holy people,” GWN “all who are consecrated,” NAB “all those He has set apart for Himself,” NLT “all God’s set-apart ones (those consecrated, purified, and transformed of soul),” AMPLIFIED “this community of holy friends,” MESSAGE and “all those who are consecrated to God.” PHILLIPS

Those who “are sanctified” are holy, dedicated to God, and living for Him. They have been set apart for God by their faith. Jesus Himself said that they are “sanctified by faith that is in Me” (Acts 26:18). Their sanctification is no more sure than their faith, and is in direct

All who are immoral are told they will not receive the inheritance for which men are begotten again. It is impossible for them to be “forever with the Lord” if they are living in opposition to Him. If this were made sufficiently clear in the churches, the greater percentage of their recovery programs would no longer be required.

proportion to that faith. These are the people who are living by faith and walking in the Spirit. They are not of this world, but are strangers and pilgrims in it (1 Pet 2:11). They alone are “heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ” (Rom 8:17), for the children of God are heirs, and they are “all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus” (Gal 3:26).

These days, a lot is not being said about the “eternal inheritance” and being sanctified by faith. Men speak about heaven and the world to come with a certain disdain, as though there was something inferior about living for the future. However, the Lord has been very clear about this matter. This world is destined for destruction by fire (2 Pet 3:10-12), and is going to be replaced by “a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness” (2 Pet 3:13). There is no possibility of this judgment being reversed, and thus men are obliged to prepare for “the end of all things” (1 Pet 4:17). Men may write about “Your Best Life Now,” and boast of being the head in this world, and not the tail – but no such thing is promised to those who are in Christ Jesus. Even when that was promised under the Old Covenant – which was a vastly inferior covenant – it was attached to this unalterable condition: “And the LORD shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if that thou hearken unto the commandments of the LORD thy God, which I command thee this day, to observe and to do them : And thou shalt not go aside from any of the words which I command thee this day , to the right hand, or to the left, to go after other gods to serve them” (Deut 28:14). Israel never achieved that status, for the Old Covenant was “weak through the flesh,” not providing as much as one mote of strength to keep the commandments of God. Yet, there are actually people preaching this commandment as integral to life in Christ Jesus. As Paul said of them, “some having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling; Desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm” (1 Tim 1:7).

The truth of the matter is that no one who is unholy has a bright future. Those who are continually yielding to sin are facing a dismal eternity – and that is putting it mildly. God has spoken so plainly on this matter that a person has to be a fool not to see it. All who are immoral are told they will not receive the inheritance for which men are begotten again. It is impossible for them to be “forever with the Lord” if they are living in opposition to Him. If this were made sufficiently clear in the churches, the greater percentage of their recovery programs would no longer be required. The existence of such programs can only be maintained if men are kept ignorant of the excluding and disqualifying nature of sin. Once this is seen, those who are serious will work out their own salvation with fear and trembling.

Now, if the word of His grace is able to give men the inheritance, then what can be said of those who are not subjected to this word? Precisely what chance is there of a person obtaining the inheritance if he rarely hears about it, and does not know what excludes men from it? And what can really be said of preachers and teachers who teach the people as though life in this world were the fundamental life, and that Jesus died to secure for men a happy and successful life in this world.

Note, the text says “all them which ARE sanctified.” Whatever one chooses to emphasize in this world, nothing is more important than preparing to receive the inheritance – “the things which God hath prepared for them that love him” (1 Cor 2:9). That is the focus of Jesus’ present ministry, as well as all those whom He has “put into the ministry” (1 Tim 1:12). Absolutely no advantage or benefit will be brought to anyone who has not made himself ready to receive the inheritance, and be forever joined to the Lord.

PAUL AND LIFE IN THE FLESH

“ 33 I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel. 34 Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me.”

Paul does not hesitate to remind people how he lived among them, for that was the outward evidence of his unwavering commitment to the Lord. Faith, when obtained and nurtured, compels the individual to live unto the Lord, and in strict harmony with the Divine Nature. Consistently flawed lives are the product of a lack of faith, for “this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith” (1 John 5:4).

Faith, when obtained and nurtured, compels the individual to live unto the Lord, and in strict harmony with the Divine Nature. Consistently flawed lives are the product of a lack of faith, for “this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith”

The commitment of a man to the feeding of the flock of God is measured by the degree of personal inconvenience he is willing to endure. The person who thinks of himself in an inordinate manner will not be used extensively, if at all, in the vineyard of the Lord.

I HAVE NOT COVETED

“I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel.” Other versions read, “silver, gold, or clothes,” NASB “silver, gold, or clothing,” NIV “silver, or gold, or garments,” MRD “I have never wanted,” NAB “I have desired no ones,” NET “I have never asked anyone for money or clothes,” NJB “silver, or gold, or fine clothes,” NLT “silver, gold, or vesture,” PNT “I have never been hungry for money or fine clothing,” LIVING and “silver, gold, or [costly] garments.” AMPLIFIED

Here, the Jerusalem Bible captures the sense of the text: “I have never asked anyone for money or clothes.” In this case, the lack of covetousness is not established by a verbal testimony, but by Paul’s manner of life. Unlike many professed Christian leaders of our day, Paul was not a professional beggar. It was not that he refused to receive support from brethren, for he often spoke of those who provided for his needs. To the Philippians he wrote, “For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity” (Phil 4:16). He reminded the Corinthians that he “took wages” from “other churches” in order to minister to the Corinthians (2 Cor 11:8). But these gifts were not solicited by Paul. That is the point of this text. As Paul said to the Corinthians, he preached the Gospel “without charge” (1 Cor 9:18). And again, “And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself” (2 Cor 11:9).

He is not speaking of an lust for money and clothing, as ordinarily perceived. He was not dominated by the flesh, and his conduct among the saints confirmed this was the case. Neither, indeed, did he spend time raising support for himself.

THESE HANDS HAVE MINISTERED TO MY NEEDS

“Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me.” Other versions read, “provided for my necessities and those who were with me,” NKJV “to my own needs and to the men who were with me,” NASB “supplied my own needs and the needs of my companions,” NIV “to support myself and my companions,” NRSV “not only for my own needs, but for the needs of my coworkers as well,” CJB “I worked to support myself and those who were with me,” GWN and “mine earned enough to meet my needs and those of my companions.” NJB

Note that Paul not only labored to support himself, but those who were with him as well. This is a display of the deep devotion and humility of this man. He was thoroughly devoted to the Lord, and was mindful of those who joined him in the work. He did not send his companions out to raise their own support – a practice that is quite common today. I have noted that those who are fond of establishing various practices by referring to apostolic precedent are rarely, if ever, noted for following this Pauline practice. Of course, Paul was not establishing a precedent, but was rather displaying his love for the work of the Lord and the brethren who were also engaged in it with him. His heart is made known in this action, not the fulfillment of a command.

Paul frequently referred to the fact that he worked for his own needs. To the Corinthians he wrote, “And labor,

The more the Gospel is perceived, or comprehended, the more supple the individual becomes in the hand of the Lord. Self-centeredness diminishes decidedly, and the care of others is brought to godly maturity. From the vantage of the laborer, there is no sacrifice too great for the servant of God to pay.

working with our own hands” (1 Cor 4:12). To the Thessalonians he wrote, “For ye remember, brethren, our labor and travail: for laboring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God” (1 Thess 2:9). And again, “Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought with labor and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you” (2 Thess 3:8).

This was not something Paul was required to do, but was a choice that he made in interest of the churches. From the strictly legal point of view, it would have been right for him to have received wages for his labors. Therefore he wrote to the Thessalonians, “Not because we have not power, but to make ourselves an ensample unto you to follow us. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat” (2 Thess 3:9-10).

Jesus Himself said, “for the workman is worthy of his meat” (Matt 10:10). Again, when sending out the seventy, He told them, “And if the son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it: if not, it shall turn to you again. And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the laborer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house” (Luke 10:7). In other words, when it comes to kingdom laborers, what is given to them is not, strictly speaking, charitable giving. It is rather compensation for their labors.

God established this principle under the Law, that commanded the people to support the Levites with their tithes and offerings (Deut 12:12,19). Paul taught that this principle carried over to the church (1 Cor 9:13-14). Yet, he said, “But I have used none of these things: neither have I written these things, that it should be so done unto me: for it were better for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying void” (1 Cor 9:15). He was driven by a higher principle than obtaining support. He therefore forfeited something that was right in order to set an example for the people.

Paul reasoned with the Corinthians, who misinterpreted the ground for the labor of his hands. “Have we not power to eat and to drink? Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas? Or I only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working? Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? Say I these things as a man? or saith not the law the same also? For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen?” (1 Cor 9:4-9). Again he said, “If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things? If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless we have not used this power; but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ” (1 Cor 9:11-12).

Paul even taught the Galatians, “Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things” (Gal 6:6). However, Paul did not say these things so the people would support him. There were some few souls who saw the value of Paul’s teaching, and therefore sent support to him – but it was not because he asked them to do so.

A Conclusion

As we survey the marvelous ministry of Paul, we are beholding the impact of the Gospel on those who perceive it. The more the Gospel is perceived, or comprehended, the more supple the individual becomes in the hand of the Lord. Self-centeredness diminishes decidedly, and the care of others is brought to godly maturity. From the vantage of the laborer, there is no sacrifice too great for the servant of God to pay. He will proclaim the truth that he has been given to see, regardless of what it takes to do so. If he is among a people who can misinterpret his motives, he will extend himself to make it difficult for them to do so. If there are others involved in the work that he is doing, he will not overlook their necessities. His life itself will testify to the effectiveness of the message that he is proclaiming. Boiled down to its essence, that effect is faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of the brethren.

THE SPIRIT OF GIVING

“ 35 I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.”

Paul now affirms that he not only taught them “all the counsel of God” (20:27), but set before them a consistent example of the manner in which a godly leader is to live. While these words can properly be applied to all of the saints, they particularly are pertinent to those who feed the flock of God. There must not be inconsistency between what the teacher teaches and how he lives.

I HAVE SHOWED YOU ALL THINGS

“I have showed you all things ...” Other versions read, “I have shown you in every way,” NKJV “I have given you an example,” NRSV “I was an example to you,” BBE “by every means I have shown you,” NJB “I have been a constant example,” NET “In everything I have pointed out to you [by example],” AMPLIFIED and “in everything I’ve done, I have demonstrated to you.” MESSAGE

A person cannot embrace the doctrine, then live in contradiction of it. As soon as one’s life gets off course, the truth can no longer be heartily embraced. That is precisely why people are known by their fruits. When hardness of heart sets in, waywardness in living commences.

Paul affirms that his life demonstrates this. Any person could examine his life closely, whether in public or in private, and would find that what Paul here confesses is the truth. The scope of the consideration is quite impressive: “all things.” That is, Paul’s faith had impacted the whole of his life, not merely a segment of it. Now, the particular area he mentions can be a sensitive one, particular for those who emphasize themselves, living only for self. What Paul now says will clash with the thinking of those who amass great debt providing for temporal things that are of no real consequence. It will make no sense at all to the person who plans for his own security with no regard at all for others. Each person will have to do their own thinking on this matter, as this kind of living is not determined by a moral code, or law. Notwithstanding that circumstance, we are dealing with something that is necessary: “ye ought...”

SUPPORTING THE WEAK

“how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak . . .” Other versions read, “by laboring like this ye must support the weak,” NKJV “by working hard in this manner you must help the weak,” NASB “by this kind of hard work we must help the weak,” NIV “by so toiling one must help the weak,” RSV “by laboring like this,

As you can see, there is also protection for those who have more than enough to sustain themselves. By assisting the poor, they reduce the possibility of self-reliance, and a denial that every good and perfect gift comes down from above – including “our daily bread”

it is necessary to help the weak,” CJB “thus laboring we ought to come in aid of the weak,” DARBY “it is a duty to labor, and to care for the infirm,” MRD “we must exert ourselves in this way to support the weak,” NJB “you can help those in need by working hard,” NLT “so laboring ye ought to rescue the weak,” PNT “behoveth us to partake with the ailing,” YLT and “by working diligently in this manner, we ought to assist the weak.” AMPLIFIED

“The weak” refers to certain who are unable to provide for themselves. In keeping with the rest of the text, these are people within “the flock,” or “the church of God.” Although assisting the poor of the world is a noble work, the church has not been appointed a caretaker of the world, and no one must attempt to lay that burden upon the body of Christ. Those who have the means to do this are certainly in order doing so – UNLESS it means the neglect of the people of God. Jesus said men would be judged for their response to His “brethren,” not to the needs of those within the world (Matt 25:40,45).

Among the general manner of life for all believers is “distributing to the necessity of saints” (Rom 12:13). Such relief is not limited to the saints, for the body of Christ is also said, “Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head” (Rom 12:20). However, the emphasis of such care is placed upon the household of faith. As it is written, “As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith” (Gal 6:10). In mentioning care for the poor and needy, John referred to a believer seeing “his brother” (1 John 3:17). James did the same (James 2:15-16). The collection Paul gathered from all of the churches for the poor was for “poor saints” that were in Jerusalem (Rom 15:26; 1 Cor 16:1). When addressing the assistance of the poor, Paul referred to “ministering to the saints” (2 Cor 9:1,12). The church cared for widows who were believers, and qualified for such care (Acts 6:1; 1 Tim 5:3-10,16).

There are no examples of believers caring for the poor of the world, or being admonished to do so. As I have said, this is not to be construed as a law. However, it does mean that such endeavors cannot be pressed upon the churches as though it was required of them to meet the needs of the world. Blessed is the person who can handle this knowledge in a God-honoring manner.

The idea of caring for the poor is that they be not faced with temptations to conduct their lives their lives in opposition to the truth by seeking. Solomon spoke of this kind of temptation being leveled at the poor when he said, “Remove far from me vanity and lies: give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me: lest I be full, and deny thee, and say, Who is the LORD? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain” (Prov 30:9). As you can see, there is also protection for those who have more than enough to sustain themselves. By assisting the poor, they reduce the possibility of self-reliance, and a denial that every good and perfect gift comes down from above – including “our daily bread” (Matt 6:11)..

Paul applied the text to his own labors which met the needs of his companions in labor. It is quite possible that they had forsaken “houses” and “lands” to travel with Paul, putting them at a seeming advantage. If this was the case, Paul was sensitive to the circumstance, and therefore worked with his own hands to provide for them as well.

REMEMBERING THE WORDS OF THE LORD JESUS

“ . . . and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.”

This confirms that the record God has given of His Son (1 John 5:10-11) was not intended to be a thorough report of everything He said and did during His three and one half year ministry – to say nothing of the first thirty years of His life. The record, however, is thorough in its representation of what Jesus said and did.

These words are not found in the record of Jesus’ ministry (Matthew-John). That should not prove to be a difficult situation for anyone, for everything Jesus said was not recorded by the Gospel writers. After giving a rather extensive report of the sayings and works of Jesus, John ended his gospel by saying, “And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. Amen” (John 21:25). This confirms that the record God has given of His Son (1 John 5:10-11) was not intended to be a thorough report of everything He said and did during His three and one half year ministry – to say nothing of the first thirty years of His life. The record, however, is thorough in its representation of what Jesus said and did.

I gather, therefore, that this is a saying of Jesus that is not recorded, yet was passed along by those who heard it.

- This was in perfect accord with the instruction under the Law. “But the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still; that the poor of thy people may eat: and what they leave the beasts of the field shall eat. In like manner thou shalt deal with thy vineyard, and with thy oliveyard . . . At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year, and shalt lay it up within thy gates: And the Levite, (because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee,) and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doest . . . If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother: But thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth” (Ex 23:11; Deut 14:28-29; 15:7-8).

- This principle is also reflected in the Psalms. “Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the LORD will deliver him in time of trouble. The LORD will preserve him, and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth: and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies. The LORD will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness . . . A good man showeth favour, and lendeth: he will guide his affairs with discretion. Surely he shall not be moved for ever: the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance. He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the LORD. His heart is established, he shall not be afraid, until he see his desire upon his enemies. He hath dispersed, he hath given to the poor; his righteousness endureth for ever; his horn shall be exalted with honor” (Psa 41:1-3; 112:5-9).

- Solomon also spoke of the advantages associated with assisting the poor: “He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the LORD; and that which he hath given will he pay him again” (Prov 19:17).

- Isaiah the prophet also declared the advantage of giving to the poor: “But the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand . . . Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh? Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily: and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the LORD shall be thy reward” (Isa 32:8; 58:7-8).

- It also was in strict harmony with the revealed teaching of Jesus. “Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink . . . Give to every man that asketh of thee . . . do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil . . . Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee. . . “ (Matt 25:34,35; Lk 6:30,35,38; Lk 14:13-14).

- One of the marks of the one who believes on Jesus is that “OUT of his belly shall flow rivers of living water” (John 7:38).

- When Jesus sent out His disciples He said: “freely ye have received, freely give” (Matt 10:8).

- In his instruction to the church at Ephesus he wrote, “Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth” (Eph 4:28).

- When Paul met with the apostles, they asked him to remember the poor. “And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision. Only they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do” (Gal 2:9-10).

Therefore, this word is in perfect harmony with the Law, the Psalms, the Proverbs, the testimony of the prophets, the words of Jesus, and apostolic instruction in righteousness. There is no reason to doubt its truth, necessity, or practicality. It is the business of believers to work out their own salvation on this matter.

HE PRAYED WITH THEM ALL

A tender sight, indeed, as the faithful teacher admonishes, then prays, with these elders from Ephesus. He has spent three years among them, but it had not diminished his love and affection for them. They were among the churches for which he cared “daily,” wanting them to go on to perfection, and be uncontaminated with the teaching of spiritual impostors. Later, en route to Rome as a prisoner, and having met some disciples from Tyre, Paul “kneeled down” and prayed with them, together with their wives and children (Acts 21:4-5). It is a blessed circumstance when brethren can pray together. It eases the burden of kindred spirits when they are forced to part.

Luke does not provide us any specifics concerning the content Paul’s prayer. However, enough has been revealed about the way in which he prayed for the churches that we can form some very sound views of the matter. Here are a few excerpts from his recorded prayers for the churches.

- MIGHT HAVE A PROSPEROUS JOURNEY TO MINISTER TO THE PEOPLE. “For God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit in the gospel of His Son, that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers; Making request, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God to come unto you. For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established; That is, that I may be comforted together with you by the mutual faith both of you and me” (Rom 1:9-12).

- DO NO EVIL, DOING WHAT IS HONEST. “Now I pray to God that ye do no evil; not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is honest, though we be as reprobates” (2 Cor 13:7).

- LOVE ABOUND IN KNOWLEDGE AND JUDGMENT. “And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment” (Phil 1:9).

- BE GIVEN THE SPIRIT OF WISDOM AND REVELATION IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD. “Cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him: The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, And what is the exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of His mighty power” (Eph 1:16-19).

- BE STRENGTHENED, CHRIST DWELL IN THEIR HEARTS, BE ROOTED AND GROUNDED, AND COMPREHEND THE EXTENT OF SALVATION AND THE GREATNESS OF THE LOVE OF CHRIST. “For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, That He would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man; That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, May be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God” (Eph 3:14-19).

• BE FILLED WITH THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD’S WILL. WALK WORTHY OF THE LORD, BE FRUITFUL IN EVERY GOOD WORK, INCREASE IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD, STRENGTHENED UNTO ALL PATIENCE AND LONGSUFFERING WITH JOYFULNESS. “For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding; That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God; Strengthened with all might, according to His glorious power, unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness” (Col 1:9-11).

• SANCTIFIED COMPLETELY, SPIRIT, SOUL, AND BODY. “And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ” (1 Thess 5:23).

• COUNT WORTHY OF CALLING, FULFILL GOD’S GOODPLEASURE, EXPERIENCE THE WORK OF FAITH WITH POWER, AND THAT JESUS MIGHT BE GLORIFIED IN THEM. “Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of His goodness, and the work of faith with power: That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in Him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Thess 1:11-12).

Even a casual perusal of these prayers confirm the vast chasm that exists between the church of our time and the one depicted as being of God. If these prayers reflect the will of God for His people, the modern church has, indeed, fallen upon hard times. This circumstance is largely owing to its leaders. And the messages they deliver to the people.

A SORROWFUL MOMENT

“ 37 And they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him, 38a Sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more.”

When hearts are “knit together in love” (Col 2:2), and by that “nourishment” that comes from above (Col 2:19), parting is not an easy thing. One of the telling marks of a shallow religion is the absence of such sorrow, and the failure to take advantage of opportunities to be together. An infrequency of gathering will not allow for a sorrow in parting. This, however, is not the circumstance of our text. Also, one of the marks of the degeneracy of the modern church is the lack of this kind of love and affection among its members. If there is a closeness at all, it is built around belonging to the same sect, or having similar worldly interests.

THEY ALL WEPT SORE

“And they all wept sore . . .” Other versions read, “wept freely,” NKJV “began to weep aloud,” NASB “there was much weeping,” NRSV “were all in tears,” BBE “a great deal of weeping,” CSB “they wept all abundantly,” GENEVA “cried a lot,” GWN “there was great weeping among them,” MRD “wept bitterly,” RWB “there came a great weeping to all,” YLT “cried

The entire history of God’s dealings with humanity confirm that His preference is for those who are aligned with or seeking Him. The same was true of Jesus, who spent all of His quality time with His disciples, and those who wanted to hear what He had to say.

and cried and cried,” IE “loud lamentation,” WEYMOUTH “loud weeping,” WILLIAMS “considerable weeping,” EMTV and “a river of tears.” MESSAGE

The words “wept” comes from the Greek word klauqmo.j , which is a strong word meaning “lamentation,” THAYER “a strong inner emotion, weeping, crying, lamentation,” FRIBERG “bitter crying, wailing,” UBS and “to weep or wail, with emphasis upon the noise accompanying the weeping.” LOUW-NIDA

As I see it, their profound weeping was occasioned by at least two things. First, their closeness to, and appreciation of, Paul himself. He had been a faithful and exemplary teacher among them for three years, and seeing him leave was difficult for them. Spiritual attachments and association are exceedingly precious to those who are strangers and pilgrims in this world. Secondly, they were no doubt moved by his prayers, which put into words his feelings and desires for them. While the content of his prayer is not specified, we can obtain a very good idea of their content by how he was prone to pray for the people of God. Tender hearts are touched by such expressions.

In a national society such as ours, the display of such affection is rare. Self-centeredness is being cultured among the people to such a degree that godly associations are rarely valued. In fact, quite often they are denigrated as people are taught to value and prefer worldly associations to godly ones. Some are even taught that this is virtuous. I cannot see how any view could be more unlike God and Jesus than this. The entire history of God’s dealings with humanity confirm that His preference is for those who are aligned with or seeking Him. The same was true of Jesus, who spent all of His quality time with His disciples, and those who wanted to hear what He had to say. How people can read the Scriptures and miss this is most remarkable to me. Yet, the staggering influence of false prophets has moved them to do so.

FELL ON PAUL’S NECK AND KISSED HIM

“ . . . and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him . . .” Other versions read, “embraced Paul; and repeatedly kissed him,” NASB “Threw their arms around his neck and kissed him farewell,” CJB “hugged Paul and kissed him,” NLT “to throw their arms about his neck, and to kiss him lovingly again and again,” MONTGOMERY “threw their arms around Paul’s neck and kissed him fervently and repeatedly,” AMPLIFIED “falling on Paul's neck, they were affectionately kissing him,” EMTV “falling on the neck of Paul, they ardently kissed him,” LITV and “Much clinging to Paul, not wanting to let him go.” MESSAGE

These were affectionate kisses, but not romantic ones. They had to do with the heart, not the flesh, and were an expression of a deep spiritual and tender fondness for Paul. This is an example of a “holy kiss” (Rom 16:16; 1 Cor 16:20; 2 Cor 13:12; 1 Thess 5:26). It was not intended to inflame fleshly feelings, but to express holy preference. This was an outward display of the love of the brethren. It is not something that can be legislated among the saints, for that could negate its meaning.

It is a most marvelous thing that in this text weeping and kissing are joined. That is a most excellent commentary on the nature of spiritual life, which joins the most meaningful, tender, and profitable expressions of men.

SORROWING MOST OF ALL

“Sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more.” Other version read, “would never see his face again,” NIV “would not see him again,” NRSV “behold his face no more,” ASV and “not seeing Paul again.” GWN

This was after Paul spent three years among the Ephesians brethren – a rather brief time by many standards. Yet, when you consider the nature and power of Paul’s ministry, this time represented an enormous amount of insightful teaching. We know that at least two of those years he taught every day.

Consider how much Paul said in his epistles to the churches – Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Thessalonians. You can easily read aloud all of these letters in considerably less than eight hours.

WORDS CONTAINED IN EPISTLES TO THE CHURCHES

Romans 9855 words

1 st Corinthians 10,326 words

2 nd Corinthians 6,580 words

Galatians 3,238 words

Ephesians 3,177 words

Philippians 2,287 words

Colossians 2,074 words

1 st Thessalonians 2,015 words

2 nd Thessalonians 1,116 words

Total 40,668 words

Speaking at a rate of 100 words a minute, which is very moderate rate, the whole of the epistles listed would require less than seven hours to read. This would allow for a clear and succinct reading.

Jewish history estimates that Paul spoke daily for two years in the school of Tyrannus, speaking each day for about five hours. I understand this to have been a customary length of time for teaching in a disciplined environment. This being true, Paul could have said every word written to the churches listed above more than four times in the first week of that two-year period. No person of sound mind would even entertain the notion that such a thing was even possible. In the context of the present religious environment, it is not even possible to give a reasonable estimate of the sheer volume of words Paul must have said during his stay in Ephesus. Add to your consideration that there is not a single instance of the apostle speaking publically about politics, social trends, or various domestic and social issues of the day. I do not question that his preaching and teaching would be considered by many of our peers as totally irrelevant to the complexities of daily life. I doubt that such people would even be capable of weeping at the thought of never seeing Paul again. Of course, such people have spent little time subjecting their minds to his teaching as provided in his epistles.

The point here is that the doctrine presented in Scripture, and the record of specific discourses, is in seed form. The whole of what was said is not recorded. Thus we read expressions like, “many other words” (Acts 2:40), “speaking to them” (Acts 13:43), “long time abode they speaking boldly” (Acts 14:3), “with many words” (Acts 15:32), “continued his speech” (Acts 20:7), “among whom I have gone preaching” (Acts 20:25), etc.

Insightful preaching requires a working knowledge of the Scripture, as well as living by faith and walking in the Spirit. A grasp of the revealed purpose of God is essential, for this allows for the proper integration of the preaching with the purpose of God, the Scriptures as a whole, and the teaching of Jesus and the apostles in particular. This is involved in preaching “the kingdom of God” (Acts 8:12; 14:22; 19:8; 20:25; 28:23,31).

I gather that it was not merely Paul’s friendship that these men would miss. It was rather his preaching and teaching, which is the very activity that he mentions in connection with his presence among them. He refers to:

- “Serving the Lord with all humility of mind” (20:19).
- Keeping nothing from them “that was profitable” to them (20:20a).
- Showing them, and teaching them “publicly and from house to house” (20:20b).
- “Testifying” to the Jews and the Greeks “repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ” (20:21).
- “Preaching the kingdom of God” (20:25).

The church of our time stands in desperate need of men who have a grasp of the truth, and are faithful in its proclamation – even if it means suffering at the hands of the Christian populace

Declaring to them “the whole counsel of God” (20:27).

- Warning “every one night and day “with tears” (20:31).

This is the man that caused them to weep sore, and sorrow greatly, because they would “see his face no more.” This was not a man who identified with all the troubles and challenges of their lives. It was rather the one who taught them the things of God, and acquainted them with the manner of the Kingdom of God. I do not believe I am exaggerating the case when I say that few professing Christians have been exposed to such a man.

A FINAL OBSERVATION

Throughout the years, I have noted that the closer a man is to the Lord, the greater his understanding of the things of God, and the more faithful he is in proclaiming the mysteries of the Kingdom, the less popular he is among church folk. This is a lamentable circumstance. Yet, I find there are few exceptions to this rule. The more popular preachers and teachers are generally rather shallow in their proclamations. Of course, it appears that it was this way it was during the early days of the church. There were people who had the advantage of a lengthy ministry of Paul – like Corinth, who did not maintain a high evaluation of the man. Yet, because Paul was not the servant of men, this did not deter him in the preaching of truth.

The church of our time stands in desperate need of men who have a grasp of the truth, and are faithful in its proclamation – even if it means suffering at the hands of the Christian populace.

THEY ACCOMPANIED HIM TO THE SHIP

“ 38b And they accompanied him unto the ship.” Other versions read, “Then they brought him to the ship,” NRSV “so they went with him to the ship,” BBE “escorted him to the ship,” CSB “they brought him on his way to the ship,” DOUAY “they took Paul to the ship,” GWN “they accompanied him down to the ship,” LIVING and “they walked him down to the ship.” MESSAGE

Although their hearts were heavy with sadness, these faithful elders accompanied Paul to the ship on which he would sail on the next leg of his journey to Jerusalem. The word “accompanied” is translated from a word that means, “to send forward, bring on the way, accompany or escort . . . to set one forward, fit him out with the requisites for his journey ,” THAYER “as furnishing things necessary for someone's travel help on one's journey, send on one's way,” FRIBERG “send or help on one's way; escort, accompany,” UBS and “to send someone on in the direction in which he has already been moving, with the probable implication of providing help - 'to send on one's way, to help on one's way.'" LOUW-NIDA

These brethren did not send Paul on his journey with the words, "be ye warmed and filled" (James 2:16), but no doubt provided things necessary for the trip. This would include the fare for the journey itself, and perhaps some food and drink for the trip. He had taught them well, and they had learned in truth that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Keep in mind, this was not a missionary they were themselves sending out. In fact, they regretted to see him leave, knowing that a certain spiritual poverty would follow his absence, just as he had said. Yet, their hearts were joined to him, and they did everything within their power to assist him.

Thus Paul's stop at Miletus came to a close – an ancient seaport city in western Asia Minor. He did not stop to see the sites, or to rest,¹ but to minister to those leaders with whom he had labored for three productive years. He saw the impact of truth had stirred the powers of darkness, and there warned the brethren.

CONCLUSION

In our text, the solemn warning of a spiritual defection is attended by a strong exhortation to guard the flock. The intrusion of false teaching is always a serious thing. This has been confirmed in our generation by the wake of its effects. While false prophets herald a coming time when a wicked despot will rule the world, we are living in the very midst of the falling away that was foretold by the Lord Jesus Himself, as well as His apostles. While I have mentioned some of these texts in this lesson, I am compelled to gather them together in this conclusion. They are of a most serious nature that demands our comprehension of them.

- MANY WILL BE DECEIVED. "And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many . And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold" (Matt 24:10-12).
- STRONG DECEPTION. "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect" (Matt 24:24).
- FALSE CLAIMS. "And he said, Take heed that ye be not deceived: for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and the time draweth near: go ye not therefore after them" (Luke 21:8).
- NOT SPARING THE FLOCK. "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock" (Acts 20:29).
- A MASSIVE FALLING AWAY. "Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first , and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God" (2 Thess 2:3-4).
- A DEPARTURE FROM THE FAITH. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith , giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; Speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth" (1 Tim 4:1-3).
- POWERLESS RELIGION. "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, Without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof : from such turn away” (2 Tim 3:1-5).

The erroneous teachings concerning a falling away are of themselves proof that it has already taken place. The staggering divisions among professing Christians confirm that a falling away has taken place. The pervasive presence of immorality and ignorance within the churches announce that perilous times are here. The prevalence of religious opportunists and charlatans within the Christian community is validation of a falling away.

FALSE DOCTRINE PREFERRED. “For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears ; And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables” (2 Tim 4:3-4).

• DAMNABLE HERESIES. “But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies , even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not” (2 Pet 2:1-3).

• MANY ANTICHRISTS. “Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time” (1 John 2:18).

• MANY FALSE PROPHETS. “Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world” (1 John 4:1).

• MANY DECEIVERS. “For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist” (2 John 1:7).

What is there about these words that would lead a person to think this defection is not accompanied by the greatest dangers? How is it that the doctrines of demons, who are stronger and more persuasive than mere men, are not something to be detected and avoided? What has moved men to imagine that the church will be removed before this massive falling away takes place?

The erroneous teachings concerning a falling away are of themselves proof that it has already taken place. The staggering divisions among professing Christians confirm that a falling away has taken place. The pervasive presence of immorality and ignorance within the churches announce that perilous times are here. The prevalence of religious opportunists and charlatans within the Christian community is validation of a falling away. The fact that the masses of Christians have so readily received those whose teaching is, at the least off-center, and at the worst an outright lie, confirms that the time of deception has arrived.

Yet, in the midst of all of this religious confusion and defection, the professing church is sound asleep – with the Judge standing at the door (James 5:9). How appropriate are the words of the Spirit: “And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light. Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying. But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof” (Rom 13:11-14). It is time for the church to shake itself, and throw off the mantel of lethargy! This is “high time,” and to fall asleep during it is lethal.

TRAVELING BY SHIP AND MEETING BRETHREN

“ 21:1 ”And it came to pass, that after we were gotten from them, and had launched, we came with a straight course unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara: 2 And finding a ship sailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and set forth. 3 Now when we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre: for there the ship was to unlade her burden. 4 And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days: who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem. 5 And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city: and we kneeled down on the shore, and prayed. 6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship; and they returned home again. 7 And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day. 8 And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Caesarea: and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, which was one of the seven; and abode with him. 9 And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy”

(Acts 21:1-9)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

With godly intention and firm resolution, Paul and company resume their journey to Jerusalem, launching forth from Miletus. Along the way they make some necessary stops, always finding brethren with whom to have profitable fellowship. Some spoke to Paul in the Spirit, pertaining to his trip to Jerusalem, The life of Paul centered in doing the will of the Lord, and following through with his convictions. Neither unpleasantries nor the sweetness of fellowship with the saints deterred him from his objective. During one of the stops, they found a number of brethren, with their wives and little ones, and spent some days with them. When they set out once again on their journey, Paul prayed with the families, who then returned to their homes. After spending another day with brethren during another stop, they resumed their journey. Coming to Caesarea, they spent “many days” at the home of Philip the evangelist, who had four daughters that prophesied. Surely that was a blessed time.

LIVING UNTO THE LORD

As we go through this book, we are witnessing individuals living unto the Lord – a posture that is mandated by redemption. As it is written, “For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again” (2 Cor 5:14-15).

Ponder the individual believers that have been identified in this book with the work of God, bring mentioned by name: Peter, John, Matthias, Stephen, Philip, Ananias, Paul, Mary (the mother of Mark), Barnabas, Simeon. Lucius, Manaen, Judas (Barsabas), Silas, Timothy, Sopater, Aristarchus, Secundus, Gaius, Tychicus, Trophimus, and others. Independently of the work of God, precisely what do we know of these people? They are only mentioned in reference to the work of the Lord. This was the primary aspect of their lives – by way of comparison, everything else was incidental.

This kind of life is the declared objective of life in Christ Jesus, and is stated in a number of ways.

• YIELDING UNTO GOD. “Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God” (Rom 6:13).

• BRINGING FORTH FRUIT UNTO GOD. “Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to Him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God” (Rom 7:4).

• PRESENTING YOUR BODIES AS A LIVING SACRIFICE TO GOD. “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service” (Rom 12:1).

• LIVING UNTO THE LORD. “For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's” (Rom 14:7-8).

• GLORIFYING GOD. “For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's” (1 Cor 6:20).

In today's professed church, the circumstance has been turned around. Now, the exceptions are those who are really living for the Lord, and the norm is living in a spiritually haphazard manner.

CREATED TO DO WORKS GOD HAS ORDAINED. “For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them” (Eph 2:10).

• MAGNIFY CHRIST IN OUR BODY. “According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always, so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death. For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain” (Phil 1:20-21).

• DOING ALL IN THE NAME OF THE LORD. “And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by Him” (Col 3:17).

• A UNIQUE PEOPLE FOR GOD, ZEALOUS OF GOOD WORKS. “Who gave Himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works” (Titus 2:14).

By implication, these texts apply to every facet of life: personal, domestic, social, occupational, etc. And yet, bringing glory to God is never taught in such a way – i.e. glorify God in your marriage, your business, your school work, your employment, etc. That God is to be glorified in those various relationships is certainly true. Yet, our thinking must not be confined to, nor are we to major in, those aspects of life. They are too low to have the emphasis.

TRUE SPIRITUAL LIFE

What we are seeing in the book of Acts is the expression of true spiritual life. This is how people live who are joined to the Lord, and are living by faith. In the aggregate, they are of “one accord,” have fellowship “with gladness and singleness of heart,” and are “of one heart and of one soul” (Acts 2:46; 4:24; 5:12). Any deviation from this was the exception, not the rule – i.e. Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:1-10), Simon, the sorcerer (Acts 8:13,18-24), and John departing from the work (Acts 13:13; 15:38). In today's professed church, the circumstance has been turned around. Now, the exceptions are those who are really living for the Lord, and the norm is living in a spiritually haphazard manner. The falling away had not yet occurred.

If this is a proper representation of the case, then some malfunction has taken place. My persuasion is that this has been caused by a change in the message that is being sounded forth by the modern church. If the Gospel of Christ is God's power unto salvation, then where power is missing, it is owing to either a failure to declare the message, or the failure to believe it. In a sense, both of these have taken place, for the people, being largely discontent with the Gospel itself, have heaped to themselves teachers after their own lusts, and they have swept in like a flood. If the message that is preferred and embraced does not produce the kind of lives that are set forth in the book of Acts, then it is a distortion, and not the truth itself. I do not know how it is possible to avoid this conclusion.

In the context of this departure from the faith, the records to which we are exposed in Acts tend to be viewed as mere history, with most of the people named being seen as something like heroes, or extraordinary achievers. Where such an attitude is fostered, the only thing of value that is seen in this book pertains to perceived patterns and precedents, Most of which are really nothing more than human imaginations. The book of Acts is not a doctrinal treatise, but a report of the impact of true doctrine upon the lives of those who believe it. It is not an exposition of life, but a record of it.

THE TRIP TO JERUSALEM RESUMES FROM MILETUS

“ 21:1 And it came to pass, that after we were gotten from them, and had launched, we came with a straight course unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara. 2 And finding a ship sailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and set forth.”

Although this may read like nothing more than a report of the resumption of their journey, the record is wrapped up in the cloth of grace. It testifies to the closeness of those who live by faith and take the word of God seriously. We must never forget that there is a spirit in the text of Scripture as well as words. The words project the nature of the kingdom, the status of the believers, and the effects of salvation.

AFTER WE WERE GOTTEN FROM THEM

“And it came to pass, that after we were gotten from them, and had launched . . .” Other versions read, “departed from them,” NKJV “parted from them,” NASB “torn ourselves away from them,” NIV/NJB/WEYMOUTH/WILLIAMS/ MONTGOMERY “torn ourselves away from the Ephesian elders,” CSB “finally left them,” GWN “separated from them,” MRD “taken leave of them,” NAB “tore ourselves away from them,” NET “after saying farewell to the Ephesian elders,” NLT “after we all said good-bye to the elders,” IE “having withdrawn from them,” EMTV “with the tearful good-byes behind us,” MESSAGE “had torn ourselves away from them and withdrawn,” AMPLIFIED and “being from-pulled from them.” INTERLINEAR

The word “gotten” is translated from the Greek word avpospasqe,ntaj . The lexical meaning of this word is “to draw off, to tear away . . . having torn themselves from the embrace of their friends,” THAYER “pull or drag away,” FRIBERG “to pull or draw away from or out of - 'to pull out, to draw out, to drag,” LOUW-NIDA “to be dragged away, detached, separated from.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

This is an emotionally violent word, denoting the great difficulty involved in parting from the elders of Ephesus. These brethren were united by their faith in Christ and love for one another – and it was a close and secure unity. In them the words was fulfilled, “Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another” (Rom 12:10).

Paul had interrupted his trip to Jerusalem to spend time with them, and they had left the convenience of Ephesus to with him. The thing that drove both their own and Paul’s action was a dominating interest in the work of the Lord. Issues involving “all the flock . . . the church of God” (20:28), had been addressed, and they were of a most serious nature.

Although the message was, in a sense, quite stern, yet it is apparent that the elders had received it. This was a real situation, where the grievous reality of coming circumstances was received, being taken seriously. The reluctance of the elders to part from Paul and company confirms that to have been the case. Even though Paul had revealed that some of their own number would pioneer the defection of which he spoke, yet he did not hold these brethren in disdain. His love for them compelled him to speak candidly, yet with a genuine interest in the people of God.

Now, it is the work of the Lord that has dictated their separation. It was a difficult one because of their kindred spirit – but that did not deter the man of God. The work of God is higher than the human relationships – even though they are legitimate, God-honoring, and tender.

This kind of mindset, which is essential in the service of God, has all but been eliminated in the current church scene. The doctrinal emphasis is now on the people, not the Lord Himself and His good pleasure. The stress is being placed upon the desires of the people instead of the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. The situation is so grave that many servants of God are actually criticized for honoring the will of God above their own. Even though Jesus clearly affirmed that one's own person, relatives, or even family, are not to be placed ahead of the Lord (Matt 10:37; Lk 14:26), yet those who take this word seriously are criticized for doing so. The supposition is that preferring Christ means one will neglect his family, not provide for them, or in some way despise them. However, this is not at all what Jesus was saying. He referred circumstances where there was a conflict in which the individual was forced to choose between Christ and others. Where this circumstance rises, He left no question about what is to be done.

The point is that this principle is being lived out in our text. The unity that was forged between Paul and the elders of Ephesus was closer than any unity that can possibly be realized in flesh-and-blood relationships. Yet, it gave the precedence to doing the will of the Lord. This is the manner of the Kingdom.

Why Do Religious Men Choose Other Emphases?

Precisely why is it that religious men choose to emphasize other matters – marriage, the home, the youth, purported addictions, success, happiness, etc? Quite simply, it is because they are blinded to what God has said about life and godliness. They cannot see what is plainly declared, for God has poured out upon them the spirit of deep sleep, and blinded them, just as He said He would (Isa 29:10-12). The effects the prophet described are as follows.

- The people have fallen into a deep spiritual sleep.
- The eyes of the prophets, rulers, and seers have been closed so they cannot see.
- The words of God's book are sealed, so that the learned and unlearned alike cannot discern what is being said.

All of this is said to have taken place because “this people draw near Me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour Me, but have removed their heart far from Me, and their fear toward Me is taught by the precept of men” (Isa 29:13).

Jesus affirmed that this circumstance existed during His earthly ministry (Matt 15:7-9). Paul said it existed during the close of his minister (Acts 28:26-27). He also taught that this is why the Jews are in their present state of unbelief (Rom 11:7-10). It exists in our day as well, and it is a most serious situation. In my judgment, we are living in a time of this kind of judgment.

WE CAME WITH A STRAIT COURSE

“ . . . we came with a straight course unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara.” Other versions read, “sailed strait to Coos,” NIV “made a straight run to Cos,” CJB “came by a direct route to Cos,” CSB and “sailed straight to the island of Cos.” GWN

Having set out from Miletus, the ship headed straight for Cos, a small island in the Aegean Sea. Here is where Paul spent the night, as the port here was an apparent stopover in his trip to Jerusalem. Historians tell us this was a place that was “a museum of anatomy and pathology.” A “school of physicians” was there attached to “the temple of Aesculapius.” MCCLINTOK & STRONG'S However, as notable as all of that has been to others, it held no interest for Paul. Luke was so thoroughly unimpressed with the uniqueness of this island, he made no mention at all of that for which it was noted. So far as this holy band of men were concerned, it was nothing more than a stopover port en route to the main city – Jerusalem – and the main people – the saints. The state of a man's character can be measured in part but what it takes to turn his head toward the earth. So far as the Scriptures are concerned, no man of God was ever taken up with the interesting things of this present evil world. While I suppose that a person could draw some unwarranted conclusions from that circumstance, that is still the perspective of Scripture and the nature of its accounts.

There is something else to be learned here by inference. The ship on which they sailed took a straight course to Cos, not meandering through the various islands in that vicinity. Paul was not on a site-seeing trip, but was doing the work of the Lord. As was customary with the prophets, Jesus Himself, and the messengers sent into the world by Jesus, they spent as little time as possible in worldly surroundings. Search the record and see if this is not the case.

FINDING A SHIP

“And finding a ship sailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and set forth.” Other versions read, “having found a ship,” NASB “we found a ship,” NIV “when we had gotten a ship,” PNT and “At Patera, we found a ship. IE

Of course, Paul and company were not working on an earthly reservation system. The details of the trip to Jerusalem had not been planned out in a detailed manner, for they did know what a day might “bring forth” (Prov 27:1). Neither indeed, did they know how they were going to take the next leg. of their trip – they only knew where they were going. Therefore, they had to find a ship that was headed in that direction, and they expended themselves to find out the availabilities.

There are times when Divine direction is very apparent – like when Paul was called to go to Macedonia (Acts 16:9), and to stay in Corinth (Acts 18:10). There are other times when the people of God must use wisdom, relying on their faith and understanding of the will of the Lord, In the case of the latter, those who actually do live by faith and walk in the Spirit find themselves more competent to make decisions that are God-honoring, even if they do not have all the details.

PARALLEL TO SPIRITUAL LIFE

There is a sense in which the Kingdom of God is, indeed, like a hidden treasure, found only by those who diligently dig for things of true worth Life in Christ is not always attended by easy answers and obvious direction. The “treasures of wisdom and knowledge” (Col 2:3) are not always on the surface of life, scattered, as it were, like diamonds on the hard soil of earthly life. Sometimes they have to be “found” (Prov 3:13). There is a sense in which the Kingdom of God is, indeed, like a hidden treasure, found only by those who diligently dig for things of true worth (Matt 13:44). The same is true of the various facets of Divine direction. That direction frequently takes place while the child of God is discreetly going about to do the will of the Lord. It is then that they are directed by God.

A STOP ALONG THE WAY

“ 3 Now when we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre: for there the ship was to unlade her burden.” Other versions read, “when we have sighted Cyprus, we passed it on the left . . . and unload her cargo,” NKJV and “sighting Cyprus and passing to the south of it.” NIV

There was a time when Paul stopped and preached throughout Cyprus (Acts 13:3–12). Also, earlier, when believers were scattered “upon the persecution that arose about Stephen,” some had gone to Cyprus, “preaching the word to none but Jews only” (Acts 11:19). Yet, on this occasion, the time was apparently not appropriate to preach in Cyprus. Thus, Paul registered no objection when they sailed past this island, once the home of Barnabas (Acts 4:36). There is no issue made of this, indicating that it was not something with which Paul wrestled, being unsure of what to do. When the mind of the believer is firmly set on doing the will of God, living is greatly simplified. On the other hand, those who do not so yield themselves to God will find that life is often disconcerting.

It ought to be noted that doing the will of God involves both sensitivity and discernment, which are linked with practicality. It also requires living by faith and walking in the Spirit.

FINDING DISCIPLES

“4 And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days: who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem.”

While this may appear to be an incidental account, something of the manner of the kingdom is revealed in it. Within the body of Christ there is a certain affection and interdependence that is actually the work of the Spirit. After all, it is the Holy Spirit who has baptized us “into one body” (1 Cor 12:13), and the fellowship that has resulted from that baptism is marvelous.

FINDING DISCIPLES

“And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days . . .” Other versions read, “looking up the disciples,” NASB “having sought out the disciples,” RSV “having found the disciples,” ASV “Having searched out,” CJB “we searched for the disciples,” GWN “we located the disciples,” NET “we went ashore, found the local believers, and stayed with them a week,” NLT “Having searched for the disciples and found them,” WEYMOUTH

Once again, I draw your attention to the manner of Paul in his travels, particularly as it regards finding brethren (Acts 14:26; 15:3,36; 16:40; 18:23; 19:1; 20:7; 21:4,7,8; 28:14). Now, our text speaks of Paul and company finding disciples. That is, they searched them out. These are the people who had been “added to the church,” that unique body of people for whom Jesus intercedes, and through whom He works (Acts 2:47).

The priority of the saints of God is apparent in the record of Paul’s travels, as well as all of his writings that have been handed down to us.

The priority of the saints of God is apparent in the record of Paul’s travels, as well as all of his writings that have been handed down to us. When he testified of the people for whom he cared the most, he referred to his kinsmen the Jews, to whom had been given all of the pre-new covenant benefits (Rom 9:1-5), and “the churches” (2 Cor 11:28). It is most striking that in the average church, and among the rank and file ministers, these two qualities are glaringly absent.

It has also been a source of much sorrow to me personally that the contemporary church is fundamentally ignorant of the ministry of Paul, even though his writings comprise over 50% of the New Covenant writings (14 of 27 books, including Hebrews). The subjects exclusively delineated by Paul are those least familiar to most Christians, and covered the least by the majority of preachers and teachers. Following is a brief listing of subjects uniquely developed by Paul.

PAUL’S UNIQUE TEACHING

- That the church is the body of Christ (Rom 12:4-5; 1 Cor 12:12-27; Eph 1:23; 2:16; 3:6; 4:4,12-16; 5:23,30; Col 1:16; 2:19; 3:15).
- The merging of Jew and Gentile in Christ (Eph 2:15-16,19).
- The exposition of justification by faith (Rom 3:20-5:18; Gal 2:16-17; 3:8-24).
- The distinction between the Old and New Covenants (2 Cor 3:6-14; 7:22; 8:8-13; 10:16-17; Gal 3:15-17; 4:22-28; Heb 9:15-20).
- The reality of “the old man” and “the new man” (Rom 6:6; Eph 5:22-24; Col 3:9-

- The inner warfare experienced by those who live by faith (Rom 7:15-25; Gal 5:17).
- The spiritual logic that declares the coming conversion of the Jews (Rom 9-11).
- The High Priesthood of Christ (Heb 3:1; 4:14-15; 5:5,10; 6:20; 7:26; 8:1; 9:11; 10:21).
- The relation of Abraham to those who believe (Rom 4:1-16; Gal 3:6-18).
- The significance of Melchizedec (Heb 5:6,10; 6:20; 7:1, 10-21).
- The eternal purpose of God (Rom 8:28; Eph 1:11; 3:11; 2 Tim 1:9).
- What took place behind the scenes when Jesus died (Col 1:20; 2:14-15; Heb 2:14; 9:26).
- The whole armor of God (Rom 13:12; 2 Cor 6:7; Eph 6:10-18).
- Spiritual weaponry (2 Cor 10:4-5; Eph 6:17).
- Believers battling with principalities and powers (Eph 6:12).
- The fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22-23; Eph 5:9).
- The works of the flesh (Gal 5:19-21).
- The office of a Bishop (1 Tim 3:1-7; Tit 1:7-11).
- The office of a deacon (1 Tim 3:10-13).
- The exposition of spiritual gifts, and how they are administered (Rom 12:3-8; 1 Cor 12:1-31; 14:1-12; Eph 4:11-16).
- Why men cannot be justified by works (Rom 3:26; 4:2; Gal 2:16; 3:2-5).
- The imputation of righteousness upon the basis of faith (Rom 1:7; 3:22-25; 4:5-25; 10:6-10; Phil 3:9).
- Extensive teaching concerning baptism into Christ (Rom 6:1-23; Gal 3:27; Eph 4:5; Col 2:11-15).
- The comparison of Adam and Christ (Rom 5:14-21; 1 Cor 15:22,45).
- Extensive teaching on the resurrection of the dead (1 Cor 15:15-57).
- The ministry of the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:11-14, 26-27; 2 Cor 3:3-18; Gal 4:6, 29; 5:5,16-18,22-24; 6:8; Eph 2:22; Eph 5:9).
- The intercession and mediation of Christ Jesus (Heb 7:25; 1 Tim 2:5; Heb 8:6; 9:15; 12:24).
- The intercession of the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:26-27).
- Predestination and election (Rom 8:29-33; 9:11; 11:5-7,28; Eph 1:5,11; Col 3:12; 1 Thess 1:4; 2 Tim 2:10; Tit 1:1).
- The body being for the Lord (Rom 12:1-2; 1 Cor 6:13-20).
- God's objective for believers (Eph 3:15-30; 4:12-16; Col 1:9-11).
- The resurrection body (2 Cor 5:1-5).
- The accomplishments of the cross (Eph 2:16; Phil 2:8; Col 1:20; 2:14-15).
- Extensive teaching concerning the Lord's Table (1 Cor 10:21; 11:23-29).
- Types and shadows (Gal 4:24; Col 2:17; Heb 8:5; 9:24; 10:1).

- Extensive teaching of the grace of God (Rom 3:24; 4:4,16; 5:2, 15-17, 20-21; 6:14-15; ; 11:5-6; 12:3-6; 1 Cor 15:10; 2 Cor 8:9; Gal 1:15; Eph 2:5-8; 2 Thess 2:16; 1 Tim 1:14; 2 Tim 1:9; Tit 2:11-12; Tit 3:7; Heb 2:9; 4:16; 12:28).

Were Paul to appear on today's scene, and commence teaching in the churches, most of the people would not have the faintest idea what he was speaking about – even though his writings have been in their possession for many years. If this assessment is true, this is a most unfortunate circumstance. It reveals a fundamental flaw in the fabric of nominal Christendom.

In my judgment, the reason for today's absence of the attitudes and preferences reflected in the book of Acts is found in the manner in which the people were taught, and the substance of that teaching. When the message delivered to the church focuses upon life in this world, the people are at once put to a disadvantage. The life that they receive in Christ Jesus is not of this world – it is “eternal life,” and it is ultimately adapted for the world to come. When the proper message is not preached and believed, kingdom attitudes and proper perceptions simply cannot be developed.

Were Paul to come to the city in which you live, who do you suppose he would classify as “disciples,” and with whom would he prefer to be? I certainly am not seeking an answer to that question, but am rather seeking to provoke a godly assessment of the times and circumstances in which we live. If we are to serve our generation as David served his (Acts 13:36), it seems to me that we should have a sound and proper view of that generation.

WHO SAID TO PAUL IN THE SPIRIT

“ . . . who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem.” Other versions read, “kept telling Paul through the Spirit,” NASB ““guided by the Spirit,” CJB “the Spirit had the disciples tell Paul,” GWN “speaking in the Spirit,” NJB “prophesied through the Spirit,” NLT and “prompted by the [Holy] Spirit, they kept telling Paul.” AMPLIFIED

Here we confront a seeming contradiction – at least that is what some people think. First, when Paul commenced this trip to Jerusalem he said, “And now, behold, I go bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there” (Acts 20:22). The phrase “the Spirit” reflects the precision of the Greek language. He did not say “my spirit, but “THE Spirit” (tw/ pneu,mati), an obvious reference to the Holy Spirit, for this is not how Scripture refers to the human spirit. Nor, indeed, is a person said to be “bound” by his own spirit, or the human spirit.

It seems to me that this text is an elaboration and example of what Paul had said earlier. “And now, behold, I go bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there: Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me” (Acts 20:23). Later, some other disciples will try to turn Paul from going to Jerusalem, and he will answer them with no ambiguity. At that time, those to whom he spoke acquiesced saying “the will of the Lord be done.” That account reads as follows. “And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judaea a certain prophet, named Agabus. And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles. And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem. Then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus” (Acts 21:10-13). Further, after he had arrived in Jerusalem, and began to be opposed by the Jews, the Lord Jesus appeared to him and said, “Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome” (Acts 23:11). He did not rebuke Paul for going to Rome. Rather, that proved to be the very place where things were set in motion for him to go to Rome.

Therefore, I conclude that Paul did not go against the council of the Spirit in going to Rome.

Rather, it seems to me that the Spirit moved certain brethren to testify of Paul's apprehension in Jerusalem – something that, prior to this, he had managed to elude. The prophets through whom the word came themselves concluded that this meant Paul was not intended to go do Rome at all. However, this is not what the case. This was the conclusion of the prophets, who were used by the Spirit to inform Paul what would happen to him at Jerusalem, for he had said he did not know what awaited him there (20:22).

One of the tests of a true man of God is found in his reaction to opposition. For such a person, faith and commitment become the means through which a proper sense of direction is established. Such was the case with Paul.

AN EXAMPLE OF TAKING UP THE CROSS

Jesus declared, “Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross , and follow Me ” (Matt 16:24). And again, “And whosoever doth not bear his cross , and come after Me, cannot be My disciple” (Luke 14:27). This, then, is a defining matter. Those who follow Jesus must deny themselves, and take up their cross. Elsewhere, Jesus said the intending disciple must “take up his cross daily ” (Lk 9:23). Those who do not do this are excluded from the disciples – they “cannot” be one; they “cannot” follow Jesus. – i.e. He will not allow them to do so. Because a disciple is, in fact, a learner, the one who does not take up his cross cannot “learn from” Jesus (Matt 11:29). He will not teach them.

Coming to Jesus also required that all competing influences be thrust to the side, and a deaf ear turned toward them. This also includes the matter of personal fleshly interests and preferences. Jesus put it this way, “If any man come to Me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple” (Luke 14:26). Thus, even the approach to Jesus (coming to Him) has restrictions. They do not have to do with defilement, or a requirement for cleansing, for if that was the case, no one would be allowed to come to Him. However, it does require the repudiation of any and every thing that would cause that quest to diminish or altogether go away. Remember, all of this has to do with COMING to Jesus, or ENLISTING, as it were, as a disciple.

I am sure that you recognize these requirements exclude a significant percentage of professing Christians. Yet, there is no circumstance of life, or any form of human rhetoric or carnal expertise, that can remove them. They are firmly fixed in place. No one gets into the sheepfold who seeks entrance in any other way. If a person does not want Jesus more than anything, there is no need to seek Him, for it will be in vain. If they do not want His forgiveness and tutelage more than the approbation of men, or any form of temporal satisfaction, such a person will not even be allowed to approach unto the Lord Jesus Christ. Such a person may be so unaware of his circumstance that Jesus will have to send him away, even as He did the rich young ruler. “One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow Me” (Mark 10:21). Jesus loved that young man (Mk 10:21a), yet sent him away with a word that discovered his refusal to “forsake all” (Lk 14:33), take up his cross, and follow Him.

I am pressing this point because of the rarity of its proclamation from the pulpites of the land. Men without the kind of commitment that Christ demands are being allowed to think they are really coming to Jesus, and that He has really received them. However, if we are to believe the words of Christ, uncommitted people have either never really come to Jesus, or they have left Him. If this is not the case, then Christ's words have no weight at all, nor are any of His other words to be taken seriously.

It is the frame of mind described by Jesus that is being set forth in the life of Paul, and those who faithfully traveled with him as well. His total commitment to Christ is why he continued his trip to Jerusalem, even though he was duly warned concerning what would befall him there.

Christ's words are also reflected in apostolic doctrine concerning living by faith. Those who are in Christ are apprised that they are to live with the same commitment that characterized them when they first came to Christ. Doctrinally it is stated in the following ways.

- THE HENCEFORTH FACTOR. "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin" (Rom 6:6).

There is no point in life, or any isolated occasion, when the child of God can depart from this manner of life. These are not teachings that are presented as goals to be finally achieved. They are not directions for special occasions when some quick relief is sought. This the manner of spiritual life.

A LIVING SACRIFICE. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God" (Rom 12:1-2).

- GLORIFYING GOD. "For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Cor 6:20).

- LIVING UNTO HIM. "And that He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again" (2 Cor 5:15).

- CRUCIFYING THE FLESH. "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit" (Gal 5:24-25).

- NOT WALKING IN THE VANITY OF OUR MIND. "This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind" (Eph 4:17).

- SEEKING THINGS ABOVE. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col 3:1-3).

- PUTTING TO DEATH ABERRANT DESIRES. "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry" (Col 3:5).

- BEING HOLY. "As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance: But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation; Because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy" (1 Pet 1:14-16).

There is no point in life, or any isolated occasion, when the child of God can depart from this manner of life. These are not teachings that are presented as goals to be finally achieved. They are not directions for special occasions when some quick relief is sought. This the manner of spiritual life. It is what is involved in walking "in the light as He is in the light" (1 John 1:7). This is such a rare kind of living, that, at the time, even some of the disciples and prophets did not associate Paul's attitude with these realities. However, it is apparent from the record that they finally did acquiesce to Paul's decision, sensing that more was involved than his personal will, or a high level of concern for his own safety.

Notwithstanding, their advise came from their deep love for him, and an appreciation for his presence and teaching. However, they did not see what Paul saw. They were, however, willing to yield to his understanding of the matter.

AFTER PRAYING WITH THE BRETHREN, THEY CONTINUE ON THEIR WAY

“ 5 And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city: and we kneeled down on the shore, and prayed.”

ACCOMPLISHED THOSE DAYS

“And when we had accomplished those days . . .” Other versions read, “had come to end of those days,” NKJV “when our time was up,” NIV “when the week was over,” CJB and “when our time was over.” NLT

Do not fail to take note of how Paul preferred to spend his time – with the disciples. He apparently knew how long it was going to take for the cargo of the ship to be unloaded, and due preparations made for the continuance of the journey. He did not spend his time sight-seeing, but sought out brethren with whom to company.

These are the “seven days” mentioned in verse four. They were probably the time required to unload the ship, and prepare it for the next leg of its journey. This being the case, the text infers that Paul and company knew the appointed duration of the ship’s stay in Tyre. Armed with this knowledge, they had determined how to spend their time in this ancient city.

Throughout the book of Acts, there are repeated texts that emphasize the preference of the saints of God for one another. Whether in times of threat and danger, or in times of favor and peace, they chose to be together.

- “Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a sabbath day's journey . . . These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren” (Acts 1:12,14).

- “And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place” (Acts 2:1).

- “And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers” (Acts 2:42).

- “And all that believed were together , and had all things common” (Acts 2:44).

- “And they , continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart” (Acts 2:46).

- “And being let go, they went to their own company , and reported all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them” (Acts 4:23).

- “And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together ; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness” (Acts 4:31).

- “Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus” (Acts 9:19).
- “And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples” (Acts 9:26).
- “Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul: and when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch” (Acts 11:25-26).
- “And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying” (Acts 12:12).
- “And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God” (Acts 14:21-22).
- “And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles” (Acts 14:27).
- “And they went out of the prison, and entered into the house of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed” (Acts 16:40).
- “And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples” (Acts 18:23).
- “And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him: who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace” (Acts 18:27).
- “And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight” (Acts 20:7).
- “And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days: who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem” (Acts 21:4).
- “And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day” (Acts 21:7).
- “And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii forum, and The three taverns: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage” (Acts 28:15).

That will suffice as a representation of the preference of brethren for one another. How can it be said that brethren love one another if they do not desire to be with one another? Precisely what kind of rationale seeks to justify a preference for the ungodly?

If it is true that Jesus works through the various members of the body as they hold steadfastly to Him (Eph 4:15-16; Col 2:19), then how can the work of the Lord be done if they do not have preferred fellowship with one another? And exactly where is an example of the work of the Lord being accomplished independently of frequent recourse to the saints of the Lord?

The current trend of Christians choosing to be with the ungodly is justified by saying they are seeking to win them to the Lord. I think rather that it is owing to their affinity with them.

WE WENT ON OUR WAY

“ . . . we departed and went our way . . . ”

Refreshed by the communion of the saints, Paul and company resume their journey to Jerusalem. Owing to the words of some of the disciples, Paul was now more thoroughly prepared for what awaited him at Jerusalem.

The Philosophy of the Way

The text states the band of holy men “went on our way .” Other versions read, “started on our journey,” NASB and “proceeded on our journey.” NRSV As used here, the word “way” means, “to pursue the journey on which one has entered, to continue on one's journey.” THAYER The idea is that of a purposed journey in which a specific objective was to be realized.

There is a view of the work of the Lord that holds a certain disdain for all planning. However, there is a place for godly purposing. For example, early believers were exhorted “that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord” (Acts 11:23). Purposing has to do with objective more than the means of meeting that objective. Within the context of contemporary Christianity, such an approach to life sounds a bit strange. The thrust of much teaching in our time has more to do with managing problems than achieving an objective.

PAUL'S PURPOSE FOR LIVING

Paul testified to his personal ambitions in Philippians. 3:8-11.

- Winning Christ.
- Being found in him with the righteousness that comes from God by faith.
- Knowing Christ.
- Knowing the power of Christ's resurrection.
- Knowing the fellowship of Christ's sufferings.
- Being made confirmable to Christ's death.
- Attaining unto the resurrection of the dead.

Paul made his plans within the framework of those objectives. Ultimately, he had eternity in perspective, and the desire to be found acceptable at that time, having lived out his life for the glory of God. I understand the trip mentioned in this text to have been made within that context.

THEY ALL BROUGHT US ON OUR WAY

“ . . . and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city . . . ”

These brethren had taken advantage of Paul's presence during that seven day layover. It must have been a time of great refreshment, and a heightened awareness of the will of the Lord. With a spirit of thankfulness to God and love for Paul and his brethren, these brethren brought them on their way. They no doubt met some of their needs, and ensured that they were not sailing away with unnecessary wants.

The whole body of disciples came along, including their wives and children. They knew nothing of segregating these groups, as opportunists are wont to do during our time. The favorable impact of the whole family being exposed to the things of God cannot be overstated.

The whole body of disciples came along, including their wives and children. They knew nothing of segregating these groups, as opportunists are wont to do during our time. The favorable impact of the whole family being exposed to the things of God cannot be overstated. I was personally reared in this kind of environment, with holy men and women often visiting our home. From a tender age, I was exposed to insightful discussions concerning God's Word, reports of involvement in the work of the Lord, and the demonstration of the love of the brethren. Throughout the years this has had an incalculable effect upon my spirit, and I am grateful for being exposed to genuine Kingdom life. Today, I lament that so many Christian families know little or nothing about such holy relationships.

WE KNEELED DOWN AND PRAYED

“. . . and we knelt down on the shore, and prayed.” Other versions read, “and there on the beach we knelt to pray,” NIV “going on our knees in prayer by the sea,” BBE “they fell on their knees by the seaside, and prayed,” MRD and “having bowed the knees upon the shore, we prayed.” YLT

The language suggests that this was a public act, and was located very close to the ship on which they would depart. This being the case, what a testimony this must have been – men, women, and children praying together.

Throughout the book of Acts, prayer is frequently mentioned. It confirms the reliance of those early brethren upon the Lord. I have observed that the further people are from God, the least apt they are to prayer. On the other hand, the more aware they are of the Lord, the more frequently they pray. Such prayer is an outgrowth of faith and perception.

Prayers in the Book of Acts

Prayer played a prominent role in the life of the early church. Corruption had not yet set in to the degree prophesied by Paul, and therefore a more lively awareness of God and the sustaining and directing ministry of Jesus was found among the brethren.

The following listing refers to the various prayers that are recorded in Luke's record of the early church and spread of the Gospel.

- Acts 1:14 – After Jesus' ascension, his disciples and family devoted themselves to prayer.
- Acts 1:24-25 – The apostles pray before selecting a replacement for Judas.
- Acts 2:42 – The Jerusalem believers devote themselves “to the apostles' teaching and fellowship, to the breaking of bread and the prayers.”
- Acts 3:1 – Peter and John go up to the temple at the hour of prayer.
- Acts 4:29-31 – Peter and John, with the church, pray for boldness in preaching and for God to do miracles.
- Acts 6:4-6 – The apostles select seven men to serve the community, so they can devote themselves to prayer and preaching; they appoint them by praying and laying hands on them.
- Acts 7:59-60 – Stephen prays to the Lord Jesus at the moment of his death.
- Acts 8:15 – Peter and John go to Samaria to pray that new believers may receive the Holy Spirit.
- Acts 8:22-24 – Peter tells Simon the Magician to repent and pray for forgiveness; Simon asks Peter to pray for him.
- Acts 9:11 – After encountering Jesus on the road, Saul of Tarsus remains in Damascus praying.
- Acts 9:40 – Peter prays before raising Tabitha back to life.

- Acts 10:2-4 – Cornelius, a Roman centurion, is described as a devout man who prayed constantly.
- Acts 10:9 – While in Joppa, Peter goes up to a roof to pray⁶ (cf. 11:5).
- Acts 10:30-31 – Cornelius recounts how an angel appeared to tell him his prayers had been heard.
- Acts 12:5, 12 – While Peter is in prison, the church prays for him.
- Acts 13:3 – The Christians at Antioch fast and pray before sending Barnabas and Saul off on a mission.
- Acts 14:23 – With fasting and prayer, Barnabas and Paul appoint elders for the churches they founded.
- Acts 16:13, 16 – Paul, Silas, and Timothy go to a place of prayer outside of Philippi.
- Acts 16:25 – While in prison overnight at Philippi, Paul and Silas pray and sing hymns.
- Acts 20:36 – After speaking to the elders from Ephesus, Paul kneels with them and prays.
- Acts 21:5 – On a beach near Tyre, Paul kneels and prays with believers from that city.
- Acts 22:17 – Paul tells a crowd of Jews about what happened while he was praying in the Jerusalem temple.
- Acts 26:29 – Paul tells King Agrippa that he prays that he and everyone listening will become Christians.

We have good reason to doubt the sincerity of any professing Christian who is deficient in the desire to pray, or who does not associate both need and blessing with it.

Acts 27:29 – During a storm at sea, the whole crew prays for day to come⁶ (so that they might be safe).

- Acts 27:35 – While on the ship, Paul gives thanks to God for the bread before they all eat.
- Acts 28:8 – On Malta, Paul cures the father of the governor Publius by praying and laying his hands on him.
- Acts 28:15 – Upon landing on the Italian mainland, Paul thanks God for the believers who meet him.

IN OUR TIME

Our day is marked by a glaring absence of prevailing prayer. In the activities of the church and Christian organizations, prayer is often more an empty form, than the expression of absolute reliance upon the Lord. We have good reason to doubt the sincerity of any professing Christian who is deficient in the desire to pray, or who does not associate both need and blessing with it.

I do not know how you could establish the existence of faith where there is no practical reliance upon the Lord. While it is not our purpose to sit in judgment upon others, it is our business to examine ourselves.

THEY RESUME THEIR JOURNEY

7 And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.”

TAKEN OUR LEAVE ONE OF ANOTHER

“And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship . . .” Other versions read, “we said farewell to one another. Then we went on board the ship,” NASB “After saying good-bye to each other, we went aboard the ship,” NIV “bade one another farewell. Then we went abroad the ship,” RSV “We said our last words to one another, and got into the ship,” BBE and “having embraced one another, we went on board ship.” DARBY

Keep in mind that this had apparently not been a previously arranged visit with the brethren. Further, there is no record of Paul having been in Tyre before. Yet, they had been received hospitably, for the brethren in Tyre were obviously “given to hospitality” (Rom 12:13). They conspicuously “used hospitality without grudging,” or not considering it an inconvenience, or an intrusion upon them (1 Pet 4:9). Ponder the effects of a group of brethren traveling through our area, looking us up, and informing us of their seven-day layover – all the while seeking the fellowship of kindred spirits. I am persuaded that most of the brethren in The Word of Truth Fellowship would find no difficulty in welcoming them into their homes. However, I am also keenly aware that this is by no means ordinary among professing believers. This is because their lives have been tailored around themselves, their desires, and various family activities.

However, enough is said of hospitality in apostolic teaching to provoke serious introspection concerning this aspect of our lives (Rom 12:13; Heb 13:2; 1 Pet 4:9; 3 John 1:5-8). No man who is not given to hospitality is permitted to be a leader among the people of God (1 Tim 3:2; Tit 1:7-8). One of the qualifications for the support of a widow by the church is this: “Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work” (1 Tim 5:10). Jesus Himself taught that one of the defining characteristics of holy people is being hospitable to His brethren: “I was a stranger, and ye took me in . . . Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me” (Matt 25:35,40). Those not so characterized were consigned to “everlasting punishment” (Matt 25:32-46). That is certainly an arresting thought.

Taking leave of one another no doubt involved saying some appropriate words. We are not provided the details of their farewell, but we can obtain a fairly good idea among how brethren parted from one another in those early days, before the corruption foretold by Paul had taken place. Here are some examples of parting words and holy benedictions.

• LIKE-MINDEDNESS AND GLORIFYING GOD. “Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be likeminded one toward another according to Christ Jesus: That ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ” (Rom 15:5-6).

• THE REALIZATION OF AND, PEACE, AND ABOUNDING HOPE . “Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost” (Rom 15:13).

• THE PRESENCE OF GOD. “Now the God of peace be with you all. Amen” (Rom 15:33)

• THE REALIZATION OF THE GRACE OF CHRIST. “The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen” (Rom 16:24; 1 Cor 16:23; Phil 4:23; 1 Thess 5:28; 2 Thess 3:18); Phile 1:25; Rev 22:21).

• THE AWARENESS OF THE MINISTRY OF, AND FELLOWSHIP WITH, THE ENTIRE GODHEAD. “The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen” (2 Cor 13:14).

Notice the consistency in these closing words. Take due note of their focus, and of the direction in which they were pointed. All of them had to do with spiritual stability, the realization Divine benefits, and Divine utility.

PEACE TO THOSE WHO WALK ACCORDING TO THE RULE OF NEW CREATURESHIP. “For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature. And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God” (Gal 6:15-16).

• GRACE REALIZED WITHIN THE HUMAN SPIRIT. “Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen” (Gal 6:18).

• THE REALIZATION OF PEACE, LOVE, AND FAITH, AND SPECIAL GRACE TO THOSE LOVING CHRIST IN SINCERITY. “Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen” (Eph 6:24).

• BEING GIVEN ALL PEACE BY ALL MEANS. “Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all” (2 Thess 3:16).

• THE PRESENCE OF JESUS WITH THE HUMAN SPIRIT. “The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. Grace be with you. Amen” (2 Tim 4:22).

• SPIRITUAL PERFECTION THAT WOULD RESULT IN GOD WORKING WITHIN. “Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is wellpleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen” (Heb 13:20-21).

• GRACE BEING WITH EVERYONE. “Grace be with you all. Amen” (Heb 13:25).

• PERFECTION, ESTABLISHMENT, STRENGTH, AND SETTLING. “But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you” (1 Pet 5:10).

• PEACE TO EVERYONE IN CHRIST. “Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus. Amen” (1 Pet 5:14).

• THE REALIZATION OF GRACE, MERCY, PEACE IN TRUTH AND LOVE. “Grace be with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love” (2 John 1:3).

Notice the consistency in these closing words. Take due note of their focus, and of the direction in which they were pointed. All of them had to do with spiritual stability, the realization Divine benefits, and Divine utility.

There is consistent mindset revealed that is not anchored to this world, but is rather looking forward to the consummation of all things, and readiness to confront the Lord with confidence. The obvious accent is on spiritual progress, not worldly success. These things are so plain it is a marvel that they can be overlooked. Of course, it is not that men simply overlook them. Rather, because of their willingness to live for self, they have been blinded so they cannot perceive the realities that are so conspicuous to faith. This blindness is a Divine judgment. It was affirmed by Isaiah of his own generation, and confirmed by John concerning the generation during Christ’s earthly ministry.

• ISAIAH. “For the LORD hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered. And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed: And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned. Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men: Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid” (Isa 29:10-14).

• JOHN. “But though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him: That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he spake, Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed? Therefore they could not believe, because that Esaias said again, He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their heart; that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them. These things said Esaias, when he saw his glory, and spake of Hm” (John 12:38).

• PAUL. “And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers, Saying, Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive: For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them” (Acts 28:25-27).

How different the response of the brethren from Tyre to the ministry of Paul. It is obvious the Lord had not blinded their minds, with hardened hearts were glad to see Paul leave. These brethren accompanied Paul and those with him to the ship, and congenial words were exchanged as the holy entourage continued on their mission.

THEY RETURNED HOME AGAIN

“ . . . and they returned home again.”

With joy and sorrow mingled in the cup of human experience, the disciples from Tyre returned home. They had profited from the visit of Paul and company, and yet yielded to the purpose of God that required them to part.

WE CAME TO PTOLEMAIS

“And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais...”

Other versions read, “finished our voyage from Tyre,” NKJV “completed our voyage from Tyre,” CSB “having finished the voyage by sea,” DOUAY and “The next stop after leaving Tyre was Ptolemais.” NLT

The suggestion is that the sea voyage part of their journey ended here. It appears that they traveled on land from this point on. Concerning this particular trip, there is no more reference to ships or the sea. All of the maps of Paul’s third missionary journey, to which I have access, show that the ship voyage included an additional leg to Caesarea. However, the text does not give that indication. It strongly suggests that the sailing portion of the voyage terminated at Ptolemais.

WE SALUTED THE BRETHREN

“ . . . and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.” Other versions read, “greeted the brethren, and stayed with them one day” NKJV “we had talk with the brothers and were with them for one day,” BBE “we inquired after the welfare of the brethren, and remained a day with them,” WEYMOUTH and “paid our respects to the brethren and remained with them for one day.” AMPLIFIED

Once again, before setting forward on their journey, Paul; and the brethren with him connect with some of the saints of God. Being without modern-day methods of communication, it is not at all probable that they sent a message ahead, telling them they would be arriving there soon.

As used here, the word “saluted” means “to pay respects to a distinguished person by visiting him; of those who greet one whom they meet in the way . . . pay one's respects to,' of those who show regard for a distinguished person by visiting him.” THAYER Technically it could mean that “the brethren” of reference met them, and Paul and company greeted them in a godly manner. It could also mean that the travelers searched out the brethren, and then greeted them with the respect and honor that was common among disciples. I am more inclined to the latter view, which seems to blend better with the report of this whole trip. Notwithstanding, it is not a matter suitable for contention.

What a “day” that must have been – when Paul and his companions “abode with them one day.” It was surely something more than a mere rest stop, for there is something rejuvenating about saints being with one another. What child of God has not experienced the exhilarating effects of kindred spirits?

The Value of “The Brethren”

The word “saluted” carries the idea of respect, as previously noted. The doctrinal way of referring to this high regard is “the love of the brethren.” – something that is the result of obeying the truth. Peter states this in a most succinct manner. “Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren , see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: Being born again , not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever” (1 Pet 1:22-23). This remarkable preference is traced back to being born again of incorruptible seed. In other words, the new birth itself involves a certain preference for, and attraction to, the children of God. On this matter John writes, “Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God , and knoweth God” (1 John 4:7). And again, “Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God : and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him” (1 John 5:1). Thus we read powerful statements like the following:

• CONFIRMATION OF DISCIPLESHIP. “By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another” (John 13:35).

• CONFIRMATION OF LIFE. “We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death” (1 John 3:14).

The existence of this love is the basis for various expressions of how the redeemed are to live.

• HONOR AND PREFERENCE. “Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another ” (Rom 12:10).

• UNPRETENTIOUS AND FERVENT. “Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently ” (1 Pet 1:22).

Confirming the association of this love with the Divine nature, we are apprised that God Himself teaches His children to love one another. “But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another” (1 Thess 4:9). This is a consistent message that God has delivered to men. “For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another” (1 John 3:11). Now that Christ has put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, this love can be carried out, because in Him men receive a “new heart” and a “new spirit” (Ezek 36:26), and the Law of God is written into their hearts and minds (Heb 10:16).

The very existence of this love confirms that an essential change has taken place in all who are in Christ Jesus. They are drawn to those who are not of the world, and delight in their company – an attitude that reflects the Divine nature itself. It is said of the Lord that He is scanning the entire world, looking for those whose hearts are perfect toward Him (2 Chron 16:9). He looks favorably toward the man who is “poor and of a contrite heart, at that trembleth at My word” (Isa 66:2). He takes special note of those who fear Him and speak often with one another (Mal 3:16). The Lord Jesus, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily chooses to be among those who gather together in His name (Matt 18:20).

It is not strange, therefore, that those who have been joined to the Lord have a special attraction to His people. They are, after all, being conformed to the image of His Son (Rom 8:29), and it is no strange thing that His character is found in them.

Without lingering too long on this doctrinal point, it will suffice to say that this kind of love is being lived out in Paul and those with him, as well as in those with whom they stayed. There was a closeness created in Christ Jesus that was compelling, drawing souls together, and causing them to consistently seek out kindred spirits. The absence of this kind of “brotherly love” is a brightly flashing signal of fundamental deficiency.

THEY STAY A WHILE WITH PHILIP THE EVANGELIST

“ 8 And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Caesarea: and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, which was one of the seven; and abode with him. 9 And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy.”

Now, the trip to Jerusalem continues. The stops along the way that were necessitated by the shipping schedule proved to be blessed occasions for Paul and those traveling with him. This is an example of “redeeming the time,” or “making the most of your time” NASB (Eph 5:16; Col 4:5). Many a naive young believer has fallen into sin simply because they did not use their time properly.

THE NEXT DAY

“And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed . . .” Other versions read, “we who were Paul’s companions,” NKJV “we left,” NRSV “Paul and we that were with him,” GENEVA and “Paul and his company.” YLT

Luke, who is writing this record, is included in the “we.” Others were also included, with the following being identified: “And there accompanied him into Asia Sopater of Berea; and of the Thessalonians, Aristarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Asia, Tychicus and Trophimus” (Acts 20:4). That is nine in all, including Luke and Paul. Ponder how many you know who could hospitably receive nine people – perhaps for as long as seven days, or even longer. There can be no question about this: a social climate existed in the early church that is like a museum artifact in our time.

CAME INTO CAESAREA

“ . . . and came unto Caesarea. . .” Other versions read, “came to Caesaera,” NKJV “reached Caesarea,” NIV “went on to Caesarea,” LIVING and “went to the city of Caesarea,” IE

This is Caesarea close to Jerusalem, as compared with Caesarea-Philippi, which was 120 miles North of Jerusalem. After Philip had preached in Samaria, preached to the eunuch, and baptized him into Christ, he continued preaching until he “came to Caesarea” (Acts 8:40). After Paul was converted, and his life was threatened, the disciples “brought him down to Caesarea,” where they sent him to Tarsus (Acts 9:30). This is the city in which Cornelius lived (Acts 10:1). When Paul first sailed from Ephesus, and before his return there to spend three years, he had gone to Caesarea, from which he went to the church in Jerusalem, saluting the brethren there (Acts 18:22). Paul will have a variety of experiences in this city later on (Acts 23–33; 25:1-13).

I am assuming this trip was made by foot, and not by sea. The distance from Ptolemais to Caesarea was 35-50 miles – a two-day journey. What marvelous fellowship they must have had along the way. Jesus taught His disciples as they were walking in “the way” (Matt 20:17; 21:19-22; Mk 10:32-45). It was while Cleopas and his companion were walking on “the way” that Jesus joined them and expounded to them such things as caused their hearts to burn (Lk 24:17-27,32). It was as the Ethiopian eunuch was traveling on “the way” that Philip taught him, concerning Christ (Acts 8:27-39).

THE HOUSE OF PHILIP

“ . . . and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist , which was one of the seven; and abode with him.” Other versions read, “Philip the preacher,” BBE “Philip the proclaimer,” CJB and “Philip . . . a missionary.” GWN

Such proclaimers are not intended to preach only to the lost, although that is a common misconception. Through Paul, the Spirit affirmed the role of an evangelist, together with the other teaching gifts, was given to the church.

An “evangelist” is “a bringer of good tidings,” THAYER and “one who brings or announces good news.” FRIBERG This is one of the gifts that the exalted Christ gave to men – “evangelists” (Eph 4:11).

This is a person who has insight into the “glad tidings” through which faith “comes” (Rom 10:14-17). As Philip did with the Ethiopian eunuch, an “evangelist” can expound the prophetic words that foretold the coming of a Savior. They declare more than a message that says “God loved you so much . . .” They speak more of what was accomplished by the Lord Jesus – things that effectively resolved the matter of sin and opened the way to God.

Such proclaimers are not intended to preach only to the lost, although that is a common misconception. Through Paul, the Spirit affirmed the role of an evangelist, together with the other teaching gifts, was given to the church. It also was “For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love” (Eph 4:12-16).

Just as surely as those who are “dead in trespasses and sins” (Eph 2:1) need to hear an insightful proclaimer of the Gospel in order to be saved, so the church needs such insightful proclaimers in order that the following might be achieved:

- Their perfecting, or spiritual maturity.
- In order to do the “work of the ministry.”

- For the edifying of the body of Christ.
- To come into the “unity of the faith.”
- To realize “the unity of the knowledge of the Son of God.”
- To reflect “the image of Christ” in their the various roles within the body.
- They be “no more children, tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine.”
- That speaking the truth in love, they may “grow up in to Christ in all things.”
- That the body may be “fitly joined together by that which every joint supplieth.”
- To have “every part” working effectively.
- That the body might make increase to the “ edifying of itself in love.”

Philip

Philip is described as “one of the seven” – that is, the seven men who were chosen to administer the daily distribution of food to the believing widows in Jerusalem (Acts 6). At that time, he was among those noted for being “of honest report, full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom” (Acts 6:3).

This is the man who “went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them.” The result was that “the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spoke.” They also saw “the miracles which he did, For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed” (Acts 8:7). Great joy filled the city as Philip preached to them “the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ” (8:12).

Philip was also directed by a holy angel and the Holy Spirit to preach to a political official who was the treasurer of the Queen of Candace. He did, and the man was baptized into Christ, going on his way rejoicing (8:26-39). Following that Philip “preached in all the cities till he came to Caesarea” (8:40).

Now, considerably more than twenty years later, Philip is still noted for being an insightful proclaimer of the Gospel – “Philip the evangelist.” He is an example of spiritual stability and consistency.

It is interesting to note that considerable emphasis is placed on “evangelism” in our time – a word that is not found in Scripture. Instead, mention is made of a person gifted to be an evangelist, who apparently continued to “stir up” the gift that was in him (2 Tim 1:6).

Philip is also a notable example of someone who used the office of a deacon well. As it is written, “For they that have used the office of a deacon well purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus” (1 Tim 3:13). Another versions reads, “For those who perform well as deacons acquire a good standing for themselves and also gain much confidence and freedom and boldness in the faith which is [founded on and centers] in Christ Jesus.” AMPLIFIED This is of particular interest to me, having spent my young years thinking that deacons were appointed to pass the Lord’s Supper and the offering plates.

From the standpoint of the individual, being a deacon, or servant of the church is an office in which one proves his competency. In fact, prior to being put into that office, they must have demonstrated their ability to function properly in it. Therefore Paul wrote, “And let these also first be proved ; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless” (1 Tim 3:10).

THE FOUR DAUGHTERS OF PHILIP

“ . . . And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy.” Other versions read, “four virgin daughters who were prophetesses,” NASB “four unmarried daughters who prophesied,” NIV “four unmarried daughters who had the gift of prophecy,” NRSV and “four unmarried daughters who had the ability to speak what God had revealed.” GWN

What a blessing it must have been to be in this home! To my knowledge, it is the only home so distinguished. During the captivity in Egypt, a Jewish man named Amram married a Jewish woman named Jochebed. It is written, “and she bare unto Amram Aaron and Moses, and Miriam their sister” (Num 26:59). I suppose three more notable people have never been born to a single family. Another cluster of unusual offspring from a single family were Mary, Martha, and Lazarus (John 11:1). James and John, apostles of Christ, were brothers, born of the same father and mother (Mk 10:35). Peter and Andrew, also two apostles of the Lamb, were brothers (Matt 4:18). Yet, Philip had “ four virgin daughters who were prophetesses.” NASB

This is significant, for prophets are a gift given to the church – not to women, or children, but to the church. Further, they rank high in the body of Christ, being the “second” in significance, and outranked only by “apostles.”

This is significant, for prophets are a gift given to the church – not to women, or children, but to the church (Eph 4:11). Further, they rank high in the body of Christ, being the “second” in significance, and outranked only by “apostles” (1 Cor 12:28). Jesus gave them (Eph 4:8,11). God the Father placed them (1 Cor 12:18). The Holy Spirit distributes this gift (1 Cor 12:4). The Lord administers it (1 Cor 12:5). God Himself works “all in all” (1 Cor 12:6). They are a manifestation of the Holy Spirit, given for the profit of the whole church (1 Cor 12:7). They are a manifestation of Divine distinction – for all are not prophets – and they are a means through which the Head speaks to His body, which is the church.

Here in this text, then, we have a revelation of something that involved the entire Godhead: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Philip had four virgin daughters that prophesied. Admittedly, this does not conform to the theology of some – which means that their theology is wrong. Whatever texts they imagine forbids this kind of operation has simply been misunderstood, for God does not contradict His word.

Did Philip’s daughters prophesy only to women? If so, they had a gift that was not intended to profit everyone in the church – and that idea contradicts the revealed purpose of the gift of prophecy. Or, perhaps they only spoke privately, and not in the assembly. But that too contradicts the clearly stated purpose of all spiritual gifts – especially the gift of prophecy, which is a superior gift (1 Cor 14:5).

One of the marks of the New Covenant, and the pouring out of the Holy Spirit upon all flesh was this: “and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy” (Acts 2:17). Peter said that this was being fulfilled before the multitude on that memorable day of Pentecost (Acts 2:15,33). This record, therefore, should not surprise us.

Of old time, there were prophetesses – women who prophesied by the Spirit of God. Each one is referred to as a “prophetess.”

- Miriam (Ex 15:20).
- Deborah, the wife of Lapidoth (Judges 4:4)
- Huldah, the wife of Shallum (2 Kgs 22:14).
- Isaiah’s wife (Isa 8:3).
- Anna, a widow (Lk 2:36).

Paul told the church at Corinth, “Ye may all prophesy one by one” (1 Cor 14:31). Married women who prophesied were to do so as subordinate to their husbands (1 Cor 11:5), which it is assumed were themselves believers.

The texts that forbid women to speak in the church, or to instruct men, were by no means ordinary. There are only two such texts, and they both have to do with learning, not prophesying (1 Cor 14:3; 1 Tim 2:11-12). Disruption is the thing forbidden in the Corinthian text, and the context of First Timothy strongly suggests it is speaking about the same thing. The woman was not told to sit in silence, but to “learn” in silence. Further, the context was the assembly of the saints – when all of them were together.

I do not care to remain on this topic, as I have dealt with it elsewhere. I only desire to show at this time that the existence of four daughters that prophesied is in perfect harmony with the history of God speaking to humanity, with the promise of the New Covenant, and with the things revealed concerning the body of Christ. God never works out of harmony with what He has said, or in contradiction of His purpose..

CONCLUSION

Thus, what appears to be nothing more than an historical record has life pumped into it, so it can minister to the soul. Ponder the description of all God-inspired writing. “All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works” (2 Tim 3:16-17).

This applies to historical narratives contained in books like Genesis, Exodus, Numbers, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, First and Second Samuel, First and Second Kings, First and Second Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Job, Jonah, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, and Acts. This is not to mention the historical reports that are found in the books that major on prophecy and teaching. In such reports Divine reactions to both good and evil are seen. The effects of God’s presence, and the personal knowledge of Him, upon men are also seen. We are exposed to the way people think whose mind is set on the Lord, and the way minds that are not set on the Lord process things. We see how God’s promises effect those who believe, and how His Law is considered by those who fear Him. We are exposed to the reactions of both the holy and unholy to Divine working.

How often the church is reminded to ponder the various events related to Israel. In fact, it is written that the things that “happened” to them were “ensamples,” or samplers – a model for imitation. STRONG’S They were, in fact, “written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come” (1 Cor 10:11). It is also true that they “were written aforetime . . . for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope” (Rom 15:4). In the book of Acts, the greater percentage of the reports are examples of those who lived by faith, whereas Israel’s record largely provides an example of those who do not live by faith, and of the consequences of such an approach to life. They also provide us with a sterling example of how God responds to such people, while the book of Acts provides the record of His response to men of faith.

May the Lord deliver men from mere academic approaches to the book, of Acts – or any other book of Scripture. Such an approach is lethal, leading the soul to think incorrectly, and also to place a low value on the Scriptures themselves. Professing Christians who remain fundamentally ignorant of the Scriptures, refusing to expose their minds to them, have put themselves in a most precarious situation. They have removed themselves from the means of spiritual sustenance, for man lives “by every word of God” (Lk 4:4). That is a circumstance that cannot possibly be avoided or contradicted – and what person of faith would want to do such a thing?.

ARRIVING IN JERUSALEM

“ 21:10 ”And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judaea a certain prophet, named Agabus. 11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles. 12 And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem. 13 Then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus. 14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done. 15 And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem. 16 There went with us also certain of the disciples of Caesarea, and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge. 17 And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us gladly. 18 And the day following Paul went in with us unto James; and all the elders were present. 19 And when he had saluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry.” – (Acts 21:10-19)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

As Paul and company remain for a season at the home of Philip, a certain prophet named Agabus came down from Judea and prophesied Paul would be bound in Jerusalem. After hearing what Agabus said, the brethren with Paul, together with those “of that place” attempted to persuade him not to go to Jerusalem. However, they could not prevail. Recognizing the sacrificial commitment of Paul, they submitted themselves to the will of the Lord, and ceased their attempts to dissuade him. Some from that area then joined Paul, and the eight who were with him, in the journey to Jerusalem, where he and those with him were gladly received. The day after their arrival, Paul went in unto James, the Lord's brother, who was a pillar of the church in Jerusalem. All of the elders were present at the meeting. After saluting them, Paul declared "particularly," or in detail, the great things God had done among the Gentiles through his ministry. It must have been a memorable occasion, indeed.

KINDRED SPIRITS

The value of spiritually kindred spirits cannot be overstated. After all, when the Lord placed believers, it was in Christ's "body" (1 Cor 12:18) as well as "in heavenly places" where that body convenes (Eph 2:6). Judging from the spiritual climate of our nation, this value has become outdated. The gathering of believers is shrinking in both duration and frequency. The spiritually illogical nature of this trend is seen from several different perspectives.

- When there were only two people on the face of the earth, they were together, and were intended to stay together (Gen 2:19-24).
- God chose Abraham, then developed a nation through him that were intended to be together. In fact, God gave them their own special land so they could be together (Gen 12:7; 13:15; ; 15:5; 17:8; Ex 12:25 Lev 20:24).
- When Israel went into Egypt, they were together (Ex 1:5; Deut 10:22), and when they came out as well (Ex 12:37-38; 13:3; Deut 5:6).
- Israel journeyed to the promised land together (Deut 8:15).
- Israel entered the promised land together (Josh 3:17; 4:1).
- During times of moral and spiritual decay, those who feared the Lord spoke often with one another (Mal 3:16-17).
- When John the Baptist came, he spoke to the people when they were together (Matt 3:5; Mk 1:5; Lk 7:29).
- When Jesus ministered, He gathered around him disciples to be "with Him" (Mk 3:14), and multitudes followed Him, gathering to Him (Matt 4:25; 8:1; 13:2).
- After Jesus ascended to heaven, and until the Spirit came, the disciples were together (Acts 1:14-15).
- Those who were joined to the Lord were noted for being together (Acts 2:44; 4:31; 12:12; 14:27).

- The church is “fitly framed together,” and “builded together” for a habitation of God (Eph 2:21-22).

- The body of Christ is “joined together” by the effective working of every part (Eph 4:16).

Doctrinally, believers are said to be members of “one another” (Rom 12:5; Eph 4:25). Together, they are “the body of Christ, and members in particular” (1 Cor 12:27).

There is a sense in which the saints strive together “for the faith of the gospel” (Phil 1:27).

- There is a certain comfort that is ministered when believers are “together” (1 Thess 5:11).

- When the righteous are raised, they will be together (John 5:26; 1 Thess 4:16).

- When we rise to meet the Lord, it will be together (1 Thess 4:17).

- Throughout eternity, the saved will be together (1 Thess 4:17; Rev 14:4).

- Now, throughout the book of Acts it is continually noted that the people of God were together (14:28; 15:6,30; 20:7-8; 21:22).

THE DOCTRINE OF TOGETHERNESS

Doctrinally, believers are said to be members of “one another” (Rom 12:5; Eph 4:25). Together, they are “the body of Christ, and members in particular” (1 Cor 12:27). The idea of an unassembled body is one that denotes death and decay, as confirmed in the vision of the valley of dry bones (Ezek 37:1-28). This depicted the whole house of Israel, who were scattered. In the vision, the very first thing that happened in the reclaiming of the people was that the bones “came together, bone to his bone.” Similar to the coming resurrection of the dead, the work was performed upon them when they were together. When the bones were together, covered with flesh, sinews, and skin, they were revived, standing up together as a great army.

Believers are to be “perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment” (1 Cor 1:10). Certain holy activities can only be done when the church is “gathered together” (1 Cor 5:4; 11:17-33; 14:26).

This is the nature of life in Christ Jesus. That is why the Ephesian elders were sorrowful when they heard they would never see Paul again (Acts 20:38). This is why Paul generally traveled with brethren. It is why he sought out disciples whenever he had the opportunity to do so, to spend some time with them.

Now, however, we are living in a time when all of this sounds strange to many. They cannot see why believers enjoy being together, and profit from such gatherings. To them, it makes more sense to leave the people of God and try to reach others for Christ – at least that is what they say they are doing. What they seem to overlook, and conveniently so, is that the early saints who did garner many souls, were the very people who met often with one another. They are the ones who sought out disciples, spent time with them, and profited from one another.

But this was not the environment of our text. There was an undeniable value placed on the people of God, and being with them. It was more profitable to give reports of the working of the Lord to them. It was better to settle matters of concern when these people were together.

Our times are critical, in that they are conducive to spiritual dullness. There is a religious environment in which it is most difficult to take hold of the truth of God, or gain any genuine spiritual advantage. It is also a time when less value is placed on the people of God, which condition mandates infrequent and unprofitable assemblies. Those who are wholehearted toward the Lord will confirm that any advancement in Christ must be made with unusual aggression. Anything that tends to casualness is disarming because it moves people to conduct themselves as though there was peace all around them, when that is not at all the case. This is why such religious froth is popular. It is why there are shallow and sometimes thoughtless sermons. It is the reason for the popularity of humor and other forms of entertainment. It is why the door has been opened for the creation of earth-centered “gifts” that have little or nothing to do with the gifts Jesus has given to the church.

But this was not the environment of our text. There was an undeniable value placed on the people of God, and being with them. It was more profitable to give reports of the working of the Lord to them. It was better to settle matters of concern when these people were together. Jesus ministered to a greater extent to them while they were together, and they knew it.

See, all of this is being lived out in our text, confirming the truth of what I have just said.

A KEY EVENT AT THE HOUSE OF PHILIP

“ 21:10 And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judaea a certain prophet, named Agabus. 11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.”

It ought to be noted that Divine direction is more apt to occur, although it is not limited to, occasions when those being directed are among the people of God. Some examples recorded in Acts are as follows.

- AGABUS. “And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Caesar” (Acts 11:28).

- SUNDRY SAINTS. “Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me” (Acts 20:23).

- CERTAIN DISCIPLES. “And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days: who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem” (Acts 21:4).

- AGABUS. “And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles” (Acts 21:11).

Doctrinally, the body of Christ is addressed concerning prophesying in the assembly – i.e. speaking unto edification, exhortation, and comfort (1 Cor 14:3). This is always addressed within the context of the assembly, or the body of Christ.

- ACCORDING TO THE MEASURE OF FAITH RECEIVED. “Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith” (Rom 12:6).

- EDIFYING THE CHURCH. “He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church. I would that ye all spake with tongues, but rather that ye prophesied: for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying” (1 Cor 14:4-5).

- EFFECTIVE IN AN ASSEMBLY . “But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all: and thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth” (1 Cor 14:24-25).

In part, this accounts for the consistent manner of Paul, finding disciples and spending time with them. If there was a word of God for him, that was to be delivered by some member of the body of Christ, he would be more apt to receive it while he was with the saints.

Of course, for those who neglect the assembling of themselves together (Heb 10:25), this is all forfeited. It may make sense to the flesh to isolate oneself from the assembly of the righteous, imagining that in such a case God would direct them privately. I will not deny that such direction is possible, but it is the exception, not the rule. The members are placed within the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:18). This is not a mere technicality, nor is it some kind of general or mystical teaching. The purpose of placing the individual members in the body is that this is the primary area in which sustenance, correction, and direction are ministered. This is the clear teaching of First Corinthians 12:24; Ephesians 4:11-16, Philippians 1:27, Colossians 2:18-19, First Thessalonians 5:11, and elsewhere.

Who is able to measure the devastating effects of the trendy reduction of both the frequency and duration of holy gatherings? Who can estimate how much has been forfeited by viewing the gathering of the saints as an inconvenience? What can be said of those who tailor their assemblies for those who are not in Christ, and pretend as though this is pleasing to the God who placed His people in a body.

Our text is confirming the value of the saints being together – not merely in theological persuasion, but in actual company and fellowship. There is a sense in which spiritual growth is directly associated with the amount of time spent with the people of God. This is one of the many weaknesses of the position that states believers should make more ungodly friends so they can win them. Such a thought is at variance with sound theology, as well as being impractical. It conveniently ignores the solemn warning of Scripture. “Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners” (1 Cor 15:33).

WE TARRIED MANY DAYS

“And as we tarried there many days . . .” Other versions read, “stayed many days,” NKJV “a number of days,” NIV “for several days,” NRSV “somewhat lengthy stay.” WEYMOUTH

The word “many” is translated from a word than means, “greater in quantity . . . longer than expected . . . greater in quality,” THAYER “many more . . . more and more and on and on.” UBS The idea is that the group had planned to spend an extended period at the house of Philip, but stayed even longer than they had expected. The clear reason was the profitability that was being realized while they remained there.

I have learned by experience that there are certain blessings and spiritual increase that take place because I lingered in a holy environment. Such benefits are forfeited by hasty departures, when the person yields to the frailty of the flesh, or seeks for more convenience. While this is a matter to be settled personally, and within the framework of one’s faith, it is worthy of attention.

A CERTAIN PROPHET NAMES AGABUS

“ . . . there came down from Judaea a certain prophet, named Agabus. ”

As noted before, even though the direction from Jerusalem to Caesarea was north, yet one went “down from Jerusalem” to Caesarea. That is a topographical description, highlighting the elevated nature of the region of Judea, and particularly of Jerusalem. You ascended to Jerusalem, and descended from it. In this regard, it is a most fitting parallel to the “Jerusalem that “is above” (Gal 4:26). You always have to ascend to traffic in that holy realm, and when you leave it, you can only go down.

Now, traveling, probably on foot, a distance of at least 50-55 miles, a “certain prophet named Agabus” came to see Paul and company.

Acts 11:26 informs us that Agabus was a prophet “from Jerusalem.” When Paul and Barnabas were in Antioch of Syria, Agabus made that long trip from Jerusalem with some other prophets (about 200 miles). At that time he stood up “and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Caesar” (Acts 11:28). As a result of that prophecy, “the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judaea: which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul” (Acts 11:29-30). There was also some ongoing support of the saints in Jerusalem that resulted from this prophecy. Paul was associated with the gatherings of offerings for them from the Gentile churches, and mentions it quite often (Rom 15:25-27; 1 Cor 16:1-3; 2 Cor 8:9-15; Gal 2:10). Now, this same man travels to Caesarea to converse with Paul.

News had traveled to Jerusalem concerning Paul’s presence, once again highlighting the kind of communication that existed between disciples in those days.

While I do not wish to linger long on this matter, I have particularly noted the lack of this kind of awareness in the Joplin Missouri area. Over the years I have known a number of kingdom dignitaries, noted for their spiritual understanding, that have come to this city. These were men who trafficked in the higher realms of the Spirit. Almost to a man, they have told me that few people were even aware of their presence. A few of them relocated and left this world from here, and still remained largely unknown.

This is certainly not a trait unique to Joplin, yet, owing to the significant number of Christian ministries and churches in this area, it is a rather disconcerting piece of information. I am fully persuaded that if Paul were to reappear in this city, relatively few people would be aware of it, even though he remained for a significant period of time. This was not the kind of environment in which our text took place, and the disciples were not of the caliber with which we are quite often confronted.

THE JEWS WILL BIND THIS MAN

“And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.” Other versions read, “took Paul’s belt,” NASB and “the band of Paul’s clothing.” BBE

Coming in among the those gathered at Philip’s house, Agabus takes the “girdle,” belt, or sash, around Paul’s waist and ties up his own hands and feet. Being moved by the Holy Spirit he says, “This is what the Holy Spirit says: ‘In this way the Jews at Jerusalem will bind the man who owns this belt and deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.’” NASB Other versions read, “The Holy Spirit says these words,” BBE “the Holy Spirit declares,” NLT “The Holy Spirit tells me,” IE “The Holy Spirit says these things.” LITV

Elsewhere Paul says that the words of the prophets are to be examined by other prophets, not simply taking fore granted that they were given by the Holy Spirit. “Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge” (1 Cor 14:29). Other versions read, “let the others pass judgment,” NASB “the others should weigh carefully what is said,” NIV “the others should evaluate,” CSB “let the others discern,” ERV “Everyone else should decide whether what each person said is right or wrong,” GWN “while all the others listen,” LIVING “consider carefully what is said,” WILLIAMS “exercise their judgment,” MONTGOMERY “pay attention and weigh and discern what is said,” AMPLIFIED “let others discriminate,” EMTV and “listening and taking it to heart.” MESSAGE

The Good News Bible, Living Bible, and The Message, as is too often characteristic of them, water-down the text, taking the substance out of it. The word “judge” (“let the others judge”) pertains to the other prophets, not the congregation in general. The word translated “judge,” as it is used here, has the following lexical meaning: “to separate, make a distinction, discriminate . . . to learn by discrimination, to try, decide,” THAYER “evaluating the difference between things discern, distinguish, differentiate,” FRIBERG and “evaluating the difference between things discern, distinguish, differentiate.” LOUW-NIDA

Judging What the Prophets Say

In the assembly of the righteous, men are free to speak only the truth. Even then, those with understanding are not to take for granted that what is said – even by a prophet – is the truth. Their words are to be weighed by the other prophets – not with a mind to find fault, but with a godly determination to establish the truth.

In our text, there was a body of people, some of whom were no doubt prophets/prophetesses. I do not doubt that they were weighing what Agabus said – evaluating it. First, his word did agree with others who had spoken by the Holy Spirit concerning Paul’s trip to Jerusalem (Acts 20:23; 21:4). Paul is once again made alert concerning what is awaiting him in Jerusalem. Satan will seek to work through this word to dissuade Paul from going, while the Holy Spirit will comfort him, assuring him that he will be able to do what he is being sent to do.

LUKE AND COMPANY RESPOND TO THE PROPHECY

“ 12 And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.”

The brethren with Paul listen to what Agabus has prophesied, and respond to it. Their response indicates their deep love and concern for Paul. It also confirms that they did not see as far as Paul did. Nevertheless, they spoke with good intentions.

WHEN WE HEARD THESE THINGS

“And when we heard these things . . .” Other versions read, “heard this,” NASB “heard these words,” MRD “hearing this,” LIVING “as soon as we heard these words,” WEYMOUTH and “which thing when we heard.” WYCLIFFE

The idea is that as soon as they heard the words of Agabus, they responded. They were not of either a slow heart or mind.

Such responses are not always favorable. When Jesus spoke in His home-town synagogue, those who heard His words “were filled with wrath” (Lk 4:28). On the other hand, when Jesus spoke out on the great day of the feast, those who heard His saying responded, “Of a truth, this is the Prophet” (John 7:40). In another synagogue, when Jesus responded to those who thought He should not heal on the Sabbath day, those who heard His words “held their peace” (Mk 3:4). Another time, upon hearing Jesus’ answer to their interrogation, the chief priests and scribes “marveled at His answer, and held their peace” (Luke 20:26).

The point is that when there is a word from heaven, men are not indifferent to it. There is a gravity to the words that demand some kind of response from men. The words of men do not always have this kind of impact.

WE AND THOSE OF THAT PLACE

“. . . both we, and they of that place . . .” Other versions read, “we as well as the local residents,” NASB “we and the people there,” NIV “we and those living in that place,” BBE “we and the local people,” CSB “we and the believers who lived there,” GWN and “we and the people there.” PHILLIPS

It is quite possible that “we and those of that place” were a significant number. They would have included:

- Eight that came with Paul: Luke, Sopater, Artistarchus, Secundus, Gaius, Timotheus, Tychicus, and Trophimus.
- Those of Philip’s household: Philip and his four daughters, possibly his wife (5-6).
- Possibly certain disciples from Caerea, the home of Philip, who are mentioned later (v 16).

Because we have the extended record of Paul’s travels, we do not have to speculate about whether or not he was in the center of God’s will. The remaining seven chapters of Acts put down any arguments that he was out of God’s will.

This could very well have been a cluster of people exceeding twenty in number. They were in one accord in their desires for Paul. They were not contradicting Agabus, but interpreted what the prophet had said to be an admonition from heaven not to go to Jerusalem. However, both Paul’s response and the events that followed confirm that this was not a proper assessment, even though it was a conscientious one.

Solomon said, “Where no counsel is, the people fall: but in the multitude of counselors there is safety ” (Prov 11:14). And again, “Without counsel purposes are disappointed: but in the multitude of counselors they are established ” (Prov 15:22). And yet again, “For by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war: and in multitude of counselors there is safety” (Prov 24:6). However, this is not true in the Spirit. It is a rule that applies to the order of flesh, and where no word from God has been given. It did not, nor was it intended to, take Divine direction into consideration, but pertained to areas of doubt, and concerning which a word from God had not been given. At the time of Solomon, the Holy Spirit had not yet been given to the people of God, for Jesus had not yet come, much less been glorified, as Jesus Himself affirmed in John 7:39. With Jesus enthroned in glory, men reconciled to God through Him, and the Holy Spirit dwelling within, the playing field has been altered significantly.

BESOUGHT HIM NOT TO GO UP

“. . . besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.” Other versions read, “pleaded with him,” NKJV “began begging him,” NASB “urged him,” NRSV “made request to him,” BBE “desired him,” DOUAY “called upon him,” YLT “kept begging,” IE and “entreated.” WEYMOUTH

The pleas of the brethren there were strong and extended. They felt that it would be out of order for a man of Paul’s spiritual caliber to walk into such a danger zone. It was their love of the brethren, particularly Paul, that drove their action, not a penchant for law.

Because we have the extended record of Paul’s travels, we do not have to speculate about whether or not he was in the center of God’s will. The remaining seven chapters of Acts put down any arguments that he was out of God’s will. Following this occasion, Paul had at least three visitations from heaven: twice by the Lord Himself, and once by the angel of the Lord. Paul was not rebuked for going to Jerusalem on any of these occasions. Once he was warned of the evil intentions of the Jews at Jerusalem, being told they would not receive Paul’s testimony about Christ (22:17-18). Another time the Lord told him that just as he had testified of Jesus in Jerusalem, so would be do in Rome (23:11). The final time was in the midst of a storm, when an angel told Paul he was to appear before Casesar, and therefore God put the people on the ship in his charge – none of them would die, only the ship would be lost (27:23-24).

Those occasions should settle the issue of whether or not Paul was in the will of God. Men may haggle about this matter, but there was no confusion in heaven about it, and there ought not to be any on earth. The full record will confirm this to be the case.

A STATEMENT OF READINESS

“ 13 Then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.”

Brethren can confront surface disagreements with honesty and faith. In such a circumstance, the truth will prevail, and the unity it produces will not be interrupted.

Brethren can confront surface disagreements with honesty and faith. In such a circumstance, the truth will prevail, and the unity it produces will not be interrupted. Here was an occasion when the majority, if not all, of the brethren present thought Paul should not go to Jerusalem. Yet, he was determined to go. His answer will reflect both his love for the brethren, and his intention to do the will of God.

WHAT MEAN YE?

“Then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? . . .” Other versions read, “What do you mean by weeping and breaking my heart?” NKJV “What are you doing, weeping and breaking my heart?” NASB “Why are you weeping and breaking my heart?” NIV “What are you doing, weeping and wounding my heart?,” BBE “What do you mean weeping and afflicting my heart?” DOUAY “What do ye, weeping and crushing my heart?” MRD “Why all this weeping? You are breaking my heart!” LIVING “Why are you crying? Why are you making me so sad?” IE and “What do you mean by weeping and breaking my heart like this?” AMPLIFIED

Here is a marvelous commentary on the superiority of faith to intellect and emotion. The pleas of the brethren were heart-wrenching to Paul. They did not understand his resolve and his mission, and it was crushing the manly part of him – a kind of affliction. There is a sense in which a man with spiritual understanding is afflicted when that trait is not found in sufficient quantities in others. Jesus articulated a measure of disappointment when His disciples did not understand what He said. “Are ye also yet without understanding? . . . Do not ye yet understand? . . . Do ye not yet understand? . . . How is it that ye do not understand?” (Mat 15:16-17; 16:9,11). A person who is merely willing to allow others to have differing opinions of a matter is not so afflicted. However, when understanding and assurance are wed together by faith and hope, men can as Paul did, without being factious or hateful.

I AM READY

“ . . . for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.” Other versions read, “For I am ready not only to be bound, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus,” NKJV “I am ready not only to be bound, but also to die in Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus,” NIV “ for I am ready, not only to be a prisoner, but to be put to death at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus,” BBE “For I am ready not only to be bound, but to die also in Jerusalem, for the name of the Lord Jesus,” DOUAY “For I am prepared, not only to be bound, but also to die at Jerusalem, for the name of our Lord Jesus Messiah,” MRD “For I am ready not only to be jailed at Jerusalem, but also to die for the sake of the Lord Jesus,” LIVING “Why are you making me so sad? I am ready to be bound in Jerusalem. I am even ready to die for the name of the Lord Jesus!” IE and “For I hold myself in readiness not only to be arrested and bound and imprisoned at Jerusalem, but also [even] to die for the name of the Lord Jesus.” AMPLIFIED

As used here, the word “ready” means, “readily,” THAYER “ready, or willing to,” FRIBERG “prepared,” UBS “pertaining to a state of readiness - 'ready, prepared,” LOUW-NIDA and “willingly.” LOUW-NIDA This precise Greek word is used in two other texts.

• Of Paul’s readiness to go to Corinth: “Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you” (2 Cor 12:14).

• In Peter’s teaching concerning Jesus’ readiness to judge the living and the dead: “Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead” (1 Pet 4:5).

The use of this word in other tenses are numerous, and include the following.

• In Jesus’ parable of the man who prepared a great wedding-feast for his son: “Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready : come unto the marriage” (Matt 22:4). “Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready , but they which were bidden were not worthy” (Matt 22:8).

• In Jesus exhortation to be ready for His return: “Therefore be ye also ready : for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh” (Matt 24:44).

• In Jesus’ parable of the ten virgins: “And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut” (Matt 25:10).

• In Paul’s exhortation for the Corinthians to prepare the offering for the poor saints in Jerusalem: “Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up before hand your bounty, whereof ye had notice before, that the same might be ready , as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness” (2 Cor 9:5).

• In Paul’s admonition concerning be prepared for every good work: “Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work” (Titus 3:1).

• In Peter’s word concerning the salvation that is read to be revealed: “Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time” (1 Pet 1:5).

• In Peter’s exhortation concerning being prepared to give an answer for the hope that is possessed: “But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear” (1 Pet 3:15).

In English the word “ready” means, “in a state of mental and physical fitness for some experience or action (ready to leave at a moment’s notice.” Synonyms are, “prepared, set, and willing.” Related words are “adjusted, qualified, and primed.” Idioms assigned to this word are “all ready, all set.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

This, then, is a strong word. Paul is not philosophizing – like saying, “Here is what I think,” or “In my opinion.” When you examine the things for which he was ready, prepared, and willing, the gravity of his words becomes more apparent.

- Ready “to be bound” in Jerusalem.
- Ready “also to die at Jerusalem.”

And precisely how does a person prepare for being bound and imprisoned, or for dying in martyrdom? I do not doubt that some people find it most difficult to think of either situation. It is simply too difficult for them to consider such things. Frankly, this is because they are living close to this present evil world, and are not as aware of the world to come as they could be.

When you get right down to it, the same grace that equips you to live, also prepares you for persecution, and even death. The same spiritual understanding required to live acceptably also applies to going through times of trial, and dying as well. All of this is bound up in the saying, "For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's. For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living" (Rom 14:8-9).

This is the real genius of living by faith, and unto the Lord. It equips you for receiving the blessing of God when it comes your way, facing the hostility of foes, and even the last enemy of death, which is death, and everything between as well.

From this perspective, those who immerse us in the affairs of this life have put us at a great disadvantage. Those who major on human experience or the correction of deviant conduct are, in a sense, robbers who are plundering the church of God.

Living by faith and walking in the Spirit are wholly sufficient to address these matters, and do so effectively and efficiently. That is how Paul lived, and that is why he was ready.

THE WILL OF THE LORD BE DONE

" 14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done."

Here is a classic example of brethren temporarily in disagreement, yet not divided. This is because both parties considered the will of God to be the preeminent will.

HE WOULD NOT BE PERSUADED

"And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased . . ." Other versions read, "would not be persuaded, we fell silent," NASB "would not be dissuaded, we gave up" NIV "might not be moved, we did no more," BBE "would not be dissuaded we let the matter rest," NAB "would not yield to our appeal, we stopped begging him," WILLIAMS and "would not yield to [our] persuading, we stopped [urging and imploring him]." AMPLIFIED

The unlearned might conclude from this text that Paul was stubborn. However, this is not a fair representation of the text. He was rather determined, being convinced that this was what God was leading him to do. Further, his life attests that he did not live in a state of always seeking his own will. He spoke the truth when he said, "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me" (Gal 2:20).

The brethren were thinking of his safety, and therefore sought to turn him from going to Jerusalem. However, they too were living for the Lord. Upon seeing the resolution of Paul, they stopped pleading with him. It was not that they simply saw there was no use in going any further. The next clause confirms that their thinking was on a higher level.

THE WILL OF THE LORD BE DONE

" . . . saying, The will of the Lord be done." Other versions read, "The Lord's will be done," NIV "Let the purpose of God be done," BBE "Let the pleasure of our Lord take place," MRD "the will of the Lord be fulfilled," PNT "We pray that what the Lord wants will be done," IE "Lord, please make us willing to do what you want," CEV "It's in God's hands now," and we said. 'Master, you handle

it.” MESSAGE

What did they mean by this statement? It appears to me that this is in perfect accord with the manner in which the Savior Himself taught men to pray. “Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven” (Matt 6:10). It is how Jesus prayed on the night of His betrayal: “O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done” (Matt 26:42). In fact, some versions of Scripture represent this as a prayer, not simply a phrase expressed to Paul. IE / CEV

“The will of the Lord” has to do with His purpose, intentions, and aims. It assumes a kind of spiritual template over everything man does. And reflects what God is purposefully doing, not what man wants to do. Right here there are two contradicting philosophies afoot in the Christian world.

- That God is present to assist man in what he determines to do.
- That man is here to join God in what He has purposed to do.

Is it really a minor matter for men to think God is pledged to assist them in the fulfillment of their own dreams or purposes? I am rather of the opinion that such a teaching is a form of idolatry, not of insight into the nature and focus of the Almighty. Here we are touching on a matter of revelation. It is written: “For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them” (Eph 2:9-10).

This is something that concerns salvation: HOW and WHY we are saved. Salvation involves a “new creation” (2 Cor 5:17; Gal 6:15). This new creation is in order that men might walk in works God has ordained – not in dreams they have dreamed, or in purposes they have conceived. In Christ men are delivered from self-centeredness, not solidified in it. They present their bodies – not their dreams – to God as a living sacrifice, doing so in order that they might “discern what is the will of God--what is good and acceptable and perfect” NRSV (Rom 12:1-2)

In Christ Jesus, men are not soliciting God to help them meet their objectives, but God is employing them to fulfill his aims. These saints were not asking God to support Paul in his plans, but to work out through Paul what He had purposed.

Admittedly, this kind of thinking is at variance with a considerable percentage of contemporary preaching and teaching. That is because of the wrongness of much of the current preaching and teaching of reference. It, in the very best sense, is off-center. Because of that, it is leading men away from glory, not to it. I realize that is a most serious allegation, but it is because this circumstance has eternal ramifications.

The disciples that are referenced in this text had a grasp of what was driving all valid activities in the Kingdom. It was not the determined will of its citizens, but the firm and unchanging will and purpose of God. That is what they wanted to be done. Now that Paul, a righteous man, had been so resolute in his determination to go to Jerusalem, the brethren were more prone to think of his trip in light of the will of God. Had he not been noted for being righteous and self-sacrificing, they would not have thought in this way.

A WORD ABOUT RESOLUTENESS

It is in order to say a few words about resoluteness – as compared with inconsistency, vacillation, and hesitation. While there are times when we are cast on the horns of a dilemma, and do not know what to do, that is not a good state in which to remain. We have several examples in Scripture of holy men who called upon the people to make the right decision.

- Moses called upon the people to make a decision, and to do it right away: “I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live” (Deut 30:19).

- After entering the promised land, Joshua called the people to make an immediate choice, and to do it that very day: “And if it seem evil unto you to serve the LORD, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the LORD” (Josh 24:15).

- Elijah once asked some wavering Israelites to make an immediate decision: “How long halt ye between two opinions? if the LORD be God, follow Him: but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word” (1 Kgs 18:21). He also called for an immediate decision.

In my judgment, we could do with a revival of this kind of holy pressure. We should not be content for the worldly to be the only ones that press people for a decision. This is particularly true in the light of the times, which contain all kinds of indicators that we are on the verge of some great epoch.

ADDITIONAL BRETHERN JOIN THEM IN THE TRIP TO JERUSALEM

“ 15 And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem. 16 There went with us also certain of the disciples of Caesarea, and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge.”

There is a rather simplistic view of traveling that is taken by some. They are of the persuasion that no preparations are necessary – that they should simply trust the Lord to provide what they need along the way. However, this is too simplistic for thinking people to embrace.

As they continue the trip to Jerusalem, the number of those traveling with Paul continues to increase. This confirms that some confidence had been experienced by those in Caesarea following the response of Paul to their pleas to change his mind about going to Jerusalem. If Paul had said nothing, or if the subject had been left up in the air, so to speak, I doubt that some would have decided to join Paul and those with him.

WE WENT TO JERUSALEM

“And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem . . .” Other versions read, “we packed,” NKJV “we got ready,” NASB “we made ready,” NRSV “took up our baggage,” ASV “having got our effects ready,” DARBY “we trussed up our fardels [bundle, or bale of goods MERRIAM-WEBSTER],” GENEVA “we prepared ourselves,” MRD “we made preparations for our journey,” NAB “we packed our things,” NLT “took up our furniture,” WEB “having taken our vessels,” YLT and “we loaded our baggage-cattle” WEYMOUTH

The word “carriages” is translated from a word that means, “to carry off one's personal property or provide for its carrying away,” THAYER and “pack up and leave.” FRIBERG Webster's Bible refers to taking up “furniture.” This is based on one of the meanings of the Greek word employed here (avposkeuasa,menoi): “to remove furniture, to strip of furniture.” LEH I doubt that this is the meaning in this text. The reference possibly means refers to loading their baggage on beasts of burden to take it to the ship. ROBERTSON Whatever the technical meaning of the word may be, the intention is to report that they prepared for travel, in some way packing what they were taking with them.

Something to Consider

There is a rather simplistic view of traveling that is taken by some. They are of the persuasion that no preparations are necessary – that they should simply trust the Lord to provide what they need along the way. However, this is too simplistic for thinking people to embrace.

Early in His ministry, Jesus sent “the twelve” out with instructions not to take anything with them. “Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves: for the workman is worthy of his meat” (Matt 10:10). Mark reports, “And commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, save a staff only; no scrip, no bread, no money in their purse; but be shod with sandals; and not put on two coats” (Mark 6:8-9). Luke records, “And he said unto them, Take nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats apiece” (Luke 9:3). Luke also records the same instructions given to the seventy, whom Jesus sent out: “Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes: and salute no man by the way” (Luke 10:4).

Some, seizing upon these texts, affirm that this is still the way in which laborers are to set out in the work of the Lord. This, however, is not the case, for the playing field has changed. On the night of His betrayal, Jesus prepared His disciples for a differing set of circumstances. “When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, Nothing. Then said He unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one. For I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in Me, And He was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning Me have an end” (Luke 22:37).

The word concerning the “sword” was not a call to arms, for Jesus was not assembling an earthly army (John 18:36). Rather, it was to alert them to the hostility they now would confront. We know this is the case because later, in the garden, Peter drew his sword, only to hear Jesus say, “Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword” (Matt 26:52).

When Jesus ascended into heaven, Satan was cast out (Lk 10:18; Rev 12:7-9). However, he did not enter into a state of inactivity. In fact, those who are in the world are solemnly told, “Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time” (Rev 12:12). Now Satan is making war “with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ” (Rev 12:17).

That is why these laborers make preparations when they travel. They are no longer in a kind of safety zone, as the disciples were when Jesus was with them in the flesh. At that time, no one attacked the disciples, or sought to do them harm. The powers of darkness were held at bay while they became familiar with the mind and will of the Lord. But that is not the case now. While God’s people are being kept from falling (Jude 1:24-25), the devil is stalking about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour (1 Pet 5:7-8). The followers of Jesus do well to keep that in mind, and do nothing that may be seen from heaven as tempting the Lord their God (Matt 4:7).

CERTAIN DISCIPLES

“ . . . There went with us also certain of the disciples of Caesarea . . .” Other versions read, “some of the disciples . . . came with us.” NASB

In Paul’s travels, there were frequently believers who joined him along the way. On this particular trip, seven disciples joined him. Earlier, when he was in Asia, Timothy joined them (Acts 16:1-3). When he left Corinth, Aquila and Priscilla joined him (Acts 18:18). Now certain disciples from Caesarea join him.

All of this confirms the common interest brethren had in the work of the Lord. It also makes known something of the spirit of Paul, who was willing to travel with other brethren. Much of this kind of spirit has been removed by sectarian interests, thereby confirming how evil they are. The real work of the Lord is always attractive to the real people of God.

This entourage was probably of considerable size, possibly numbering as much as twenty or more. What a holy concourse of brethren it was, and what fellowship they must have had along the way. It is always “good and pleasant” for brethren to be together (Psa 133:1-3).

AN OLD DISCIPLE

“ . . . and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge.” Other versions read, “bringing with them one Mnason,” ASV “brought with them a certain Mnason,” NKJV “taking us to Mnason,” NASB “brought us to the home of Mnason,” NIV “taking a certain Mnason,” BBE “bringing with them him with whom we may lodge, a certain Mnason,” YLT and “conducting us to the house of Mnason.” AMPLIFIED

Two differing views of the text are presented in the various translations.

- That Mnason went with them from Caesarea to Jerusalem, where he had a home.
- That the group traveled without Mnason to Jerusalem, bringing Paul and company to his home in Jerusalem.

What We Know About Mnason

- He, like Barnabas, was originally from the country of Cyprus (Acts 4:35; 21:16).
- He was an old disciple, probably both in the length of his discipleship as well as his age.
- He had a dwelling in Jerusalem in which the traveling company would reside while there.

It is not unreasonable to think of a man from Cyprus having a home in Jerusalem – particularly in view of the commencement of the church there, and its centrality in the lives of those early believers. Mnason could very well have come down from Jerusalem to Caesarea to meet Paul, possibly traveling with Agabus. In this case, it is not unreasonable to consider him to have returned to Jerusalem with the travelers, taking them to his own home, where the travelers would be residing. I therefore take the text as it stands in the KJV. All of the older versions represent the situation in this manner also (Darby, 1884 Douay-Rheims, 1899 English Revised, 1885 Geneva, 1599 James Murdock, 1852 Bishop’s, 1595 Revised Webster, 1833 Tyndale 1534 Wycliffe, 1382 Young’s Literal. 1862) Some more modern versions do the same (ASV, 1901 BBE 1949).

Here was an older disciples still serving the Lord – still maintaining an interest in the work of the Kingdom – still practicing hospitality with love. There are some things age cannot take from you.

We gather from this text that the home of Mnason was of impressive size, adequate to house such a group. Philemon seems to have owned a similar dwelling (Phile 1:2), and Philip the evangelist as well (Acts 21:8). Others whose homes were given to frequent gatherings included Aquila and Priscilla (Rom 16:3-5; 1 Cor 16:19), and Nymphas (Col 4:15). Gaius, to whom John wrote, was also noted for opening his home to travelers (3 John 1:5-8). Lydia also brought Paul and those with him into her house, where they remained for a while (Acts 16:15-16).

Behold how the early disciples practiced hospitality. If they were blessed to have more than enough, they shared it with the household of faith. In the case of Mnason, he was apparently known for his gracious entertainment of the people of God, and had been designated, or perhaps volunteered, for this large group of people to dwell in his house during their stay in Jerusalem. I assume that this included feeding them as well as providing comfortable accommodations. If you have ever been the recipient of hospitality in the name of the Lord, you know of the grace that is ministered to the saints through such brotherly consideration.

It is apparent to me that the carrying forth of the work of the Lord involves the practice of godly hospitality (3 John 1:5-8). It is therefore of great concern that this is such a rare trait among the Christians of our times. By the grace of God, there are still brethren noted for this practice, but it is growing more and more rare.

THE BRETHREN RECEIVED THEM GLADLY

“ 17 And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us gladly.”

As is customary in Scriptural accounts, details are provided only as they serve to clarify the event, or provide insight into the manner of Divine workings. If a matter is in the record, there is a sense in which it is not incidental. Something is contained in the words that will have a calculated effect upon the heart when duly heeded and perceived.

WHEN WE WERE COME TO JERUSALEM

“And when we were come to Jerusalem . . .” Other versions read, “arrived in Jerusalem,” NIV and “reached Jerusalem.” CSB

When you consider the aggression of the devil, arriving in Jerusalem is seen in a whole new light. Satan has launched an aggressive campaign against those who “keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ” (Rev 12:17). His initiative is of such magnitude that heaven warns, “Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time” (Rev 12:12). Those in Christ are candidly told, “Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pet 5:8). Those who are spiritually sleepy, lacking spiritual alertness are told, “But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ” (2 Cor 11:3).

These warnings are issued to all of the people of God in general. But what of those who are involved in Kingdom initiatives? What of those who are “laborers together with God” (1 Cor 3:9), and are invading territories over which the powers of Satan have long dominated?

Once Paul wrote of some significant delays caused by the wicked one. “Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered us ” (1 Thess 2:18). Another time, when Paul was engaged in the work of the Lord, the assaults were so vicious that Paul despaired of life. “For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life: But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead” (2 Cor 1:8-9).

Who can forget the arresting description Paul gave of experiences that took place during some of his travels: “. . . thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep . . . In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren” (2 Cor 11:26).

Thus, in spite of Satan’s hindering influences, the full group arrived in Jerusalem. This occurred even though Satan is described as “having great wrath, because he knoweth he hath but a short time” (Rev 12:12). It took place even though, as an adversary, he “as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pet 5:8). Even though he has many “devices” (1 Cor 2:11), the devil could not stop them. That is a perspective of safety and holy accomplishments that must be brought into our thinking, because “safety is of the Lord” (Prov 21:31).

THE BRETHREN RECEIVED US GLADLY

“ . . . the brethren received us gladly.” Other versions read, “received us warmly,” NIV “were pleased to see us,” BBE “received is joyfully,” MRD “gave us a very warm welcome,” NJB “welcomed us cordially,” LIVING “were very happy to see us,” IE “have us a hearty welcome,” WEYMOUTH “received and welcomed us gladly,” AMPLIFIED and “received us willfully.” WYCLIFFE

The word “gladly” is translated from a word that means “with joy, gladly,” THAYER “warmly,” UBS “pertaining to experiencing happiness, implying ready and willing acceptance - 'happily, gladly,” LOUW-NIDA and “readily.” LEH This is a large word, encompassing quite a few attitudes, and reflecting a sense of values as well. This is not the description of a mere formal greeting, nor does it involve the ordinary perception of politeness. The lives of the brethren at Jerusalem were such as prepared them to receive brethren of the caliber of Paul and his companions. That alone is a most arresting circumstance. There is such a thing as living so you are never prepared to confront and receive godly people. Some people live in such a manner that any exposure to spiritual people is like an intrusion into their lives. This, of course, is an evidence of a deficiency in a love for the brethren – one of the distinguishing marks of the real followers of Jesus (John 13:35; 1 John 3:14).

If it seems unusual to find this blessed trait in one person, here is an entire body of people in whom it was found. Keep in mind that the church at Jerusalem was no small assembly. During this very occasion, James will draw attention to “thousands of Jews . . . which believe,” that were present in Jerusalem at that time (Acts 21:20). Many of the people were no doubt from other places, assembled in Jerusalem for the occasion. Yet, we have every reason to believe that the regular assembly there was of considerable size.

Yet these brethren in Jerusalem had a transcendent unity. During the beginning years of these brethren, it is said that “the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul” (Acts 4:32). Now, several years later, this same spirit is evinced in the hearty welcoming of Paul and company. The brethren in Jerusalem were glad to see them, and received them discerningly as well as lovingly.

The Focus of These Brethren

Keep in mind that the context in which these brethren were recognized and received was that of preaching and teaching the Word. The ministry of Paul, and, consequently, of those who traveled with him, was not that of philanthropy – although I do not doubt that they were considerate in meeting the needs of others. However, they were noted for both the fact and substance of what they taught.

I have noted over the years the relative unimportance that the Christian community attaches to preaching and teaching. Commendable church leaders are rarely noted for what they say. When those who are enamored of them speak about them, it is generally about some impressive thing they have done – not what they have said, or are, saying. Perhaps they have taken a congregation of fifty, and built it to several thousand. Maybe they have provided a safe haven for the poor, or have assembled the young who were meandering throughout the streets into a common place, where entertainment and wholesome pleasure could be enjoyed. There is certainly nothing wrong with such things – but they are not where the accent should be placed. When it comes to what the church actually does, it is primarily “the pillar and ground of the truth” (1 Tim 3:15) – and “the truth” is always associated with words, and with speaking. Every other ministry it performs is within that context. This should not surprise us, for it is the way the Lord Jesus Himself conducted His ministry. He was a miracle worker, to be sure, but He was primarily a Teacher – “Rabbi” (John 1:38,49; 3:2; 6:25; Matt 5:2; 7:29; 13:54; Mk 1:21; -22; 2:13; 4:2; Mk 9:31; 10:1; 11:17; 12:35). It is said of Him, “And He taught daily in the temple” (Luke 19:47). “When Jesus Himself summarized His activity He said, “I was daily with you in the temple teaching” (Mark 14:49; Lk 22:53). This is not the only thing He did, but it was the main thing He did – the hub, so to speak, of his total activity! The same was true of our blessed Lord, who was fundamentally noted as a teacher, or “Rabbi.” The church must not allow this perspective to be clouded by developing other priorities. Such priorities, should the church decide to embrace them, will turn them from God.

The report that Paul will give is within the context of teaching, and the results that came from it. That is the means through which the Lord worked.

PAUL GOES IN TO JAMES

“ 18 And the day following Paul went in with us unto James; and all the elders were present.”

The entire group now goes in to James. This gather was also with “all the elders.” They come to report the working of the Lord through them. Anyone who is actually doing the work of the Lord is not ashamed to report their activity to notable spiritual leaders.

PAUL WENT IN WITH US UNTO JAMES

“And the day following Paul went in with us unto James . . .” Other versions read, “Paul and the rest of us went in to see James,” NIV “went in to visit James,” NRSV “Paul accompanied us on a visit to James,” NAB “to meet with James,” NLT “Paul took us with him to meet with James,” LIVING and “we went with Paul to call on James.” WEYMOUTH

This is not the brother of John, who was martyred by Herod several years prior to the time of this text (Acts 12:1-2). We understand this to be “James the Lord’s brother” (Gal 1:19). He was one of several brothers to Jesus – technically half-brothers, for Joseph was their father. The multitudes called Jesus their brother, not believing the father of Jesus was God Himself. “Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us? And they were offended at him” (Mark 6:3). Matthew reads, “Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us? And they were offended at him” (Mark 6:3). Luke writes that the people said of Jesus, “And all bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And they said, Is not this Joseph's son?” (Luke 4:22). Thus, the people assessed Jesus to be:

- The carpenter
- The son of a carpenter
- The brother of James, Joses, Juda, and Simon.
- The son of Mary.
- One who had sisters.
- Joseph’s son.

Neither James (the author of the book of James) nor Jude ever referred to themselves as the Lord’s brother. This is because the relationship they maintained to Jesus was higher than any earthly kinship.

It is interesting to note that the doctrine of Scripture never refers to Jesus as the “Son of Mary.” Rather, it refers to Mary as His “mother” (Matt 1:18; 2:11,13,14,20,21; 16:16; Lk 1:60; 2:33-34; Acts 1:14). As for Jesus, He is declared to be “the Son of God” (Matt 14:33; Mk 1:1; John 1:34,39; Acts 8:37; 9:20; Rom 1:4; 2 Cor 1:12; Gal 2:20; Eph 4:13; Heb 4:14; 6:6; 7:3; 10:29; 1 John 3:8; 4:15; 5:5,10,12,13,20; Rev 2:18).

As for Jesus' brothers, they did not believe on Him in the beginning, even though they knew that He was doing many mighty works. As it is written, "His brethren therefore said unto him, Depart hence, and go into Judaea, that Thy disciples also may see the works that Thou doest. For there is no man that doeth any thing in secret, and he himself seeketh to be known openly. If Thou do these things, show thyself to the world. For neither did His brethren believe in Him " (John 7:3-5). At the time, they were not among His "disciples."

However, there came a time when they did believe on Him. We do not know precisely when this occurred. It is quite possible that Jesus was speaking of his half-brothers when he told the women, "Be not afraid: go tell My brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see Me" (Matt 28:10). And again to Mary Magdalene before that occasion, " go to My brethren , and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God" (John 20:17).

We do know that following the ascension of Jesus, they were among those who were praying and waiting for the promise of the Father: "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren" (Acts 1:14).

Paul refers to the brethren of Jesus as being among those who were traveling about, declaring the Gospel: "Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord , and Cephas?" (1 Cor 9:5). It is also the consensus of Bible scholars that the author of the book of Jude was one of these brothers, referred to as "Juda" in Mark 6:3. "Judah, Judas, Juda, and Jude are all forms of the same name. The "Jude" who wrote the epistle of Jude refers to himself as "the brother of James." Neither James (the author of the book of James) nor Jude ever referred to themselves as the Lord's brother. This is because the relationship they maintained to Jesus was higher than any earthly kinship.

JAMES

James is mentioned at least nine times in Scripture. The manner in which He is mentioned confirms that he was a key figure in the church at Jerusalem.

Some notable commentators feel that James the Lord's brother was also an apostle – "James the Less" (Matt 15:40), also called "James the son of Alphaeus" (Matt 10:2). However, this cannot be, for the text that states his brethren did not yet believe on Him took place after the feeding of the 5,000 – and the twelve apostles had been chosen some time before that (John 6 and 7 with Matt 10:2-4). Matthew records the choosing of the apostles in the tenth chapter of his Gospel, and the feeding of the 5,000 in the fourteenth chapter. Thus James the Lord's brother cannot be one of the twelve apostles as some allege.

James is mentioned at least nine times in Scripture. The manner in which He is mentioned confirms that he was a key figure in the church at Jerusalem.

- When Peter was delivered from prison, and had reported to those who were praying for him at the home of Mary, he told them "Go and show these things to James, and to the brethren" (Acts 12:17).
- It was James who weighed the report of certain men teaching that Gentiles had to be circumcised after the manner of Moses. He then recommended the manner in which that crisis should be addressed, which recommendation was received (Acts 15:13-22).
- Our text, in which Paul and those with him went in to speak to James (Acts 21:18).
- Paul says there was a special appearance of the resurrected Christ to James (1 Cor 15:7).

- Paul conversed with James, the only other apostle with whom he consulted being Peter (Gal 1:18-19).
- James, together with Peter and John, were considered to be "pillars" in Jerusalem
- When Peter was in Antioch with Paul, James sent several brethren from Jerusalem to be with them (Gal 2:12).
- In his epistle, James refers to himself as "a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ" (James 1:1).
- Jude, in writing his epistle, refers to himself as "the brother of James" (Jude 1:1).

This visit is not specified in any other writings. In his letter to the Galatians, Paul mentions going to Jerusalem two times. The first was three years after his conversion (Gal 1:18). Then, it was to see Peter, who is not said to have been at the meeting of our text. The second was fourteen years after his conversion, when he returned with Barnabas to Jerusalem, also taking Titus with him (Gal 2:1-2). Paul had long been separated from Barnabas at the time of our text, and Timothy was with him, not Titus.

HOLY CONCLAVES

This is another one of the holy conclaves, or private gatherings, in which weighty matters were considered. There are several such meetings recorded in the book of Acts and the epistles.

- At the choosing of a replacement for Judas (Acts 1:15-26).
- When Peter reported what had taken place at the house of Cornelius (Acts 11:1-18).
- When they gathered with Paul and Barnabas, and several from Antioch, to consider the matter of circumcision (Acts 15:4-30).
- When Paul and Barnabas rehearsed their work among the Gentiles to the church in Antioch (Acts 14:26-27). Peter was also at this meeting, together with several sent by James from Jerusalem (Gal 2:11-14).
- Fourteen years after his conversion, when Paul and Barnabas went up to Jerusalem to report the working of the Lord among the Gentiles (Gal 2:1-10).

There was a fellowship that existed in the early church that has become strange and unusual in our day. The intrusion of sectarianism has robbed the church-at-large of the sweetness of this kind of profitable fellowship.

ALL THE ELDERS WERE PRESENT

" . . . and all the elders were present." Other versions read, "all the rulers," BBE "all the elders came there," DARBY "all the ancients were assembled," DOUAY "all the spiritual leaders were present," GWN "all the presbyters were present," NAB "all the elders of the Jerusalem church were present," NLT "all the elders came together," PNT "all the elders also came." YLT

Elders may have been aged, but not necessarily so. They were men who were mature in the faith, being able to labor in and handle the Word profitably. The following are some of the activities associated with being an elder.

- Feeding the flock of God (1 Pet 5:2).
- Willingly taking the oversight of the flock (1 Pet 5:2).
- Ruling in Kingdom matters (Heb 13:7,17,24).
- Speaking the Word of God (Heb 13:7).

- Living a life of faith that can be followed (Heb 13:7).
- Able to convince the gainsayers (Tit 1:9).
- Labor in the Word and doctrine (1 Tim 5:17).
- Setting apart Kingdom laborers (1 Tim 4:14).

We do not have any idea of the number of elders that were in the Jerusalem church. However, they are frequently mentioned, particularly in the book of Acts.

- The early collection gathered for the poor saints at Jerusalem was delivered to the elders there by Paul and Silas (Acts 11:30).
- The apostles and elders came together to consider the matter of circumcision (Acts 15:2,4,6).
- The resolution put forward by James during that meeting pleased the apostles and elders (Acts 15:22).
- A letter was prepared for the Gentile churches to correct misconceptions of circumcision, and establish certain matters of conduct. This was sent by the apostles and elders (Acts 15:23).
- The decree that was written was ordained by the apostles and elders in Jerusalem (Acts 16:4).

The unusual qualifications of these men are seen in the fact that they joined with the apostles in making critical decisions.

Now, at the presence of Paul, all of the elders are present. No apostle is mentioned in relation to this visit to Jerusalem. The words “apostle” and “apostles” do not appear in the book of Acts after chapter sixteen (from Acts 16:4 through the end of chapter 28). Prior to that (1:1-16:2), they are mentioned thirty times. The last mentioning of Peter (“Peter,” ”Cephas,” or “Simon”) in the book of Acts is found in Acts 15:7. The last direct mention of the apostle John in this book is found in Acts 8:14. He is mentioned indirectly as James’ brother in Acts 12:2. With the exception of Peter, James, and John, the other nine apostles are mentioned a single time in the book of Acts (Acts 1:13). None of the other apostles (with the solitary exception of Matthias; Acts 1:23,26) are mentioned by name after Acts 1:13 (Andrew, Philip, Thomas, Bartholomew, Matthew, James the son of Alphaeus, Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James).

Peter is mentioned twelve times from Romans through the Revelation (1 Cor 1:12; 3:22; 9:5; 15:5; Gal 1:18; 2:7,8,9,11,14; 1 Pet 1:1; 2 Pet 1:1). John is mentioned six times from Romans through Revelation (Gal 2:9; Rev 1:1; 4,9; 21:2; 22:8). By way of comparison, Paul (“Paul” or “ Saul”) is mentioned one hundred and forty-six times in the book of Acts, and twenty-nine times from Romans through Second Peter.

We know from church history that the other apostles traveled throughout the world, preaching the Gospel and reaping the harvest. Records from church history indicate the following.

And what does all of this mean? Simply this: the emphasis was being placed on the Gentile church, and the preaching and activities of Paul. Prior to that, the emphasis was placed on the Jews, and on the church in Jerusalem. This by no means suggests that the twelve apostles and the church in Jerusalem were no longer significant – and no inspired person ever thought that was the case. Notwithstanding, it does appear to amplify somewhat on Jesus’ words prior to His death: “Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord” (Mat 23:39). Under ordinary circumstances, it might appear as though this would mean the dissolution of the church that was centered in Jerusalem for several years. However, in order to thwart any intentions of the evil one in this matter, the Lord raised up an apostle for the Gentiles, and established several strong churches to carry on the work. Thus the work continued.

We know from church history that the other apostles traveled throughout the world, preaching the Gospel and reaping the harvest. Records from church history indicate the following.

HISTORY ON THE APOSTLES AND KEY MEN

Most of our information about the deaths of the apostles is derived from early church traditions. While tradition is unreliable as to small details, it very seldom contains outright inventions. Eusebius, the most important of the early church historians wrote his history of the early church in A.D. 325. He wrote, "The apostles and disciples of the Savior scattered over the whole world, preached the Gospel everywhere." The Church historian Schumacher researched the lives of the apostles and recounted the history of their martyrdoms.

Matthew suffered martyrdom in Ethiopia, killed by a sword wound.

John faced martyrdom when he was boiled in a huge basin of boiling oil during a wave of persecution in Rome. However, he was miraculously delivered from death. John was then sentenced to the mines on the prison island of Patmos. He wrote his prophetic Book of Revelation on Patmos. The apostle John was later freed and returned to serve as Bishop of Edessa in modern Turkey. He died as an old man, the only apostle to die peacefully.

Peter was crucified upside down on an x-shaped cross, according to church tradition because he told his tormentors that he felt unworthy to die in the same way that Jesus Christ had died.

James the Greater, a son of Zebedee, was a fisherman by trade when Jesus called him to a lifetime of ministry. As a strong leader of the church, James was ultimately beheaded at Jerusalem. The Roman officer who guarded James watched amazed as James defended his faith at his trial. Later, the officer walked beside James to the place of execution. Overcome by conviction, he declared his new faith to the judge and knelt beside James to accept beheading as a Christian.

Bartholomew, also known as Nathanael, was a missionary to Asia. He witnessed to our Lord in present day Turkey. Bartholomew was martyred for his preaching in Armenia when he was flayed to death by a whip.

Thaddaeus may have preached in Assyria (eastern Iraq) and Persia (Iran), before joining with Simon the Zealot and being killed with him in Persia.

Andrew was crucified on an x-shaped cross in Patras, Greece. After being whipped severely by seven soldiers they tied his body to the cross with cords to prolong his agony. His followers reported that, when he was led toward the cross, Andrew saluted it in these words: "I have long desired and expected this happy hour. The cross has been consecrated by the body of Christ hanging on it." He continued to preach to his tormentors for two days until he expired.

Thomas was stabbed with a spear in India during one of his missionary trips to establish the church in the subcontinent. Thomas may have laboured for the Gospel in Parthia (including modern Iraq and Iran), but stronger traditions link him with southern India. Indian Christians from the west coast Kerala area claim they were evangelized by Thomas, who was later speared to death near Madras on the east coast. Mount St. Thomas, close to Madras is associated with his name.

Matthias , the apostle chosen to replace the traitor Judas Iscariot, was stoned and then beheaded. He may have preached and been martyred in Ethiopia, Other traditions place him in Judea, and later Cappadocia (eastern Turkey) and the Caspian Sea area.

Simon is referred to both as the "Cananaean" and the "Zealot". The titles may refer to him being "zealous", or to his membership of one of the Jewish revolutionary movements known as Zealots. Nothing else is known about him. One tradition is that he first preached in Egypt, before joining Jude and travelling to Persia, where both were martyred. Simon may have been crucified or hacked to death.

The apostle Paul was tortured and then beheaded by the evil Emperor Nero at Rome in A.D. 67. Paul endured a lengthy imprisonment which allowed him to write his many epistles to the churches he had formed throughout the Roman Empire. These letters, which taught many of the foundational doctrines of Christianity, form a large portion of the New Testament.

Mark died in Alexandria, Egypt, after being dragged by horses through the streets until he was dead.

Luke was hanged in Greece as a result of his tremendous preaching to the lost.

James the Just, the leader of the church in Jerusalem, was thrown over a hundred feet down from the southeast pinnacle of the Temple when he refused to deny his faith in Christ. When they discovered that he survived the fall, his enemies beat James to death with a fuller's club. This was the same pinnacle where Satan had taken Jesus during the Temptation.

Barnabas , one of the group of seventy disciples, wrote the Epistle of Barnabas. He preached throughout Italy and Cyprus. Barnabas was stoned to death at Salonica.

Jude , the brother of Jesus, was killed with arrows when he refused to deny his faith in Christ.

The details of the martyrdoms of the disciples and apostles are found in traditional early church sources. These traditions were recounted in the writings of the church fathers and the first official church history written by the historian Eusebius in A.D. 325. Although we cannot at this time verify every detail historically, the universal belief of the early Christian writers was that each of the apostles had faced martyrdom faithfully without denying their faith in the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth " (Rev 14:13).

PAUL DECLARES WHAT GOD HAD DONE BY HIS MINISTRY

“ 19 And when he had saluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry.”

Having met with James and the elders from Jerusalem, Paul recounts the working of God through his ministry. In this manner, the Lord will receive glory, and the saints refreshment.

Having met with James and the elders from Jerusalem, Paul recounts the working of God through his ministry. In this manner, the Lord will receive glory, and the saints refreshment. He will draw attention to what God is doing.

WHEN HE HAD SALUTED THEM

“And when he had saluted them . . .” Other versions read, “greeted them,” NASB “said how glad he was to see them,” BBE and “when he had embraced them.” GENEVA As noted in some previous texts, the word “salute” involves the whole person: spirit, soul, and body. There is the embrace bodily, the affection of the soul, and the respect of the spirit. There is esteem in saluting someone, an affinity with them, and a profound spiritual attraction to them. This is the outworking of the love of the brethren (1 Pet 1:22), preferring one another (Rom 12:10), and highly esteeming others better than self (Phil 2:3).

HE DECLARED PARTICULARLY

“ . . . he declared particularly . . .” Other versions read , “in detail,” NKJV “one by one,” NASB and “a detailed account.” BBE Paul did not simply provide a general overview of what the Lord had done through him, but furnished such details as would promote the glory of God.

WHAT THE LORD HAD WROUGHT

“ . . . what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry.” Other versions read, “which God had done,” NKJV and “God had accomplished.” NAB

With care, Paul related what the Lord had done, not what he had done. The works were through him, but not by him. Thus he gave substance to the doctrinal declaration, “For of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen” (Rom 11:36).

These days there is an approach to gatherings that is less and less associated with a testimony of the working of the Lord. There is a fast developing notion that singing together is the preferred mode of communication. As much profit as there is in such activity, when done with grace in the heart unto the Lord (Col 3:16), gatherings of the saints should include a rehearsal of the wonderful works of God .

In Deborah’s prophetic song, she spoke of the benefit of declaring the mighty acts of the Lord. “They that are delivered from the noise of archers in the places of drawing water, there shall they rehearse the righteous acts of the LORD , even the righteous acts toward the inhabitants of his villages in Israel: then shall the people of the LORD go down to the gates” (Judg 5:11).

Samuel also did this when he said to Israel, “Now therefore stand still, that I may reason with you before the LORD of all the righteous acts of the LORD, which he did to you and to your fathers” (1 Sam 12:7).

David wrote, “They shall abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness, and shall sing of thy righteousness” (Psa 145:7). He also affirmed, “I will meditate also of all thy work, and talk of thy doings” (Psa 77:12).

So it is that Paul, in keeping with people of faith throughout the ages, will declare what the Lord has done.

All of this makes perfect sense, for Paul had carried the letters that James suggested to the Gentile churches, delivering their message to the people. Now he will report the results.

Remember the Letters

The significance of Paul relating the effects of his ministry goes back to chapter fifteen, when he and Barnabas had gone up to Jerusalem to consult with the apostles and elders concerning the matter of circumcision, and various points of the Law. At that time, letters were prepared for the Gentile churches, instructing them more fully in the ways of the Lord, and what is expected of the followers of Christ. These letters were written to “the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia” (Acts 15:23).

When in those areas, it is said of Paul and those traveling with him, “And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem. And so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily” (Acts 16:4).

Some of the things that took place during that time include the following.

- When they read the letters in Antioch, they rejoiced for the consolation. Judas and Silas, prophets from Jerusalem, remained there for a season. After Judas returned to Jerusalem, Silas remained. Paul and Barnabas continued, preaching the word for many days, along “with many others also” (15:30-35).
- Paul and Silas went throughout Syria and Cilicia “confirming the churches” (15:41).
- Timothy joined them in the Derbe/Lystra area, and they “went through the cities,” delivering the decrees “which were ordained by the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.” This resulted in the churches being “established in the faith,” increasing “in number daily” (16:4-5).
- Lydia and her household were converted in Philippi (16:12-15).
- A jailor and his entire household were converted while Paul and Silas were in prison (16:25-35).
- After being released from prison they comforted the brethren at Lydia’s house. This was the beginning of the church at Philippi (16:40).

Some believed in Thessalonica, even though there was some fierce opposition. The church in Thessalonica was launched at that time (17:1-4).

• Thus Paul acknowledged the hand of the Lord through his travels among the Gentiles. No doubt, it also cheered the hearts of James and the elders to hear of the

- Paul and Silas journey to Berea, where they ministered in the synagogue, and “many of them believed” (17:10-12).
- Paul ministers in Athens, and “certain men clave to him.” Among them as Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them” (17:34).
- Paul ministers in Corinth for a year and a half, persuading both Jews and Greeks. At the word of Jesus, he continued that full time ”teaching the word of God among them” (18:9-11).
- Paul came to Ephesus and reasoned with the Jews. He then left them, Saying he would return (18:19-20).
- After spending some time in Antioch, Paul went over all the country of Galatia and Phygia, “strengthening the disciples” (18:23).
- Paul confronts some disciples in Ephesus who had been baptized with John’s baptism. After instructing them more perfectly, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, Paul laid his hands on them, the Spirit came upon them, and they prophesied in other languages (19:1-7).

- Paul continues for two years in Ephesus, where “special miracles” were wrought by his hands. The name of the Lord was magnified, many confessed their deed, burned their books of curious arts, and the Word of God “grew mightily and prevailed” (19:9-20).
- A devastating blow was dealt to idolatry in Ephesus (Acts 19:23-41).
- Paul went over parts of Macedonia giving them “much exhortation” (20:2).
- Paul and company spent seven days in Troaz, where they met with the saints. At this time he raised Eutychus from the dead (20:6-12).
- At Miletus he called for the elders of the church in Ephesus and warned them of the coming apostasy (20:17-38).
- Paul and company spend seven days in Tyre, meeting with and comforting the disciples there (21:4-6).
- Paul and his comrades spend several days with Philip the evangelist, and others join them there (21:8-14).

Thus Paul acknowledged the hand of the Lord through his travels among the Gentiles. No doubt, it also cheered the hearts of James and the elders to hear of the unreserved acceptance of their letters. They had worked together for the Lord. Thus a slice of Kingdom time has been described.

CONCLUSION

The chronicles recorded in Acts are a kind of detail that is introduced to us in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews. It pertains to holy men and women, with the wicked only being mentioned incidentally. The record of sinful people is certainly present: Judas, the Jewish leaders, Ananias and Sapphira, Simon the sorcerer, Herod, Elymas, unbelieving Jews, the silversmiths of Ephesus, and others. However, they are never the subject of the revelation, and are only mentioned because they were aligned against the holy people of record. The inspired writer never lingers long upon them, but focuses his attention upon those who have been joined to Christ. He never spends any significant time addressing social or political concerns. There is no official Christian stance declared concerning a recommendation for rulers and political climate. The laws passed by the Roman senate are never the subject of exposition.

The status of families in the various cities of record is not mentioned: Jerusalem, Samaria, Antioch of Syria, Caesarea, Antioch of Pisidia, Derbe, Lystra, Philippi, Berea, Thessalonica, Athens, Ephesus, Troaz, Miletus, Tyre, etc. What is it that is said about such key cities? If it were not for the presence of the saints in them, we would not read of them at all.

It is not to be denied that an inordinate amount of time is being spent these days in matters that are not directly related to life in Christ Jesus. By “directly related,” I mean aspects of life that are integral to living unto the Lord. Some may argue that Christians ought to be involved in the business and political facets of life, as a sort of sanctifying element. However, I do not know that a point is actually made of having influence among men as the result of an intentional effort to be with the ungodly – unless it be to preach the Gospel to them. Even those examples are very few in Scripture.

And why make such an observation. Is it to be taken as an expression of disinterest in the souls of men? Not at all! When persons actually do live unto the Lord, living by faith and walking in the Spirit, holy influence is exerted wherever they are. Their light does not shine by intention, but because they themselves are walking in that light. Furthermore, as it is written, the Lord “will light my candle” (Psa 18:28), which “candle” is man’s spirit (Prov 20:27). If ever the light of God can get into a person, it will not fail to get out, for “a city set upon a hill cannot be hid” (Matt 5:14). Even men do not light a candle and put it under a bushel – much less does God do such a thing. He does not violate His own principles.

Doctrinally, the focus of human activity is placed upon the identity of the individual with God, through Christ, and by faith. Everything flows from there, because such an association is all-pervading, and cannot be concealed. If you insist on hiding the fact that you are a Christian, you will not long be one. That is because spiritual life requires sustaining as well as initiation. That is the doctrine of Scripture. The book of Acts is a record of that actually being done.

This is a kind of snapshot of the manner of thinking that is to be found among the people of God. It is consistent through all generations.

Lesson #88

PAUL PURIFIES HIMSELF WITH FOUR MEN TAKING A VOW

“ 21:20 ”And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous of the law: 21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs. 22 What is it therefore? the multitude must needs come together: for they will hear that thou art come. 23 Do therefore this that we say to thee: We have four men which have a vow on them; 24 Them take, and purify thyself with them, and be at charges with them, that they may shave their heads: and all may know that those things, whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing; but that thou thyself also walkest orderly, and keepest the law. 25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, we have written and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication. 26 Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them entered into the temple, to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them. 27 And when the seven days were almost ended, the Jews which were of Asia, when they saw him in the temple, stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him, 28 Crying out, Men of Israel, help: This is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place: and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place. 29 (For they had seen before with him in the city Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.) 30 And all the city was moved, and the people ran together: and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple: and forthwith the doors were shut.” (Acts 21:20-30)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

There is a certain versatility in newness of life that is scarcely comprehended in our time. In fact, throughout history it has been misunderstood and abused by professing Christians. Those with a Law mindset do not comprehend the text before us. It violates what they perceive to be the will of the Lord. However, when human opinions differ from the decisions made by men who are of the caliber of James and Paul, I hardly see that we have any choice concerning who to follow. Upon the advice of James, and in order to remove a stumbling block from those whose understanding was not yet mature, Paul will join four Jewish believers who have made a vow, and will pay the expenses related to that vow. When he is seen in the Temple by some Jews from Asia, they stirred up the people, laid their hands on Paul, telling the people he had been speaking against the Jews and their customs, as well as the Law and the Temple. With all the people being in an uproar, the accusers took Paul from the Temple, and shut

THE SERIOUSNESS REFLECTED IN THE TEXT

Through this text there is a level of spiritual seriousness that stands in stark contrast to the casualness of our time.

- PAUL. He has been laboring for the Lord, and now comes to give a report of the how the Lord has worked through his ministry.
- JAMES AND THE ELDERS listen intently to Paul's report. Giving glory to God for the things that had been done.
- THOUSANDS OF JEWS. These were Jews who had believed and were concerned about what they had heard relative to Paul. They are described as being "zealous of the law."
- FOUR JEWISH MEN. Four unnamed men who had taken a holy vow before the Lord, and were in the process of fulfilling it.
- CONCERN FOR THE JEWS WHO BELIEVE. James is concerned that the believing Jews do now have a false impression of Paul, and therefore is moved to suggest a certain course of action.

• THE GENTILES WHO BELIEVE. The Gentiles who had believed were easily directed in a wise course of living by the letters sent to them from the Apostles and elders.

• THE JEWS FROM ASIA. Although they were opposed to Paul, it was on the basis of their commitment to the Law and the Old Covenant.

This is the context in which the events of our text take place: one of religious sobriety and zeal.

Such activities take place in the domain of soberness. I do not know how it is possible to engage such adversarial influences while lacking seriousness. In fact, delusion itself requires a form of sobriety and seriousness.

I cannot help but observe how different this is from the religious environment of our time. There is almost a total lack of sobriety and spiritual sensitivity in the religious gatherings of our time. A significant percentage of Christian meetings are actually spiritually disarming, catering to the flesh, speckled with humor, and flaunting the wisdom of the world before the faces of the people. It is questionable whether the Holy Spirit can work in such surroundings.

The environment of Christian gatherings is a testimonial to where the people have been living. It reveals whether their minds have been set on things above, or things on the earth; whether they have been living for themselves, or unto the Lord. When surroundings make it difficult to receive the Word of God, it is because they are saturated with unbelief.

Those who opposed the truth were generally driven by their religious convictions – whether the Jews, or the silversmiths of Ephesus.

THE NATURE OF THE WARFARE

War itself is a sobering thing. It is much more so when we ponder what is involved in spiritual warfare. Believers are apprised of the fact that they are wrestling “against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places” (Eph 6:12). Thoughts and ways of thinking are also involved in the good fight of faith: “For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh: (For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds;) Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ” (2 Cor 10:3-5).

Such activities take place in the domain of soberness. I do not know how it is possible to engage such adversarial influences while lacking seriousness. In fact, delusion itself requires a form of sobriety and seriousness.

The promotion of a casual religion, or one that allows for undisciplined thought, is nothing more than a bottomless pit. When religion is driven by frivolity and humor, an environment is created that is spiritually hostile. A spiritual mind cannot profit from such an environ, because it is antithetical to every aspect of spiritual life, whether it is growing up into Christ, resisting the devil, or engaging hostile forces in spiritual warfare.

THE DIFFERENCE IN TODAY’S RELIGIOUS ENVIRONMENT

The difference in today’s religious environment is largely owing to the lack of godly sobriety. The spiritual posture that is encouraged is one in which Satan can catch the people unawares, for they are ignorant of his devices. It is also one in which the Holy Spirit is not apt to work, because the mind of the people is too close to the earth, and too far from heaven. The concepts of strangership and pilgrimage are strange to the modern church. Not loving the world has the sound of an unfamiliar note. The admonition to seek the things that are above has a strange and confusing sound to it, for the people do not appear to be conscience of the existence of such things, much less feel a compulsion to seek after them. All of this has happened amidst a flurry of religious activities, increased mega-churches, and ministers that are writing best sellers. How-to religion is a burgeoning business. However the results of it all are not good. Considering whoever is responsible for feeding the flock of God, all of this has happened on their watch – which means they did not watch as they were supposed to. Someone of responsibility let seducers into the assembly. Failing to do what is required of them. I do not know how it is possible to ignore this circumstance.

WHEN THEY HEARD IT, THEY GLORIFIED THE LORD

“ 21:20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord . . . ”

One can scarcely imagine this kind of report being given to the average church leaders. None of the things that mark successful enterprises were included in the report. Rather, it concerned what God had done through Paul’s ministry. The capacity to listen to and absorb such reports is marvelous, indeed.

The report of “particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by” Paul’s “ministry,” produced some effects among James and the elders of Jerusalem. Their response will reveal, much about them, and where their hearts were focused. Their love for the brethren, and quickness to recognize what the Lord had done will also be made known. There will be no sectarian or factious response, or any attempt to neutralize the report by comparing it to what was being done in Jerusalem.

WHEN THEY HEARD IT

“And when they heard it . . . ” Other versions read, “when they heard this,” NIV “and hearing it,” BBE “On hearing it,” CJB “having heard it,” DARBY “heard about everything,” GWN “after hearing this, NLT “heard these things,” IE “had heard his statement,” WEYMOUTH and “on hearing this account.” PHILLIPS

As it is used here, the word “heard” means, “to attend to (use the faculty of hearing), consider what is or has been said . . . to understand, perceive the sense of what is said.” THAYER There is interest, attentiveness, and understanding in this kind of hearing. It goes far beyond merely hearing the sound of human speech. There is discernment – spiritual discernment. When Paul reported what God had done through his ministry, these hearers were able to associate what was done with the work and purpose of the Lord.

One can scarcely imagine this kind of report being given to the average church leaders. None of the things that mark successful enterprises were included in the report. Rather, it concerned what God had done through Paul’s ministry. The capacity to listen to and absorb such reports is marvelous, indeed. It is the outworking of being reconciled to God, having his laws written upon our hearts, and possessing the Holy Spirit within.

AND GLORIFIED THE LORD

“ . . . they glorified the Lord . . . ” Other versions read, “began glorifying God,” NASB “praise God,” NIV “gave praise to God,” BBE “gave glory to God,” NJB “were glorifying the Lord,” YLT and “they adored and exalted and praised and thanked God.” AMPLIFIED

Upon hearing the report of Paul, James and the elders “glorified the Lord,” or “gave praise to God.” Pricisely what does that mean?

In our time, There is a great deal of confusion, and even disinterest, in the matter of glorifying the Lord, or praising Him. Some have even equated this with singing choruses. In fact, there is a growing tendency among professed believers to actually limit praising and glorifying God to joint expressions in song. While “singing and making melody in our heart to the Lord” (Eph 5:19), and “teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs” (Col 3:16) – and doing so in our hearts – is an appointed means or bringing profit to the saints, it is by no means the exclusive, or even superior means through which God is glorified or praised. The “fruit of our lips” is certainly not limited to singing (Heb 13:15). Yet, this impression is growing in its impact upon the Christian community. Were you to ask what role the new “worship leader” plays in the congregation, you would be hard pressed to find anyone who did not say it was the person who led the singing, now referred to as “praise and worship.”

None of these concepts were in place at the time of our text. When James and the elders heard the insightful report of Paul, they did not begin singing, entering into a time of, what men call, “praise and worship.” While such a thing may very well have been included, most thinking people know is not the default meaning of the text.

Early in the Acts, it is written that “men glorified God for that which was done” (Acts 4:21). This had particular reference to the healing of the lame man at the gate called Beautiful. Later, when Peter reported the conversion of the Gentiles at the house of Cornelius, those who heard him “ glorified God , saying Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life” (Acts 11:18). In Antioch of Pisidia, when Paul declared that God had commanded “saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth” (Acts 13:47), the Gentiles “were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord : and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed” (Acts 13:48).

In Romans, the Gentile world was charged with not glorifying God “as God,” choosing rather to change the glory of God into an image (Rom 1:21). When the churches in Judea heard that Saul of Tarsus, who once persecuted the church, was “preaching the faith which once he destroyed,” they “glorified God” in him (Gal 1:24). Paul wrote to the Thessalonians, telling them he was praying that God would count them worthy of calling, “That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified ” in them (2 Thess 1:12). Peter wrote, “If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 4:11). To those who were being reproached for the name of the Lord he wrote, “If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part He is glorified ” (1 Pet 4:14).

Paul wrote to the brethren in Rome, “That ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God , even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ” (Rom 15:6). To the Corinthians he wrote, “For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's” (1 Cor 6:20). Peter wrote to dispersed believers, “Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, whereas they speak against you as evildoers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation” (1 Pet 2:12). Again he wrote, “Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf” (1 Pet 4:16).

A Brief Summation

Notice what is said about God being glorified.

- God was glorified for what was done.
- God was glorified by saying He had granted repentance to the Gentiles.
- The word of the Lord concerning the acceptance of the Gentiles was glorified.
- God was not glorified when the Gentiles to serve gods of their own making.
- The disciples glorified God when they heard that Saul of Tarsus was preaching the faith.

- The name of the Lord Jesus is glorified by the upright walk of His people.

To me, it is no wonder that Satan has so muddied the waters concerning the praise of God. He has brought influences to bear upon unstable hearts which has led them to believe that glorifying the Lord, or rendering praise to Him, will somehow make up for the deficiencies in men

- Those who minister with the ability that God gives make it possible for God to be glorified in all things.
- God is glorified when His people are persecuted for righteousness' sake.
- The church is to glorify God with one mouth and one mind.
- God is to be glorified in our body, by an upright conversation.
- A holy life will provoke enemies to glorify God in the day of their visitation.
- Those who suffer as a Christian can glorify God.

What Does It Mean to Glorify God?

Glorifying God is an expression of faith and insight. It is the result of beholding the hand of God in the affairs of men. This has particular regard to what has been accomplished in Christ Jesus, the implications of those accomplishments, and the general working of salvation in the earth. People cannot glorify the Lord in a state of ignorance, or in a condition in which the hand of the Lord is not clearly seen. When God works, those who recognize and appreciate it can give Him glory. Faith will compel them to do so, and the benefits realized from such insight will cause them to do it thankfully.

To me, it is no wonder that Satan has so muddied the waters concerning the praise of God. He has brought influences to bear upon unstable hearts which has led them to believe that glorifying the Lord, or rendering praise to Him, will somehow make up for the deficiencies in men – that the God from whom they are in practical alienation, will suddenly draw near to them to bless and strengthen them. All of this is perceived as being done in spite of the miserable condition of the people.

In the word of God, those who glorified God were cognizant of His presence, and were already engaged in the will of God. They were familiar enough with God to discern His unique and effective work.

MANY THOUSANDS OF JEWS WHICH BELIEVE

“ . . . and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous of the law: 21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs. . . ”

James and the elders hear of what God had done through Paul among the Gentiles, and immediately think of the Jewish believers. It was important to them that an incorrect view of Paul's ministry not be embraced by their own people. Intuitively, they seemed to be keenly aware that the working of God through Paul's ministry did not mean that the Jews were being abandoned. Although the majority of them had not believed on Christ, they had not been discarded by the Lord as a despised race. Only those who did NOT believe were ever rebuked by Paul. Never did he insinuate that, as a nation, they were now a despised and rejected people. Yet, people with just a smattering of knowledge might be drawn to that conclusion. Also, those Jews who had been teaching the necessity of circumcision to be saved (Acts 15:1) may very well have given a report of Paul that could easily lead people to such conclusions.

Now, we are exposed to the reasoning of holy men who do not want people to draw the wrong conclusions about the legitimate work of God, or the people through whom that work was being done. Oh, that there were more such people in our time, who would be quick to put-down any misperceptions of those through whom God is working.

MANY THOUSANDS OF BELIEVING JEWS

“ . . . and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe . . .” Other versions read, “many myriads of Jews who have believed,” NKJV “thousands of Jews have believed,” NIV “how many thousands of believers there are among the Jews,” NRSV “what thousands there are among the Jews, who have the faith,” BBE “how many tens of thousands of believers there are among the Judeans,” CJB “you can see that thousands of Jews have become believers,” IE and “how many tens of thousands of Jews there are among those who have accepted the faith.” WEYMOUTH

The impact of the preaching in Jerusalem and the surrounding areas is made known in this text. What a description of the number of believers in a given city at one time: “many thousands.”

The word “many” means, “great . . . how much,” THAYER “a considerable amount,” LOUW-NIDA “magnitude,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “how great.” GINGRICH This term is not applied to the Jews themselves – i.e. “many Jews, or a great number of Jews.” The large number is applied to the word “thousands” – i.e. a staggering number of thousands. As used here, the word “thousands” means “ten thousand . . . innumerable multitude, an unlimited number, like our ‘myriads,’ THAYER and “countless thousands.” FRIBERG Synonyms would be “thousands upon thousands,” and “tens of thousands.” A similar expression (muria,dej muria,dwn)is found in Revelation 9:16: “And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand : and I heard the number of them” (Rev 9:16).

This number doubtless included a number of dispersed Jews who were gathered together in Jerusalem for the feast of Pentecost – even as there was on the day of Pentecost following Christ’s ascension into glory (Acts 2:5). The difference in this text is that the Jews of reference were all “believers.”

The term “believers” is never applied to anyone outside of Christ . This is a term applied to those who were “added to the Lord” (Acts 4:14). From Genesis through Malachi, the words “believe” and “believed,” as related to a response to God Himself, are only used favorably nine times, the other use being “believed not ” (Gen 15:6; Ex 4:31; 14:31;Psa 27:13; 106:12; 116:10; 119:66; Dan 6:23; Jonah 3:5). By way of comparison, they are used 123 times in Matthew through Revelation (58 times in Matthew through John, 30 times in Acts, and 35 times from Romans through the Revelation).

These dates are only human estimates, and there are varied opinions about them. Yet, they offer a valid comparative analysis of general times .

As Paul stated, believing was not something associated with the Law, or the First Covenant. As it is written, “And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doeth them shall live in them” (Gal 3:12). Other versions read, “not based upon faith,” NIV “does not rest on faith,” NRSV “not based on trusting and being faithful,” CJB “have nothing to do with faith,” GWN “does not depend upon faith,” NAB and “does not rest on faith [does not require faith, has nothing to do with faith].”
AMPLIFIED

This staggering multitude of believers, therefore, cannot be referring to devout Jews who were not in Christ Jesus. The Law was calculated to bring men to Christ (Gal 3:24), but it could not induct them into Christ or bring them to believe on Him. Believing is a response to the Gospel, not the Law (Mk 16:15-16). It has to do with responding to Jesus, not the commandments of the Law.

The law was calculated to prepare men for Christ by means of a devoted and consistent life that was lived with an acute sensitivity to the will of God. It was that very circumstance that defiled the conscience, for the Law had no power to effect the changes that it demanded. Like all other believers in the book of Acts, this vast number of Jews were disciples of Christ, having believed and obeyed the Gospel.

THEY ARE ALL ZEALOUS OF THE LAW

“ . . . and they are all zealous of the law . . .” Other versions read, “zealous for the Law,” NASB “have a great respect for the Law,” BBE “deeply committed to Moses' Teachings,” GWN “zealous observers of the Law,” NAB “ardent observers of the Law,” NET “staunch upholders of the Law,” NJB “follow the Law of Moses very seriously,” NLT “earnest followers of the Law,” PNT “very insistent that Jewish believers must continue to follow the Jewish traditions and customs,” LIVING “they all think it is very important to obey the law,” IE and “enthusiastic upholders of the [Mosaic] Law.” AMPLIFIED

In reading a text like this, one must keep in mind that the New Testament Scriptures had not yet been written and dispersed. With some slight differences of view, conservative Bible scholars estimate that the books of Matthew through Revelation were written between 35 AD and 95 AD.

It is estimated that the occasion of our text took place around 57 AD. This being the case, Only Matthew, Mark, John, Galatians, and First and Second Thessalonians had been written – to say nothing of the dissemination of the letters to all of the churches. The point is that much of the teaching with which earnest disciples are now acquainted was not yet common knowledge among those early disciples. They had met and discussed extensively the necessity of circumcision, as well as what portions of the Law were still to be honored (Acts 15).

When it says these Jews were zealous for the Law, it does not mean they were adhering to it as a basis of salvation - attempting, so to speak, to establish their own righteousness. That was the status of unbelieving Jews, not believing ones (Rom 10:3).

The Old Covenant, with all of its varied ceremonies, was not abruptly terminated on the day of Pentecost. The sacrifices were no longer valid, as the Gospel announces Christ is the only valid propitiation “for the sins of the whole world” (1 John 2:1), Him being the Lamb of God that took “away the sin of the world” (John 1:29). John the Baptist prepared the Jews for the Lamb of God through his introductory ministry.

The Fading of the Old

In an arresting passage, the epistles of Second Corinthians and Hebrews addresses the manner in which the Old Covenant, together with its attending ceremonies, was invalidated from a practical point of view. Keep in mind that we are not speaking of becoming righteous, a propitiation for sin, and acceptance by God. This pertains to the ceremonial aspect of the Law.

Second Corinthians

- The Law is referred to as a ministration of death, engraved on stones (3:7). This is compared to the New Covenant, which is the ministration of the Spirit (3:8).
- There was a glory that attended the giving of the Law, but it faded, like the glow of Moses' face did after he had spoken with God (3:7b). This is compared with the exceeding glory of the New Covenant which continues to increase in glory, rather than decrease (3:8-9).
- The Old Covenant was “done away,” not by a word of dismissal, but by a greater glory that outshined it (3:11).
- Even the lesser glory of the Law blinded the minds of those who were under it, so they could not perceive the glory of God (3:13-15).

- The veil of obscurity is lifted only when Christ is seen more clearly than the Law (3:14-16).

Hebrews

- The Law with its attending ceremonies served as a “example and shadow of heavenly things” (8:5).

- Jesus has a more excellent ministry, being the Mediator of a better covenant that is established upon better promises (8:6).

- The New Covenant is of a differing order, and is not after the manner of the Old Covenant, which was based upon doing (8:9-12).

- Now that the New Covenant is in place, the old is “ready to vanish away,” which vanishment is one of perception, not mere legality (8:13). Its glory gradually fades, like the glow that was on the face of Moses.

In order to facilitate this transition, the apostles’ doctrine told the people of things that could not be continued, and things that remained in place for all believers. As time progressed, those who believed came to see these things more clearly.

It is as the glory of the New Covenant dawns upon the soul that the glory of the Old Covenant commences to fade from view. Because of the remarkable contrast in the nature of the covenants, it apparently took some time before the fog of legalism was sufficiently dispelled. Paul is the agent chosen by God to expound the nature of the New Covenant. He is the one who extensively showed the role of faith in the New Covenant, and the basis of God’s grace in the entire economy. Because his message was not comprehended, false charges were made against him, with some reporting that Paul said, “Let us do evil that good may come.” Paul wrote of such people, “whose damnation is just” (Rom 3:8).

Even to this very day, the glory and nature of the New Covenant is largely unknown in the professing church. As a direct result of this area of spiritual blindness, all manner of distorted views of the Law, commandments, and Old Covenant ordinances are being perpetrated in the name of Jesus Christ.

In order to facilitate this transition, the apostles’ doctrine told the people of things that could not be continued, and things that remained in place for all believers. As time progressed, those who believed came to see these things more clearly.

WHAT THEY HAD HEARD OF PAUL

One of the marks of approval among the servants of God is the kind of reports that are circulated concerning them. Of this Paul wrote, “But in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God . . . By honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report: as deceivers, and yet true” (2 Cor 6:4-8). Those who lacked noble motives gave evil reports of Paul, suggesting that he was too lenient toward sin, and prejudiced toward the Jews. The reports were not true, but were constrained by Satan to so damage Paul’s reputation that people would not listen to him. James had heard of these false reports, and will not ignore them. He will suggest that Paul act in such a manner as to confirm they were false allegations.

Teach All the Jews Which Are Among the Gentiles

“And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles . . .” Other versions read, “all the Jews which live among the Gentiles.” NIV With great subtlety, the report had gone out that Paul had a different message for Jews that were living among the Gentiles. In other words, he would preach one thing in Jerusalem, and another in Antioch; one Gospel in Judaea, and another in Bithynia.

To Forsake Moses

“ . . . to forsake Moses . . .” Other versions read, “turn away from Moses,” NIV “Give up the law of Moses,” BBE “abandon Moses,” CSB and “turn back from and forsake Moses.” AMPLIFIED

There are numerous records of Paul referring to Moses.

- “And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses ” (Acts 13:39)

- “Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come” (Acts 26:22).

- “ And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses , and out of the prophets, from morning till evening” (Acts 28:23).

- “For he saith to Moses , I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion” (Rom 9:15).

- “For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, That the man which doeth those things shall live by them” (Rom 10:5).

In Christ Jesus, as declared by the Gospel, a greater light is made known. However, a fuller light is not necessarily a contrary light. It does not obviate the former light, but drowns it in glory – and there is a vast difference between the two. Although men cannot be justified by the Law, a place is still kept for the Law.

“But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you” (Rom 10:19).

- “For it is written in the law of Moses , Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen?” (1 Cor 9:9).

- “And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea” (1 Cor 10:2).

- “But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not stedfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away” (2 Cor 3:7).

- “And not as Moses , which put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not stedfastly look to the end of that which is abolished” (2 Cor 3:13).

- “But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart” (2 Cor 3:15).

- “Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses , so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith” (2 Tim 3:8).

The Jews in Achaia charged that Paul persuaded men “to worship God contrary to the Law” [of Moses] (Acts 18:13).

Paul, on the other hand, confessed to Felix, “But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets” (Acts 24:14). He also said to Festus, “ Neither against the law of the Jews , neither against the temple, nor yet against Caesar, have I offended any thing at all ” (Acts 25:8). In His epistles, Paul refers to “the Law” one hundred and twenty-eight times, and never in a derogatory manner. He confirms that the Law was never intended to justify (Acts 13:39), that through it is the knowledge of sin (Rom 3:20), and that it has been ended only as a means to righteousness (Rom 10:4).

Paul affirmed that the message he delivered was foretold by Moses (Deut 18:15,18; 30:6).

In Christ Jesus, as declared by the Gospel, a greater light is made known. However, a fuller light is not necessarily a contrary light. It does not obviate the former light, but drowns it in glory – and there is a vast difference between the two. Although men cannot be justified by the Law, a place is still kept for the Law. There is still a valid work that it is to do, for “by the Law is the knowledge of sin” (Rom 3:20). It is still “Our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ” (Gal 3:24-25). We are not “under the Law” (Rom 6:14), but that does not mean it serves no purpose.

Paul did not teach that men ought to abandon the Law. He rather taught it was not the means to justification, and that men were under no obligation to keep its unique ceremonies. This is a fine distinction that the unlearned cannot discern.

Ought Not Circumcise Their Children

“ . . . saying that they ought not to circumcise their children . . . ”

There is no record of Paul ever forbidding the Jews to circumcise their children. Rather, he taught that circumcision had nothing whatsoever to do with the New Covenant, and that it gave no person a spiritual advantage before God. He also taught that true circumcision was “of the heart, in the spirit,” and not in the flesh (Rom 2:28-29). In other words, like all of the ceremonial Law, and the Sabbath as well, something superior replaced the ancient ceremonies – a greater glory did away with their necessity. Now that men receive a new heart through “the circumcision of Christ” (Col 2:11), outward circumcision is completely unrelated to one’s identity with God and involvement in the covenant over which Jesus presides.

Neither Walk After the Customs

“ . . . neither to walk after the customs. . . ” Other versions read, “live according to the customs,” NIV “observe the customs,” NRSV “keep the old rules,” BBE “observe the rites of the Law,” MRD and “follow the customary practices.” NJB

This charge was also false. Paul never advocated an overthrow or abandonment of Jewish customs. He did not call for the closing of the Temple, or the discarding of the synagogue. He was not opposed to the reading of the Jewish Scriptures, or even the observance of Jewish feasts. Further, his conduct did not reflect such a persuasion.

- Paul went into the Temple (Acts 21:26; 22:17; 24:12,18; 26:21).
- Paul attended the synagogues (Acts 13:14; 14:1; 17:1-2,10,17; 18:4,19; 19:8).
- Paul observed some of the Jewish feasts (Acts 18:21; 20:1).
- Paul took a vow according to Jewish customs (Acts 18:18; 24:18).

Paul did teach that believers were not to allow others to impose Jewish feasts and customs upon them, pointing out that they were a “shadow of things to come,” while the real spiritual substance was found in Christ (Col 2:16-17). Once this was seen, an inordinate attachment to the Jewish customs will not be maintained out of a sense of obligation. The new creation (2 Cor 5:17; Gal 6:15) desires the “better things,” and gravitates to involvement in such things. Even though outwardly it may appear as though Jewish customs are being observed, that is not the case at all. Paul did not go to the synagogue out of a sense of obligation, or commitment to the traditions of the fathers. Rather, it was in order to teach and preach about Jesus Christ. If he did take a vow, it was with Jesus Christ in mind, not with a sense of obligation to the Law.

Admittedly, this is a difficult thing for the spiritually uncultured mind to comprehend. A person, for example, who is motivated strictly by Law, as opposed to being tutored by grace (Tit 2:11-12), and led by the Spirit (Rom 8:13-14), is unable to distinguish higher motives.

James will now give his advice with the weaker brethren and their conscience in mind. He will take for granted the genuineness of their faith as well as the freedom in which Paul could operate.

Oh, the blessedness of the liberty that is displayed in this text. In it we see a most noble example of what it means to honor the conscience of another brother, and to avoid doing anything that will lead the weaker brethren – those whose vision is not finely tuned – to be loose in their conduct, living for any other reason than to please the Lord. That is what is to be learned in this text.

Paul's Doctrine on the Matter

Paul taught extensively on matters involving other believers who were of tender heart, yet whose conscience had not yet matured.

- The believer who felt he could not eat meat. This had to do with eating meat that had been offered to idols, and was later sold in the “shambles,” or “meat market” NASB (1 Cor 10:25). “But meat commendeth us not to God: for neither, if we eat, are we the better; neither, if we eat not, are we the worse. This by no means sanctioned the maintenance of a flawed view, but was the means through which any erroneous conclusion would be seen for what it was. Paul alluded to this principle after testifying of his own

But take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumblingblock to them that are weak. For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols” (1 Cor 8:8-10). This involved people who had a tender conscience toward God, yet was immature in their understanding. A similar line of teaching is found in Romans 14:1-9.

- The believer who had not yet seen there is only one God. As difficult as it may be to believe, there were some early believers who had been converted from heathen idolatry. They had not yet seen that there really is only one God. Hence, when they beheld the conduct of believers who ate meat that had been offered to idols, they were driven to the conclusion that they were gods of the heathen. Thus Paul wrote to the Corinthians, “As concerning therefore the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,) But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him. Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge : for some with conscience of the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conscience being weak is defiled” (1 Cor 8:4-7).

- Becoming all things to all men. A text that has been often misrepresented has to do with Paul becoming all things to all men. “To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men , that I might by all means save some . . . Even as I please all men in all things , not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved” (1 Cor 9:22; 10:33). Paul did not become an idolater in order to reach idolaters, or a glutton to reach gluttons. He is speaking of those who had commitment to God, yet who were juvenile and immature in their understanding. In his accommodation to such people, he violated neither his conscience nor any word from God. He operated in the legitimate domain of liberty, doing so out of a concern for the eternal welfare of those who saw him. He did not take upon himself the appearance of a sinner to reach sinners.

• Let each believer be fully persuaded in their own mind. The Lord would then bring them forward to maturity. Those who maintain a good conscience before the Lord, not violating what they perceive to be right, and always living with a mind to please the Lord, will be given greater light where it is needed. This is why Paul admonished those with differing views to be “Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind” (Rom 14:5). This by no means sanctioned the maintenance of a flawed view, but was the means through which any erroneous conclusion would be seen for what it was. Paul alluded to this principle after testifying of his own commitment to the Lord (Phil 3:14). He sensed that the implications of a total commitment to the Lord had not yet registered on the minds of some. After hearing of the manner in which Paul lived, they might conclude that they were incapable of such devotion, and perhaps may not have been accepted by the Lord. Thus he reasoned, “Let us therefore, as many as be perfect” [mature NIV] , “be thus minded: and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you” (Phil 3:15). That is, as they lived up to their level of understanding, God would bring them to see what Paul had said, and therefore they would follow his example. This is a marvelous principle to be perceived.

• The flaw in much contemporary reasoning is found in the notion that ignorance can be perpetual with impunity – that continuing to be at variance with the truth is somehow a tolerable thing before the Lord. However, this is not at all the truth, as any informed disciple knows.

• Life in Christ Jesus is the kind that grows, matures, and brings forth fruit (Rom 7:4; Eph 4:15; 1 Pet 5:10; 2 Pet 3:18). No manner of life that fails to move in this direction is the expression of true spiritual life. With these things in mind, let us hear how James counsels Paul.

THEY WILL HEAR

“ 22 What is it therefore? the multitude must needs come together: for they will hear that thou art come.” Other versions read, “must certainly meet, for they will hear that you have come,” NKJV “they will certainly hear that you have come,” NIV “they have heard that thou hast arrived here,” MRD “The Jewish believers here will learn that you have come,” IE and “A multitude will come together, for they will surely hear that you have arrived.” AMPLIFIED

The “they” of reference are tens of thousands of believers, not a handful of religiously elite leaders.

Immediately we see the caliber of people to which James refers. These were by no means casual disciples. They were appropriately described as “believers,” and had come together to honor the Lord.

Immediately we see the caliber of people to which James refers. These were by no means casual disciples. They were appropriately described as “believers,” and had come together to honor the Lord. As in the first Pentecost following Christ’s enthronement, there were no doubt Jews from around the world gathered together. Such a phenomenon is not at all common in our country.

James also states that they had already, or would soon, hear of Paul’s arrival in Jerusalem. They knew about him, and had heard things said about him, as James had already affirmed. Now, I cannot conceive of such a thing happening in the United States of America, or even in some of its cities that are noted for being Christian centers – such as Joplin Missouri. I am persuaded that if Paul himself turned up in our city, it is questionable that he would receive a fair hearing. This is largely because his writings are not familiar to the Christian masses. Further, he would probably not travel with a musical group to draw the attention of the people. It is what Paul TAUGHT that intrigued the people, and he was noted for what he said.

Notice how critical news traveled in the Christian community. Paul – a man who, “in presence” was “lowly among” the people (2 Cor 10:1), was perceived as someone worthy of seeing face-to-face. Those who had seen him, and among whom he had labored, declared that “his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible,” even though his letters were admittedly “weighty” (2 Cor 10:10). However the thousands of believers in Jerusalem did not come to read Paul’s letters, but to be with him personally. They had heard that he taught certain things, and wanted to know if this was the truth.

I feel compelled to say a few words about the religious climate of our time. It has been created by religious leaders, and it is not a commendable one. There is not only a prevailing canopy of spiritual ignorance over the people, but a dominate disinterest in the things of God. That is the reason for the popularity of self-help books, workshops, and various programs. It is what has given license to the thirst for religious entertainment and the hunger for religious careers. All of this has taken place during the watch of those who are perceived as religious leaders. They have not taught in a manner that brought the people to maintain a preference for the Word of God. The people have not been addressed in such a manner as to promote a hunger and a thirst for righteousness. The leaders have come too low in their attempt to reach the people, and are now maintaining a perspective that accommodates itself to the zone of this present evil world. Paul is neither well known nor popular in the modern church. His writings are generally treated as though they were worthless, and can contribute nothing to the fath of God’s people.

All of this is to be seen in stark contrast with the church of the book of Acts. I can only conclude that this is because a different message is being preached these days – a message that is not producing genuine fruit unto God.

DO THEREFORE THIS THAT WE SAY TO THEE

“ 23 Do therefore this that we say to thee: We have four men which have a vow on them; 24 Them take, and purify thyselves with them, and be at charges with them, that they may shave their heads: and all may know that those things, whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing; but that thou thyself also walkest orderly, and keepest the law.”

We are now exposed to some spiritual reasoning. On the surface, it will appear to contradict the truth of the Gospel, but this is not the case. This is an example of lawful adaptation to the sincere and devoted, yet immature, hearts of believers. Guided only by the principle of Law, this passage cannot be properly understood. In fact, it will generate confusion in the hearts of the unlearned. We must, however, remember that we are being exposed to the thinking and reaction of two of the most seasoned saints of all time: James and Paul. Following the exaltation of Jesus, there is no record of either of these men being reprovved for thinking or acting improperly. This cannot even be said of Peter, against whom only a single infraction is recorded following the inauguration of the New Covenant (Gal 2:11-14).

DO THIS

“Do therefore this that we say to thee . . .” Other versions read, “do what we tell you,” NKJV “follow our advice,” GWN “So this is what we suggest that you should do,” NJB “We advise you to do this,” IE “Now you must do just what we tell you,” WILLIAMS and “Now why not follow this suggestion of ours?” PHILLIPS

There is a confidence reflected in this counsel that indicates it was Divine direction. Some of the versions reflect this perspective: i.e. “Do what we tell you,” NKJV and “You must do just what we tell you.” WILLIAMS Others leave a question in our minds as to whether or not this was heavenly direction, or human advice: “this is what we suggest,” NJB and “why not follow this suggestion of ours.” PHILLIPS

The language, both in the Greek and in the English, does not lend itself to the thought that this was simply an idea that should be weighed by Paul. As used here, the word “do” means “to make . . . to produce,” THAYER and “accomplish.” FRIBERG The word “this” refers to the action they had set before Paul, and the word “say” means to “command, direct . . . point out with words.” GINGRICH There are varying views on this text. Some see it as an unnecessary compromise. Others see it as confirmation that the truth of the Gospel was not comprehended by either James or Paul at the time of this text. I do not choose to see the text that way, although I am not willing to be factious about the matter. I am proceeding with the persuasion that this was actually the Lord directing Paul through the word of other members of the body of Christ.

WE HAVE FOUR MEN

“ . . . We have four men . . . ” Other versions read, “There are four men with us,” NIV and “with us are four men.” AMPLIFIED That is, these were four Christian men – men who were identified with the church in Jerusalem, and were walking in accord with conduct associated with being distinguished as a disciple of Christ. These were Jews according to the flesh, but had embraced the Gospel and the Christ of the Gospel.

WHICH HAVE A VOW

“ . . . which have a vow on them . . . ” Other versions read, “who have taken a vow,” NKJV “who are under a vow,” NASB “who have made a vow,” NIV “who have taken an oath,” BBE “who have obligated themselves with a vow,” CSB “who have made a vow to God,” GWN and “who have vowed to purify themselves.” MRD

The mindset with which vows were made perceived an obligation to the Lord, and the individuals were willing to extend themselves in the service of God, even formalizing their commitment.

Here is a matter with which the Western Christian world is not at all familiar. Some would perceive this as totally unnecessary, and even out of order. The making of vows, however, is not strange in Scripture. It is something that was specifically addressed unto the Law.

Jacob made a vow to God after he had dreamed of a ladder set up on the earth that reached into heaven, with angels ascending and descending upon it. At that time God Almighty was seen standing above the ladder, reaffirming the Abrahamic covenant, and assuring Jacob that it would be fulfilled through him. He also promised to keep Jacob in all the places he went (Gen 28:12-15). Jacob then “vowed a vow , saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace; then shall the LORD be my God: and this stone, which I have set for a pillar, shall be God's house: and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee” (Gen 28:20-22). Later, God recognized that very vow in a special appearance to Jacob: “I am the God of Bethel, where thou anointedst the pillar, and where thou vowedst a vow unto Me : now arise, get thee out from this land, and return unto the land of thy kindred” (Gen 31:13).

The Law recognized the making of vows to the Lord (Lev 7:16; 22:18,21,23; 23:38; 27:2; Num 6:2-21; 15:3,8; Num 29:39; 30:2-5,7-9,11-14; Deut 12:6,11,17,26; 23:18,21,22).

Hannah made a vow to the Lord (1 Sam 1:11(as well as her husband Elkanah (1 Sam 1:21). David also made vows (Psa 22:25; 61:5,6; 66:13; 116:14,18).

Solomon spoke of making a vow to the Lord, and the seriousness of it (Eccl 5:4). Malachi spoke of corrupted vows (Mal 1:14).

At one time, prior to this occasion, Paul himself had taken a vow (Acts 18:18).

Vows were entirely a voluntary matter, but were to be taken seriously when made to the Lord. Scriptures make such statements as, “thou shalt pay thy vows ” (Job 22:27), “I will pay my vows” (Psa 22:25; “pay thy vows” (Psa 50:14); “Thy vows are upon me, O God” (Psa 56:12); “I will pay Thee my vows” (Psa 66:13).

The mindset with which vows were made perceived an obligation to the Lord, and the individuals were willing to extend themselves in the service of God, even formalizing their commitment. This was done on a voluntary basis, but with an acute awareness of God Himself and the necessity of serving Him. We know from Scripture that God also takes vows seriously.

PURIFY THYSELF WITH THEM

“ . . . Them take, and purify thyself with them . . .” Other versions read, “be purified with them,” NKJV “join in their purification rites,” NIV “make yourself clean with them,” BBE “sanctify thyself with them,” DOUAY “go through the purification ceremony with them,” GWN and “Go with them to the Temple and join them in the purification ceremony.” NLT

Later, Paul will refer to his involvement in the purification ceremony (Acts 24:18).

This vow is generally considered to be the Nazarite vow that was outlined in the sixth chapter of Numbers. It was possible for this vow to apply to one’s entire lifetime, as was commanded concerning Samson “from the womb to the day of his death” (Judges 13:5-7). His mother was under the vow until she gave birth to Samson (Judges 13:3-4,7). As with Samson’s mother, there were shorter durations of this vow, during which the individual was separated “unto the Lord” (Num 6:2).

Indications are that John the Baptist was a Nazarite all of his life (Lk 1:15). It is also the considered opinion of many scholars that Jesus was a life-long Nazarite, and that this is the point of him being called a “Nazarene” (Matt 2:23). If this reasoning is correct, Jesus would never have imbibed wine or any form of strong drink.

The time of a Nazarite vow was apparently a period during which the one making the vow gave himself wholly to the Lord and His service, as was required for the priests. In a nutshell, it involved being separated from the mundane and devoted wholly to the Lord throughout the duration of the vow.

The time of a Nazarite vow was apparently a period during which the one making the vow gave himself wholly to the Lord and His service, as was required for the priests. In a nutshell, it involved being separated from the mundane and devoted wholly to the Lord throughout the duration of the vow. The following was required under the Law.

- Separation from all wine and strong drink (Num 6:3a).
- Nothing that was fermented could be ingested (Num 6:3b).
- Grape juice could not be ingested (Num 6:3c).
- Neither grapes nor raisins could be eaten (Num 6:6d).
- Nothing from the grapevine could be eaten, from the seeds to the skins (Num 6:4).
- Throughout the vow, the hair could not be cut, but the hair must be permitted to grow long (Num 6:5).

- All of the days of the vow, the person could not go near a dead body (Num 6:6).
- Even if his own father, mother, brother, or sister died, the person could not come near their dead body (Num 6:7).
- Throughout the period the person was consecrated completely to the Lord (Num 6:8).
- If someone died suddenly in the presence of the one under the vow, the person was defiled, and was required to shave his head on the seventh day following (Num 6:9).
- On the eighth day, two birds were to be brought to the priest at the door of the tabernacle, or later, at the Temple (Num 6:10).
- The priest would offer one bird for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering, to “make an atonement for him, for that he sinned” by being in the presence of a dead body (Num 6:11).
- The person must dedicate himself to the Lord for the period of separation by bringing a year-old lamb for guilt offering. The previous days did not count “because he became defiled during his separation.” NIV (Num 6:12).
- If the vow was completed, the person was to be brought to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. There he would offer one male lamb of the first year, one ewe lamb of the first year, and one ram for a peace offering, a basket of unleavened bread mingled with oil, and wafers spread with oil (Num 6:13-14).
- The priest would take these and offer the appropriate offerings to the Lord (Num 6:16-17).
- The Nazarite would then shave his head at the door of the tabernacle, and put the hair in the fire which was under the peace offering (Num 6:18).
- The priest would then take a boiled shoulder of the ram, and a cake and a wafer from the basket, placing them in the hands of the Nazarite (Num 6:19).
- Then the priest would wave these before the Lord, and they became his (Num 6:20a).
- After this, the Nazarite could drink wine (Num 6:20b).

Some additional considerations will be addressed in verse twenty-six.

The Lesson Being Taught

The law was a “schoolmaster.” It introduced men to the concept of living unto God, and of the absolute need of devotion and consistency in the matter of serving Him. No person could take the Law seriously and be casual or halfhearted toward God.

Take this matter of making a vow unto the Lord – not a vow having to do with mundane matters, but one that involved giving oneself wholly to the Lord without distraction. How can anyone read the requirements for this vow and conclude that giving oneself to the Lord was something requiring little effort? What would possibly lead a person to think that a vow was not to be taken seriously. Breaking it was equated to sinning – even if it was inadvertent, like someone dropping dead in the presence of the one who had taken the vow.

My point is that the Jews had been raised to think of God differently than everyone else in the world. These Jewish believers had taken a vow in the most sober state of mind and holy rectitude. Some may argue that such a vow was not necessary, and that they were slaves to the Law. But that is not what our text says. These men were operating within the framework of a good conscience, not out of a sense of unwanted compulsion.

James would not ask Paul to accommodate himself to Jews who lacked a sober mind, or were contentious. These were devoted men, and therefore James gave his counsel.

BE AT CHARGES FOR THEM

“ . . . and be at charges with them, that they may shave their heads . . .” Other versions read “pay their expenses,” NKJV “pay for the shaving of their heads,” NRSV “make the necessary payment for them,” BBE and “pay their expenses [for the temple offering.]” AMPLIFIED

The expenses involved the offerings that were to be brought at the completion of the vow. In this case, and under the Law, four men would have required eight lambs, four rams, and four baskets of unleavened bread and wafers. Paul, then, took care of the expenses associated with those requirements. He did not primarily make offerings for himself, but paid for the offerings of the others.

Some Are Troubled by this Passage

Some have felt there was unwarranted compromise revealed here – that James and the elders were out of order in their counsel. Others feel that Paul did not yet understand the truth concerning liberty from the Law, and thus acquiesced to this bad counsel. However, Luke gives no hint of the impropriety of thinking in such a manner. Newness of life is not merely subjecting to a new code of conduct. It rather involves the possession of eternal life, and life is something that advances, or grows. An infant is not considered partially dead because they are not yet mature, and these believing Jews were not considered to be in error because they were observing some of the Jewish customs.

There were occasions when Paul would take care not to offend sincere Jews. There were other times when he would not submit to their whims for a single hour. Timothy and Titus are cases in point. Timothy had not been circumcised, although his mother was a Jewess. However, his father was not. Because of sincere Jews in that vicinity, Paul circumcised Timothy in order that they not be offended (Acts 16:3). Yet, when the Jews sought to compel Titus to be circumcised, Paul refused to do so (Gal 2:3). The difference in the two cases was the spiritual status of the people to whom Paul responded. One group was honest and good in heart, the other was factious

The nature of the liberty we have in Christ Jesus also ought to be noted. We are never free to be immoral in order to attract the immoral. Too, it is never in order to engage in sacrifices to false gods in order to influence idolaters.

Only those with spiritual understanding can react as James, the elders, and Paul did in this matter. This is not a realm where novices and those with little or no understanding are to traffic. Further, this is not something that can be adapted to every-day life. The occasion is special, the people were not ordinary, the ones giving the advice were advanced in the Lord, and Paul was certainly not a novice. This was not something he did every day, nor was it intended to establish a fixed pattern of conduct. Further, only those involved in the dissemination of the Word of God will even confront such a circumstance.

ALL MAY KNOW

“ . . . and all may know that those things, whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing . . .” Other versions read, “there is nothing to the things they have been told about you,” NASB “there is no truth in these reports,” NIV and “the statements made about you are not true.” BBE

This is the kind of assessment James, the elders, and Paul are seeking to avoid. In Romans, it had to do with the reaction of the Gentiles to Christian Jews who themselves were living in contradiction of the Law they professed to be following, In our text, the issue is believing Jews who have heard that this was the manner in which Paul lived – a word that was wholly false.

Notice, the purpose was not to directly influence the four men involved in this incident. It was rather to confirm to the great mass of Jews that Paul was not a mere reactionary. Like Jesus, he did not come to destroy the Law. His purpose was not to sever men from the Law, but to unite them to Christ. It was in that marvelous unity that the insufficiency of a ceremonial religion would be made clear. That is, it is in Divine light that they would “see light” (Psa 36:9).

YOU WALK ORDERLY AND KEEP THE LAW

“ . . . but that thou thyself also walkest orderly, and keepest the law.” Other versions read, “are living in obedience to the Law,” NIV “observe and guard the Law,” NRSV “live in observance of the Law,” RSV “put yourself under rule, and keep the Law,” BBE “are careful about observing the Law,” CSB “ you carefully follow Moses teachings,” GWN and “you yourself live in conformity with the Law.” NET

We must not forget the purpose of this action. It was to deal with a slanderous assessment of Paul’s ministry. That is why James and the elders gave this counsel. It was not so that Paul might be noted for upholding the Law, but so that it might be clear to all that he was not attacking the Law, or condemning the people who used some of its ceremonies to confirm their dedication to the Lord. The desire to the brethren was that Paul might be perceived correctly, and not incorrectly.

Elsewhere, Paul condemned believing Jews who were living in contradiction of the Law – a practice he by no means condoned. “Behold, thou art called a Jew, and restest in the law, and makest thy boast of God, and knowest His will, and approvest the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the law; and art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkness, an instructor of the foolish, a teacher of babes, which hast the form of knowledge and of the truth in the law. Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege? Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonourest thou God? For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is written” (Rom 2:17-24).

This is the kind of assessment James, the elders, and Paul are seeking to avoid. In Romans, it had to do with the reaction of the Gentiles to Christian Jews who themselves were living in contradiction of the Law they professed to be following, In our text, the issue is believing Jews who have heard that this was the manner in which Paul lived – a word that was wholly false.

Who does not know the impact of a preacher and teacher who opposes sin vigorously, then falls into sin himself? This has happened multiple times in our generation – nationally known ministers being found committing immorality. The whole matter is generally treated too lightly.

James and the elders themselves knew the real manner of Paul’s life. Otherwise they would not have given this counsel. Paul, on the other hand, was aware of the liberty he had in Christ Jesus. He knew the extent of that liberty, and was willing to use it to bring about a proper assessment of his ministry.

James and the elders themselves knew the real manner of Paul’s life. Otherwise they would not have given this counsel. Paul, on the other hand, was aware of the liberty he had in Christ Jesus. He knew the extent of that liberty, and was willing to use it to bring about a proper assessment of his ministry. However, he would not submit to factious notions and the binding of ceremonial religion upon him for a single moment (Gal 2:5).

It ought to be apparent that all of this can be lived out only by those who are mature in Christ Jesus, and possess “all wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9). Others should stand back from this subject, refusing to speculate about it. The church does not need additional opinions on this subject.

The Righteousness of the Law Fulfilled

Paul makes a salient statement concerning the righteousness of the Law in the eighth chapter of Romans. He declares the impotence of the Law to effect righteousness within men, and the effectiveness of the New Covenant in the realization of that righteousness. “For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us , who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit” (Rom 8:3-4).

Although the propensities to sin remain in us, being resident in “the old man,” through the Spirit we are now equal to their challenge. After all, “the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good” (Rom 7:12). It is also “spiritual” (Rom 7:14). By this, I understand Paul to mean that the Law speaks of a higher order of things – an order that is in perfect accord with the very nature of God. Although it was addressed to men, it was loftier than man, and required men to do what was beyond their ability. The term “the righteousness of the law” is not speaking of the detailed commandments of the Law, which were, for the time being, the established means to righteousness. But they were not the righteousness itself. “The righteousness of the law” is the summation of the law, encapsulated in the two great commandments: “And thou shalt love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might” (Deut 6:5), and “thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself: I am the LORD” (Lev 19:18) – Mk 12:30-31. This is what is fulfilled in those who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. In fulfilling this righteousness, all of the commandments are duly fulfilled as well, for they all hang upon their summation.

The reason for this circumstance is that God created man for Himself, and in order to fellowship with Himself. However, God is holy, and cannot fellowship with those who are unholy. Therefore, the Law was not a Divine accommodation to men, addressing them on the low level of flesh and blood. Rather, it imposed upon them a higher order of things that did not allow for self-centeredness and the gratification that goes with that condition.

Through the atoning death of Christ, in which God “condemned sin in the flesh” (Rom 8:3), it was ended as a means to righteousness. As it is written, “For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth” (Rom 10:4) – that is, as a means to righteousness. Now men are “made righteous” (Rom 5:19) apart from the Law, as it is imputed to them upon the basis of their faith. Thus it is written that “now the righteousness of God without the Law is manifested, being witnessed by the Law and the prophets” (Rom 3:31).

The death of Christ was the precise point at which the sin of the world was judged and taken away. When we are baptized into that death (Rom 6:2,4), so far as the Law is concerned, we are dead, for our sins were justly and completely removed. We became, in fact, “dead to the Law” (Rom 7:4) – and the Law has no power over a dead man, much as a dead husband has no more authority over a living wife (Rom 7:1-4).

Knowing this condition, Paul will be able to respond to the suggestion of James and the elders with a good conscience, and without violating the Law, or the spirit of life in Christ Jesus.

AS TOUCHING THE GENTILES WHICH BELIEVE

“ 25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, we have written and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication.”

Notice the care James takes in explaining this situation to Paul. He will make clear that what they have advised him to do is not a matter of doctrine. It was not something that they preached universally, nor was it something they were binding upon Paul and others. This occasion was unique, and called for a godly assessment and considerate conduct. Further, it was not a circumstance that permitted the truth to be disdained, the Law to be disobeyed, or the Gospel to be distorted. These are considerations that are forfeited when men pick up the sectarian banner.

TOUCHING THE GENTILES WHICH BELIEVE

“As touching the Gentiles which believe . . .” Other versions read, “concerning the Gentiles who believe,” NKJV “as for the Gentile believers,” NIV and “as to the Gentiles who have the faith.” BBE

Here is another confirmation of the necessity of wisdom in executing the will of the Lord. Those who can only operate according to a list of rules or procedures will not be able to function properly in the body of Christ. While there are certain procedures involved in living unto the Lord, they are not of a worldly order. The following are examples of such procedures.

- The procedure in approaching the Lord. “Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. (Heb 4:16).
- The procedure involved in drawing near to the Lord. “Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water” (Heb 10:22).
- The procedure involved in running the race set before us. “Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God” (Heb 12:1-2).

The difference in these procedures is found in their requirement for thought and discernment. Normally, procedures are an end of themselves.

In this text there is, from one point of view, a procedure being advocated. It involved Paul identifying himself with four men, going into the Temple with them, and being responsible for the expenses associated with the completion of their vow. Yet, strictly speaking, this was not a fixed procedure – that is , it was not something that applied to all believers, particularly Gentile believers. They required a different approach.

WE HAVE WRITTEN AND CONCLUDED

James establishes that their counsel to Paul was not intended to convey the thought that this is what they were teaching in their doctrine. It was rather an accommodation to the Jews who were zealous for the Law – not out of a sense of mere tradition, but in all good conscience toward God.

“ . . . we have written and concluded that they observe no such thing . . .” Other versions read, “written and decided that they should observe no such thing,” NKJV “written to them our decision,” NIV “sent a letter with our judgment,” NRSV “written, deciding that they should observe no such thing,” DOUAY “written and determined that they should observe no such thing,” GENEVA “written and concluded that they observe no such thing,” PNT/TNT and “written, having given judgment, that they observe no such thing.” YLT

As you can see, later versions omit the phrase “that they observe no such thing.” This is a play on the words “save only,” which are translated from the Greek expression εἰ μὴ, which means “except,” or “but.” STRONG’S The idea is that the Mosaic ordinances were not binding on the Gentiles, EXCEPT for the proscriptions that are mentioned. The letter, as recorded in the fifteenth chapter of Acts reads like this: “Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom we gave no such commandment . . . For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things ; That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well . Fare ye well” (Acts 15:24-29).

The point of the letter was that the Gentiles were not obligated to be circumcised, or to keep any other portion of the ceremonial law. That, of course, is the precise point that James is making in this text. By omitting the words “that they observe no such thing,” the translators have obscured this perspective, as though the reason for writing to the Gentile churches was to alert them do their duty. But that was not at all the purpose for the writing. Rather, it was to alert them to their freedom from the ceremonies bound by the Law.

ONLY THAT THEY

“ . . . save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication.”

The freedom of the Gentiles from the ceremonial law had these exceptions – eating meat offered to idols, eating blood, eating things that were strangled, and committing fornication. James establishes that their counsel to Paul was not intended to convey the thought that this is what they were teaching in their doctrine. It was rather an accommodation to the Jews who were zealous for the Law – not out of a sense of mere tradition, but in all good conscience toward God.

Men are not to tamper with the conscience of those who are sincerely serving the Lord – even though they may be doing things that technically belonged to the Old Covenant – with some exceptions, such as observing the day of atonement (Lev 16).

This text also confirms the Jews who believed were Christians – followers of Christ. They were not “devout Jews’ ” in the same sense as those who were present when Peter preached on the day of Pentecost. Those Jews were not referred to as believers until they had, in fact, believed on the Lord Jesus Christ.

This was not sin in the ordinary sense of the term i.e. a moral infraction of the Law. It is understood that the “sin offering” presented during the completion of the vow was not for any specific transgression, but for unconscious sins committed during the time of separation. This is referred to as a “sin through ignorance”

The Sacrifices for Sin

Some might point out that the sacrifices associated with the completion of a vow included “a sin offering” (Num 6:11,14,16). In case a person died suddenly in the presence of the one who had made a vow, the sin offering was to “make an atonement for him, by that he sinned by the dead” (Num 6:11) – that is, he was near a dead body, which was forbidden for one under the Nazarite vow. This was not sin in the ordinary sense of the term i.e. a moral infraction of the Law. It is understood that the “sin offering” presented during the completion of the vow was not for any specific transgression, but for unconscious sins committed during the time of separation. This is referred to as a “sin through ignorance” (Lev 4:2,13,27; 5:15; Num15:27). Owing to the fact that there are other prophetic considerations, I will deal more with this matter in an exposition of the 26 th verse.

When the book of Hebrews addressed the ineffectiveness of sacrifices made for sin, it referred to the day of atonement – annual sacrifices: “For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins” (Heb 10:4). The guidelines for that day contained the words “make an atonement” no less than twelve times (Lev 16:6,10,11,16,17, 18,24,30,33,34), and “make atonement” once (Lev 16:27).

While I do not wish to make an unwarranted issue of this matter, it helps to account for Paul’s willingness to pay for the expenses associated with the vow of these four men. The sacrifices, technically speaking, were not for sin itself, but were associated exclusively with the the vow that was made to serve the Lord.

PAUL PURIFIES HIMSELF

“ 26 Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them entered into the temple, to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them.”

Paul acquiesces to the words of James and the elders. He had been living by faith and walking in the Spirit, and was therefore able to quickly assess and discern what the word they delivered. This is one of the benefits of living “unto Him” who died for us and rose again (2 Cor 5:15). Some people are confused when they are given godly counsel or advice. But it is only because they have not been living by faith. The closer one is to the world, and the more absorbed in worldly matters they become, the less able they are to process spiritual wisdom.

PAUL TOOK THE MAN, PURIFYING HIMSELF WITH THEM

“Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them. . .” Other versions read, “purifying himself along with them,” NASB “having purified himself,” NRSV “making himself clean with them,” BBE “went through the purification ceremony with them,” GWN “was purified with them,” MRD “went with the men to the Temple for the ceremony,” LIVING and “[he went through the rites of] purifying himself along with them.” AMPLIFIED

Here Paul lives out what he said of himself: “And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law” (1 Cor 9:20). This kind of action cannot be satisfactorily explained to those who approach the New Covenant as though it was of the same order as the Old Covenant. The liberty that is realized in Christ Jesus is not freedom for the flesh, to follow its impulses and yield to its demands. It is rather a liberty to move about in the heavenly realms, and to act in consideration of the weaker brethren while not treating inferior ways of serving the Lord as though they were compulsory or forever tolerable.

Paul knew that there was nothing inherently wrong with making a vow to devote oneself to the Lord in a uniquely exclusive way for a limited period of time. Some might contend that this is how we are to live all of the time – and this is true, for we are to do whatever we do for the glory of God (Col 3:17). However, there are also special times, when we retreat from lawful involvements in order to give ourselves more fully to the Lord.

An Example of This Principle

In fact, this is the principle that is exhibited in fasting. Paul once admonished the married, “Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer ; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency” (1 Cor 7:5). This is the only doctrinal statement made concerning fasting in Acts through Revelation.

Examples of fasting recorded in the book of Acts include the following:

- Cornelius praying and fasting, during which time the angel of the Lord directed him (Acts 10:30).
- The brethren in the church at Antioch fasting, during which time the Holy Spirit called for the separation of Barnabas and Saul for a special work (Acts 13:2-3),
- Paul and Barnabas fasted when they ordained elders in every church (Acts 14:23).

In the Gospels, fasting is mentioned seven times.

- After He was baptized, Jesus fasted for forty days and forty nights (Matt 4:2).
- Jesus taught his disciples concerning how to conduct themselves when they fasted (Matt 6:16-18).
- Jesus told His disciples that the children did not fast when the Bridegroom was with them (Matt 9:14-15; Mk 2:18-20; Lk 5:34-35).
- Jesus said that some demons could be expelled only “by prayer and fasting” (Matt 17:21; Mk 9:29).
- Anna served God in the Temple with fastings and prayers (Lk 2:37).
- The disciples of John fasted often (Lk 5:33).
- Jesus spoke of a Pharisee that boasted he fasted “twice in the week” (Lk 18:12).

It is inconceivable that an official doctrine concerning fasting could be developed from these texts, or that fasting could be set forth as a regular part of life in Christ. However, many modern teachers have sought to do precisely this.

Conclusion

My point here is that giving a special period of time to the Lord, during which no other mundane things would occupy the attention of the individual, is lawful, but not compulsory. It was not the ordinary course of life, but was a means of adjusting one’s focus while forbidding the person to be distracted by lawful, but lesser, things.

This was the circumstance of the four men who were under a vow to God. Paul joined them by purifying himself in the same manner – i.e. setting himself apart for some exclusive involvement with the Lord. We do not know the duration of this purification, or the involvements contained in it. However, the motive behind it all was to confirm that Paul was not a mere reactionary against the Jewish manner of life. I gather that during this time he made an extended effort to ensure that this conclusion would be reached by those of honest and good hearts.

TO SIGNIFY THE ACCOMPLISHMENT OF THE DAYS OF PURIFICATION

Daniel was given to see the death of Christ and its significance. Although it is wrapped in some language that is attended with some difficulty, certain essential matters are clearly stated.

“ . . . entered into the temple to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification . . .” Other versions read, “to announce the expiration of the days of purification, at which time an offering should be made for each one of them,” NKJV “giving notice of the completion of the days of purification, until the sacrifice was offered for each one of them,” NASB “making public the completion of the days of purification when the sacrifice would be made for each of them,” NRSV “declaring the fulfilment of the days of purification, until the offering was offered for every one of them,” ASV “giving out the statement that the days necessary for making them clean were complete, till the offering was made for every one of them,” BBE “he went into the temple courtyard to announce the time when the purification would be over and the sacrifice would be offered for each of them,” GWN and “to give notice when the days of purification (the ending of each vow) would be fulfilled and the usual offering could be presented on behalf of each of them.”

AMPLIFIED

While the making of the vow was a personal thing, it was not a private matter. There was a kind of announcement of the vow itself, and when it would be brought to completion. From a practical point of view, this would alert the priest concerning the offerings to be made at that time. It would also be the time when Paul would make clear that he was going to underwrite the expenses associated with that ceremony. That is what is covered in the idea of signifying the accomplishment of the days of purification.

One can only imagine the impact that would be registered upon those who make vows to the Lord if they were made public where Christians gather.

UNTIL AN OFFERING

“ . . . until that an offering should be offered for every one of them.” Other versions read, “at which time an offering should be made,” NKJV “until the sacrifice was offered,” NASB “and the offering would be made,” NIV “when the sacrifice would be made,” NRSV “the presentation of the offering,” MRD “and the offering would be made,” NIB “the offering would be presented,” NJB “an offering would be offered,” PNT/TNT “till the offering was offered,” YLT “an offering would be given,” IE and “the usual offering could be presented.” AMPLIFIED

The word used here is “offering,” and is distinguished from “sacrifice.” The Greek word for “offering” is proshne,cqh , whereas the word for “sacrifice” is qusi,an . Both words are nouns. The first (“offering”) , as used in our text, is defined as, “an offering, bloody or not.” THAYER Most of the time this word if used in the New Covenant Scriptures, it does not have to do with bloody sacrifices (Acts 24:17; Rom 15:16; Eph 5:2). It is also used to depict the sacrifices under the Law (Heb 10:5,8,18), and the offering of the body of Christ (Heb 10:10,14).

The second (“sacrifice”) means “a victim.” THAYER This most generally has to do with offering something that was alive to God. The offering involved the taking of the life, or the shedding of blood (Matt 9:13; 12:7; Acts 7:41,42; 1 Cor 10:18; Eph 5:2; Heb 5:1; 7:27; 8:3; 9:9,23,26; 10:1,5,8,10,11,12,26; 11:4). Sometimes it is also used to depict the offering up of our lives to the Lord (Rom 12:1; Phil 1:27; 4:18; Heb 13:15,16; 1 Pet 2:5).

Daniel’s Prophecy

There is a prophecy declared by Daniel that bears upon this situation. It serves to remove some barriers that make an understanding of the verse difficult.

Daniel was given to see the death of Christ and its significance. Although it is wrapped in some language that is attended with some difficulty, certain essential matters are clearly stated.

- The Messiah would “finish the transgression,” inducting an era where the people would no longer live their lives in a state of sinfulness (9:24a).
- During His time, the Messiah would “make an end of sins” (9:24b); i.e. take them away.

- He would “make reconciliation for iniquity” (9:24c).
- He would “bring in everlasting righteousness” (9:24d).

There are no examples of anyone offering animal sacrifices to God in the book of Acts. The only text that offers any possibility of such a thing is the one we are presently considering – and nothing specific is said about animal sacrifices in it.

He would put the “seal” of completion upon “the vision and prophecy,” validating them by fulfilling what they made known (9:24e).

- He would “anoint the most Holy” [place], allowing for the entrance of the people (9:24f).
- The main purpose for the maintenance of Jerusalem was in order for the presence of the Messiah, Jesus Christ (9:25).
- The Messiah would be “cut off,” or die, but not because of any transgression of His own (9:26).
- He would cause the cessation of the sacrifice and oblation (9:27).

The Cessation of the Sacrifice

It is this last item – causing the sacrifice and oblation to cease – that is of particular relevance to this text. I understand Daniel’s prophecy to mean that Christ’s death officially invalidated all animal sacrifices, and that with the passing of time, the practice would cease. Because these sacrifices were associated with the Temple, when the Temple was destroyed, all of the ceremonies tied to it also went away. The priesthood passed, the altar, and the sacrifices. They have not been practiced from that time (70 AD). The invalidation of the sacrifices was confirmed at that time.

In addition to this, there is no evidence that they existed after Christ’s death. In all of the New Covenant Scriptures, there is only one particular animal sacrifice mentioned. It was when Joseph and Mary came to the Temple to dedicate the infant Jesus. At that time they brought a pair of turtledoves, or two young pigeons (Lk 2:24). Prior to Christ’s death, we assume some were offering sacrifices, for animals were being sold in the Temple for that purpose (John 2:14,15; Matt 21:12). Some also told Jesus of some Galileans “whose blood Pilate mingled with their sacrifices” (Lk 13:1). However, the details of such sacrifices are not provided.

There are no examples of anyone offering animal sacrifices to God in the book of Acts. The only text that offers any possibility of such a thing is the one we are presently considering – and nothing specific is said about animal sacrifices in it.

How likely is it that Christian Jews would offer animal sacrifices under such circumstances? How likely is it that they would be ignorant of Daniel’s prophecy, or not be aware of the oblation of animal sacrifices? Although the Temple is mentioned twenty-five times in the book of Acts, there is not a single reference to any bloody sacrifice being offered in it (2:46; 3:1,2,3,8,10; 4:1; 5:20,21,24,25,42; 19:27; 21:26,27,28,29,30; 22:17; 24:6,12,18; 25:8; 26:21).

I therefore conclude that Paul could be at charges for the offerings associated with the making of a vow, and do so without any violation of his conscience. The only kind of offering that would violate the redemption that is in Christ Jesus is a bloody offering, and there is no evidence that any such offering was made.

Four Views in the Christian Community

There are a number of differing views concerning this passage. Here are four of them. With the possible exception of the last one, the others are not worthy of comment.

- Some suggest the event never happened; it is alleged that Luke fabricated the incident in order to show that Paul was a law-abiding Jew.
- Others argue that the apostle was sincere in yielding to this procedure; he simply did not fully understand at this point that the law had been abrogated.
- Many allege that Paul, in a moment of weakness, knowingly sinned, yielding to the pressure.
- Some contend that the apostle's actions were a matter of expediency in a unique time-period when certain elements of the Mosaic system (particularly civil/ceremonial) gradually were passing away.

The following is a statement of the case from the author of New Testament Notes: “We cannot be certain that the advice was just right, or that Paul did just right to comply, but these grand men acted according to their knowledge, and the record of Acts portrays both the shortcomings and the perfection of its great worthies. Concerning this advice of James and compliance of Paul, Pres. Milligan says: ‘Three different views have been taken: (1) that Paul in this case acted ignorantly, not being aware of the fact that the law of Moses was no longer binding; (2) that, like Peter, he acted from fear of the Jewish brethren (Gal 2:11); (3) that he acted in conformity with the law of Christian benevolence which requires us to respect even the weaknesses and prejudices of our brethren, so far as this can be done without in any way neglecting the requirements of the Gospel.’”

WHEN THE SEVEN DAYS WERE ENDED

“ 27 And when the seven days were almost ended, the Jews which were of Asia, when they saw him in the temple, stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him, 28 Crying out, Men of Israel, help: This is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place: and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.”

SEVEN DAYS WERE ALMOST ENDED

“And when the seven days were almost ended . . .” Other versions read, “the seven days were nearly over,” NIV “the seven days were almost over,” NRSV and “When the seven days were drawing to a close.” AMPLIFIED

This pertains to the announcement made by Paul, when “he went to the Temple to give notice of the date when the days of purification would end” (21:26). Apparently seven days were announced, during which the ones who made the vows would be made even more alert concerning their determination. Also, depending on the nature of the vow, the eyes of the people would be upon them. Apparently the men and Paul went to the Temple every day during this period. No doubt they were praying and engaging in solemnities that made for a sober mind and more keenly focused their attention on what they had vowed.

THE JEWS FROM ASIA

“ . . .the Jews which were of Asia, when they saw him in the temple, stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him . . . ”

There was a public nature to religion that was cultured in Judaism. While every conscientious person attended to private matters relating to himself and God, there was a public nature to religious life that was woven throughout the fabric of Jewish life. The Law fostered communal religion, with frequent gatherings. The activities in the Temple and the synagogues confirm this to be the case. Also, the multitudes that went out to hear John, and to see and hear Jesus reflect this kind of culture. This carried over into the church, as the believers were continually together in both the Temple and various homes (Acts 1:4,6,14; 2:1,6,44,46; 4:24; 5:12; 12:12; 14:27; 15:30; 20:7-8; 21:22).

The Christians were not the only ones in the Temple. There were also some Jews from Asia who were opponents of Paul. They had no doubt come to observe the feast. Now they see Paul in the Temple – something they probably did not expect to see. Immediately they begin to stir up the people, agitating those who had come to the “house of prayer” (Isa 56:7; Matt 21:13). Other versions read, “stirred up the whole crowd,” NKJV “set all the crowd in a tumult,” DARBY and “incited all the rabble.” AMPLIFIED

Finally, in a display of fleshly animosity they “laid hands” on Paul. Other versions read, “seized him,” NIV “grabbed him.” BBE This was an act of violence, the people forcefully taking hold of Paul as though he was a common criminal.

THE CHARGES AGAINST PAUL

“Crying out, Men of Israel, help: This is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place: and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.”

These Jews from Asia, however, poured lies out of their mouth, falsely charging Paul, who carried in his heart a great burden for them. However, Satan so blinds the hearts of sinners that they cannot recognize the only people on the face of the earth who have their genuine interest in heart.

Help!

Other versions read, “Come to our aid,” NASB “help us,” NIV and “Help! Help!” LIVING Judging from their cries, you would have thought they were trying to wrestle Samson to the ground. This was a man whose bodily presence was “weak” (2 Cor 10:10). He apparently bore no outward resemblance to the mighty warrior that he was within. However, even these Jews from Asia knew there was a sense in which he was a formidable opponent.

One thing that is confirmed by this whole incident, the opponents of the Gospel have the undeniable characteristic of lying – like their father the devil who “is a liar” (John 8:44). This is a trait of those who do not know the Father, as affirmed by Jesus Himself: “Yet ye have not known Him ; but I know Him: and if I should say, I know him not, I shall be a liar like unto you : but I know him, and keep his saying” (John 8:55).

Teaches Against the Jews

“ . . . teaches all men everywhere against the people” [the Jews]. It is true that, like Jesus and Stephen, Paul had spoken against some of the Jews. Jesus said, “The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation , and shall condemn it: because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here” (Mat 12:41). Stephen said to the Sanhedrin, “Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye ” (Acts 7:51).

Paul had also upbraided certain Jews. “It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life , lo, we turn to the Gentiles” (Acts 13:46). And again, “ Your blood be upon your own heads ; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles” (Acts 18:6).

However, none of these rebukes was owing to the people being Jews. It was their unbelief that prompted such words to be spoken. Far from speaking against the Jews, Paul testified “That I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh” (Rom 9:2-3).

These Jews from Asia, however, poured lies out of their mouth, falsely charging Paul, who carried in his heart a great burden for them. However, Satan so blinds the hearts of sinners that they cannot recognize the only people on the face of the earth who have their genuine interest in heart.

Teaches Against the Law

“ . . . teaches all men everywhere against . . . the Law.”

This too is an utterly false charge. In fact, Paul was in the very act of fulfilling a vow according to the Law. This is the very man who said of the Law, “by the Law is the knowledge of sin” (Rom 3:20); “the Law is holy, and the commandment holy, just, and good” (Rom 7:12); and “the Law is spiritual” (Rom 7:14). With his mind, he served the Law of God (Rom 7:25), and taught that in Christ “the righteousness of the Law” is fulfilled (Rom 8:4). However, again they lied, thinking nothing of it, though they could not cite a syllable in which Paul had defamed the Law. That is how blind they were.

Teaches Against the Temple

“ . . . teaches all men everywhere against . . . this place” [the Temple]. Paul was in the Temple, and had been for several days – yet he had spoken no word against the Temple. It is true that he had reminded the Athenians that God “dwelleth not in Temples made with hands” (Acts 17:24). However, Solomon said the same thing (1 Kgs 8:27; 2 Chron 6:18). Isaiah declared the same (Isa 66:1). However, none of those lying Jews had charged those ancients with speaking against the Temple.

Polluted the Temple

“ . . . and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.” Here is a vague reference to a word spoken by God through Jeremiah. “The adversary hath spread out his hand upon all her pleasant things: for she hath seen that the heathen entered into her sanctuary , whom thou didst command that they should not enter into thy congregation” (Lam 1:10). The general commandment was given through Moses, “An Ammonite or Moabite shall not enter into the congregation of the LORD; even to their tenth generation shall they not enter into the congregation of the LORD for ever” (Deut 23:3; Neh 13:1). Ezekiel referred to the same proscription (Ezek 44:7).

We will find, however, that these men had not properly assessed the situation.

THEY HAD SEEN PAUL WITH TROPHIMUS

“ 29 (For they had seen before with him in the city Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.)”

Those who foment trouble, agitating sacred surroundings, and opposing the people of God, are always loose in their speech. They do not speak in accord with the facts of the case, and are quick to assume things that are not true. That, course, is a characteristic of the devil himself, as confirmed in the case of Job (Job 1:9-11; 2:4-5). Those who employ such tactics make known that they are being controlled by Satan.

THEY HAD SEEN HIM BEFORE

We also see in this text the vigilance of the Jews in keeping their eye upon Paul. This is the city of Jerusalem, and the believing Jews alone numbered in the tens of thousands (21:20). It is good to aim at being more diligent for the Lord than His enemies are against Him and His people.

“For they had seen before with him in the city Trophimus an Ephesian . . .” Other versions read, “For they had previously seen Trophimus the Ephesian with him in the city.” NKJV

Trophimus was from Asia, in which Ephesus was located, and had joined Paul after he had left Macedonia (Acts 20:4). He had tarried with others in Troas, awaiting the arrival of Paul from Philippi (Acts 20:5). Paul had joined them in Troas where they remained for seven days (Acts 20:6). He had continued with Paul when he went to Miletus, from whence he called the elders at the church in Ephesus (Acts 20:14-17). He then continued with Paul to Coos, Rhodes, Patara, Phenicia, Tyre, Ptolemais, and Caesarea, from whence they had departed to Jerusalem (Acts 21:1-17). This is quite a commentary on this man, whom we assume was relatively young.

We also see in this text the vigilance of the Jews in keeping their eye upon Paul. This is the city of Jerusalem, and the believing Jews alone numbered in the tens of thousands (21:20). It is good to aim at being more diligent for the Lord than His enemies are against Him and His people.

THEY SUPPOSED

“ . . . whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.” Other versions read, “and assumed that Paul had brought him into the temple area,” NIV and “and they supposed that he had brought the man into the temple [into the inner court forbidden to Gentiles].” AMPLIFIED

The text does not say that Paul brought Trophimus into the Temple – particularly in regards to being associated with the four Jews who had taken a vow. Notice how they did not make a special note of Paul’s identity with those men, even though he had publically declared the time their vow would be completed. Instead, they assumed that Paul had brought Trophimus into the Temple.

Now they agitate the people, who were devout Jews observing a feast of the Lord. They were presently in the Temple, conscious of the Lord to some degree, when they hear these shouting Jews from Asia, warning them that someone has defiled the Temple area.

It is enough to say at this point that those who stir up strife have no good in mind. That is why reason why the Lord especially hates the one who “sows discord among brethren” (Prov 6:19). James taught that the existence of strife is the result of wisdom that is “earthly, sensual, devilish” (James 3:14-15).

Thus, in the text before us, Satan works through some of his own people, as he is wont to do, attempting to disrupt the ministry of the apostle Paul. This event, as well as those that follow, confirm the prophecies that had been uttered before, preparing Paul for this kind of opposition. All through his journey he had been warned of the conflict he would have in Jewrusalem.

ALL THE CITY WAS MOVED

“ 30 And all the city was moved, and the people ran together: and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple: and forthwith the doors were shut. ”

It is well written, “For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work” (James 3:16). Strife is like a great door through which iniquity comes in like a flood. Whoever seeks to stir it up is to be rebuked, and no tolerance is to be given to it. In describing the life of faith, Paul says it is not to be done “in strife” (Rom 13:13). He also states that “strife” is evidence of carnality, which puts one at enmity with God Almighty (1 Cor 3:3; Rom 8:7). “Strife” is a work of the flesh, which excludes men from the kingdom of God (Gal 5:20-21). The people of God are admonished to “let nothing be done through strife” (Phil 2:3). It is most unfortunate that throughout history the professing church has been unduly noted for strife. It is one of the great contradictions that is fostered by Babylon the Great.

ALL THE CITY WAS MOVED

“And all the city was moved, and the people ran together . . .” Other versions read, “all the city was disturbed,” NKJV “all the city was aroused, and the people came from all directions,” NIV “the whole city was stirred up,” CSB “the whole city was in an uproar,” DOUAY “The whole city was in chaos, and a mob formed,” GWN and “the whole city was aroused and thrown into confusion.”
AMPLIFIED

The rumor quickly spread, and soon the city, teeming with thousands of people, was in a state of uproaring confusion. It was akin to the condition of Ephesus, when the silversmiths caused an uproar over Paul’s presence and ministry: “the whole city was filled with confusion” (Acts 19:32). The people gave leave of their senses, and, thinking Paul was speaking against the Jews, the Law, and the Temple, they rushed together, boiling over with wrath and confusion. All of this was caused by a lie.

I cannot help but note that this was a religious cause. It was not a political uprising, or a crusade against some form of social discontent. It was because the people thought their religion was being attacked and reproached.

Compare that with the attacks being made on Christianity in our day: against those who are called Christians, against the Bible, and against places where Christians gather. This is not to mention the corruption that is taking place in the matter of doctrine. The preaching of “another Jesus,” “another spirit,” and “another gospel” now dominates the Christian scene (2 Cor 11:4). While the proper form of objection would not be the forming of a mob and the dissemination of lies, it seems strange to me that so very little objection is being registered in some civil way. There are a few who are speaking out, but for the most part, there is a strange aura of silence that has fallen upon professing church. This circumstance is largely owing to a disinterest in the truth, and a fundamental ignorance in the Gospel. That is a condition that is beneath even the rabble-rousing Jews in this text.

THEY TOOK PAUL

“ . . . and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple . . .” Other versions read, “seized Paul, and dragged him out of the Temple,” NKJV “taking hold of Paul, they dragged him out of the Temple,” NASB and “Paul was grabbed and dragged out of the Temple.” NLT

Thinking that the Temple was being polluted, the mob seized Paul and forcibly removed him from the Temple. This was not a gentle removing, but one driven by irrational frenzy. There was no doubt a lot of pain and discomfort realized by Paul in this severe and hostile removal. Later, Paul will declare the total absence of any true cause for this action: “And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city” (Acts 24:12).

THE DOORS WERE SHUT

“ . . . and forthwith the doors were shut.” Other versions read, “immediately, the doors were shut,” NKJV “immediately the gates were shut,” NIV and “immediately the gates were closed.”
AMPLIFIED

THE 10 GATES OF HEROD’S TEMPLE

Of the gates of the outer courts of Herod's temple, nine were covered with gold and silver, as well as the posts and lintels; but the middle one, the Beautiful Gate (Acts 3:2), was made entirely of Corinthian brass, and was considered to surpass the others far in costliness (Joseph. War, 5:5, 3). This gate, which was so heavy as to require twenty men to close it, was unexpectedly found open on one occasion shortly before the close of the siege (Josephus War, 6:5,3; Ap. 2:9).

Although there were a number of gates in the Temple complex, it is understood that these were the doors, or gates, leading into the Temple proper. This was the area where only Jews were allowed, and was accessed through “The Great Gate,” as it was called in Herod’s Temple.

Thus, not only is Paul himself removed from the Temple area reserved for the Jews, the doors are shut so that no one can enter. The fact that this occurred during the time of a feast made no difference to the opponents of Paul. Their hatred for him was so great it had consumed them.

CONCLUSION

Thus the stage is set for Paul’s voyage to Rome. It will take some time for him to actually arrive there, but this single event commenced his total withdrawal from Jerusalem and Israel in order to the fulfillment of him preaching the Gospel in Rome. This whole matter will ultimately consummate in his martyrdom.

All of this will be worked together for the good of Paul, and for the good of believers in later generations as well. These experiences were not pleasant, to be sure, but they were right in the heart of the will of God. May the Lord deliver us from naive notions about what is involved in serving the Lord! Those who would partake of the life of Christ, must also partake of His sufferings. This is done by measure, and in strict accord with the place in which the members have been placed in the body of Christ.

WHEN ALL JERUSALEM WAS IN AN UPROAR

“ 21:31 ”And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jerusalem was in an uproar. 32 Who immediately took soldiers and centurions, and ran down unto them: and when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul. 33 Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done. 34 And some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle. 35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence of the people. 36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, Away with him. 37 And as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek? 38 Art not thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers? 39 But Paul said, I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people. 40 And when he had given him licence, Paul stood on the stairs, and beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying.” (Acts 21:31-40)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

The stage is being set for the final phase of Paul’s ministry. The hardness of certain Jews will be confirmed. Assurance will also be ministered to Paul through the ordeal that follows. It must be seen that the rejection of Christ awakens animosity and depraved ways of reasoning that cannot be thoroughly explained or controlled by men. If the sin of which the Holy Spirit convicts men is not believing on Christ (John 16:9), then it should not surprise us that Satan is especially active in such a transgression. Men are deprived of true wisdom and sanity when they reject the Lord's Christ, becoming like brute beasts. However, even though this is true, the Lord is still "over all," and will manage the anger of men so that it does not interfere with His determinations. This is taught in Scripture, as well as demonstrated in the lives of His servants. As we go through this incident these things will become more and more apparent to the sensitive heart, contributing to confidence and a strong hope. What God does perfectly agrees with what He says.

THE ACTS OF GOD

The "acts" of God are the outward manifestation of His will. They also reflect His determinations, and the total inability of man to interfere with them. The Psalmist highlighted this when he wrote, "He made known His ways unto Moses, His acts unto the children of Israel" (Psa 103:7). Those "acts" were in perfect concert with God's "ways," which He "made known" to Moses, even though the Israelites failed to correlate them in their thinking. For example, God revealed Himself to Moses as "merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation" (Ex 34:6-7). This perfectly agrees with the way in which He made known His acts to Israel.

MERCIFUL AND GRACIOUS AND ABUNDANT IN GOODNESS AND TRUTH.

- Delivering Israel from Egypt (Ex 12:27; Psa 78:42; 107:6).
- Bringing them through the Red Sea on dry ground (Ex 14:22; Psa 106:9; 136:13).
- Destroying Pharaoh and his armies before their faces (Ex 14:30-31).
- Giving them daily manna (Ex 16:35)..
- Providing them with water like a river out of a rock (Ex 17:6; Num 20:8-11; Psa 78:16).
- Protecting them through their journey through the wilderness (Deut 8:15; Psa 136:16).
- Mandating that their clothes and shoes did not wear out (Deut 8:4).
- Making them superior to enemies that were greater than they (Num 14:9; Deut 4:38; 7:1).

- Giving them an oasis in the desert (Ex 15:27).

KEEPING MERCY FOR THOUSANDS, FORGIVING INIQUITY AND TRANSGRESSION AND SIN

- At the prayer of Moses, stopped the fire He sent from consuming all of the people (Num 11:2).
- Not utterly destroying the Israelites when they murmured, providing a remedy (Num 21:7-9).

Pardoning them when they did not deserve it (Num 14:20).

- Forgiving their iniquity and not destroying them (Psa 78:38).
- Redeeming and leading them, although they were unworthy (Ex 15:13).
- Giving the promised land to the survivors of the desert.

BY NO MEANS CLEARING THE GUILTY, VISITING THE INIQUITY OF THE FATHERS UPON THE CHILDREN

- Destroying Korah and his rebels, with their families (Num 16:27-35).
- In a single plague, owing to the obstinance of Israel, destroyed 14,100 (Num 16:49).
- Sent poisonous snakes among the people when they spoke against God and Moses (Num 21:5-6).
- Because of the mingling with the Moabites, God sent a plague upon Israel that killed 24,000 (Num 25:9).
- When the people complained, He sent a fire that consumed those dwelling in the uttermost part of the camp (Num 11:1-2).
- Pledged to blot out the remembrance of the Amalekites (Deut 25:19).
- To their tenth generation, forbade an Ammonite or a Moabite to enter into the congregation of the Lord (Deut 23:3).

OBSERVATIONS

No person who perceives the harmony between God's ways and acts will ever ask, "Why did the Lord do . . . ?" Israel asked, "Why came we forth out of Egypt?" (Num 11:20). "Why have ye brought the congregation of the Lord into this wilderness?" (Num 20:4). A hard heart and a stiff neck are disabling, rendering the person possessing them incapable of seeing the glorious harmony between the ways of God and His acts. This is compounded when one realizes that there is a very real sense in which "all things are of God" (2 Cor 5:18). Again, it is written, "For of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things : to whom be glory for ever. Amen" (Rom 11:36). Not only does every good and perfect gift come down from Him (James 1:17), but even calamity, for He brings prosperity and creates disaster NIV (Isa 45:7).

These days, there is not enough being said about the ways of the Lord. However, those ways are seen throughout the inspired record of Luke, and it is on the part of wisdom to be diligent to perceive those ways and conform our lives to them.

The various attributes of God working together is seen in a most unusual way in the case of Jonah.

- God sent a prophet to declare His judgment (Jonah 1:2).
- He sent out a great wind and a mighty tempest in the sea (Jonah 1:4).
- He prepared a great fish to swallow Jonah (Jonah 1:17).

- He spoke to the fish to vomit Jonah out on dry land (Jonah 2:10).
- He prepared a gourd to bring relief to Jonah (Jonah 4:2).
- He prepared a worm to cause the gourd to wither (Jonah 4:6).
- He rebuked the prophet for his lack of understanding (Jonah 4:10-11).
- He spared Nineveh, their children, and their cattle when the people repented (Jonah 11).

There you have the same God, working within the same purpose, calling a prophet, judging a prophet, delivering a prophet, comforting a prophet, rebuking a prophet, and challenging a prophet concerning the Divine character. It would be entirely out of order to question why the Lord sent a vicious storm, or caused Jonah to pass through the ordeal of spending three days and three nights in the belly of a great fish, or caused a comforting gourd to die. It would be just as reasonable to ask why He spared Jonah delivered him, and gave power to his words. It is still entirely out of order to question God. That is why Paul did not raise such questions to the Lord.

The salvation of God is the pinnacle of demonstration of the ways and acts of the Lord being harmonious. Prophesying of this harmony the Psalmist spoke of the attributes of God being brought together in Christ Jesus. "Surely His salvation is nigh them that fear Him; that glory may dwell in our land. Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven?" (Psa 85:9-11).

These days, there is not enough being said about the ways of the Lord. However, those ways are seen throughout the inspired record of Luke, and it is on the part of wisdom to be diligent to perceive those ways and conform our lives to them.

INTENTIONS AND DIVINE CONTROL

" 21:31 "And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jerusalem was in an uproar."

It is well to remember that we are not reading about domestic, social, or political disturbance. This tumult is within the realm of religion. Those involved are serious in their contentions, thinking that they are doing what is right before God – in this case, "the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob." The aggressors are intent on subduing what they perceive as a threat against truth. The victim of the aggression is being persecuted for his proclamation of the truth of God. Even though oppressors have affirmed that Paul has spoken against them, their temple, and their Law, this is not true. It is the result of their hard hearts and blindness. The aggressiveness of Paul is found in his preaching and teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ. The contentiousness of the Asian Jews is owing to their embrace of a traditional view of the Law, and their misapprehension of the purpose of that Law.

While I do not wish to dwell upon this, I do want to briefly draw your attention to the near-total absence of this kind of religious persuasion in our day. There is staggering amount of religious apathy in our time, which has made it easy for unbelievers to spout their tainted opinions and market their views. But a firm commitment to the truth is not at all common. However, should the time come when the fervency of the early church once again surfaces, the kind of opposition that is chronicled in this text will no doubt rise again. Should this actually come to pass, the faithful will experience the Divine aid that was made known in Paul.

THEY WENT ABOUT TO KILL HIM

"And as they went about to kill him . . ." Other versions read, "they were seeking to kill him," NKJV "they were trying to kill him," NIV and "attempting to put him to death." BBE

The language confirms these Jews were zealous in their attempts, being creative as well. Perceiving he was a threat to their entire way of life, they were seeking any means available to them to end the life of Paul. This is an example what Paul said was being “in perils by mine own countrymen” (1 Cor 11:26).

The Psalmist succinctly stated this kind of intention, himself experiencing the very same kind of opposition.

- “With hypocritical mockers in feasts, they gnashed upon me with their teeth. Lord, how long wilt thou look on? rescue my soul from their destructions, my darling from the lions. I will give thee thanks in the great congregation: I will praise thee among much people” (Psa 35:16-18)
- “The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth. The Lord shall laugh at him: for He seeth that his day is coming” (Psa 37:13).
- “The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him” The LORD will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged” (Psa 37:33).
- “The wicked have laid a snare for me: yet I erred not from thy precepts” (Psa 119:110).
- “Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped. Our help is in the name of the LORD, who made heaven and earth” (Psa 124:7-8).
- “The proud have hid a snare for me, and cords; they have spread a net by the wayside; they have set gins for me. Selah. I said unto the LORD, Thou art my God: hear the voice of my supplications, O LORD. O GOD the Lord, the strength of my salvation, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle” (Psa 140:6-7).
- “When my spirit was overwhelmed within me, then thou knewest my path. In the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a snare for me. I looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know me: refuge failed me; no man cared for my soul. I cried unto thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my refuge and my portion in the land of the living” (Psa 142:3-5).

These are opposing thoughts put into the minds of men by the devil – fiery darts that have no known depth of depravity. Faith is fully able to overcome such thoughts, for it is the victory that overcomes the world (1 John 5:4). It can stop despair from taking over the heart, and cast down foreboding imaginations that debilitate and discourage. This is the doctrine of scripture. The book of Acts fleshes out that doctrine in a record of the behavior and responses of men and women of faith.

There are several things to note of occasions such as the one in our text. These conditions are expressed in the psalmic expressions noted above.

- The plans of the wicked against the just caused no concern in heaven. They were the occasion of the laughter of derision.
- The righteous were unmoved by the threats, continuing to serve the Lord and maintain their faith in Him.
- The targets for oppression sought Divine aid.
- The wicked did not realize the fulfillment of their purposes.
- The deliverance of the righteous became the occasion for praise to God.

All of this is accomplished within a very real context. Scripture defines that circumstance in various ways.

• God is the ultimate King. “For the LORD most high is terrible; He is a great King over all the earth” (Psa 47:2).

• God governs the nations. “For the kingdom is the LORD'S: and He is the Governor among the nations” (Psa 22:28).

• Everything is being worked for the good of God'[s people. “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose” (Rom 8:28).

• All things are ultimately traced to God. “For of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen” (Rom 11:36).

We can read the book of Acts with an emphasis on the successes and woes of the people involved – the extremities of human experience. Or, by the grace of God, we can read with a mind to behold in its factual accounts the governorship and faithfulness of God, the superiority of faith, and the futility of unbelief. I recommend the latter.

TIDINGS CAME TO THE CHIEF CAPTAIN

“ . . . tidings came unto the chief captain of the band . . .” Other versions read, “news came to the commander of the garrison,” NKJV “a report came to the commander of the Roman cohort,” NASB “news reached the commander of the Roman troops,” NIV “word came to the tribune of the cohort,” NRSV “tidings came to the chief captain of the band,” ASV “word reached the commander of the Roman battalion,” CJB “word went up to the commander of the regiment,” CSB and “the commandant of the regular Roman garrison.” AMPLIFIED

The various translations refer to this military leader was “chief captain,” “commander,” “tribune,” and “commandant.” The military personal over which he had command are referred to as “band,” “garrison,” “Roman cohort,” “troops,” “Roman battalion,” “regiment,” and “the thousand-chief of the band.” INTERLINEAR

The Greek words used have the following lexical meaning. “Chief captain” (cilia,rcw |): “chiliarch, commander of a thousand soldiers; in Roman military organization tribune, commander of a Roman cohort of about 600 soldiers; generally high-ranking officer, chief captain, equivalent to a major or colonel,” FRIBERG “tribune (a high ranking military officer generally in charge of 600-1000 men), officer, high ranking office,” UBS “tribune (a high ranking military officer generally in charge of 600-1000 men), officer, high ranking officer,” LOUW-NIDA “the commander of a thousand men, a chiliarch,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “captain over a thousand men,” LEH and “military tribune, commander of a cohort, about 600 men, roughly equivalent to major or colonel.” GINGRICH

The Greek word translated “band” (spei,rhj) has the following lexical meaning: “the tenth part of a legion (I. e. about 600 men (I. e. legionaries), or if auxiliaries either 500 or 1,000,” THAYER “cohort, battalion, a Roman military technical term for the tenth part of a legion, normally containing 600 troops,” FRIBERG “cohort (the tenth part of a Roman legion having about 600 men), band of soldiers,” UBS “a Roman military unit of about six hundred soldiers, though only a part of such a cohort was often referred to as a cohort - 'cohort, band of soldiers,’” LOUW-NIDA “ a body of men-at-arms, the Roman manipulus,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “tactical unit, division,” LEH and “cohort (normally about 600 soldiers).” GINGRICH

Those who imagine that the Greek is the exclusive means through which clarity of Scripture can be achieved ought to take note of the variance found in the differing Greek lexicons on this word.

This captain is named in Acts 23:26 as “Claudius Lysias.” Most Bible and Greek scholars are of the opinion that, as a captain, he was over one thousand soldiers, whereas a centurion was over one hundred. I will proceed accepting this postulate, that this captain was over one thousand soldiers.

Later we will find that these were also divided into groups, with leaders over each section.

These soldiers were apparently stationed near the Temple to ensure the maintenance of order in the city. Remember, this was the feast of Pentecost, and the city was filled with Jews from around the world. The number was probably in the millions. James had told Paul that “thousands” of them were believers, which were no doubt the vast minority of the total number.

It ought to be apparent that Paul had desired to be in Jerusalem during the feast of Pentecost because of this great number of Jews. He had begun his new life in Christ by testifying to the Jews (Acts 9:20,29), and a considerable amount of his ministry of several years doing the same (Acts 13:5-50; 14:1-4; 16:3; 17:1-4, 10-12,17; 18:4-5,19; 19:8-10).

In nearly all of his ministry among his own people he faced severe opposition from unbelieving Jews – just as he is doing in our text. However, the Lord so worked in each situation that Paul was delivered, and enabled to continue his ministry until the time he would be called home. It is no different in this text. We are witnessing the Lord protected Paul until he could finish his testimony.

This is how the Lord works, and the record of Him doing so is intended to buoy up the hearts of the saints, enabling them to have a strong faith and hope, and not to fear what men can do unto them. As it is written, “So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me” (Heb 13:6).

ALL JERUSALEM WAS IN AN UPROAR

“ . . . that all Jerusalem was in an uproar.” Other versions read, “confusion,” NASB “out of control,” BBE “in turmoil,” CJB “in a tumult,” CSB “rioting,” GWN “in a ferment,” WEYMOUTH “stirred up,” EMTV and “boiling over.” MESSAGE The lexical meaning of the word translated “uproar” is, “to disturb . . . to stir up to tumult or outbreak, to confound or bewilder,” THAYER “confuse, stir up, cause dismay,” FRIBERG “to cause consternation, to confound,” LOUW-NIDA and “to be thrown into confusion.” LEH

Let it be clear that this was the report given to the captain. It represented what appeared to be the case, namely that things were out of control in Jerusalem. A situation was in place that had, men thought, spilled over the wall of control or restraint. However, this was not at all the case. God was not merely monitoring the situation, but was in full control of it.

In fact, it is His control that caused the report to come to the captain. Speaking of this kind of control Solomon wrote, “Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bedchamber: for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter” (Eccl 10:20). Everything and everyone capable of delivering a message of any kind are in the army of the Lord. They are all His servants, whether they are aware of it or not. This is one of the many reasons why God is fully able to work everything together for the good of those who love Him, and are called according to His purpose (Rom 8:28). In fact, that is precisely what is happening in our text! Among a teeming multitude probably numbering in the millions, and in the midst of confusing uproar and a seemingly uncontrollable situation, an appropriate word is delivered to the captain of a large number of soldiers, whose job it is to keep order. How likely is it that something like that could take place randomly or by chance?

THINGS TO BE LEARNED FROM THIS EVENT

Because the Word of God is living and powerful (Heb 4:12), it is an active teacher, always delivering things vital to spiritual life. Here are some things we can learn from this text.

- For the believer, no facet of life is out of control.

- God is working everything together for our good, causing all things to blend together to serve a gracious purpose.
- Tumult is not what it appears to be.
- Sometimes God allows things to seem like they are out of control, thereby testing our faith.
- God does not always use apparently miraculous means to bring an end to trouble.
- Divine control does not always appear to be control.
- God does not always appear to men to be King over all the earth.
- God does not always appear to be governing the affairs of men.
- Our enemies can seem to have control over us.
- Peace that keeps the heart and mind can be ministered in the presence of trouble.
- Government and military officials are at God's disposal.
- God sometimes uses conventional means to control the situation.

It is never vain to trust in, or live for, the Lord. One of the purposes of the assembly of the saints is the ministration of this knowledge. This is also something that is forfeited when unthinking Christians forsake the assembling of themselves together, "as the manner of some is" (Heb 10:25).

Defining Deliverance

It seems to me that the clarification of deliverance, as it pertains to those living by faith, is necessary. Deliverance does not always mean exemption from some hardship or seeming dilemma. There are times when the believer is delivered IN the lion's den before he is removed from it. Sitting in a den of lions while an angel shuts the mouths of those ravenous beasts is a deliverance (Dan 6:16-24). There is such a thing as being delivered IN a furnace of fire prior to being separated from it (Dan 3:17-26). A prophet, together with a widow and her son, can be delivered from the effects of a famine, even though they are right IN the middle of it (1 Kgs 17:13-16).

Take Israel in Egypt as an example of the multifaceted nature of deliverance. While they were in Egypt, they were delivered from extinction, growing during a time of oppression (Ex 1:12). While they were in Egypt, they were delivered from the plagues that we sent upon Egypt (Ex 8:22; 9:26). In a single night, all of them were delivered from Egypt as they walked out, having spoiled the Egyptians who were anxious to see them go (Ex 12:31-36).

Deliverance does not always have to do with being removed from adverse circumstances. Sometimes it is protection in the midst of adversity. The bottom line of deliverance is that Satan's intentions are not realized, even if he has a grievous "thorn" with which to work.

Deliverance does not always have to do with being removed from adverse circumstances. Sometimes it is protection in the midst of adversity. The bottom line of deliverance is that Satan's intentions are not realized, even if he has a grievous "thorn" with which to work (2 Cor 12:7-10).

That is much like the experience of Paul during this time in Jerusalem. He was dragged from the Temple, beaten, and his life threatened. Yet, the enemy was foiled in their attempts, which were to kill him. God will use means to deliver His servant, so that his work may be completed, and his course run with patience to the appointed end.

If we are to learn from this noble example, we must come to the point where we do not become disconcerted when we face hard times. Our aim must be to remain faithful, whether it is under oppression, or during times when we are given comfort, and freedom from trouble. Difficult experiences are tests, like the desert wandering was a test to Israel – a place where they were “proved” (Deut 8:2). However, in that desert Israel was taught what they could go through if God was with them (Deut 1:19). They learned by experience how the Lord carried the weak (Deut 1:31). They learned they could spend forty consecutive years in a desert without experiencing the lack of necessary things (Deut 2:7). Israel’s time in the desert was a part of their deliverance from Egypt – and those who depended on Him made it through, reaching the promised land, and taking possession of it.

Joseph experienced a similar deliverance. He was delivered from the intention of his brothers (Gen 37:19-22). He was delivered from the intentions of Potiphar’s wife (Gen 39:9-16). He was also delivered from a lengthy stay in prison, in which he was delivered from further abuse (Gen 40:21-23; 41:14-44). The 105 th Psalm provides an overview of Joseph’s life, confirming that he was tested during severe trials, yet was kept alive and finally realized ultimate deliverance from all oppression. “Until the time that his word came: the word of the LORD tried him. The king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people, and let him go free. He made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his substance: To bind his princes at his pleasure; and teach his senators wisdom” (Psa 105:19-22). Joseph’s entire saga was under the Lord’s control, which fact was at last made clear.

Let us now behold a similar working in the life of Paul. One who is “over all, God blessed forever” (Rom 9:5), has all resources at His disposal. He will cause things to turn out for the ultimate good of Paul.

THE EARTH HELPED THE WOMAN

“ 32 Who immediately took soldiers and centurions, and ran down unto them: and when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul.”

In a grand pictorial overview of the history of God’s people, John saw the magnitude of Satan’s attack against the people of God – especially the church. In a display of power that is transcendent any human aptitude, he assaulted the church. In apocalyptic language it is stated this way: “And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood. And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth” (Rev 12:15-16). The idea here is that the King of kings employed those of the earth – unlikely sources of help – to assist His people, so that the intentions of the devil could not be realized.

- When Joseph was in prison, the prison keeper favored him, giving him rule over the prisoners (Gen 39:21).
- Pharaoh exalted Joseph, making him the second in command over Egypt (Gen 45:8).
- Pharaoh assisted Jacob and the Israelites, giving them the land of Goshen, and favoring them (Gen 47:11).
- Pharaoh’s daughter rescued and raised the infant Moses to manhood (Ex 2:5-10).
- Nebuchadnezzar exalted Daniel, making him a great man and ruler over the province of Babylon (Dan 2:48).
- Nebuchadnezzar promoted Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego in the province of Babylon (Dan 3:30).
- Belshazzar exalted Daniel, making him the third over the land (Dan 5:29).
- Darius made Daniel the first in rank of three presidents, preferring him above the others (Dan 6:31-3).

- Cyrus assisted in the building of the Temple (2 Chron 36:23; Ezra 6:3-12).
- Artaxerses assisted Nehemiah (Neh 2:4-9).
- Hiram assisted Solomon in the building of the Temple (I Kgs 5:1-10).

The Lord could have abruptly stopped these proceedings in other ways – like causing fire, or gigantic hail stones to fall from heaven upon the oppressing Jews. Or, he could have sent a destroying angel to slay them all. This time, however, He will use the army of the nation that is dominating the Jews at that time, being stationed in their chief city, Jerusalem

That is the kind of thing that is reported in this case. All of this confirms the statement Solomon made concerning God and the kings of the earth: “The king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water: He turneth it whithersoever He will” (Prov 21:1).

Helped by the Brethren

There were also times when the brethren – the saints of God – assisted in the deliverance of Paul.

- In Damascus, when threatened by certain Jews who sought to kill him, “the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket” (Acts 9:25).
- In Lystra, after Paul had been stoned, “the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe” (Acts 14:20).
- In Thessalonica, when the Jews sought to do harm to them, “the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea: who coming thither went into the synagogue of the Jews” (Acts 17:10).
- In Ephesus, the disciples restrained him from going into the arena where a mob was waiting to harm him (Acts 19:30).

This time, however, deliverance will come from outside the church – from those who are of the earth, so to speak.

HE IMMEDIATELY TOOK SOLDIERS AND CENTURIONS

“Who immediately took soldiers and centurions, and ran down unto them . . .” Other versions read, “officers and soldiers,” NIV “some armed men,” BBE and “soldiers and undercaptains.” TNT

Notice how the captain made no delay, but “immediately” gathered his militia and went to the scene. From his perspective, he was keeping order, lest he be called into account for the disturbances of the day. From the higher view, God called him into action quickly, in order that the intentions of the Jews be brought to a grinding halt.

The Lord could have abruptly stopped these proceedings in other ways – like causing fire (Num 26:10) or gigantic hail stones (Josh 10:11) to fall from heaven upon the oppressing Jews. Or, he could have sent a destroying angel to slay them all (2 Sam 24:16). This time, however, He will use the army of the nation that is dominating the Jews at that time, being stationed in their chief city, Jerusalem. God does not have to import help, so to speak. He can use those in the vicinity to come to the aid of His people, even though they may technically be their enemies. As it is written, “If God be for us, who can be against us?” (Rom 8:31).

What a scene this must have been – one thousand soldiers, in strict order and discipline, coming upon the scene! They are referred to as an army in Acts 23:27, where this very captain is giving an account of the affair: “This man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman” (Acts 23:27). That army was a tool in the hands of the Lord, and He turned them according to His own power to do His will.

With a God like that, what have the saints to fear? What should cause them to tremble in fear of man or circumstance, or any other adversarial power? All of this is involved in the fact of God ruling your heart, and keeping your heart and mind.

As soon as the Jews saw the “army” approaching, they knew they were there to stop the tumult. They did not mount an insurrection against these soldiers, the Lord subduing them. Nor, indeed, did they continue what they were doing. The Lord has this kind of precise control over all men. The fact that He does not always respond in such a manner does not suggest that He cannot do so. This is one reason why believers can lean the weight of their souls upon the Lord, knowing that with Him, all things are possible, and that He is not hindered by any circumstance, however intimidating it may be.

This is the first mention of the mob beating Paul. The initial report of Luke said, “they took Paul, and drew him out of the Temple” (21:30). Between that time and when the Captain arrived with hundreds of soldiers, the people had commenced a beating of Paul. This may very well have been an additional beating, not included in the “five times” that the Jews had beaten Paul with forty-save-one stripes (2 Cor 11:24). The way the text reads, I gather that this beating was interrupted before it was completed. In my judgment, that would exclude it from the times of beating to which he referred in his second epistle to the Corinthians.

In Philippi Paul and Silas were beaten by the officials of the city (Acts 16:22). That was a public beating, as was this one (Acts 16:37).

During that beating, as well as others he endured, I do not doubt that Paul remembered when he himself had sanctioned the beating of believers. Later, and in conjunction with this very event, Paul will tell these Jews what he had said to Jesus, who had appeared to him when he was in Jerusalem at an earlier time: “And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on Thee ” (Acts 22:19).

I do not doubt that he gave much thought to this matter.

ORDERLINESS IN CHAOS

“ 33 Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done.”

This begins a rather lengthy series of events that eventually lead us to Paul arriving in Rome, where Jesus will later assure Paul he would testify (Acts 23:11). The thought of going to Rome had been put into Paul’s spirit after he had met Aquila and Priscilla in Corinth, who had been expelled from Rome with all known Jews (Acts 18:2). While he was in Ephesus near the close of a period of three years, he had “purposed in the spirit, when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, saying, After I have been there, I must also see Rome” (Acts 19:21). At the time, I am not sure this was more than a kind of intuitive knowledge that was compelling in nature. However, as time marched forward, this became a more settled persuasion that was finally confirmed by a word from Jesus Himself.

While this is not the appropriate place to further develop this matter, it is enough to make us aware of what is being accomplished in all of this seeming chaos and injustice. He who “has His way in the whirlwind and in the storm” (Nah 1:3), also fulfills His immutable will among social disorders, oppositions, and all manner of seemingly uncontrollable tumult. This is a matter that faith can grasp, thereby quieting the soul during disruptive influences. It is not uncommon to hear professed Christian teachers affirm that God is not in control – that He has so structured things that men can do whatever they please, even if it impinges upon His determinations. While this is true to a measured extent, there is a level of Divine determinations and purposes that cannot possibly be impacted by what men do or will to do. Some examples are the coming of Jesus into the world (Gal 4:4), the death and resurrection of Christ (Acts 2:33; 3:18; 1 Cor 15:1-3), the ascension of Christ (Eph 4:8; Psa 68:18), the commencement of the church (Psa 2:1,47), the inauguration of the New Covenant and the fading of the old (2 Cor 3:7-11; Heb 8:8-13), the second coming of Christ (1 Tim 6:14-16), and the day of judgment (Acts 17:31). All of these have to do with precise periods of time, and even exact days. None of them could be abrogated, changed, or in any way hindered by men.

There are also exact times that could not in any way be altered or forestalled by men. These include the following.

- The day the flood began (Gen 7:23).
- The miraculous birth of Isaac (Gen 17:21).
- The deliverance of Israel from Egypt (Ex 12:41,51).
- The Babylonian captivity Hab 2:3; Jer 34:1-2).
- The fall of the worldly empires of Babylon, the Medes and the Persians, Greece, and Rome (Dan 2:28-43).
- The day of Pentecost that was fully come (Acts 2:1).
- The calling of Paul as an apostle (Gal 1:15).

Holy men of God lived in the awareness of such realities. This contributed to their boldness and certain expressions of faith that reflected great confidence.

- JOB. “And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me” (Job 19:16-27).
- DAVID. “My times are in thy hand: deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me” (Psa 31:15).
- PAUL. “For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ” (Phil 1:19).
- PAUL. “And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen” (2 Tim 4:18).
- PETER. “Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me” (2 Pet 1:13-14).

When a theology is adopted that minimizes the Sovereignty of God, it makes life more difficult.

Confidence and assurance are less likely to be experienced, and there is a tendency to be overwhelmed by trouble.

The same God who rules the world monitors the lives of His people, so they can carry out the foreordained good works for which they were created. In order to derive the most benefit from the text before us, it must be read with these things in mind.

THE CHIEF CAPTAIN TOOK HIM

“Then the chief captain came near, and took him . . .” Other versions read, “came up and took hold of him,” NASB “came up and arrested him,” NIV “came up, took him into custody,” CSB “went to Paul, grabbed him,” GWN and “came up to him, and seized him.” MRD

The captain immediately takes charge of the whole affair, doing so in an orderly and lawful manner. I am sure he was not aware of the of the mandate of the true God concerning government, yet he was fulfilling it through the influence of the Governor of the nations.

The captain immediately takes charge of the whole affair, doing so in an orderly and lawful manner. I am sure he was not aware of the of the mandate of the true God concerning government, yet he was fulfilling it through the influence of the Governor of the nations. God ordained civil authority, investing it with power. The objective of that power, we are told, is to be a “terror to the evil” (Rom 13:3). That this is what was actually happening is confirmed in the Jews ceasing their oppression of Paul as soon as they saw him and his army. They probably did not know the extent of his ordained power, but, as it is written, a civil ruler is “the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil” (Rom 13:4). His role in society is to take whatever means are necessary to abruptly stop the perpetrators of evil. For this captain, that included the cessation of social disturbance such as had been fomented by these unbelieving Jews.

The captain probably assumed that some form of insurrection was being raised like that of the Jew Barabbas, when Jesus was crucified (Matt 27:16; Mk 15:7). In his mind, he was charged with keeping order in the city, especially at this time, and Paul appeared to be the cause of unlawful disruption.

The officer abruptly terminated the Jewish proceedings, foiling their plans and frustrating their purposes. God was in the matter, even though the Captain did not know it.

Evil Intentions Frustrated

Thus the evil intentions of the Jews were frustrated. But this was more than mere social happenstance. It is God who does such a work. As it is written, “Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain ” (Psa 76:10). Other versions read, “the survivors of your wrath are restrained,” NIV and “the remnant of the rage shalt thou restrain.” GENEVA The idea is that God uses the wrath of man for His own purposes, frustrating mere human intentions. How vividly this is portrayed in the 46 th Psalm: “The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved: He uttered his voice, the earth melted” (Psa 46:6). Again it is written, “Which stilleth the noise of the seas, the noise of their waves, and the tumult of the people” (Psa 65:7).

Another historical account that confirms this Divine working is found in the life of Joseph. He suffered indignity from his brothers, the false accusation of Potiphar’s wife, and an unjust imprisonment of several years. Yet, by his own insightful confession to his brothers, “But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive” (Gen 50:20). The Psalmist says of all of Joseph’s sufferings, “He sent a man before them, even Joseph, who was sold for a servant: Whose feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in iron: Until the time that his word came: the word of the LORD tried him . The king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people, and let him go free” (Psa 105:17-20).

The most significant expression of this truth is seen in the death of the Lord Jesus (Acts 2:23).

An Observation Concerning Our Times

This view of government has been largely lost in our day, when undue influence is being exerted by lawyers. Now the advantage is actually given to the perpetrators of evil, to ensure that they receive all of their rights, even though they are tearing at the fabric of society. This is the result of a distorted understanding of social freedom, which was not prevalent at the time of our text. The relevance of this observation is seen in the fact that this corruption has taken place during the day of salvation, when the church has been placed in society to be “the pillar and ground of the truth” (1 Tim 3:15). Instead of keeping the people aware of the will and ordinations of God, the church has taken on the nature of the world itself. The nominal church is wedded to the world, and “world” is her wedded name. She thinks like the world, and therefore acts like it as well. It has now entered into the political arena, even though it does not apparently have very much to offer. All of this has been done with professing Christians, many of them in government, being the occasion of blaspheming the name of God while they are found guilty of immorality in the civil arena, as well as in the religious.

The degeneration of the church has been the occasion for further degeneration in both the government and society in general. Scripture refers to this kind of impact when it calls the false church, “MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH” (Rev 17:5). She has brought further confusion among men, and is therefore called “Babylon the Great.” She has caused all kinds of factions, sects, and heresies, and is therefore termed “The Mother of Harlots.” Rather than being a holy influence among men, particularly the American church has been a blotch on the fabric of society, and is therefore called, “The Mother of Abominations of the Earth.”

If all of this seems strong, it is really not strong enough. The circumstance is so serious and corrupt that human language fails to adequately describe the situation. This is the “falling away” of which Paul wrote (2 Thess 2:3). I am speaking of a body of people who can no longer “endure sound doctrine,” but “after their own lusts” have heaped “to themselves teachers, having itching ears” (1 Tim 4:3). This is an era in which professing church bodies have a “form of godliness,” yet have rejected “the power thereof” (2 Tim 3:1-5). Not only do multitudes of professing Christians live like the world, their preachers and teachers have invented theologies and ministries that justify sinfulness in and among the saints.

I mention these things because none of them were dominant at the time of our text. Churches like Corinth, Galatia, Ephesus, Sardis, Thyatira, Pergamos, and Laodicea were singled out and rebuked for their waywardness. Bodies of believers like the Hebrews, and those to whom James wrote, were also called to account for having lived in contradiction of the nature of the New Covenant. They were, however, the exception to the rule, and not the norm. Sadly, that is not the case in our day.

One of the distinct differences between the nation of Israel and the church of Jesus Christ is found in the people themselves.

- The hearts of Israel were not circumcised (Deut 10:16; Jer 4:4; 9:26; Acts 7:51). The hearts of the saints are circumcised (Deut 30:6; Rom 2:29; Col 2:11).
- Israel did not have a new heart and a new spirit (Ezek 18:21). The church does have a new heart and spirit (Ezek 36:26; Rom 7:6), being a new creation (2 Cor 5:17; Eph 2:10).
- Israel did not have the Holy Spirit (Ezek 36:27; Joel 2:28), the church does (Gal 4:6; Thess 4:8; 1 John 3:24).
- The mass of the people of Israel did not have access to God (Ex 28:1; Lev 16:15; Heb 5:1), those in Christ do (Rom 5:2; Eph 2:18; 3:12).

• Israel was fundamentally a “disobedient and gainsaying people” (Deut 9:1; Deut 31:27; Rom 10:21). Those in Christ “are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people” (1 Pet 2:9).

Those who insist on likening the body of Christ to the ancient Israelites only display their own ignorance. It is quite true that in the professed church there are many likenesses to those rebellious people, but that is strictly owing to the lack of the Divine nature, of which the children of God are “partakers” (2 Pet 1:4). The very fact that deplorable conditions continue to exist confirm that the people are not really “joined to the Lord,” being “one spirit” with Him (1 Cor 6:17).

HE BOUND HIM WITH TWO CHAINS

“ . . . and commanded him to be bound with two chains . . . ”

Not knowing the circumstances, the captain assumes that Paul may very well be the perpetrator, and therefore puts him in chains. By doing this, he has removed Paul from the hands of the Jews, and placed him under the authority of Rome. From his viewpoint, he was taking charge of the situation. However, what was really happening was that God was delivering Paul from the malice of the Jews, and preparing the circumstances so he could go to Rome.

HE DEMANDED SOME FACTS

“ . . . and demanded who he was, and what he had done.” Other versions read, “he asked who he was and what he had done,” NKJV “he began asking who he was and what he had done,” NASB “questioning them as to who he was and what he had done,” BBE “he tried to find out who he might be and what he had done,” NAB and “demanded what he was and what he had done.” TNT

The captain begins inquiring about Paul – who he was, and what he had been doing. He wanted to gather the facts, and was apparently not willing to simply assume that the Jews were engaged in a just cause.

Unwittingly, the captain was fulfilling the purpose for government that had been established by God. Of course, God does not need human laws to implement His objectives. However, His purposes sometimes have more to do with the formation of laws than men dare to imagine. The establishment of civil authority, as affirmed in the thirteenth chapter of Romans, was not merely for the purposes of maintaining an orderly society. Ultimately, it related to the care of His people – those who are in Christ Jesus. God cares for the world for their sake. It is the arena in which He is carrying out His predetermined objective to take out of men a people for His own name (Acts 15:14). There are times when that involves the subduing of the enemies of God’s people – something that has been demonstrated throughout history.

God and Justice

God is against injustice, and often speaks about it. The prophets frequently spoke on this matter. Under the Law, men were strictly forbidden to raise false reports against someone (Ex 23:1-2). Defrauding and robbery were forbidden, for both are unjust (Lev 19:13). The psalmist wrote, “Defend the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy” (Psa 82:3). Isaiah even related justice to the matter of salvation: “Thus saith the LORD, Keep ye judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed” (Isa 56:1). The absence of justice is indication that truth is “fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter” (Isa 59:14). One of the marks of degeneracy among Israel was that “none calleth for justice” (Isa 59:4).

Some mention of this is also made in the Scriptures that are addressed specifically to the church. James addressed professing Christians who were unfair in their wages, withholding what was right. “Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth” (James 5:4).

In our text, the Roman government had a better sense of justice than the Jews from Asia. That is a most lamentable condition. I have noted over the years that many of God’s people are treated more fairly and justly by the world than they are by their brethren. For myself, this was a cause of great sorrow, and some degree of

He was dragged from the Temple and beaten unjustly, and false charges were raised against him – all from his own kinsmen according to Divine choice. It was a sad circumstance, indeed!

consternation when I was a young man. For a while I wrestled with why the world recognized my abilities, and the nominal church did not. By the grace of God, I was rescued from despair by several considerations.

- First, I was accountable to God, and He would be just in His treatment of me, both chastening and blessing.
- Second, I learned to be more precise in my definition of the church. This led me to not be so surprised at some of the manners of those who professed they were Christians, but really gave no evidence of affiliation with Christ.
- Third, in my worldly employment I found that I could serve God, whether men appreciated it or not. I found great joy in Divine acceptance, which also brought unalloyed satisfaction. By the grace of God, I did find favor with men – something I did not find in any significance measure in the institution with which I was identified.

I say these things because, in this text, Paul is receiving more justice from a heathen military man than he was from the people were identified as God’s people. He was dragged from the Temple and beaten unjustly, and false charges were raised against him – all from his own kinsmen according to Divine choice. It was a sad circumstance, indeed!

However, the fact that it appears men are getting by with being unjust is only an appearance. Records are being kept in heaven, and all accounts will eventually be settled. The day of judgment has been appointed to resolve all such matters, and show that God is true, and all who conduct themselves in opposition of God are liars.

CONFUSION INTERFERES WITH CERTAINTY

“ 34 And some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle.”

This text, like all Scriptural accounts, is revealing more than the circumstance being reported. The nature of people is being made known, as well as the nature of the flesh itself. The character of people, regardless of who they are, is projected in what they say and do. What Noah did (Heb 11:7), and how the world reacted to it (Matt 24:38), unveiled the character of both. The conduct of the people in a plain of Shinar unveiled the kind of people they were (Gen 11:4). This applies to Moses’ response to the presence of the Lord (Ex 33:18), as well as that of Israel (Ex 20:19). It is seen in the thrust of David’s life (Psa 27:4), as well as that of his son Absalom (2 Sam 15:6). The responses of Nehemiah (Neh 2:3) and Sanballot and Tobiah (Neh 2:10) manifested the difference in their character. Those who submitted to John the Baptist (Luke 7:29), as well as those who did not (Luke 7:30), were displaying their character in their responses. Today, there are all manner of teachings and philosophies that deny that human conduct reveals human character. Excuses are made for deviate conduct that conveniently omit the condition of the heart. Such views are an indication of the nature of the times.

The result of human expression also confirms the nature of the character of the people. The flood of Noah's day confirmed that "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his [man's] heart was only evil continually" (Gen 6:5). The fact that Noah was "saved" confirmed that Noah was "righteous" before the Lord (Gen 7:1). The dispersion of the people who were building a city and a tower for their own name, confirmed their character was corrupt (Gen 11:8). The fact that God showed Moses His glory confirmed that Moses had a godly character (Ex 33:21-23; 34:5-7). When the Spirit of God came upon David (1 Sam 16:13), it confirmed his godly character. When Absalom was slain, it confirmed his reprehensible nature (2 Sam 18:14). When God blessed Nehemiah in rebuilding the wall of Jerusalem in record time (Neh 6:15), it confirmed the tenderness of his heart. The frustration of the efforts of Sanballat and Tobiah to thwart the building of the wall testified to their hardened hearts (Neh 6:14-15). The fact that the people who submitted to John "justified God" (Lk 7:29), confirmed the sincerity of their hearts. The fact that the Pharisees and lawyers "rejected the counsel of God" confirmed the corruptness of their hearts (Lk 7:30).

I have taken the time to say these things because of the nature of this text. The hearts of the people are being revealed in what they will say, as well as the results their assembling. Their deeds cannot be divorced from their actions, else there would have been no purpose for pointing out the impact of what they were doing on the occasion.

AND SOME SAID ONE THING, SOME ANOTHER

"And some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude . . ." Other versions read, "some were shouting one thing, and some another," NASB "Everyone in the crowd shouted something different," CJB "different persons cried some different thing in the crowd," DOUAY "one cried this, another that," GENEVA "People in the crowd called out different things," NJB and "Some in the crowd kept shouting back one thing and others something else." AMPLIFIED

Here, the Jews from Asia took on themselves the nature of the heathen, whom they despised, as evidenced by their charge that Paul had defiled the Temple by bringing a Greek into it (Acts 21:28). You may recall that when the Ephesian silversmiths had called a gathering against Paul, it is said of them, "Some therefore cried one thing, and some another : for the assembly was confused; and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together" (Acts 19:32). This precisely characterized the gathering being described in our text. The difference is that these people were Jews – members of Israel "Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen" (Rom 9:4-5). Yet, with all of the remarkable advantages they had been given, and with the sacred writings in their care, there was no measurable difference between them and the heathen. They were "Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles" (Gal 2:15). Yet, they had the same kind of hearts that their Roman oppressors had!

The Parallel in the Professing Church

If the holy, just, and good Law of God could not resolve the sin dilemma, you may be sure that the wisdom of men will not do so. The fact of the matter is that the explosion of sin within the confines of the church is revealing the character of the people.

Who cannot see the parallel that exists in our time. The professing church is really not that different from the world. Such things as divorce, immorality, extortion, and all kinds of uncleanness are found within it. The world knows it, and it is inexcusable for professed believers to engage in explanations that neutralize those conditions – like pointing out that Christians are sinners like everyone else, with the only difference being that they are forgiven. Instead of rebuking sin, the professing church has taken to trying to resolve transgression with the wisdom of men. If the holy, just, and good Law of God could not resolve the sin dilemma, you may be sure that the wisdom of men will not do so. The fact of the matter is that the explosion of sin within the confines of the church is revealing the character of the people.

The Impact of Confusion

“ And some cried one thing, some another among the multitude, and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult . . .” (Acts 21:34)

The confusion caused by the people shouting different things, and giving differing assessments, made it impossible for the captain to learn the truth of the matter from them.

That is what confusion does – it inhibits the acquisition of the truth. This is because “God is not the author of confusion” (1 Cor 14:33). Where confusion is found, God is not present, other than in a Sovereign sense. The existence of confusion does not cause God to leave the scene, so to speak. It does, however, remove any benefits from His presence, for He does not minister to people under such conditions. I am aware that those of tender heart, even though they be in the midst of a confusing environment, can receive comfort and tutelage from the Lord. However, that benefit is not passed along to those of the general populous in such surroundings.

Confusion reveals the presence of envying and strife, both of which are excluded from the new nature (James 3:16). Those are part of “the old” that passes away when a person becomes a “new creature” (2 Cor 5:17). If confusion surfaces among professed believers, it is because they are not walking in the light, walking in the Spirit, and living by faith. Confusion is a trait of the flesh, not the Spirit.

Confusion in the Professing Church

If ever there was a mass of confusion, with one group shouting one thing, while the other shouts another, it is within the professing church. The very existence of thousands of denominations who call themselves “Christian” confirms this to be the case. Christendom, as a whole, is a mass of confusion. Here is a cursory listing of some matters on which the modern church is by no means agreed. Some are saying one thing, while others are saying another.

- The Sovereignty of God.
- The work of the Holy Spirit.
- The priorities of Jesus Christ.
- Justification.
- Sanctification
- What must a person do to be saved?
- The newness of life.
- The new creation.
- The New and Old Covenants.
- The distinction between law and grace.
- The distinction between faith and works.
- Whether or not a person is locked into salvation.
- The nature and necessity of the Lord’s Table.
- What it means to live by faith.

- The nature of obedience.
- The love of God.
- The kind of people Jesus prefers.
- The second coming of Christ.
- The nature of hell.
- The resurrection of the dead.
- The day of judgment.
- The role of baptism.
- What it means to be in Christ.
- The necessity of hope.
- The nature of repentance.
- How the new birth impacts upon life.
- The role of the church.
- The death of Christ.
- The present activity of Christ.
- The purpose for the church.
- The election of God.
- The grace of God.
- The conversion of the Jews.
- Things preceding the return of Christ.
- The Christian and the world.
- The baptism with the Spirit.
- Speaking in tongues.
- Prophesying.
- Spiritual gifts.
- The state of the soul after death.
- What happens when a person dies.
- Life after death.
- What God is doing.
- The wisdom of the world.
- The new birth.
- The priority of faith.
- The explanation for the presence of sin.
- The effect of Adam's transgression.
- The imputation of righteousness.
- What it means to be righteous.
- The meaning of reconciliation to God.

- Predestination.
- The effectiveness of prayer.
- The role of the promises.
- The effects of Christ's death.
- The old man and the new man.
- Temptation.
- The believers ability to resist the devil.
- The great tribulation.
- The antichrist.
- The end of the world.
- The judgment seat of Christ.
- When a person receives the Holy Spirit.
- Whether or not a person can fall away.

It is evidence of a grand leap forward when any believer comprehends that truth is not defined by consensus. Throwing a matter open for discussion is fine if the people doing the discussing are informed. If they are not, then such an action is nothing more than opening the door for the entrance of confusion, and the consequent ignorance that follows in its wake.

There are sixty-four subjects on which the nominal church is fundamentally disagreed – with some shouting one thing, and some another. Further, this is only the tip of the iceberg. And what is the result of all of this confusion? It is precisely the same of the confusion of our text. Those who really do not know the facts find it nearly impossible to arrive at a knowledge of the truth. All of these matters have become obscure in the public arena. Theological confusion has hidden the truth. The only way a person can actually find the truth is to find it outside the confines of organized religion. By “organized” religion, I mean an approach to the truth that accents the ones who are said to hold the truth rather than the truth itself. I am referring to the maintenance of a theological system that makes for distinction among believers, rather than holding to the Head, from which all understanding proceeds (Col 2:19).

If this captain is going to find out what really happened, he will require a different environment. He must take the inquest to a new surrounding, where bigotry and opinion are not dominant. This same procedure always precedes an honest inquiry into the truth.

PAUL WAS CARRIED TO THE CASTLE

“ . . . he commanded him to be carried into the castle.” Other versions read, “taken into the barracks,” NKJV “the army building,” BBE “the fortress,” DARBY “the compound,” NAB “the armory,” LIVING “the fort,” GNB and “military barracks.” MESSAGE

The word “castle” is translated from a word that means, “an encampment . . . an enclosure.” In this text, “the barracks of the Roman soldiers, which at Jerusalem were in the castle Antonia,” THAYER “a permanent army base barracks, fortress, soldiers' quarters,” FRIBERG “barracks . . . headquarters.” GINGRICH

In the English language “castle” means, “a large fortified building of set of buildings . . . a retreat safe against intrusion or invasion.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

This was, then, a secured place where disruption would be neutralized and the prisoner protected.

Here, the captain would be more apt to find out what really happened.

An Application

It is evidence of a grand leap forward when any believer comprehends that truth is not defined by consensus. Throwing a matter open for discussion is fine if the people doing the discussing are informed. If they are not, then such an action is nothing more than opening the door for the entrance of confusion, and the consequent ignorance that follows in its wake.

When a Kingdom matter is not clear, those who are knowledgeable of the Word and ways of the Lord are to be consulted. This is the procedure the early church pursued when confusion about circumcision arose. They did not take a vote from among the people, but determined to “go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question” (Acts 15:2). This was after they had disputed about the matter long enough to determine that no one in their company had the answer. Therefore, they appealed to those noted for their understanding to be included in the matter. Even then, all of the critical information was rehearsed and delivered to those with understanding.

The matter was finally resolved when it could be correlated with Scripture. The decision was such as could be delivered to all Gentile churches, for it was the truth, and represented a god manner of reasoning concerning the subject (Acts 15:1-29).

PURSUED BY THE ENEMY

“ 35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence of the people. 36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, Away with him.”

Paul is taken away from the Temple area to the barracks, where he could be more readily protected. The intention of the captain was to keep Paul safe while he continued pursuing the truth about what had been happening, and why Paul was being beaten by his fellow countrymen.

WHEN HE CAME UPON THE STAIRS

“And when he came upon the stairs, so it was . . .” Other versions read, “reached the stairs.” NKJV “got to the stairs,” NASB came to the steps,” NRSV “got upon the stairs,” DARBY “came to the stairs of the barracks,” GWN and “came to mount the steps.” AMPLIFIED

These stairs are the point of entry into the “castle,” “barracks,” or place of protection. Once inside the walls. He would be safe from the crowd, and under the militant protection of the Roman guard. Some might suppose that Paul was about to breathe a sign of relief, being hustled away from a crowd that had already beat him, and was getting ready to take his life. Perhaps some might see Paul as praying for deliverance all the way, fervently seeking to get at a safe distance from the crowd.

The text will suggest that this was not at all Paul’s mindset. In fact, it appears clear to me that he had been thinking all along the way of what he would do – thinking his thoughts before the Lord. Seeking for Divine guidance, he might very well have prayed like the Psalmist, “Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts?” (Psa 139:23), confessing, “Thou knowest my down sitting and mine uprising, thou understandest my thought afar off” (Psa 139:2).

To conduct oneself during a trial with both faith and confidence is evidence of an awareness of the grace of God. Such a person knows that God is “over all,” and that his persecutors are subject to Divine rule, whether they know it or not. The one who goes through trial confidently is the one who has discerned the fact that God is working all things together for the good of those who love Him and have been called according to His purpose (Rom 8:28). Such people are not impervious to pain, and do not take delight in being helpless of themselves. It is their faith that sustains them, causing them to be an overcomer in the most hostile circumstances.

HE WAS BORNE OF THE SOLDIERS

“ . . . that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence of the people.” Other versions read, “carried by the soldiers,” NKJV “lifted up by the armed men,” BBE “had to lift him to their shoulders,” NLT “had to lift him to their shoulders,” LIVING and “actually being carried by the soldiers.”
AMPLIFIED

Having been beaten by the Jews, he was now carried by the soldiers, obtaining mercy from those who knew not God, while enduring violence from those who professed to know Him.

THE MULTITUDE OF PEOPLE FOLLOWED

“ . . . For the multitude of the people followed after . . . ” Other versions read, “because of the violence of the mob,” NKJV “because of the force of the people,” BBE “because the mob was so wild,” CJB “the mob grew so violent,” LIVING and “the mob became so violent that the soldiers had to carry Paul.” MESSAGE

The soldiers did not carry Paul because he had been weakened by the beating he endured at the hands of the Jews. Of course, the Romans were not naturally sympathetic with those supposed to be criminals. The crucifixion of malefactors confirmed this was true – a death that was excruciating and of long duration. If, at the end of the day, the victims had not died from the ordeal, they would break their legs, causing the weight of their body to induce a quick death (John 19:31). They would also subject prisoners to severe scourging, even when they were in a weakened state (Matt 27:26; Mk 15:15; John 19:1). Even when the condemned had been beaten, and was on the way to be crucified, they were compelled to carry the cross on which they would die (John 19:16-17).

There is no record of the Roman militia showing the mercy now shown to Paul – carrying him on their shoulders because of the pressing and angry mob. However, this was no ordinary circumstance, and Paul was being protected by the invisible God – even though men did not know it. Thus, the mob was kept from carrying out its will, and Paul was granted a brief period to regain his strength, which he will use for the glory of God.

The physical resilience, or irrepressibility of Paul is astounding to the flesh. To this point in the book of Acts he has been physically beaten (16:22-23; 21:32), imprisoned (16:23-24), expelled from a city (13:50), persecuted (13:50), and stoned (14:14:19). He has also experienced fierce opposition and argumentation (16:20; 18:6), and false charges (17:6; 19:26-27; 21:21). Add to this the details Paul provided concerning the oppositions and difficulties he faced while he was about his Father’s business.

- Stripes above measure.
- In prisons more frequent than others.
- Often subjected to death.
- Beaten by the Jew five times.
- Beaten with rods three times.
- Abandoned in the sea for a night and a day.
- In perils of waters.
- In perils of robbers.

- In perils from his own countrymen.
- In perils among the heathen.
- In perils in the city.
- In perils in the wilderness.
- In perils in the sea.
- In perils among false brethren.
- In weariness.
- In painfulness.
- In watchings, or sleeplessness often.
- In hunger and in thirst.
- In frequent fastings – many of which were not voluntary.
- In cold and nakedness – i.e. without adequate clothing.

His experiences also included dishonor, evil reports, being charged with being a deceiver, being unknown, being chastened, being sorrowful, being poor, and having nothing (2 Cor 4:8-10; 11:23-27).

Yet he remained faithful to the end of his life, at which time he confessed in truth, “For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith” (2 Tim 4:6-7).

And how was such a remarkable stance possible? It was because he knew and availed himself of the things provided in God’s great salvation. He himself referred to them “all spiritual blessings” (Eph 1:3). Peter referred to them as “all things that pertain to life and godliness” (2 Pet 1:3). As this text continues the impact of these benefits upon the heart and mind of Paul will be confirmed. Furthermore, all of them are still in place, and are available to all who are willing to live by faith and walk in the Spirit.

AWAY WITH HIM!

“ . . . crying, Away with him.” Other versions read, “Kill him,” CJB “Kill him, kill him!” NLT “take him away,” EMTV and “Away with him! [Kill him!]” AMPLIFIED

Thus the mob calls for the death of Paul. The words “away with him” would equate to the expression, “do away with him.” They were not calling for Paul’s incarceration, but for the forcible termination of his life.

A significant number of Jews are calling for this death. Now we will see if they are able to carry out their will, and if they will be able to convince the authorities to do what they wanted – like the Jews imagined they had convinced Pilate to crucify Jesus.

Remember, behind the scenes, God is “for” Paul, having called him to a work that belonged exclusively to God. Now the Spirit will confirm the certainty that has been recorded in the Scriptures. “Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress , or persecution , or famine, or nakedness, or peril , or sword ? . . . For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord” (Rom 8:35-36,38-39). If the spiritual powers that work through men are not able to separate the saints from the love of God, you may be sure that the ones they employ for their diabolical purposes will not be able to do so.

A DISPLAY OF FEARLESSNESS AND CONCERN

“ 37 And as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek? 38 Art not thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?”

Behold the confidence and presence of mind that is displayed in Paul. He is not wringing his hands in despair. He is not calling for legal counsel, or convulsing in hopeless weeping. He rather speaks as a king and a priest who knows the One who governs kings and is King over all the earth. He waxes bold, and asks his captor for a favor. That is a marvelous display of faith!

HE SAID UNTO THE CHIEF CAPTAIN

“And as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? . . .” Other versions read, “May I speak with you?” NKJV “May I say something to you,” NASB “Is it all right if I say something to you?,” CJB “Am I allowed to say something to you?” CSB “Wilt thou permit me to speak with thee?” MRD “if he could have a word with him,” NJB “Is it permitted to me to say anything unto thee?” YLT and “Do I have the right to say something to you?” IE

Paul is giving honor to whom, honor is do – something that is required of those who are in Christ Jesus (Rom 13:7). By inquiring what is allowed, he is also honoring the king, as Peter wrote in his first epistle (1 Pet 2:17). He seasons his words with salt, so they will not be taken in the wrong way (Col 4:6). He does not insist on his rights. He does not challenge what the captain has already done. He simply inquires if, under the Roman law, he is allowed to speak to the leader of this band of soldiers.

Faith enables a man to speak in this way, because he knows the Author of government, who is also in charge of it. Thus Paul asks a question, the answer of which will direct him in what he is to do. Sometimes the will of the Lord is made known in such a way, with the seeker using all of their powers, together with wisdom, to discover the “path of the just” (Prov 4:18; Isa 26:7).

SOMETHING OF PAUL IS LEARNED

“Who said, Canst thou speak Greek? +Art not thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?”

“The account which he gives is, that this Egyptian, whose name he does not mention, came from Egypt to Jerusalem, and said that he was a prophet, and advised the multitude of the common people to go with him to the Mount of Olives. He said further that he would show them from thence how the walls of Jerusalem would fall down: and he promised them that he would procure for them an entrance through those walls when they were fallen down. Josephus adds (Jewish Wars) that he got together 30,000 men that were deluded by him; “these he led round about from the wilderness to the mount which was called the Mount of Olives, and was ready to break into Jerusalem by force from that place. But Felix, who was apprised of his movements, marched against him with the Roman soldiers, and defeated him, and killed 400 of them, and took 200 alive. But the Egyptian escaped himself out of the fight, but did not appear anymore.”

Josephus, Antiq., book 20, chapter 8, section 6, and Jewish Wars, book 2, chapter 13, section 5 per Albert Barnes

First, it is apparent that Paul spoke in Greek to the Centurion. Later, he will speak to the Jews in Hebrew (verse 40). He will also do this some time after this occasion (22:2). By speaking in Greek, he will leave the idea that he is a Roman citizen, and the better gain the attention of the captain.

We also learn that the captain thought Paul was a man who had previously caused an uproar in the city. Josephus provides an account of this unnamed Egyptian who mounted a campaign against Rome. He states that Felix overthrew him, killing many of his soldiers, but that the leader has escaped. All of this took place during the time of our text, which accounts for the captain's response.

We learn here that what the saints do can be associated with what evil men do, particularly when only a sparse amount of their activity is known. In this case, the Asian Jews had painted the picture of an insurrectionist, who was causing an uproar in the city. It does not appear they were thinking of this "Egyptian" who had attempted to rally an army of despots against the Roman government. But what they reported of Paul led the captain to the conclusion that this could very well be the same man who had previously opposed the government, and sought to take charge of Jerusalem himself.

It should not surprise us that Satan still moves men to think in this manner. He will influence some to speak of Christian men as though they were identified with someone other than Christ. Today, it is a bit more subtle than the events of our text. But who has not heard of, or perhaps experienced, the accusation belonging to some sect of Christendom because the unvarnished concerning being saved by grace through faith, or being appointed to salvation, or insisting that the new birth does, in fact, yield holiness. Upon hearing such things some will charge that the person is a Calvinist, or a perfectionist, or some other supposed defaming epithet.

These are all tactics of the wicked one. He moves men to oppose speakers of truth, not because of what they actually said, but because of associations their critics said they had. It is good to note the wisdom with which Paul conducted himself under such circumstances. It will assist us to be more wise in our dealings with those who oppose us.

PAUL IDENTIFIES HIMSELF AND ASKS TO SPEAK

“ 39 But Paul said, I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people.”

It will be interesting how Paul identified himself. Will he try and posture himself so as to gain an advantage with the captain, or will he simply tell the truth? We will find that his answer contains a bit of both.

I AM A MAN

“But Paul said, I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia . . .” Other versions read, “I am a Jew from Tarsus, in Cilicia,” NKJV “I am a Jewish man from Tarsus of Cilicia,” CJB “I am a Jewish man from Tarsus of Cilicia,” CSB “I, indeed, am a man, a Jew, of Tarsus of Cilicia,” YLT and “I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia.” GNB

Tarsus was in the region of Cilicia, which is in the southern region of what is now called Turkey. Modern Saudi Arabia is on the bottom-right of the map above, and Iran is to the right of the map, near Chaldea. The mountains of Ararat, where Noah's ark landed, is on the upper right of the map. Haran, from which Abraham departed when he struck out for Canaan, is located on the upper third of the map. Eden, the plain of Shinar where the tower of Babel was built, and Babylon are in the same general vicinity, to the right of the map.

All of this accents how much of the work of the Lord was centered in that region of the world. Eden, Noah, Abraham, key nations having to do with Israel, and the promised land of Canaan, referred to as God's own land, were in that region.

The city of Tarsus is mentioned five times in Scripture, and though it was an ancient and significant city, it is associated exclusively with Paul (Acts 9:11,30; 11:25; 21:39; 22:3).

A CITIZEN OF NO MEAN CITY

“ . . . a citizen of no mean city: and, I beseech thee . . .” Other versions read, “a citizen of no insignificant city,” NASB “a citizen of no ordinary city,” NIV “a citizen of an important city, NRSV “which is not an unimportant town,” BBE “a citizen of no obscure city,” ESV “a famous city,” GENEVA “a noted city,” MRD “no ordinary city,” NIB “no vile city,” PNT “well-known city,” NJB and “no insignificant or undistinguished city.” AMPLIFIED

Tarsus has a significant place in human history, which records that it was founded by Sardanapalus, king of Assyria. McClintok and Strong’s Cyclopeda records: “It appears first in authentic history in Xenophon’s time, when it was a city of some considerable consequence (Anab. 1, 2, 23). It was occupied by Cyrus and his troops for twenty days and given up to plunder. After Alexander’s conquests had swept this way (Q. Curt. 3, 5) and the Seleucid kingdom was established at Antioch Tarsus usually belonged to that kingdom, though for a time it was under the Ptolemies. In the civil wars of Rome it took Caesar’s side, and on the occasion of a visit from him had its name changed to Juliopolis (Caesar, Bell. Alex. 66; Dion Cass. 47, 26). Augustus made Tarsus free (Appian, Bell. Civ. 5, 7) . . . It was renowned as a place of education under the early Roman emperors. Strabo compares it in this respect to Athens and Alexandria, giving, as regards the zeal for learning shown by the residents, the preference to Tarsus (14, 673). Some distinguished names adorn its annals; among others, Athenodorus; the tutor of Augustus, and Nestor, the tutor of Marcellus, the nephew of Augustus; Artemidorus and Diodorus, celebrated grammarians, and Dionysides, a tragic writer. Tarsus, also, was a place of much commerce, and Basil describes it as a point of union for Syrians, Cilicians, Isaurians, and Cappadocians (Ep. Euseb. Samos. Episc.).

McCLINTOK & STRONG’S, “TARSUS.”

The modern practice of obtaining theological credentials from the schools of men – many of them being secular schools – reflects a distorted sense of values. While such a practice is highly treasured in certain circles, it is classified as “dung” by Paul.

I provide this rather extensive quote for at least two reasons. First, to establish the significant description of Paul – “no mean city.” Second, to confirm that what is great in the world is nothing more than incidental in the Divine record of things. If it had not been for the Scriptural account of Paul, there would never have been anything said about this city, or others similar to it: i.e. Athens and Corinth of Greece, Alexandria Egypt, Ephesus of Asia, etc. The same could be said of the ancient cities of Nineveh, Babylon, etc.

The city of Tarsus did not in any way contribute to the greatness of Paul, even though it was a citadel of education and learning. When Paul accented his academic learning, he referred to sitting at the feet of Gamaliel, who was an expert in the Law of God (Acts 5:34; 22:3). Yet, Gamaliel, as great as he was, is only mentioned two times in Scripture.

In speaking in this manner concerning Tarsus, Paul was not boasting, but was drawing attention to a city of which the captain would be aware.

Application

The modern practice of obtaining theological credentials from the schools of men – many of them being secular schools – reflects a distorted sense of values. While such a practice is highly treasured in certain circles, it is classified as “dung” by Paul (Phil 3:6). Before God Almighty, such wisdom is considered “foolishness” (1 Cor 3:19). No amount of defense or human reasoning can change that perspective, which is to be adopted by every believer.

SUFFER ME TO SPEAK TO THE PEOPLE

“ . . . suffer me to speak unto the people.” Other versions read, “permit me to speak,” NKJV “allow me to speak,” NASB “Please let me speak,” NIV “I beg you, let me speak,” NRSV “I beseech thee, give me leave to speak,” ASV “I make a request to you to be me say a word,” BBE “I ask your permission to let me speak,” CJB and “I beg you, allow me to address the people.” AMPLIFIED

Note the total absence of brashness and disrespect. Having gathered that it was in order to speak to this military man, Paul proceeded with a humble request. He does not ask for his own release, or for a fair trial. He rather asks for permission to speak to his enemies – the ones who have dragged him from the Temple, and made false charges against him. He does not assume they will not listen to him, but chooses to begin with the thought that it will be profitable to speak to them. There is no evidence that he had spoken to these Asian Jews prior to this occasion. Here is an excellent example of one of the traits of charity: “Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil” (1 Cor 13:5). Once again, we see the truth being lived out by those in Christ Jesus. Oaul has spiritual composure as he speaks.

HE SPOKE TO THEM IN THE HEBREW TONGUE

“ 40 And when he had given him licence, Paul stood on the stairs, and beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying.”

Here is an example of a man who is not dominated by “the fear of man,” which “bringeth a snare.” Solomon states that “the fear of man” is the opposite of trusting in God. “The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the LORD shall be safe” (Prov 29:25). In new covenant language it is stated this way, “So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me” (Heb 13:6). David said, “I will not fear what flesh can do unto me” (Psa 56:4). Again he wrote, “In God have I put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me” (Psa 56:11). And again the psalmist wrote, “The LORD is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me?” (Psa 118:6). Jesus counseled, “And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell” (Matt 10:28). Luke records, “And I say unto you my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him, which after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him” (Luke 12:4-5). The Lord said to Jeremiah, who was sent to a rebellious people, “Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the LORD” (Jer 1:8).

What, then, shall we say of those who shape their words to please men, and alter their messages because they are afraid of what the people will say? What of those who make a survey of what the people want, and ignore what the Lord demands? There are professing Christians who are afraid of what their spouses will say, and children who tremble at what their parents might say if they learned of their faith. Students of all ages are noted for altering their appearance and their manners so they will be the better received by their critical peers. Let all such compromisers learn from this text to boldly face their enemies, and not be afraid of their faces or what they think they can do.

WHEN HE HAD GIVEN HIM LICENSE

“And when he had given him licence . . .” Other versions read, “when he had given him permission,” NKJV “having received the commanders permission,” NIV “when he had given him leave,” RSV “when he let him do so,” BBE “when he had allowed him,” DARBY the man gave his consent,” NJB “the commander agreed,” NLT and “he granted the request.” WILLIAMS

Paul would not proceed to speak until he was given permission to do so, thus honoring the civil authority. He had so phrased his request as to not arouse suspicion that he would cause further disruption. I do not doubt that he was also relying upon the Lord, according to the words of holy men of old.

Once again, we are witnessing the impact of living by faith and walking in the Spirit. I fear that many people have continual trouble with those around them because they are not living by faith – trusting in the Lord concerning their situation. This lack of trust is largely owing to the manner of Christian teaching that is popular in our time. This is the time of the counselor and expert in social and domestic affairs. There is no need for faith in God. Someone will always be available who can counsel you out of a dilemma, regardless of its nature. There are routines and procedures conveniently prepared that will allow the people to speak like a parrot instead of like a wise man. These various methodologies have actually taught the people NOT to trust in the Lord. They now default to human instruction rather than Divine guidance.

Men who are enslaved to this mechanical form of life do not really expect opportunities to be opened to them by the Lord Jesus Himself. However, the trusting ones rely upon this word, “These things saith He that is holy, He that is true, He that hath the key of David, He that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth” (Rev 3:7).

Paul wrote to the Corinthians about a door opened to him that was attended by many adversaries. “For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries” (1 Cor 16:9). When he was in Troas, he said, “a door was opened to me of the Lord” (2 Cor 2:12). He asked the Colossians to pray that a door of utterance might be opened to him. “Withal praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds” (Col 4:3).

The point is that Paul perceived that an open door had been set before him, and therefore asked for an opportunity to speak. That is how this occasion should be viewed, not simply as a man stabbing in the dark, trying to stumble on an opportunity. That is not the manner of life that is directed by the Spirit, or lived by faith.

HE BECKONED WITH HIS HAND TO THE PEOPLE

“ . . . Paul stood on the stairs, and beckoned with the hand unto the people . . .” Other versions read, “motioned with his hand to the people,” NKJV “made a sign with his hand to the people,” BBE “gestured to the people with his hand,” NET “raised his hand to the people for silence,” NJB “motioned to the people to be quiet,” NLT and “made signs with his hands, so that the people would be quiet.” IE

In a sense, this was an act of faith. Until this time, these people had been a shouting, rioting mob, with different things being shouted out. There had been such a state of confusion among these people that the captain had moved the attempted proceedings to another location.

Yet, in these new surroundings, and with the Roman militia present to keep order, the situation was more favorable. Yet, with all of that, it was the Lord who was managing this whole affair, bringing His own will to pass through a surrendered man.

HE SPOKE TO THEM IN THE HEBREW TONGUE

“ . . . And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying.” Other versions read, “and when there was a great hush, he spoke to them in the Hebrew dialect, saying,” NASB “When they were all silent, he said to them in Aramaic,” NIV/NET/NIB/NLT “and when there was a great hush, he addressed them in the Hebrew language, saying,” NRSV “when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew language, saying,” ASV “When they finally became still, he addressed them in Hebrew,” CJB “and a great silence having been made, he addressed them in the Hebrew tongue, saying,” DARBY “When the mob was silent, Paul spoke to them in the Hebrew language,” GWN “The people became even quieter when Paul used the Aramaic language to speak to them,” IE and “and there was a great hush. Then he spoke to them in the Hebrew dialect, saying.” AMPLIFIED

A Great Silence

The shouting mob suddenly became quiet, hushed at Paul beckoning with his hand. Considering the circumstances, this is most extraordinary. In fact, it is a manifestation of the power of God. The Scriptures often speak of God’s subduing power (Psa 18:39,47; 144:2). In this case, it is the wrath of the people that was subdued for a season in order that Paul might speak.

This would also confirm to the captain that Paul was, in fact, a Jew. There is no record of any other body of people speaking this language.

A LINGUISTIC VIEW OF THE HEBREW LANGUAGE

The Greek language, therefore, in its most perfect form, was the offspring of reason and taste; the Hebrew, of imagination and intuition.

It was the same mind that found expression in the Hebrew language, which gave birth, under the influence of divine inspiration, to the sublime revelations of the Old Testament Scriptures.

The Hebrew composition is also extremely pictorial in its character-not the poetry only, but also the prose. In the history the past is not described, it is painted. It is not the ear that hears, it is rather the eye that sees. The course of events is made to pass before the eye; the transactions are all acted over again. The past is not a fixed landscape, but a moving panorama. The reader of the English Bible must have remarked the constant use of the word behold, which indicates that the writer is himself, and wishes to make his reader also, a spectator of the transactions he describes.

But the singular phenomenon admits of an easy explanation. It was because the Hebrew viewed and described the transactions of the past, not as all past and done, but as in actual process and progress of evolvment, that he makes such frequent use of the so-called future.

The same effect is also produced by the symbolical way of representing mental states and processes which distinguishes the Hebrew writers. Such expressions as to bend or incline the ear for “to hear attentively,” to stiffen the neck for “to be stubborn and rebellious,” to uncover the ear for “to reveal,” are in frequent use. Even the acts of the Divine Mind are depicted in a similar way.

The Babylonian Captivity is assigned as the commencement of that decline and corruption which mark the second period in the history of the Hebrew language; but the Assyrian deportation of the ten tribes, in the year B.C. 720, was probably the first means of bringing the Aramaic idiom into injurious proximity with it.

EXCERPTS FROM McCLINTOK & STRONG’S CYCLOPEDIA

Some versions represent Paul as speaking in “Aramaic” (NIV, NET, NIB, NLT, IE, CEV). Others read “Hebrew tongue” (KJV, DARBY, DOUAY, GENEVA, PNT, TNT), “Hebrew language” (NKJV, NRSV, RSV, ASV, BBE, CSB, ERV, ESV, GWN, RWB, WEB, EMTV), “Hebrew dialect” (NASB, NAB, NAU, YLT, LITV, AMPLIFIED), “Hebrew ” (CJB, MRD, NAB, NJB, LIVING, WEYMOUTH, WILLIAMS,

The wisdom with which Paul conducts himself throughout this entire incident is worthy of note. It is a kind of commentary on the effectiveness of living by faith, walking in the Spirit, and maintaining a lively fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ. When one actually does walk in the light, Divine direction is more apparent.

MONTGOMERY, GNB, MESSAGE).

The Greek phrase from which “Hebrew tongue” is translated is Ebrai<di diale,ktwl le,gwn . The literal translation of these words is, “Hebrew dialect saying.” INTERLINEAR The word dialect is defined as, “a variety of language that is used by one group of persons and has features of vocabulary, grammar, or pronunciation distinguishing it from other varieties used by other groups.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

In the normal use of the word “dialect,” it is assumed that the language reflects the surroundings and culture of the people, as ordinarily perceived. However, it is different for the Hebrew language. It was basically a theological language, and reflected the identity of the people with the living God. It is first mentioned in Second Kings.

Even the linguists take special note of the Hebrew language. It was more of a living language, particularly painting history as something that was moving along. This allowed for the superimposition of God Himself upon history. A brief synopsis of the language is in the box labeled “A Linguistic View of the Hebrew Language.” Places where it is noted in Scripture are as follows.

- Jew’s language – 2 Kgs 18:26,28; Neh 3:24; Esth 8:9; Isa 36:11,13
- Hebrew tongue – John 5:2; Acts 21:40; 22:2; 26:14; Rev 9:11; 16:16

Historically, the Hebrew language was important to the Israelites. On one occasion, after they had intermarried with heathen peoples, Nehemiah took note of the deterioration of the use of the Hebrew language. Some people could not speak it any longer, and others had adopted a distorted vocabulary that was part Hebrew and part another language. “In those days also saw I Jews that had married wives of Ashdod, of Ammon, and of Moab: and their children spake half in the speech of Ashdod, and could not speak in the Jews’ language, but according to the language of each people” (Neh 13:23-24). This matter greatly agitated Nehemiah, for in it he saw a dangerous trend. “And I contended with them, and cursed them, and smote certain of them, and plucked off their hair, and made them swear by God, saying, Ye shall not give your daughters unto their sons, nor take their daughters unto your sons, or for yourselves. Did not Solomon king of Israel sin by these things? yet among many nations was there no king like him, who was beloved of his God, and God made him king over all Israel: nevertheless even him did outlandish women cause to sin. Shall we then hearken unto you to do all this great evil, to transgress against our God in marrying strange wives?” (Neh 13:25-27).

Some are of the opinion that the Hebrew language itself had been altered at the time of our text, so that it was not a pure language any longer. I do not doubt that, for some, this was the case. However, this does not mean that the general purity of the text was not maintained by the devout. Were this not the case, I do not see why Luke would make special mention of Paul addressing the people in “the Hebrew tongue.”

By speaking to the Jews in their native language, the following could have been accomplished.

- It would confirm to the captain that Paul was, indeed, a Jew, for there is no record of any other people speaking this language.
- To the Jews themselves, it would accent that Paul was not conducting himself contrary to Jewish manners.
- Paul would be able to speak more precisely concerning the matters he presented to the people.

The wisdom with which Paul conducts himself throughout this entire incident is worthy of note. It is a kind of commentary on the effectiveness of living by faith, walking in the Spirit, and maintaining a lively fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ. When one actually does walk in the light, Divine direction is more apparent.

CONCLUSION

Solomon once wrote, “Boast not thyself of to morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth” (Prov 27:1). James added, “Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away” (James 4:14). For those who are living by faith, eternity is certain. However, so far as life in this world is concerned, there is an element of uncertainty that attends life. Living by faith involves navigating through life a day at a time, and often in significantly lesser increments of time. The future must be viewed as something that is managed by God Himself. The role of the faithful is to remain alert and vigilant, not allowing the distractions of unbelief and care to enter the heart.

The stance of faith includes putting on the whole armor of God (Eph 6:10-18), putting off the old man, and putting on the new man (Eph 4:22-24). In summary, the believers live unto Him who died for them and rose again. Their lives are not their own, for they have been purchased with a price, and they know it.

This is the kind of life that Paul has been living. It is why he is alert to both dangers and opportunities. It is why he is able to react to challenges in such a way as brings glory to God. It is vital that we see such things as we go through this book. That is what will make it profitable to us, so that we are able to behold the wonderful works of God in what is reported.

PAUL'S DEFENSE TO THE JEWS, #1

“ 22:1 ”Men, brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence which I make now unto you. 2 (And when they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more silence: and he saith,) 3 I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous toward God, as ye all are this day. 4 And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women. 5 As also the high priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders: from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished. 6 And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me. 7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? 8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest. 9 And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me. 10 And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do. 11 And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus. 12 And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there, 13 Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him.” (Acts 22:1-13)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

In defending himself, Paul is accounting for how he is conducting his life, and for the message he is preaching to the people. He will establish to these Jews that he comes from a zealous background as themselves, and was taught under the most respected Jewish teachers. His words will establish that he is not a mere reactionary, as some have alleged. There was an epoch in his life that altered its course. Although Gamaliel was a peaceable man, a higher authority than Gamaliel had spoken to Paul. Paul too was known for persecuting this way, which the high priest and elders could confirm. Now, owing to the appearance of “Jesus of Nazareth,” he had embraced the way he once opposed. Formerly, he simply had not seen it correctly. As a sign to him, a devout man according to the law, who had a good report of all the Jews, came to him and he received the sight that he has lost in the blazing glory of that experience on the road to Damascus.

THE STRONGEST TESTIMONY IS THAT OF A CHANGED LIFE

By contrasting his present life with his former manner of life, Paul will establish that a significant change has taken place in him. With spiritual expertise, he accounts for that change by testifying to the events through which that alteration had been initiated. It is good to remember that those in Christ have experienced a very real change.

• FROM DEATH TO LIFE. They have passed from death unto life (John 5:24; 1 John 3:14).

• FROM DARKNESS TO LIGHT. They have been turned from darkness to light (Acts 26:28a).

• FROM THE POWER OF SATAN TO GOD. They have been turned from the power of Satan unto God (Acts 26:18b).

• DEAD, BUT MADE ALIVE. They were dead, but now they are quickened, or made alive (Eph 2:1).

• ENEMIES, BUT RECONCILED. They once were enemies, but now they are reconciled to God (Rom 5::10).

• ONCE ASTRAY, BUT NOW RETURNED. They were as sheep going astray, but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of their souls (1 Pet 2:25).

• FROM SERVANTS OF SIN TO FREE FROM SIN. They were the servants of sin, but are now made free from sin (Rom 6:17-18).

- FROM UNRIGHTEOUS TO JUSTIFIED. They were once unrighteous, but are now washed, sanctified, and justified (1 Cor 6:9-11).

- FROM FAR FROM TO NIGH. They once were “far off,” but have now been “made nigh by the blood of Christ” (Eph 2:13).

- FROM DARKNESS TO LIGHT. They once were darkness, but now are light in the Lord (Eph 5:8).

- FROM NOT A PEOPLE TO THE PEOPLE OF GOD. They once were “not a people,” but are now “the people of God” (1 Pet 2:10a).

- FROM ALIENATED TO RECONCILED. They once were “alienated and enemies” in their minds, but are now “reconciled” (Col 1:21).

- FROM CHILDREN OF DISOBEDIENCE TO BEING MADE TO SIT TOGETHER WITH CHRIST IN HEAVENLY PLACES. Once they were vassals of the devil, but now they are sitting with Jesus, and are joint heirs with Him (Eph 2:2-6; Rom 8:17).

It is not that those in Christ ought to change; they have been changed, and are continuing to be changed by the Spirit of God (2 Cor 3:18). That is the Kingdom norm. Any deviation from that is precisely that – a deviation.

It is not that those in Christ ought to change; they have been changed, and are continuing to be changed by the Spirit of God (2 Cor 3:18). That is the Kingdom norm. Any deviation from that is precisely that – a deviation. When believers have to be admonished to change, it is because they have retrogressed, and removed themselves from the One who called them into the grace of Christ (Gal 1:6). When they are not growing, it is because they have not added the various virtues that have been provided for them, and of which they have been apprised (2 Pet 1:5-10).

Paul will set himself forth as an exhibit of what happens when a person is justified – when they have been made a partaker of Christ (Heb 3:14), and have been reconciled to God (Colo 1:20-21).

Elsewhere Paul declared that he was chosen to be an example, or pattern, of what happens when God shows mercy on a person. “This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners ; of whom I am chief. Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all longsuffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting” (1 Tim 1:15-16). Paul also provides a sterling example of a person who does not resist the Spirit, or choose the flesh over the Spirit.

The prophets foretold this type of change – one that involved the fundamental altering of man’s basic constitution.

- MOSES SAID GOD WOULD CIRCUMCISE THE HEARTS OF THE PEOPLE. This is a circumcision that would result in the people loving God with their whole being. “And the LORD thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul , that thou mayest live” (Deut 30:6).

- JEREMIAH SAID THE PEOPLE WOULD NOT DEPART FROM HIM. The people would be united with one heart, and would be faithful. “And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them: And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me ” (Jer 32:39-40).

• JEREMIAH SPOKE OF GOD GIVING THE PEOPLE A HEART TO KNOW HIM. This new heart would induce the people to return to Him with their whole heart. “And I will give them an heart to know me, that I am the LORD: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart ” (Jer 24:7).

• EZEKIEL SPOKE OF THE PEOPLE RECEIVING A NEW HEART AND SPIRIT. A new heart and spirit would result in the people walking uprightly. “A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh. And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them ” (Ezek 36:16-27).

These days, there is too much attention given to explaining the presence of sin among professing Christians. Actually, the testimony should be of a people who have been obviously and undeniably changed. If this change is not obvious, a claim of identity with Christ is nothing more than supposition, and a glorifying testimony cannot be given. Identity with God assumes a lack of identity with sinners. The only exception to this rule is the testimony of the past, which, as Paul will show, is in sharp conflict with the testimony of the present. That is because a very real and fundamental change has taken place. This change is not merely a new discipline or regimen. It is a change in character in which the new comes, and the old passes away (2 Cor 5:17).

A religion that is not manifested in an observable change is a fraudulent one. If this were not the case, Paul’s testimony would carry no weight at all. However, there was a change in his manner of life – a change that could be attested by observation. Further weight will be given to his testimony because he came from the same background as those who were opposing him. He was also zealous in his former opposition to Christ and those who believed on Him. The contrast will confirm that a work had been done in him.

HEAR MY DEFENCE

MEN, BRETHREN, AND FATHERS

“ . . . Men, brethren, and fathers . . . ” Other versions read, “Brethren and fathers,” NKJV “brothers and fathers,” NIV “My brothers and fathers,” BBE “men, brethren, and fathers,” DARBY/DOUAY/GENEVA/RWB/TNT/WEB/YLT/ EMTV/LITV “brothers and esteemed fathers,” NLT “my friends and leaders of our nation,” CEV “my fellow Jews.” GNB and “Brethren and fathers [Men, brethren and fathers.” WYCLIFEE

Here is a classic example of the fulfillment of Jesus’ word: “But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you” (Matt 5:44). Notice with what kindness he addresses them – “brethren, fathers.” Elsewhere he referred to the Jews in general as, “my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh” (Rom 9:3). He also said of himself, “For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin” (Rom 11:1).

This identity according to the flesh was not like that of ordinary national or ethnic associations. This was a fleshly association that was ordained and blessed by God. Jesus Himself came from Israel “concerning the flesh” (Rom 9:5), and was related to David, for example, “according to the flesh” (Acts 2:30; Rom 1:3). To be sure, Jesus was not limited to the fleshly lineage, for He was primarily “the Son of God” (Mk 1:1; Lk 1:35; John 1:34; Acts 8:37; Rom 1:4; 1 John 5:20). Secondly, however, He was also a “Jew” (John 4:9), and Paul also confessed himself to be a “Jew” (Acts 21:39; 22:3). Holy men would speak of “sinners of the Gentiles” (Gal 2:15), but would speak of the Jews as having a noble lineage (Rom 9:3-5). In this way, they honored the choice of God, as well as the fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Being saved involves infinitely more than being the fleshly offspring of Abraham. However, men of God spoke of such associations as blessed ones, even if the people did not handle that association properly. Jesus spoke of a distinction within the Jewish race. “They answered and said unto him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham” (John 8:39). Paul did the same when he wrote, “For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel” (Rom 9:6).

Notwithstanding this distinction, Paul was not ashamed to associate himself generally with the offspring of Abraham – a blessed race indeed.

HEAR YE

“ . . . hear ye my defence which I make now unto you . . .” Other versions read, “my defense which I now offer to you,” NASB “listen to my defense,” NIV “the story of my life which I now put before you,” BBE “what I have to say in my defense,” WILLIAMS “listen as I explain what happened,” CEV and “listen carefully to what I have to say before you jump to conclusions about me.” MESSAGE

The word “defense” comes from the Greek word avpologi,aj (apologias). This is word from which we get the term “apology.” The primary meaning of this English word is “something said or written in defense or justification of what appears to others to be wrong or of what may be liable to disapprobation.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER In this case, Paul’s manner, or conduct, appeared to contradict what the Jews who were accusing him thought was proper. Confirming that he had not merely adopted a different earthly philosophy, Paul justifies what he is doing, showing that it was altogether proper. He will confirm that he is acting in perfect harmony with what he has been given to see, and how he has been changed.

In a most powerful manner, he will associate the way he is living with what he has experienced. That experience will be defined as a confrontation of the Lord Jesus Christ, which confrontation wrought an instant moral change, and inducted a completely different perspective of life.

Of course, all of this would be pointless if a change in his manner of living was not apparent. This is precisely why it is so wrong for a professing Christian to shape his appearance and life as though he was no different than other people. Such foolish efforts make an apology pointless, for there is no reason for a defense of the faith if the one giving it provides no evidence of the change wrought in regeneration.

The Purpose of an Apology

Peter referred to this kind of defense when he wrote, “But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear: Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ” (1 Pet 3:15-16). All of this postulates a radical change in those who have “received” Christ (John 1:12). The lives of such people are significantly different than those who remain “alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them” (Eph 4:18). It is that stark difference that solicits the inquiry of others, whether it is an amiable one, or one that is hostile, such as is revealed in this text.

In our time, the definition and purpose of apology has been changed to be harmonious with institutionalism. The study of apologetics is not one that is personal, or accounts for a different manner of life. Now an apology is associated with a purely scholastic defense of the Christian view of things. It may deal with the orderliness of creation, or certain rules of logic – but the personal aspect of giving an apology is not generally known. While there may be some measured value in such an approach, it has no power in it, because it is not undergirded by lives that are being lived by faith.

I would venture to say that giving an answer for the hope that is within a person is virtually unknown in our time. At the very least, it is not common. This is evidence of the perilous nature of the times in which we are living. When the power of God is absent in religion, we have fallen upon hard times.

THEY KEPT THE MORE SILENCE

“(And when they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more silence: and he saith,)” Other versions read, “they kept all the more silent,” NKJV “they became even more quiet,” NASB “they became very quiet,” NIV “they settled down more,” BBE “the silence was even greater than before,” NJB “they became very quiet,” IE “they granted more silence,” EMTV “they showed more quietness,” LITV and “they grew even quieter. No one wanted to miss a word of this.” MESSAGE

The Hebrew tongue was the native language of the listeners, and could no doubt be better understood. It was something that contributed to their uniqueness from other peoples. I do not doubt that Paul could also express himself more precisely in this language.

Remember, the word that had been spread about Paul was this: “This is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place: and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place” (Acts 21:28). An additional report had been circulated about him: “And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs” (Acts 21:21). Thus, the following charges had been leveled against Paul.

- He taught the Jews who were among the Gentiles to forsake Moses.
- He taught the Jews ought not to circumcise their children.
- He taught the Jews should not walk after the customs of the Jews.
- He taught against “the people,” or the Jews.
- He taught against the Law.
- He taught against the Temple.
- He had brought Greeks into the Temple, polluting it.

Now, as Paul speaks to his accusers, he speaks in the Hebrew tongue. This so contradicted the charges leveled against him, that it at once caught the attention of the Jews. Although many of them no doubt spoke Greek, it is the opinion of many scholars that they had no heart for it. John Gill writes, “. . . chiefly because the Hellenistic language was not so agreeable to them, nor the Hellenistic Jews, who spoke the Greek language, and used the Greek version of the Bible; and such an one they took Paul to be, besides his being a Christian; wherefore when they heard him speak in the Hebrew tongue, it conciliated their minds more to him, at least engaged their attention the more to what he was about to say.” JOHN GILL, COMMENTARY ON ACTS

The Hebrew tongue was the native language of the listeners, and could no doubt be better understood. It was something that contributed to their uniqueness from other peoples. I do not doubt that Paul could also express himself more precisely in this language.

The point here, however, is that Paul spoke with great wisdom. He went about to diffuse the anger of the people by appealing to their uniqueness. In so doing, he at once cast a veil of suspicion over the charges being brought against him. Here is a marvelous demonstration of knowing “how ye ought to answer every man” (Col 4:6).

Today the saints of God should exercise themselves to speak in such a manner as to diffuse erroneous reports and flawed views. Sometimes unwise answers only fuel controversy, bringing no remedial benefits to the listener. There are lawful ways to do this without compromising the truth. It is not comely for those in Christ to come short in this matter, not knowing how they ought to answer those who are critical of them.

THE KIND OF MAN I AM

“ 3 I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous toward God, as ye all are this day.”

Redemption enhances the truth, even though it may first have been known only in types and shadows. This is something that is exceedingly difficult for those with a legalistic bent to perceive. Salvation in Christ Jesus does not technically render everything foretold of it obsolete.

By speaking of his heritage, he is affirming that he is not ashamed of his identity with the Jewish people, or their manner of life. While his conversion required the abandonment of some of his conclusions concerning the Law, it did not require a renunciation of it. Those who come to Christ are never required to renounce any truth they previously embraced. Redemption enhances the truth, even though it may first have been known only in types and shadows. This is something that is exceedingly difficult for those with a legalistic bent to perceive. Salvation in Christ Jesus does not technically render everything foretold of it obsolete. There is a vast difference between fulfillment and obsolescence. For example, the Old Covenant itself was ended as a means to righteousness (Rom 10:4). It was in this sense that the Lord Jesus “ fulfilled” both the Law and the Prophets. He did not erase them, or render them useless.

In the fulfilling of the Law and the Prophets they are now seen in a different light. They are not eliminated from the Scriptures, but occupy a secondary position – one that is enhanced by the greater glory of the New Covenant. Now, for example, “the righteousness of the Law” is fulfilled in those who “walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit” (Rom 8:4). The Prophets have a special utility in defining Christ and the nature of the salvation He came to effect. The fulfilling of the Prophets really has no relevance to the believer if the Prophets are fundamentally unknown. That kind of ignorance is primary, for it hides from the people the kind of Savior Jesus is, and what He actually came to do. Your acquaintance with the Prophets will confirm this to you.

BROUGHT UP IN JERUSALEM

“I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel . . .” Other versions read, “I had my education in this town,” BBE “brought up here in this city,” NJB “brought up and educated here in Jerusalem,” NLT “grew up in this city of Jerusalem,” IE “reared in this city,” AMPLIFIED “brought up here in Jerusalem,” GNB “having been up-nurtured, reared.” INTERLINEAR The preponderance of versions read “brought up in” Jerusalem.

The words “brought up” are translated from a Greek word meaning, “to nurse up, nourish up . . . properly of young children . . . nourished to promote their growth,” THAYER “nurturing rear, train, educate,” FRIBERG “to raise a child to maturity by providing for physical and psychological needs - to raise, to rear, to bring up,” LOUW-NIDA and “to bring up, care for, rear.” GINGRICH

The clear implication of the text is that Paul was exposed to the Law, and the teachings that surrounded it, from the time he was very young. This is something unique to the Jewish people – a people that were directed and cultured by the Lord. This is why it is so important to behold their manners. While they were certainly not a perfect people, and were prone to wander because of their hard-heartedness, their manner of life provided a context in which the Lord could work.

There are a number of Scriptural references to the teaching of children

- Abraham's children (Gen 18:19). Abraham faithfully passed the promises of God along to his own children. That manner was also passed to the children's children, as is evidence by Joseph's understanding of the promise of Israel's deliverance from Egypt (Gen 50:25).
- About the Passover (Ex 12:26-27). The meaning of the Passover feast was to be faithfully explained to the children. When the things related to the Passover were carried out, it was to be before the children.
- Redeeming a lamb (Ex 13:13-15). When the firstling of an ass was redeemed, a certain procedure was put in place. It was to be done before the children, so that when they inquired about the meaning of what was done, an explanation of their deliverance from Egypt and the consecration of the firstborn might be given.
- Under the Law (Deut 4:9-10; 6:2,7; 11:19). Under the Law, the children were to be taught the specifics of the Law, as well as the details of how it was given to Israel.
- Samuel (1 Sam 2:18; 3:1). As soon as Samuel was weaned, he was raised by Eli, ministering in the Tabernacle, and learning the routines of sacred service.
- The Psalmist (Psa 78:4). True Israelites pledged to make known the praises of the Lord to generations, His strength, and the wonderful works that He had done.
- Ahab's children (2 Kgs 10:1). Ahab had seventy sons. As wicked as he was, he arranged for them to be brought up. When Jehu wrote letters to those in Samaria, he made sure the teachers of the children of Ahab got copies.
- Jeremiah (Jer 1:5-7). Jeremiah was separated from the womb unto the Lord. The Lord apparently directed to him at a very young age, for Jeremiah told the Lord he was only a child. The Lord commanded him not to say that, but to rather do what he was commanded.
- John the Baptist (Lk 1:15,80). John the Baptist was filled with the Spirit from his mother's womb. As he grew, he eventually went into the desert, remaining there until he was made known to Israel to announce the coming of the Savior.
- Jesus (Lk 2:40,46-47,52). Jesus was raised diligently by Joseph and Mary, so that at the age of twelve he was conversant with the things of God.
- Timothy (2 Tim 3:15). Timothy was knowledgeable of the Scriptures from the time of his youth, being faithfully taught by his mother and grandmother.
- Christian fathers (Eph 6:4). In the body of Christ, fathers are told to raise their children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Other versions read, "training and admonition," NKJV :disciple and instruction," NASB and "training and discipline and the counsel and admonition." AMPLIFIED That includes more than abbreviated Bible stories, and simplistic Christian songs.

The failure of many Christians to communicate the truth of future events to their children is seen in the near-total absence of understanding among the younger generation concerning the coming of the Lord, the resurrection of the dead, the day of judgment, and an eternal inheritance. Children should be taught more than to be kind and share their toys. They are capable of profiting from direct statements of scripture and sound explanations of the Word of the living God.

I have observed over the years that some people wait until it is too late to educate their children in the ways of the Lord. Of course, with nurseries, children's church, and preschool provisions this is easy to do. But that does not made it right.

Training in the home is essential, but it is not enough! Paul was a Jew, brought up in Jerusalem, even though his father was a Pharisee. He was not brought up under the teaching of a nanny, or a children's pastor, but at the feet of Gamaliel, who was an astute teacher of the Law. Likewise today, in addition to godly parents, children need to be exposed to the best teachers available.

Under the Law, the children were with their parents when the Law was publicly read (Josh 8:35; 2 Chron 20:13; Ezra 10:1; Neh 8:3).

The failure of many Christians to communicate the truth of future events to their children is seen in the near-total absence of understanding among the younger generation concerning the coming of the Lord, the resurrection of the dead, the day of judgment, and an eternal inheritance.

During the ministry of Jesus, "children" were brought with their parents to hear Him (Matt 14:21; 15:38; 18:2). Jesus told His disciples not to forbid the children to come to Him. It was the "children" who cried out "Hosanna to the Son of David," when Jesus triumphantly rode into Jerusalem (Matt 21:15). When Paul spent seven days in Tyre, and departed, whole families accompanied him to the ship, including their children (Acts 21:5).

As confirmed in our text, this was a Jewish manner. It is not the manner in the churches of our day. Someone needs to ask those promoting the separation of children from the adults the basis for such an action.

THE PERFECT MANNER OF THE LAW

" . . . and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers . . ." Other versions read, "the strictness of our father's law," NKJV "strictly according to the law," NASB "thoroughly trained in the law," NIV "educated strictly according to our ancestral law," NRSV "trained in the keeping of every detail of the law," BBE "according to the exactness of the law," DARBY "My education was in the strict rules handed down by our ancestors," GWN and "according to the strictest care in the law." AMPLIFIED

It is clear that young Saul of Tarsus was not raised with a childish version of the law. He was rather exposed to its meticulous details.

Paul's training probably included the traditions that had been developed by the leaders of Israel. Both the Law and the traditions surrounding it were very exact and precise. Yet, Paul's parents saw fit for him to be reared in Jerusalem by Gamaliel, one who was an expert in that law. This is the same kind of decision Hannah made in sending young Samuel to Eli. Hannah viewed that as lending her son to the Lord for as long as he lived (1 Sam 1:27-28). Eli also viewed her action in this way (1 Sam 2:20). The very idea of such a decision is strange to the American Christian. However, that is only because few people see raising children in the Lord as something to actually be done.

ZEALOUS TOWARD GOD

" . . . and was zealous toward God . . ." Other versions read, "being zealous for God," NASB "given up to the cause of God with all my heart," BBE "I was a zealot for God," CJB "devoted to God," GWN "full of duty towards God," NJB "very zealous to honor God in everything I did," NLT "fervent minded to Godward," TNT "very anxious to honor God in everything I did," LIVING "very serious about serving God," IE "ardent for God," MONTGOMERY and "being ardent [even a zealot]

for God.” AMPLIFIED

This is a most intriguing phrase: “zealous toward God.” It is an expression that reveals the conscience of Paul, and his singular devotion to God Himself. In his epistle to the Galatians he wrote of formerly “being more exceedingly zealous of the tradition of my fathers” (Gal 1:14). It does not appear that this was referring to the “tradition of the elders,” which was soundly denounced by the Lord Jesus (Matt 15:2-6). The manner in which Paul speaks here indicates that he was speaking of traditions that he saw as based solidly on Scripture – else he would not have said he was “zealous toward God.” I gather that he had a spirit during those times that was close to that of David, who lived with a more lively awareness of God than of men.

Add to that this was a zeal produced by Paul being taught according to “the perfect manner of the Law.” He was not moved by youthful hype, or some week-end of distraction with other youths. It was his exposure to the teaching of Gamaliel, who taught the youth, but was himself not a youth-teacher, for he also taught the leaders of the Jewish community, for he himself was a Pharisee (Acts 5:34). The very thought of today’s youth ministers teaching the adults, elders, deacons, etc, is a frightening one! If that is the case, it should also be a disconcerting thought to ponder them teaching our children!

It is exceedingly difficult to parallel Paul’s former life with the sectarian posture of many today. The difference is that those who have embraced mere human tradition claim to be followers of Christ. Also, they do not have enough of an understanding of Scripture to be zealous toward God, for their view of Him is not conducive to such a committal.

AS YE ALL ARE

“ . . . as ye all are this day.” Other versions read, “just as you all are today,” NASB and “as any of you are today.” NIV

Paul does not see the attack of these people as a purely personal one. They have acted out of a misapprehension of God Himself – just as he did when he persecuted the church.

There is a gem of truth hidden in this that is not at all apparent to the modern church. The Jews were cultured to live for God. That was their whole reason for being. Behind the scenes, Satan raised up false prophets and teachers among them to convert that zeal. He made attempts through the efforts of idolatrous nations, but eventually that failed – particularly after the Babylonian captivity. With the removal of outward idolatry from the Jewish community, there was only one way for the devil to corrupt their understanding. That was through an erroneous view of God Himself. In particular, the purpose of God concerning the whole world was hidden from them, and they became ingrown.

In the case of Paul, he did not see God as having an only begotten Son through whom grace and truth had come. He rather thought within himself that he ought to “do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth” (Acts 26:9). However, once he saw Jesus correctly, his zeal for God included the proclaiming and exaltation of the name of Jesus.

It is exceedingly difficult to parallel Paul’s former life with the sectarian posture of many today. The difference is that those who have embraced mere human tradition claim to be followers of Christ. Also, they do not have enough of an understanding of Scripture to be zealous toward God, for their view of Him is not conducive to such a committal. Zeal without knowledge is not good (Rom 120:2).

I PERSECUTED THIS WAY

“ 4 And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women.”

Paul proceeds to account for the change in his life – something of which the Asian Jews were probably not aware. Christians had heard of Paul’s transformation (Acts 9:13), but there is no record of the Jews circulating such information. Believing Jews had heard that Paul was preaching against Jewry (Acts 21:21), but apparently had not been apprised of his former life.

I PERSECUTED THIS WAY

“And I persecuted this way. . .” Other versions read, “I persecuted the followers of this Way,” NIV “I made attacks on this Way,” BBE “people who followed the way of Christ,” GWN “the Christians,” LIVING “this new faith,” WEYMOUTH and “I harassed (troubled, molested, and persecuted) this Way [of the Lord]” AMPLIFIED

The text does not say that Paul persecuted people, as the NIV/CJB/NIB/NLT (“followers”), GWN/GNB (“people”), Message (“anyone connected with”), and Living Bible (“the Christians”) read.

“The WAY” denotes a certain profession and manner of life. As used here, the word “way” refers to “a course of conduct, a way (i. e. manner) of thinking, feeling, deciding,” THAYER “a manner of living and acting way of life, type of conduct,” FRIBERG and “way of life, conduct; Way (of the Christian faith and life).” UBS What Paul was really attacking was the newness of life in Christ Jesus. He did not oppose people because of their persons, but rather because of the manner in which they lived – and there is a fine distinction in those two things.

The fact of the matter is that those in Christ live differently – noticeably different. They can be distinguished from all other people by the way they live. There is such a distinguishable difference in their life that it provokes inquiry concerning “the hope” they possess (1 Pet 3:15). Paul makes a frequent point of this comparison.

- Dead indeed unto sin and alive unto God (Rom 6:11).
- Servants of sin and made free from sin (Rom 6:17-18).
- Servants of sin and servants to God (Rom 6:20-22).
- Believers and unbelievers (2 Cor 6:14a).
- Righteous and unrighteous (2 Cor 6:14b).
- Light with darkness (2 Cor 6:14c, Eph 5:8).
- He that believes with an infidel (2 Cor 6:15).
- What we were and what we now are (1 Cor 6:11).
- Dead in sins and quickened together with Christ (Eph 2:5).
- Far off and made nigh (Eph 2:13).

Peter does the same.

- Sheep going astray and returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls (1 Pet 2:24).
- Called out of darkness and called into His marvelous light (1 Pet 2:9).
- Not a people and the people of God (1 Pet 2:10a).
- Had not obtained mercy and not have obtained mercy (1 Pet 2:10b).

These are not mere philosophical distinctions. Neither, indeed are the creedal pronouncements. These descriptions are reflected and confirmed in “the way” people live. That “way,” or manner, is what Paul opposed. In his mind, this involved following Jesus rather than Moses.

In our time, if someone was asked to describe HOW, or the way, a Christian lives, what would they say? How do you describe those who are in Christ Jesus? We have come to a time when such an approach to defining a Christian is virtually unknown. It has become exceedingly difficult to distinguish professing Christians from the rest of the world. A Gospel has been preached that has not underscored what actually happens to a person when they are born again. Therefore, Satan has moved men to define Christians in a vague manner. That is why men say things like, “We are all sinners, but Christians are forgiven.” However, that is not the way Saul of Tarsus thought, and it is not how he viewed the community of believers. He perceived them as being on a different “way,” living in a different manner, and motivated by different principles.

When the professing church is required to have recovering ministries, special classes for the divorced, and tailored ministries for young people, its likeness to “this present evil world” is accented. When, in matters of analysis and motivation, it has to borrow its wisdom from the world, it has publicly confessed its likeness to the world. The reality of “the Way” has thus been obscured. Whatever defense may be presented for such a condition, it is a flagrant denial of the reality of the new birth, reconciliation to God, a new creation, and being made to sit together with Christ in the heavenly places.

I seriously doubt that Saul of Tarsus would persecute the nominal church of our day? He would probably perceive it as beneath the dignity of devoted Jews, like himself prior to his change.

UNTO THE DEATH

“ . . . unto the death . . .” Other versions read, “to the death,” NKJV “to their death,” NIV “to the point of death,” NRSV “until they were executed,” GWN and “some of them were killed.” IE

The aggressive stance was the result of devotion to the Law of Moses, which spoke precisely about what to do with false prophets and those who sought to turn the hearts of the people to another god. Death was mandated.

- Speaking blasphemous words about God (Lev 24:11-16,23).

Oh, that professing Christians would take this mandated death as seriously as Saul of Tarsus and the Asian Jews took the death imposed upon false prophets!

Those who prophesied falsely, were to be put to death. If they prophesied something and it came to pass, yet if they called upon the people to follow other gods, they were to be put to death (Deut 13:1-5).

- A relative that secretly said to follow other gods, was to be put to death (Deut 13:6-9).
- The prophet who presumed to speak a word in the name of the Lord, which God had not commanded him to speak, was to be put to death (Deut 18:20).

Saul of Tarsus took these commandments seriously. He saw early Christians as following a false teacher, worshiping a false god, and promoting a false way. He was wrong in his assessment, yet was seeking to act in strict comportment with the Law of the Lord. This, of course, was the same frame of mind in which the Jews before him were conducting themselves.

AN APPLICATION

The New Covenant also demands death – but not after the manner of the Old Covenant. Through the Holy Spirit, we are to “mortify,” or “put to death,” NIV “the deeds of the body” (Rom 8:13). Elsewhere it also said, “Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry” (Col 3:5).

Referring to the manner of this death, we are told, “And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts” (Gal 5:24). Initially, when we are baptized into Christ, “our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin” (Rom 6:6). Those in Christ are to keep “the old man” upon the cross, where he will eventually succumb. Paul acknowledged that he was doing this when he wrote, “I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me” (Gal 2:20). He saw this as something in which he could legitimately glory. As it is written, “But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world” (Gal 6:14).

Oh, that professing Christians would take this mandated death as seriously as Saul of Tarsus and the Asian Jews took the death imposed upon false prophets!

BINDING AND DELIVERING

“ . . . binding and delivering into prisons both men and women.” Other versions read, “binding and putting,” NASB “Arresting both men and women, and thowing them into prison,” NIV I tied up men and women and put them into prison,” GWN and “putting in chains and committing to prison both men and women.” AMPLIFIED

Luke’s record of this initiative in The Acts reads as follows: “As for Saul, he made havock of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison” (Acts 8:3). Paul had actually been more zealous than the Jews who were opposing him. He did not merely go after the leaders, but sought out everyone who named the name of Christ. This initial opposition was no doubt within the confines of Jerusalem. However, Paul did not limit his efforts to that central city.

THE HIGH PRIEST BEARS ME WITNESS

“ 5 As also the high priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders: from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished.”

Paul had been an angry Jew, but he had chosen to work within the framework of the Jewish system. This tells us that he was acting more as a devout Jew than a mere reactionary to those who were following Christ. His conduct was a testimony of his conscience toward God, and of his persuasion that the Jewish system remained the only valid way of approaching to or serving the God of heaven.

Within the memorable past, there had been some remarkable witnesses in the city of Jerusalem.

- The news of the birth of “the King of the Jews” – something that had caused all Jerusalem to be “troubled” (Matt 2:3).
- At the time the infant Jesus was dedicated, the news disseminated by Anna to those who were looking for redemption in Jerusalem (Lk 2:38).
- The remarkable ministry of John the Baptist, when the citizenry of Jerusalem went out to hear him (Matt 3:5).
- The prodigious ministry of Jesus Himself during which people from Jerusalem followed Him (Matt 4:25).
- Jesus feeding the multitudes – 5,000, and also 4,000 men beside women and children (Matt 14:19-21; 15:36-37).
- Jesus preaching in the Temple and the surrounding synagogues (Matt 4:23; 9:35; 21:12; 26:55).

- The death of Christ that was known throughout the city (Lk 24:18).
- The testimony of the saints who rose from the dead when Jesus died, and went into the city to appeared to many after He was risen from the dead (Matt 27:52-53).
- The events that took place on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:6).
- In Jerusalem, the addition of 5,000 men to the followers of Jesus (Acts 4:4).
- Jerusalem was filled with the doctrine of Christ (Acts 5:28).
- The testimony and death of Stephen, which initiated the persecution in which Saul became dominant (Act 7:58-8:1).

Ponder the caliber of the witnesses that had been in Jerusalem: The Lord Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, the twelve Apostles, Stephen, and Paul the Apostle. All of their witnesses were consistent, and none of them contradicted what the others had said.

Yet, the glory of these unparalleled reports had faded. This event is estimated to have taken place about 57 AD, only 27 years after the ministry and death of Jesus. This forgetfulness was so powerful that not a single Jew is said to have come to the defense of Paul. It even appears that some of the local Jews had joined in the opposition of the Jews from Asia.

No person should be stunned when places once exposed to the good things of God deteriorate into a state where such things can no longer be remembered.

THE HIGH PRIEST AND ALL THE ESTATE OF THE ELDERS

“As also the high priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders . . .” Other versions read, “all the council of the elders,” NKJV “all the Council,” NIV “the whole council of elders,” NRSV “all the rulers,” BBE “the whole Sanhedrin,” CJB “the elderhood,” DARBY “the ancients,” DOUAY “company of the elders,” GENEVA “council of the leaders,” GWN “the eldership,” YLT “the whole council of Jewish elders,” IE and “whole council of elders [Sanhedrin].” AMPLIFIED

The expression “estate of the elders” is translated from a single Greek word (presbute,rion). The lexical meaning of the word is, “body of elders, presbytery, senate, council of the Jewish elders,” THAYER “group of elders functioning with administrative authority body or council of elders ; (1) in Jerusalem equivalent to the Sanhedrin, the Jewish high court,” FRIBERG and “the highest council of the Jews (see also sune,drion ‘Sanhedrin, the council of the Jews.’” LOUW-NIDA

This word is found three times in Scripture.

- Luke 22:26: “And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people and the chief priests and the scribes came together, and led him into their council, saying” (Luke 22:66).
- Acts 22:5 : “As also the high priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders : from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished” (Acts 22:5).

SANHEDRIN QUALIFICATIONS

The qualifications for membership were both very minute and very numerous. The applicant had to be morally and physically blameless. He had to be middle aged, tall, good looking, wealthy, learned (both in the divine law and diverse branches of profane science, such as medicine, mathematics, astronomy, magic, idolatry, etc.), in order that he might be able to judge in these matters. He was required to know several languages, so that the Sanhedrim might not be dependent upon an interpreter in case any foreigner or foreign question came before them (Menachoth, 65 a; Sanhedrin, 17 a; Maimonides, Iad Ha-Chezaka, Hilchoth Sanhedrin, 2, 1-8). Very old persons, proselytes, eunuchs, and Nethinim were ineligible because of their idiosyncrasies; nor could such candidates be elected as had no children, because they could not sympathize with domestic affairs (Mishna, Horajoth, 1, 4; Sanhedrin, 36 b); nor those who could not prove that they were the legitimate offspring of a priest, Levite, or Israelite, who played dice, lent money on usury, flew pigeons to entice others, or dealt in produce of the Sabbatical year (Mishna, Sanhedrin, 3, 3).

McCLINTOK & STRONG'S

1 Timothy 4:4; "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery" (1 Tim 4:14).

It is generally understood that this is a reference is to the Sanhedrin, a term that is not found in the Authorized Version. The New International Version uses it nineteen times (Matt 5:22; 26:59; Mk 14:55; 15:1; John 11:47; Acts 4:15; 5:21,27,34,41;6:12,15; 22:30; 23:1,6,15,20,28; 24:20). The word "Sanhedrin" is a transliteration of the Greek word sune,drion (sun-he-drion). It is translated "council" KJV (Matt 5:22; 26:59; Mk 14:55; 15:1; John 11:47; Acts 4:15; 5:21,27, 34,41; 6:12,15; 22:30; 23:1,6,15,20,28; 24:20).

The custom of the Sanhedrin is traced back to the time of Moses, when seventy men were chosen to be judges of the people with Moses. When the Law was given, there were "seventy elders of Israel" who were allowed to come up Mount Sinai – but not as far as Moses (Ex 24:1,9-10). Later, "seventy men of the elders of Israel" were ordained by God to assist Moses. He took "some of the spirit" that was upon Moses, "and put it upon them," so Moses would not have to bear the burden of the people "alone" (Num 11:16-17). These were probably "the judges" that are referenced prior to the time of individual Judges who were over Israel (Num 25:5; Deut 19:17,18).

These men were charged with applying the Law to circumstances, and using their seasoned wisdom to do so in a proper manner.

Now, Paul says he not only received authority from the high priest to arrest and bind believers in Damascus, but that "the elders" also concurred with that mission, giving him the authority to fulfill his purpose in the persecuting of believers.

Behold the aggressiveness of Saul of Tarsus! Damascus was about one hundred miles north of Jerusalem. He was not content to merely arrest and bind those in Jerusalem, but pursued believers into Damascus of Syria – all the while supposing that he was serving God.

I RECEIVED LETTERS UNTO THE BRETHREN

" . . . from whom also I received letters unto the brethren . . . " The word "brethren" refers to Jewish brethren, not those in Christ Jesus. The account of this is given in the ninth chapter of Acts. "And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest, and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem" (Acts 9:1-2). Saul, then, was not commissioned by the high priest. He himself was on the initiative to obtain letters that would permit him to make arrests in the synagogues of Damascus.

We learn from this that believers were continuing to meet in the synagogues, which provided a forum to proclaim and discuss the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. It makes perfect sense for them to do this, for all of the prophecies concerning the coming of Christ were in the Jewish Scriptures. There is no known prophecy issued by a Gentile of the coming Savior, or of the salvation that He would effect.

As confirmed throughout the book of Acts, there was a consistent effort to open the truth of the Gospel to those who had been exposed to Moses and the Prophets. Even when Gentiles heard the Gospel, they generally had already been exposed to Moses and the Prophets among the Jews and in the synagogues (Acts 8:27-28; 10:1-2; 13:42; 17:4,12; 18:4).

TO BRING THEM BOUND TO JERUSALEM TO BE PUNISHED

“ . . . and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished.”

The word “punished,” together with the fact that these believers were found in the synagogues, suggests that Paul was targeting Jewish believers. They were being punished because they were perceived as defecting from the one true God. Jerusalem was the place where this could be done officially under the authority of the leaders. What a commentary that is on the unvarnished faith of those early brethren!

A GREAT LIGHT FROM HEAVEN

“ 6 And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.”

There are three accounts of this event in the book of Acts: 9:3-19; 22:6-21; 26:12-18. It is obviously a pivotal event in the life of Paul. The report of it will emphasize certain things with which the Jews were familiar.

- DIVINE COMMUNICATION. Through the Scriptures, the Jews were familiar with the true God communicating to Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, and the prophets. The whole body of the people heard the communication of the Law. He communicated it verbally, by dreams, through holy angels, and by visions. Other nations did not have communicating gods.

- DIVINE DIRECTION. Other nations were not directed by a living god. God directed Noah, Abraham, Moses, Israel, and the Prophets.

- SUPERNATURAL MANIFESTATIONS. Supernatural manifestations were not common in the heathen nations. Other nations did not have directing gods. The Jews knew of the flood, the scattering of the people at the tower of Babel, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, the ten plagues of judgment against Egypt, the manifestations of Sinai, and all manner of Divine workings in military victories, supernatural sustenance, and miraculous judgments. No heathen gods wrought such things.

- THE WILL OF GOD. Israel was made knowledge of the will of God through Moses and the Law, and the prophets. The will of heathen gods was largely unknown.

- THE INVOLVEMENT OF THOSE TO WHOM THE LORD APPEARS. Israel was knowledgeable of those who personally participated in the will of God: Noah, Abraham, Moses, Israel, and the prophets. The involvement of heathen peoples with their gods was not a known practice. Only in folklore did such things occur.

Others gods did not conduct themselves in such a manner. Some of the false gods referenced in Scripture include the following.

- Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zidonians (1 Kgs 11:33a).
- Baal, god of Phoenicia and Canaanitish tribes (Num 22:41).
- Baal-peor, a god of the Moabites (Num 25:3).
- Chemosh, the god of the Moabites (Judges 10:6c; 1 Kgs 11:33b).
- Dagon, a god of the Philistines (Judges 16:23).

- Diana, a goddess of the Ephesians (Acts 19:24).
- Jupiter, or Hermes, a Greek and Roman god (Acts 14:12a)
- Mercurius, or Zeus, a Greek and Roman god (Acts 14:12b).
- Milcom, the god of the children of Ammon (Judges 10:6d; 1 Kgs 11:33c).
- Molech, Moloch, or Milcom, a god of the Ammonites (Lev 18:21).
- The gods of the Amorites (Josh 24:15).
- The gods of Syria (Judges 10:6a).
- The gods of Zidon (Judges 10:6b).
- The gods of the Philistines (Judges 10:6e).
- The gods of the nations (2 Kgs 18:33).
- The gods of the countries (2 Kgs 18:35).
- The gods of the people (1 Chron 5:25).
- The gods of the children of Seir (2 Chron 25:14).
- The gods of other lands (2 Chron 32:17).
- The gods of the Egyptians (Ex 12:23; Jer 43:13).

AS I MADE MY JOURNEY

“And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus. . .” Other versions read, “as I made my journey,” NASB and “while I was on my way.” NRSV

This was not a light that lit up the sky, as the sun does. It was rather a vastly superior light that was focused upon Saul of Tarsus. It was pinpointed, so to speak, on him. That light was to the day what the sunlight is to the blackness of midnight.

It is as Paul was carrying out his initiative against the believers that this event occurred. He was not seeking the Lord at this time. He was not engaged in a quest to understand Jesus Christ. This was a Divine intervention concerning which Paul had no advance information.

Here is an example of the Lord forcing His way into a person’s life, interrupting their course, halting the fulfillment of their purpose, and making them consider Him. Whatever a person may think about God doing such a thing, here is a factual account of Him forcibly bringing a halt to evil intentions. It is an example of God coercing a person to think about Him.

God interrupted the activities of Adam and Eve in the Garden. He interrupted the activities throughout the whole earth in the judgment of the flood. He forced the building of the tower of Babel and its attending city to halt. He halted the moral mayhem of Sodom and Gomorrah. He interrupted Moses by the burning bush. He abruptly ended king Herod’s gloating, as well as that of Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar.

The doctrines of men that represent God as never doing such a thing, but always deferring to the will of men could not be further from the truth. Jesus forced Himself into the dialog of Cleopas and his companion. Following His resurrection, He forced Himself into a gathering of His disciples who were lamenting because they thought their hopes had been dashed to the ground.

So the Lord interrupted Saul’s plans, while he was in the process of carrying them out. In this case, it was not for cursing, but for blessing. The time had come for him to be called, and even though the circumstances were unfavorable, the call was issued and he was drawn to Jesus.

THERE SHONE FROM HEAVEN

“ . . . about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.” Other versions read, “about noon, suddenly a great light from heaven shone around me,” NKJV “about noontime, a very bright light suddenly flashed from heaven all around me,” NASB and “About noon . . . suddenly a bright light from heaven flashed around me.” NIV

At noon – the time when the sun is at its highest – a brighter light “shone from heaven.” The word “shone” is translated from a word that means, “to flash about, shine around,” THAYER “to shine around someone,” FRIBERG “to shine very brightly on an area surrounding an object - to shine brightly around, to flash around” LOUW-NIDA

This was not a light that lit up the sky, as the sun does. It was rather a vastly superior light that was focused upon Saul of Tarsus. It was pinpointed, so to speak, on him. That light was to the day what the sunlight is to the blackness of midnight. It was the kind of light that was commanded to shine in the beginning, that pierced through darkness and defined the meaning of day (Gen 1:3). Paul says of that original light that God “commanded the light to shine out of darkness” (2 Cor 4:6a). In this case, it was commanded to shine on a person – a person flesh would not have suspected to be the target of such illumination.

This account is a revelation of the manner of the kingdom. In order for man to obtain spiritual vision or understanding, a greater light than that of nature must shine upon him. This was involved in Peter having it revealed to him that Jesus was “the Christ, the Son of the living God” (Matt 16:16-17). It is what is involved in the new birth, as written in Second Corinthians: “For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 4:6). This is the illumination to which Hebrews 10:32 refers: “But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions.” It is the enlightenment mentioned in Hebrews 6:5: “For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost.”

The position that states there is no heavenly involvement or intervention prior to being in Christ is most absurd. In order to get into Christ, something superior to nature must be brought to bear upon man. That is precisely why believers are referred to as “a new creation” NKJV (2 Cor 5:17), and “the workmanship of God” (Eph 2:10). This is illustrated in this very text. A “new creation” refers to something Deity does, for only Deity can create. Further, a “new creation” is not a work that consists of something man has done together with God, or that God has done together with man. There are things that men do, but they are a response that requires strength and wisdom that are not resident in nature.

I FELL TO THE GROUND AND HEARD A VOICE

“ 7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? 8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And He said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.”

The weight of glory is greater than that of nature (2 Cor 4:17). Strictly speaking, the reaction here described did not proceed from the human will, as one that falls down to worship. Before Saul had any idea of the source of this blazing light, he was rendered helpless. He could not remain on his feet.

I FELL TO THE GROUND

“And I fell unto the ground . . .” Other versions read, “went down on the earth,” BBE and “falling on the ground.” DOUAY As used here, the word from which “fell” is translated means, “to be prostrated, fall prostrate; of those overcome by terror or astonishment or grief,” THAYER “as coming down forcefully from a higher to lower level fall, drop.” FRIBERG

When soldiers from the high priest came to arrest Jesus in the Garden, as soon as He identified Himself, “they went backward and fell to the ground” (John 18:6). Moses confessed that he “fell down before the Lord” (Deut 9:25). Ezekiel said when he saw the glory of the Lord, “I fell on my face” (Ezek 3:23). When Daniel saw a great vision from the Lord, he retained no strength – it was too great for his natural capacities (Dan 10:8,16,17). When John saw the glorified Christ, he “fell at His feet as dead” (Rev 1:17).

I HEARD A VOICE

“ . . . and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? . . .”

Other versions read, “why are you persecuting Me?” NASB “Why do you persecute Me?” NIV “why are you attacking me so cruelly?,” BBE “Why do you keep persecuting Me?” CJB and “why do you persecute Me [harass and trouble and molest Me]?” AMPLIFIED and “why are you out to get me?” MESSAGE

The account in Acts twenty six adds these words of Jesus to Saul: “It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks,” or “goads” NASB (Acts 26:14). This indicates that the Lord had been preparing the heart of Saul for this confrontation. How long he had endured a pricking conscience, we do not know.

The lexical meaning of the word “persecute” is as follows: “to make to run or flee, put to flight, drive away . . . to run swiftly in order to catch some person or thing, to run after . . . to pursue in a hostile manner . . . in any way whatever to harass, trouble, molest one; to persecute,” THAYER “of hostile pursuit persecute,” FRIBERG “to chase, hunt” LIDDELL-SCOTT

Paul was aggressive in his attempts to rid the land of the influence of those who were of “the way” of Christ. He hounded them, chasing them down like wild animal in order that he might bind them and haul them off to Jerusalem to be punished – even by death.

Unknown to Saul, the Lord Jesus was monitoring his entire crusade. He had taken Saul’s initiative personally, and now He confronts the persecutor as the persecuted One.

In saying this, Paul was also drawing attention to the activities of the persecuting Jews. Perhaps they would see the parallel of Paul’s former actions with their own.

I ANSWERED

“And I answered, Who art thou, Lord?” Other versions read, “Who are you, sir?” GWN/NAB/LIVING and “Who are you Master?” MESSAGE

Saul did not know who this was – only that it was someone infinitely greater than himself. There are accounts of men calling angelic messengers “Lord.” Gideon called an angel “Lord” (Judges 6:12,13). Daniel also called an angel “Lord” (Dan 10:16,17,19). Cornelius also referred to an angel as “Lord” (Acts 10:4).

The Greek word here translated “Lord” is ku,rie . It is used no less than 747 times from Matthew through Revelation. Several times (KJV) it is translated “Sir” (Matt 13:27; 21:30; 27:63; John 4:11,15,19 49; 5:7; 12:21; 20:15; Rev 7:14). Some of them are expressions spoken to an earthly master (Matt 13:27; 21:30). One was addressed to Pilate (Matt 27:63). Some were addressed to Jesus, but without the knowledge of who He really was (John 4:11,15,19,49; 5:7; 12:21; 20:15). One was addressed to a holy angel (Rev 7:14). Sometimes it is translated “Lord,” but is applied to an earthly master (i.e. Matt 25:24). Jesus also spoke of those who called Him “Lord,” yet did not do what He said (Matt 7:22).

Thus we see that this term is not always used by those who have recognized Jesus for who He really is. At this point, Saul does not use it in that sense either. He only knows that he is dealing with someone vastly superior to himself.

I AM JESUS OF NAZARETH

“And He said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth , , ,”

From Matthew through Acts, the expression “Jesus of Nazareth” is used (Matt 26:71; Mk 1:24; 10:47; 14:67; 16:6; Lk 4:34; 18:37; 24:19; John 1:45; 18:5,7; 19:19; Acts 2:22; 6:14; 10:38; 22:8; 26:9).

- Christ’s enemies referred to Him in this manner (Matt 26:71; Mk 14:67).
- Demons also referred to Jesus in this way (Mk 1:24; Lk 4:34).
- This is how blind Bartimaeus knew him (Mk 10:47; Lk 18:37).
- Holy angels identified Him with these words (Mk 16:6).
- The two on the road to Emmaus used this expression (Lk 24:19).
- Philip told Nathanael they had found the One of whom Moses prophesied, referring to “Jesus of Nazareth” (John 1:45).
- Those arresting Jesus in the Garden used this expression (John 18:5,7).
- Pilate wrote these words on a sign, and put it on the cross: “JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KIND OF THE JEWS” (John 19:19).
- On the day of Pentecost, this is how Peter first referred to Jesus (Acts 2:22).
- The false witnesses who rose up against Stephen referred to Jesus in this way (Acts 6:14).
- When Peter preached at the house of Cornelius, he referred to Jesus in this manner (Acts 10:38).
- In describing his encounter with Jesus on the road to Damascus, Paul also used this expression (Acts 22:8; 26:9).

The Name Jesus Was Not Unique

The angels surely did not leave Him after He was born. We know that they warned Joseph of the aggression of Herod, and told him when and where to escape his wrath. Their ministry no doubt continued in the behalf of the young child.

The name “Jesus” is the Greek form of the Hebrew name Joshua, and is so used in Hebrews: “For if Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day” (Heb 4:8). Later versions read “Joshua” in this verse.

Paul also refers to a man named

“Jesus” in his letter to the Colossians. He was distinguished from the Lord Jesus by referring to him as “Justus” – “And Jesus, which is called Justus, who are of the circumcision. These only are my fellowworkers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me” (Col 4:11).

The Savior Sanctified the Name

The Lord Jesus sanctified this name. Of the 983 times it is used from Matthew through Revelation, 981 of the references are to the Son of God.

Although the Lord was distinguished from other men bearing this name by associating Him with Nazareth, that is not what distinguishes Him to the saved. Nazareth distinguished Jesus prior to the commencement of His ministry. He did not remain there after He began His work.

Nazareth was not a good place to be raised. When Philip told Nathanael they had found the Prophet foretold by Moses, saying it was “Jesus of Nazareth,” Nathanael replied, “Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?” (John 1:46). According to the flesh, this was not a good city in which to raise the Son of God. Some might object that during His formative years, this would be a great liability. However, Joseph and Mary were faithful in raising young Jesus, so that it is said of Him, “And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man” (Luke 2:52).

Jesus once referred to angels as having a special care for the “little ones.” He said, “Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven” (Mat 18:10). I do not doubt that they were especially diligent in the care of young Jesus. It is written, “when He bringeth in the firstbegotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship Him” (Heb 1:6). The angels surely did not leave Him after He was born. We know that they warned Joseph of the aggression of Herod, and told him when and where to escape his wrath (Matt 2:13,19-20). Their ministry no doubt continued in the behalf of the young child.

After He had commenced preaching, Jesus returned to Nazareth, and ministered in the synagogue. The people of His home town became so angry, that it is written, “And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath, and rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down headlong” (Luke 4:28-29).

Notice how closely aligned the Lord Jesus is with His people. What is done to them, is said to be done to Him – whether for good or for evil. Jesus spoke specifically to this matter in Matthew 25:40,45). The eternal destiny of men will be directly impacted by how men have treated Christ’s brethren – for Jesus is described as “the firstborn of many brethren” (Rom 8:29). Furthermore, He is not ashamed to call them “brethren” because they are “all of One.” That is, they have been begotten by God by virtue of their new birth. Jesus is the “Firstbegotten,” but not the last begotten, although He was begotten uniquely. As to the manner in which He was begotten, He is “the only begotten” (John 1:14,18; 3:16,18; 1 John 4:9).

It is written, “But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit” (1 Cor 6:17). The record of conversions includes this description, “and believers were the more added to the Lord ” (Acts 5:14). Those who are born again are appropriately said to be “in Christ” (2 Cor 5:17), and Christ dwells in their hearts by faith (Eph 3:17). They are made “partakers of Christ” (Heb 3:14), and are said to be “members of His body, of His flesh and of His bones” (Eph 5:30).

It is no wonder, therefore, that Jesus says He was really the One who was persecuted by Saul of Tarsus. That circumstance has not changed. Jesus still takes persecution personally. It may not have appeared that way to those believers who were arrested, bound, delivered to Jerusalem, and eventually killed. Men may not be able to reason out why such things happen. However, it will help to consider that this world was not meant to be the arena in which all difficulties are resolved, all injustices aborted, and all inhumanities judged. There is a day of judgment that has been appointed for every injustice to be exposed and judged, and for the vindication of all who have lived unto the Lord. That day will eventually arrive, and all things will be settled for the glory of God and the benefit of the saints.

Paul's account of this event in the twenty-sixth chapter adds the following details. "But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me" (Acts 26:16-18).

THEY THAT WERE WITH ME

"9 And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me."

Paul was traveling with a band of men – perhaps soldiers from the high priest. They were not merely on a spying mission, but fully intended to do something of consequence when any believers were found. Those who were with Paul would prove to be witnesses that something of an epochal nature occurred that day as they headed for Damascus.

THEY SAW THE LIGHT

"And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid . . ." Other versions read, "beheld the light, to be sure," NASB "saw verily a light," PNT "the light did see." YLT

This, then, was not a personal vision or dream that was only apparent to Saul. It was a demonstration in nature that was visible to all who were with Paul. The event belongs to the class of revelations such as the giving of the Law at Sinai, when the glory of God was seen (Ex 24:10-11). Then there were flashes of lightning that were more intense than can be produced by nature itself (Psa 144:6). A similar light occurred when an angel was sent to release Peter, and "a light shined into the prison" (Acts 12:7).

This light was actually the glory of the exalted Christ, who was appearing to Saul to call him into the ministry. It is the appearance to which Paul referred in his first letter to the Corinthians: "And last of all He was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time" (1 Cor 15:8).

An introduction to this glory was seen by Peter, James, and John, when Jesus was transfigured before their eyes, and "His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was white as light" (Matt 17:1-3).

The fulness of this glory will appear when Jesus comes the second time. He will come like a flash of lightning that flashes from one end of the earth to the other (Matt 24:27). Jesus will appear, or be made visible, "in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him" (Matt 25:31). He will also appear in the Father's glory, as well as the glory of the holy angels (Lk 9:26). According to Mark's record, Jesus will "come in the clouds with great power and glory," at which time He will "send His angels, and shall gather together His elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven" (Mark 13:27). Matthew says "all the tribes of the earth" will mourn when they see "the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory," at which time He "shall send His angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Matt 24:31).

That will no more be a secret coming than Christ's appearance to Saul of Tarsus on the road to Damascus. Those who speak of a secret rapture in which the Lord will gather all of the saints, wafting them away from the earth without anyone knowing it, have betrayed an inexcusable level of ignorance. Aside from that, they have reproached the Lord of glory, as though His magnificent glory could be concealed as He comes within the proximity of the earth. Even the Psalmist, living in a period of lesser light, said, "The heavens declare His righteousness, and all the people see His glory" (Psa 97:6).

THEY HEARD NOT THE VOICE

"... but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me." Other versions read, "did not understand the voice," NASB and "they did not hear [the sound of the uttered words of] the voice of the One Who was speaking to me [so that they could understand it]." AMPLIFIED

As it is used here, the word "hear" is translated from a Greek word that means, "to understand, perceive the sense of what is said," THAYER and "of inner comprehension understand, be aware of, listen to." FRIBERG This agrees with the statement made in the ninth chapter concerning this event: "And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man" (Acts 9:7). Although the same Greek word is used, it is in a different sense. The ninth chapter speaks of hearing the sound of a voice. Our text speaks of discerning what the voice said.

Here was a private message delivered in a public setting – something like the word delivered to Archippus in a public letter: "And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it" (Col 4:17). Archippus would know the meaning of the exhortation, while others who heard these words might not.

This perspective of hearing is addressed in a word Jesus delivered to a group of doubters: "Why do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word" (John 8:43). Paul spoke of the same circumstance in his letter to the Romans: "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. But I say, Have they not heard? Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world" (Rom 10:17-18). Faith does not come from exposure to the sound of God's Word, but from the comprehension of what has been said.

Here was a private message delivered in a public setting – something like the word delivered to Archippus in a public letter: "And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it" (Col 4:17). Archippus would know the meaning of the exhortation, while others who heard these words might not.

So it is that Saul of Tarsus was able to respond to Jesus because he understood, or comprehended, what He had said. This could not be said of those who were traveling with him, even though they technically heard the same voice.

WHAT SHALL I DO, LORD?

"10 And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do."

The immediacy of Saul's response, as well as its nature, is worthy of focused attention. This is the kind of reaction that consistently takes place when the word of the Lord is understood.

WHAT SHALL I DO, LORD

"And I said, What shall I do, Lord? . . ." Other versions read, "What am I to do, Lord?" NRSV "What have I to do?" BBE "What should I do?" CJB "What do you want me to do, Lord?" GWN and "What must I do?" MRD

Recognition of Jesus as “Lord” was the first thing Paul recognized. It was that cognition that prompted him to ask what he ought to do. The concept of a Lord that does not require a person to do something is wholly erroneous. There is no such things as a “Lord” who does not have a will to which His subjects are subservient.

This is the kind of response the hearers had to Peter’s message on the day of Pentecost: “Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?” (Acts 2:37). It is how the Philippian jailer responded to Paul and Silas: “And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?” (Acts 16:30).

This is not the manner of perception being confessed today, and it is of great personal concern to me. People who say they are followers of Jesus are not asking what they ought to do. This suggests that they have not yet seen Jesus as “Lord,” which is a most serious circumstance.

IT SHALL BE TOLD THEE ALL THINGS WHICH ARE APPOINTED

“And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.” Other versions read, “all that has been appointed for you to do,” NASB “all that you have been assigned to do,” NIV “it will be made clear to you what you have to do,” BBE “everything that has been laid out for you to do,” CJB “it shall be told thee of all things that thou must do,” DOUAY “everything I’ve arranged for you to do,” GWN “all that it is commanded thee to do,” MRD “everything that you have been designated to do,” NET and “all that it is destined and appointed for you to do.” AMPLIFIED

The meaning of the word translated “appointed” is, “to put in place, top station, to place in a certain order . . . to arrange, to assign a place, to appoint . . . to assign (appoint) a thing to one,” THAYER “be instituted, be appointed, be established ,” FRIBERG “appoint, designate, set aside; command, order, direct,” UBS “to give a task to,” NIDA “to appoint one to do a thing,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “to prescribe.” LEH

The various translations accent the strength of this word: “assigned,” NIV “have to do,” BBE “laid out for you to do,” CJB “must do,” DOUAY “commanded,” MRD “designated,” NET and “destined and appointed.” AMPLIFIED

Jesus did not know anything about a “you-don’t-have-to-do-anything” religion. He certainly did not leave Saul with the impression that everything had been already done. We understand that the basis for salvation had, indeed, been done, and the foundation laid. But participation is quite another thing, and until men participate in what Jesus has done, it has no benefit for them.

Jesus once asked, “And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?” (Luke 6:46). That is a telling question that must be asked of this generation.

It also ought to be noted that what Jesus commands is compulsory. Men are not free to disobey Jesus, or fail to carry out His demands. If He says men are to pick up their cross and follow Him, then that is what they are required to do (Lk 9:23). If He says to “forsake all,” then that is what men are obliged to do (Lk 14:33). This has to do with initially following Christ, as well as being a functioning member of His body – and both will be required of Saul.

I do not believe this perspective is being proclaimed by the professing church of our time. There is too much disobedience in the nominal church, and that is undeniable evidence of unbelief and hard-heartedness. Make no mistake about this, “an evil heart of unbelief” will disqualify a person from glory.

Now that Jesus is exalted, no communication or direction from Jesus is so personal that it excludes the members of His body from involvement. Here is a most unusual apostle, and he is being called to a most unusual work. He will be given insight into unusual things. But in order to begin his race, he must come into contact with someone else who has been joined to the Lord. A member of Christ's body would tell him what to do in order to enter the Kingdom of God.

THE GLORY OF THAT LIGHT

“ 11 And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.”

Paul now reports the immediate effects of the blazing light that he had seen – a light that confirmed the presence of the Lord.

I COULD NOT SEE

In the flesh, Saul could not endure the glory of Christ – and what was revealed to him on the road to Damascus was not the full glory of Christ! It was a subdued glory, else the heavens and earth would have fled away, as they will when the fulness of His glory is made known

“And when I could not see for the glory of that light . . .” Other versions read, “because of the brightness of the light,” NASB “because of the brilliance,” NIV “because the light had been so bright,” GWN “had been so dazzling that I was blind,” NJB “by the intense light,” NLT “because of the dazzling sheen of that light,” WILLIAMS and “because [of the dazzlingly glorious intensity] of the brightness of that light.” AMPLIFIED

This glory was so bright – supernaturally bright – that it blinded Paul. Furthermore, the blindness was not momentary. This confirms the inability of the flesh to stand in the glory of the risen Christ. The afterglow of Divine glory caused Moses' face to shine so brightly the people could not look upon it. It must have been like the noonday sun before the people. Paul says the people “could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance” (2 Cor 3:7; Ex 34:29-35). That was, so to speak, a filtered glory. First, it was the effect of the afterglow, or “hinder part,” of divine glory, and not the full force of it (Ex 33:21-23). Second, the glory was reflected in the skin of Moses – a kind of second-hand glory (Ex 34:29-30,35). Third, it was a fading glory, for with the passing of but a short time, the skin of Moses' face no longer glowed (2 Cor 3:13).

A Carnal View of Jesus Return to Earth

In the flesh, Saul could not endure the glory of Christ – and what was revealed to him on the road to Damascus was not the full glory of Christ! It was a subdued glory, else the heavens and earth would have fled away, as they will when the fulness of His glory is made known (Rev 20:11). In an even more subdued manifestation of Divine glory, the children of Israel could not behold the reflected afterglow of Divine glory in the face of Moses, requiring that he wear a veil when speaking with them.

Yet, even though these things are recorded for our learning and admonition, some insist on teaching that the glorified Christ will return to sit on a throne in Jerusalem, and that He will be accessible to all the people in the world. Those who have embraced such a heresy appear willingly ignorant of the greatness of the glory of Jesus. We are expressly told that His arch-enemy will be destroyed by the “brightness of His coming” (2 Thess 2:3). Yet, men have the glorified Christ leading flesh and blood armies to fight flesh and blood foes. They even imagine that, in the mythical rapture, He will gather His elect without anyone knowing what has happened. All of this betrays a serious ignorance of Christ Himself. Once God “shows” Him in all of His glory (1 Tim 6:15-16), there will be no doubt who He is, and the passing of the fleshly order will have to occur before that glory is manifested – even though it will be “in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye” (1 Cor 15:52).

I CAME INTO DAMASCUS

“ . . . being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.” Other versions read, “my companions led me by the hand,” NIV “those who were with me took my hand and led me,” NRSV and “I was led by the hand by those who were with me.” AMPLIFIED

Since Saul’s companions did not understand what Jesus said to him, Saul must have told them that Jesus had commanded him to “go into Damascus.” That is the city to which they were going to arrest and bind those who were believers. Now, however, that city would prove to be the place where he would be illuminated concerning what he must initially do, and of the vocation he would now pursue.

Although Paul does not recount this here, he remained three days in that city, blind and without any communication concerning what he was supposed to do. Of that time it is written, “And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink” (Acts 9:9). What thoughts he must have had during that time! His repentance had to be significant, for now he saw his entire life from a new perspective. Anxiously he must have waited for the instructions that Jesus promised would be given to him. During this time, his faith would be tested.

In the ninth chapter of Acts we are told that Saul was praying during this time, and was given a vision to enable him to tarry until the appointed time. Jesus told Ananias, who would instruct Saul, “Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth, And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight” (Acts 9:10-12).

Behold the details orchestrated in heaven.

- Saul was located in a house on the street called “Straight.”
- Saul was in the house of Judas.
- Saul was praying.
- Saul had been given a vision in which the name of “Ananias” was specified, and what he would do was revealed.

RECEIVE THY SIGHT

“ 12 And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there, 13 Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him.”

Here we will see how the Lord uses clean vessels to do His appointed work of blessing. There are judgments in which He uses the wicked to punish His people – like Nebuchadnezzar, God’s “servant” (Jer 27:6) Then there was Cyrus, raised up to assist in the building of the Temple. God referred to this Persian heathen as “My shepherd” (Isa 44:28).

However, when it comes to the Lord’s Christ, the announcement of the Gospel, and the promotion of the Kingdom of God, God uses holy people! In the case of Jesus there was Mary, Joseph, the Shepherds, Simeon, Anna, John the Baptist, the Apostles, the seventy, Paul, and others. The more significant the cause, and the more bearing it has upon eternity, the more particular are Divine choices concerning those who are involved.

Now, notice what is said of Ananias.

ANANIAS, A DEVOUT MAN

“And one Ananias, a devout man

The words “devout,” “pious,” and “upright” have to do with human conduct. It is how a truly spiritual life is lived out. No person who lives in an outwardly sloppy manner is devote or pious. Also, some people who appear devoted are not really devoted – like the scribes and Pharisees .

according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there . . .” Other versions read, “devout by the standard of the Law,” NASB “devout observer of the Law,” NIV “a God-fearing man who kept the Law,” BBE “a pious man according to the Law,” DARBY “a godly man as pertaining to the Law,” GENEVA “a devout man who followed Moses’ teachings,” GWN “upright according to the Law,” MRD “a devout observer of the Law,” NAB “a godly man, deeply devoted to the Law,” NLT “a perfect man, and as pertaining to the Law,” TNT “as godly a man as you could find for obeying the Law,” LIVING and “a man devout in strict accordance with the law.” WILLIAMS

The words “devout,” “pious,” and “upright” have to do with human conduct. It is how a truly spiritual life is lived out. No person who lives in an outwardly sloppy manner is devote or pious. Also, some people who appear devoted are not really devoted – like the scribes and Pharisees (Matt 23:27-28).

Notice how the text specifies that Ananias’ devoutness was “according to the Law.” That is, “the righteousness of the Law” was fulfilled in him, as stated in Romans 8:4: “For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit” (Rom 8:3-4).

While we are not justified by the deeds of the Law, neither do the followers of Christ live in contradiction of that Law. The summation of the Law was being lived out in Ananias: “Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets” (Mat 22:37-40). Knowing that Saul lived in allgood conscience before the Lord, it certainly would have been counter-productive, to say the least, to have a person tell him what he should do who himself was walking in contradiction of the Law. In our time, there is not a lot of lucidity among church folk on this matter.

Ananias also was of good report among all of the Jews in the area of Damascus. This no doubt had to do with the Jews in general, both those in Christ and those who were not. His holy life caused them to hold Ananias in high regard. It ought to be noted that a professing Christian who is unholy causes the name of the Lord to be reproached.

His holy life caused them to hold Ananias in high regard. It ought to be noted that a professing Christian who is unholy causes the name of the Lord to be reproached. As Paul said to some pretentious people in Rome, “Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege? Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonourest thou God? For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is written” (Rom 2:21-24). These days, there is a deplorable absence of rebuke leveled at professing Christians who are living beneath the requirements of the Lord.

BROTHER SAUL

“ . . . Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight . . . ”

Acts 9:17 reads, “And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul.” He was not addressing Saul as a fellow Jew, but as one who had believed on Christ. He had not yet been baptized into Christ, but he had believed and repented, and only needed to be told what to do. As pointed out in Acts 26:16-18, the intentions of Jesus had already been revealed to Saul, giving him something to ponder with focused attention over the three days that preceded the visit of Ananias.

Ananias said to Saul, “Receive thy sight.” The ninth chapter of Acts records Ananias saying, “Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost” (Acts 9:17). Jesus had told Ananias that Saul had seen him in a vision: “And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight” (Acts 9:12). Thus, in obedience to the Lord, Ananias fulfilled that word.

THE SAME HOUR I LOOKED UPON HIM

“ . . . And the same hour I looked up upon him.” Other versions read, “I looked up at hm,.” NASB “And at that very moment I was able to see him,” NIV “I regained my sight and saw him,” NRSV and “And in that very instant I [recovered my sight and] looking up saw him.” AMPLIFIED

Acts 9:18 provides some additional details. “And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized” (Acts 9:18).

The only categorical accounts of the healing of the blind occur during and after the ministry of Jesus (Matt 9:27-30; 11:5; 12:22; 21:14; Acts 22:13). Isaiah prophesied of such a work (Isa 29:15; 35:5; 42:7). What happened to Saul in his body also took place in his heart and soul.

CONCLUSION

Our next Hungry Saints Meeting will be held on Friday, 1/1/10. We will continue our current series of lessons on the book of Acts. The ninety-first lesson will cover verses 14 through 22 of the twenty-second chapter: “PAUL’S DEFENSE TO THE JEWS, #2.”

Thus, through a series of remarkable events, we behold the working of the Lord. He carries out His purpose in the midst of what appeared to be impossible circumstances. The Lord aborts a hostile mission. He forces Himself into the life of Saul of Tarsus. He announces that Saul has been wrestling with a condemning conscience for some time. He declares Saul is a chosen vessel, even though he appeared to be nothing more than an aggressive enemy. Thus, as with Joshua the high priest, the Lord snatches him from the fire (Zech 3:2). He calls him to a work for which he has been in preparation from a youth, even though he was not aware of it.

In relating this whole series of events, Paul is speaking of things with which the Jews were familiar, His experience dove-tailed perfectly with the declaration of Scripture concerning God turning hearts (Prov 21:1), alluring people into a place where he could speak more comfortably to them (Hos 2:14), and frustrating evil intentions against His people (Isa 44:25). It also confirmed the reality of a new heart and a new spirit (Ezek 36:26). How unsearchable are His ways! Paul’s life is a commentary in the circumcision of Christ (Col 2:11-12).

We have a sterling example here of God working all things together for the good of those who love Him, and are called according to His purpose.

Lesson #91

PAUL'S DEFENSE TO THE JEWS, #2

“ 22:14 And he said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know His will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of His mouth. 15 For thou shalt be His witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. 16 And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord. 17 And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance; 18 And saw Him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning Me. 19 And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on Thee: 20 And when the blood of Thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him. 21 And He said unto me, Depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles. 22 And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live.”
(Acts 22:14-22)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

Paul continues his defense before his accusers, drawing their attention to the commission that was delivered to him by Ananias, a man respected by the Jews. The reason for God's choice of Paul is affirmed, which perfectly corresponded to what he had been doing. There was no variance between what Paul was called to do and what he actually did. Paul then recounts his own baptism into Christ, as directed by Ananias. The reason for his baptism is of special significance. Paul also informs them that the glorified Jesus had appeared to him when he was earlier in the Temple – the place from which the Asian Jews had removed him. Jesus warned him that the Jews would not receive his testimony, even though it was the unvarnished truth. After being told to leave Jerusalem, Paul related how he had told Jesus that he formerly had consented to the death of Stephen, Jesus' own martyr. He is telling this to Jews who intended to do the same thing to him that the Jews had done earlier to Stephen.

THE EMPHASIS ON DEITY

In Paul's defense, there is a remarkable emphasis on Deity. It is certainly worthy of noting at this point, for it helps to account for the nature and extent of Paul's ministry.

- He was "zealous toward GOD" (v 3).
- He "heard a VOICE," which proved to be that of the Lord Jesus (v 7).
- Jesus asked, "Why persecutest thou ME" (v 7).
- Paul asked, "Who art Thou LORD" (v 8).
- Jesus answered Him, "HE said unto

THE GOD OF OUR FATHERS HATH CHOSEN THEE (22:14)

THOU SHALT BE HIS WITNESS (22:15)

WHY TARRIEST THOU (22:16)

WHILE I PRAYED IN THE TEMPLE (22:17-18)

THEY KNOW (22:19)

I WAS STANDING BY (22:20)

I WILL SEND THEE FAR HENCE (22:21)

THEY GAVE HIM AUDIENCE UNTIL THIS WORD (22:22)

me" (v 8).

- Jesus said, "I am . . ."
- Jesus identified Himself as "JESUS OF NAZARETH" (v 8).
- There is reference to "the voice of HIM that spake unto me" (v 9).
- Paul asks, "What shall I do LORD?" (v 10a).
- He stated, "The LORD said unto me" (v 10b).
- Ananias told Saul, "The GOD of our fathers hath chosen thee" (v 14a).
- Ananias said Paul had been chosen to "know HIS will" (v 14b).
- Ananias said Paul had been chosen to "see the JUST ONE" (v 14c).
- Ananias said Paul had been chosen to "hear the voice of HIS mouth" (v 14:d).
- Ananias said Paul would be "HIS witness unto all men" (v 15).
- Ananias told Paul to be baptized "calling on the name of the LORD" (22:16).
- When Paul was in the Temple he said he "saw HIM saying unto me" (v 18a).
- Jesus told Paul to get out of Jerusalem "for they will not receive thy testimony concerning ME" (v 18b).
- Paul replied, "LORD they know . . ." (v19a).
- Paul continued, "I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on THEE ” (v 19:b).

- Paul referred to “the blood of THY faithful martyr Stephen” (v 20).
- Paul said, “ HE said unto me . . . ” (v 21a).
- Jesus replied, “ I will send thee unto the Gentiles” (v 21b).

There are twenty-three direct references to Deity – and they are the things that shape the text, giving it meaning.

The same thrust is seen in the other accounts of the call of Tarsus.

• Acts 9:3-16: “Why persecutest thou ME . . . the LORD said . . . I am Jesus . . . LORD what wilt THOU have me to do? . . . The LORD said unto him . . . the LORD said unto him . . . I am here LORD . . . the LORD said unto him . . . LORD I have heard . . . THY saints in Jerusalem . . . all that call upon THY name . . . the LORD said unto him . . . He is a chosen vessel unto ME . . . to bear MY name . . . I will show him . . . for MY name’s sake.” These include nine additional references that are not mentioned in our text.

Remove the Lord Jesus from the picture, and Paul has neither apostleship nor ministry. He has absolutely no relevance to us apart from the Lord Jesus Christ and the purpose of Almighty God.

Acts 26:13-: “I heard a VOICE speaking unto me . . . why persecutest thou ME . . . Who art thou LORD ? . . . HE said . . . I am . . . JESUS whom thou persecutest . . . I have appeared unto thee . . . I will appear unto thee . . . the Gentiles unto whom now I send thee . . . “from the power of Satan unto GOD . . . by faith that is in ME . . .” These include five additional references that are not mentioned in chapters nine and twenty-two.

All totaled, there are thirty-seven direct and different references to Deity in the account of Paul’s Damascus road experience. Again, I want to emphasize that these are what bring lucidity to Paul’s apostleship and ministry. These are the details to which general statements refer that account for Paul’s apostleship. Here are a few of those general statements.

• “And last of all He was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time” (1 Cor 15:8).

• “And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me , for that He counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry” (1 Tim 1:12).

• “But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ , who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel: Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles” (2 Tim 1:10-11).

• “Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God , according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus” (2 Tim 1:1).

I do not mean to be overly tedious in this matter, but in view of the present state of things, this is important to see. Remove the Lord Jesus from the picture, and Paul has neither apostleship nor ministry. He has absolutely no relevance to us apart from the Lord Jesus Christ and the purpose of Almighty God.

In our day, however, there are no small number of purported ministries that have little to do with the Person and present activity of Jesus Christ. Neither the origin nor purpose of these humanly conceived works can be obviously traced to Jesus. They do not require the ministry of Christ to be started or maintained. In fact, many confess that the success and support of these works depend upon men – particularly men with money.

Were the leaders of many of these ministries to be called to defend them, they could not speak like Paul. There would be no obvious correlation of the work with the exalted Christ.

That is precisely why it is essential that we ingest and digest Paul's defense. It provides us a microcosm of the work of the Lord, why it exists, and what it is designed to do. No man has a right to invent a new work, or a fresh emphasis. Admittedly, there are different ways of carrying out the work of the Lord that may include communication technology, modes of transportation, etc. But a new message cannot be adopted, nor can a new purpose for that message. No valid work for the Lord will ever extend beyond the remission of sins, deliverance from the power of Satan, and making preparation for the death and the day of judgment, which are appointments for every man (Heb 9:27). No valid ministry will concentrate on orienting men to this present evil world, or living as though there really was no eternity. The people of God must insist on such a diversion not being initiated or maintained.

Our text begins with Paul recounting the words of Ananias, a devout man who was sent to him by the Lord. This account provides some details concerning why the Lord Jesus was calling Saul of Tarsus.

THE GOD OF OUR FATHERS HATH CHOSEN THEE

“ 22:14 And he said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know His will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of His mouth.”

ANANIAS

The record of the calling of Saul of Tarsus is the only occasion in which this Ananias is mentioned. In a sense, his presence in Scripture compensates for the other Ananias of record, who was noted for lying to the Holy Spirit, keeping back part of an offering given for the support of the saints. It is said of him that Satan filled his heart, he lied to the Holy Spirit, he lied unto God, and agreed with his wife to “tempt the Spirit of the Lord” (Acts 5:1-10). Behold with what exactness the Spirit chronicles the things of a man! The whole matter is a prelude to the day of judgment, when everything about every person will be made known – publicly and with eternal consequences.

Note what is known of the Ananias of our text.

- He was a disciple (Acts 9:10).
- He was a devout man according to the Law (Acts 22:12a).
- He had a good report of all the Jews that dwelt in Damascus (Acts 22:12).
- He knew of the reports concerning Saul of Tarsus' initiative against the saints (Acts 9:13-14).
- Jesus revealed to him the details of God's appointments for Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9:15-16; 22:14-15).
- He obeyed the Lord immediately (Acts 9:17a).

He knew that Jesus had appeared to Saul in the way leading to Damascus (Acts 9:17b).

- He was sent that Saul might receive his sight and be “filled with the Holy Ghost” (Acts 9:17c).
- When he laid his hands upon Saul, he received his sight (Acts 22:17-18).
- He baptized Saul (Acts 9:18; 22:16).

Thus, all that we know about Ananias pertains to the assessment of his character before God, his reputation among the Jews, and events surrounding the calling Saul of Tarsus. There is no evidence that he was an influential leader, or if he held an official position among the brethren in Damascus. However, he ranks among the elite in Scripture.

How do you suppose you are perceived in heaven? If a few lines concerning you, your person, and your activities, were written in Scripture, what do you think they would be? Rest assured, there is an appointed day when you will know such things. May you be ready for that assessment and proclamation.

THE GOD OF OUR FATHERS

“And he said, The God of our fathers . . .” Other versions read, “God of our ancestors,” NRSV “God of our forefathers.” WEYMOUTH The “fathers,” in this case is speaking of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who represented the lineage through which the nation of Israel came. Out of the three sons of Terah, God chose one: Abram, later renamed Abraham. Out of Abraham's eight sons, God chose one: Isaac. Out of Isaac's two sons, God chose one; Jacob. Each one of Jacob's twelve sons became the head of a tribe, with Joseph having a double portion through his sons Manasseh and Ephraim.

Ananias is careful to identify the God who had called Paul. He does not refer to Him as the God of Israel when they were in Egypt, or the God who led them out, or the God who brought them into the promised land. He does not call Him the God of the Law, or the God of the Prophets – although He was all of that. Paul's calling, however, was in strict keeping with the covenant made with Abraham – namely that promised Seed through whom the world would be blessed – the Lord Jesus Christ.

GOD HAD CHOSEN PAUL

“ . . . hath chosen thee . . .” Other versions read, “has appointed you,” NASB “You have been marked out by God,” BBE “God . . . determined in advance,” CJB “God . . . hath preordained,” DOUAY “hath ordained thee,” MRD “designated you,” NAB “has already chosen you,” NET “did choose beforehand,” YLT “chose you a long time ago,” IE “destined and appointed you,” AMPLIFIED “handpicked you,” MESSAGE and “before-ordained thee.” WYCLIFFE

From the most precise to the most liberal translators, no one evidences any confusion about what this verse actually says. Keep in mind that we are speaking of a man who was not yet in Christ, and had the history of being a persecutor of believers, and seeking to do things against the name of Jesus. Yet, one of the very first things Ananias reveals to him is that he had already been chosen by God! Jesus Christ himself had revealed this to Ananias declaring, “He is a chosen vessel unto Me” (Acts 9:15).

The choosing of Saul preceded his calling. The Divine choice of him was before his choice to believe and obey Jesus. He was chosen before he was baptized. Before he knew the will of the Lord, the Lord had chosen him.

This perfectly accords with the doctrine concerning salvation and involvement with the Lord Jesus Christ.

- Jesus said to His disciples, “Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in My name, He may give it you” (John 15:16),
- “Moreover whom He did predestinate, them He also called: and whom He called, them he also justified: and whom He justified, them He also glorified” (Rom 8:30).
- “According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love” (Eph 1:4).

The fundamental proclamation of the Gospel relates to the will of God – not the will of man, and not the objectives for men. Such things have light shed upon them by the chronicling of what God Himself is doing in Christ Jesus.

“But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth: Whereunto He called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Thess 2:13-14).

- “Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began” (2 Tim 1:9).

- “But ye are a chosen generation , a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light” (1 Pet 2:9).

Thus, Divine choice is affirmed personally by Jesus, is taught doctrinally, and is affirmed by historical examples. Further, the texts of reference do not explain Divine choice within the context of the human will. It is God’s will that is dominate in all of the passages touching on this subject. There is never any modification to the proclamations, as though Divine choice was contingent upon some factor or characteristic resident in men.

I understand that what Paul affirmed contradicts great bodies of theology. But it did not offend those acquainted with Scripture (the Jew), and certainly not those who were in Christ Jesus.

However, the case is made even more strong by the proclamation of the objective of the Divine choice that is affirmed.

THAT HE SHOULD KNOW GOD’S WILL

“ . . . that thou shouldest know His will . . .” Other versions read, “to know His will,” NASB “have knowledge of His purpose,” BBE “know His plan,” IE “learn His will,” WILLIAMS “to come progressively to know His will [to perceive, to recognize more strongly and clearly, and to become better and more intimately acquainted with His will],” AMPLIFIED “know what He wants done,” CEV and “to be briefed on His plan of action.” MESSAGE

The “will” of reference was not what God had purposed for Paul Himself, although that was involved to a small degree. Here, God’s will equates to His purpose – His “eternal purpose” as it has been revealed in Christ Jesus (Rom 8:28; 9:11; Eph 1:9,11; 3:11; 2 Tim 1:9; 1 John 3:9). That is the preeminent will.

The fundamental proclamation of the Gospel relates to the will of God – not the will of man, and not the objectives for men. Such things have light shed upon them by the chronicling of what God Himself is doing in Christ Jesus. No person should be engaged in preaching or teaching that is fundamentally unacquainted with God’s purpose, or objective. Further, this is not learned academically, else there would be no point in choosing anyone to know it.

From the standpoint of the believer, knowing the will of God has to do with the presentation of our bodies to the Lord – not with a special training or indoctrination course.

From the standpoint of the believer, knowing the will of God has to do with the presentation of our bodies to the Lord – not with a special training or indoctrination course. As it is written, “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God ” (Rom 12:1-2). Other versions read, “that you may be able to test and approve what God’s will is,” NIV “may be able to discern what is the will of God,” NRSV “so that by experience you may have knowledge of,” BBE and “determine what God really wants,” GWN and “discern for yourselves.” NJB

CHOSEN TO KNOW – that is a most arresting concept, but it is a true one, being revealed by Jesus. Let it be clear that if eternal life is knowing God (John 17:3; 1 John 5:20), it is clear that it is something controlled by God, not men.

THAT HE SHOULD SEE THE JUST ONE

“ . . . and see that Just One . . .” Other versions read, “see the Righteous One,” NASB “the Upright One,” BBE “the One who has God’s approval,” GWN “see that which is rightful,” TNT “see the Messiah,” LIVING “the Righteous One (Jesus Christ, the Messiah),” AMPLIFIED “the One who obeys God,” CEV “His righteous Servant,” GNB and “the Righteous Innocent.” MESSAGE

The expression “Righteous One” is not philosophical language, but refers to the Lord Jesus in the language of the Prophets. Isaiah referred to the Messiah as God’s “ Righteous Servant” (Isa 53:11). John refers to the Lord Jesus as “the Righteous [one]” NIV (1 John 2:1). The idea here is that the Lord Jesus has faithfully discharged His office, perfectly fulfilling the will of God, which He came to do (Psa 40:8; Heb 10:7,9). Jesus is not “Just” or “Righteous” because He does what is best for you, but because He fulfills what God has determined , doing it so precisely and fully that it is the basis for our acceptance by God.

Now, Paul was appointed by God to see the Messiah, even though he was blinded by the sight. However, the very light that blinded his flesh illuminated his spirit. He could not describe what He saw with his eyes, but spend his life declaring what he had seen with his spirit. He was chosen to know!

THAT HE SHOULD HEAR THE VOICE OF JESUS’ MOUTH

“ . . . and shouldest hear the voice of His mouth.” Other versions read, “an utterance from His mouth,” NASB “words from His mouth,” NIV “His own voice,” NRSV “a voice from His mouth,” RSV “the sound of His voice,” CSB “hear Him speak to you,” GWN “a command from His mouth,” NET and “a voice from His [own] mouth and a message from His [own] lips.” AMPLIFIED

Paul was chosen, not to hear a second-hand message, but to hear words coming directly from the ascended and glorified Christ. This was a privilege vouchsafed only to one other man – John the Beloved on the Isle of Patmos (Rev 1:10-20).

Accounts of the glorified Christ speaking to Paul include the following.

- On the road to Damascus (Acts 9:4-6; 22:7-10; 26:14-18).
- In the Temple (Acts 22:17-21).
- Later, the night after the people were about to pull Paul into pieces (Acts 23:11-11).
- Paul referred to the Lord instructing him concerning the Lord’s Table (1 Cor 11:23-33).

Stephen saw the glorified Christ standing at the right hand of God, but did not hear His voice (Acts 7:55-56). Philip was directed by an angel and the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:26,29). Cornelius was directed by a holy angel (Acts 10:3,22; 11:13). Peter was also directed by an angel and the Spirit (Acts 10:19; 12:7-8). The brethren in Antioch were directed by the Holy Spirit (13:2). But only Paul and John actually heard the voice of the enthroned Jesus. Both were chosen to do so. That is a decision made in heaven, not upon earth. Being schooled in Moses and the Prophets, Paul could receive this word.

DOES GOD PREFER ONE OVER ANOTHER?

The single example of the choosing of Saul of Tarsus answers this question. However, although a thorough account is given of the selection of Saul, and the means through which it was carried out, this remains a subject that is heavily debated among professing Christians. Let it be clear, that so far as the provision of salvation is concerned, it is for “for all.” This is repeatedly affirmed in Scripture.

- “The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world ” (John 1:29).

- “I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is My flesh, which I will give for the life of the world ” (John 6:51).

- “For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if One died for all , then were all dead” (2 Cor 5:14).

- “And that he died for all , that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15).

- “For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; Who gave Himself a ransom for all , to be testified in due time” (1 Tim 2:5-6).

- “By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all ” (Heb 10:10).

- “And He is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world ” (1 John 2:2).

- “And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world ” (1 John 4:14).

However, all of God’s dealing with humanity are not after this order. He has made known that He does have preference, choosing some and rejecting others, rejecting some while accepting others.

- Abel and his offering were preferred to Cain and his offering (Gen 4:4-5).

- Isaac was preferred to Ishmael (Gen 21:12-13).

- Jacob was preferred to Esau (Rom 9:13).

- Joseph was preferred to his brothers (Gen 37:5-11; Psa 105:17).

- Those dwelling in Goshen were preferred to those in the rest of Egypt (Ex 8:22-23; 9:4-6; 9:26; 10:23; 14:20).

- Aaron was preferred to others of the tribe of Levi (Num 17:6-8; Psa 105:26).

One of the appointed means through which commitment is generated in the hearts of believers is the understanding of the Sovereignty of God.

David was preferred over his brothers (1 Sam 16:11-14).

- Israel was preferred to the rest of the nations (Deut 14:2).

- The body of Christ is preferred to the world (Matt 18:20; John 17:9).

- Christ’s disciples were given to know things withheld from the multitudes (Matt 13:11).

- When it came to visions and revelations, Paul received more (2 Cor 12:1).

- The Lord preferred to exempt the church in Philadelphia from trials coming upon the face of the earth (Rev 3:10).
- There is such a thing as those ordained to eternal life believing while others do not (Acts 13:48).
- In the end, the sheep will preferred to the goats (Matt 25:22-23).

Application

One of the appointed means through which commitment is generated in the hearts of believers is the understanding of the Sovereignty of God. Until people arrive at the point where they can insightfully and thankfully say, “Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb” (Rev 7:10), their commitment to the Lord will be partial, and their lives fragmented. I do not believe it is possible to live wholly unto the Lord without this understanding. It is most unfortunate that it has become a subject for debate among professing Christians, as though the Creator was not really greater than the created.

THOU SHALT BE HIS WITNESS

Notice who is talking, and who is being addressed. Saul is not speaking, but listening, and Ananias is doing the speaking, and doing so as directed by the glorified Christ. Saul is being told what he will be! He is not asked if this is what he wants. He is not asked to chose whether or not to accept what is being told him. There are no options declared to him, only what he has been chosen to do, and WILL do.

A similar call was issued to other apostles: “ Follow Me” (Matt 4:19; 9:9; John 1:43). He did not ask if they wanted to follow Him. Again He said to them, “ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence . . . ye shall be My witnesses” (Acts 1:5,8). He made no appeal to them to choose whether or not they wanted to be baptized with the Holy Spirit, or if they would consent to be His witnesses. Later, on the eve of His betrayal, He told His disciples, “Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you , and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in My name, He may give it you” (John 15:16).

Men may respond that God does not choose arbitrarily – but is that really a proper assessment. For clarification, the first meaning of “arbitrary” is “depending on choice or discretion; specifically: determinable by decision of a judge or tribunal rather than defined by statute.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER I understand that this can be carried too far, as though man was not involved in the matter at all. However, human involvement can be because of Divine choice, as confirmed in the case of Saul. His role in the body of Christ was an assignment, not something driven by the will of Saul of Tarsus. The Lord said to Ananias concerning Saul, “he is a chosen vessel unto Me, to bear My name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel” (Acts 9:15) – just as the other apostles were. Our text reports both the choosing and the purpose of the choosing of Saul of Tarsus. Ananias told him, “The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know His will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of His mouth” (Acts 22:14).

This confirms that God cannot be found by searching (Job 11:7). If God or Christ do not reveal themselves, they cannot be known, or comprehended – and God delights in being known (Jer 9:24-25). It also confirms that legitimate ministries are ordained by the Lord, not created by men.

Now, based upon the choice of Saul, Ananias tells him what he will do. This is not a commandment, but a prophecy. It is not a suggestion that he is to accept, but a revelation of what will be. Any theology that does not make allowance for the free and unreserved acceptance of this revealed fact is in some way flawed. It could also be that it is stated clumsily, being driven more by the wisdom of men than by the word of the Lord. At any rate, men should never attempt to explain why they believe something that contradicts Scripture. If it is true that man lives “by every Word of God” (Lk 4:4), then we must always defer to the Word, discarding quickly any thought that conflicts with it.

HIS WITNESS UNTO ALL MEN

“For thou shalt be His witness . . .” Other versions read, “you will be a witness.” NASB “you will be His witness, NRSV and “has chosen you . . . so that you may become His witness.” PHILLIPS

As it is used here, and by technical definition, the word “witness” has at least four meanings.

- A witness in a legal sense. In this case, a “witness” is one who has been chosen by Christ, called by Him, and appointed to testify of specific things.
- One who is a spectator of anything. As used here, the “witness” is not bearing testimony as one who is a second-hand witness – who has heard the truth from one of his peers. This was a requirement for apostles – first-hand knowledge.
- In an ethical sense: what is right and honorable. There is such a thing as a “false witness” (Psa 27:12; Matt 26:60; Acts 6:13). These are witnesses who lie when they say they have seen this or that, or that God has revealed to them the lie they are telling. A true witness is a “faithful witness” (Prov 14:5), who relates precisely what he has seen and heard.
- One who maintains the witness even to death. As used here, a witness is one who continues to deliver the message given to him, even though it may lead to his death, or martyrdom.

UNTO ALL MEN

“ . . . unto all men . . .” Other versions read, “ to all men,” NASB “to all the world,” NRSV “to all people,” NET and “before all men.” PHILLIPS

The revelations and visions that were given to Paul (2 Cor 12:1; Eph 3:4) were not private and personal communication, intended only for him. They were meant for “all men,” or “all the world.” The marvelous things that were opened to Paul concerning the purpose of God, salvation, the accomplishments of Christ, the New Covenant, etc., were matters God intended for all men to know, even down to this generation. That is why they were given to Paul – to be testified to “all men.”

If this is true – and it most assuredly is – then how can an ignorance of Paul’s writings within the professed church be justified? Thirty percent of the total words contained in Matthew through Revelation were written by Paul. Although I have mentioned these teachings in previous lessons, and having added to this listing, I want to draw your attention again to them.

PAUL’S UNIQUE TEACHING

THINGS GIVEN FOR ALL MEN TO HEAR

1. That the church is the body of Christ (Rom 12:4-5; 1 Cor 12:12-27; Eph 1:23; 2:16; 3:6; 4:4,12-16; 5:23,30; Col 1:16; 2:19; 3:15)
2. The merging of Jew and Gentile in Christ (Eph 2:15-16,19).
3. The exposition of justification by faith (Rom 3:20-5:18; Gal 2:16-17; 3:8-24).
4. The distinction between the Old and New Covenants (2 Cor 3:6-14; 7:22; 8:8-13; 10:16-17; Gal 3:15-17; 4:22-28; Heb 9:15-20).
5. The reality of “the old man” and “the new man” (Rom 6:6; Eph 5:22-24; Col 3:9-10).

6. The inner warfare experienced by those who live by faith (Rom 7:15-25; Gal 5:17).
7. The spiritual logic that declares the coming conversion of the Jews (Rom 9-11).
8. The High Priesthood of Christ (Heb 3:1; 4:14-15; 5:5,10; 6:20; 7:26; 8:1; 9:11; 10:21).
9. The relation of Abraham to those who believe (Rom 4:1-16; Gal 3:6-18).
10. The significance of Melchizedec (Heb 5:6,10; 6:20; 7:1, 10-21).
11. The eternal purpose of God (Rom 8:28; Eph 1:11; 3:11; 2 Tim 1:9).
12. What took place behind the scenes when Jesus died (Col 1:20; 2:14-15; Heb 2:14; 9:26).
13. The whole armor of God (Rom 13:12; 2 Cor 6:7; Eph 6:10-18).
14. Spiritual weaponry (2 Cor 10:4-5; Eph 6:17).
15. Believers battling with principalities and powers (Eph 6:12).
16. The fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22-23; Eph 5:9).
17. The works of the flesh (Gal 5:19-21).
18. The office of a Bishop (1 Tim 3:1-7; Tit 1:7-11).
19. The office of a deacon (1 Tim 3:10-13).
20. The exposition of spiritual gifts, and how they are administered (Rom 12:3-8; 1 Cor 12:1-31; 14:1-12; Eph 4:11-16).
21. Why men cannot be justified by works (Rom 3:26; 4:2; Gal 2:16; 3:2-5).
22. The imputation of righteousness upon the basis of faith (Rom 1:7; 3:22-25; 4:5-25; 10:6-10; Phil 3:9).
23. Extensive teaching concerning baptism into Christ (Rom 6:1-23; Gal 3:27; Eph 4:5; Col 2:11-15).
24. The comparison of Adam and Christ (Rom 5:14-21; 1 Cor 15:22,45).
25. Extensive teaching on the resurrection of the dead (1 Cor 15:15-57).
26. The ministry of the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:11-14, 26-27; 2 Cor 3:3-18; Gal 4:6, 29; 5:5,16-18,22-24; 6:8; Eph 2:22; Eph 5:9).
27. The intercession and mediation of Christ Jesus (Heb 7:25; 1 Tim 2:5; Heb 8:6; 9:15; 12:24).
28. The intercession of the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:26-27).
29. Predestination and election (Rom 8:29-33; 9:11; 11:5-7,28; Eph 1:5,11; Col 3:12; 1 Thess 1:4; 2 Tim 2:10; Tit 1:1).
30. The body being for the Lord (Rom 12:1-2; 1 Cor 6:-13-20).
31. God's objective for believers (Eph 3:15-30; 4:12-16; Col 1:9-11).
32. The resurrection body (2 Cor 5:1-5).
33. The accomplishments of the cross (Eph 2:16; Phil 2:8; Col 1:20; 2:14-15).
34. Extensive teaching concerning the Lord's Table (1 Cor 10:21; 11:23-29).
35. Types and shadows (Gal 4:24; Col 2:17; Heb 8:5; 9:24; 10:1).

36. Extensive teaching of the grace of God (Rom 3:24; 4:4,16; 5:2, 15-17, 20-21; 6:14-15; ; 11:5-6; 12:3-6; 1 Cor 15:10; 2 Cor 8:9; Gal 1:15; Eph 2:5-8; 2 Thess 2:16; 1 Tim 1:14; 2 Tim 1:9; Tit 2:11-12; Tit 3:7; Heb 2:9; 4:16; 12:28).
37. Heavenly hosts being tutored concerning God's wisdom through the church (Eph 3:10).
38. Angels being present in the assembly of the saints (1 Cor 11:10).
39. How the church is to respond to immoral people among them (1 Cor 5:1-9).
40. With the exceptions of six references to the "Gospel" in the book of Acts, and five references in the epistles and Revelation, every mention of that word from in Romans through Revelation (seventy-five) is found in Paul's writings.
41. The ascension of Jesus and its bearing on the gifts given to the church (Eph 1:20; 4:8-11; 1 Tim 3:16; Heb 1:3; 4:14; 9:14).
42. The use of the word "heavenly" (1 Cor 15:48,49; Eph 1:3,20; 2:6; 3:10; 2 Tim 4:18; Heb 3:1; 6:4; 8:5).
43. The degeneracy of the Gentile world without Christ (Rom 1:19-32).
44. With the exception of two references in First Peter, and one in Third John, the remaining teaching concerning Gentiles is given by Paul (48 references).
45. The fact that some of the Jewish branches were broken off, and some Gentiles were grafted into the Jewish olive tree (Rom 11:11-24).
46. The destruction of the man of sin at the coming of the Lord (2 Thess 2:3-10).
47. Receiving the love of the truth, and the consequences of not doing so (2 Thess 2:10-12).
48. What was involved in the condescension of Christ coming into the world (Phil 2:5-8).
49. What we are "come to" in Christ Jesus (Heb 12:22-24).
50. In showing the folly of seeking to be justified by Law, the allegory of Hagar and Sarah in explaining the distinction of the New Covenant (Gal 4:21-31).

OF WHAT THOU HAST SEEN AND HEARD

" . . . of what thou hast seen and heard."

The reference here is what Paul; had seen and heard from Christ Himself . This is confirmed by the testimony Paul gave before king Agrippa. There he recounted the words Jesus spoke to him on the road to Damascus. "But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I WILL appear unto thee " (Acts 26:16). This would include his tutoring by Jesus during the three years before he went to see Peter at Jerusalem (Gal 1:18). Prior to that he did not confer "with flesh and blood" (Gal 1:16). He was not taught by the twelve apostles or any other man concerning what he was to preach. Ananias did not outline any message to him, but only told him what he had been appointed to do. The writings of Paul – all of them to the church – are confirmation that he was a faithful steward.

WHY TARRIEST THOU

" 16 And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

Here is a man who was called and commissioned directly by Jesus Christ. Yet, when it comes to his entry into the Kingdom, coming into Christ, and being added to the church, there is nothing unique about what he is told to do. Paul's sins will not be washed away in a special way, but in a manner that is characteristic of the "common salvation" in which all with the "common faith" participate (Jude 1:3; Tit 1:4). There are social ministries, but, with the exception of the thief on the cross, no special entrances.

Uniqueness only applies to the assignment of the work a person is to do in the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:18). It does not apply to how they are inducted into Christ, or the manner in which they are to conduct their lives. Their mindset is to be the same, with the affection of every believer being set on things above, and not on things on the earth (Col 3:1). They are all to work out their salvation with fear and trembling (Phil 2:12). This being the case, how great a transgression it is to have contradicting messages daily delivered by the professing church on these matters!

Here is a man who was called and commissioned directly by Jesus Christ. Yet, when it comes to his entry into the Kingdom, coming into Christ, and being added to the church, there is nothing unique about what he is told to do.

Every believer is to resist the devil (1 Pet 5:7-8; James 4:7), perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord (2 Cor 7:1), and press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus (Phil 3:14). No one is exempted from living by faith (Heb 10:38), walking in the Spirit (Gal 5:16,25), or keeping the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end (Heb 3:6). Yet, these are not consistent requirements by modern churches.

All believers are to keep themselves in the love of God (Jude 1:21), possess their bodies in sanctification and honor (1 Thess 4:4), and run the race with patience (Heb 12:1-2). Not a single one of those who are in Christ Jesus is excluded from the mandates to "be holy" (1 Pet 1:15-16), "love the brethren" (1 John 3:14), and to present their bodies a living sacrifice unto God (Rom 12:1-2).

The fruit of the Spirit is to be found in every professing Christian (Gal 5:22-24; Eph 5:9), and none of them are allowed to make a place for the devil (Eph 4:27). Every single believer is expected to add virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity to their faith (1 Pet 1:5-8).

All believers are "strangers and pilgrims" in the world (Heb 11:13; 1 Pet 2:11), "kings and priests unto God" (Rev 1:6), and part of a "chosen generation" (1 Pet 2:9). All of them have been "quickened" (Eph 2:1), "turned" (Acts 26:18), "washed," "sanctified," and "justified" (1 Cor 6:11). They have all been "made to sit together with Christ in heavenly places" (Eph 2:6), have access to God (Rom 5:2; Eph 3:12), and possess the Spirit of Christ (Rom 8:14; 1 Thess 4:8).

Everyone in Christ has received a kingdom (Heb 12:28), are being "kept by the power of God" (1 Pet 1:5), and have their "names written in heaven" (Heb 12:23). They have all been "made accepted in the beloved" (Eph 1:6), are being brought to glory (Heb 2:10), and their temptations are strictly monitored and controlled by the Lord (1 Cor 10:13). All of the promises of God belong to them (2 Cor 1:20), they are being changed from one increasing stage of glory to another by the Holy Spirit (2 Cor 3:18), and the Holy Spirit is making intercession for them (Rom 8:26-27).

Some may wonder why it is necessary to mention such things, being that they are declared with power in the Scriptures. While this is true, the Scriptures are not being declared as they should be in this generation. The people of God are not being told of the great salvation in which they have participated.

The characteristics and possessions

It is for this reason that Ananias will require Paul to do what every believer is required to do. His calling was singular, his office was unparalleled, but his entrance was just like yours!

I have just enumerated are generally thought to belong to extraordinary and leading Christians. No person of sound mind would dare to affirm that they are evident in the average church to any significant degree. We are now faced with as younger generation of professing Christians in which they are glaringly absent. There is a brand of Christianity that has been foisted upon the people that accepts mediocrity and spiritual ignorance as normal. Any individual who manifests some consistent interest in the things of God is viewed as an exceptional person. This is a most serious condition, even though it is very popular.

However, even when a person is placed in an exceptional office, there is no reduction in the requirement of things common to salvation. Unique requirements pertain to “the office” (Rom 12:4), and not to the character or spirituality of the one involved.

It is for this reason that Ananias will require Paul to do what every believer is required to do. His calling was singular, his office was unparalleled, but his entrance was just like yours!

WHY TARRIEST THOU?

“ And now why tarriest thou? . . .” Other versions read, “who are you waiting?” NKJV “why do you delay?” NASB “what are waiting for?” NIV “why lingerest thou?” DARBY “don’t wait any longer,” IE and “what are you going to do?” EMTV

While men are fond of delays, the Lord is not, nor are those who have the mind of Christ. Israel was not to delay giving their first fruits to the Lord (Ex 22:29). The Psalmist did not delay to keep the Lord’s commandments (Psa 119:60).

It will be interesting, to say the least, how Paul reacts to the matter concerning which there is to be no delay. It will be obvious that some of the religion traditions that have risen to prominence in Christendom were unaccepted and unknown at the time of our text.

ARISE AND BE BAPTIZED

NIV “get up, and have baptism,” BBE “Get up, immerse yourself,” CJB “Get up and have yourself baptized,” NAB “Hurry and be baptized,” NJB “having risen, baptize thyself,” YLT “Go and be baptized,” LIVING “Rise up, get yourself immersed,” IE and “get yourself baptized.” WEYMOUTH

Here is a text that illustrates the inadequacy of etymology. The technical meaning of Greek words is often helpful, and assists in confirming textual meaning. However, unless a person has a grasp of “sound doctrine,” a technical view of language can actually lead them out into left field, so to speak. This is seen in the sloppy expressions in some versions: “immerse yourself,” CJB and “baptize thyself.” YLT There is no record of a believer baptizing, or immersing, himself, as Naaman dipped himself in the river Jordan seven times (2 Kgs 5:10,14). Wherever there is a record of someone being baptized, another person baptized them. John the Baptist baptized the people, as recorded in John 3:23. He baptized Jesus, at the insistence of Jesus Himself (Matt 3:14-16). Peter did not tell penitents on the day of Pentecost to baptize themselves, but to “ be baptized” (Acts 2:38). It is written that “they that gladly received the Word were baptized” (Acts 2:41). When those in the city of Samaria “believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women” (Acts 8:12). Philip baptized the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:38). Peter commanded those of the house of Cornelius to be baptized in water (Acts 10:47-48).

Upon hearing the preaching of Paul, Lydia “was baptized, and her household” (Acts 16:14-15). Not delaying, the Philippian jailer and his household were baptized “the same hour of the night” (Acts 16:33). When Paul preached in Corinth “many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized” (Acts 18:8). After hearing of Christ and the necessity of believing upon him, certain disciples in Ephesus “were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus” (Acts 19:5). This was something performed by the servants of God. It was accompanied by “the operation of God,” to be sure (Col 2:12), confirming the validity of the action.

None of these cases are reported in such a manner as to lead to the conclusion that the baptism of reference was unseen, and accomplished independently of personal obedience. They are not accompanied by any form of ambiguity or vagueness. The baptism of John prepared the people by giving them a proper conception of the physical action of baptism, and no one who believed John had any difficulty understanding what being baptized involved. The fact that this subject is attended by so much controversy and disagreement among professing Christians is yet another confirmation that we are living in a massive falling away.

WASHING AWAY THY SINS

“ . . . and wash away thy sins . . .” Other versions read, “wash your sins away,” NIV “have your sins washed away,” NRSV “be cleansed from thy sins,” MRD “wash off your sins,” WEYMOUTH and “scrubbed clean of those sins.” MESSAGE

There is no way to effectively dissociate the initial removal of sins from being baptized. Further, being baptized with the Holy Spirit, or with suffering unto death, are never directly associated with being forgiven.

There is no way to effectively dissociate the initial removal of sins from being baptized. Further, being baptized with the Holy Spirit (Mk 1:8; Acts 1:5; 11:16) or with suffering unto death (Lk 12:60; 1 Cor 15:29), are never directly associated with being forgiven. This is the baptism that is an appeal for a purified conscience (1 Pet 3:21), and stands at the threshold of the entrance into the Kingdom of God (John 3:5). Where this is denied, the element of godly honesty is missing.

This is the washing to which other texts refer.

- “And such were some of you: but ye are WASHED, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God” (1 Cor 6:11).
- “ . . . Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the WASHING of water by the word” (Eph 5:26).
- “Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the WASHING of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost” (Titus 3:5).
- “Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies WASHED with pure water” (Heb 10:22).

It is quite true that at the root, our sins are removed when Jesus “washed us from our sins in His own blood” (Rev 1:5). However, that had to do primarily with His death, through which He took away the sins of the world (John 1:29). It is in our baptism that we appropriate that washing, being “baptized into His death” (Rom 6:3).

Many people are related to Naaman, the Syrian leper, in their attitudes. It is as difficult for them to associate baptism with washing away sins, as it was for Naaman to perceive any connection with dipping in the river Jordan with the healing of his leprosy. One essential difference between Naaman and these people is that Naaman did do what he told to do – dipping seven times in the Jordan river. After doing this, he no longer had any difficulty making the required association.

CALLING UPON THE NAME OF THE LORD

“ . . . calling on the name of the Lord.” Other versions read, “calling on His name,” NASB “giving worship to His name,” BBE “as you call on His name,” CJB “invoking His name,” DOUAY “in calling on His name,” GENEVA “whilst thou involkest His name,” MRD “by calling upon the name of the Lord,” NLT “in calling on the name of the Lord,” PNT “trusting in His name,” IE and “by calling upon His name, wash away your sins.” AMPLIFIED

Peter told those to whom he preached on the day of Pentecost, “whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved” (Acts 2:21). Paul taught the same thing in Romans 10:13. Those in Christ are described as those who “call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord” (1 Cor 1:2). For that matter, when the Lord Jesus Himself was baptized he prayed. As it is written, “it came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying , the heaven was opened” (Luke 3:21).

I have heard many contend for the necessity of being baptized into Christ – and rightly so. However, I do not recall ever hearing them contend that men must also call upon the name of the Lord. While this is done at the time a person is baptized, it is not synonymous with being baptized. This phrase – calling upon the name of the Lord – equates to an expression found in Colossians. “In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God , who hath raised him from the dead. And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses” (Col 2:11-13). Other versions read “through faith in the working of God,” NKJV “through your faith in the power of God,” NIV “through faith in the powerful working of God,” ESV “ye believed in the power of God,” MRD “because you trusted the mighty power of God,” NLT “through faith that is wrought by the operation of God,” TNT “because you trusted the Word of the mighty God,” LIVING “through faith produced within you by God,” WEYMOUTH and “through your faith in the energy of that God,” MONTGOMERY

Technically speaking, it is one’s faith in the working of God that causes the individual to be raised to “walk in newness of life” (Rom 6:4). It is also true that the faith itself is the working of the Lord, as some versions indicate: “through faith that is wrought by the operation of God,” TNT and “through faith produced within you by God.” WEYMOUTH Men must be taught properly concerning baptism, so that they are not left trusting in their baptism, but in the God who Baptism is the point of entrance into Christ, but it is not itself the entrance – and there is a vast difference between the two. In this baptism, men baptize men, but men do not effect the forgiveness of sins, the entrance into Christ Jesus, the receiving of the Holy Spirit, or becoming a part of the body of Christ.

The point here is that having faith in the working of God, and relying upon His power to do what must be done, equates with calling upon the name of the Lord. In all candor, I must acknowledge that I am not aware of any leading person in the group with which I was identified ever making a point of this. They left the people thinking that the act of baptism itself appropriated the benefit of remission. However, that is not an accurate concept. The remission was appropriated at that time , but it was the working of God that accomplished it, not the obedience of man – even though it is imperative for men to obey.

It is no more right for believers to trust in their baptism that it was for the Jews to trust in their circumcision. Yet, this is quite common among certain people. Baptism is the point of entrance into Christ, but it is not itself the entrance – and there is a vast difference between the two. In this baptism, men baptize men, but men do not effect the forgiveness of sins, the entrance into Christ Jesus, the receiving of the Holy Spirit, or becoming a part of the body of Christ. That falls under the classification of “the operation of God,” or “the working of God” – what God Himself does. The time of blessing and the blessing itself must not be confused.

WHILE I PRAYED IN THE TEMPLE

“ 17 And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance; 18 And saw Him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning Me.”

Paul now shows his listeners that he had turned to the Gentiles by Divine direction, and not out of any hatred for the Jews themselves.

WHEN I WAS COME AGAIN TO JERUSALEM

“And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem . . .”

This refers to the time following his three years with the Lord – when he again went to Jerusalem as recorded in Acts 9:26-29). During that time Paul (then Saul) sought to join himself to the disciples, but they were afraid of him, and did not believe he was a disciple. Barnabas then brought him to the apostles “and declared unto them how he Saul) had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus” (Acts 9:27). In his letter to the Galatians, Paul said this was three years after the Damascus road experience, and that it lasted for fifteen days.

WHILE I PRAYED IN THE TEMPLE

“ . . . even while I prayed in the temple . . .” Other versions read, “and was praying in the Temple,” NKJV “while I was at prayer in the Temple,” BBE and “While I was praying in the temple courtyard.” GWN

When I read these words I recall what Jesus said when He cleansed the Temple of “all them that bought and sold in the Temple” (Matt 21:12). After He had overthrown the “ tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves,” He cried out to them, “It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer ; but ye have made it a den of thieves” (Matt 21:13; Mk 11:27; Lk 19:46; Isaiah 56:7).

A TRANCE

“ . . . a supernatural state of body and mind, the nature of which has been well conjectured by Doddridge, who defines it “such a rapture of mind as gives the person who falls into it a look of astonishment, and renders him insensible of the external objects around him, while in the meantime his imagination is agitated in an extraordinary manner with some striking scenes which pass before it and take up all the attention.” He refers to some extraordinary instances of this kind mentioned by Gualterius in his note on Acts 10:10,(Family Expositor, ad loc. note g). Stockius also describes it as “a sacred ecstasy, or rapture of the mind out of itself, when, the use of the external senses being suspended, God reveals something in a peculiar manner to prophets and apostles, who are then taken or transported out of themselves.” MCCLINTOK & STRONGS

“The condition expressed by this word is a mental state in which the person affected is partially or wholly unconscious of objective sensations, but intensely alive to subjective impressions which, however they may be originated, are felt as if they were revelations from without.”
INTERNATIONAL STANDARD BIBLE ENCYCLOPEDIA

I FELL INTO A TRANCE

“ . . . I was in a trance . . . ” Other versions read, “I fell into a trance,” NASB “my senses became more than naturally clear,” BBE “I went into a visionary state,” CSB “I became in ecstasy,” DOUAY “I saw a vision,” IE “I fell into a trance (an ecstasy),” AMPLIFIED and “lost in the presence of God.” MESSAGE

The Greek word from which “trance” is translated is evksta,sei . The transliteration of this word is “ecstasy.” The lexical meaning of the word is, “a throwing of the mind out of its normal state . . . or that of the man who by some sudden emotion is transported as it were out of himself, so that in this rapt condition, although he is awake, his mind is so drawn off from all surrounding objects and wholly fixed on things divine that he sees nothing but the forms and images lying within, and thinks that he perceives with his bodily eyes and ears realities shown him by God,” THAYER “as a partially suspended consciousness ecstasy, trance,” FRIBERG “trance, vision.” UBS

The word “trance” is mentioned three times in the Authorized Version.

- Balaam is said to have fallen into a trance: “He hath said, which heard the words of God, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open ” (Num 24:4). “He hath said, which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open ” (Num 24:16).

This was a unique experience in which Paul saw, but not with his eyes, what was actually taking place at the time – Jesus was speaking to him, and was doing so concerning a present circumstance. In some way, he was projected into the unseen spiritual realities that were taking place at the time.

Peter fell into a trance on a rooftop, where he had gone to pray. “And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance ” (Acts 10:10). His himself said, “I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I saw a vision , A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me” (Acts 11:5).

- Paul is recounting his vision in this text. “And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance ” (Acts 22:17).

Other versions present these verses in the following words.

- Numbers 24:4,16 – “falls down,” NKJV “falls prostrata.” NIV
- Acts 10:10; 11:5; 22:17 – “visionary state,” CSB “ecstasy of mind.” DOUAY Most other versions use the word “trance.”

While there is some mystery that surrounds the matter of trances, several general observations can be made.

- Divine communication is not limited to natural experiences.
- There are realities that can be seen without the employment of natural vision and hearing.
- The human spirit is capable of more than what can be expressed through or received by the body.
- Peter, and Paul fell into a trace while they were praying.
- Spiritual life can and must be lived by the believer – but it cannot be controlled by the individual, nor is it in man that walks to direct his own steps. As it is written, “O LORD, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps”

I SAW HIM SAYING UNTO ME

“ And saw Him saying unto me . . .” Other versions read, “I saw the Lord speaking,” NIV “saw Jesus saying to me,” NRSV “and I saw the Lord. He told me,” GWN and “I saw a vision of Jesus saying to me.” NLT

This was a unique experience in which Paul saw, but not with his eyes, what was actually taking place at the time – Jesus was speaking to him, and was doing so concerning a present circumstance. In some way, he was projected into the unseen spiritual realities that were taking place at the time. This was something that was being strictly revealed and governed from heaven. There is no human faculty that would have enabled Paul to see what was taking place in this trance.

GET THEE QUICKLY OUT OF JERUSALEM

“ . . . Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem . . .” Other versions read, “and I saw Him saying to me, 'Make haste, and get out of Jerusalem quickly,” NASB “Quick . . . Leave Jerusalem immediately,” NIV “Hurry, and get out of Jerusalem quickly,” NRSV “Hurry! Leave Jerusalem now!” LIVING

For Paul, Jerusalem was not the place to be at that time. The opposition that he was meeting there was too serious. When Paul was in Corinth, he also faced some serious opposition. However, when he had determined to leave the area, the Lord appeared to him in a vision and said, “Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace: (For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city” (Acts 18:9-10). Paul remained in Corinth for another year and a half (Acts 18:11).

The incident that Paul is relating actually took place before the one at Corinth. Yet, the Lord, who can control men at will, did not tell him no one would hurt him. Although the circumstance at Jerusalem may have appeared nearly identical to that of Corinth, that was not all the way it was.

Only the Lord can properly direct our steps. Even though we must extend ourselves to be wise and discreet in doing the work of the Lord, when it comes down to the bottom line, it is the Lord who directs our steps. The only way we can be directed, however, is to walk on the narrow path, live by faith, walk in the Spirit, and maintain our fellowship with Jesus, into which we were called. If we do so, living unto the Lord, His promise will be fulfilled in us: “And though the Lord give you the bread of adversity, and the water of affliction, yet shall not thy teachers be removed into a corner any more, but thine eyes shall see thy teachers: and thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left” (Isa 30:20-21).

The Bane of a Shallow Religion

Right here it is necessary to make a few comments concerning the bane of a shallow religion. By a “shallow religion,” I mean an approach to living that only deals with surface matters – or issues relating to life in this world. It is the kind of life where there is no “root” – men hear the Word of the Lord but it does not go deep enough into their persons. Jesus described this kind of person as being like a shallow layer of earth that was thinly spread upon a large and impenetrable layer of rock. He described such a person in these words, “But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it; Yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while: for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended” (Matt 13:5-6). Mark reads, “And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground; who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness; And have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time: afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended” (Mark 4:16-17). Luke reads, “They on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away ” (Luke 8:13).

This is a most vivid description that accounts for the fall of those who have made a profession of faith. There is a sense in which the Word never went deep enough in their hearts to make them sensitive to the Lord. Somehow they thought they could live by rules instead of by faith. They did not know the wickedness of the world, and so they stayed too close to it (1 John 2:15-17). They were not cognizant of the craftiness of the devil, and so made a place for him to work in their lives (Eph 4:27). They had very little idea of how very much is given to us in Christ Jesus (Eph 1:3), and therefore, they never pressed toward the mark, or zealously sought the things which are above, where Christ sits at the right hand of God (Col 3:1-2). That is why they fell! That is why they were unable to hear the voice of the Lord!

What we have in our day is an approach to the Christian life that actually promotes this kind of spiritual naivete and immaturity. Professing Christians are being produced that do not grow into a state of fruit bearing (Rom 7:4). The professing churches knows they have this kind of people on their hands, yet they are apparently blind to the cause of it. They have created artificial means to address a lack of depth, a weak faith, and fruitless lives. They have counselors, workshops, programs, and a variety of special ministries they imagine are addressing the ills of the church. But none of those means have been able to develop spiritual sensitivity in the people. It has only made them dependent upon humanly devised means.

But Paul did not embrace this kind of approach to God. He lived and walked in such a manner as made him sensitive to Divine direction. This was not something that was especially for him. This is a New Covenant provision, and is included in the glorious expression, “the knowledge of God” (1 Cor 15:34; 2 Cor 10:5; Col 1:10; 2 Pet 1:2).

THEY WILL NOT RECEIVE YOUR TESTIMONY

we now have a generation of professing Christians who know very little about Christ Jesus the Lord. Their perception of why He came into the world is very limited. What He was doing in His ministry is not clear to them. The accomplishments of His death have not been perceived beyond an introductory view.

“ . . . for they will not receive thy testimony concerning Me.” Other versions read, “accept your testimony about Me,” NASB “your witness about Me,” BBE “what you have to say about Me,” CJB “the testimony you are giving about Me,” NJB “thy witness that thou bearest of Me,” TNT “when you give them My message,” LIVING and “the truth about Me.” IE

Notice what Jesus did not say to Paul. He did not say the Jews would reject Paul himself – although they did. He did not say they would reject his personal testimony concerning how he had been called. It is what Paul was saying about Christ Jesus Himself that would be rejected. That was reason enough for him to leave. Luke says that during that time “he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus” (Acts 9:29). Prior to that, and immediately after his conversion, Paul had “increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ” (Acts 9:22). Christ Jesus was the subject or theme of his testimony.

A person who does not preach Christ, declaring and expounding His Person, accomplishments, and current activity, has no right to preach or teach among the people of God. This especially applies to those who tailor their message to please the people. It is the message of Christ that discovers the kind of people that are being addressed. If they have no interest in Jesus Christ Himself, then God really has nothing more for them. Everything God has for men is given to them through His Son, and if men do not want the Son, they are locked into a state of spiritual ignorance and poverty.

This kind of testimony stands in stark contrast to the preaching and teaching of our day. With very few exceptions, the theme of today's preachers and teachers centers in humanity – their problems, and their potential. These men come with resolutions for difficulties and challenges, and they are encased in a code or a system they themselves have created.

The result is that we now have a generation of professing Christians who know very little about Christ Jesus the Lord. Their perception of why He came into the world is very limited. What He was doing in His ministry is not clear to them. The accomplishments of His death have not been perceived beyond an introductory view. What He is doing now is not common knowledge, and the reality and purpose of His second coming are rarely heard. The relationship of the church to Him is only vaguely seen. The fact of men being conformed to His image has been buried beneath the rubble of self-help systems and the promotion of religious institutions. Actually, the modern and popular Christian message is essentially a proclamation about men, not Jesus. The Son of God that is being represented is more like a genie in a bottle than the Savior of men. It is “another Jesus” (2 Cor 11:4).

This is by no means an innocent situation, and it must not be glossed as though it did not exist. As the prophet Jeremiah exclaimed, “A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so : and what will ye do in the end thereof?” (Jer 5:30-31). What will the outcome of such a circumstance be? Would God really be glorified by saving and receiving such a people? If so, then precisely what is the purpose of salvation, and the awful requirements that were laid upon the Lord Jesus in order to the expiation of sin, the conferment of the Holy Spirit, and Divine acceptance? If God's integrity and faithfulness can really be maintained in a compromising posture, why have Jesus?

THEY KNOW

“ 19 And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on Thee. . .”

There are several instances in Scripture of men responding to the Lord – holding a dialog directly with Him. These incidents are distinguished from prayers and inquiries made to the Lord. Here is a brief sampling of such dialog. These do not include communications with angels.

- Adam (Gen 3:9-12).
- Eve (Gen 3:13).
- Cain (Gen 4:13-15).
- Abraham (Gen 15:2-3; 18:23-28;
- Abimelech (Gen 20:4-8).
- Moses (Ex 3:4-5:18; 21:9-14).
- Isaiah (Isa 6:8-11).
- Jeremiah (Jer 4:10).
- Ezekiel (Ezek 11:13-23).
- Paul (Acts 22:10,19).

This kind of beating was done with such force and repetition as to separate the skin from the bone. This was done, the Jews imagined, in fulfillment of the Law, which spoke of the manner in which wicked people were to be punished.

The fact of these occurrences is most arresting to ponder. They are to be compared with Israel who, when they heard the voice of God collectively, did not want to hear it anymore (Ex 20:19). There was also an occasion when God spoke from heaven, but the people were unaware of who spoke (John 12:28-29). Few, indeed, are the occasions when men dialoged with God, asking and answering verbally.

The answer of Paul to the glorified Christ is an example of the boldness of faith (Eph 3:12). It also reveals the potential impact of being reconciled unto God (Col 1:20-21), and participating in the Divine nature (2 Pet 1:4). Additionally, the implications of being called into the fellowship of God's Son (1 Cor 1:9) are lived out in this text.

LORD

“And I said, Lord . . .” Other versions read, “Lord, I replied,” NIV “And I said: My Lord,” MRD ““Lord,’ I answered,” NJB ““But Lord,’ I argued,” LIVING “But Lord,” IE and “So I said, `Lord.” WILLIAMS

This is the same way in which Paul addressed the Savior on the road to Damascus: “LORD, what wilt Thou have me to do?” (Acts 9:6; 22:10). Just as in Paul's initial encounter with the glorified Christ, this is a perceptive response, not merely a formal one.

I IMPRISONED AND BEAT

“ . . . they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue . . .” Other versions read, “putting in prison and whipping,” BBE “cast into prison and beat,” DOUAY “delivered up to prison and have scourged,” MRD and “cast into prison and flogged.” AMPLIFIED

As if putting them in prison was not enough, Paul had the believers beaten, whipped, or flogged also. The word “beat” is translated from a word that means “to flay, skin . . . be beaten with many stripes,” THAYER “literally remove the skin, flay figuratively in the NT beat, strike repeatedly, whip,” FRIBERG and “to strike or beat repeatedly - 'to strike, to beat, to whip.” LOUW-NIDA

This kind of beating was done with such force and repetition as to separate the skin from the bone. This was done, the Jews imagined, in fulfillment of the Law, which spoke of the manner in which wicked people were to be punished. “And it shall be, if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, that the judge shall cause him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face, according to his fault, by a certain number. Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed : lest, if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should seem vile unto thee” (Deut 25:3). In their penchant for precision, and not willing to take a chance of exceeding the number forty, the practice of the Jews was to beat the one being punished with “forty stripes save one” (2 Cor 11:24). The beating took place in the prison, as well as in the synagogue. Jesus had told His disciples they would be beaten in the synagogues: “But beware of men: for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues” (Mat 10:17).

There are least eight records of this oppression in the book of Acts.

- Acts 8:3: “As for Saul, he made havoc of the church , entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison .”

- Acts 9:1-2: “And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest, and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem .”

- Acts 22:4: “And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women.”

- Acts 26:10-11: “Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison , having received authority from the chief priests; and when they were put to death , I gave my voice against them. And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme ; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities.”

• 1 Corinthians 15:9: “For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God .”

• Galatians 1:13: “For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted it.”

• Philippians 3:6: “Concerning zeal, persecuting the church ; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless.”

• 1 Timothy 1:13: “Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious : but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief.”

THEM THAT BELIEVED ON THEE

“ . . . them that believed on Thee. . . ” Other versions read, “those whom believe in You,” NIV “those who had faith in You,” BBE “who trusted in You,” CJB “believed in Thee,” DOUAY “those believing on Thee,” YLT and “who believed on (adhered to and trusted in and relied on) You.”
AMPLIFIED

There are two sides to believing, and the absence of either of them voids any claim to having believed. First , this is a firm persuasion of the reality of Christ’s Person, and the fact and effectuality of what He has done in the behalf of humanity. Where this persuasion is missing, the individual has not believed, and ought not be treated as though he had. The second is trusting, or leaning wholly upon the Savior. The one who believes does not hesitate to cast the weight of his soul upon the Lord, anticipating that he will be sustained, nourished, and guided by Jesus. Where this trust is absent, a claim to have believed is a lie. No person is believing who lives without relying on Jesus.

Satan himself has inserted corrupt thoughts concerning believing into the professed church. Rarely will you find a person or a congregation who attaches preeminence to the act of believing itself. Generally, it is WHAT a person believes that is accented, and that is usually associated with sectarian views instead of the truth itself. Considering believing as though it was some kind of academic activity, many make a point of saying that believing is not enough. They are eager to cite James, who states that faith without works is dead, being fundamentally ignorant of the subject he was expounding.

Note this text. Paul is speaking to the Son of God Himself – the glorified Son of God. He refers to His people – those who have been joined to Him. And how is it that he refers to them? He says they are those who believed, or were believing on Christ Jesus. How could this be a shallow and incomplete term if it is spoken by an insightful man to the enthroned Savior? What is there about Paul’s expression that is deficient, incomplete, or not adequate to describe those who are in Christ Jesus?

Twenty-six times in the book of Acts, those who accepted the truth concerning Christ, and were joined to Him, are referred to as believing, or having believed (2:44; 4:4,32; 5:14; 8:12,13; 9:42; 10:45; 11:17,21; 13:12,48; 14:1,23; 15:5; 16:1,34; 17:4,12,34; 18:8,27; 19:2,18; 22:19; 28:24). When other acts of obedience are mentioned, such as baptism, they always follow believing, confirming that the obedience was, in fact, the “obedience of faith” (8:12,13; 18:8; Rom 16:26). Those who rejected the message are said to have “believed not” (17:5; 19:9; 28:24).

Believing is a summation of human response, or the fountain from which all valid response flows. Thus Paul could refer to the people of God as those who were believing, doing so before the Lord’s Christ, and without any twinge of conscience.

Why Was This Allowed?

Both the novice and the sophist find great difficulty with righteous people being beaten. How is it that those who are believing can in any way be oppressed by those who do not believe on Christ. How can statements such as the following texts possibly be true if those who trust in the Lord are persecuted.

- “And the LORD shall make thee the head, and not the tail ; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if that thou hearken unto the commandments of the LORD thy God, which I command thee this day, to observe and to do them” (Deut 28:13).
- “A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee ” (Psa 91:7).
- “Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy : and nothing shall by any means hurt you” (Luke 10:19).
- “Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savor of his knowledge by us in every place” (2 Cor 2:14).
- “Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world” (1 John 4:4).

If these statements are intended to convey the idea that the people of God will be delivered from any and all oppression, then how can there be a martyr, or such a thing as persecution, oppression, or suffering?

- First, these statements are true in the ultimate sense: that is, in the end, no one who put their trust in the Lord will have been overthrown by the enemy.
- Second, the purpose of God cannot be nullified or rendered ineffective by the enemy.
- Third, the superiority of faith is demonstrated and confirmed in the crucible of suffering. Deliverance is nothing more than a theory if there is nothing to be delivered from.
- Fourth, heavenly principalities and powers are being taught through the church – the church as it lives here upon the earth. When they stand under oppression, it displays the wisdom of God to the angelic hosts.
- Fifth, Satan cannot effectively interfere with the Divine assignments that have been given to the saints – those who are believing. They will finish their work, completing their course, even though they are subjected to suffering.
- Sixth, suffering is used to filter out of the church those who are not really trusting in the Lord. In the time of testing and suffering, those who are not continuing to believe will fall away.

Much more can be said on this subject, but this will suffice to show how foolish it is to be staggered by the presence of suffering and hardship. Believers cannot afford to be mystified by trouble. Throughout the centuries, believers have suffered. It should not surprise this generation.

I WAS STANDING BY

“ 20 And when the blood of Thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.”

Now Paul rehearses the part of his life that preceded the persecution he unleashed against the church: the stoning of Stephen. Although this sin had been forgiven, as well as that of persecuting the church, he confesses it once again before the Lord. This was not a sign of unbelief on his part, but rather confirmed his recognition of the enormity of the sin he now mentions.

THY MARTYR STEPHEN

“And when the blood of Thy martyr Stephen was shed . . .” Other versions read, “Your martyr Stephen,” NKJV “Thy witness Stephen.” NASB

The word “martyr” is also applied to a man named “Antipas” (Rev 2:13), and to those who were killed by the false church, Babylon the Great (Rev 17:6). As the word (ma,rturo,j) is used here, it refers to those who “have proved the strength and genuineness of their faith in Christ by undergoing a violent death,” THAYER

STANDING BY AND CONSENTING

“ . . . I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.” Other versions read, “approving,” NASB “giving my approval,” NIV “in full agreement,” CJB “performed the pleasure of his slayer,” MRD “In complete agreement,” NLT “assenting to his death,” YLT “agreeing,” LIVING “consenting and approving,” AMPLIFIED “cheered them on,” CEV/MESSAGE

The word “consenting” is translated from the Greek word s uneudokw/n , which has the following lexical meaning: “to be pleased together with, to approve together (with others): absolutely (yet so that the thing giving pleasure is evident from the context),” THAYER “to decide with someone else that something is preferable or good - ‘to agree to, to consent to.’” LOUW-NIDA

The actual account of Stephen’s stoning reads as follows: “And cast him out of the city, and stoned him: and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul . And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep. And Saul was consenting unto his death . And at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judaea and Samaria, except the apostles.” (Acts 7:58-8:1).

“The witnesses” were those who had raised a false witness against Stephen (Acts 6:13). According to the Law of Moses, the ones who witnessed against the purported infractor of the Law, were to be the first to commence the stoning. “The hands of the witnesses shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterward the hands of all the people. So thou shalt put the evil away from among you” (Deut 17:7; 13:9-10).

And how did Paul consent to, or agree with, those who were stoning Stephen to death. It was not by lifting up his voice in accusation, and delivering some kind of verbal attack on Stephen. He did not pick up stones and hurl at Stephen. He simply stood there, taking care of the outer garments the men had discarded so they could more easily hurl the stones at Christ’s faithful witness. He did not lift up his voice in defense of Stephen. He expressed no objection to what they were doing. Thus, he participated in the wicked deed by not objecting to it.

There are still those who speak falsely concerning the people of God – particularly those who are preaching the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Those who listen indifferently to their charges, and shape their views of the saints by the words of such people, have joined in the opposition of the saints. Their silence is really their consent to the malignment of the people of God. Such people are the enemies of God, and consequently of the people of God as well. Those who believe must be able to recognize their enemies, and conduct themselves accordingly. Although they pray for them, and treat them with godly civility, not returning evil for evil, yet they must know that these people are their enemies. They must not conduct themselves in their presence as though this was not the case. Rather, they are to speak out the things that accent their enmity – things that do not pertain to their persons, but to the Savior with whom they have sided – like Stephen did. This is precisely why Paul wrote, “And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them” (Eph 5:11). Other versions read, “And do not participate in the unfruitful deeds of darkness, but instead even expose them,” NASB , and “ Take no part in and have no fellowship with the fruitless deeds and enterprises of darkness, but instead [let your lives be so in contrast as to] expose and reprove and convict them.” AMPLIFIED Fellowship, participation, and taking part in, can be done by consent – just as in the case of Saul fo Tarsus.

Implications of this Passage

Why did Paul speak in this manner in his response to the Lord Jesus? Why did he explain how the people knew he was formerly a persecutor of believers, and had consented to the murder of Stephen? There are several possible implications of this text.

- A MERE REHEARSAL OF THE EVENTS. On the surface, this could be merely rehearsing that what he had done in the past was known to all the Jews. I am persuaded, however, that there is more to the text than that.

- THE POSSIBILITY THAT THE PEOPLE MAY HAVE DETECTED A CHANGE IN PAUL, AND THUS BE MOVED TO LISTEN TO HIM. Paul could be saying that he already knew he was not going to be received. However, perhaps by seeing the change in him, the Jews might be convinced to hear him.

- THAT THE BELIEVERS WOULD SEE THE CHANGE IN HIM, AND MORE READILY RECEIVE HIM. He could also be saying that the believers would recall what he had done in the past, and would therefore more readily receive him when they heard him contending for the faith. This view cannot be true, for the believers that were there already knew he was a believer, even though they had heard false things about what he was preaching.

I defer to the second view: that Paul was reasoning with the Lord, as Abraham (Gen 18:23-33) and Moses (Ex 32:9-14) did. He was willing to continue testifying even though, at the time, they were not receptive to his word. How gracious it was for the Lord to bear with Paul, allowing him to speak, even though it would not alter what He had told the apostle to do.

I WILL SEND THEE FAR HENCE

“ 21 And He said unto me, Depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles. ”

The reasoning of Paul will not change the command of the Lord Jesus. This same kind of reaction may be found in the prayers and petitions of the saints. The Lord will gracious hear them out when their reasoning is based upon faith, and some understanding of the Divine nature.

The reasoning of Paul will not change the command of the Lord Jesus. This same kind of reaction may be found in the prayers and petitions of the saints. The Lord will gracious hear them out when their reasoning is based upon faith, and some understanding of the Divine nature. However, as with Abraham, when he pled for the righteous in Sodom, the cities were still destroyed, even though the righteous were spared. When Moses pled for the Israelites, multitudes of them were still destroyed by plagues, and a forty year trek in the wilderness was mandated. Again, those who believed were spared.

The prayers and reasonings of the people of God will not move God to change His appointments.

Ultimately they will be carried out, even though some temporary mercies may very well be granted. A knowledge of these will assist in shaping your prayers, and being patient and faithful when the answers do not come as you prefer.

DEPART!

“And He said unto me, Depart . . .” Other versions read, “Go!” NASB “Get going,” CJB “Leave Jerusalem,” LIVING “Leave now,” IE and “Don't argue. Go.” MESSAGE

To clarify the matter, Paul did leave Jerusalem at that time, being assisted by the brethren in there (Acts 9:29-30).

There is something to be seen here that is of special significance. When the witness of the truth is not received, ultimately, the witness will be withdrawn. Sometimes the witness is withdrawn by martyrdom, confirming that the work of the witness has been completed. This was the case with Stephen (Acts 6-7), whose witness was not intended to extend beyond Jerusalem.

When He was upon earth, Jesus taught His disciples to think in this manner: namely that those who do not receive the truth have lost the right to hear it – at least at that time.

- “And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city” (Matt 10:14-15).

- “But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another : for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come” (Matt 10:23).

Paul and Barnabas practiced this. When rejected by the Jews of Antioch of Pisidia, “they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium” (Acts 13:51). Paul did the same thing in Athens. “And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment , and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles ” (Acts 18:5-6).

When Jesus dwelt among men, He was once soundly rejected by an area, with the Pharisees in that place seeking to even take His life. It is written, “But when Jesus knew it, He withdrew himself from thence” (Mat 12:15).

The Divine manner appears to have been successfully hidden by the watered down gospel that is being preached these days. Churches actually tailor their services for the disinterested, imagining that this is the way to reach them. Such have forgotten that the Gospel remains “the power of God unto salvation” (Rom 1:16). If men cannot be attracted to Christ by that Gospel, they cannot be attracted by anything, for the Gospel, and the Gospel alone, is God’s “power unto salvation.”

An Exception

There were prophets who were sent to a people that would not hear them, and yet they were to deliver the message God had given them. This included Isaiah (Isa 30:9), Jeremiah (Jer 5:23-24), and Ezekiel (Ezek 2:3-8). The obstinance of the people was so pronounced that the Lord told Jeremiah not to pray for them – and if he did, the Lord would not hear his prayers (Jer 7:16; 11:14; 14:11).

A Serious Misrepresentation

These days, some are teaching that the longsuffering of God is endless, and can never have a terminal point. This teaching is based upon a corrupt representation found in the New International Version, which is currently the most popular version of the Bible being sold. The passage of reference reads, “But for that very reason I was shown mercy so that in me, the worst of sinners, Christ Jesus might display his unlimited patience as an example for those who would believe on him and receive eternal life” (1 Tim 1:16). The New Jerusalem Bible uses a similar expression: “inexhaustible patience,” as well as the Montgomery New Testament: “boundless patience” The Contemporary English Version and The Message use “endless patience.”

The seriousness of this matter is seen in the fact that men have actually developed a doctrine that is based upon a misconception of God that was reflected in a modern translation of the scripture. Then, they have developed programs that are based upon the flawed concept, pawning it off as though it actually came from God.

The words “unlimited patience,” as found in the NIV are translated differently in other versions: “all longsuffering,” KJV/NKJV “perfect patience,” NASB “utmost patience,” NRSV “all His longsuffering,” ASV “all His mercy,” BBE “how very patience He is,” CJB “utmost patience,” CSB “the whole long-suffering,” DARBY “all patience,” DOUAY “great patience,” NLT “all long patience,” TNT “the fulness of His long-suffering,” WEYMOUTH and “full patience.” GNB

The word “all,” as in “all longsuffering,” is translated from the Greek word α[π]ασαν . This word connotes the idea of “the whole,” or “all.” THAYER/FRIBERG A Bible word for limitless or boundless is “infinite” (Nah 3:9, NJV); also translated “without limits,” NASB and “boundless.” NIV The idea of something being without limits is also conveyed in this word concerning Christ Jesus: “God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto Him” (John 3:34). Other versions read, “without limit.” NIV This word is translated from another Greek word: με,τρον . As used in John 3:34, this word means “not from a measure, that is, without measure.” GINGRICH

The point here is that the longsuffering of God is not “without measure,” or boundless. It is abundant, but not endless. The doctrine of Scripture makes this quite clear. God’s longsuffering ran out, so to speak, in the days of Noah, and His Spirit ceased to strive with men (Gen 6:3). It ran out for Jerusalem, which consummated in her being left desolate (Matt 23:38). It ran out for Israel, as confirmed in God’s words to Jeremiah. There is a sin, Jesus said, “which hath never forgiveness” (Mk 3:29). There is a condition from which men cannot recover (Heb 6:4; 10:26). All longsuffering will eventually run out for all of the wicked, who will be summarily condemned with absolutely no extension of mercy toward them. The wrath of God will be poured out upon them “without mixture” (Rev 14:10).

Now, that is the doctrine of Scripture. And it is stated with great clarity, and without ambiguity, One of the great differences between ancient translators of Scripture and many modern ones is that they had a working knowledge of the doctrine of Scripture, whereas many of the modern translators do not. Their works often reflect sectarian theology, rather the mind of God. No person should be allowed to translate Scripture who is unfamiliar with the doctrine of Scripture. This is because, of itself, etymology, which deals with the analyzation of language, is not a sufficient tool to translate the thoughts of God from one language to another. At some point spiritual wisdom and the understanding of Scripture must be brought to bear on translation. I do not know of any aspect of handling the word of God where this is not true.

The seriousness of this matter is seen in the fact that men have actually developed a doctrine that is based upon a misconception of God that was reflected in a modern translation of the scripture. Then, they have developed programs that are based upon the flawed concept, pawning it off as though it actually came from God.

This misrepresentation cannot account for the withdrawal of a truthful witness, or for the wrath of God, or for the judgment and condemnation of the wicked. It cannot account for the flood, the incineration of Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim, the decimation of Egypt, or the destruction of the Amalekites.

A Personal Witness

After over fifty-six years of preaching in churches, I have only been forced to react one time in this manner. It was in Dallas City, Illinois, where there was a solid reaction against the preaching of the Word of God. In 1957, I stood before the congregation, told them I was leaving, and why I was doing so. That message was the last one I preached among them. Eventually, the congregation became extinct under the leadership of those who rejected the truth.

I have long been concerned about those theological schools that prepare and send out supposed ministers without instructing them concerning this Divine manner. No person, regardless of the sentimentality that may be associated with their purported ministry, should remain where the Lord Jesus Christ and His Gospel are not preferred. Should it be confirmed that this condition exists among the people, it should be made known publically that such a stance is not acceptable before God, and that the person discerning it will no longer remain among, or minister to, them while they remain hard-hearted. I realize this is too difficult for some to receive, but it is nevertheless true.

I WILL SEND THEE FAR HENCE TO THE GENTILES

“ . . . for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles. ” Other versions read, “I will send you far from here to the Gentiles,” NKJV “I will send you far away to the Gentiles,” NASB “I will send thee to the nations afar off,” DARBY “You'll go far away to people who aren't Jewish,” GWN and “I am sending you out to the gentiles far away.” NJB

Unlike what is happening to many today, when the people to whom Paul was ministering rejected him, he did not retire from being an apostle. All of this postulates that the preacher has been given to see something – i.e. to comprehend the things of God. Such revelations are not given to be contained. They are to be spoken, delivered with confidence and power. Therefore, when leaving Jerusalem, where the people would not listen to him, Jesus sent Paul to some far places where the people would listen. This was such a remarkable commission that it was prophesied of the Gentiles who would hear the Gospel, “I am sought of them that asked not for Me; I am found of them that sought Me not: I said, Behold Me, behold Me, unto a nation that was not called by My name.” (Isa 65:1; Rom 10:20). This call came because of Divine choice, and by the Gospel. As it is written, “But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth; Whereunto he called you by our gospel , to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Thess 2:14).

When accounting for the salvation of anyone, whether of self or others, it is imperative that this perspective be grasped. The call came from God, and at Divine discretion.

THEY GAVE HIM AUDIENCE UNTIL THIS WORD

“ 22 And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live.”

The listeners now rebel, no longer holding their silence, or listening intently. Their hearts are made known by what Paul says, and they instantly react to him.

THEY GAVE HIM AUDIENCE UNTIL THIS WORD

“And they gave him audience unto this word . . .” Other versions read, “and they listened to him until this word,” NKJV “they listened to him up to this statement,” NASB “the crowd listened to Paul until he said this,” NIV “they gave him a hearing as far as this word,” BBE “when they had heard Paul as far as this sentence,” MRD and “Up to the moment that Paul made this last statement, the people listened to him.” AMPLIFIED

The people listened intently as long as their cherished traditions were not directly exposed. Further, Paul did not avoid speaking about things that he knew would offend these people. The modern concept of “seeker-friendly” is a wholly erroneous one, riddled with hollow places like a bag that is filled with holes (Hag 1:6).

Suddenly, the attentiveness of the people was brought to a grinding conclusion when they heard the words, “I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles .” These people could tolerate a Jesus who had a prevailing interest in the Jews, but would not tolerate for a moment one who would command someone to leave the Jews and go to the Gentiles. While this exact circumstance may not be common in our day, this kind of thinking is quite common. It would be similar to a preacher saying to a Christian Church that he was leaving them to preach to a Baptist Church. Or, a preacher telling some Roman Catholics that he was going to preach to some Lutherans. Perhaps it would involve telling a Presbyterian Church that the preacher was leaving to minister to a Charismatic group. It could even be telling a Pentecostal group that the preacher was leaving them to minister to a Methodist Church. An even more preposterous circumstance, yet a very real one, would involve a preacher telling a Church of Christ, One Cup, and Bread Breaking, that he was leaving them to minister to a Christ of Christ who served multiple cups at the Lord’s Table and supported orphanages. Oh, the mentality revealed in this text is alive and flourishing.

Paul no doubt knew what the response of the people would be, but he declared what Jesus had told him anyway. What would compel any person to NOT say what Jesus said in order to appease those who hold to corrupted views?

The Example of the Prophets

The fact that it is the Divine manner to bring out what people are by words, is also confirmed by the prophets. When the Lord spoke to them with the intention to bless them, the people did not listen.

The fact that it is the Divine manner to bring out what people are by words, is also confirmed by the prophets. When the Lord spoke to them with the intention to bless them, the people did not listen. Ordinarily, a little teaching here and a little teaching here, is designed to nurture up infants. Thus it is written, “Whom shall He teach knowledge? and whom shall He make to understand doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts. For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little” (Isa 28:9-10). But the people did not heed what was said, and thus did not make advancement in their understanding. Therefore God deluged them with words causing them to fall, being broken and snared. It is written, “To whom He said, This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear. But the word of the LORD was unto them precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken ” (Isa 28:12-13).

The Example of Jesus

Early in His ministry, Jesus preached in His hometown synagogue. After he had read the passage concerning which He would speak, “the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on Him” (Luke 4:20). It is written that they “bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth” (Luke 4:22). However this attentiveness was suddenly interrupted when Jesus drew attention to two notable incidents that were written in their Scriptures. “But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land; but unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow. And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian” (Luke 4:26-27). No sooner were these words uttered than “all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath, and rose up, and thrust Him out of the city, and led Him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong” (Luke 4:18-29). The words of the Lord revealed the state of their hearts.

On another occasion, Jesus was speaking to a multitude of people He had just fed with five loaves and two fishes. They had followed and listened to Him for three days before He fed them (Matt 15:32). He had sent them away after He fed them (Matt 15:39), and now they had tracked Him down again. This time, His teaching was stronger, and would require earnest inquiry on the part of the hearers. He said, “I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink His blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For My flesh is meat indeed, and My blood is drink indeed. He that eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, dwelleth in Me, and I in him” (John 6:53-56). Jesus did not give them the slightest hint that He was speaking metaphorically. It all sounded like cannibalism, and Jesus did not say anything that would lead them to think otherwise. It is written that “From that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him” (John 6:66). They really did not want to know what Jesus meant, or they would have asked Him what was intended by those words. His saying confirmed that to be the truth.

This is how God reacts to dulness of hearing – regardless of what pretentious teachers are saying. The words of God are never favorably tailored for the disinterested. In fact, truth is hidden from such people. We know this by two revelations: one by the Lord Jesus, and one by the apostle.

- JESUS. When the twelve asked Jesus why He spoke in parables to the multitudes, never giving them explanations, He replied: “He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath. Therefore speak I to them in parables: because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand. And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith, By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive: For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them” (Mat 13:11-15).

- PAUL. Paul spoke of receiving the love of the truth, stating that it was to anyone's eternal disadvantage not to receive such a marvelous love. To refuse to receive the love of the truth provokes a response from God Almighty. “And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness” (2 Thess 2:8-12). Those who speak of this despot are not telling the people WHY he has been loosed upon the earth. His presence is a judgment from God – a judgment that has come because people did not receive the love of the truth, or a love for the truth itself. God, then, responds by sending them strong delusion. It is so strong they are incapable of resisting or rejecting it. Further, their embracement of delusion will be the very cause for their damnation, for was the reason for sending strong delusion.

No wonder Satan wants people to think God loves them no matter what they do, and that they cannot drift too far from God, or that it is not possible to sin to such a degree that you pass beyond the point of recovery. The devil himself is the one who has influenced people to believe such nonsense.

THEN THEY LIFTED UP THEIR VOICES

“ . . . and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live.” Other versions read, “he should not be allowed to live,” NASB “Rid the earth of him! He is not fit to live,” NIV “it is not right for him to be living,” BBE and “it’s a disgrace for him to live!” CSB

These are the same kind of words the Jewish crowd shouted out against Jesus: “Away with Him, away with Him, crucify Him” (John 19:15).

Upon hearing the word “Gentiles,” this mob called for the elimination of Paul, saying he was not fit to live – all because he said the word “Gentiles” in a favorable way. It is the business of every believer to be sure they are not deceived into adopting this same mindset – so they cease to listen because there is mention of some person who has been favored by God, yet is not approved by those who are bigoted and prejudiced. I do not doubt that Paul remembered when he had been persecuting believers, consenting to their death. He also no doubt rejoiced that the Lord had mercy upon him.

THE WITHDRAWAL OF THE WITNESS

Because it is a critical part of spiritual understanding, I want to again emphasize that a failure to respond to the witness that is sent by the Lord will eventually result in the withdrawal of the witness. This is the upper side of the coin of martyrdom or death. In the case of one godly (Enoch) man, translation was the mode of removal. In the text before us, removal to another geographical location was the means of withdrawal. From the lower side, it is the murder of the innocent by the guilty. Those who were removed in this manner include Abel, Enoch, Stephen, Antipas, and those who were beheaded for their testimony.

This aspect of the Divine nature must not be glossed. Eventually, it will be demonstrated on a grand scale, with all unbelievers being once and for all removed from the presence the Lord, and all those who have been joined to Him.

The church must operate within the framework of this consciousness, not making friends with the world (James 4:4), or being overly tolerant of its unbelief.

CONCLUSION

I want to again emphasize that the record we are reviewing does include historical facts. These things really did take place. They are not exaggerations or hyperboles. However, an even higher view of them renders a more lasting impact upon the soul, and educates us in the ways of the Lord, as well as providing further insight into the nature of fallen men, and redeemed men as well. These insights are represented by this sampling of the various insights that are provided in the event of Paul’s arrest, the response of the military captain, and Paul’s defense before a people who called for his immediate death.

- Divine missions are not carried out in a moral vacuum. The will of the Lord is often fulfilled amidst opposition and hostility.

- Corrupt religion makes men more unreasonable than the world, that is totally ignorant of the Lord.
- Flesh jumps to conclusions.
- Holy men are not moved by opposition to compromise their message or mission.
- Sometimes the people of the world are wiser about certain matters than those who have some identity with God.
- The people for whom we have burdens are not always receptive to our message.
- Often the path that leads to our appointed destination does through hostile territory.
- Sometimes people listen for quite a while before rejecting what is said.
- The nature of people is not changed without hearing the truth, yet hearing the sound of true words does not necessarily convince them.
- The one who believes God does not shape his message to please the people.
- Those who truly live unto the Lord do not allow discouragement to stop their mouths.
- God can provide protection through civil authority.

The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire (Volumes published 1776-1789)

Edward Gibbon, student of the Enlightenment

The books cover the period of the Roman Empire after Marcus Aurelius, from 180 to 1453, concluding in 1590

According to Gibbon, the Roman Empire succumbed to barbarian invasions in large part due to the gradual loss of civic virtue among its citizens. They had become weak, outsourcing their duties to defend their Empire to barbarian mercenaries, who then became so numerous and ingrained that they were able to take over the Empire. Romans, he believed, had become effeminate, unwilling to live a tougher, "manly" military lifestyle. He further blames the degeneracy of the Roman army and the Praetorian guards. In addition, Gibbon argued that Christianity created a belief that a better life existed after death, which fostered an indifference to the present among Roman citizens, thus sapping their desire to sacrifice for the Empire. He also believed its comparative pacifism tended to hamper the traditional Roman martial spirit. Lastly, like other Enlightenment thinkers, Gibbon held in contempt the Middle Ages as a priest-ridden, superstitious, dark age. It was not until his own age of reason and rational thought, it was believed, that human history could resume its progress.

Gibbon sees the primary catalyst of the empire's initial decay and eventual collapse in the Praetorian Guard, instituted as a special class of soldiers permanently encamped in a commanding position within Rome, a seed planted by Augustus at the establishment of the empire. As Gibbon calls them at the outset of Chapter V: The Praetorian bands, whose licentious fury was the first symptom and cause of the decline of the Roman empire... He cites repeated examples of this special force abusing its power with calamitous results, including numerous instances of imperial assassination and demands of ever-increasing pay.

Sound reasoning can be overridden by prejudice.

- What is good can be rejected in preference for what is evil.
- Religious tradition can have a blinding effect upon the human spirit.
- When God speaks to the heart, it outweighs all trials and opposition.
- When the servant of God is not received one place, another place will be opened.

This is only a cursory sampling of the kind of insights that are resident in the historical incidents of scripture. In this regard, Scriptural history is the record of the working and government of God – two realities in which His character and purpose are always present as both the cause and the message. We must not allow ourselves to be confused by the carnal explanations of those who know not God.

Worldly historians peruse history with a different mindset. They try and assign causes according to their own understanding. For example, in Gibbons' classic work on "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," he assigns philosophical reasons for the eventual falling of the Roman Empire. A few of the principle reasons are shown on this page. Even though it has been fashionable for many Christian preachers and teachers to cite from these volumes, paralleling the current condition of the United States of America to that of Rome, this view is too earthy to be adopted by men and women of faith.

We can account for fall of Rome, as well as all other worldly empires, upon the basis of revelation, not human reasoning. Actually, the reasons historians provide are symptoms, not causes. The cause for the fall of worldly kingdoms is the preeminence of the Kingdom of God. That is revealed in a dream given to Nebuchadnezzar, and interpreted by Daniel the prophet. The Kingdom of God in its earthly manifestation is likened to a small stone taken out of a mountain without hands. That stone began to roll throughout the earth, and the more it rolled, the larger it became. It finally crushed all of the kingdoms of this world, itself becoming a mountain that filled the whole earth (Dan 2:31-45). That Kingdom is what brought Rome down, just as Daniel said. Edward Gibbon cites Christianity as one of the causes for the decline and fall of Rome – but he saw it as an unfortunate influence that interfered with the advancement of Rome. How wrong he was!

The knowledge of such things will keep us from being dominated by doubt and fear. It will also keep us from being ruled by imaginations. This is because faith can take hold of these realities. On the surface, it appears as though the Jews forced Paul to leave Jerusalem earlier, and were attempting to do so again. However, the reality of the matter was that God was withdrawing the witness from Jerusalem, and preparing for its desolation, which would take place in 70 A.D.

PAUL PROTECTED FROM THE CROWD

“ 22:23 "And as they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air, 24 The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging; that he might know wherefore they cried so against him. 25 And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned? 26 When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman. 27 When the chief captain came, and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea. 28 And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born. 29 Then straightway they departed from him which should have examined him: and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and because he had bound him. 30 On the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them." (Acts 22:23-30)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

Once Paul had mentioned the word “Gentiles” in a favorable sense, the Jewish crowd erupted in anger, throwing off their clothes in readiness to stone him, and throwing dust into the air. The captain of the Roman soldiers quickly removed Paul from the open place, and prepares to examine him by scourging. It is at this point that he learns Paul is a Roman citizen, and therefore could not be beaten until a valid charge against him was substantiated. Upon further inquiry, he learned that Paul was a natural-born citizen, and thus was in a more favorable state than the captain himself, who had purchased his citizenship. He then had the thongs removed from Paul, allowing him to wait for further legal proceedings without being flogged. The captain was not willing to let the case go, because the tumult had been reported, and was now a matter of record. The situation had to be resolved satisfactorily, and the fact of Paul's innocence established. This will prove to be the beginning of a process that will not conclude until Paul is in Rome, where Jesus said he would preach the Gospel. It is also there that he will eventually be martyred.

HAVING A GODLY VIEW OF THINGS

There is a certain perspective of life that is developed in Scripture. This pertains particularly to those who are living by faith and walking in the Spirit – to those who are “in Christ Jesus.” Life is not what it seems to be according to appearance. There are certain very real circumstances that provide the true context in which the newness of life is lived out. Here are some of them.

- THINGS ARE BEING WORKED TOGETHER. God is working all things together for the ultimate good of those CONTENTS who love Him and are called according to His purpose. “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.” (Rom 8:28).

- DEMONSTRATION OF DIVINE WISDOM. The manifold, or multifaceted wisdom of God is being shown to heavenly principalities and powers through the church – that is, through expressions and experiences of the body of Christ “To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God” (Eph 3:10).

- BEING KEPT. The Lord is keeping His people from falling. “Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy” (Jude 1:24) – keeping them by their faith. “Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time” (1 Pet 1:5)

- THEIR TEMPTATIONS ARE MANAGED. The Lord provides a way of escape that accompanies every temptation. “There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it” (1 Cor 10:13).

- ORDERED, OR REGULATED, STEPS. The steps of the good man are directed by the Lord. “The steps of a good man are ordered by the LORD: and he delighteth in his way” (Psa 37:23).

- GOD IS WORKING IN THEM. God is working in His people both to will and to do of His own good pleasure. “For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure” (Phil 2:13).

• THEY ARE BEING PERFECTED. God is perfecting, establishing, and settling His people. “But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you” (1 Pet 5:10).

• AN ADVERSARY IS STALKING THEM. The devil is prowling about, seeking whom he may devour. “Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pet 5:8).

• ANGELS ARE MINISTERING TO THEM. Holy angels are ministering to those who are the heirs of salvation. “But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool? Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?” (Heb 1:13-14).

The faith of God’s elect is being tried in order that it might be a cause of praise to God when Jesus comes.

THE HOLY SPIRIT INTERCEDES. The Holy Spirit is interceding within us, expressing to the Father things for which we do not know how to pray. “Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God” (Rom 8:26-27).

• JESUS IS INTERCEDING. Jesus is interceding for the saints at the right hand of God. “Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them” (Heb 7:25).

• BEING BROUGHT TO GLORY. Jesus is bringing the sons of God to glory. “For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings” (Heb 2:10).

• IN A WORLD GOVERNED BY GOD. The world is being governed by God through Jesus Christ “For the kingdom is the LORD’S: and he is the governor among the nations” (Psa 22:28); “The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (He is Lord of all)” (Acts 10:36)..

• OBJECTIVES ARE INVOLVED THAT INCLUDE SUFFERING. Needed trials are being experienced in order that our faith might be found to the praise, honor, and glory of God when Jesus appears. “Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations: That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 1:7).

• A SPECIFIED COURSE OF LIFE. Believers are running a specific course that has been set before them. “Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God” (Heb 12:2).

• FAITH IS BEING CULTURED. The faith of God’s elect is being tried in order that it might be a cause of praise to God when Jesus comes. “That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 1:7).

• THEY GRAPPLE WITH HIGHER POWERS. Believers have been called into conflict with principalities and powers that dwell in higher realms. “For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places” (Eph 6:12).

• HERESIES ARE FACED. Heresies, or divisive doctrines, are faced in order to must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you” (1 Cor 11:19).

• BEING CHANGED. A continual change is wrought by the Holy Spirit, whereby we are being conformed to the image of God’s Son. “For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren” (Rom 8:29); “But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord” (2 Cor 3:18).

• REIGNING OVER THEIR BODY. Those in Christ are given the commission of managing their body, together with its appetites. “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service” (Rom 12:1); “But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway” (1 Cor 9:27); “Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry” (Col 3:5).

• PARTAKING OF HOLINESS THROUGH CHASTENING. The children of God must endure chastening because they are the sons of God. This is not mere punishment, but becomes the means through which we become partakers of His holiness. “But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness” (Heb 12:10).

• MADE FUNCTIONAL. Through edification, the saints are being brought to the point where they can function in the body of Christ, being themselves a source of edification. “But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love” (Eph 4:15-16).

• GROWING UP WITH TARES. To further complicate things, the children of God live out their lives with tares among them. As confirmed in the parable of the tares of the field, the wheat is not among the tares, but the tares are among the wheat. In spite of that circumstance, the children of the kingdom are brought to the point of productivity, or fruit bearing. “But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also . . . Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn. “The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear” (Mat 13:26,30,41-43).

These are very real objectives and activities, and they are not being accomplished in a moral vacuum. God has chosen to do these things in a domain that is competitive and hostile – “this present evil world.” It is true that we have been delivered from this world (Gal 1:4), and yet we are being perfected and prepared in it. This is what necessitates Divine involvement in the process of salvation. It is unreasonable to imagine that we could, in our own strength and of ourselves, overcome the enemies that held us captive before our new birth. It is He “that is in us” is greater than “he that is in the world.” That is made quite clear in the declaration, “Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world” (1 John 4:4),

We should not expect the life of faith to be simplistic, without challenges, and accomplished in a kind of coasting mode.

THE POINT OF IT ALL

The point is that all of these things are operating behind the scenes of the event we are reviewing. According to appearance, the following were involved: Paul, a group of angry Jews, a Roman captain, some centurions, and at least one hundred soldiers. But actually, there were a lot of unseen powers and influences at work.

- The devil and his hosts were at work within the Jews, and endeavoring to hinder Paul.
- The Holy Spirit was at work within Paul, strengthening, comforting, and granting wisdom.
- God was beholding Paul and governing the whole situation for his good.
- From within, Jesus was sustaining Him and causing Him to stand.
- God was controlling the captain, working things out for the good of Paul.
- Holy angels were at work, subduing the enemies, and ministering to Paul.
- Lofty heavenly personalities were beholding the wisdom of God in the whole matter.

It is no wonder that Jesus admonished the people, “Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment” (John 7:24). Much more is going on than what can be seen, and all who are in Christ Jesus are obliged to know it. For those who are living by faith, this is a wonderful thing.

THE TUMULT INCREASES

“ 22:23 And as they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air. ”

AS THEY CRIED OUT

“And as they cried out . . .” Other versions read, “were shouting,” NIV “wee screaming,” CJB “were yelling,” CSB “vociferated,” MRD and “furious shouts.” WEYMOUTH

The words “they cried out” are translated from a single Greek word: kraugazo,ntwn . The lexical meaning of the word is: “to shout or cry out, with the possible implication of the unpleasant nature of the sound - 'to shout, to scream.” LOUW-NIDA

This is the kind of thing that happened in our text. Paul had declared to the people how Jesus had called Him into the most noble of all works. He had testified that he had been directed by Jesus to leave one place and go to another.

The idea here is that the people were seized with frenzy and carnal hysteria. It is as though the devil moved into them, causing them to lose all rationality and scream out like the beasts of the field.

There is a state where men become more like brute beasts than like “the offspring of God.” Brother Peter and Jude place false teachers into this category – “as natural brute beasts,” and “as brute beasts” (2 Pet 2:12; Jude 1:10). As used by Peter and Jude, this refers to the absurdity of the teaching of certain people. There is no sound reasoning in it, but their doctrine is the result of their own spiritually wild and uncontrollable nature.

When Asaph was disconcerted at the seeming prosperity of the wicked, he went into the sanctuary and had his thinking straightened out. In describing his former state of mind he confessed, “So foolish was I, and ignorant: I was as a beast before thee” (Psa 73:22). In describing the state of men outside of Christ, among whom we all served our tenure, Paul wrote, “For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another” (Titus 3:3).

Our text described people who are controlled by the flesh, shouting and screaming in anger and frustration like a wild animal that had been snared. Such a condition cannot be corrected by some kind of outward force. Thus we read of grievous plagues being poured out upon the ungodly, with a beastly response from them: “and they gnawed their tongues for pain, and blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds” (Rev 16:10-11). Such a response is the result of a depraved and unsound mind. God Almighty had punished the people, and they had reacted by blaspheming “the God of heaven.”

This is the kind of thing that happened in our text. Paul had declared to the people how Jesus had called Him into the most noble of all works. He had testified that he had been directed by Jesus to leave one place and go to another. The direction was for God’s glory, the honor of Jesus, the illumination of people, and the good of Paul. What a marvelous thing that a man could be so favored of heaven!

And how did the crowd react to it all? They heard the word “Gentiles,” and suddenly they were filled with hatred, being dominated by an unsound and erroneous mind. They forget that Paul had not been talking about himself, but of the Lord. The record of his words to them during this occasion are contained in verses one through twenty one. In them he developed a certain perspective. Test yourself to see if you can grasp the subject of his words.

- He spoke respectfully to them, referring to them as “men, brethren, and fathers” (v 1).
- He spoke to them in the Hebrew tongue, which was absolutely unique to their nation, because of their identity with the living God (v 2).
- He told them he was a Jew like themselves, and had been raised in the strictest manner of their religion (v 3).
- He himself, like them, was engaged in persecuting the way of the disciples of Jesus – yet he was even more zealous than they (v 4).
- The Jewish high priest and leaders had honored his request for special letters that would authorize him to arrest and bring followers of Jesus bound to Jerusalem to be punished (v 5).
- He was confronted by Jesus Himself on his way to Damascus as a light from heaven focused upon him (v 6).
- Struck down to the ground by the majesty of Christ, he heard Him say He was the One Paul had been persecuting (v 7).
- When Paul inquired who the personality was, he was told He was Jesus of Nazareth whom he was persecuting (v 8).
- This was not a dream or a personal vision, for those who were with him saw the light, even though they could not understand the voice (v 9).
- Upon asking what he should do, Paul was told by Jesus to go into the city, and everything he was to do would be told to him (v 10).
- The person Jesus assigned for this work was Ananias, a man who was held in good report by all of the Jews (v 12).

- Ananias delivered the message to Paul after first restoring his sight (v 13).
- He told Paul that the God of the fathers (Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob) had chosen him, that he might know His will, see the Just One, and hear the voice of His mouth (v 14).
- He told him that he had been chosen to be a witness unto all men of what he had seen and heard (v 15).
- Ananias asked Paul why he was tarrying, exhorting him to rise up and be baptized, washing away his sins and calling upon the name of the Lord (v 16).
- Later, when he went to Jerusalem, while he was praying in the Temple, he fell into a trance (v 17).
- The same Jesus told him to leave Jerusalem quickly, for they would not receive his testimony about Him (v 18).
- Paul recounted to Jesus how the people knew he had imprisoned and beat believers in every synagogue (v 19).
- He confessed to Jesus that he had been there when Stephen, Jesus' own martyr, was killed, and that he had consented to his death (v 20).
- Jesus then told him to leave Jerusalem, for He was going to send him "far hence to the Gentiles" (v 21).

Now, what was the focus of that testimony: Paul's will of the will of the Lord? Whose agenda had the priority: Paul's or that of Jesus? What was the preeminent work: what Paul did, or what Jesus did? Whose will was overthrown: Paul's will or the will of the Lord? Whose word took the priority: Paul's word or the word of Jesus? What was the real testimony about: What Paul was doing, or what Jesus was doing? Where did Paul's testimony end: with God honoring his will, or the will of Jesus? Who was Paul promoting: himself or Jesus?

Why did Saul of Tarsus yield to the will of the Lord, but the Jews now before him did not? It was because he had been living with all good conscience toward God, and they were not. It is because his zeal was really towards God, and their's was not. That is why Saul's mind was changed, and their's was not. It is why he believed, and they did not. It is why he submitted to Christ and they did not.

THEY CAST OFF THEIR CLOTHES

" . . . and cast off their clothes . . ." Other versions read, "tore off their clothes," NKJV "throwing off their cloaks," NASB "waved their garments," RSV "pulling off their clothing," BBE "flinging aside their robes," CJB "taking off their coats," GWN "threw off their coats," NLT and "tearing their garments." LITV

This action was no doubt like that of those who stoned Stephen, who took off their outer garments, and laid them at the feet of Saul. It is written that those men "laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul" (Acts 8:58).

Even though the entire human race consisted of but two people, they both made an effort to cover their nakedness, not knowing that the human body is, as some allege, beautiful. Even when they heard the voice of the Lord walking in the garden, they did not feel comfortable walking about with a fig-leaf covering, considering themselves still to be "naked."

This text must not be viewed through Western eyes, as though Paul's accusers now stood before him naked. That is not what throwing off their clothes means. At this point it is good to remind us of the modesty that was cultured under the Law, but has not been abandoned for the sake of convenience. After sin had entered the world, Adam and Eve became acutely aware of their nakedness, and were ashamed – and that is before they were aware of the presence of the Lord (Gen 3:7). Even though the entire human race consisted of but two people, they both made an effort to cover their nakedness, not knowing that the human body is, as some allege, beautiful (Gen 3:7). Even when they heard the voice of the Lord walking in the garden, they did not feel comfortable walking about with a fig-leaf covering, considering themselves still to be “naked” (Gen 3:8-10). One of the great curses in humanity resulted from one of Noah’s sons willfully seeing him “naked” (Gen 9:22), while his brothers refused to do so (Gen 9:23).

In the Tabernacle service, even a naked thigh was offensive to God (Ex 28:41-42). Members of a family, other than the wife and husband, were not to look upon the nakedness of other members of the family (Lev 18:8-19; 20:17-21).

When the Scriptures speak of someone being publicly “naked,” it is not speaking of being nude, or without any clothes or covering. When, for example, David, upon the return of the ark of the covenant, “danced before the Lord with all of his might,” he is said to have been “girded with a linen ephod” (2 Sam 6:14). Yet, when his wife Michal, said “How glorious was the king of Israel to day, who uncovered himself to day in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants, as one of the vain fellows shamelessly uncovereth himself!” (2 Sam 6:20). For her foolish saying, she was cursed for all of her life with barrenness (2 Sam 6:23).

Another incident concerns Peter, following our Lord’s resurrection. Following two appearances of the Lord to His disciples (John 20:19-29), he and some of the other disciples had gone fishing. Jesus appeared to them on that occasion, causing them to garner a miraculous catch of fish. When John recognized it was the Lord, he cried out, “It is the Lord. Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fisher's coat unto him, (for he was naked,) and did cast himself into the sea” (John 21:7). This does not mean that he was “nude.” The word “coat” signifies “an upper garment . . . a kind of linen blouse which fisherman used to wear at their work.” THAYER Other versions reflect this meaning of John 21:7, referring to “his outer garment,” NKJV “his overcoat,” DARBY “his tunic,” MRD “he was lightly clad,” NAB “his fisherman’s coat,” RWB “mantel,” TNT “his tunic (for he was stripped to the waist),” LIVING “fisherman’s shirt,” WEYMOUTH and “his upper garment (his fisherman’s coat, his outer tunic).” AMPLIFIED

I have taken the time to briefly mention the Scriptural perspective of nakedness because of the loose manner in which it is considered in our society. It is important not to read the Scripture within the context of the average American life and circumstance. All Scripture, with the exception of Luke’s writings (the Gospel of Luke and Acts), was written by Jews. All of it was written with the Jewish culture in mind, together with the promises given to them.

AND THREW DUST INTO THE AIR

“ . . . and threw dust into the air.” Other versions read, “tossing dust,” NASB “flinging dust,” NIV and “tossed handfuls of dust.” NLT

It is the manner of sin to grow “worse and worse.” That is, the more men “resist the truth,” the tighter the hold of iniquity becomes, and the more dominant Satan becomes. Sin sets a certain degeneracy into motion that can only be aborted by “the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness.”

Casting dust into the air was an indication of utter contempt, but of absolute frustration as well. When Shimei expressed his frustrating contempt for David, he threw stones at him “and cast dust” (2 Sam 16:13). There was really nothing else that he could do, and what is dust to a sword?

So in this text, even though these Jews were standing in front of the military barracks, they were so filled with hatred they tossed dust into the air. Like their own hatred, that very dust returned upon themselves.

There is a certain irrationality in iniquity that is arresting to consider. The further one is from God, and the more their opposition to His messengers, the more incoherent they become – particularly toward the things of God. They had been confronted by a messenger from God – one who was quite willing to share that marvelous message with them. This was not a message of condemnation, but one that announced that what God had promised throughout the centuries had now come to pass. It was a message of remission, justification, and everlasting hope. However, as marvelous as that message was, even allusions to it caused hatred to rise in the hearts of these people.

It is the manner of sin to grow “worse and worse” (2 Tim 3:3). That is, the more men “resist the truth” (2 Tim 3:8), the tighter the hold of iniquity becomes, and the more dominant Satan becomes. Sin sets a certain degeneracy into motion that can only be aborted by “the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness” (Tit 1:1).

Sin is not neutralized by human effort, trying to do better, or entering into a philosophical program of self-improvement. Judging from the popularity of recovery and improvement plans, one would think that the devil was actually honoring them, relinquishing his hold upon his victims. But the slightest inclination toward this imagination is turned in the direction of futility. Churches could not possibly be more wrong than when they adopt a man-made plan for recovering from sin. A plan is already in place, and no Divine allowance has been made for an additional plan, or an addendum to the one that is found in Christ Jesus. If, for example, these Asian Jews reject Paul and the Gospel he preached, no alternative plan will be presented to them. Although men tend to think that another messenger may do better, there is no support in Scripture for such a notion. If it can be established that God has sent a messenger to the people, whether it be Jeremiah to Israel, or Paul to the Asian Jews, if that message is rejected, things will only grow worse for the people.

These realities are being lived out in this text, and the record is to be taken quite seriously. In our day there is too much allowance for the rejection of the Gospel, and refusing to receive the “love of the truth.” When approaches and messages are adopted that have the smell of earth upon them, a departure from the faith has occurred. When men attempt to mingle the presentation of the Gospel with the wisdom of men, and cater to carnal appetites, the truth falls down in the streets (Isa 59:14). Such attempts are really not in consideration of the lost, but are rather the clear expression of contempt for the Lord Jesus Christ, whether that circumstance is known or not. They constitute a denial of Christ, because something is put ahead of Him – and He will not accept a subordinate position, for that contradicts who He is.

AN EFFORT IS MADE TO ARRIVE AT THE TRUTH

“ 24 The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging; that he might know wherefore they cried so against him.”

The captain gives no heed to the shouts and antics of the angry mob. He knows that his charge is not to please the people, but to honor the government by which he has been employed. Whether noble or ignoble, he acts out of a preference to be in the favor of Rome, not the Jews among whom he has been charged to maintain order.

This is in strict comportment with the rule of any government or military regime. An orderly government does not allow for the ignoring of the will of its head. How much more is this true of the government of the Lord, who is “over all” (Rom 9:5; 10:12; Eph 1:22). If the captain has difficulty fulfilling his duty in the present environment, he will simply remove himself to a place that is conducive to that fulfillment.

What the Roman captain is doing for Rome, Paul is doing for Jesus. He is yielding to his Ruler, carrying out His will in the place that is most conducive for that fulfillment. That is the manner of the Kingdom.

Through the prophet Daniel, God revealed that He would set up His Kingdom among men during a time of rulers who dominated the entire world. “And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever” (Dan 2:44). Four successive empires were established that were global: Babylon, Median-Persian, Greece, and Rome. It was during the latter that the government of God was formalized in this world. That government had always existed, though few among men discerned that reality. However, in Christ that government is focused. It involves governing the entire world with a mind toward the elect of God, who are being brought to glory by the King. Although the world is hostile, rejecting the people of God, through Christ He will protect them, nourish them, and bring them to stand before His throne without fault and filled with joy (Jude 1:24).

Such a government is certainly not depicted by democracy. In this government, human rights and preferences are not the point, but the will of the Lord. This is a will that extends into eternity, not being limited by time. If one can see it, this is why great global empires existed – to introduce men to the kind of rule that God maintains.

THE CAPTAIN COMMANDED HIM TO BE BROUGHT

“The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle . . .”

Here again we see the authority of a man’s word. It is carried out immediately, and without question. This is the kind of word to which a certain centurion referred when he sought for help from Jesus. “For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it” (Mat 8:9). In his thinking, this man made an association of that kind of authority with the Lord Jesus. Therefore he sent word to Jesus, “Lord, trouble not thyself: for I am not worthy that thou shouldest enter under my roof: Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee: but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed” (Luke 7:6-7).

As noble and preferable as the government of our country may appear, it does little in the matter of assisting us to comprehend the nature of the Kingdom of God. No small amount of theology reflects the culture of our place and time rather than the nature of God and Divine authority.

EXAMINED BY SCOURGING

When warring factions come together to discuss their differences, it may appear to be a noble effort – but it is not! Contention cannot be settled by discussion. There may be an apparent lessening of hostility, but the issue that caused the contention will not be resolved.

“ . . . and bade that he should be examined by scourging . . .” Other versions read, “flogged and questioned,” NIV “examined by flogging,” NRSV “put him to the test by whipping,” BBE “examined with the scourge,” CSB “scourged and tortured,” DOUAY “question Paul as they whipped, him,” GWN “interrogated under the lash,” NAB “interrogate Paul by beating him with a lash,” NET and “lashed with whips to make him confess his crime.” NLT

It is clear from this tactic that the captain, Lysias by name (Acts 24:7,22), had not understood what Paul said in Hebrew. This being the case, Paul was clearly more interested in reaching the Jews than in defending himself before the government official. This provides us with a kind of index as to how Paul thought. It was not in a self-centered manner.

Now the captain endeavors to extract from Paul the reason for the tumult, doing so by force, or the infliction of pain. Flogging was not a pleasant process, and was designed to be so uncomfortable that the person with a guilt-ridden conscience would finally divulge the matter to be known. Of course, with Paul, there was no just cause for a tumult being raised against him, and he knew it. That changes the entire circumstance.

THAT HE MIGHT KNOW

“ . . . that he might know wherefore they cried so against him.” Other versions read, “that he might know why they were shouting against him that way,” NASB and “find out the reason for this outcry against him.” NRSV

In order to arrive at the truth of the matter, the captain first had to remove Paul from the area of contention and rage. That is not a suitable environment in which to learn the truth of a matter. This is because “by pride cometh contention” (Prov 13:10), and no good can come from pride, for God withdraws from such people. As it is written, “These six things doth the LORD hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him: a proud look . . .” (Prov 6:16-17). Pride is like a chain that encircles or confines its victim (Psa 73:6). God will not suffer, or tolerate, the person with a “proud heart” (Psa 101:5). Because pride births contention, no good can come from it.

As regards this text, the truth could not be discovered in a contentious environment. The captain had to take Paul and withdraw him from that surrounding. That was the only way he could hope to arrive at the truth of the matter before him.

When warring factions come together to discuss their differences, it may appear to be a noble effort – but it is not! Contention cannot be settled by discussion. There may be an apparent lessening of hostility, but the issue that caused the contention will not be resolved. A classic example of this is found in the attempts of men to resolve the issue of divisions among professing Christians. Who is able to reckon up a reasonable assessment of the number of meetings devoted to this objective? And yet, I do not know of a single Christian faction in all of history that was exculpated by discussion. Often, such discussions actually result in further divisions. This is because the subjects of discussion always center in a human interpretation of revelation rather than revelation itself.

An Example

An example of this is found among certain brethren with whom I have had more than a passing acquaintance. It has to do with the acceptance of instrumental music in the worship of God. This matter is an issue in several other denominations as well. One body of people say it is unlawful to use instrumental music in any act of reverence toward God, or any assembly meeting in the name of Christ. The opposing bodies contend there is nothing wrong with such a practice, and allow it without any form of condemnation. In the group; with which I am familiar, this matter has been debated and discussed for over a century and a half. It has never really been settled. Both factions still exist, continuing to compete with one another. However, if all discussions on the subject outlawed the expression of any human opinion, no matter how valid it may appear, and insisted on confining the discussion to express statements made in Scripture concerning instrumental music and how God is said to have regarded it, the entire character of the discussions would be significantly altered.

This, of course, is not the approach that is taken, although both parties insist that they believe the Word of God. In fact, they do not argue about what God has said on the subject, but rather argue over what they perceive Him to have meant. The result – contention! And why is this so? Because men are not willing to let go of their own thoughts and words in order that they might embrace “the good word of God” (Heb 6:5).

Our Contemporaries Can Learn from this Roman Captain

There are some things to be learned from this brief account. It is like a mirror of greater issues regarding more profound realities.

- Seeing contention for what it really is – an arena in which good fruit will not be produced.
- Knowing when to leave the area of contention. When fruit is not realized, it is time to leave.
- Getting at the truth of a matter, no matter what is required to do so. For the captain, this issue was driven by a respect for the Roman government, and a certain fear of being found tolerating something it forbade. For the believer, it involves the cognition of the will of the Lord, and a fear of standing before Him not having honored His will.
- The sanctified process is one that targets the discovery of the truth itself, not the justification of a humanly contrived view of the truth.

While it is painful to acknowledge the presence of such a circumstance, there is not much evidence in our time of a genuine interest in the truth of God. As a result, Jesus ranks very low on the pole of practicality, and the salvation of God is not seen as absolutely essential. Too much room is made for the will of man.

AN APPEAL TO THE LAW OF THE LAND

“ 25 And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?”

It is said of Jesus that He is NOT a High Priest who cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities (Heb 4:15). Of course, that is addressing the matter of approaching difficulties, or temptations. Not by coincidence, that is the precise circumstance in which Paul finds himself.

Now they commence to prepare Paul for the examination by scourging. It is important to perceive the composure of Paul during this process. Scourging was a painful procedure, and some never did recover from it. For Paul, there could have been painful recollections of previous beatings he had endured, to say nothing of him being stoned at Lystra. For those who are unduly impacted by the past, the prospects of yet another beating could have been most disconcerting. Further, at this time Paul did not have fellow believers close to him whom he could ask for prayer. This is a trial he would have to bear alone, so to speak. If he was to be encouraged, he would have to do like David of old. As it is written, “And David was greatly distressed; for the people spake of stoning him, because the soul of all the people was grieved, every man for his sons and for his daughters: but David encouraged himself in the LORD his God ” (1 Sam 30:6).

There is an approach to the difficulties of life that is being marketed in our day that does not emphasize believers building up themselves on their most holy faith (Jude 1:20). Those with what is referred to as “struggles” are actually taught to seek out others who have those same difficulties, drawing strength from them. It all appears to be an acceptable approach, but the Lord Jesus Himself is strangely absent from such plans. It is said of Jesus that He is NOT a High Priest who cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities (Heb 4:15). Of course, that is addressing the matter of approaching difficulties, or temptations. Not by coincidence, that is the precise circumstance in which Paul finds himself. Relying upon the Lord, he will be directed through this whole affair, knowing what he ought to do. In the midst of preparation for this beating, he will be characterized by a sound mind, wisdom, and boldness to speak the right thing.

If all of this seems a bit irrelevant, it must be remembered that this kind of scenario is not at all common in the American church. Stumbling and failure are occurring throughout the professed church, even though it has engaged in all manner of recovery programs – programs that depend upon suffering peers instead of a compassionate High Priest. This is not an innocent situation, and those feigned teachers who promote that kind of approach to temptation and suffering have drawn attention away from Jesus instead of to Him. I will wax bold and affirm that Paul could not have endured such occasions if he had addressed them with the methodologies being foisted upon the church today. This will be confirmed by his conduct through this whole incident. We are being exposed to a man who is actually living in fellowship with Christ Jesus (1 Cor 1:9).

THEY BOUND HIM WITH THONGS

“And as they bound him with thongs . . .” Other versions read, “and they stretched him out to flog him,” NIV “and they tied him UP with thongs,” NRSV “they put leather bands around him,” BBE “stretching him out with things,” CJB “stretched him forward with thongs,” DARBY “stretched him out for the whips,” ESV “had Paul stretch out to tie him to the whipping post with the straps,” GWN “stretched him out with thongs.” NAS

Robertson says the literal translation is, “when they stretched him forward.” WORD PICTURES The pictures displayed on this page show what was involved in tying Paul with thongs. These were used to stretch Paul out, so the totality of his back could be exposed to the beating that was intended to follow.

PAUL SAID TO THE CENTURION

“Paul said unto the centurion that stood by . . .” Other versions read, “Paul said to the centurion standing there,” NIV and “the centurion who stood by him,” DOUAY and “the centurion who stood over him,” MRD

This was apparently the officer who was immediately in charge of the beating. He was probably to see that it was administered properly, and within the confines of Roman law. Notice the composure with which Paul now speaks, and the alertness that is evident in him. These are the effects of faith.

IS THIS LAWFUL?

“Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?” Other versions read, “Is it legal for you to flog a Roman citizen who hasn't even been found guilty?” NIV “Is it the law for you to give blows to a man who is a Roman and has not been judged?” BBE “Is it legal for you to whip a man who is a Roman citizen and hasn't even had a trial?” CJB and “Is it legal for you to lash a man who is a Roman citizen without a proper trial?” NET

Paul said this AS he was being stretched out for the flogging. That requires an alert, sensitive, and cultured spirit. Even under great duress, he is able to recognize an opportunity – a means through which the Lord of glory can work. His faith had confirmed to him that the Lord sometimes uses earthly dignitaries to minister to His people. Pharaoh’s daughter raised Moses (Ex 2:5-10). Jethro, a heathen priest of Midian, ministered to Moses (Ex 3:1; 4:1-18). An Egyptian Pharaoh exalted Joseph from prison to the throne (Gen 41:41-43). Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Darius, and Cyrus exalted Daniel to a place of political prominence (Dan 2:48; 5:29; 6:1-3; 28). Nebuchadnezzar promoted Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, after recognizing God had delivered them (Dan 3:30). King Artaxerxes assisted Nehemiah in returning and rebuilding the wall of Jerusalem (Neh 2:1-9). Cyrus was used of God to restore the Temple (Ezra 1:2-7).

All of this comes under the general statement, “And the earth helped the woman” (Rev 12:16). It also confirms that the Lord is, in fact, “the Governor among the nations” (Psa 22:28), using whom He will to accomplish His purposes. He has been known to use worldly kings to chastise His people (1 Chron 6:15), as well as to bless them, as in the case of Joseph (Gen 47:5-7).

A word also ought to be said concerning God's notation of injustice.

- “Defend the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy” (Psa 82:3).
- “By me kings reign, and princes decree justice ” (Prov 8:15).
- “To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the LORD than sacrifice” (Prov 21:3).
- “ None calleth for justice , nor any pleadeth for truth: they trust in vanity, and speak lies; they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity” (Isa 59:4).
- “Thus saith the LORD; Execute ye judgment and righteousness , and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor: and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow, neither shed innocent blood in this place. For if ye do this thing indeed, then shall there enter in by the gates of this house kings sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, he, and his servants, and his people. But if ye will not hear these words, I swear by myself, saith the LORD, that this house shall become a desolation” (Jer 22:3-5).
- “Forasmuch therefore as your treading is upon the poor , and ye take from him burdens of wheat: ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them; ye have planted pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink wine of them. For I know your manifold transgressions, and your mighty sins: they afflict the just, they take a bribe , and they turn aside the poor in the gate from their right” (Amos 5:11-12).

Isaiah affirmed that the lack of justice indicated that truth had fallen in the street: “And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter” (Isa 59:14). Where injustice prevails, whether in America or in a nation that openly avows another god, it is because truth has not been faithfully proclaimed.

In our text, it is ironic that injustice was found among a people who had been cultured in Divine manners, while justice was carried by those who were not so blessed. The only way to account for such a circumstance is to recognize that God was governing the whole situation.

You remember that when Mordecai, Esther's uncle, admonished her to go before the king [who was her husband] and plead for the Jews, he said, “For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place ; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?” (Esth 4:14).

There is a view of God that affirms He does not require moral conduct from the wicked, or those who are not in covenant with Him. However, this is not the truth, as Scripture confirms.

- Even though Abel was the appointed seed, Cain was held accountable for his injustice toward Abel (Gen 4:9-12).
- The world of Noah's day had no covenant with God, yet was destroyed because it was given over to violence (Gen 6:11-13).
- The Egyptians were punished for treating the Jews unjustly (Ex 7:4; 12:12).
- The Amalekites were judged for their unjust treatment of Israel when they were journeying to the promised land It is essential that all men be wise and moral in their conduct, for that is something the God of heaven requires. Although it is a much lower level than “the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus,” there are just laws in the world

- The Edomites were judged for their unjust dealing against Israel (Amos 1:6-11; Mal 13-4).
- Nebuchadnezzar was judged for not giving glory to God (Dan 4:30-33).
- Belshazzar was judged for drinking from vessels that had been dedicated to the Lord (Dan 5:22-23).
- Herod was rebuked for taking his brother's wife (Matt 14:3-4).
- Another Herod was judged for not giving glory to God (Acts 12:21-23).

Those who imagine that the moral bent of a nation, or the flagrant disregard of the living God by its leaders, are of no consequence, need to think again. God is not indifferent to such circumstances – and they are a growing phenomenon in our country.

It is essential that all men be wise and moral in their conduct, for that is something the God of heaven requires. Although it is a much lower level than “the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus,” there are just laws in the world to which men can appeal – such as Paul is doing in this text. These are things described as being “honest in the sight of all men” (Rom 12:17; 2 Cor 8:21), and things “approved of men” (Rom 14:18).

When professed believers are guilty of things even the world rejects, they have fallen into deep sin (1 Cor 5:1).

THIS MAN IS A ROMAN

“ 26 When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman. 27 When the chief captain came, and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea.”

Here again we see the Lord working all things together for the ultimate good of Paul (Rom 8:28). This will require the alert and intelligent involvement of Paul himself. God does not always work in the background without any involvement of the ones being delivered. Even a man with a withered hand is asked to stretch it forth (Matt 12:13), and a blind man was required to go and wash clay from his eyes at a certain pool (John 9:7). God's people must not be naive and overly simplistic about the working of the Lord. He has provided us with enough examples to form sound concepts of deliverance and help.

Noah had to personally build the ark in which he would escape the destruction of the flood, then fill it with pairs of all the animal species. Only then could he and his family enter into safety (Gen 6:14-22). There are many records of military victories by the people of God that required extensive fighting (Ex 17:10-13; 1 Sam 7:11), and precious few where they were granted the privilege of beholding the enemy struck down without their personal activity (2 Kgs 19:35; 2 Chron 20:17-25).

The Israelites were required to do a number of things before they were delivered from Egypt. Even though that deliverance was described as them being carried out “on eagles' wings” (Ex 19:4), they did not literally fly out of the land of bondage. They walked out, carrying all of their possessions, taking their infants and little ones with them, and herding their flocks as well. Before they walked out, they had to kill the Passover lamb, put its blood upon the side posts and upper post of the doors of their houses, cook the lamb a certain way, and eat it with haste (Ex 12:5-11). There have been deliverances that did not require a lot of activity from the ones being delivered – like Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego from the fiery furnace (Dan 3:20-26), and Daniel from the lion's den (Dan 6:16-27). But even in those deliverances, there was some bold activity that preceded the incarceration from which they were delivered.

God's people are required to walk by faith. Only then will they be able to identify when they are involved in deliverances, and recognize the appropriate thing to do. Once again, all of this is being lived out in our text. The book of Acts is not the record of heroes, but of those who lived by faith and walked in the Spirit – things that are common to all who are in Christ Jesus.

WHEN THE CENTURION HEARD THAT

“When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying . . .”

Notice the immediacy with which this centurion acted. The beating was not carried out, but additional information was immediately conveyed to the chief military man. What caused all of this to occur? Was this merely a display of military subordination and due honor? Is anyone naive enough to think that this kind of protocol was always followed? Pilate did not display such consideration when the Son of God stood before him, nor did Herod when he also was confronted with the Lord. While Roman law did provide a framework for such consideration, we are not told that it was always honored when dealing with the disciples of Jesus. Pilate did not hesitate to kill some Jews, mingling their blood with their sacrifices (Lk 13:1), and that certainly was a miscarriage of justice.

Once again, this was the Lord, causing the events to take a new direction in favor of His own apostle.

TAKE HEED WHAT THOU DOEST

“ . . . Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman. . .” Other versions read, “Take care what you do,” NKJV “What are you about to do?” NASB “Do you realize what you are doing?” CJB and “Do you know what you are doing?” IE

Even in civil law, there are occasions when a person occupying a higher position must be informed that what he is doing is questionable, to say the least. Thoughtless submission is not necessarily right. Even when there is no question about the necessity of carrying out the edict of a superior, if there is a sound basis for objecting, that objection ought to be stated – just as it was here. The truth of the matter is that there was some additional information that was critical to this, and it was not common knowledge.

I have been in academic circles, lowly by way of comparison, where this kind of liberty was not granted to the students. There is no realm in which the right to affirm the truth is out of order. Notwithstanding, I have been in church board meetings, where there was less of an interest in the truth than existed in the barracks in which Paul was standing. Such things ought not to be! In fact, God Almighty will use this kind of setting to deliver His servant.

CONCERNING ROMAN LAW

Cicero says that the body of every Roman citizen was inviolable. “The Porcian law,” he adds, “has removed the rod from the body of every Roman citizen.” And in his celebrated oration against Verres, he says, A Roman citizen was beaten with rods in the forum, O judges; where, in the meantime, no groan, no other voice of this unhappy man, was heard except the cry, ‘I am a Roman citizen’! Take away this hope,” he says, “take away this defense from the Roman citizens, let there be no protection in the cry I am a Roman citizen, and the praetor can with impunity inflict any punishment on him who declares himself a citizen of Rome, etc.”

ALBERT BARNES, ACTS

The Valerian law forbade any Roman citizen to be bound. The Porcian law forbade any to be beaten with rods. And by the same law the liberty of a Roman citizen was never put in the power of the licitor. It is a transgression of the law to bind a Roman citizen: it is wickedness to scourge him. And the illegality of the proceedings of these magistrates was farther evident in their condemning and punishing them unheard. This was a gross violation of a common maxim in the Roman law. Many who are accused of evil may be absolved, when the cause is heard; but unheard, no man can be condemned.”

ADAM CLARK, ACTS, CICERO, Orat. pro Rabirio, Verrem, Orat. 5

TELL ME, ART THOU A ROMAN?

“When the chief captain came, and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea.” Other versions read, “Tell me, are you a Roman citizen?” NIV

Knowing that Roman citizens were vouchsafed unique privileges, as is ideally true of every form of civil government, the captain at once set out to confirm if Paul was, in fact, a Roman citizen. Remember, at the first, he thought Paul was an Egyptian (Acts 21:36). If Paul answers in the affirmative, that will change this whole situation.

You may recall that a similar incident took place in Philippi – except in that case Paul and Silas were actually beaten. Still not knowing that they had been dealing with Roman citizens, the political magistrates had sent word to the keeper of the jail to let Paul and Silas go in peace. Having heard the message Paul replied, “They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out” (Acts 16:37). As soon as the officials were told what Paul said, “they were afraid when they heard that they were Romans. Then they came and pleaded with them and brought them out, and asked them to depart from the city” NKJV (Acts 16:38-39).

Note, Paul did not say he was not a citizen of Rome, but rather that he was a citizen of heaven – although that is really what he was. It is quite true that in this world we are “strangers and pilgrims” (1 Pet 2:11), having our citizenship “in heaven, from which we eagerly wait for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ” NKJV (Phil 3:20). However, this was not the time to make an appeal to that unalterable fact. This was an occasion when Paul was standing before men who were fulfilling a God-ordained office, even as he did in Philippi. By Divine edict, worldly rulers are not intended to be a “terror to good works, but to the evil” (Rom 13:2) – and Paul had done no evil work. One of the primary purposes of civil authority is to “execute wrath upon him that doeth evil” (Rom 13:4). Not only had Paul refrained from doing evil, he had not conducted his life unwisely, or without giving due consideration to the civil laws of the land. He was not an insurrectionist like Barabbas.

While this was not a major area of Paul’s life, he was familiar with the laws of the empire of Rome, and could therefore use them appropriately. This was also a benefit of following the mandates of the King of kings, who inspired the following statements.

- “My son, fear thou the LORD and the king: and meddle not with them that are given to change” (Prov 24:21).
- “Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bedchamber: for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter” (Eccl 10:20).
- “Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor” (Rom 13:7).
- “Honor the king” (1 Pet 2:17).
- It is said of wicked people who feign themselves to be representatives of God, “But chiefly them that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government.

Presumptuous are they, selfwilled, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities” (2 Pet 2:10). And again, “Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities” (Jude 1:8).

- The people of God are not to be noted for breaking the Law, despising government, withholding their taxes, and speaking against dignities. This is because God is involved in the raising up of political rulers – even when they are not commendable people. Daniel told Nebuchadnezzar, “This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones: to the intent that the living may know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will , and setteth up over it the basest of men” (Dan 4:17). The psalmist affirmed, “For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south. But God is the judge: He putteth down one, and setteth up another ” (Psa 75:7). God even said of the despot Nebuchadnezzar, “And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant; and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him” (Jer 27:6).

- When the Lord was instructing Israel concerning the coming Babylonian captivity, He instructed them bring their “necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him, and his people” (Jer 27:11). Even after they were carried away captive, He told them , “And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the LORD for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace” (Jer 29:7). All of this took place under the administration of the Almighty. In chastening His people for their disobedience, He raised up Nebuchadnezzar, then later put him down for going too far.

When navigating through trials, there is no substitute for a knowledge of these things. In our trials as well as in our blessings, we are being oriented for glory.

In trial, we are being severed more completely from this present evil world. In blessing, we are gaining an acquaintance with an “eternal inheritance.” In all of these things we are to be “wise as serpents, and harmless as doves” (Matt 10:16). It is never right for the saints to be ignorant.

PAUL WAS FREEBORN

“ 28 And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born.”

Roman citizenship was considered a privilege – particularly since Rome was ruling the world. Special privileges were given to its citizens, as is the case with every civilized country.

WITH A GREAT SUM I OBTAINED THIS FREEDOM

“ And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom . . . ” . Other versions read, “I obtained this citizenship,” NKJV and “I acquired this citizenship.” NASB

The word “freedom” refers to political freedom which, in this case, is synonymous with citizenship. The Greek word from which it is translated is politei,an , which means “citizenship.” Freedom, in this case, means free to advantage from the special benefits of citizenship. It is not a word that equates with license, or the right to do whatever one pleases. It is “freedom” as compared with slavery, being vassals, or someone in bondage.

I WAS FREEBORN

“ . . . And Paul said, But I was free born.” Other versions read, “born a citizen,” NKJV “Roman born,” ASV “Roman rights . . . I had them by birth” BBE “a citizen by birth.” ESV

Paul was not born in the city of Rome itself, but within the Roman empire, which included the city of Tarsus, a city that operated under its authority, and was subject to its requirements.

THE PARALLEL IN THE SPIRIT

The language of this verse contains a wonderful parallel in the Spirit. Many practical aspects of the Christian life are now being represented as though they could be purchased from men who market their lifeless rules and disciples to the professing church. However, those who are in Christ have access to the Fount of all wisdom and knowledge, and it is their's for the asking. No person who is in Christ Jesus does not have these privileges, for they are part of the birthright of those who are born again.

Expressions of this Birth

Just as surely as Paul was born a citizen of the Roman Empire, with all of the privileges of that empire, so those who are born again have access to everything that is in Christ Jesus. Ponder the various expressions of this birth that are found in the words of Jesus and those who proclaimed His truth.

- CHILDREN OF GOD. “Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God ” (Matt 5:9).
- CHILDREN OF YOUR FATHER WHICH IS IN HEAVEN. “That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust” (Mat 5:45).
- BORN . . . OF GOD. “But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: Which were born , not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God” (John 1:12-13).
- BORN AGAIN. “Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again , he cannot see the kingdom of God” (John 3:3).
- “Ye must be born again ” (John 3:7).
- BORN OF THE SPIRIT. “The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit ” (John 3:8).
- THE SONS OF GOD. “But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God , even to them that believe on his name” (John 1:12).
- THE CHILDREN OF GOD. “And not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad” (John 11:52).
- NEWNESS OF LIFE. “Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life ” (Rom 6:4).
- NEWNESS OF SPIRIT. “But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit , and not in the oldness of the letter” (Rom 7:6).
- A NEW CREATURE [CREATION]. “Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature : old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new” (2 Cor 5:17).
- BORN AFTER THE SPIRIT. “But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now” (Gal 4:29).
- A NEW CREATURE [CREATION]. “For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature ” (Gal 6:15).

• CREATED IN CHRIST JESUS. “For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them” (Eph 2:10).

• THE NEW MAN . . . CREATED. “And that ye put on the new man , which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness” (Eph 4:24).

• THE NEW MAN . . . RENEWED. “And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him ” (Col 3:10).

• REGENERATION. “Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration , and renewing of the Holy Ghost” (Titus 3:5).

• BEGOTTEN AGAIN. “Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to His abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead” (1 Pet 1:3).

• BEING BORN AGAIN. “Being born again , not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever” (1 Pet 1:23).

• BORN OF HIM. “If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of Him ” (1 John 2:29).

Being born again constitutes one a citizen of heaven. Such a marvelous citizenship cannot be obtained any other way. It certainly cannot be purchased with silver and gold. In fact, the people of God are themselves purchased, and are citizens of heaven, being now “strangers and pilgrims” on the earth. Heavenly citizenship is now primary, and trumps all earthly associations.

BORN OF GOD. “Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for His seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God ” (1 John 3:9).

• “Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God , and knoweth God” (1 John 4:7).

• BEGOTTEN OF HIM. “Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God : and every one that loveth Him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of Him ” (1 John 5:1).

• BORN OF GOD . . . BEGOTTEN OF GOD. “For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith” (1 John 5:4).

• “We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not” (1 John 5:18).

There are thirty-four statements that affirm a new kind of life – a life that is begotten by God and birthed by His power. Every description of it is precise and without ambiguity.

- It is the result of God’s own work.
- It is new and not part of the natural order.
- It involves a new image and new capacities.
- It is related to the work of the Spirit.
- It is associated with purity, or washing.
- It is associated with not sinning.
- It is associated with overcoming the world.

- It is related to the love of the brethren.
- It is an absolute necessity.
- It is associated with believing Jesus is the Christ.
- It is associated with righteousness and holiness.
- It is associated with a walk, or manner of life.
- It is a new creation.
- It is a regeneration: i.e. a new lineage and a new kind of life.

Being born again constitutes one a citizen of heaven. Such a marvelous citizenship cannot be obtained any other way. It certainly cannot be purchased with silver and gold. In fact, the people of God are themselves purchased (1 Cor 6:20), and are citizens of heaven (Phil 3:20-21), being now “strangers and pilgrims” on the earth (1 Pet 2:11). Heavenly citizenship is now primary, and trumps all earthly associations.

THE RIGHTS OF HEAVENLY CITIZENSHIP

In Christ Jesus we have all of the rights of heavenly citizenship. These rights are extensive and thorough. Nothing that is required for life and godliness can be acquired from any other source – it is all found in our identity with heaven (2 Pet 1:3). Ranking high on those privileges are access to God (Eph 3:12), an Intercessor in heaven (Rom 8:34; Heb 7:25), and an Intercessor within (Rom 8:26-27). In Christ we are authorized, so to speak, to “come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need” (Heb 4:16). “All the treasures of wisdom and knowledge,” hidden in Christ, are available to all of the citizens (Col 2:3). “Every good and perfect gift” comes down from the homeland (James 1:17).

All of the citizens of heaven are born free. They are free to come to God (Heb 10:22), free to resist the devil (James 4:7), and free to abstain from fleshly lusts that war against the soul (1 Pet 2:11). They are no longer debtors to the flesh, to fulfill its lusts (Rom 8:12). They are no longer the servants of sin (Rom 6:17), for they have been “made free from sin” (Rom 6:18). They are free from the encumbrances of “the law of sin and death” (Rom 8:2). Further, Christ has made us free “for freedom” NASB (Gal 5:1).

Those who hawk methods, techniques, and plans for recovery are blotches on the landscape of spiritual life. They are not telling the truth when they ascribe recovering power and stabilizing effects to their plans. All of their plans have come from the earth, which is the land of bondage. When they belch out claims of secret sources of strength and victory that can only be found in their manuals, they have lied to us. The citizens of heaven have not been shorted in any aspect of life.

There are a variety of things being said within the Christian community today that are a reproach to Christ. Things are being assigned a primary role in spiritual life that have not been given that designation by the living God. Some are teaching that obedience is the key. Others affirm that prayer is the secret. Still other say that living in a continual state of brokenness is the means by which we tap into Divine power. Some are teaching that the secret to a strong spiritual life is fasting. The new false teachers are saying that being familiar with our Jewish roots is the key factor. Some are saying that knowing the Greek language is the guarantee of understanding the Scriptures. There are even those who say witnessing is the thing that causes spiritual life to mature.

All of these things are related to heavenly citizenship, and are rights that are vouchsafed to those so described. They are a classic commentary of what it means to be “complete” in Christ (Col 2:10).

The thing that all of these approaches have in common is the minimization of faith. Even though grace is said to be accessed “through faith” (Eph 2:8), these spiritual merchants have plans that can get grace by other means. In spite of the clear declaration that faith “is the victory that overcometh the world” (1 John 5:4), the cause for victory is being ascribed to other things. The Spirit witnesses that “without faith it is impossible to please God” (Heb 11:6). It does not say without these other things it is impossible to please God. And why not? Because faith encompasses and superintends all of the essentials. It is only as you obey, pray, fast, etc. by faith that any of those activities are even valid. None of them are an end of themselves. None of them make you a child of God, for we are “all the children of God by faith” (Gal 3:26). None of them can justify, for we are “justified by faith” (Rom 5:1). In fact, “whatsoever is not of faith is sin” (Rom 14:23). We “live by faith” (Rom 1:17), stand “by faith” (2 Cor 1:24), “walk by faith” (2 Cor 5:7), and our hearts are “purified by faith” (Acts 15:9).

All of these things are related to heavenly citizenship, and are rights that are vouchsafed to those so described. They are a classic commentary of what it means to be “complete” in Christ (Col 2:10). “Complete” means nothing is lacking in Christ. No needed resource can be found apart from Him.

AFRAID OF BEING UNJUST

“ 29 Then straightway they departed from him which should have examined him: and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and because he had bound him.”

Upon hearing that Paul is a Roman citizen, the whole circumstance is altered. One minute he is being prepared to be beaten, and the next he is freed. Again, this is God working all things together for the good of Paul. He not only emboldens Paul, granting him wisdom to speak appropriately, but turns the heart of the captain. No further proof is required than the testimony of Paul himself. How could that have taken place without the management of the Lord? Before this point, the word of Paul had not been sufficient. Paul had already told the captain that he was a citizen of Tarsus, which was under the dominion of Rome (21:39). Now, however, the matter seemed perfectly clear to the captain, and it was upon the word of Paul that it was established. The Lord had turned the heart of that man!

THEY DEPARTED FROM HIM

“Then straightway they departed from him which should have examined him . . .” Other versions read, “those who were about to examine him withdrew,” NKJV “immediately let go of him,” NASB “those who were about to question him withdrew immediately,” NIV “those who were about to put him to the test went away,” BBE and “Instantly those who were about to examine and flog him withdrew from him.” AMPLIFIED

Remember what was about to happen. Paul was going to be examined by flogging. That is, he was going to be beaten until he submitted a satisfactory answer to the captain concerning what had taken place. He had been tied up, and the administrators of the flogging were ready to begin their grisly work. Yet, immediately they withdraw because of enlightenment concerning the situation before them. The next phrase suggests they were directed by the captain to do this, but the immediacy of their response is the thing to be noted. It indicates a situation that was being governed by the Lord, even though those involved were not aware of it.

THE CHIEF CAPTAIN WAS AFRAID

“ . . . and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and because he had bound him.” Other versions read, “the commander himself was alarmed when he realized that he had put Paul, a Roman citizen, in chains,” NIV and “the commandant also was frightened, for he realized that [Paul] was a Roman citizen and he had put him in chains.” AMPLIFIED

Note that this is something the captain “knew” – and his knowledge was purely upon the testimony of Paul. Paul had submitted no documents, nor had he called for a lawyer, or someone of note who could testify to the truth of what he said. Yet, upon the basis of his testimony the captain not only knew that Paul was a Roman citizen, he also knew that he himself had broken the law in having Paul bound with chains. That was something worthy of fear, for the Romans did not tolerate insubordination or their officials to be ignorant of the law and how they were applying it.

Admittedly, these circumstances sound strange to our culture, for it is one in which insubordination is tolerated and serious errors are overlooked.

THE SPIRITUAL DIMENSION

This same kind of reaction was addressed in a word delivered to Israel. When they prepared to enter into Canaan to possess it, God gave them this word: “Rise ye up, take your journey, and pass over the river Arnon: behold, I have given into thine hand Sihon the Amorite, king of Heshbon, and his land: begin to possess it, and contend with him in battle. This day will I begin to put the dread of thee and the fear of thee upon the nations that are under the whole heaven, who shall hear report of thee, and shall tremble, and be in anguish because of thee” (Deu 2:24-25). In this instance, the fear and dread was provoked by the keen awareness that God Almighty stood with Israel. With the captain of our text, the fear was of the Roman officials – yet it was sufficient to provoke a change in his conduct.

One dreadful thing that a carnal church does is this: it removes any notion of such a body of people being identified with the Lord of glory. This is precisely why political officials are not afraid to conduct themselves in opposition to the Word of the Lord, and look with disdain upon the law of the Lord. Should these people ever be convinced of God’s identity with believers, it would alter the landscape of society. However, when the professed church conducts itself in contrariety to the God they profess to worship, the ungodly become more bold in their opposition.

CONFINED, YET FREE

“ 30 On the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them.”

The fear of the captain did not provoke him to drop the case. He rather approached it in a different manner. Keeping order in Jerusalem was his charge, and he could not get away from that duty. However, in the doing of it, he could not work in violation of the law of the land.

When men are as earnest about obtaining a knowledge of the truth that makes men free as this captain was about learning the truth about the Jewish allegations, the truth will soon be found.

THE CERTAIN WHEREOF HE WAS ACCUSED

“On the morrow, because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews . . .” Other versions read, “wanted to know for certain why he was accused of the Jews,” NKJV “find out exactly why Paul was being accused,” NIV and “know the real reason why the Jews accused him.” RSV

This captain was carrying out his duty, part of which was knowing the reason for the tumult. He sensed he had not been exposed to all of the facts needed to make a sound judgment. He also knew that he was not at liberty to force Paul to divulge the reason by having him whipped. Therefore, within the constraints of the law, he now makes an effort to get at the truth.

An Application

We have an example here of some of the involvements in seeking to arrive at a knowledge of the truth. The quest for truth must be accomplished within a lawful environment. A person, for example, who seeks the truth while living in contradiction of it, is engaged in a vain quest. Men may tritely say that an immoral person is seeking the truth. That, however, is virtually impossible to confirm, for it violates everything we know about the revelation of truth. The acknowledgment of the truth, for example, must be preceded by repentance, which is “to the acknowledging of the truth” (2 Tim 2:25).

When men are as earnest about obtaining a knowledge of the truth that makes men free as this captain was about learning the truth about the Jewish allegations, the truth will soon be found.

HE LOOSED HIM FROM HIS BANDS

“ . . . he loosed him from his bands . . .” Other versions read, “released him from his bonds” NKJV

The loosing took place the next day – “on the morrow.” Paul was, then, kept prisoner over the night. This was no doubt because of the Jews, who were raging with hatred. In this case, remaining a prisoner was for his safety.

While the chains that had been placed upon him had remained, apparently the thongs with which he had been tied were previously removed, for they applied exclusively to him being examined by flogging. Paul was a prisoner, but like Joseph, he was not an oppressed one.

A FAIR HEARING WILL TAKE PLACE

“ . . . and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them.” Other versions read, “the chief priests and all the Sanhedrin,” NIV and “the chief priests and the entire council.” NRSV

To this point, the “chief priests” and “council” have not been mentioned in association with this case. In fact, this is the first mentioning of “the chief priests” since Acts 9:21, and the first time “the council” is mentioned since Acts 6:15. Originally this tumult was stirred up by “the Jews which were of Asia,” who had “stirred up all the people” (21:27). It is not made known whether or not this included all the chief priests and council, although that was quite possible. The “chief priests” were identified with the Temple, and were probably present at the time the tumult started. The “council” had to be convened, for they did not travel about in company with one another.

This gathering was an official one, convened to arrive at the truth concerning allegations brought against Paul. Apparently the captain assumed they would be knowledgeable of the situation.

Even the world senses the need for being reasonable. It is surely uncomely for any form of unreasonableness to be found among those professing allegiance to God, including “the Jew first, and also the Greek.”

A Prisoner, Yet Free

And thus we have Paul depicted as a prisoner who is free. What a perspective! And yet, that is precisely how the believer is set forth in Scripture. Concerning servitude to sin and the flesh, those in Christ have been set free. No allegiance is owed to the flesh. Yet, from another perspective, we groan under the weight of mortality, crying out, “O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?” (Rom 7:24). In a sense, we are trapped in a restricting and vile body. And yet, we are not confined there. We can take the wings of faith, and fly away, finding rest and solitude in Christ Jesus. Blessed are the people who know how to live under such restrictions, availing themselves of the rights of heavenly citizenship.

CONCLUSION

The sequence of events with which we have just dealt is filled with evidences of the hand of the Lord and Divine direction. This record is intended to bolster the confidence of those who live by faith. God can marshal earthly and heavenly personalities to come to the aid of His people. He can cause men to cease to beat His people, as He did when the Jews saw the Roman captain coming. He can empower his servants to speak up in intimidating circumstances, as he did Paul. He can give those who are not in Christ an inclination to protect the holy people, as he did in the captain. He can give his servants wisdom to appeal to areas of right and wrong that are recognized by those who are not reconciled to God. He can cause an appointed beating to not be carried out. He can move an unbeliever to want to get at the truth of a matter. He can cause bonds to be loosed by those who are themselves strangers to the Kingdom of God.

In these, and other, ways, we see how the Lord works all things together for the good of those who love Him and are the called according to His purpose. Faith takes hold of these realities and triumphs over the world, doing so in the midst of opposition.

Lesson #93

PAUL TURNS THE PHARISEES AND SADDUCEES AGAINST EACH OTHER

“ 23:1 "And Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day. 2 And the high priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth. 3 Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall: for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law? 4 And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high priest? 5 Then said Paul, I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest: for it is written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people. 6 But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question. 7 And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided. 8 For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both. 9 And there arose a great cry: and the scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, We find no evil in this man: but if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, let us not fight against God. 10 And when there arose a great dissension, the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle." (Acts 21:1-10)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

Paul commences a further explanation to "the chief priests and all their council." No sooner had he commenced his defense, and the high priest commanded that he be smitten on the mouth. Paul responded, and a brief dialog followed between him and those standing by. He then perceived a mixed company before him, consisting of Pharisees and Sadducees, who by no means were agreed in their view of the things of God. Immediately he spoke in such a manner as to set these theological opponents at a variance with one another, pointing out that he was a Pharisee, and had been called into question concerning “the hope and resurrection of the dead.” Because this was an area of controversy for these groups, confusion ensued. Ultimately this resulted in Paul being removed from the unruly crowd, and again taken by force into the “castle,” or military barracks, therefore being afforded temporary protection.

THE MINISTRY OF TROUBLE

Throughout this entire episode we are beholding the outworking of spiritual life. Faith, which is the pulse of spiritual life, is able to respond appropriately to trouble as well peace, and to hardship as well as blessing. In fact, it causes the trusting one to go deeper into the well of the water of life, drawing refreshment when all does not appear to be going well. However, none of this is done passively, or without the involvement of the one who has faith.

While we are in this world, from the standpoint of the flesh, trouble is an inevitability. This is because we are in a cursed world that is in the throes of death, groaning and travailing in anticipation of the manifestation of the sons of God (Rom8:19-21). However, there is more to trouble than this. There is also trouble and tribulation that come to us because we are the sons of God. Consequently, difficulty, inconvenience, pain, and sorrow should not surprise us, much less overwhelm us. This is often trouble that comes because of our faith, and it is as sure as the trouble that comes because we are in a cursed and temporal environment.

Jesus said to His apostles, who are the most privileged and significant class in His body (1 Cor 12:28), “In the world ye shall have tribulation : but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world” (John 16:33). He had earlier explained to them, “If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you” (John 15:19). Make no mistake about this, those who deliberately hurt and afflict the people of God do so because they hate them. Therefore believers are told, “Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you” (1 John 3:13).

There is a ministry that opposition and affliction has for the people of God. We are to know “tribulation brings about perseverance” NASB (Rom 5:3). God works to perfect His people within the context of suffering – suffering that results from their faith. As it is written, “ But the God of all grace , who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you” (1 Pet 5:10). Notice that this is accomplished by “the God of all grace.” Trouble, affliction, suffering, etc, prove to be an excellent context in which the grace of God can effectively work.

Now, it is one thing to have a pedantic acquaintance with these facts. It is quite another thing to perceive them in the Scriptural accounts of various saints. Think of the people who were perfected in the surrounding of trouble and ungodliness. The list is quite impressive, including saints like Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Joshua, David, Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, and all of the prophets. In the book of Acts we are introduced to others like Peter and John, the apostles, Stephen, Paul, Barnabas, Silas, and several others.

Those who have developed and perpetrated a theology that strives for the approval of the world and its citizens have led the people astray.

Those who have developed and perpetrated a theology that strives for the approval of the world and its citizens have led the people astray. Their approach to theology and the understanding of the Scripture contradicts the very purpose of God, which includes not only the Divine objective, but HOW it is carried out and brought to completion. Any approach to ministering that attempts to make the message palatable to those who are alienated from God, as opposed to those who are seeking Him, is off-center, to say the very least. At the heart of such approaches is the ignoring of the Lord Jesus Himself, who is the sole means of approaching God (John 14:6).

PAUL’S RECORDED TROUBLES

In Summation

- Beatings, floggings, being stoned, shipwrecks, isolation, frequent journeys, perils, weariness, painfulness, going without food, cold and exposure (2 Cor 11:24-27).
- Trouble on every side, perplexed, persecuted, cast down (2 Cor 4:8-9).
- Hungered, thirsted, lacked adequate clothing, was beaten, had no certain dwelling place, was reviled, was persecuted, defamed, and made as the filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things (1 Cor 4:11-13).
- Dishonor, evil reports, seen as deceivers, being unknown, dying, chastened, sorrowful, being poor, and having nothing (2 Cor 6:8-10).

Details

- In Jerusalem, the Jews took counsel to kill him (Acts 9:23-24).
- Persecuted and expelled from Antioch of Pisidia (Acts 13:50-51).
- Driven from Iconium (Acts 14:1-6).
- Stoned at Lystra by the Jews from Antioch and Iconium (Acts 14:19).
- Persecuted in Antioch, Iconium, and Lystra (2 Tim 3:11).
- Beaten and imprisoned at Philippi (Acts 16:19-24).
- Treated shamefully at Philippi (1 Thess 2:2).
- Opposed in Thessalonica (Acts 17:1-4).
- The Jews from Thessalonica came to Berea and stirred up the people against him (Acts 17:13-15).

- Opposed by the Jews in Corinth (Acts 18:12-18).
- Beaten in Jerusalem (Acts 21:32).
- More than forty Jews agree to fast until they killed Paul (Acts 23:12-15).
- Imprisoned in Herod's judgment hall (Acts 23:35).
- Left bound in prison for two years by Felix (Acts 24:27).
- Shipwrecked on the island of Melita (Acts 27:14-28:1).
- Bitten by a poisonous snake (Acts 28:3-6).
- Was pressed out of measure, so that he despaired of life (2 Cor 1:8-11).
- Had a grievous thorn in the flesh (2 Cor 12:7-8).
- Preached to the Galatians during a time when he was sick (Gal 4:13-14).
- Made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men (1 Cor 4:9).

These experiences all took place WHILE Paul was engaged in the work of the Lord – doing what Jesus had commissioned him to do. The period during which these things were experienced was approximately twenty-six years.

Several valuable lessons can be learned from these things.

1. THEY TEND TO MINIMIZE OUR SUFFERINGS. For most believers, Paul's sufferings tend to minimize those through which we are called to pass. In Paul we see an example of how much believers can endure without conducting themselves in an uncomely manner. Job is another example.

2. SUFFERINGS ARE CONTROLLED BY HEAVEN . Peter reminds us that our sufferings are under the Sovereign control of God, and are only for a time. "But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you" (1 Pet 5:10). Seen correctly, sufferings prepare us for spiritual maturity (perfect), solidity (stablish), spiritual stamina (strengthen), and a life of faithfulness (settle).

3. KEPT FROM FALLING. Paul is a sterling example of Jesus keeping His servants from falling, and making them stand. Although the accounts to which I have referred were not intended to be a kind of biography of Paul's troubles, yet they identify the seriousness of his trials, as well as the pain and concerns they generated. No ordinary man could have endured such an extended period of suffering, to say nothing of the severity of the experiences he mentioned. His stability was an example of being "kept by the power of God" (1 Pet 1:5), being kept "from falling" (Jude 1:24), and being made "to stand" (Rom 14:4).

4. SPIRITUAL CONSISTENCY AND STEADFASTNESS. It is also a display of the spiritual consistency that characterizes those who have eternal life, and are clinging to the Lord with purpose of heart. The doctrine affirms that "tribulation produces perseverance" (Rom 5:3). Instead of trials and temptations causing Paul to stumble, thereby bringing the need for repentance and recovery, they made him more steadfast. That is the result of responding to the teaching of grace (Tit 1:11-12).

5. THE NATURE OF SPIRITUAL LIFE AND VICTORY. Additionally, we see that the life of ease, and the lack of opposition, are by no means the dominant traits of spiritual life. Being "more than a conqueror" does not suggest the absence of battles – even fierce ones. It is still true that the devil, with all of his wiles and subtlety, has no weapon that can effectively offset saying "NO!" to his temptations (Tit 2:12). He has no effective weaponry against the individual who resists him (James 4:7; 1 Pet 5:7-8).

PAUL EARNESTLY BEHOLDS THE COUNCIL

This is an example of how a man with a good conscience conducts himself before his enemies. His conscience does not condemn him; he knows that he is not guilty of the charges brought against him.

“ 23:1a And Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said . . . ” Other versions read, “looking earnestly,” NKJV “looking intently,” NASB “looked strait at,” NIV “looking fixedly,” BBE “fixing his eyes on,” DARBY “stared at,” GWN “looked directly at,” NET “earnestly gazing at,” AMPLIFIED and “surveyed the members of the council with a steady gaze.” MESSAGE

This is an example of how a man with a good conscience conducts himself before his enemies. His conscience does not condemn him; he knows that he is not guilty of the charges brought against him. He also is keenly aware that the Lord is his Helper, and thus does not fear what men shall do unto him (Heb 13:6). He is not intimidated by men – especially those who oppose the Gospel of Christ.

Beholding involves riveting one’s attention on something. Discernment and consideration is in the word also. Solemnly the Psalmist prayed, “Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou me in Thy way” (Psa 119:37). When the enemies of the apostles beheld the lame man whom they had healed, “they could say nothing against it” (Acts 4:14). Thus we are reading of a lingering and considerate look.

THE COUNTENANCE

Paul is beholding the countenance of the people before him – discerning therein something of their persons. By definition the countenance is “the face as an indication of mood, emotion, or character; bearing or expression that offers approval or sanction: moral support.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

Early in the history of humanity, we read of the countenance. For example, when Cain’s offering was rejected, “his countenance fell” (Gen 4:5). What is even more, the Lord asked him, “why is thy countenance fallen?” (Gen 4:6). Cain’s face reflected disappointment that his offering was not accepted. However, even then the Lord gave an opportunity to present an acceptable offering. “If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door. And unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him” (Gen 4:7). However, because Cain was “Of that wicked one” (1 John 3:12), he not only rejected Divine counsel, but murdered his brother Abel. That confirmed Cain “belonged to the evil one.” NIV

Other references to the human countenance confirm that it reflects satisfaction or dissatisfaction, favor or hatred, and acceptance or rejection.

- Laban changed his countenance toward Jacob: “And Jacob beheld the countenance of Laban, and, behold, it was not toward him as before” (Gen 31:2).

- Jesus said men should not have a sad countenance when they were fasting. They were rather to groom and present themselves as those who were not fasting. “Moreover when ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face; That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly” (Mat 6:16-18).

Because the body is an integral part of our persons, something of the individual can be known by its various expressions. The countenance, or visage certainly is not a thorough index to the individual, but enough can be perceived in it to give the one beholding it some valuable information.

The wicked not only refuse to seek God, but betrays his reprobacy in his countenance. “The wicked, through the pride of his countenance, will not seek after God: God is not in all his thoughts” (Psa 10:4).

- The Psalmist spoke of the health of his countenance, tracing it back to God Himself. “Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God” (Psa 42:11; 43:5).

- Solomon said “A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance: but by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken” (Prov 15:13).

- It is written, “Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend” (Prov 27:17).

Because the body is an integral part of our persons, something of the individual can be known by its various expressions. The countenance, or visage certainly is not a thorough index to the individual, but enough can be perceived in it to give the one beholding it some valuable information. In the case before us, the countenance of the people will betray their feelings toward Paul – whether they are raging with madness, or are open to sound reasoning.

Paul earnestly beholds the Jewish council as he speaks. Extemporaneously, he will frame his words in a manner appropriate for the situation. His is not a prepared speech to be delivered whether or not the people are listening. His words will rather be suited the occasion, being mingled with wisdom and deep spiritual insight. As such, the Lord will be able to work with them to accomplish certain things in Paul’s behalf.

HE LIVED IN ALL GOOD CONSCIENCE

“ 23:1b . . . Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.”

MEN

“ . . . Men . . .” Here Paul addresses his audience as fellow members of the race of Adam: “men.” The word translated “men” (Andrej) also assumes adulthood, when people are capable of reasoning and drawing sound conclusions. Paul does not insult his audience by speaking to them as though they were children. He does not lisp to them in baby talk, but rather makes an appeal to mature minds. If their heart is right, the Holy Spirit will assist them in coming to a sound conclusion. If their heart is not right, Paul’s manner of speaking will cause their corruption to erupt.

To my knowledge, there is not so much as a sentence of Scripture that is addressed to immature and childish minds. I understand that in the instruction of immature children the word of God must be opened and expounded. However, the Scripture itself is never addressed to those whose rational powers have not yet been matured. Even children are addressed as thinkers (Ex 20:12; Eph 6:1-2). Yet, the Scripture is thoroughly capable of making young minds “wise unto salvation” (2 Tim 3:15). It is not that the Scripture itself is adapted to the immature mind. It rather is conducive to the development of a mature mind. Working with the Scripture, the Holy Spirit will cause the child’s mind to eventually be elevated spiritually. The marvelous horizon of truth will burst upon the child as he advances in “wisdom.”

Notwithstanding, in this text, Paul is not addressing children, but mature “men.” He speaks to them in such a manner as to provoke deep and sound reasoning. He knows that their countenance will reflect their manner of reasoning, whether sound or perverse. Without undue elaboration, I have noticed a current tendency in preaching that is most uncomely. Much of what is being delivered to the people is juvenile. It does not appeal to the reasoning capacity of the people, especially those who are in Christ Jesus. Shallow preaching will inevitably produce shallow and unthinking people.

One of the great transgressions of the modern church is that some of its preachers and teachers address the people as though they were not the children of God – as though they had not been regenerated, given a new heart, and been made “accepted in the beloved”

It is my opinion that those to speak to the people of God should remove from their speaking terms like, “I hope you understand what I am saying,” or “Are you getting this?” or “I’ll explain that later.” If a word is being addressed particularly to children, speak briefly to them. But the majority of what the man of God says should be addressed to those who have the capacity of understanding. This is precisely how Paul addressed Agrippa when he said, “Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?” (Acts 26:8). The truth of what men are and what they prefer is made known in the arena of thought, cogitation, and mental challenge.

AND BRETHREN

“ . . . and brethren . . . ”

Paul also addresses them as the people of promise, the offspring of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: “brethren.” This is how Peter addressed the Jews on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:29). It is how Peter addressed the crowd in the Temple (Acts 3:17). This is how Stephen began his address to the Jewish council (Acts 7:2). It is how Paul addressed the Jews in the synagogue of Antioch of Pisidia (Acts 13:38).

Even though those to whom Peter, Stephen, and Paul spoke may have been bad Jews, they spoke to them as sincere Jews – as the progeny of Abraham. They framed their words as though those before them were familiar with the Scriptures, and were serious about their identity with God. It is only when hostility was detected that holy men addressed the people as foes. Much of this detection was perceived in the countenance of the people.

When Paul and Silas addressed the heathen in Lystra, they did not call them “brethren,” but rather referred to them as “men,” or “sirs” (Lk 14:15). When Paul spoke at Athens, he did not speak to brethren in any sense, whether as Jews or as followers of Jesus. He addressed them according to what they were: “Ye men of Athens” (Acts 17:22).

A careful examination of the epistles will confirm that Paul, Peter, and John wrote to the churches according to what they were in Christ: “called to be saints” (Rom 1:7), “sanctified in Christ Jesus” (1 Cor 1:2), “the saints” (2 Cor 1:1), “faithful brethren” (Col 1:2), “in God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ” (1 Thess 1:1), “elect” (1 Pet 1:2), “them that have obtained like precious faith” (2 Pet 1:1), “they that have known the truth” (2 John 1:1) . . . etc.

One of the great transgressions of the modern church is that some of its preachers and teachers address the people as though they were not the children of God – as though they had not been regenerated, given a new heart, and been made “accepted in the beloved” (Eph 1:6). Too often their messages are peppered with sayings like, “we are all sinners,” “we are just like those Israelites,” and “we never really want to do what God requires of us.” All of this is supposedly sanctified by statements like, “God accepts us just as we are,” “You can’t do anything to make God love you less,” and “God can handle your weaknesses.” Of course, such speech neutralizes any truth that may be said, disarming the soul, and producing a kind of spiritual laxity that gives Satan the advantage.

When Jesus spoke to the people, He addressed them for what He perceived them to be – which was precisely what they were.

- He addressed the scribes and Pharisees as a “generation of vipers” (Matt 23:33).

- He spoke to the unbelieving Jews during His ministry as a generation who chided Him for not doing what they wanted. “But whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented” (Matt 11:16-17).

- To His disciples He said, “Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations” (Luke 22:28). When their faith was weak, He addressed them as those who could have maintained faith: “How is it that YE do not understand . . . How is it that YE have no faith” (Matt 16:11; Mk 4:40).

Thus Paul addresses his audience according to what they really are. As he speaks, he looks steadfastly at them, ready to detect a favorable or unfavorable change in their countenance.

I HAVE LIVED IN ALL GOOD CONSCIENCE

“ . . . I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.” Other versions read, “perfectly good conscience,” NASB “a clear conscience,” NRSV “my life has been upright,” BBE “perfectly clear conscience,” GWN and “perfectly good conscience.” AMPLIFIED

We live in a generation that could not receive this statement. I do not doubt that the accuracy of such an expression would be immediately questioned by most professing Christians. The reason for this circumstance is that the church of our time has learned to live with willful and persistent sin. Church staffs and theological schools are maintained with sinners in mind rather than those of good conscience. However, throughout history there have been people who maintained their life with spiritual consistency. This does not mean they never sinned, but sin was not their manner – and Paul is speaking of the manner of his life.

The Scriptures draw attention to several people who were especially noted for the righteous manner of life.

- ABEL. “By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh.” (Heb 11:4)

- ENOCH. “And Enoch walked with God after he begat Methuselah three hundred years, and begat sons and daughters.” (Gen 5:22)

- NOAH. “These are the generations of Noah: Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God.” (Gen 6:9)

- JOB. “There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job; and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil.” (Job 1:1)

- ASA. “But the high places were not removed: nevertheless Asa's heart was perfect with the LORD all his days” (1 Ki 15:14).

- HEZEKIAH. “I beseech thee, O LORD, remember now how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept sore” (2 Ki 20:3).

- DAVID. “I will behave myself wisely in a perfect way. O when wilt thou come unto me? I will walk within my house with a perfect heart” (Psa 101:2).

- ZECHARIAS AND ELIZABETH. “There was in the days of Herod, the king of Judaea, a certain priest named Zacharias, of the course of Abia: and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth. And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.” (Luke 1:6)

There are other noble souls against whom no sin is recorded. It is not that these people never sinned. Rather, they were noted for their righteousness and integrity. With them, sin was an exception, not the rule. These include the following, and accounts for their lives prior to the establishment of the new birth and the new covenant.

- Abel.
- Enoch.
- Noah.
- Melchizedec.
- Joseph.
- Samuel.
- Daniel.
- Shadrach.
- Meshach.
- Abednego.
- John the Baptist.
- Nathanael.

Each person is responsible for living up to what they do know. While it is true that it appears as though relatively few people actually do this, Paul was one of those noble souls who lived in such a manner.

Once again, the point being made is not that these persons needed no Savior, or that they were without sin. The point is that sinning was not their manner. Their primary characteristic was living with a heart and mind to please the Lord. That is what is involved in living “in all good conscience.” Prior to the coming of Christ and regeneration the Psalmist wrote, “God is in the generation of the righteous” (Psa 14:5). Zecharias, father of John the Baptist, confessed this to be the manner of the Lord. “And His mercy is on them that fear Him from generation to generation” (Luke 1:50).

The same is true of Paul prior to his conversion, who confessed he lived in “all good conscience” until the very day he was speaking. If it is countered that Paul persecuted the church, and therefore could not have had a good conscience, consider the following. The conscience is not an infallible guide, although God has made no provision for violating it. Even when a person may have drawn the wrong conclusions about right and wrong, he cannot go against his conscience, but must do what he does as unto the Lord. That is the whole point of Romans 14. When Paul wrote, “And he that doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for whatsoever is not of faith is sin” (Rom 14:23), he was addressing the matter of the conscience. It is another way of saying, “Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind” (Rom 14:5). All of this postulates that a person is living to please the Lord. God will direct such a soul, for his heart is tender and directable. For those outside of Christ we have the examples of the Ethiopian eunuch, Saul of Tarsus, and Cornelius. For those in Christ whose conscience requires further training, this word is given: “Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you” (Phil 3:15). Paul then adds that each believer is responsible for living in strict accord with what they do know, thereby maintaining a good conscience: “Nevertheless, to the degree that we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us be of the same mind” NKJV (Phil 3:16). Each person is responsible for living up to what they do know. While it is true that it appears as though relatively few people actually do this, Paul was one of those noble souls who lived in such a manner.

When Paul persecuted believers, he thought he was serving God. He was doing what he perceived the Law of God to have commanded (Deut 13:1-5; 18:20; Zech 13:3). Speaking of that period of his life, he confessed to Agrippa, “I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth” (Acts 26:9). His actions were caused by ignorance and unbelief, as he said in First Timothy 1:12-13: “And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that He counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry; Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief.” That ignorance and unbelief was not a preferred mode of life for Paul. It was brought on by a lack of knowledge and understanding. He had not seen the Prophets or Jesus Christ from a proper perspective. However, when Jesus revealed Himself to Paul, then Saul of Tarsus, he immediately believed and willingly yielded, inquiring what the Lord wanted him to do.

While this is something that cannot be codified or comprehended statistically, there is a sense in which Paul’s manner of maintaining a “good conscience” allowed him to respond more immediately to the truth. A man who has been conscientiously living for the Lord, though incorrect in his perception, can be more apt to respond to the truth when it confronts him.

THE HIGH PRIEST COMMANDS PAUL TO BE SMITTEN

“ 2 And the high priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth.”

THE HIGH PRIEST ANANIAS

This Ananias was doubtless the son of Nebedinus (Josephus, Antiq., book 20, chapter 5, section 3), who was high priest when Quadratus, who preceded Felix, was president of Syria. He was sent bound to Rome by Quadratus, at the same time with Ananias, the prefect of the temple, that they might give an account of their conduct to Claudius Caesar (Josephus, Antiq., book 20, chapter 6, section 2).
Albert Barnes

While there is some controversy concerning the precise identity of Ananias the high priest, I consent to the record of Josephus, together with several commentators. To me, the significant thing to note is that at the time of our text, the high priest was appointed by the political dignitary – at this time, Agrippa. Most historians and commentators concur that this was the custom at the time of our text.

The above being true, we see what a degeneration had taken place in the matter of high priests. According to God’s Law, high priests were to be descendants of Aaron, who was appointed by God as the first high priest (Num 17:2-10; Lev 21:10; 1 Chron 6:49; Heb 5:4; 7:11-14). The responsibilities of the high priest were as follows.

- Had charge of the sanctuary and altar. (Num 18:2-7)
- Offered sacrifices. (Heb 5:1; 8:2).
- Designated subordinate priests. (Num 4:19)
- Officiated at the consecration of the Levites. (Num 8:11-21).
- Had charge of the treasury. (2 Kgs 12:10; 22:4).
- Light the lamps in the tabernacle.
- Burn incense. (Ex 27:20-21).
- Place showbread on the table every Sabbath. (Ex 30:7-8; 1 Sam 2:28; 1 Chron 23:13).
- Offer for his own sins of ignorance. (Lev 4:3-12).

- Officiate on the day of atonement. (Ex 30:10; Lev 16:1-34; Heb 9:7).
- Judicial responsibilities. (Num 5:15; Deut 17:8-13).
- Number the people. (Num 1:3).
- Officiate at the choice of a ruler. (Num 27:18-21).
- Distribute the spoils of war. (Num 31:26-29).

All of the duties of the high priest had to do with things pertaining to God. This is stated succinctly in Hebrews. “For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins” (Heb 5:1). This same thing is true in the various functions and offices that are found within the church.

Yet, at the time of our text, the office of the high priest was an appointment by civil authorities. Further, when the civil and the religious stood together, the civil was, according to appearance, in control (Matt 27:12-13; Acts 22:30; 23:10; 24:20-22; 25:10-12).

This perfectly accords with the depiction of the false church in the book of the Revelation. There, the church thrust into society by the wicked one is set forth as “a great whore that sitteth upon many waters,” and “with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication” (Rev 17:1-2). Later, the Spirit unravels some of the mystery that surrounded her. She was being carried along by a “beast,” which is confirmed to be governments, headed up by “kings” that make war with the Lamb (Rev 17:3-13).

This appears to be one of Satan’s consistent strategies. It involves the corruption of religion, so that it is closer to the world than it is to God. Then there is a merger of religion with the world, which results in the inevitable dominance of the world over religion. We see this taking place in a more apparent way in our text, with God-ordained offices being managed by Rome. But this did not occur until Judaism had been so corrupted it bore very little resemblance to the institutions Moses had put in place under the direction of Almighty God.

This is not the place to be diverted to a lengthy discussion on this subject. However, it ought to be apparent that this very same strategy has been employed against the church. It is, however, totally inexcusable because of the superior knowledge, power, and resources that have been vouchsafed to the church. However, even though such gracious gifts are thoroughly adequate to protect and empower the church, unused they fall in the street as truth did during the time of Isaiah (Isa 59:14).

SMITE HIM ON THE MOUTH

“ . . . the high priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth.” Other versions read, “strike him on the mouth.” NKJV

And what was it that provoked this command? It was that Paul affirmed, “Brethren, I have lived my life with a perfectly good conscience before God up to this day.” NASB

It is obvious that Ananias the high priest was convinced Paul was taking the name of the Lord in vain. One of the Ten Commandments reads, “Thou shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain; for the LORD will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain” (Ex 20:7). Other versions read “misuse the name,” NIV “use for an evil purpose,” BBE “use lightly.” CJB “idly utter,” DARBY “use . . . carelessly,” GWN “swear falsely,” TNK and “lightly or frivolously, in false affirmations or profanely].” AMPLIFIED

Thus, Paul’s confession of having maintained a good conscience “before God” was viewed as a reckless use of the name of the Lord. The high priest viewed this as an insincere attempt to bring God into the matter at hand. However, Ananias’ was himself insensitive to God, and thus unable to decipher a “good confession” (1 Tim 6:13). His diagnosis of Paul had been sifted through his corrupted view of God and the Scriptures.

When men filter Scripture and events through their religious tradition, they cannot possibly arrive at the truth of a matter. Their conclusions will always be erroneous, because the filter of tradition removes reality and proper perspective from what they are considering. Their thoughts are actually molded by their religious tradition, and where the truth contradicts their tradition, they have no capacity to detect that variance.

It also ought to be noted that religious tradition is never willing to take a secondary or subordinate position. Once embraced, it assumes headship over even the truth itself. This is a circumstance from which men must be delivered. Peter alludes to this when he wrote, “Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers ” (1 Pet 1:18).

Although it may be attended by considerable difficulty and challenge, no believer is obligated to maintain allegiance to what is perceived as vain religious tradition.

Although it may be attended by considerable difficulty and challenge, no believer is obligated to maintain allegiance to what is perceived as vain religious tradition. It is quite true that those who conscientiously and energetically maintained erroneous traditions often find them lurking in nearly every corner of their thinking, it is equally true that Christ has freed us from their dominion. Even though a strong grip of misconception may appear, it can be overcome because it is of the world, and faith is the victory that overcomes the world (1 John 5:4-5).

Another Valuable Lesson

The wicked are often allowed to vent their rage against the people of God with no apparent restraint. Paul himself reported that he was beaten of the Jews “five times” (2 Cor 11:24).

Those in Christ should not be naive about those who persecute them. Although it may appear as though they are in control, they are not. Persecution and martyrdom suggest that the adversaries of the saints have dominion over them. Thus were the prophets persecuted and martyred (Matt 5:12; 23:31), Stephen was slain (Acts 7:58-60), as well as James (Acts 12:2). Paul and Silas were beaten and imprisoned at Philippi (Acts 16:37).

When the saints of God are opposed with seeming impunity, or exemption from appropriate punishment, several things are being made known.

- That the world does, in fact, hate both Christ Jesus and those who are joined to Him (John 15:18).
- That the world cannot receive the Spirit of truth (John 14:17).
- The eyes of the ungodly have been blinded by the prince of this world (2 Cor 4:4).
- That those who are of the world love darkness rather than light (Joan 3:19).
- That Christ’s Kingdom and those who have been translated into it are not of this world (John 8:23; 18:36; Col 1:13; John 15:19).
- That truth and error cannot be reconciled (2 Thess 2:10; 1 John 2:21; 3:18-19; 4:6; 3 John 1:3).
- That there is a sense in which persecution is in order that the saints might be counted worthy of the Kingdom of God (2 Thess 1:4-5).
- That it may be confirmed that it is a righteous thing for God to judge the wicked for their actions (2 Thess 1:6).

While the welfare of the saints is a matter with which our Lord is identified, it is always within the greater context of the glory and purpose of God, and in view of the end of the world and eternal judgment. None of God's dealings with men are independent of these considerations. Those who declare a kind of sympathetic God who earnestly wants to be involved in the intricacies of human life, have seriously misrepresented the case. Actually, the objective of God is to involve us in what He is doing. That is precisely why, in Christ, we are said to be "joined unto the Lord" (1 Cor 6:17). It is why He has created us to do good works that HE has ordained (Eph 2:10). In the last analysis, it is men who are being changed into the image of Christ (Rom 8:29; 2 Cor 3:18), and being prepared for eternity. It is why the saved are citizens of heaven (Phil 3:20), and live unto the Lord (2 Cor 5:15).

If we do not remember these things, suffering and opposition may confuse us – and confusion is an arena in which Satan can work more freely. It is by far best to culture the proper spiritual understanding, which makes for a more tender and responsive heart. Blessed is the person who understands these things.

THE RESPONSE OF PAUL

“ 3 Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall: for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?”

This text has moved some to speak critically of Paul, reminding us that when Jesus was led like a lamb to the slaughter He did not open His mouth (Isa 53:7; Acts 8:32). However, the circumstances of these two occasions are not the same. First, Jesus was being "delivered up" by God Himself (Rom 8:32). This was done according to God's own "determinate counsel and foreknowledge" (Acts 2:33). Additionally, the suffering of the Lord was in strict accord with God's "prophets" (Acts 3:18).

Additionally, Jesus did not maintain total silence during the events leading to His death. When Jesus stood before the high priest prior to being delivered to Pilate, He refused to answer him (Mk 14:60-61). When chided by Pilate for not answering him, Jesus answered, "Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin" (John 19:11). During His earthly ministry, Jesus severely upbraided the scribes and Pharisees (Matt 23), leaders among the people, as well as the lawyers (Lk 11:46-52). Prophets also were noted for rebuking priests and rulers (Isa 29:10; Jer 5:31; Mal 1:6).

Suffice it to say, sin and wickedness was always rebuked wherever it existed. The ruler of the people was not excluded from a godly denunciation, and the Law was not to be interpreted so as to lead men to that conclusion.

GOD SHALL SMITE THEE!

“Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall . . .” Other versions read, “God will strike you, you whitewashed wall,” NKJV “God will give blows to you, you whitewashed wall,” BBE “God will slap you, you corrupt hypocrite!” NLT and “God is about to strike you, you whitewashed wall!” AMPLIFIED

It is not certain that this was a prophecy of a particular Divine judgment. However, as a matter of historical record, Ananias the high priest was slain about five years later.

Ananias perished by the daggers of the Sicarii (Josephus, 'Bell. Jud,' 2. 17:9), at the beginning of the Jewish war under the procuratorship of Florus, in the year A.D. 66. He had been previously deposed from the high priesthood by King Agrippa toward the close of the government of Felix ('Ant. Jud.,' 20. 8:8), about A.D. 59, or early in A.D. 60, less than two years from the present time. JOSEPHUS

“ . . . and if this was Ananias, the son of Nebedaeus, as is generally thought, it is remarkable, that five years after this, in the beginning of the wars of the Jews with the Romans, this Ananias, hiding himself under the ruins of a conduit, was discovered, and taken out, and killed fl 144 : and no doubt but he very fitly calls him.” JOHN GILL

SITTEST THOU TO JUDGE ME?

“ . . . for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?” Other versions read, “in violation of the Law,” NASB “your yourself violate the Law,” NIV “in defiance of the Law,” AMPLIFIED “breaking the Law,” DARBY and “transgressing the Law.” GENEVA

I understand the law to which Paul referred – the law Ananias violated – to be found in Leviticus 19:15: “ Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment : thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honor the person of the mighty: but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbor.” Nicodemus, a Pharisee, referred to this kind of abuse during the mock-trial of Jesus. “Doth our law judge any man, before it hear him, and know what he doeth?” (John 7:51). He doubtless referred to the law specified in Deuteronomy 1:17: “Ye shall not respect persons in judgment; but ye shall hear the small as well as the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's: and the cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it.” Solomon also wrote, “He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him” (Prov 18:13).

Thus Ananias commands that Paul be struck on the mouth, interrupting what he was saying, making an unwarranted assumption, and acting rashly before all of the facts and defense had been made. This kind of conduct was even wrong under Roman law (Acts 16:37-39; 22:25-30). The Mosaic law forbade rash and unrighteous judgment (Ex 23:2,7; Lev 19:15; Deut 1:17; 16:18,19). The Psalms, Proverbs, and the Prophets also addressed the matter of injustice with remarkable clarity (Psa 82:2; Prov 17:15; Isa 26:10; Jer 22:3-5; Lam 3:34-36; Amos 5:11-12). The conduct of Ananias was thoroughly unacceptable.

The point here is that injustice is always wrong, and the fact that those committing it hold a high position does not change that fact. Wrong is never sanctified by a superior religious or political position. In matters of morality, there can be no respect of persons. That is how God views the matter, and He responds accordingly.

THE OBSERVATION OF THOSE STANDING BY

“ 4 And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high priest?” Other versions read, “You dare to insult God’s high priest?” NIV “Do you say such words against God’s high priest?” BBE “Doest thou rail against the high priest of God?” DARBY “Doest thou reproach the priest of God?” MRD “Do you rail at and insult the high priest of God?” AMPLIFIED and “Is that the way to talk to God's High Priest?” LIVING

Do not be unduly concerned about this question, for it is not to be our initial consideration. When those who stood by referred to Ananias as “God’s high priest,” they altered the way we are to consider this matter. They brought God into the matter, and that changed everything.

The office of the high priest was a critical one. In the epistle to the Hebrews, a point is made of the primary function of this office, and the manner in which it was populated.

THE PRIMARY FUNCTION OF THE HIGH PRIEST

First, the high priest focused on things relating to God – i.e. to the people of Israel and their relationship to God. “For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God” (Heb 5:1). Another statement relating to his function reads, “For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices : wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer” (Heb 8:3).

The matter in this text has nothing whatsoever to do with doing “things pertaining to God.” The entire council, including the high priest, has been convened upon the demand of a political official, who had “commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear” before him (Acts 22:30). The objective was to determine the legitimacy of the charges brought against Paul. Therefore, at this time, they are not meeting as a Jewish council, but as subordinates of the Roman empire. Yet, Ananias conducts himself as though he was in charge of the whole affair. Whether wittingly or unwittingly, he had done what the Roman official had not dared to do – commit an infraction of Roman law by striking a Roman citizen without having established an authentic charge against him.

THE MEANS OF SELECTING AND APPOINTING A HIGH PRIEST

By Divine intention, the high priest could not assume his office. Precisely as the first high priest Aaron was called of God, so must every high priest be appointed in strict comportment with the will of God. Thus, it is written, “And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron” (Heb 5:4). This was largely done through following the proper Levitical lineage, particularly through Aaron (Ex 27:21; 28:43; 29:9).

There were additional qualifications that had to be met. For example, they included being without any kind of physical blemish. He could not be blind, lame, or have any physical deformity (Ex 21:17-23). The high priest could not marry a prostitute, widow, or a divorced woman (Lev 21:7-15).

The point here is that simply saying Ananias was the “high priest of God” did not make it so. Those who criticize Paul for the manner in which he spoke have not examined the case carefully enough. He did not break God’s Law unless this was really “the high priest of God.” If he did not meet the qualifications, he was nothing more than a hypocrite, like the rest of the Pharisees and Sadducees that were present. It is always proper to expose works of darkness (Eph 5:11). This is in the same category as John the Baptist rebuking Herod (Matt 14:3-4; Mk 6:18). No office is exempted from the rebuke of sin.

PAUL AGAIN RESPONDS

“ 5 Then said Paul, I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest: for it is written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.” Other versions read, “I did not know,” NKJV “I was not aware,” NASB “I did not realize,” NIV and “I was not conscious of.” AMPLIFIED Himself a Pharisee (Acts 23:6; 26:5), Paul was very familiar with the requirements of the Law. The text to which Paul refers is Exodus 22:29; ‘Thou shalt not revile the gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people’ (Ex 22:28). The text postulates a valid ruler of the people.

Also, Paul had not reviled or railed on Caiaphas, which presumes false and prejudiced charges. Jesus referred to Herod as a “fox” (Lk 13:32). John the Baptist referred to a cluster of Pharisees and Sadducees as a “generation of vipers” (Matt 3:7). Jesus did the same (Matt 23:33).

“Soon after the holding of the first council at Jerusalem, Ananias, son of Nebedenus, was deprived of the high priest’s office, for certain acts of violence, and sent to Rome, whence he was after released, and returned to Jerusalem. Between the death of Jonathan, who succeeded him and was murdered by Felix, and the high priesthood of Ishmael, who was invested with that office by Agrippa, an interval elapsed in which this dignity was vacant. This was the precise time Paul was apprehended; and the Sanhedrin being destitute of a president, Ananias undertook to discharge the office. It was probable Paul was ignorant of this circumstance (Acts 24:17).” NOTE : Acts 24:17 relates to the continuation of this very event, in which Paul states that he had been away from Jerusalem for “many years.” That is the reason for the last statement in this quotation.

TREASURY OF SCRIPTURAL KNOWLEDGE

It ought to be noted that Paul did not retract his statement, or say that he repented for making it. This indicates that he did not regard Ananias in the same way as those who were with him. His statement concerning not realizing that Ananias was the high priest is explained in the attending box. However, it seems to me that more is involved here than what appears on the surface.

The fact that Paul brushes the whole matter aside, and proceeds in his assessment of the situation confirms to me that he recognized Ananias was really not “God’s high priest.” Instead, he was to genuine high priests what “false prophets” (Matt 7:15) were to God-sent prophets, or “false apostles” were to genuine apostles (2 Cor 11:13). There is such a thing as religious frauds. I know of no word from God that says such men are to be honored as though they were sanctified by the office they usurped, and were honored by the Lord as though they were functioning lawfully. That is precisely why God is said to have no respect of persons (Rom 2:11; Eph 6:9; Col 3:25; 1 Pet 1:17).

PAUL CAPITALIZES ON THE MOMENT

“ 6 But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.”

It is evident from Paul’s conduct that the peace of God was keeping his heart and his mind (Phil 4:7). Even though the circumstances were tumultuous – he had been beaten and jostled about, and the air was charged with dissension and animosity – yet Paul has the presence of mind to survey the situation with the intention of adopting a wise course of action. He has not been unduly distracted by the events of the last two days, but is thinking and acting with godly discretion. That is the effect of letting, or allowing, the peace of God to “rule” in the heart (Col 3:15).

In today’s “Christian” world, there is not much being said concerning the reality and nature of the “peace of God.” In my judgment, a considerable amount of sin can be traced directly to the absence of the peace that is given to the believer. Jesus said this peace directly bore on being troubled and afraid (John 14:1,27). The absence of these stabilizing qualities leaves a gaping door through which Satan is sure to enter.

PAUL PERCEIVED THE CIRCUMSTANCE

“But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees.” Other versions read, “knowing that some of them were,” NIV “noticed that some were,” NRSV “saw that half of them were,” BBE “realized that,” CSB and “was well aware.” NJB

The Amplified Bible reads, “When Paul perceived—from the discussion which plainly had by this time arisen between the parties. that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees.” The Pulpit Commentary takes a different view: “Possibly the Pharisees in the Sanhedrim were disgusted at the brutal act of Ananias, and were not sorry to hear him called “a whited wall;” and St. Paul’s quick intelligence saw at a glance that the whole council did not sympathize with their president, and divined the cause.” Adam Clarke is of the opinion that Paul knew some of these men from former associations, even though he had been absent from them for fourteen years (Gal 2:1).

The point here, however, is not HOW Paul arrived at this proper conclusion, but that he was alert and sensitive to assess the situation. Once again we see the selflessness of this man of God. The fact that he has been beaten, maligned, and is presently being examined by a Roman military man and a group of spiritually deranged Jews had not turned his eyes inward. It ought to be noted here that some people live in such a spiritually sloppy manner that all trouble is thought to be punishment for unacceptable conduct. Note that such a reaction is never credited to Paul.

With a keen and perceiving eye, Paul assessed the audience before him. He sees what it is most expedient to say – something that will turn the attention from himself, for he was not the transgressor in this matter.

A PHARISEE CALLED INTO QUESTION CONCERNING THE HOPE OF THE RESURRECTION

“Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.”

It should not surprise us that some have criticized Paul on this matter, even affirming that he lied. I rather see this as a fulfillment of a certain promise that Jesus delivered to the twelve. “But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost” (Mark 13:11).

“Orobio charges this upon Paul as an artful manner of declining persecution, unworthy the character of an upright and honest man. Chubb, a British Deist of the seventeenth century, charges it upon Paul as an act of gross ‘dissimulation, as designed to conceal the true ground of all the troubles that he had brought upon himself, and as designed to deceive and impose upon the Jews.’ He affirms also that ‘Paul probably invented this pretended charge against himself to draw over a party of the unbelieving Jews unto him.’ See Chubb’s Posthumous Works, vol. ii. p. 238.” ALBERT BARNES

Divine deliverances are not always wrought by straightforward means. For example, when Samuel was sent by God to anoint David king he responded, “How can I go? if Saul hear it, he will kill me.” The Lord responded, “Take an heifer with thee, and say, I am come to sacrifice to the LORD. And call Jesse to the sacrifice, and I will show thee what thou shalt do: and thou shalt anoint unto Me him whom I name unto thee” (1 Sam 16:2-3). A sophist might object, saying that is really not why Samuel was being sent. However, this is like replying against the Almighty. Samuel did, in fact, offer a sacrifice, even though the primary reason for going was to anoint David king over Israel. However, the Lord does not always divulge the fulness of His cause – particularly to His enemies. In His works, He has a mind to protect His people.

One might also reason that there was some form of duplicity in the commission given to the prophet Jonah. He was told to go to Nineveh and boldly preach, “Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown” (Jonah 3:4). God referred to this message as “the preaching that I bid thee” (Jonah 3:2). Again, a sophist might reason that an all-knowing God knew Nineveh was really not going to be destroyed. But all such reasoning is foolish. This is a Divine manner, and it does not involve misrepresentation or lying. The fact that it is confusing to the carnal mind is really irrelevant. In the instance concerning the anointing of David, this was God’s way of protecting young David, ensuring the safety of Samuel, and suppressing the animosity of Saul. Only a wise God can accomplish such things with a single saying.

Therefore, in keeping with that Divine manner, Paul also previously appealed to Roman citizenship to avoid further beating. Now he capitalizes on the division among his accusers in order to deal with the dilemma before him.

Things To Consider

Concerning the hope and resurrection of the dead, this was a primary teaching of Paul, and was one of the pillars of his reasoning (Acts 17:18,31-32; 1 Cor 15; Acts 13:34; 26:6,7,23,25). The same was true of the other apostles who were noted for preaching “through Jesus the resurrection from the dead” (Acts 4:2). The fact that all of this has a strange sound to many nominal Christians and their teachers is owing to a falling away, and is in no way related to the truth. Take away the fact of the resurrection, and faith and preaching are pointless. Consider the powerful reasoning of Paul on this matter. “But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable” (1 Cor 15:13-19). In light of this, Paul’s answer was a most excellent summation of the case.

Notice how Paul so loved the truth, that he would acknowledge it, even if flawed teachers gave assent to it. Himself a Pharisee, he knows very well that they acknowledged the resurrection of the dead, while the Sadducees denied it. Yet, these two parties had overlooked their theological differences in order to oppose Paul – much like Pilate and Herod, formerly enemies, were united in their opposition to Jesus Christ (Lk 23:12). If dissension could not be avoided, it just as well be between Paul’s enemies.

It seems to me that it is still in order for the divisions in professing Christendom to be pointed out in a discreet manner. Where division exists, regardless of the reason or its assumed acceptance, something is seriously wrong, for Christ is not divided (1 Cor 1:13). There is an undeniable unity in the Godhead Itself, and in the truth that issues forth from it. Division and variance have no place in the heavenly economy. Wherever division is found, Christ is not the prominent Person, and truth is not given the proper emphasis. That division may very well be the result of Divine judgment, as occurred in “a plain in the land of Shinar” (Gen 11:2-9). Those who pretend to traffic in the truth, yet defer to the traditions of men will not obtain the blessing of God. They will not experience “the unity of the Spirit” or “the unity of faith” (Eph 4:3,13). Such was the group before whom Paul is standing. They were a group of fundamentally divided religious people. They could live with this as long as an informed person was absent.

THERE AROSE A DISSENSION

“ 7 And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided. 8 For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both.”

In a single discerning saying, Paul has transferred the attention from himself to the sectarian bodies before him. If confusion is found, it ought to be among those who oppose the truth, not those who claim allegiance to it. This circumstance will also bear a powerful witness to the Roman captain. Now he will see the real troublemakers were the ones raising the allegations against Paul.

THERE AROSE A DISSENSION

“And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided . . .” Other versions read, “a dispute broke out,” NIV “There was an argument,” BBE “there was a tumult,” DARBY “a quarrel,” GWN “fell upon one another,” MRD “there arose a debate,” PNT “there was a discord,” LITV “going at each other in heated argument,” MESSAGE and “an angry dispute.” WEYMOUTH

This tactic of Paul would be considered rude and unwise by many clerics of the day. The general view of things is that we should avoid matters that are controversial, and just speak of things on which we are all agreed. There is an element of truth to that view, but it is actually very small proportionately. Being of “one mind” is not achieved by ignoring doctrinal differences (Rom 15:6; 1 Cor 13:11; Phil 1:27; 2:2; 1 Pet 3:8). It rather involves seeing the truth for what it is, embracing it, and then propagating it.

THE SADDUCEES SAY

“ For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit . . .”

In other words, they had a high estimation of themselves and their views – they, like the Pharisees, did not derive their origin from the ordination of God – unlike the priests, high priests, prophets, etc. As such, they bear a remarkable resemblance to several Christian sects of our day.

The Sadducees were a Jewish sect that came into being over one hundred years before Jesus was born. It is a sect that was founded on an interpretation of Moses’ writing, rather than on the Word of God itself. History tells us that the Sadducees called themselves “the righteous” (Epiphanius, Adversus Hoereses, 1, 4). They viewed themselves as “the straightforward, open, honest, and righteous.” McCLINTOK & STRONG’S CYCLOPEDIA In other words, they had a high estimation of themselves and their views – they, like the Pharisees, did not derive their origin from the ordination of God – unlike the priests, high priests, prophets, etc. As such, they bear a remarkable resemblance to several Christian sects of our day.

The Sadducees are mentioned fourteen times from Matthew through Acts. No other section of Scripture refers to them. They are referred to nine times in the Gospels (Matt 3:7; 16:1,6,11,12; 22:23-24; Mk 12:18; Lk 20:27). They are mentioned five times in the book of Acts. Although they were not as prevalent as the Pharisees, they exercised considerable influence among the Jews. Even though they were fundamentally disagreed with the Pharisees, they were often found together (Matt 3:7; 16:1,6,11,12; 22:34; Acts 23:6,7,8). The context of their mention is consistently not good.

- They came with the Pharisees to the baptism of John, only to be rebuked by him when he referred to them as a “generation of vipers” (Matt 3:7).
- They joined with the Pharisees in tempting Jesus to show them “a sign from heaven” (Matt 16:1-4).
- Jesus warned His disciples, “Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees” (Matt 16:6-12).
- They came to Jesus and tempted Him, presenting a theoretic scenario of a woman who had seven husbands, asking Him who would have her as his wife “in the resurrection,” but Jesus put them “to silence” (Matt 22:23-34).
- They also surface in our text, again joining with the Pharisees, and seeking to raise a punishable charge against Paul (Acts 23:6-8). In introducing this text, it is stated, “the Sadducees, which say that there is no resurrection” (Matt 22:23).

There is nothing good said about the Sadducees, although I do not doubt that they had some evidences of sincerity. The fact that they emphasized righteousness is certainly a favorable point, even though they did not practice righteousness, as this very text confirms.

WHAT THEY SAID

Yet, in spite of their identity with the Scriptures, they categorically denied the reality of the resurrection, angels, and spirits. They represent one of Satan’s initiatives. He moves people to claim an interest in the Word of God and the people of God, yet, who cannot receive what appears to be very plain declarations.

“ . . . that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit.” That is a remarkable summary of willing ignorance. This was a religious body of people. In fact, there is not a single reference to them that is not within the context of the Scriptures and those who declared them. This included John the Baptist, Jesus, and the apostle Paul. Yet, in spite of their identity with the Scriptures, they categorically denied the reality of the resurrection, angels, and spirits. They represent one of Satan’s initiatives. He moves people to claim an interest in the Word of God and the people of God, yet, who cannot receive what appears to be very plain declarations. For example, consider the three things they are here said to deny.

• THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD. Moses and the Prophets contain at least 33 references to the resurrection of the dead. Early in human history, Abraham reasoned what God would raise Isaac from the dead if he was slain on the altar of sacrifice (Heb 11:19). Job, living around the time of Abraham, reasoned concerning the resurrection of the dead (Job 14:12-15; 19:25-27). David spoke of the resurrection of the dead (Psa 16:16:9–10; 17:15; 30:3; 49:15; 71:20; 86:13). The Prophets wrote extensively about the resurrection (Isa 25:8-9; 26:19; 37:1-14; Dan 12:2-3,13; Hos 6:2; 13:14). There were three specific resurrections record in the Scriptures with which the Sadducees were familiar: The son of the widow of Zarephath (1 Kgs 17:17-23), The Shunnamite’s son (2 Kgs 4:32-37), and a corpse that was cast into the open grave of Elisha (2 Kgs 13:21).

• ANGELS. “Angels” are mention 100 times in Moses and the Prophets. Moses mentioned them 32 times (Gen-Deut).

• SPIRIT. “Spirit” or “spirits” are mentioned 235 times in Moses and the Prophets, with Moses mentioning the terms 27 times. The Holy Spirit is mentioned 14 times from Genesis through Ezekiel (Gen 1:2; 41:38; 2 Chron 15:1; 18:23; 20:14; 24:20; Isa 40:13,16; 59:19; 48:16; 59:19; 63:10,11,14; Ezek 11:5,24). He is referred to as “the Spirit of God,” “the Spirit of the Lord,” “His Spirit,” and “the Holy Spirit.” The word ”spirit” is used 230 times from Genesis through Malachi,” and “spirits” is used 14 times – sometimes of an “familiar spirit” or “familiar spirits ” (15 times). Angels are called “spirits” in Psalm 104:4).

There are five revealed categories of spirits – i.e. spirits with personalities, wills and influence.

- The God and Father, who is identified as “a Spirit” (John 4:24).
- The Holy Spirit
- Holy angels
- Evil spirits
- Human spirits. These spirits are located in at least three realms. The earth, a place of torment, and a place pf blessing. The latter two are the spirits of those who have passed from this life.

These occupy an unseen world of teeming activity. No spirit occupies a dormant and inactive realm. So far as revelation is concerned, all spirits are conscious and engaged in some kind of expression. Yet, the Sadducees denied the existence of four of them, evidently not perceiving that the God they professed to serve is a Spirit.

BUT THE PHARISEES CONFESS BOTH

“ . . . but the Pharisees confess both.” Other versions read, “acknowledge them all,” NKJV “acknowledge all three,” NRSV “have belief in all these,” BBE “affirm them all,” CSB “believe in all these things,” GWN “accept all three,” NJB “grant both,” TNT “acknowledge the existence of both,” WEYMOUTH and “acknowledging [their belief in] them both.” AMPLIFIED

The different versions represent the following: “both,” “all three,” and “all these.” The Greek word from which the expression is translated has the following lexical meaning: “both of two, both the one and the other.” THAYER There is no disparity here. It is true, there were three things mentioned in defining the Sadducees: (1) no resurrection, (2) nor angel, and (3) no spirit (verse 8). However, only two categories were included, the resurrection and spirits, for angels are categorically said to be “spirits” (Psa 104:4; Heb 1:7). Of course, the resurrection of the dead postulates the existence of spirits, for in the resurrection, the spirit reenters the body. In resurrections accomplished prior to the end of the world, the spirit is said to have reentered into the body (1 Kgs 12:22). Jesus referred to this circumstance when He said, “But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living” (Matt 22:31-32). At the time, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were in the category of “spirits,” – absent from the body. But, in the resurrection, they would be united with their immortal bodies when all of the dead are raised.

Thus, the Pharisees are declared to have acknowledged the reality of the resurrection, and the existence of spirits. Whatever bad things that were found in this body of people, their acknowledgment of the resurrection of the dead and the existence of spirits was a comely quality.

The irony here is that two bodies of people, so far apart theologically, would work together in sectarian interests (Matt 3:7; 16:1,6,11-12; 22:34; Acts 23:6-8). That is one of the fundamental weaknesses of sectarianism, or denominationalism. The interests of the institution reduce the necessity of having one mind in matters that have been revealed by God. There are some people who endeavor to get those of divers theological views to unite together, shelving their differences in the interest of perceived unity. It is questionable that this is noble.

THE SCRIBES AND PHARISEES RESPOND

“ 9 And there arose a great cry: and the scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, We find no evil in this man: but if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, let us not fight against God.”

Paul's words have instantly changed the climate of the assembly. Suddenly, a significant number of those who were solidly against him are speaking in favor of Paul. Strictly speaking, this is not because of Paul's words. Rather, he spoke words through which God could work. He made no reference to the persuasions of either Pharisees or the Sadducees. He only referred to “the hope and resurrection of the dead” (verse 6). Yet, these were words that summoned Divine power into the situation – so much so, that a number of men were turned to favor Paul, forgetting the grievance that had been raised against him. It is written, “The preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the LORD” (Prov 16:1). THE Lord can also put things into the heart of a person (Ezra 7:27; Rev 17:17). God is noted for putting wisdom into the hearts of men (Ex 31:6), as well as His law (Jer 31:33), and His fear (Jer 32:40). Within the framework of religious argumentation, such things may not sound good. However, in the context of trouble and opposition, the knowledge of this Divine aptitude is most comforting.

THERE AROSE A GREAT CRY

“And there arose a great cry . . .” Other versions read, “a great uproar,” NKJV “a loud outcry,” NASB “a great clamor,” NRSV “the shouting grew loud,” CSB “a great commotion,” NET “began shouting louder and louder,” IE and “vociferous [boistrous] yelling.” WILLIAMS

Here was a body of religious people that were anything but casual about their persuasions. It was a people that had been cultured by God through the means of the Law of Moses, sundry blessings, and various curses. Some of their conclusions were wrong, and they often found themselves in outright opposition to the Lord. They had a zeal, to be sure, but, as Paul stated it, it was “not according to knowledge. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God” (Rom 10:2-3). These were among those who “followed after the law of righteousness,” yet had “not attained unto the law of righteousness” (Rom 9:32). This was because, as it is written, “they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law” (Rom 9:33).

The point here is that this kind of zeal is not common among many professing Christians. Perhaps that is why those so characterized remain in a state of spiritual ignorance. The landscape of contemporary religion is not at all conducive to aggressive preaching and teaching. A lot of such religion is characterized by a state of lukewarmness, much like that of Laodicea, whom Jesus said were “neither cold nor hot” (Rev 3:15a). The gravity of that circumstance is seen in the further word of Jesus: “I would that you were cold not” (Rev 3:15b). Other churches were characterized by this trait. The church at Pergamos was indifferent toward some in their number who held to the libertine doctrine of the Nicolaitines (Rev 2:14-15). The church at Thyatira was upbraided for allowing a false prophetess to flourish in their presence (Rev 2:20-24). Sardis is said to have had a name that it was alive, when it was really dead (Rev 3:1-3).

Such a description certainly did not apply to the crowd standing before Paul. They were anything but indifferent about the things they had formally embraced.

THE SCRIBES THAT WERE OF THE PHARISEES

“ . . . and the scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove . . .” Other versions read, “some of the scribes of the Pharisaic party,” NKJV “some of the teachers of the Law who were Pharisees,” NIV “certain scribes of the Pharisees' group.” NRSV

These persons (called in Heb. uyrip]wOs , sopherim; Gr. grammatei~v) were originally merely writers or copyists of the law, who followed this business as a mode of livelihood; but eventually they rose to the rank of a learned profession — becoming the doctors of the law and interpreters of the Scriptures . . . The period of the Sopherim begins with the return of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity, and ends with the death of Simon the Just (B.C. cir. 458-300), embracing nearly a hundred and sixty years.

McCLINTOK & STRONG

Originally, scribes copied the Scripture, and, in the process, became unusual in their acquaintance with the text of Scripture. Because of this, many of them became teachers. Of old time, a king had a scribe who inscribed things related to his reign (2 Kgs 12:10; 22:9,10; 25:19; 2 Chron 24:11).

Ezra the Scribe

Ezra was one of the better known scribes, and is described as “a ready scribe in the Law of Moses” (Ezra 7:6), and “Ezra the priest, scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the LORD, and of His statutes to Israel” (Ezra 7:11; Neh 12:26,36). Again, he is referred to as “Ezra the priest, a scribe of the law of the God of heaven” (Ezra 7:12;21). During the time of Nehemiah, Ezra read the Law to the people (Neh 8:1-4). He was a specialist in Scripture.

Example of the Teaching of the Scribes

After beholding Elijah appearing “in glory” with Jesus, and when coming down the mount of transfiguration, the disciples referred to something taught by the scribes. “And His disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?” (Matt 17:10; Mal 4:5). Jesus declared that the teaching was correct, and that Elijah would come and restore all things. He then added that John the Baptist was a precursor to that event, with one exception. John the Baptist did not restore all things or turn the hearts of the fathers. Instead, the people “knew him not,” and “did to him whatever they wished” (Matt 17:10; Mk 9:13).

When Herod learned of the birth of a Babe who was born “King of the Jews,” he sought counsel concerning “where Christ should be born.” That group included scribes: “And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born” (Matt 2:4).

In the thinking of these scribes, Paul’s agreement with a basic tenet of Scripture trumped the charges they had initially brought against him. Doubtless, God was at work in this matter, yet we have here the advantage of embracing the truth of Scripture.

While Jesus did not criticize the scribes for their knowledge of Scripture, He did point out their lack of righteousness: “For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven” (Matt 5:20). When comparing the teaching of the scribes with that of Jesus, the people observed that Jesus “taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes” (Matt 7:29). When speaking of His suffering and death, Jesus told His disciples the “scribes” would play prominent role in it all: “From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day” (Matt 16:21; 20:18). Our Lord’s scathing denunciation of the “scribes and Pharisees” is one of the premier examples of Divine rebuke (Matt 23:2-34).

In most of the references to the scribes and Pharisees, the scribes are mentioned first (Matt 5:20; 12:38; 15:1; 23:2, 13,14,15,23,25,27,29; Lk 5:21,30; 6:7; 11:44, 53; John 8:3; 23:9). Exceptions are Mk 7:1,5; Lk 14:2). My only point here is that the Jews, as a rule, held a higher regard for experts in Scripture, and that this was the result of the culture developed among those who took the Word of God seriously.

A Good Standard

Although the scribes were not the paragons of virtue, the idea set forth by noteworthy scribes represents a kind of Kingdom standard. It is those who have a grasp of the Word of God, and spend time in it, that are “worthy of double honor” (1 Tim 5:17). The idea of a spiritual leader preacher, or teacher that lacks a holy familiarity with the Word of God, is flawed to the core.

WE FIND NO EVIL IN THIS MAN

“ . . . saying, We find no evil in this man . . .” Having heard Paul mention “the hope of the resurrection,” these scribes immediately made an association with the Scriptures. They knew that holy men like Job and David anticipated the resurrection of the dead (Job 14:12-15; 19:25-27; Psa 17:15; 49:15). Isaiah prophesied of the resurrection (Isa 25:8; 26:19). Daniel prophesied of the resurrection (Dan 12:2,3), and was told to live out the rest of his life in such a hope (Dan 12:13). Hosea also spoke of the dead being raised (Hos 13:14).

Suddenly, these men forget about the charges that had been leveled against Paul, of being a rabble-rouser, trying to change the customs of the people, and defiling the Temple by bringing a Gentile into it. Now they conclude, “We find no evil in this man!” Other versions read, “We find nothing wrong with this man,” NASB/NIV and “We find nothing evil or wrong in this man.” AMPLIFIED

In the thinking of these scribes, Paul’s agreement with a basic tenet of Scripture trumped the charges they had initially brought against him. Doubtless, God was at work in this matter, yet we have here the advantage of embracing the truth of Scripture. God can use such people in purposes that lie beyond the narrow perimeter of their sect.

IF A SPIRIT OR AN ANGEL

“ . . . but if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him . . .” Other versions read, “suppose a spirit or an angel has spoken to him,” NKJV “What if a spirit or an angel has spoken to him,” NIV “what if he has had a revelation from an angel or a spirit?” BBE “Maybe a spirit or an angel actually spoke to him!” GWN “a spirit or an angel hath appeared to him,” TNT “if a spirit spake to him, or a messenger,” YLT and “But if a spirit or an angel [really] spoke to him—?” AMPLIFIED

These men were probably referring to Paul’s testimony as recorded in Acts 22:17-18: “And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance; And saw him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me” (Acts 22:17-18). They could also have been referring to Paul’s initial testimony about the glorified Christ appearing to Him (Acts 22:6-11).

During Christ’s ministry, He once came to His disciples walking on the stormy waters in which they were attempting to sail. Upon seeing the Lord it is written, “they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit ; and they cried out for fear” (Mat 14:26; Mk 6:49). Again, following His resurrection, Jesus appeared to his disciples, who were assembled with many others. Upon seeing Him, “they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit ” (Luke 24:37). Additionally, the Jews had Scriptures that gave accounts of people seeing angels (Numbers 22:31; Judges 6:11,22; 13:6,16,21; 2 Sam 24:17; 1 Chron 21:16; 1 Kgs 13:13,18; 19:5; 1 Chron 21:15-16,20). The Jews were a body of people that were cultured to be cognizant of the existence of angels and spirits – ordinarily unseen to the human eye. This is not a persuasion that was learned from the Babylonians, Greeks or the Romans.

As a general rule, there is presently a near-total absence of the awareness of a spiritual world that is occupied by both congenial and hostile spirits. There is also too much speculative thinking about the Holy Spirit, and not enough sharing in the life and endowments that He gives. These conditions reflect the effects of the preaching and teaching of our time. It is too earth-centric, and does not move people to contend for some aspect of the truth as the scribes of our text did. They deferred to the Word of God, and as they did, they saw the injustice of what was happening – something in which they themselves had participated.

LET US NOT FIGHT AGAINST GOD

“ . . . let us not fight against God.” Other versions read, “found fighting against God,” NKJV “opposing God,” RSV “Let us not fight against God,” GENEVA “Let us not strive against God,” PNT “we may not fight against God,” YLT and “What if it turns out we’re fighting against God?” MESSAGE Most modern translations omit this expression.

This is precisely the same observation made by Gamaliel when the Jewish council were opposing the apostles: “But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God ” (Acts 5:39). Another similar expression is “ withstand God” (Acts 11:17). One additional reflection addressed to those who stand against the Lord in their conduct is, “Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than He?” (1 Cor 10:22).

During times when religious people are heaping to themselves teachers after their own lusts (2 Tim 4:3), the awareness of fighting against, withstanding, or provoking the God of heaven is a foreign thought. Those who are not committed to the Lord simply do not think in this manner. Notice, with both Gamaliel and the scribes, fighting against God had to do with rejecting what was being preached in Jesus’ name. In both cases, the opponents thought they were resisting men. However, this was not the case. They were actually engaged in warfare against the God of heaven! I understand that Luke’s inclusion of these words without an explanation amounts to an affirmation that what they said was true. If this is not the case, he would have included a disclaimer.

PAUL IS REMOVED FROM THE TUMULT

“ 10 And when there arose a great dissension, the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle.”

THERE AROSE A GREAT DISSENSION

“And when there arose a great dissension . . .” Other versions read, “the dispute became so violent,” NIV “the argument became very violent,” BBE “a great tumult having arisen,” DARBY “the quarrel was becoming violent,” GWN “there was a great commotion among them,” MRD “Feeling was running high,” NJB “the conflict grew more violent,” NLT “there arose a great debate,” PNT “when the strife became more and more tense and violent,” AMPLIFIED and “ That was fuel on the fire. The quarrel flamed up and became so violent.” MESSAGE

A tremendous outbreak of controversy occurred when the scribes made their recommendation. The very notion of angels and spirits existing was more than the Sadducees could handle. Their respect was for their tradition, not for the Word of God. Even though the Scriptures they professed to have embraced contradicted what they had espoused, they could not see it. There is a reason for this. The god of this world had blinded their minds so the truth could not be seen on these matters (2 Cor 4:4).

The Holy Spirit works within the perimeter of truth. Satan works within the boundary of the lie, for he is the “father” of the lie (John 8:44). Because of what the Sadducees had chosen to accept concerning the resurrection, angels, and spirits, they were now bondslaves of the wicked one, and there was not a thing they themselves could do about their situation. Of course, many of the Pharisees had their areas of falsity also – such as that Jesus is the Christ. However, on these two matters – the resurrection of the dead and the existence of spirits – their view was correct. It was practical also, for they conceded the possibility that an angel or a spirit had spoken to Paul. Until now, they entertained no such consideration.

While the Sadducees and scribes were concerned about which position was superior, the captain was thinking of Paul’s rights as a Roman citizen, and of his own responsibility to maintain order and protect him. God had appointed this considerate leader to care of Paul. Therefore, he remained fully alert to the circumstance, and ready to take immediate action when it was required.

It ought to be noted that just as the Holy Spirit surely works with the truth, so Satan always works through the lie and misrepresentation. This is why false doctrine is such a dangerous thing. Not only is there such a thing as “doctrines of demons” (1Tim 4:1), such doctrines are like a portal through which Satan gains dominance over the people.

I do not doubt that much of the increase of immorality in the professing church is directly owing to the false doctrine that is being taught concern the nature of salvation, how to obtain salvation, the nature of spiritual life, the prominence of life in this present evil world, etc. If what is declared is, in fact, a lie, it provides an opportunity for the devil to enter, and he will not pass by such a chance.

Even in the gathering of our text, although one part of the crowd held a proper view of the subjects being disputed, yet the Sadducees provided a gaping hole through which Satan could enter, causing confusion and danger to the apostle Paul.

FEARING

“ . . . the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them . . .” Other versions read, “was afraid Paul would be torn in pieces,” NKJV “fearing Paul would be pulled in two by them,” BBE and “the captain was afraid they would tear Paul apart, limb from limb.” MESSENGER

While the Sadducees and scribes were concerned about which position was superior, the captain was thinking of Paul’s rights as a Roman citizen, and of his own responsibility to maintain order and protect him. God had appointed this considerate leader to care of Paul. Therefore, he remained fully alert to the circumstance, and ready to take immediate action when it was required. We should not doubt that the same care is focused upon us as we are engaged in the good and acceptable and perfect will of God (Rom 12:1-2).

PAUL IS FORCEFULLY REMOVED

“ . . . commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle.” Other versions read, “take him away by force,” NKJV “rescue him from them,” CSB “take him from among them,” GENEVA “drag Paul back,” GWN “take him forcibly from among them,” AMPLIFIED “snatch him out of their midst,” LITV and “get him out of there.” MESSAGE

To take someone by force is to master the situation, rescuing the potential victim without regard for those who would do him harm. These soldiers were prepared to fight if necessary. They took charge of the situation, bursting through the tumultuous crowd and whisking Paul away to safety. In this case, and at the command of the captain, the soldiers forced their wills upon the crowd, refusing to give place to the will of the people. Paul is now removed to the barracks where he would be safe and under the continual protection of the military.

Behold how God can work among men for the good of His people. It is no wonder that it is written, “My times are in Thy hand: deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me” (Psa 31:15). Each believer, particularly those who are on the front lines of spiritual battle, do well to remember that nothing can separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus (Rom 8:39) – i.e. no adversarial influence. It is in this sense that we are “more than conquerors” (Rom 8:37). That is view of life from two vantage points: (1) The purpose of God. (2) The ultimate outcome.

CONCLUSION

This passage has confirmed the manner in which God protects His servants. His protection does not mean a lack of inconvenience, or even pain and serious threats. However, the Lord can marshal all the forces on earth and in heaven as well to guarantee that His servants will complete the work to which they have been called. Protection and guidance are not ends of themselves. That is, the comfort and convenience of His children are not what determine His gracious direction and ultimate protection. It is as the believer is fulfilling the role to which he has been appointed that these benefits are realized. No person who names the name of Christ should expect to sail through life comfortably and in ease for his sake alone.

Christ’s total life was wrapped up in His Father’s will. This was essential, because the chief work He was going to do involved laying down His life, and taking it up again (John 10:17-18). In order to do this, He had to focus the entirety of His life upon maintaining His association with the Father, speaking the words He was given to say, and doing the works assigned to Him.

The standard for God’s involvement with His children is set forth in the Lord Jesus Christ. While His youth was characterized by growing in wisdom, and stature, and favor with God and man, there is a sense in which it was incidental and preparatory. That is why so little is known of the first thirty years of His life. But when He commenced His ministry, and drew the sword out of its scabbard on the banks of the Jordan River, His life was marked by doing the will of God. For example, Jesus said of His words, “For I have not spoken of Myself; but the Father which sent Me, He gave Me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak” (John 12:49). And again, “the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works” (John 14:10). He said of His works, “the works which the Father hath given Me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of Me, that the Father hath sent Me” (John 5:36). And again, “I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work” (John 9:4).

Christ’s total life was wrapped up in His Father’s will. This was essential, because the chief work He was going to do involved laying down His life, and taking it up again (John 10:17-18). In order to do this, He had to focus the entirety of His life upon maintaining His association with the Father, speaking the words He was given to say, and doing the works assigned to Him. In this, He has left the ultimate example for us all. That is one reason we are told, “Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus . . . And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross” (Phil 2:5-8).

Paul later confessed in the same epistle that this is the way he lived, seeking to know and appropriate as much of Christ Jesus as possible. “But whatever former things I had that might have been gains to me, I have come to consider as [one combined] loss for Christ’s sake. Yes, furthermore, I count everything as loss compared to the possession of the priceless privilege (the overwhelming preciousness, the surpassing worth, and supreme advantage) of knowing Christ Jesus my Lord and of progressively becoming more deeply and intimately acquainted with Him [of perceiving and recognizing and understanding Him more fully and clearly]. For His sake I have lost everything and consider it all to be mere rubbish (refuse, dregs), in order that I may win (gain) Christ (the Anointed One), And that I may [actually] be found and known as in Him, not having any [self-achieved] righteousness that can be called my own, based on my obedience to the Law’s demands (ritualistic uprightness and supposed right standing with God thus acquired), but possessing that [genuine righteousness] which comes through faith in Christ (the Anointed One), the [truly] right standing with God, which comes from God by [saving] faith. [For my determined purpose is] that I may know Him [that I may progressively become more deeply and intimately acquainted with Him, perceiving and recognizing and understanding the wonders of His Person more strongly and more clearly], and that I may in that same way come to know the power outflowing from His resurrection [1 which it exerts over believers], and that I may so share His sufferings as to be continually transformed [in spirit into His likeness even] to His death, [in the hope], That if possible I may attain to the [2 spiritual and moral] resurrection [that lifts me] out from among the dead [even while in the body]. Not that I have now attained [this ideal], or have already been made perfect, but I press on to lay hold of (grasp) and make my own, that for which Christ Jesus (the Messiah) has laid hold of me and made me His own. I do not consider, brethren, that I have captured and made it my own [yet]; but one thing I do [it is my one aspiration]: forgetting what lies behind and straining forward to what lies ahead, I press on toward the goal to win the [supreme and heavenly] prize to which God in Christ Jesus is calling us upward. So let those [of us] who are spiritually mature and full-grown have this mind and hold these convictions; and if in any respect you have a different attitude of mind, God will make that clear to you also. Only let us hold true to what we have already attained and walk and order our lives by that. Brethren, together follow my example and observe those who live after the pattern we have set for you.” AMPLIFIED (Phil 3:7-17).

My point is that life lived in this manner gets the attention of heaven. There are Divine commitments that cannot be fulfilled unless a person grows up into Christ and lives in this way. As long as this type of life is not lived, the person is out of harmony with Jesus. I do not know how it is possible to justify any other conclusion.

Lesson #94

A PLEA TO THE GOVERNOR

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

The night following the rescue of Paul from a confused and violent crowd, the Lord stood by him, assuring him that all would be well, and he would testify of Christ in Rome. However, during that night the prince of darkness was also working, moving more than forty men to make a vow not to eat or drink until they had killed Paul. They made their intentions known to the council, asking them to have the captain bring Paul down so they could inquire of him. When he appeared, they thought, they would kill him. However, Paul's nephew heard the plot and told Paul, who informed one of the centurions to bring the young man to the chief captain, who then took appropriate action. He commissioned two centurions to marshal two hundred soldiers, seventy horsemen, and two hundred spearmen, and safely conduct Paul to the governor Felix, doing so at the third hour of the night. A beast was also to be provided Paul for the trip. An accompanying letter of explanation was also sent.

GOD IS IN THE MATTER

As will be confirmed in the events that follow, and in spite of appearance, God was in this whole matter. As the "Governor among the nations" (Psa 22:28), He is present in the affairs of men, particularly when they involve His children. Up to this point, as well as in what is now reported, the Lord has been Paul's "Shield" (Psa 28:7; 119:114; 144:2). The believer knows the Lord has been his shield when he is able to exit from trouble, thereby frustrating the efforts of the wicked one to kill and destroy.

When the Scriptures affirm "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord" (Psa 37:23), they do not mean trouble, pain, and inconvenience are not experienced. When Abraham left Ur of the Chaldees to go to a land that was promised to him, he faced a famine in the promised land (Gen 12:10). When he went down to Egypt to survive, he faced a king who wanted his wife for himself (Gen 12:15-16). When it came to his progeny Israel being delivered from Egypt, even for those who believed, the way to the promised land led through a desert "wherein were fiery serpents, and scorpions, and drought, where there was no water" (Deut 8:15).

When these things are not understood, life becomes confusing – especially for those who are in Christ, yet lack understanding. This is precisely why faith must be nourished, and believers must grow up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:15). No one in Christ can afford to be naive. The nature of spiritual of life in Christ Jesus demands that eventually the individual is "filled with all knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding" (Col 1:9). This is why Paul prayed for the churches, that the God of heaven would give unto them “the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him,” the eyes of their understanding “being enlightened,” that they might “know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of the power to usward who believe” (Eph 1:17-19). No believer can afford to ignorant of these critical matters.

“ 23:11 And the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome. 12 And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul. 13 And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy. 14 And they came to the chief priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul. 15 Now therefore ye with the council signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you to morrow, as though ye would inquire something more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him. 16 And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul. 17 Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him. 18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee. 19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me? 20 And he said, The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to morrow into the council, as though they would inquire somewhat of him more perfectly. 21 But do not thou yield unto them: for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee. 22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast showed these things to me. 23 And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Caesarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night; 24 And provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor. 25 And he wrote a letter after this manner: 26

Claudius Lysias unto the most excellent governor Felix sendeth greeting. 27 This man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman. 28 And when I would have known the cause wherefore they accused him, I brought him forth into their council: 29 Whom I perceived to be accused of questions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds. 30 And when it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had against him. Farewell. 31 Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris. 32 On the morrow they left the horsemen to go with him, and returned to the castle: 33 Who, when they came to Caesarea, and delivered the epistle to the governor, presented Paul also before him. 34 And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was. And when he understood that he was of Cilicia; 35 I will hear thee, said he, when thine accusers are also come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment hall.” (Acts 23:11-35)

THE LORD STANDS BY PAUL

“ 23:11 And the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome.”

At this point we will see the value of maintaining the fellowship with Christ into which we have been called. That fellowship includes the matter of Divine direction, for “the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord” (Psa 37:23). Before us is an example of the Lord directing the way of Paul to a specific place. We also read of such direction in regard to the Thessalonians. “Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, direct our way unto you” (1 Thess 3:11). In our text, the direction has to do with going to Rome. The details of how this will be accomplished are not provided – just the fact that the appointment is sure. It is enough to know the Lord will bring us safely to our appointed destination. We do not need to know all of the details. That is where faith and trust come in. As it is written, “Trust in the LORD with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own

THE LORD STOOD BY HIM

“And the night following the Lord stood by him . . .” Other versions read, “the Lord stood at his side,” NKJV “stood near Paul,” NIV “appeared to Paul.” MRD

The presence of the Lord and the manifestation of that presence are two different things. The presence of the Lord is sure. As it is written, “When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee ; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee” (Isa 43:2). And again, “Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have: for He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me” (Heb 13:5-6). Faith takes hold of this reality, and lives accordingly. However, as confirmed in this text, there are times when the Lord draws especially near and confirms this truth to our hearts, lest we be discouraged and faint because of unusual adversity.

This whole ordeal commenced in Acts 21:30 where Paul was forcibly removed from the Temple and the people sought to kill him. Beginning at that point, the following has taken place.

- Paul was beaten (Acts 21:32).
- He was rescued by a Roman captain and his soldiers (21:33a).
- He was bound with two chains (21:33b).
- A tumult resulted among the Jews which required that Paul be removed to the military barracks (21:34a).
- He was protected from the violence of the Jews (21:34b-35).
- Paul asked to speak to the people, and was given leave to do so (21:39-22:21).
- The Jews, hearing Paul speak of going to the Gentiles, erupted in anger, calling for his death (22:22-23).
- Paul is taken into the barracks for protection, where he was to be examined by scourging (22:24).
- Paul is bound with thongs (22:25).
- Having learned Paul was a Roman, he was delivered from the appointed scourging (22:25-29).
- The next day, Paul having been loosed, was brought down to appear before the Jewish council (22:30).
- Paul begins speaking to the council, and Ananias commands that he be struck on the mouth (23:1-2).

It will require diligence and spiritual discipline, but the people of God must extricate themselves from the misconception that the blessing of the Lord always means exemption from trouble.

- Paul rebukes the high priest, and is upbraided for speaking in such a manner to

- Paul acknowledges that it is improper to speak evil of the rulers, yet does not retract what he said, apparently not perceiving Ananias as being “God’s high priest” (23:5).

- Perceiving that the crowd is divided between Sadducees and Pharisees, Paul sets them against one another by saying he has been called into question concerning the hope of the resurrection (23:6).

- The crowd is divided, and a tumult arises that requires the rescue of Paul from being torn in two (23:7-10).

- Our text records the events of the second night of Paul’s incarceration, and preparations for the third day of the whole affair.

Now, how does your latest trial look compared to this solitary experience of Paul – which was by no means the most grievous of his trials? Learn from the text that Christ being with you does not translate into ease and convenience. The words of Eliphaz to Job are certainly applicable here: “He shall deliver thee in six troubles: yea, in seven there shall no evil touch thee” (Job 5:19). Sometimes the appointed path of the people of God leads through rivers and fire (Isa 43:2). For some, it leads them through the Red Sea and a scorching desert. For others, the appointed path leads through a lions den or a furnace of fire.

It will require diligence and spiritual discipline, but the people of God must extricate themselves from the misconception that the blessing of the Lord always means exemption from trouble. Sometimes it means being sustained through trouble – traveling through the sea and desert, and spending the night in prison, with your feet in stocks.

APPEARANCE OF JESUS TO PAUL

This is not the first or last time the Lord appeared to Paul. Few souls have been visited as frequently by the glorified Christ!

- Appeared to him on the road to Damascus prior to his conversion (Acts 9:3-22; 22:4-19; 26:13-15).

- Appeared to him in the Temple (Acts 22:17-21).

- Stood by him while in confinement (Acts 23:11).

- Jesus tells Paul His grace is sufficient (2 Cor 12:8-9).

Actually, the Lord was with Him all along, for we have been called into His fellowship. However, because of the extensiveness and vital nature of Paul’s ministry, these special appearances were granted. This is not the ordinary lot of those who are believers, but is reserved for those who have been called into unusual activity for the Lord. Those who boast of having Jesus talk to them, yet who are not engaged in a lofty work for the Lord, have probably not told the truth. That simply is not how Jesus has been revealed to us in Scripture.

BE OF GOOD CHEER

“ . . . and said, Be of good cheer, Paul . . . ’ ” Other versions read, “take courage,” NKJV “Keep up your courage,” NRSV “be constant,” DOUAY “don’t lose your courage,” GWN “be strong,” MRD “don’t worry,” CEV “don’t be afraid,” GNB “Be cheered,” LITV and “it’s going to be all right.” MESSAGE

One of the things that is clarified in the Scriptural presentation of Paul is that he thought in concert with the Lord. He did not suffer the distractions of professionalized religion and purely selfish ambition.

The words “be of good cheer” are translated from a single Greek word: Qa,rsei . The lexical meaning of the word is, “be of good courage, be of good cheer,” THAYER “don’t be afraid, take courage,” FRIBERG “cheer up,” UBS and “to have confidence and firmness of purpose in the face of danger or testing - to be courageous, to have courage, to be bold” LOUW-NIDA

This expression is used eight times in Scripture.

- Matthew 9:2: “Son, be of good cheer ; thy sins be forgiven thee” (Matt 9:2).
- Matthew 9:22: “ Daughter, be of good comfort . . .” (Matt 9:22; Lk 8:48).
- Matt 14:27; Mk 6:50: “ Be of good cheer ; it is I; be not afraid” (Mat 14:27; Mk 6:50).
- Mark 10:49: “And they call the blind man, saying unto him, Be of good comfort , rise; he calleth thee” (Mark 10:49).
- John 16:33: “These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer ; I have overcome the world” (John 16:33).
- Acts 23:11: “And the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul ” (Acts 23:11).

Being of good cheer relates to having confidence, being courageous in the face of trouble or sorrow, and not being afraid. It has to do with going forward when the winds of adversity are against you, and possessing a stabilizing hope when circumstance appears to contradict the logic and expectation of hope.

This is a word – “Be of good cheer” – that reminds the hearer that the Lord is in control , and that nothing is too hard for Him. It relates to Him fulfilling His purpose even though it seems everything is working against it. It is a call to look away from the circumstances to Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith, who is bringing us to glory, and working all things together for our good. It reminds us that it is God’s purpose that is being brought to completion, not the projects and intentions of men. Every other will, whether it be that of our adversary the devil, or our peers, is subject to the will of God. That is simply the truth of the matter. When the Lord said to Paul, “Be of good cheer,” it was a revelation that he was in the center of the will of God, and therefore had no reason to fear the reappraisals of men.

YOU MUST BEAR WITNESS AT ROME

“ . . . for as thou hast testified of Me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome.”

One of the things that is clarified in the Scriptural presentation of Paul is that he thought in concert with the Lord. He did not suffer the distractions of professionalized religion and purely selfish ambition. When he confessed, “For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain” (Phil 1:21), he was telling the truth. Again he confessed, “I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me” (Gal 2:20). In our time, this is an exceedingly rare posture of life. Yet, it is really the only one that is acceptable. After all, Jesus “died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15). It is staggering to the sensitive soul to hear preachers and teachers accenting what people want to do : the fulfilling of their dreams, etc. This is a fulfillment of the apostolic warning, “For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears ” (2 Tim 4:3). In other words, the time when preachers will deliver the message that is desired by men. That day has surely arrived! The fare that is being served up ranges from purely sectarian interests, to addressing subjects that have gained the attention of covetous people and those anchored firmly to this world .

As Thou Hast Testified

Other versions read, “But on the night immediately following, the Lord stood at his side and said, as you have solemnly witnessed to My cause at Jerusalem,” NKJV As you have testified for Me in Jerusalem,” NRSV “as you have borne a faithful witness to Me in Jerusalem,” CJB and “You've told the truth about Me in Jerusalem” GWN Candidly, that is not the way Jesus speaks to those who are disobedient and out of His will!

Remember, when Paul had determined to go to Jerusalem, some brethren had attempted to dissuade him from going.

- “And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days: who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem ” (Acts 21:4).
- “And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem ” (Acts 21:12).

Reasoning on these texts, some have affirmed that Paul was out of the will of God by going to Jerusalem. However, this was not the case as the word before us confirms. The Lord Jesus Himself stood by Paul and told him that he was going to testify in Rome, just as he had done in Jerusalem. It is inconceivable that the glorified Christ would have spoken in this manner if Paul had been out of his will in going to Jerusalem. The truth of the matter is that Paul had more understanding of that trip than those who sought to convince him he should not go. From the higher vantage point, their words had to do with the adversity he would face in Jerusalem. It was, in a sense, a test to Paul, to see if he was wholehearted in his commitment to serve the Lord. His response confirmed that he was.

We know from Paul’s letter to the Philippians that he was resolved to participate in the sufferings of Christ. “Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ . . . That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death” (Phil 3:9-10). Here, being conformed to Christ’s death has to do with crucifying the flesh – choosing Christ’s interests over personal interests. That is precisely what Paul did when he went to Jerusalem.

By saying Paul would testify in Rome in the same manner as he did in Jerusalem, Jesus meant that the testimony would be attended by suffering, just as it was in Jerusalem, and other places where he had ministered.

You Must Bear Witness in Rome

Other versions read, “so will you be My witness in Rome,” BBE “you must testify also in Rome,” ESV “Now you must tell the truth about Me in Rome,” GWN “so also art thou to testify at Rome,” MRD “now you must do the same in Rome,” NJB “so it behoveth thee also at Rome to testify,” YLT and “You must also go to Rome to do the same thing there!” IE

This is the language of Divine appointment. The word “must” is translated from the Greek word dei . The meaning of this word is, “it is necessary, there is need of, it behooves, is right and proper,” THAYER “as expressing compulsion, necessity, or inevitability in an event it is necessary, one must, one has to,” FRIBERG “be necessary, must; should, ought; be proper; impf. had to, should have,” UBS and “be necessary, must; should, ought; be proper; impf. had to, should have.” LOUW-NIDA

Resident in the word “must” is Divine appointment, obedience, willingness, and requirement. It is a strong word that reflects the reality of Divine government and direction. The very use of the word assumes a certain sensitivity on the part of the hearer, which brings assurance to him.

Some of the blessed promises that are fulfilled in this text are as follows.

- “The meek will He guide in judgment: and the meek will He teach His way ” (Psa 25:9).
- “I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye” (Psa 32:8).
- “The steps of a good man are ordered by the LORD : and he delighteth in his way” (Psa 37:23).
- “In all thy ways acknowledge him, and He shall direct thy paths ” (Prov 3:6).
- “ Man's goings are of the LORD ; how can a man then understand his own way?” (Prov 20:24).
- “And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it , when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left” (Isa 30:21).
- “Thus saith the LORD, thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; I am the LORD thy God which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go ” (Isa 48:17).
- “O LORD, I know that the way of man is not in himself : it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps” (Jer 10:23).
- “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose” (Rom 8:28).

There is a sense in which God’s path is in the sea (Psa 77:19). That is, it is not clear or discernible to those who live at a distance from Him, choosing not to live by faith and walk in the Spirit. However, for those who crucify the flesh, forget the past, and faithfully press toward the mark, the will of the Lord becomes more apparent through the ministry of the Lord. That is, Divine direction takes place while we are involved in what we do know. For example, when Abraham left Ur of the Chaldees, and as he traveled, he was given further directions. The same was true when he was commanded to offer up Isaac. He learned where he was going only after he had set out on the journey. When Israel came out of Egypt, they received further directions as they journeyed.

It is precisely at this point that many professing Christians are confined to ignorance concerning the will of the Lord. That, of course is the point of Romans 12:1-2. “I APPEAL to you therefore, brethren, and beg of you in view of [all] the mercies of God, to make a decisive dedication of your bodies [presenting all your members and faculties] as a living sacrifice, holy (devoted, consecrated) and well pleasing to God , which is your reasonable (rational, intelligent) service and spiritual worship. Do not be conformed to this world (this age), [fashioned after and adapted to its external, superficial customs], but be transformed (changed) by the [entire] renewal of your mind [by its new ideals and its new attitude], so that you may prove [for yourselves] what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God , even the thing which is good and acceptable and perfect [in His sight for you].” AMPLIFIED Legion is the name of those poor souls who remain shackled to the affairs of this world, when they have been called to higher things. They wander in a state of perpetual spiritual confusion, never sure of what they are to do, and falling into one pit after another. They do not know that when a person walks in the dark, they stumble because they do not know where they are going. Jesus said, “he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth” (John 12:35). And again, “But if a man walk in the night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him” (John 11:10).

THE JEWS BIND THEMSELVES UNDER A CURSE

“ 12 And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul. 13 And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy.”

The aggression of the enemies of the saints is a matter with which they must learn to contend. Some may labor under the misconception that God will always see to it that our enemies do not assert themselves – but that is only an imagination that has to be cast down.

The aggression of the enemies of the saints is a matter with which they must learn to contend. Some may labor under the misconception that God will always see to it that our enemies do not assert themselves – but that is only an imagination that has to be cast down. The “ sweet psalmist of Israel” frequently spoke to the Lord about his enemies.

- “Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me : for thou art my strength” (Psa 31:4).
- “For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit , which without cause they have digged for my soul” (Psa 35:7).
- “They gather themselves together, they hide themselves, they mark my steps, when they wait for my soul ” (Psa 56:6).
- “The wicked have laid a snare for me : yet I erred not from thy precepts” (Psa 119:110).
- “The proud have hid a snare for me , and cords; they have spread a net by the wayside ; they have set gins for me. Selah” (Psa 140:5).
- “In the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a snare for me ” (Psa 142:3).

Notable servants of God have endured persecution, and even martyrdom. The list includes

- Abel (Gen 4:8)
- Lot (Gen 19:9)
- Moses (Ex 2:15; 17:4)
- David (Psa 31:13; 59:1)
- Gideon (Judges 6:28-32)
- Elijah (1 Kgs 18:10; 19:1-21; 2 Kgs 1:9; 2:23)
- Micaiah (1 Kgs 22:26; 2 Chron 18:26)
- Elisha (2 Kgs 6:31)
- Hanani (2 Chron 16:10)
- Zachariah (2 Chron 24:21; Matt 23:35)
- Job (Job 13:4-13; 16:1-4; 17:2; 19:1-5; 30:1-10)
- Jeremiah (Jer 15:10,15-23; 26:1-24; 37:1-21; 38:1-6)

- Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Dan 3:8-23)
- Daniel (Dan 6:1-28)
- John the Baptist (Matt 14:3-12)
- James (Acts 12:2)
- Simon Peter (Mk 15:21)

- Peter and John (Acts 4:6-21)
- Lazarus (John 12:10)
- Stephen (Acts 6:9-15; 1:1-60)
- Paul (2 Cor 4:8-12; 11:24-33)
- Silas (Acts 16:23-25)
- Timothy (Heb 13:23)
- John the beloved (John 1:9)
- Antipas (Rev 2:13).

No believer should draw back when facing opposition, regardless of its source. God does not guarantee a life of ease, and we ought not expect such a condition. Of course, it is one thing to say this, it is quite another thing to behold it being lived out as it is in Paul.

CERTAIN OF THE JEWS BANDED TOGETHER

“And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul . . .”

Other versions read, “formed a conspiracy and bound themselves under an oath,” NKJV “made a plot and bound themselves by an oath,” NIV “They asked God to curse them if they ate or drank anything before they had killed Paul,” GWN “made a vow,” TNT and “did anathematize themselves.” YLT

As tutored by the Law, a certain sobriety existed in the Jewish community that is strange to the culture of our time. Although they were driven by hatred, and were wrong in their intentions, it was a corrupted view of religion that drove them. This, in my estimation, is the worst of all delusion, transcending political misconceptions, social delusions, and a view of life that accents this present evil world. The reason for the seriousness of religious delusion is that it acts as a kind of blanket that, in the eyes of those who are deceived, justifies what they are doing. It is like a spiritual narcotic that has put them to sleep, and allows them to oppose the truth and malign the saints with an uncondemning conscience.

To participate in evil causes will result in the sharing in their judgment. That was taught under the Law, confirmed by Jesus, and taught by the apostles.

THEY WERE MORE THAN FORTY

“And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy.” Other versions read, “about forty.” TNT The rest of the versions read “over forty.” These words are translated from two Greek words. plei,ouj (“greater in quantity . . . more than”), THAYER tessera,konta (“as a cardinal number forty”). FRIBERG

These men doubtless thought themselves capable of carrying out their diabolical scheme. Unwittingly, they had set themselves in opposition to what was contained in their Scripture, “Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished: but the seed of the righteous shall be delivered” (Prov 11:21). And again, “Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the LORD: though hand join in hand, he shall not be unpunished” (Prov 16:5). Again, the Law contained this warning, “Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil; neither shalt thou speak in a cause to decline after many to wrest judgment” (Ex 23:2). To participate in evil causes will result in the sharing in their judgment. That was taught under the Law, confirmed by Jesus, and taught by the apostles.

THE JEWS GO TO THE JEWISH COUNCIL WITH THEIR PLAN

“ 14 And they came to the chief priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul. 15 Now therefore ye with the council signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you to morrow, as though ye would inquire something more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.”

THEY CAME TO THE CHIEF PRIESTS AND ELDERS

“And they came to the chief priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul . . . ”

Other versions read, “We have taken a solemn oath,” NIV “We have strictly bound ourselves,” NRSV “We have taken a great oath,” BBE “We have cursed ourselves with a curse,” “We have asked God to curse us,” GWN “We have bound ourselves with imprecations,” MRD “With an anathema we did anathematize ourselves,” YLT and “We have strictly bound ourselves by an oath and under a curse.” AMPLIFIED

It is to be assumed that these Jews were members of the Sadducees party, since the scribes, speaking for the Pharisees, had said that no longer were willing to pursue charges against Paul. However, even though the Sadducees had apparently been quelled by the removal of Paul into the protection of a Roman “army” or “troops” NASB (Acts 23:27), these enemies formed something like a special hit squad who was determined to kill Paul before they ate or drank again.

Here is another example of people who are fundamentally disagreed joining together in their opposition to the servants of God. This same circumstance attended the rejection of Jesus (Matt 26:3; 27:1), Peter and John (Acts 4:13-20), and the Apostles as a whole (Acts 5:18-34). This confirms that the wicked, no matter how diverse they may appear to be, are united in their insurrection against the Lord and His Christ. Even though there may appear to be some who favor the elect, yet they do not step forward to defend them. Their supposed friendliness is only in word, not in action. In reality, the wicked have one heartbeat. Any apparent distinctions between them is only on the surface.

SIGNIFY TO THE CHIEF CAPTAIN

“Now therefore ye with the council signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you to morrow, as though ye would inquire something more perfectly concerning him . . . ”

Other versions read, “as though you were going to determine his case by a more thorough investigation,” NKJV “were going to make further inquiries, NASB “the pretext of wanting more accurate information,” NIV and “as if you were going to investigate his case more accurately.” AMPLIFIED

There is a certain naivety in the flesh that is most uncomely. These men assume that the captain will not see through their schemes, or that they will not in some way be interrupted. Of course, the captain had become acquainted with their devious ways, and would at least be suspicious of their intentions. This is not to consider the God of heaven who does “according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth,” with none being able to “stay His hand, or say unto Him, ‘What doest Thou’” (Dan 4:35).

In other words, “the flesh” thinks that it is invincible, and can carry out its intentions. Like Israel of old they reason, “They have belied the LORD, and said, It is not he; neither shall evil come upon us; neither shall we see sword nor famine” (Jer 5:12). The wicked man imagines, “I shall not be moved: for I shall never be in adversity” (Psa 10:6). Notice with what confidence these opponents of the Lord and His Christ speak. Yet, their words are nothing more than puffs of smoke.

WE ARE READY TO KILL HIM

“ . . . and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.” Other versions read, “slay him before he comes near the place,” NKJV and “before he gets here.” NRSV

Not only have these men hatched a plan, they are convinced they are fully competent to carry it out. They have a certain ignorance of God that does allow them to think soberly and soundly. They cannot imagine they will be thwarted in their plans.

Learn that the enemy is aggressive. The arch foe, the devil, “as a roaring lion, walking about seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pet 5:7). He can disguise himself as an “angel of light,” and “his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness” (2 Cor 11:14-15). In our text, his servants were leading religious men who operated in the name of the Lord.

If you are not aggressive Godward, taking the Kingdom by violence, there is no hope of you winning the good fight of faith. Many a poor soul has been cast down because they simply were too casual and uninvolved.

PAUL’S NEPHEW HEARS THE PLOT

“ 16 And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul.”

Never underestimate how the Lord can work in your behalf. In this case, a young man overhears the plot of some wicked men, and knows how to react to it. This, of course, was all orchestrated by the Lord. He can use a flying bird to blaze abroad a matter (Eccl 10:20). Truly, the “camp” of God “is very great” (Joel 2:11). In Joel’s prophecy that camp included “the locust, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm.” God refers to these as “ my great army which I sent among you” (Joel 2:25). In this text, the Lord’s army includes a young man, probably a boy.

PAUL’S SISTER’S SON

“And when Paul's sister's son . . .” Other versions read, “Paul’s nephew.” GWN/NLT

This is the only place in the Scriptures where these two people are mentioned: Paul’s sister and her son. Neither one of them are identified by name. We learn from this that Paul had no doubt witnessed powerfully to his family, so that at least some of them were inclined to him.

This is the only place in the Scriptures where these two people are mentioned: Paul’s sister and her son. Neither one of them are identified by name. We learn from this that Paul had no doubt witnessed powerfully to his family, so that at least some of them were inclined to him.

What is said of Paul’s nephew leads us to believe that he was rather young. Later, when he reports to the captain, it is written he took this boy “by the hand,” suggesting that he was but a youth.

We are given no information concerning how or why this young man was in Jerusalem. Perhaps he had been following the events concerning Paul, or was being schooled in Jerusalem. The thing to be seen here is the Headship of Christ, who is protecting His servant Paul.

HE HEARD OF THEIR LYING IN WAIT

“ . . . heard of their lying in wait . . .” Other versions read, “heard of their ambush,” NASB “heard of this plot,” NIV and “heard of their intended attack.” AMPLIFIED

What a remarkable thing! This young man gained knowledge about the wicked plot of these Jews.

They doubtless thought the whole matter was secret. However, the Lord controlled the situation so their plans would be thwarted by the activity of a youth.

Of course, we learn something about Paul's nephew as well. For one thing, he was apparently not among his peers when he gained this knowledge. He was either privy to the original discussion of these Jews, or somehow gained knowledge of their caucus with the chief priests and elders. This suggests his interest in Paul, as well as his familiarity with the leadership of the Jews.

The whole event stirs up memories of young Miriam, who was placed in charge of watching her infant brother when he was placed in a basket, and positioned among the reeds along the banks of the Nile. There this young girl watched, and upon seeing Pharaoh's daughter take up young Moses, went to her and asked if she should go to get a nurse of the Hebrew women to nurse the child for her (Ex 2:3-9).

There is also the record of a young boy Samuel, who was given a message from God to deliver to Eli, the priest who was tutoring him, and under whom he served in the tabernacle (1 Sam 2:18-3:19).

Another similar incident took place when Naaman, captain of the host of king of Syria, had leprosy. A certain captive girl served Naaman's wife. This young maiden told Naaman's wife, "Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy." This set in motion a series of events that led to the healing of Naaman (2 Kgs 5:3-14).

All these young people were taught of the Lord from their youth, and were used at a tender age. Each of them was discerning, and acted appropriately, confirming that God used them for His own glory.

The modern church is not producing children like this. Further, it is tragically true that many Christian parents do not raise their children to actually serve the Lord. They are not taught to be alert, nor can they be trusted to think and act correctly. Such things ought not to be. Admittedly, these were probably unusual children, but who are we to imagine that such children cannot be placed in our care? They are, after all, "the heritage of the Lord."

HE TOLD PAUL

"... he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul." Other versions read, "he went and entered the barracks and told Paul," NKJV "he went and gained entrance to the barracks and told Paul," NRSV "he came into the army building and gave news of it to Paul," BBE "came and entered into the fortress and reported it to Paul," DARBY and "he went and got into the barracks and told Paul." AMPLIFIED

How did Paul's nephew get into barracks? The Jews were denied entrance, for it was a place of protection for Paul. First, the Lord was behind this, bringing it all to pass. That is why Solomon wrote, "There is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the LORD" (Prov 21:30). Again Isaiah prophesied, "Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand: for God is with us" (Isa 8:10). The Lord brings the "counsel of the heathen to nought" (Psa 33:10). Thus did Isaiah write, "That frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish" (Isa 44:25). Here He did it with the hearing and response of a young boy.

Someone had to admit the boy to the barracks, for it was not accessible to everyone. Nor, indeed, could someone sneak into that area. I thus conclude that Paul's nephew was given favor in the sight of those who were securing the barracks. No one suspected he was intending to do Paul harm. Thus, we see that the Lord made a way where there was no way, using a servant that would have been overlooked by men.

THE COUNSEL OF PAUL

“ 17 Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him. 18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee. 19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me? 20 And he said, The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to morrow into the council, as though they would inquire somewhat of him more perfectly. 21 But do not thou yield unto them: for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee. 22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast showed these things to me.”

Conducting his life as a king and a priest, you sense there is a way in which Paul is in charge of the situation. He is given wisdom, and is therefore able to handle the situation in an expeditious manner. That is one of the marvelous results of living by faith and walking in the Spirit. It is also the outcome of maintaining the fellowship with Christ into which God has called us (1 Cor 1:9). This is also an example of what happens when men “walk in the light” (1 John 1:7). It ought to be noted that many professing

When an individual lives by faith and walks in the Spirit, their own spirit is sensitized to Divine direction. When anyone fails to live in this manner, they have cut themselves off from God, for faith and the Spirit are the appointed means through which the Lord directs one’s life for the good.

Christians are confused by life’s circumstances because they do not walk in the light. They are too close to the world.

PAUL CALLED ONE OF THE CENTURIONS

“Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him . . .” Other versions read, “Lead this young man to the commander, for he has something to report to him,” NASB “Take this youth to the chiliarch, for he has something to report to him,” DARBY and “Take this boy to the commander. He has something important to tell him.” LIVING

The words “young man” are translated from the Greek word neani,an , which has the following lexical meaning: “used of an older boy, young (unmarried) man,” FRIBERG “a young man beyond the age of puberty, but normally before marriage,” LOUW-NIDA and “children, youth,” LEH

There is no certain way of determining the age of Paul’s nephew. It was somewhere after puberty, and prior to marriage. At the least it would be around fourteen years of age, and at the most, the early twenties.

Something of the nature of trials of faith is seen in this text. Sometimes it is necessary to assess the situation, and take an action that is compatible with holiness, and to the maintenance of our calling. Answers to a dilemma do not always lie on the surface of life. There are also times when it is inappropriate to seek counsel from another. Some trials are designed for the individual to work them out, calling upon the resources that faith has brought.

Paul immediately knows what to do. He is aware that this is not something he can resolve on his own. I do not question that the Lord provided the answer to him at that very hour. This is what happens when a person lives “unto Him which died for them and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15). When an individual lives by faith and walks in the Spirit, their own spirit is sensitized to Divine direction. When anyone fails to live in this manner, they have cut themselves off from God, for faith and the Spirit are the appointed means through which the Lord directs one's life for the good.

HE TOOK HIM TO THE CHIEF CAPTAIN

“So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee . . .”

It is remarkable how there is a total absence of obstacles in this account. Paul's nephew enters and speaks to Paul. Paul calls one of the centurions and asks him to take the young man to the captain. The centurion then presents the young man to the chief captain, who cordially welcomes and listens to him.

DO NOT YIELD TO THEM

“Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me? 20 And he said, The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to morrow into the council, as though they would inquire somewhat of him more perfectly. 21 But do not thou yield unto them: for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee . . .”

The young nephew does not forget a single thing that he had heard, but gives a thorough report to the captain. So far as the text is concerned, Paul did not spell out what the young man was to say to the captain. He even delivers an exhortation to the captain to see to it that he does not yield to the request of the chief priests and elders. Notice the details of the report.

- The Jews agreed to ask the captain to bring Paul into the council.
- The Jews left the impression that their desire was to inquire further into the circumstances of Paul's arrest.
- The nephew then admonished the captain not to yield to the request of these Jews.
- More than forty men were lying in wait for Paul, ready to kill him.
- These Jews had bound themselves with an oath not to eat nor drink until they had killed Paul.

These Jews were fully prepared and awaiting a promise from the captain. Then they would set their plan in motion, they thought, and rid themselves of Paul and his influence.

Behind the circumstances, the Lord was at work, causing all things to harmoniously work for the ultimate good of Paul. This kind of working, we are told, is in the behalf of those who “love God, to them who are THE called according to His purpose” (Rom 8:28). It is axiomatic that such people are actually involved in the working of the purpose of God. For such precious souls, the Lord turns everything into an ultimate advantage. If the work of such an individual is not yet concluded, the Sovereign Lord will see to it that it is completed. If those opposing that individual appear to be gaining the upper hand, their cause will be overridden by the Lord, and cast down to the ground. Wherever required, others will rise to the defense of the Lord's workman.

Our text is providing some of the details of such marvelous working, and we do well to take note of them.

TELL NO MAN

“So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast showed these things to me.” Other versions read, “Tell no one that you have revealed these things to me,” NKJV “notified me of these things,” NASB “reported this to me,” NIV “informed me of this,” NRSV and “Do not disclose to anyone that you have given me this information.”
AMPLIFIED

There are some things that the general populous do not need to know. Such decisions are made in the interest of the truth and the will of the Lord. There is no room for naivety in such matters. The Gospel’s contain eight references to Jesus saying, “Tell no man” (Matt 8:4; 16:20; Mk 7:36; 8:30; 9:9; Lk 5:14; 8:56; 9:21). In each case Divine intention was the fundamental thing. In the above cases, there would come a time when it would be appropriate to disclose the information of reference. That disclosure, however, must not be premature. In this text, it would be years later that the details described would be revealed in the writing of Luke. But at the time these things were occurring, what was told must not be made known to anyone. Such knowledge would turn to the disadvantage of Paul.

Here we also see another facet of Divine working. Although the Lord is fully able of subduing all enemies, His will does not always center in such marvelous capability. Some matters are left to be worked out in the crucible of human conflict. In this way the circumstances may be studied with a mind to behold the working of the Lord according to what God has revealed of Himself.

Part of the newness of life is a proper assessment of circumstance. The people of God are not to be simple in this assessment. That is precisely why Jesus said, “Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment” (John 7:24). That word postulates that circumstance can appear to contradict the truth of the matter. Yet, when the condition is duly considered, faith will enable the believer to see behind the scenes that all things are being worked together for the good of the people of God. Of course, such a circumstance requires a working knowledge of the Word of God, and a familiarity with the ways and purpose of the Lord. Where this kind of awareness is not found, a sound judgment is not possible. Confusion, in such a case, is inevitable.

THE CHIEF CAPTAIN ACTS IN FAVOR OF PAUL

“ 23 And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Caesarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night; 24 And provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor.”

The captain acts on this new knowledge immediately – which itself is a most marvelous thing. He engaged in a rather complicated procedure on the word of a young man – a young man he apparently did not know. Furthermore, he came to know of Paul’s nephew in the hour of crisis, which is not always conducive to soundness of thought. The captain is not a Jew, and he is not a Christian. His primary interest is in his responsibilities as a Roman military leader. Yet, he treats the word of Paul’s nephew just as though it had come down from Caesar himself. This is the Lord’s doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes.

The Lord deals with the hearts of men, turning them when He wills to do so, even if the person is a king (Prov 21:1). On the surface, it often appears as though men have the total responsibility.

The Lord deals with the hearts of men, turning them when He wills to do so, even if the person is a king (Prov 21:1). On the surface, it often appears as though men have the total responsibility. Yet the Lord Himself works out the matter. Thus Solomon wrote, “The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the LORD ” (Prov 16:33). The Amplified Bible reads, “The lot is cast into the lap, but the decision is wholly of the Lord [even the events that seem accidental are really ordered by Him].” Thus, we have an inspired interpretation of the events of this text. God is at work, carrying out His own purpose in the midst of human circumstance.

HE CALLED TWO CENTURIONS

“And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Caesarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night . . .”

The Amplified Bible reads, “Have two hundred footmen ready by the third hour of the night (about 9:00 p.m.) to go as far as Caesarea, with seventy horsemen and two hundred spearmen.”

The captain immediately makes provision for the transfer of Paul. He knows there are forty men awaiting an opportunity to kill Paul. He offsets their presence with an impressive number of soldiers. Two hundred soldiers, seventy horsemen, and two hundred spearmen – four hundred and seventy in all. What are forty angry Jews in comparison to that? These Jews are not like Samson or Gideon’s small army. They are set in opposition to Christ Jesus and His servant Paul. They could not win against Paul’s nephew, let alone four hundred and seventy trained and seasoned soldiers.

God has thus marshaled an impressive army to deliver Paul, and they will move out at nine o’clock in the evening, putting the Jews at an even great disadvantage.

BRING HIM SAFE TO FELIX THE GOVERNOR

“And provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor.” Other versions read, “and provide mounts to set Paul on,” NKJV “mounts for Paul to ride,” NRSV and “Also provide beasts for mounts for Paul to ride.” AMPLIFIED

Notice with what care Paul is transferred to Felix the governor. It does not appear that this was always the manner in which prisoners were treated. Neither Pilate nor Herod had such care when the Lord Jesus was in their custody. Herod did not take special precautions when James was in his care, and then Peter. In Philippi, which was a Roman province, Paul and Silas were beaten and placed in an inner prison with their feet in stocks. Later, Felix would leave Paul bound in prison for two full years (Acts 24:27). Thus we see that government officials did not always have such care for Paul and others who preached the Gospel.

The special treatment of Paul was owing to Divine intervention. The Lord had appeared to Paul telling him he would bear witness of Him in Rome, just as surely as he did in Jerusalem. This promise now is attended by the hearts and minds of men being impacted by the Lord Himself. Thusfar, the thinking and conduct of the following people have been impacted.

- The Pharisees disagreeing with the Sadducees.
- The captain favoring Paul.
- Paul’s nephew overhearing a plot.
- A Centurion who listens to Paul.
- The soldiers assigned to protect Paul.

In each case, there was an accelerated concern for Paul – a concern that flesh could not possibly have anticipated. God was working in the behalf of His servant, ensuring that His will would be done. The exalted Christ had determined that Paul would testify of Him in Rome, and nothing could deter it!

THE ACCOMPANYING LETTER

“ 25 And he wrote a letter after this manner: 26 Claudius Lysias unto the most excellent governor Felix sendeth greeting. 27 This man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman. 28 And when I would have known the cause wherefore they accused him, I brought him forth into their council: 29 Whom I perceived to be accused of questions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds. 30 And when it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had against him. Farewell.”

The orderliness of this whole affair is interesting to ponder. The opposition that was raised against Paul was characterized within the context of chaos and irrationality.

- The Jews stirred up the people with irrational and uninformed speech (Acts 21:27-29).
- The city was in a state of uproar, and Paul was dragged out of the Temple (Acts 21:30a).
- The Temple doors were shut (Acts 21:30b).
- All Jerusalem was in an uproar (Acts 21:31).
- When Paul was rescued by an army, discordant cries erupted from the people with some crying one thing, while others cried another (Acts 21:34A).
- There was a tumult among the people (Acts 21:34b).
- When Paul delivered his first defense to the people, they responded by casting off their clothes and throwing dust into the air (Acts 21:23).
- A dissension arose between the Pharisees and the Sadducees, and the opposing multitude “was divided” (Acts 23:7).

Once again, I want to emphasize that the historical accounts of Scripture are more than a mere record of the activities and responses of men. The truth of God is lived out in these accounts, revealing the manner of Divine workings, as well as the mode of working that characterizes our adversary the devil.

An even greater dissension took place when some of the Pharisees spoke in defense of Paul (Acts 23:10).

Thus, the words of James were fulfilled in Paul’s accusers: “For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work” (James 3:16).

By way of comparison, the heathen, as represented by the Captain and his army, go about things in a very orderly and thoughtful manner. In them the word of Jesus is fulfilled: “the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light” (Luke 16:8).

Once again, I want to emphasize that the historical accounts of Scripture are more than a mere record of the activities and responses of men. The truth of God is lived out in these accounts, revealing the manner of Divine workings, as well as the mode of working that characterizes our adversary the devil.

One other thing needs to be noted. If a heathen captain went to such a great extent to deliver Paul safely to the appointed destination, what care must the Lord Jesus take in bringing “many sons to glory” (Heb 2:10a). What of the considerate care of the “Good Shepherd,” who is also “the Captain of” our “salvation” (John 10:11,14; Heb 2:10b).

HE WROTE A LETTER

“And he wrote a letter after this manner . . .” Other versions read, “He wrote a letter having this form,” NASB “He wrote a letter to this effect,” NRSV “having written a letter, couched in this form,” DARBY “wrote a letter . . . with the following message,” GWN and “having written a letter after this description.” YLT

The purpose of this section is not to supply a verbatim account of the letter written by the captain. It is rather to give the sense and thrust of the letter: “after this manner.” These are the exact words Jesus said in answer to the disciples request to teach them to pray: “After this manner therefore pray ye” (Matt 6:9; Lk 11:1). When the brethren in Jerusalem wrote letters to the Gentile believers concerning the matter of circumcision, Luke reports, “and they wrote letters by them after this manner” (Acts 15:23). This language does not suggest a human interpretation of the message of reference. Rather, it emphasizes the intent of the letter of reference. It is not meant to be a word-for-word report, but is intended to promote an understanding of what was written. On a practical level, this suggests that extended personal greetings and references would not be included in their entirety.

CLAUDIUS LYSIAS

“Claudius Lysias unto the most excellent governor Felix sendeth greeting . . .” Here the captain is first identified by name. Later, he is mentioned twice more (Acts 24:7,22). He is the “chief captain” referenced seventeen times in Acts 21:31,32,33,37; 22:24,26,27,28,29; 23:10,15,17,18,19,22; 24:7,22. He is certainly a key figure in this phase of Paul’s ministry. Although a heathen that did not know God, he was used by God to ensure the safety of Paul, and that he would arrive safely in Rome where he would bear witness to the Lord Jesus Christ.

God has often used heathen people to protect His own people.

- Abraham was sustained in Egypt ().
- Joseph was exalted to prominence in order to save his own people alive during the time of famine (Psa 105:17).
- The Pharaoh of Egypt gave Israel the land of Goshen, and nourished them during the time of famine (Gen 45:-9-11).
- Moses was raised by Pharaoh’s daughter (Ex 2:10).
- Israel developed as a nation in Egypt (Ex 1:7; Psa 105:24).
- God used Nebuchadnezzar to chasten Israel, referring to this heathen king as His “servant” (Jer 25:9; 27:6; 43:10)
- Daniel received favor from the Babylonian that was appointed over him and other Jewish captives (Dan 1:9).
- Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah were exalted sustained in Babylon (Dan 1:19).
- Daniel was exalted and favored by Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar Darius, and Cyrus (Dan 2:48; 5:29; 6:1-2,28).
- Nehemiah was cared for in the court of king (Neh 1:1; 2:1-8).
- Esther was protected as the wife of king Ahasuerus, who reigned “from India to Ethiopia” (Esth 1:1; 2:17).
- In the capacity of the king’s wife, Esther was used to save the Jews from extinction (Esth 8:1-17).
- Cyrus was used to initiate and fund the rebuilding of the Temple (2 Chron 36:22-23). God referred to Cyrus as “My shepherd” (Isa 44:28).
- Darius and Artaxerxes joined with Cyrus in commanding the rebuilding of the Temple (Ezra 6:14).

The above circumstances are a confirmation of the truth Paul wrote to Timothy: “But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honor, and some to dishonor” (2 Tim 2:20). Truly, “The earth is the LORD’S, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein” (Psa 24:1). The perception of this will produce a strong confidence in the hearts of God’s people.

It is not possible to overstate the practical value of knowing God is working all things together for the good of those who love Him and are called according to His purpose. The supporting pillars of that knowledge include that fact that God is, in fact, “the Governor among the nations” (Psa 22:28), and that He works His will “in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth” (Dan 4:35). Add to that the fact that Satan, our “adversary” is controlled by God to such an extent that he cannot lift a finger against the saints of God without Divine approval. This is clearly confirmed in the inspired record of Job (Job 1:1-2; 2:1-7).

Our text provides the outworking of Divine purpose, and the fact of God’s Sovereignty. In the blazing glory of the New Covenant, it is not necessary for Luke to affirm that God is behind Paul’s protection. In Christ, and in strict accord with the New Covenant itself, the saved “know” the Lord, and are able to recognize His working. It is quite true that the Roman captain, “Claudius Lysias” does not speak of the hand of the Lord – but that is only because he was not able to see it. His reports confirm that he thought he was acting strictly by his own volition and understanding.

I RESCUED HIM

“This man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman . . .”

Given the original circumstances of this case, it could have been concluded that Paul would be safely delivered from the Jews, and actually go forward in carrying out the will of God. However, when the Jews found Paul in the Temple, and dragged him out, shutting the Temple doors, and commencing to beat him, it appeared as though they were in charge . When the captain sought to identify the situation, and was only met with angry Jews and a noisy tumult, it appeared as though things were out of control . When forty angry Jews conspired to kill Paul, hatching a supposedly fool-proof scheme , it appeared on the surface as though a tremendous obstacle was introduced. However, what appears as a crisis on the earth, does not so appear in the heavenly realms. Concerning those who oppose the Lord’s Christ and those who are in Him, their oppositions are viewed like this by the Lord of glory: “He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision” (Psa 2:4).

Notice the accuracy of this letter. The facts are not embellished, but the report perfectly agrees with the inspired report of Luke (Acts 21:31-23:24). Carnal embellishment is never in order when reporting matters related to the Lord and His servants.

I WOULD HAVE KNOWN

“And when I would have known the cause wherefore they accused him, I brought him forth into their council . . .” Other versions read, “when I wanted to know the reason,” NKJV “wanting to ascertain the charge,” NASB “I wanted to know why they were accusing him,.” NIV and “wishing to know the exact accusation which they were making against him.” AMPLIFIED

It is a sad day when the heathen who “know not God,” are more discerning of right and wrong than those who are in covenant with God. Those who have been identified with religious institutions can testify to the continuance of this kind of thing.

The captain wanted to establish the legitimacy of the charges being brought against Paul. Therefore, he called the council to have them give an accounting of their cause. It was an honest effort to do what was right. However, he soon discovered the remarkable degree of prejudice and hatred that existed among Paul's accusers. However, he did not wash his hands like Pilate, and back away from the whole incident, giving place to the contentious Jews. He rather pursued justice. Although he was himself unaware of it, the Lord was directing this whole affair.

ACCUSED OF QUESTIONS OF THEIR LAW

“Whom I perceived to be accused of questions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds . . .”

The captain approached his duties with integrity, and in conformity with the laws of the land. He saw that Paul had done nothing in violation of Roman law, and so he candidly acknowledged that this was a matter pertaining to Jewish law. Yet, his accusers “laid nothing to his charge worthy of death or bonds.”

It is a sad day when the heathen who “know not God” (1 Thess 4:5), are more discerning of right and wrong than those who are in covenant with God. Those who have been identified with religious institutions can testify to the continuance of this kind of thing. From experience, I can tell you that the most unfair and unreasonable opposition I have experienced has been from the professed church and the institutions associated with it. The number of people that I personally know who have experienced the same is staggering for size. The religious landscape is cluttered with broken hearts and wounded spirits that have been battered by sectarian Christianity.

This kind of thing is owing to the stultifying effects of religious institutionalism. The more humanly-devised organization is found in the professed church, the more spiritually illogical and unreasonable it becomes. The input of worldly wisdom causes a lessening of sound reasoning, and pushes holy interests into the background .

I GAVE COMMANDMENT TO HIS ACCUSERS

“And when it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had against him. Farewell.”

Politically speaking, Lysias appealed to a higher power when his own aptitude became limited. He was not willing to let this whole matter go, as Pilate did with Jesus. He did not allow the Jewish council to have their own way, but insisted they present their cause to a higher court. His quest was for justice to be properly administered. Too, in the presentation of the matter, he confined himself to the facts and an accurate portrayal of them. He is an example of a faithful steward – someone who faithfully fulfilled his responsibility.

In this, Claudius Lysias is a most excellent example of Christ's own good and faithful stewards. Such carry out their responsibilities even though it may have to be done in the midst of difficulty and tumult. They also know how to cast their burden upon the Lord without abandoning their own responsibility. See, even in the account of a gentile captain, there is a kind of exhortation embedded in the report that speaks to the heart of the people of God.

Knowing how to interact with appointed authorities is a matter in which the people of God should obtain some level of expertise.

THE SOLDIERS DELIVER PAUL SAFELY TO THE GOVERNOR

“ 31 Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris. 32 On the morrow they left the horsemen to go with him, and returned to the castle: 33

Who, when they came to Caesarea, and delivered the epistle to the governor, presented Paul also before him. 34 And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was. And when he understood that he was of Cilicia; 35 I will hear thee, said he, when thine accusers are also come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment hall.”

Again, we have an example of faithful service. Those who offer convenient excuses for being unfaithful or retarded in their service have stooped beneath the level of the heathen of this text.

BROUGHT BY NIGHT TO ANTIPATRIS

“Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris . . .”

Remember the disorder that had characterized the Jews’ confrontation of and opposition to Paul.

- The Jews from Asia saw Paul in the temple and stirred up the people (Acts 21:27-28).
- “All the city” of Jerusalem was adversely moved, and the frenzied people “ran together,” seized Paul, dragging him out of the Temple, and shut the Temple doors (Acts 21:30).
- The Jews “went about to kill” Paul (Acts 21:31a).
- “All Jerusalem was in an uproar” (Acts 21:31b).
- The Jews were beating Paul when they were interrupted by a Roman army (Acts 21:31-32).
- When the Roman captain inquired concerning the cause, “some cried one thing, some another,” and a tumult ensued (Acts 21:33-34).
- As Paul was carried away to a place of safety, the Jews followed “crying, ‘Away with him’” (Acts 21:35-36).
- After hearing Paul speak in his own defense, and upon hearing him say the word “Gentiles,” the Jews “cast off their clothes” to stone him, “and threw dust into the air” (Acts 21:22-23).
- At Paul’s second defense, when he said he was a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee, and had been called into question concerning resurrection of the dead, the multitude of Jews “was divided” (Acts 22:6-8).
- There was a “great cry” among the people, and when certain scribes spoke in defense of Paul, “a great dissension” resulted among the Jews (Acts 22:9-10).
- Fearing that Paul would be “pulled in pieces,” the captain had him removed to the interior of the barracks (Acts 22:10).
- Certain of the Jews, more than forty in number, banded together and took an oath not to eat or drink until they had killed Paul (Acts 22:12-13).

It is no wonder that James wrote, “For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work” (James 3:16). By way of comparison, the Roman captain maintained thoughtful composure, taking care not to violate any of the Roman laws. He acted wisely in protecting Paul without breaking the law, doing so in the interest of justice.

In this case, someone with less knowledge, who did not know God, conducted himself more honorably than those who had been designated as stewards of the things of God. It is said of the Jews, “Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen” (Rom 9:4-5).

I do not doubt that this Roman captain and those who were under him will rise in the judgment with the Queen of Sheba and Nineveh to testify against those who claimed to know God, yet conducted their lives in an unacceptable manner.

As It Was Commanded Them

This group of soldiers did exactly as they were told, working together in a common cause – four hundred and seventy men: 200 soldiers, 70 horsemen, and 200 spearmen. This entire group did “as it was commanded them.” Two centurions were commanded to assemble the troops, provide mounts for Paul, and “bring him safe unto Felix the governor” – and they did so.

One would be hard pressed to find a group of professing Christians that size who were doing what the Lord had commanded, and doing so with harmony and exactness. There are some who think that special training is required to accomplish such a feat. Yet, this very incident testifies to the natural capacities of the only creation made in the image, and after the similitude, of God (Gen 1:27; 9:6; James 3:9).

That capacity is elevated in Christ Jesus, so that it is possible for those in Him to be “of one mind” (Rom 15:6; 2 Cor 13:11; Phil 1:27; 2:2; 1 Pet 3:8). This is precisely why believers are admonished to be “perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment ” (1 Cor 1:10). Early believers are described as being “of one heart and of one soul” (Acts 4:32), and “of one accord” (Acts 5:12). It is a transgression of the greatest magnitude when professing Christians learn to live with division as though it was sanctioned by the Lord. Even a heathen government like Rome saw the value and necessity of its constituents being of one accord.

Brought Him By Night

During the night, when society was generally inactive, Paul was taken safely to the appointed destination. From the standpoint of the Roman captain, this whole thing was a requirement to establish the facts in the case. However, from the heavenly vantage point, this was the appointed means of getting Paul to Rome, where he would testify of Christ.

To this point, there were several barriers raised up, designed by the wicked

Ponder how Moses, and the judges who later joined him, had to respond to the many cases that were brought to them (Ex 18:13-26). Recall how Solomon had to react immediately to two women who claimed the same child as their own (1 Kgs 3:17-28). Ponder how Peter had to discern and act quickly in reference to Ananas and Sapphira.

one to stop the spread of the Gospel. Paul was seized in the Temple, and supposedly taken out of activity. He was beaten, which would have been a great discouragement to many. He was arrested, which appeared to be successful deterrent. A plot was calculated against him that appeared to be foolproof. Now he is scheduled for a trial before Felix the governor. Charges will be leveled against him in a professional manner. Everything seems to be working against Paul testifying of Christ Jesus in Rome. But that is only appearance, and men are not to judge according to appearance (John 7:24). The closer men live to the surface of life, the more apt they are to be deceived. The more they are enamored of, or devoted to, appearance, the more they are prone to error.

Antipatris was “a station between Jerusalem and Caesarea where the soldiers left Paul, after their night march, in charge of the horsemen who were to take him forward to Caesarea on the morrow.” McClintok & Strong's' It was apparently far enough away to be safe from the Jews who were laying in wait for Paul elsewhere.

THEY DELIVERED THE EPISTLE TO THE GOVERNOR

“ On the morrow they left the horsemen to go with him, and returned to the castle: 33 Who, when they came to Caesarea, and delivered the epistle to the governor, presented Paul also before him . . .”

After a night’s rest, the horsemen, and possibly the spearmen, continued on, taking Paul to Felix the governor.

Faithful to their charge, they have kept the letter to Felix safe, and deliver it with Paul to the governor, their mission being accomplished. Caesarea was about seventy miles northwest of Jerusalem. A days journey by horseback was six to eight hours in length, and twenty-five to thirty miles. We do not know how long the travelers remained in Antipatris, but it could not have been long. They probably traveled through most of the night, finishing the trip the next day. Any way you look at it, it was an aggressive trip. Like the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, Paul’s deliverance was certainly not attended with ease and comfort. It seems to me that this is not uncommon in the working of the Lord.

Now Paul is presented before the governor. The text reads as though this was done immediately. First, however, they delivered the letter the captain had written to the governor to familiarize him with the case. He had no advance warning of this, so had to react in an impromptu manner. That is, I have observed, a mark of true leaders. If this is true in the world, it is even more true in matters pertaining to life and godliness.

Ponder how Moses, and the judges who later joined him, had to respond to the many cases that were brought to them (Ex 18:13-26). Recall how Solomon had to react immediately to two women who claimed the same child as their own (1 Kgs 3:17-28). Ponder how Peter had to discern and act quickly in reference to Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:1-10). Jesus once said to His disciples, “But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak” (Matt 10:19).

OF WHAT PROVINCE

“And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was. And when he understood that he was of Cilicia . . .” Other versions read, “What part of the country do you come from?” BBE “asked of what eparchy he was,” DARBY and “he asked of what country he was.” TNT

A “province” is defined as “the region subject to a prefect; a province of the Roman empire.” THAYER Felix knew from Lysias’ letter that Paul was a Roman, but he did not know the country with which Paul was identified. He doubtless asked so he could determine whether or not Paul was from a country that was under his jurisdiction.

Notice that although the charges brought against Paul originated in Judea, yet Paul’s country is reckoned to be the one in which he was born, and which was properly called his country. He would be judged as a citizen of Rome by the procurator that was responsible for that region. We know from the answer of Felix, that he was that ruler.

Paul answers that he was from Cilicia, where Tarsus was located. This was apparently a region that was under Felix.

There is a parallel here with life in Christ Jesus. In the final judgment, men will be judged in accordance with the kingdom with which they are identified, whether it is the domain over which Satan rules, or the Kingdom of Christ. Just as it was in our text, the determination will be made according to where a person was born. The eighty-seventh Psalm refers to this principle in these words: "I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know Me: behold Philistia, and Tyre, with Ethiopia; this man was born there . And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her: and the Highest Himself shall establish her" (Psa 87:4-5).

I WILL HEAR

"I will hear thee, said he, when thine accusers are also come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment hall." Other versions read, "kept in Herod's Praetorium," NKJV "in Herod's palace," NIV "guard in Herod's headquarters," NRSV and "And he ordered that an eye be kept on him in Herod's palace (the Praetorium)." AMPLIFIED

Thus the stage is set for the next phase of this event. To guarantee Paul's safety, he is kept in Herod's headquarters, which doubtless was guarded well. The "praetorium" was the place where judgment was rendered. Hence the Authorized refers to it as "Herod's judgment hall."

It is important to remember that there is a place where ultimate judgment will be made of every man. Scripture refers to it as "the judgment seat of Christ" (Rom 14:10; 2 Cor 5:10). It is so identified because God "will judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom He hath ordained; whereof He hath given assurance unto all men, in that He hath raised Him from the dead" (Acts 17:31). Jesus Himself affirmed, "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (John 5:22). Of course, there is a distinction in the day of judgment over which Jesus will reside. Those who have lived by faith will have no accusers. However, those who have had unique privileges and advantages, yet lived in contradiction of them, will have accusers like the Queen of Sheba and Nineveh (Lk 11:31-32). Their testimony will not determine the judgment rendered toward the slothful. It will, however, justify God by corroborating the judgment determined against them. It is good to prepare for that appointed time.

CONCLUSION

The government of Jesus is seen in this whole event. Various vessels are used for His glory – some are vessels "to honor," and some are vessels "to dishonor" (2 Tim 2:20).

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS LIKE A NET. Jesus taught that the kingdom of God was like a net which caught fish "of every kind." At the conclusion of the expedition, the net was drawn to shore: "Which, when it was full, was drawn to shore," and "they sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away" (Matt 13:47-48).

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS LIKE A FIELD OF MIXED SEED. Again, the kingdom of God is likened to "a man sowed good seed in his field." At night, while men slept, an enemy came in and "sowed tares among the wheat." The field remained under the management of the owner until "the time of harvest." Then, Jesus said, "I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn" (Mat 13:30).

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS LIKE WISE AND FOOLISH VIRGINS. Again, the Kingdom of God is like "unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom" (Matt 25:1). The "foolish" were not fully exposed until the Bridegroom appeared. It was at that time that they were eliminated, although they were under His supervision all along (Matt 25:2-12).

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS LIKE A VINEYARD WITH UNFAITHFUL STEWARDS. The Kingdom is also like a "certain householder" who planted a vineyard, preparing it adequately, and then leaving for a "far country." The vineyard was left in the care his servants, some of whom were wicked. Although they were under the government of the owner of the vineyard, they were not exposed and removed until he returned (Matt 21:33-41).

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS LIKE FAITHFUL AND UNFAITHFUL STEWARDS. Again, the Kingdom of God is like a man who

In each of these parables the Kingdom is depicted as under the control of the Lord, even though wicked, slothful, and unfaithful men were involved in His work. However, the time of reckoning came when they faced the ultimate Owner, to whom they had to give an account. Not a single unfaithful servant gained the master's approval, and there was not a faithful servant who did not. This is the manner of the Kingdom.

distributed his goods to his servants to manage them until he returned from a far country. One of those servants was unfaithful, even though he received a portion of his master's goods to manage. That servant was exposed and eliminated when the owner returned (Matt 25:14-30).

In each of these parables the Kingdom is depicted as under the control of the Lord, even though wicked, slothful, and unfaithful men were involved in His work. However, the time of reckoning came when they faced the ultimate Owner, to whom they had to give an account. Not a single unfaithful servant gained the master's approval, and there was not a faithful servant who did not. This is the manner of the Kingdom.

The principle made known in these parables is lived out in our text. Ponder all of the people who were involved.

- Jews from Asia (Acts 21:27a).
- Jews in the Temple who were stirred up by the Jews from Asia (Acts 21:27b).
- All the city of Jerusalem who ran together and took Paul out of the Temple (Acts 21:30).
- A chief captain of the Roman government (Acts 21:31).
- The soldiers that were marshaled by this captain (Acts 21:32a).
- Centurions (Acts 21:32b; 23:10,23).
- A multitude of Jews crying out different things when asked by the captain the reason for the tumult (21:33-34).
- A centurion to whom Paul spoke, asking if it was lawful to scourge a Roman when he was uncondemned (Acts 21:25).
- The chief priests (Acts 22:30a).
- The Jewish council (Acts 22:30b).
- Ananias the high priest (Acts 23:2).
- The one who struck Paul on the mouth at the command of Ananias (Acts 23:2-3).
- Those who "stood by," who asked Paul why he dared to revile God's high priest (23:4).
- Sadducees (Acts 23:6a,7).
- Pharisees (Acts 23:6b,7).
- Scribes (Acts 23:9).
- Forty Jews who bound themselves under a curse not to eat or drink until they had killed Paul (Acts 23:12-13).
- The Jewish elders (Acts 23:14).
- Paul's nephew – his sister's son (Acts 23:16-17).

- A specific centurion whom Paul told to take his nephew to the chief captain (Acts 23:17).
- Two hundred soldiers (Acts 23:23a).
- Seventy horsemen (Acts 23:23b).
- Two hundred spearmen (Acts 23:23c).
- Felix the governor (Acts 23:33-35).

There are twenty-four classes of individuals and groups involved in two or three days of activity. They differed in theology, rank, and responsibility. Yet, one senses a certain order in the events in which they took part. There was a very definite sense in which they were all vessels in the Lord's house. Some of them would eventually be cast away, while others would be identified with the One who governs the kingdom. None of them used the Lord, but the Lord used them.

It is comforting to know that the same Lord is working all things together for our good (Rom 8:28). That is not as possibility, it is the guarantee Divine posture of those who love God and are the called.

Lesson #95

THE CHARGES AGAINST PAUL

“ 24:1 And after five days Ananias the high priest descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor against Paul. 2 And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence, 3 We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness. 4 Notwithstanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words. 5 For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes: 6 Who also hath gone about to profane the temple: whom we took, and would have judged according to our law. 7 But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands, 8 Commanding his accusers to come unto thee: by examining of whom thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things, whereof we accuse him. 9 And the Jews also assented, saying that these things were so. 10 Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned unto him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully answer for myself: 11 Because that thou mayest understand, that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem for to worship. 12 And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city: 13 Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me.” (Acts 24:1-13)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

After a five-day wait, their intentions having been providentially subverted by a Roman captain, and, as a matter of legality, the Jews now prepare to substantiate their charges against Paul. They bring an orator with them to present the case in a colorful and convincing manner. The presentation is made, with the Jews consenting to its accuracy. Now Paul is given an opportunity to answer the false charges. He commences by stating that he knows Felix has been a judge to the Jewish nation for “many years.” He knows that during those years he has become familiar with Jewish manners. He also begins by saying he had only been in Jerusalem for twelve days – hardly long enough to do what the Jews have alleged – not even two weeks. The composure of Paul is evident in the manner and content of his speech. He has been prepared for this time, and fortified within by an appearance of the Lord Himself. He knows his work will not end in Judea, and thus speaks with the confidence that is birthed by faith.

SPIRITUAL INSIGHT

When Paul wrote that “the love of Christ constrains,” he was careful to say “us” instead of “me” (2 Cor 5:14). That is because it is the very nature of the love of Christ to constrain, compel or press the one who discerns it. When that love is seen for what it really is, it outshines every other influence. It is superior because it is absolutely unique. There is no adversarial influence that is capable of separating us from it (Rom 8:35). That is because it is not founded on Christ’s reaction to you personally. His love for humanity proceeds from His love for and commitment to the Father. That is why it is said of “the love of Christ” that is “passeth knowledge,” or “surpasses knowledge.” NASB

This is a love that passes all knowledge, or extends beyond the perimeter of natural aptitude, because it has no earthly parallel. Christ’s love transcends a mother’s love, which is not powerful enough to guarantee she will not have compassion on the son of her love (Isa 49:15). Thus, God said of His love for His people, which is of the same class as the love of Christ, “Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me” (Isa 49:15-16).

By faith, Paul saw more deeply into this love than others. That is why his labors were more prodigious, and his patience more exemplary. Here is his own testimony on this matter: "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me" (Gal 2:20). This love was so compelling that it prompted Paul to forsake all competing interests, laying himself upon the altar of sacrifice. That is why he wrote, "But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord . . . That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death" (Phil 3:7-10).

THE CONNECTION

No person who is actually living by faith will be astounded at the composure of Paul. They know by experience how faith impacts upon the human spirit. When people are confused and astounded at the Scriptural record of the reactions of saints, they are betraying their own lack of acquaintance with a life that is lived by faith.

Paul's unparalleled devotion and endurance can be traced to the comprehension of the love of Christ. That perception is what enabled him to go through trials that were of an extraordinary nature, and do so confidently. On one occasion, when he "despaired even of life," he held on his way, knowing that the sentence of death came "that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead" (2 Cor 1:8). Another time, when he was incarcerated, he wrote to the brethren at Philippi, "For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ" (Phil 1:19). Another time he wrote to the saints in Rome, "And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience" (Rom 5:3). When he was given a "thorn in the flesh" that was of sufficient aggravation that he thrice asked for its removal, he said this: "And He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for My strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong" (2 Cor 12:10).

All of that is being lived out in our text. That is why Paul has the presence of mind to speak wisely, act discreetly, and seize every opportunity set before him. When he was tempted, he was able to find the door of escape that accompanies every temptation (1 Cor 10:13). He maintained courage, and did not faint in the day of adversity. It is written, "If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small" (Prov 24:10).

The person who knows the love of Christ is the one who knows "If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Rom 8:31). It is the person who can "boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me" (Heb 13:6).

This kind of confidence, boldness, and assurance cannot be taught in the schools of men. It is not the result of forming new habits, or repeating a saying over and over. It is not the result of special training in the way to think. This is rather the result of a faith that extends into heaven itself, taking hold of the love of Christ. This is a love that convinces the heart, so that it knows beyond all controversy that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose" (Rom 8:28). This is a very precise statement of the case, and can be received without fear.

No person who is actually living by faith will be astounded at the composure of Paul. They know by experience how faith impacts upon the human spirit. When people are confused and astounded at the Scriptural record of the reactions of saints, they are betraying their own lack of acquaintance with a life that is lived by faith. The foes ought not be fed with expressions that reflect consternation at the unwavering faith of Noah, Abraham, the Prophets, and the Apostles. When teachers and preachers make remarks like, “That is certainly not the way we would react,” they have fueled doubt and invited an “evil heart of unbelief” to enter. They have represented today’s stumbling religious generation as normal, while painting the saints of old as something like heroes. The truth of the matter is that saints like those listed in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews represent those who really do live by faith. The results found in their lives were not the result of super-discipline, but were the result of believing God.

Who is able to calculate the effects of sayings that concede to the flesh and represent the thinking of the carnal mind? They are not innocent, and are not to be tolerated. We have a word from God on this matter: “If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God” (1 Pet 4:11). No person is right who claims to represent the living God, yet speaks in a manner that is out of synch with the nature of genuine spiritual life.

The consciousness of the effects of preaching, both valid and invalid, are little known these days. Many religious professionals speak more like comedians and entertainers than men of God. This is done even though the Holy Spirit has made quite clear how we are to address the saints of God. Illuminated men speak “unto men to edification, exhortation, and comfort” (1 Cor 14:3). Not one of those objectives can be realized through speaking that appeals to the flesh. Such speech assumes the normality of carnality, unbelief, and fundamental unspirituality. However, such assumptions are a flagrant denial of the reality of regeneration, the new creation, and being born again. To attempt to placate those who are living at a distance from God is a transgression of the greatest magnitude. No effort should be extended to make a person living in the flesh comfortable. Such people are in a state of condemnation, “For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die : but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live” (Rom 8:13).

Spiritual words, or words that the Holy Spirit teaches (1 Cor 12:13) , will never pacify the flesh. Such words are never calculated to make carnal people laugh, or worldly-minded people to feel comfortable in their state. Such things simply cannot occur when men speak “as the oracles of God.”

When considering a passage like the one now before us, care must be taken to get out of a merely historical mindset. Men of God like Paul are not to be considered as mere heroes living beyond the perimeter of practical spirituality. In the case of Paul, his ministry was unique, but his manner of life was not. After describing the way he thought about himself and living for the Lord (both of which appear to the carnal as unique), Paul said, “Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded : and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you” (Phil 3:15). Any other kind of mindset is not acceptable. That is why the Lord will “reveal” the necessity and validity of a life wholly lived for Him.

Thus, it is incumbent upon us to view this passage as an evidence of the minds and hearts of men. We are beholding the effects of religious bigotry and unbelief, as well as a life lived by faith. There is also the revelation of people who want to do what is right, even though they are not believers. Yet, they have enough understanding to want fairness for men. These various dispositions are all duly noted, controlled, and orchestrated by “the Lord of all.”

ANANIAS, THE ELDERS, AND TERTULLUS

“ 24:1 And after five days Ananias the high priest descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor against Paul.”

The Spirit now leaps over a five-day period, saying nothing about what took place during that time, whether good or bad. This again confirms that the book of Acts, strictly speaking, is not a chronological journal of the travels and experiences of holy men. It is rather a record of the activities of the Head of the church, who was working through His servants to fulfill the will of God. Within that context, some matters were relevant, and some were not.

AFTER FIVE DAYS

“And after five days . . .” Other versions read, “five days later,” NIV and “five days after this.”
WEYMOUTH

Paul was left in “Herod’s judgment hall” for this period of time. The NRSV reads that Paul was “kept under guard in Herod’s headquarters.” He was, in fact, a prisoner – whether bound or not we do not know.

ANANIAS DESCENDS WITH THE ELDERS

“Ananias the high priest descended with the elders . . .” Other versions read, “came down with,” NKJV “came down to Caesarea,” NIV “went to the city of Caesarea with some leaders of the people,” GWN “went down,” MRD “arrived with,” NLT and “came down [from Jerusalem to Caesarea].”
AMPLIFIED

Although I have mentioned this before, it seems appropriate to draw attention to it again. Actually, Caesarea was north of Jerusalem, yet Ananias and the elders are said to have “descended,” or “went down” to that city from Jerusalem. The phrase “UP to Jerusalem” occurs twenty-five times in Scripture (1 Kgs 12:19; 2 Kgs 12:17; 16:6; 2 Chron 2:16; Ezra 1:3; 7:13; Matt 20:17,18; 10:32-33; Lk 2:42; 18:31; 19:28; John 2:13; 5:1; 11:55; Acts 11:2; 15:2; 21:4,12,15; 24:11; 25:9; Gal 1:17,18). The phrase “down from Jerusalem” occurs four times in Scripture (Mk 3:22; Lk 10:30; Acts 8:26; 25:7).

This is not language denoting direction. It is rather the language of perspective, for Jerusalem was positioned in high places. God referred to Jerusalem as “My holy mountain, Jerusalem” (Isa 66:20). Daniel said of this city, “Thy city, Thy holy mountain” (Dan 9:16). Zechariah wrote, “Jerusalem shall be called a city of truth; and the mountain of the LORD of hosts the holy mountain” (Zech 8:3). The Psalmist spoke “the mountains” that were “about Jerusalem” (Psa 126:2). The lofty heights of Jerusalem required that those going to it ascend – wherever they were coming from. Those leaving Jerusalem were required to descend – wherever they were going.

In this, Jerusalem proved to be a most accurate type of the place to which those in Christ are elevated. The epistle to the Hebrews affirms that the saved “are come to mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem” (Heb 12:22). Ephesians refers to this location as the “heavenly places” where the redeemed have been made to “sit together” (Eph 2:6). Any person occupying this blessed residence must be raised up, leaving the low places of carnality, and rise higher than this present evil world. Anyone who retrogresses spiritually, allows an evil heart of belief to enter them, departing from the living God. They have to come down to do this.

Therefore, Ananias and the elders left the high place of Jerusalem, and descended from it to the lower realm of Caesarea. They came to formally present their charges against Paul, doing so at the behest of the chief captain and Felix the governor.

A CERTAIN ORATOR

“ . . . and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor against Paul.” Other versions read, “a certain attorney,” NASB “a lawyer,” NIV “a spokesman,” RSV “an expert talker,” BBE “an advocate,” NAB “a pleader,” WEYMOUTH “prosecuting attorney,” WILLIAMS and “spokesman and counsel.”
AMPLIFIED

The word “orator” is translated from the Greek word ῥῆτορ, which means, “a speaker, orator,” THAYER “orator, public speaker; as a court speaker attorney, lawyer,” FRIBERG and “one who speaks in court as an attorney or advocate (either for the prosecution or for the defense) - 'lawyer, attorney, advocate.'" LOUW-NIDA The idea here is that of a speaker that lays forth a case in an expert or skilled manner. He was probably knowledgeable of Roman court procedures, as well as being skilled in both the Greek and Latin languages.

The name Tertullus is a Roman name, and the man was probably a Roman. Such a man, together with the Jewish officials, was thought to tip the scales in favor of the Jews. To a accused person who was not of faith, it would have been an intimidating situation. But this was certainly not the case with Paul. He could say with David, "Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident" (Psa 27:3). Faith neutralizes the power of the enemy, making the believer superior to circumstance. Oh, that this was better known among professing Christians. In our time, there is a marked dependence upon the men of this world and their wisdom, which is "from beneath."

TERTULLUS IS CALLED FORTH TO PRESENT THE CASE

" 2 And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence, 3 We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness."

There is a certain order in this court that was totally absent when the Jews first dragged Paul out of the Temple. No formal charges were registered against him at that time, but they had begun to beat him. From its very beginning, the Law given to the Jews required that grievances be presented before a judge (Ex 18:22; Deut 1:16) – a cause was to be presented. This judgment was not to be wrested, and no respect of persons was allowed (Deut 16:19). A "sentence of judgment" was to be rendered by the judge, and only then was due punishment to be administered. It is ironic that the only way this procedure could be followed by the accusers of Paul was for it to be managed by a heathen government.

HE WAS CALLED FORTH

"And when he was called forth . . ." Other versions read, "when he was called upon," NKJV "after Paul had been summoned," NASB "when Paul was called in," NIV "when he had been sent for," BBE "Saul was called, and," CJB and "when Paul was called in." NIB

It might appear as though Tertullus was summoned before the governor. That, however, is not the case. It is Paul that is brought forth to hear the charges against him. He is the "him" that Tertullus begins to accuse. Thus his incarceration of five days was brought to a momentary conclusion.

TERTULLUS BEGAN TO ACCUSE HIM

"Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence, 3 We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness."

This is certainly an oratorical beginning, with the accent being placed on flattery. Thus, the Jews thought to gain some advantage with the governor, as though they had been living in thankfulness for his expert manner of government.

By Thee We Enjoy Great Quietness

Other versions read, "great peace," "much peace," NASB and "a long period of peace." NIV

Tertullus, although not a Jew himself, speaks for the area of Judea, and Jerusalem in particular. He flatters Felix by declaring a long era of peace had attended his reign. This does agree with the history of that time.

However, the Jews had been cultured to associate peace and well being with Divine care. Solomon once said, "The horse is prepared against the day of battle, but safety is of the Lord" (Prov 21:31). David wrote, "It is He that giveth salvation unto kings: who delivereth David His servant from the hurtful sword" (Psa 144:10). And again he wrote, "I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety" (Psa 4:8). However, Tertullus gives the total credit for well being to Felix, ignoring God altogether. What is even more, he does this with the sanction of Ananias and the elders.

INFORMATION ON FELIX THE GOVERNOR

Though it was said for flattery, and though Felix was in many respects an unprincipled man, yet it was true that his administration had been the means of producing much peace and order in Judea, and that he had done many things that tended to promote the welfare of the nation. In particular, he had arrested a band of robbers, with Eleazar at their head, whom he had sent to Rome to be punished (Josephus, Antiq., book 20, chapter 8); he had arrested the Egyptian false prophet who had led out 4,000 men into the wilderness, and who threatened the peace of Judea; and he had repressed a sedition which arose between the inhabitants of Caesarea and of Syria (Josephus, Jewish Wars, book 2, chapter 13, section 2). ALBERT BARNES COMMENTARY

Very Worthy Deeds are Done

Other versions read, "prosperity is being brought," NKJV "by your providence reforms are being carried out for this nation," NASB "your foresight has brought about reforms," NIV "through your wisdom wrongs are put right," BBE "excellent measures are executed for this nation by thy forethought," DARBY "evils are corrected," ERV and "by your foresight and provision wonderful reforms (amendments and improvements) are introduced and effected on behalf of this nation." AMPLIFIED

It is generally understood that Tertullus here refers to the routing of robbers from the land, together with insurrectionists. I can understand a Roman thinking in this manner but not the Jews, who had such a rich history of Divine protection and provision.

Too many times professed believers who have become unduly influenced by politics and the worldly-wise, give credit to men for things that should have been traced back to the mercies of the Lord. This reminds me of the conduct of Israel during the time of Hosea, and what the Lord had to say about it. "For she did not know that I gave her corn, and wine, and oil, and multiplied her silver and gold, which they prepared for Baal . Therefore will I return, and take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the season thereof, and will recover my wool and my flax given to cover her nakedness" (Hosea 2:9).

Due note ought to be made of the Lord's reaction to an incorrect assessment of the source of prosperity and safety.

We Accept It Always

Other versions read, "Everywhere and in every way, most excellent Felix, we acknowledge this with profound gratitude" NIV and "we accept and acknowledge this with deep appreciation and with all gratitude." AMPLIFIED

Speaking for the consenting Jews, Tertullus addressed Felix on the matter social peace and benefits just as though God did not even exist. As Israel offered the grain God gave her to Baal (Hos 2:9), so these accusers, with an orator giving them assistance, offered praise to Felix that was really due to God. Jerusalem, “the city of the Lord of hosts” (Psa 48:8) was being outwardly managed by a heathen government. Yet, they had given favor to the Jews, making a peaceful environment and benefitting them with various conveniences. It was not that the Romans had such a high regard for Israel, as would be confirmed some years later. This was God being kind to them, but like Samson, they “wist not” the true circumstances.

Let the people of God of our time be quick to recognize the favor of the Lord, and give Him glory for it.

HEAR US OF THY CLEMENCY

“ 4 Notwithstanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words.”

As Tertullus commences his presentation, one senses that he is in earnest quest of the favor of men, as opposed to the establishment of the truth. The “love of the truth” frees a person from such vain ambitions and quests. The attempt to manipulate people by flattery is not proper, and is to be avoided at all cost.

THAT I BE NOT FURTHER TEDIOUS

“Notwithstanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee . . .” Other versions read, “weary you any further,” NASB “detain you no further,” NRSV “make you tired,” BBE “take up too much of your time,” CJB “keep you too, long,” GWN “delay you any further,” NET “don’t want to bore you,” NLT “be patient with us,” CEV and “tire you out with a long speech.” MESSAGE

There is a message between the lines, so to speak, of this text. It is this: dealing with peripheral and incidental matters is an imposition upon men of thought and responsibility. Who is able to estimate the amount of time that is wasted concerning matters that are nothing more than weightless motes on the ocean of life. When our attention is drawn to lesser things, our thoughts tend to deteriorate, and truth moves further from us. If it is true that we are to love the Lord with all of our mind (Matt 22:37), then we are certainly stewards of our minds, and must use them profitably.

Even Tertullus seems to perceive that there is a certain tediousness involved in majoring on minors. I realize that he was speaking in a flattering manner, yet his words reveal something of an awareness that this occasion could very well irritate the governor.

And what can be said concerning matters pertaining to prayer and supplication? How conscious we ought to be of Divine inclinations and proper priorities when we pray. In other words no person should approach the Lord without a due awareness of who He is and what pleases Him. There may be varying degrees of these perceptions, but it seems to me that some grasp of them is to be preferred.

HEAR US OF THY CLEMENCY

“ . . . I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words.” Other versions read, “your courtesy,” NKJV “your kindness,” NASB “be kind enough to hear us briefly,” NIV “your customary graciousness,” NRSV and “your clemency and courtesy and kindness.” AMPLIFIED

Again, this is flattering language, and does not reflect a deep respect for Felix. It is an approach that is more expedient than insightful and preferred. You might call it a kind of political protocol.

Making the transition to matters pertaining to life and godliness, God Almighty is also to be approached a certain way. This is not a mere formality, but is associated with discernment. Here are some considerations.

- Jesus taught us to pray in a certain manner. The introductory part of that manner is as follows: “After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name” (Matt6:9).

- When praying concerning the replacement of the bishopric vacated by Judas, the disciples prayed, “And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men . . .” (Acts 1:24).

- When the early disciples prayed, they approached the Lord with a certain keen awareness of His Person. “Lord, thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is” (Acts 4:24).

While I must admit that all of this is rather rudimentary, I say these things because there is a gospel being preached these days that absolutely fails to affirm how God is to be approached. He is being presented as a God that is anxious to hear from everyone.

Doctrinally, the approach to God is described in the following manner. “Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience , and our bodies washed with pure water ” (Heb 10:22).

These few words confirm that the following awareness ought to be present when prayers are offered to God.

- God is OUR Father, indicating that prayer is to be made with an acute awareness that we are not the only ones.

- God is IN HEAVEN, which requires an adjustment in our thinking.

- The name of the Lord is to be HALLOWED, or held in the highest regard. It is to be venerated, and perceived as holy.

- God KNOWS the hearts of all men, especially those who are praying to Him. This must not elude us.

- The Lord created all things, particular referring to the domain that we presently occupy. Knowing that this world and everything in it BELONGS TO GOD will shape how we pray.

- God must be approached with a “TRUE HEART,” or in absolute sincerity and the total absence of hypocrisy.

- It is also imperative that our CONSCIENCE BE CLEANSED, so that the goading effects of sin and transgression are not found. If that condition does not exist, then the matter is to be addressed before going any further (1 John 1:9).

- The person who approaches the throne of all grace must have had his BODY WASHED WITH PURE WATER. This is reference to baptism, also referred to as “the washing of regeneration” (Tit 3:5). In other words, those who present their supplications to the Lord ought to have received the atonement and availed themselves of His great salvation. If that has not been done, then that is the matter that needs to be addressed – and the obtaining of salvation is nowhere associated with prayer. It is rather identified with believing and obeying the Gospel of Christ.

While I must admit that all of this is rather rudimentary, I say these things because there is a gospel being preached these days that absolutely fails to affirm how God is to be approached. He is being presented as a God that is anxious to hear from everyone. This, however, is not the case. While He would that all men be saved and come to a knowledge of the truth (1 Tim 2:4), seeking mercy and grace to help in the time of need is a privilege vouchsafed exclusively to the family, or household, of God. This is not how men are initially saved, as confirmed on the day of Pentecost, in the city of Samaria, in the case of the Ethiopian eunuch, the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, at the house of Cornelius, with Lydia and her household, the Philippian jailer, etc. In every case, the favorable response of men was the result of believing the Gospel, which was preached to them by means of a minister, “even as the Lord gave to every man” (1 Cor 3:5).

A PESTILENT FELLOW AND A MOVER OF SEDITION

“ 5 For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes . ”

The illegitimacy of the charges against Paul are confirmed by their ambiguity. It should be recognized that in a court of law, vagueness is out of place. In matters that require a judgment, and the pronouncement of a penalty, general charges must be supported by detailed facts, else they have no value.

The illegitimacy of the charges against Paul are confirmed by their ambiguity. It should be recognized that in a court of law, vagueness is out of place. In matters that require a judgment, and the pronouncement of a penalty, general charges must be supported by detailed facts, else they have no value.

A PESTILENT FELLOW

“For we have found this man a pestilent fellow . . .” Other versions read, “a plague,” NKJV “a real pest,” NASB “a troublemaker,” NIV “a cause of trouble,” BBE “an agitator,” CJB “an assassin,” MRD “a perfect pest,” NJB “a perfect pest (a real plague),” AMPLIFIED “dangerous nuisance,” GNB and “time and again disturbing the peace.” MESSAGE

A “pestilent fellow” is to a culture what a disease is to a society. Such a person causes mental and moral deterioration among men. He is an infection among men, introducing liability, false notions, and moral degradation.

Of course, Paul was not guilty of being such a person. Only those who rejected what he said were disturbed. Those who received what he said experienced peace, and no longer were a liability to society. In his preaching and teaching Paul had revealed the fallaciousness of the Jews’ self-conceived traditions, and that had caused a tumult.

A MOVER OF SEDITION AMONG ALL JEWS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

“ . . . and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world . . .” Other versions read, “creator of dissension,” NKJV “stirs up dissension,” NASB “stirring up riots,” NIV “an agitator,” NRSV “a mover of insurrections,” ASV “a maker of attacks upon the government,” BBE “moving sedition,” DARBY “starts quarrels,” GWN “stirs up trouble,” NJB “a mover of debate,” PNT “an agitator and source of disturbance,” AMPLIFIED and “constantly inciting the Jews.” LIVING

This same charge was brought against Paul and Silas at Philippi: “These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city” (Acts 16:20). In Thessalonica Paul and Silas were charged with turning the world “upside down” (Acts 17:8). However, in every case, it was the unbelievers that caused the trouble.

The word “sedition” suggests rebellion against the government – such as was fomented by Barabbas (Mk 15:7; Lk 23:8-9). For this reason, and with the full knowledge of Tertullus and the Jews he represented, Felix would interpret this as Paul fomenting political rebellion. However, no man of God ever fomented such a rebellion.

A similar charge was raised against Jesus when the Jewish leaders delivered Him to Pilate. They said, “We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Caesar , saying that he himself is Christ a King” (Luke 23:2). However, Jesus never did forbid the paying of taxes. In fact, it was He who taught, “Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's” (Mark 12:17).

There are environments where trouble is more apt to break out when the truth is preached. This is owing to the presence of those who are devoted to things other than the truth. However, the people of God are not to close their mouths or modify their lives in such surroundings. Solemnly we are admonished, “And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them” (Eph 5:11). Other versions read “expose them,” NKJV “make their true quality clear,” BBE “show them up for what they are,” NJB “even rebuke them,” PNT “even convict,” YLT and “[let your lives be so in contrast as to] expose and reprove and convict them.” AMPLIFIED This admonition is fulfilled by speaking the truth, and living lives that are in concert with it.

Compromisers do not speak the truth (if they even know it), in the face of such altercations. Such men are quite willing to tailor the message so it will not cause offense in those who disagree with it. This, however, is not a Divine manner, nor is such encouraged among those who declare the truth publically.

A RINGLEADER OF THE SECT OF THE NAZARENES

“ . . . and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes . ” Other versions read, “a chief mover in the society of the Nazarenes,” BBE “a leader,” DARBY “author of the seditions,” DOUAY “a chief maintainer,” GENEVA and “a ringleader of the [heretical, division-producing] sect of the Nazarenes.” AMPLIFIED

By definition a “sect” is “a body of men following their own tenets,” STRONG’S and “that which is chosen, a chosen course of thought and action; hence one's chosen opinion, tenet; according to the context, an opinion varying from the true exposition of the Christian faith.” THAYER The Greek word from which “sect” is derived is the same word translated “heresies” – ai`re,sewj [hair-e-ses]. It speaks of a body of people who have departed from sound doctrine to embrace human tradition. That is how the word is used in Scripture.

Here the charge is that Paul was a key man in a sectarian group that had broken away from the truth. He is depicted as promoting an aberrant form of theology –

Thus we see that if it was not for the Lord Jesus Christ, there would have been no mention of Nazareth in the Scriptures. He is the One who gave significance to that city.

in particular, something that was wholly incompatible with the revelation given to the Jews. All of this must have sounded foolish and irrelevant to Felix the governor.

The phrase “sect of the Nazarenes” is an interesting one. Since Jesus was referred to “the Nazarene” (Matt 2:23; 26:71), his followers were said to be “Nazarenes.” All of this accents the uniqueness of Jesus. The city of Nazareth is mentioned twenty-nine times in Scripture (Matt 2:23; 4:13; 21:11; 26:71; Mk 1:9,24; 10:47; 14:67; 16:6; Lk 1:26; 2:4,39,51; 4:16,34; 18:37; 24:19; John 1:45,46; 18:5,7; 19:19; Acts 2:22; 3:6; 4:10; 6:14; 10:38; 22:8; 26:9). “Jesus” is mentioned by name in twenty-one of those references. He is indirectly mentioned in five of them (Matt 2:23; 4:13; Lk 2:51; 4:16; John 1:46). One of these texts refers to the angel Gabriel; being sent to Nazareth to Mark, to announce she would bear the Son of God (Lk 1:26). One reference is to Joseph, when he and Mary went to Bethlehem “to be taxed,” at which time Jesus was born (Lk 2:4). Nazareth is referred to as the city of Joseph and Mary (Lk 2:39).

Thus we see that if it was not for the Lord Jesus Christ, there would have been no mention of Nazareth in the Scriptures. He is the One who gave significance to that city.

When Jesus is actually prominent in the professed church, He will be clearly identified with it, just as surely as He was identified with Nazareth. One of the monumental difficulties of our time is that there is no apparent association of the nominal church with Jesus. That is one of the chief evidences that suggests He is not there! I realize this is most arresting to ponder, but the matter is worthy of thought. The condition most certainly exists, as every honest and good heart knows.

WE WOULD HAVE JUDGED HIM OURSELVES

“ 6 Who also hath gone about to profane the temple: whom we took, and would have judged according to our law. 7 But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands, 8 Commanding his accusers to come unto thee: by examining of whom thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things, whereof we accuse him.”

Now, Tertullus presents the case as though the plea for the clemency of Felix could have been avoided altogether if they had been allowed the freedom to do what they willed. He makes no mention of the whole city being in an uproar because of the allegations of the Jews against Paul, NOT because of the activities of Paul. Neither, indeed, does he mention that Paul's life was in jeopardy before any charges had been researched and proved – something that God's Law (Deut 1:17; 17:8-11; John 7:51) and Roman law required (Acts 22:25-26). Such a proceeding also violated the tenets of wisdom. Solomon wrote, “He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him” (Prov 18:13).

The “carnal mind” does not permit the individual dominated by it to deal with critical issues in an orderly and just manner. In fact, it blocks out the truth itself, and the wisdom that enables people to process the truth. It blinds both heart and mind so that the real situation cannot be seen. This is particularly true in matters of religion. When it comes to speaking the truth of God, or calling for just and equitable treatment, a person cannot appeal to the minds or thinking processes of carnal people. Such a mindset is not able to traffic in truth.

Throughout the history of those who lived by faith, opposition to them was characterized by injustice, such as is revealed in our text. The opposition of Cain to Abel, Ishmael to Isaac, and Esau to Jacob, confirm this to be true. There was also the opposition of Egypt to Israel, Pharaoh to Moses, the unbelieving spies, and those who opposed and persecuted the prophets.

In an age that has unduly exalted education, there remains this false assumption that men will always process the truth correctly. Thus drunkards are taught what liquor will do to them, and fornicators are shown the dangers of promiscuity to both health and the mind.

HE WENT ABOUT TO PROFANE THE TEMPLE

“Who also hath gone about to profane the temple . . .” Other versions read “desecrate the Temple,” NASB “make the Temple unclean,” BBE “pollute the temple,” GENEVA “violates our tradition,” GWN “defile the Temple,” LIVING and “tried to desecrate and defile the temple.” AMPLIFIED

This was nothing more than a groundless rumor. Earlier we are told that this charge was based on the report that Trophimus, an Ephesian, was brought into the Temple by Paul. However this was nothing more than a supposition. It is written, “For they had seen before with him in the city Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple” (Acts 21:29). Other versions read that they “assumed,” NIV and “had the idea that,” BBE “ and thought.” GWN

The word “supposed” has the following lexical meaning: “to deem, think,” THAYER “as regarding something as already settled or established suppose, think, presume,” FRIBERG and “to regard something as presumably true, but without particular certainty - 'to suppose, to presume, to assume, to imagine, to believe, to think.' LOUW-NIDA In the case of supposition, there is no examination or test to determine if the conclusion reached is true. What is concluded is assumed to be true, and procedures are set in place just as though what is assumed is a settled fact.

There is a phenomenal amount of this kind of thinking in the modern Christian community. Pervasive doctrines are both taught and embraced that assume things that have by no means been confirmed. Examples of such assumptions are as follows

There is a phenomenal amount of this kind of thinking in the modern Christian community. Pervasive doctrines are both taught and embraced that assume things that have by no means been confirmed. Examples of such assumptions are as follows.

- That baptism has nothing whatsoever to do with salvation.
- That the fundamental work of the church is evangelism.
- That Jesus is returning to earth to set up a Kingdom in the realm of flesh and blood.
- That the love of God is strictly unconditional.
- That the church is devoted to the correction and reformation of society.
- That there is a hierarchy of authority within the church that resembles worldly government.
- That God wants everyone to be happy and to see their dreams fulfilled.

Although unproved in every sense of the word, these suppositions are used to develop whole bodies of theology. Procedures are developed with them in mind, and professed believers are directed to do this or that upon the imagined postulate that such things are true.

This is the kind of circumstance Jesus faced when He walked among men. He had some things to say about the traditions of men, and they are startling to the flesh.

- Human traditions cause people to “transgress the commandment of God” (Matt 15:3).
- Men’s tradition make “the commandment of God of none effect” (Matt 15:6; Mk 7:13).
- The commandment of God must be “laid aside” to keep the tradition of men (Mk 7:8).
- In order to keep men’s tradition, the commandment of God must be rejected (Mk 7:9).

It is difficult to imagine anything being more serious than the revealed effects of following religious tradition. And yet, it supports every denomination, and every erroneous doctrine. Sadly, the words of the Head of the church are placed aside, and some are not even aware of them.

It also ought to be noted that countless ministers of the Word have been, and continue to be, maligned because they do not hold the traditions of men. They are charged with being arrogant, false teachers, and the likes, simply because their message does not mesh with sectarian tradition.

WE TOOK HIM AND WOULD HAVE JUDGED HIM

“ . . . whom we took, and would have judged according to our law . . .” Other versions read, “wanted to judge him according to our law,” NKJV “would have given him what he justly deserves,” LIVING and “and would have sentenced him by our Law.” AMPLIFIED Most of the modern translations (after 1885) omit this phrase (NIV (1984), NRSV (1986), RSV (1952), BBE (1949), ERV (1885), ESV (2001), GWN (1995), NAB (2002), NET (2004), NJB (1985), NLT (1996), CEV (1995), EMTV (2003), GNB (1966), IE (?), WEYMOUTH (1903), WILLIAMS (1937), MONTGOMERY (2001) . Versions including the phrase include the following: KJV (1611), NKJV (1979), ASV (1901), NASB (1977), CSB (1998), DARBY (1884), DOUAY (1899), GENEVA (1599), MRD (1852), PNT (1595), RWB (1995), TNT (1526), WEB (1833), YLT (1862), LIVING (1971), AMPLIFIED (1965), LITV (1976).

I have taken time to list the versions that omit and include this phrase in order to make a practical point. After 1885, there is by no means unanimity among Bible translators on this subject. To me, this confirms the tenuous nature of the language, “oldest and best manuscripts,” etc. The authorities on this are not agreed, which means the purported evidence is not that clear. It seems to me that under such a condition, the default should be determined by the thrust of Scripture rather than a specific set of manuscripts. This is compounded by the fact that there is no such thing as an original manuscript of any book of Scripture. Although I hold this as a personal persuasion, I do not believe the multiplicity of translations has yielded results that justify their existence. Although claims are made of them simplifying the Scriptures, and allowing people to understand them more perfectly, the prevailing prevalence of Scriptural ignorance exists in the churches. I do not know of a solitary person who claims professing Christians are now noted for their superior use and understanding of the Word of God. If a tree is known by its “fruit,” the claims of the advantages of these many new translations stand in need of confirmation. The claims should not be made if they are not supported by corresponding fruit.

I will take this verse as it is represented in the conservative translations. It certainly does not violate the context, or the general teaching of scripture.

BUT THE CAPTAIN LYSIAS CAME UPON US

“ . . . But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands . . . ”

This verse is completely omitted by the following translations: NIV, NRSV, RSV, BBE, CJB, ERV, ESV, GWN, NAB, NET, NIV, NLT, WEYMOUTH, WILLIAMS, IE, CEV, GNB . The sense of the text itself, and the context as well, does not justify this omission. Thus, I will proceed in the persuasion that its presence is altogether proper.

This statement by Tertullus is not altogether true. Lysias did not interrupt a trial, or some kind of legal proceedings. Instead, the whole city was in a tumult. Here is what was said of the circumstances at the time Lysias arrived on the scene.

- The Jews from Asia, seeing Paul in the Temple, had “stirred up all the people” (Acts 21:27a).
- They had laid hands on Paul (Acts 21:27b).
- The Asian Jews had informed the others that Paul had taught against the Jews, the Law, and the Temple (Acts 21:28).
- They charged that Paul had polluted the holy place (Acts 21:28).
- All of Jerusalem was moved, put into a state of agitation (Acts 21:30a).
- The people came and dragged Paul out of the Temple (Acts 21:30b).
- The Temple doors were shut (Acts 21:30c).
- The Jews went about to kill Paul (Acts 21:31).

- The Jews were in the process of beating Paul when the chief captain and his army came on the scene (Acts 21:32).

There was no legal proceedings taking place among the Jews. Instead, they had incited a riot, and were proceeding with the beating of Paul, no doubt preparing to stone him. Their law did not allow for such proceedings.

Now, using oratory, Tertullus says that Felix, being an astute man, will find the charges verified when he examines Paul. Assumption, or supposition, is one of the principle characteristics of the carnal mind.

HE COMMANDED HIS ACCUSERS TO COME TO THEE

“Commanding his accusers to come unto thee: by examining of whom thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things, whereof we accuse him.”

Tertullus paints the Jews as being obedient to the political rulers over them. Therefore, as good citizens, they were appearing before the governor as they were requested to do. Lysias made reference to this in his letter, else it probably would not have been mentioned by Tertullus. “And when it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had against him. Farewell” (Acts 23:30).

Imagining that he is presenting a compelling argument, Tertullus tells Felix that by examining Paul himself, it will become clear that the charges leveled against him were true. Once again, those charges were as follows.

- He infected society in an adverse manner. Paul is said to have been found to be a “pestilent fellow.”

- He tended to cause people to rebel against authority, and to organize in hostile manner. He was a “mover of sedition among all Jews throughout the world.”

- He was a sectarian promoter of a growing, but unpopular religious group. He was a “ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes.”

Now, using oratory, Tertullus says that Felix, being an astute man, will find the charges verified when he examines Paul. Assumption, or supposition, is one of the principle characteristics of the carnal mind. This should not surprise us, for when considering the God of heaven, such a mind imagines that God is like men. Thus the Lord said to the Israelites, “These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself : but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes” (Psa 50:21). Therefore, when dealing with others, the flesh also tends to think others will agree with those who perpetrate lies. In fact, those who are carnal are often surprised when their lies are not believed. This attitude is frequently the catalyst for persecution against those who declare the truth of God.

It is good for us to be wise about the manners of the flesh, lest we fall into the pits and snares it lays for us.

THE JEWS AGREE

“ 9 And the Jews also assented, saying that these things were so.” Other versions read, “maintaining that these things were so,” NKJV “joined the attack, asserting that these things were so,” NASB “joined in the accusation,” NIV “affirming that all this was so,” RSV “were in agreement with his statement,” BBE “alleged that these were the facts,” CJB “joined in pressing the matter against Paul,” DARBY “asserted that everything Tertullus said was true,” GWN and “declaring that all these things were exactly so.” AMPLIFIED

Here, as in other instances, those who oppose the truth are joined together. Within the council itself, Sadducees and Pharisees joined together, even though their theology radically differed (Acts 23:6). Earlier Pilate and Herod joined together as friends through their rejection of Christ and the truth that He declared (Lk 23:12). There is a sense in which the “truth of the Gospel” (Gal 2:5) promotes unity wherever it is preached. Men either unite together against the truth or for the truth. There really is no neutral ground. There are wheat or tares (Matt 13:39), good fish or bad fish (Matt 13:47-50), the election and the rest (Rom 11:7), those who mind the things of the Spirit, and those who mind the things of the flesh (Rom 8:5), and the righteous and those who do evil (1 Pet 3:12). There are those who dead in trespasses and sins (Eph 2:1) and those who are alive unto God (Rom 6:11). There are those who are of the day (1 Thess 5:5,8), and those who are of the night (1 Thess 5:5).

There is a point where both the righteous and the unrighteous come together, united by their nature. In our text, the unrighteous combined upon basis of lies, for there was not a single charge leveled against Paul that was true.

There is a point where both the righteous and the unrighteous come together, united by their nature. In our text, the unrighteous combined upon basis of lies, for there was not a single charge leveled against Paul that was true. Not only is it written that the Jews “assented” to, or acquiesced with, what Tertullus said, they SAID “these things were so.” What they said is not only recorded in “the volume of the book” of Scripture, it is also recorded in the heavenly books that will be opened on the of judgment (Rev 10:12).

SOMETHING TO BE NOTED

There has been a certain culturing of our society that ought to be noted at this point. Stress is place upon the right of the individual to speak their minds – i.e. freedom of speech. This has spilled over into the professed church as well, so that human opinions are now expressed more than the Word of God itself. It is not uncommon to find the words of men equated with Scripture, forming the basis of acceptance or rejection. Actually, no person has a “right” to say something that is untrue or foolish. In a political environment, it may appear as though that is the case – but it is not. Men will held in strict account for “idle,” or careless NASB words they have spoken (Matt 12:36). Solomon referred to man’s “work,” which includes what he says: “For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil” (Eccl 12:14). Paul said that God would even judge the secrets of men (Rom 2:16). Jude affirmed that God would “execute judgment” upon men for “all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against Him” (Jude 1:15).

Tertullus and the Jews who declared what he said was so, will someday stand before the Judge of all the earth to give an account for what they have said. The fact that they were apparently ignorant of this has no bearing whatsoever on the subject. The Jewish Scriptures announced the coming of Divine judgment (1 Chron 16:33; Psa 96:13; 98:9). Solomon announced, “God will bring thee into judgment” (Eccl 11:9). And again, “God will bring every work into judgment” (Eccl 12:14).

The person who is dominated by the carnal mind will never think for any extended period concerning the day of judgment. Such live only for this world, with no cognitive thought about the passing of this world, the appearance of the world to come, and the day of judgment. There is no way for these failures to be avoided if one is carnally minded, and insists on remaining so (Rom 8:6).

Given these considerations, it at once becomes apparent that preaching or teaching that is tailored for “the flesh” and those dominated by it is nothing more than an exercise in vanity. The Gospel cannot be carried in such a container! Nothing good can come from such an approach to preaching and teaching. It is altogether a “corrupt tree” (Matt 7:18).

PAUL IS BECKONED TO SPEAK

“ 10 Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned unto him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully answer for myself . . .”

The details of this proceeding are not to be viewed as merely incidental. They are the result of God working things together for the good of Paul, even in a surrounding governed by heathen, and occupied by hostile Jews. God will have His way in any environment, even if it involves frustrating the ambitions of the Jews, and turning the hearts of the heathen to favor Paul.

THE GOVERNOR BECKONS TO PAUL TO SPEAK

“Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned unto him to speak, answered . . .” Other versions read, “nodded for him to speak,” NASB “motioned,” NIV “given him a sign,” BBE “gestured,” NET and “signaled.” IE

There is something to especially note in this text. Observe the quietness and orderliness that took place in the court of Felix, as compared with the tumult that broken out among the Jews who opposed Paul.

- The Jews from Asia “stirred up all the people” (Acts 21:27).
- They cried out, “Men of Israel, help!” (Acts 21:28).
- “All the city was moved, and the people ran together,” took hold of Paul and dragged him out of the Temple, then shutting the temple doors (Acts 21:30).
- They “went about to kill” Paul (Acts 21:31a).
- All the city of Jerusalem was “in an uproar” (Acts 21:31).
- When asked by the chief captain concerning the cause of opposing Paul, there was utter confusion with some crying “one thing, some another” (Acts 21:34a).
- The whole affair was so confusing that the captain “could not know the certainty for the tumult” (Acts 21:34b).
- Paul had to be carried to safety because of “the violence of the people” (Acts 21:35).
- When Paul was being escorted to the barracks, the Jews followed crying out, “Away with him!” (Acts 21:36).
- In response to Paul’s first defense the Jews “lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live” (Acts 22:22).
- The Jews “cried out, and cast off their clothes, and the dust into the air” (22:23).
- During his next defense, Ananias the high priest commanded that Paul be struck on the mouth (Acts 23:2).
- When Paul said he was called into question because of the hope of the resurrection there “arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees” (Acts 23:7).
- As things intensified “there arose a great cry” and more striving (Acts 23:9).
- There “arose a great dissension” that caused Paul’s very life to be threatened (Acts 23:10).

Compare this with the orderliness of this heathen courtroom. The environment is so calm externally that Felix could summon Paul to speak with but a gesture – a nod of the head, or a wave of the hand. The religious environment was volatile and tumultuous, and the proceedings of a heathen court orderly! There is also more of an awareness of equity and the need for substantial proof that the charges brought against Paul are true. No wonder our blessed Lord said, “the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light” (Luke 16:8). This does not suggest that all heathen proceedings are peaceful, anymore than it does that all religious gatherings are tumultuous.

THE PREFERRED ENVIRONMENT OF THE WORK OF GOD

Even though God continues to work salvation in the midst of the earth (Psa 74:12), when it comes to the initiatives of the godly, and when they are free to make a choice concerning that work, there is a preferred environment. What is taking place in our text – a presentation by a believer in a heathen court – is not a Kingdom standard, or to be zealously sought. When Paul went to a city, operating with some degree of freedom, he did not attempt to present the Gospel in a heathen court, or even to kings and princes. His testimony before kings, according to the commission of Jesus Himself (Acts 9:15) was not fulfilled by seeking out amiable kings. All of the recorded testimonies before political dignitaries were the result of arrest and/or imprisonment (Acts 23:24; 24:10; 25:1-13; 26:19-26; Phil 4:22). One official, Sergius Paulus, called for Paul and Barnabas “and desired to hear the word of God” (Acts 13:7). However, there is no record in Scripture of a special Gospel initiative toward political dignitaries. This by no means suggests that it is wrong to approach such personalities with the Gospel. It does mean it is wrong to shape ones ministry around such objectives, noble though they may appear.

As a general rule, the work of the Lord is conducted outside the perimeter of the flesh, or the carnal mind (Rom 8:7). When this is not the preferred environment, and the individual exercises himself to avoid such a surrounding as much as possible, God can so orchestrate things that a spiritual setback will not be experienced.

PAUL APPEALS TO HIM BEING A JUDGE UNTO THE JEWISH NATION

“ . . . Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation . . .” Other versions read, “a judge to this nation,” NKJV “a judge over this nation,” NIV “a judge over this nation,” NRSV “a judge of Jewish affairs,” NLT “administered justice to this nation,” WEYMOUTH “judged the people of our nation,” CEV and “knowing how fair-minded you've been in judging us all these years.” MESSAGE

Notice the difference in the way Tertullus addressed Felix, and the manner of Paul. Tertullus resorts to flattery: “And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence , We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness” (Acts 24:2-3). Tertullus appeals to external advantages granted by Felix. Paul appeals to a sense of justice and social, equity: “Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation” (Acts 24:10).

Historians estimate that Paul was speaking during the year of 58 A.D. Felix had been governor since 53 A.D. “But Tacitus expressly states that Felix was joint procurator with Cumanus; and therefore he had been a judge to the Jewish nation long before the banishment of Cumanus. Tacitus’s authority is infinitely superior to that of Josephus, and this passage strongly supports the statement of Tacitus (‘Annal.,’ 12:54).” PULPIT COMMENTARY

During this significantly lengthy period, the Jews had not been oppressed, and there had been a general environment of safety and political concern. Doubtless, from Felix’s viewpoint, this had to do with maintaining order, as opposed to actually favoring the Jews.

At this point Paul will not give the account of his conversion, or the commission that was delivered to him. He did give an accounting of those things before Agrippa (Acts 26:4-23), but not before Felix. When he did speak of the faith, he did so in general terms (Acts 24:14-16,21), finally reasoning with Felix and his wife Drusilla concerning “righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come” (Acts 24:24-25).

Instead, Paul will address the matter of the charges brought against him. That is what he has been summoned before Felix to do, and that is what he will do.

A Separate Identity

Notice how both Tertullus and Paul referred to the Jews as a “nation” (Acts 24:2,10). Here was a nation within a nation – a body of people that maintained their identity, and refused to become absorbed by the Roman culture. To this very day, the Jews have maintained their identity, wherever they are found. They are a different culture that live in a unique manner. That is the result of being chosen and cultured by the Lord Himself. With all of their faults and foibles, they have remained separate from general society without being hostile against it. As unique as this is, it is not the clearest example of such separation.

Once again, even though the Jews were subject to the Roman government, they remained separate from it. They trafficked in society, yet stood apart from it.

The Church Is the Ultimate Example

Actually, the church is the most unique and separated people. They are properly called, “a peculiar people,” or “His own special people,” NKJV or “a people for His own possession.” NASB (Tit 2:14). Again, this uniqueness is depicted in the following expressions: “But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people” (1 Pet 2:9). Referring to this singularity Jesus said to His disciples, “ye are not of the world” (John 15:19; 17:14,16).

Those in Christ are admonished concerning being identified with an idolatrous society, which, in their case, was the majority of their social surroundings. “Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you” (2 Cor 6:17). In the very beginning of the church Peter exhorted his audience, “Save yourselves from this untoward generation” (Acts 2:40).

One of the great sins of the modern church is its obvious affinity with the world. Observing people frequently claim that professing Christians often look too much like the world, dress too much like it, talk like it, and conduct their lives as though this world was the main world. In our time, an approach has been taken to Christianity that actually allows for an attempted merger with the world. There is nothing right about such a view. In Christ we are primarily citizens of heaven (Phil 3:20-21), and that circumstance is to be clearly made known in their manner of life. If appearance does not confirm such a status, it is doubtful that it exists. A failure to live in such a posture will be duly addressed on the day of judgment.

CHEERFULLY ANSWERING FOR HIMSELF

Felix was not a righteous man, for it is written that he expected a bribe from Paul, and therefore granted him several audiences in hope of receiving a bribe from Paul.

“ . . . I do the more cheerfully answer for myself . . .” Other versions read, “I cheerfully make my defense,” NASB “I gladly make my defense,” NIV “I am glad to make my answer,” BBE “I answer readily as to the things which concern myself,” DARBY “So I’m pleased to present my case to you,” GWN “I shall with a more quiet mind answer for my self,” TNT and “I find it easier to make my defense and do it cheerfully and with good courage.” AMPLIFIED

As it is used here, the word “cheerfully” means, “well disposed . . . of good cheer, of good courage,” THAYER “cheerfully, gladly, with encouragement,” FRIBERG “pertaining to being encouraged,” LOUW-NIDA “in good spirits” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “1) well disposed, kind 2) of good cheer, of good courage.” STRONG’S

Paul’s encouraging and cheerful disposition can be viewed from two perspectives, with one being superior to the other.

- First, he knew that his cause was in perfect harmony with the faith by which he was justified. There was no pressure to compromise his spiritual stance. He possessed a pure and good conscience, and was confident that heaven fully supported him.

- Secondly, He was encouraged by the lack of apparent bias on the part of Felix. He apparently had the reputation of being just and fair toward the Jews in particular, and society in general.

Felix Was Not A Righteous Man

Felix was not a righteous man, for it is written that he expected a bribe from Paul, and therefore granted him several audiences in hope of receiving a bribe from Paul. “He hoped also that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him: wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him” (Acts 24:26).

In spite of this ignoble motive, God used the occasion to give Paul a greater opportunity to speak, and eventually to make strong spiritual appeals to Felix himself. This whole circumstance was under the control of heaven, for “the heavens do rule” (Dan 4:26). Thus we read the following descriptions of Deity – whether the Father or the Son.

- God is “the most high God” (Gen 14:18,,20).
- God is “the Possessor of heaven and earth” (Gen 14:19,22).
- “The God of the earth” (Gen 24:3).
- God is “the Lord in the midst of the earth” (Ex 8:22).
- “The earth is the Lord’s” (Ex 9:29).
- “The Lord shall reign for ever and ever” (Ex 15:16).
- “The Lord is greater than all gods” (Ex 18:11).
- God says, “All the earth is Mine” (Ex 19:5).
- God is “the God of the spirits of all flesh” (Num 27:16).
- “He is the God in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath” (Deut 4:39).
- “The heaven and heavens is the LORD’S thy God, the earth also with all that therein is” (Deut 10:14).
- “God is the God of gods” (Deut 10:17).
- God declares, “See now that I, even I, am He, and there is no god with Me: I kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of My hand” (Deut 32:39).
- “The LORD killeth, and maketh alive: He bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up. The LORD maketh poor, and maketh rich: he bringeth low, and lifteth up. He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory: for the pillars of the earth are the Lord's, and He hath set the world upon them” (1 Sam 2:6-8).
- God is “the God, even Thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; Thou hast made heaven and earth” (2 Kgs 19:15).

- “Thine, O LORD, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is Thine; Thine is the kingdom, O LORD, and Thou art exalted as head above all” (1 Chron 29:11).
- “For the kingdom is the LORD'S: and He is the governor among the nations” (Psa 22:28).
- “The earth is the LORD'S, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein” (Psa 24:1).
- “For the LORD most high is terrible; He is a great King over all the earth” (Psa 47:2).
- “But God is the judge: He putteth down one, and setteth up another” (Psa 75:7).
- “That men may know that Thou, whose name alone is JEHOVAH, art the most high over all the earth” (Psa 83:18).
- “But the LORD is the true God, He is the living God, and an everlasting king: at His wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide His indignation” (Jer 10:10).
- “Daniel answered and said, Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever: for wisdom and might are His: and He changeth the times and the seasons: he removeth kings, and setteth up kings: He giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding” (Dan 2:20-21).
- “And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation” (Acts 17:26).
- “One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all” (Eph 4:6).
- “Which in His times he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords” (1 Tim 6:15).
- “Who being the brightness of His glory, and the express image of His person, and upholding all things by the word of His power.” (Heb 1:3).

When a person is knowingly reconciled to that God, having free access to Him by faith, it alters the way circumstances are viewed. This understanding is an integral part of knowing God, which is inherent in the New Covenant (Heb 8:11), and is the appointed means of appropriating everything having to do with life and godliness (2 Pet 1:3).

Paul's calmness is evidence he had grasped the truth concerning both the nature and will of God.

IT HAS ONLY BEEN TWELVE DAYS SINCE PAUL WENT TO JERUSALEM

“ 11 Because that thou mayest understand, that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem for to worship.”

The record of Paul's activities since arriving at Jerusalem are recorded in Acts 21:15-23:33. This is probably a summation of the activity, but it provides enough of the details to confirm the remarkable level of activity that took place in less than two weeks.

The record of Paul's activities since arriving at Jerusalem are recorded in Acts 21:15-23:33. This is probably a summation of the activity, but it provides enough of the details to confirm the remarkable level of activity that took place in less than two weeks.

- Lodged with Mnason of Cyprus (21:16).

- The brethren in Jerusalem received them gladly (21:17).
- The next day went in to James and the elders (21:18).
- Declared all the things God had wrought among the Gentiles through his ministry (21:19a).
- James informed Paul of the “many thousands” of Jews there who did “believe,” yet were “zealous for the Law” (21:19b).
- The brethren rejoiced at the news (21:20).
- Reported to Paul that these Jews had been told that Paul was teaching the Jews to forsake Moses, not to circumcise their children, and not to walk after the customs of the people” (21:21).
- Paul is informed the Jews will come together as soon as they know he is in Jerusalem (21:22).
- Paul is told of four men there who had a vow upon them. He is then advised to “pay their expenses,” NIV so they can have their heads shaved, signifying the fulfillment of their vow (21:23-24a).
- Then, they advised Paul, the Jews would know what they had heard about Paul was not the truth (21:24b).
- Paul is then informed that the Jerusalem brethren had already written to the Gentile brethren informing them they were under no obligation circumcise their children, “save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication” (21:25).
- Paul then takes the men, and the next day purified himself with them, signifying the accomplishment of the days of purification (21:26).
- When “seven days were almost ended,” the Jews from Asia saw Paul in the Temple, and stirred up the people (21:27a).
- The Asian Jews cried out, telling the people that Paul was teaching everywhere “against the people, and the law, and this place” (the Temple). They also said he had brought Greeks into the Temple, thereby polluting the holy place (21:28-29).
- The city was moved, came together, dragged Paul out of the Temple, and shut the Temple doors (21:30-31).
- As they “went about to kill” Paul, a chief Roman captain is informed of the disturbance (21:31).
- Immediately the captain interrupted the beating of Paul and took charge of the situation (21:31-32).
- The captain had Paul bound with two chains, and demanded who Paul was and what he had done (21:33).
- A tumult ensued, moving the captain to have Paul removed to the military barracks (21:34-35).
- En route to the barracks, the Jews followed shouting, “Away with him” (21:36).
- As the group was headed for the barracks, Paul asked to speak to the chief captain, who then found that Paul was not an Egyptian insurrectionist of that time (21:37-39).
- Paul is then given license to speak to the Jews, and he presents his first defense (21:40-22:21).
- As soon as Paul reported that he was going to be sent to the Gentiles, another tumult arose among the Jews (22:22-23).

- The chief captain then commands Paul to be removed to the barracks where he was to be examined by scourging (22:24).
- As Paul was being bound, he asked the centurion if it was lawful for a Roman citizen to be beaten before any charges had been confirmed against him (22:25).
- Upon hearing this, the centurion told the captain to take heed what he was doing, for Paul was a Roman citizen (22:26).
- The captain spoke to Paul, confirming that he was, in fact, a Roman citizen (22:26-28).
- The scourging was then called off, for the captain was afraid after he knew Paul was a Roman (22:29).
- The next day, Paul was loosed from his bonds, the Jewish chief priests and all their council was called, and Paul was brought down and set before them (22:30).
- Paul commences to speak, affirming that he had lived “in all good conscience before God” until that very day (23:1).
- The high priest commands Paul to be struck on the mouth, Paul responds that he has done so contrary to the law, and he is asked by those standing by why he has spoken in such a manner to “God’s high priest” (23:2-4).
- Paul responds that he was unaware Ananias was the high priest, yet does not retract what he has said (23:5).
- Perceiving that the council before him as comprised of Pharisees and Sadducees, and knowing they were not agreed in their theology, Paul says he was a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee, and had been called into question for “the hope of the resurrection” (23:6).
- At this word dissension spread throughout the ranks, for the Sadducees said there was no resurrection, and that there was no such thing as a spirit or an angel. (23:7-8).
- At this outbreak, certain of the scribes, who were Pharisees, spoke in defense of Paul, saying that if an angel or a spirit had spoken to Paul, their opposition would be nothing more than fighting against God (23:9).
- The dissension grew so fierce that the captain had to remove Paul once again, lest he be torn in piece by the hostile crowd (23:10).
- The following night the Lord appeared to Paul telling him to be of good cheer – that just as surely as he had testified of Jesus in Jerusalem, so would he also do in Rome (23:11).
- The next day, more than forty Jews took a vow not to eat or drink until they had killed Paul. They also informed the chief priests and elders of their plan, telling them to ask the captain to bring Paul down to them so they could gather some more information. At the time he appeared, they said, they would kill him (23:12-15).
- Paul’s nephew overhears the plan and goes into the barracks to tell Paul (23:16).
- Paul called one of the centurions, telling him to take the young man to the captain and tell him he has something to say (23:17).
- When the young man told the captain of the plot. The captain immediately made plans to have Paul transported to Felix the governor who could make an official ruling on the whole matter. He also wrote a letter to Felix informing him of the nature of this case (23:18-30).
- With an army of 470, Paul was escorted to the city of Antipatris (23:31).

- The next day they resumed their journey to Felix, arrived safely, and delivered the letter to Felix (23:32-34).

- Felix said he would hear the case as soon as the accusing Jews arrived in Caesarea (32:35).

- Now, after five days, the case has been resumed (24:1)

I have listed forty-five activities that extended over a period of twelve days. That is nearly four significant happenings per day. A life that is so filled with events, many of which were epochal in nature, requires a strong faith and a consistent hope. I do not know how a person could otherwise survive such a series of events.

It ought to be noted that when a person becomes willingly involved in the good and accept able and perfect will of God, there is a certain acceleration that characterizes life. Labors become more abundant.

All of this, from Paul's arrival in Jerusalem until the trial commences, covered a period of twelve days. The above table is only an estimation, but it gives some idea of the activities during the twelve-day period Paul mentions. This twelve-day slice of Paul's life confirms that he did, indeed, "labor more abundantly than they all" (1 Cor 15:10).

In this record, Paul's labors included giving a valid reason for the hope that was in him, keeping the faith under duress, and giving a proper example of how those in Christ react to opposition and persecution. In all of this his faith was strong and his discernment keen. Patience and hope characterize him throughout it all.

I WAS NOT DISPUTING OR RAISING UP THE PEOPLE

" 12 And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city . . ."

While Tertullus spoke for the Jews, Paul will speak for himself. Knowing that his words are subject to examination, he reports the unvarnished truth. He will give an account that is in perfect harmony with the nature of spiritual life, and the great salvation that is in Christ Jesus. He will not have to confess to conduct that was unbecoming of a person who has been made a "partaker of Christ" (Heb 3:14). He will not suffer "as an evil doer," but as one who lives righteously (1 Pet 4:15-16).

It is true that Paul will be charged with being an "evil doer," and will have a measure of sufferings because of that false charge. As he wrote to Timothy, "Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound" (2 Tim 2:9). Yet, the charge was false, and in the books of heaven, this suffering was "for righteousness' sake" (Matt 5:10; 1 Pet 3:14).

Because there is so much iniquity in the professed church of our day, a major strain of teaching pertains to the acknowledgment and confession of sin. The subject is addressed as though it was virtuous to confess sin. However, this is a wholly inappropriate representation. No person is better because he has confessed his sin. That is something that must be done, but it only puts the person back at the starting line. Technically speaking, there is a difference in doing righteousness and confessing sin. Doing righteousness has to do with obtaining more, so to speak, "of the Divine nature" (2 Pet 1:4). The confession of sin, while mandatory, is not technically an expression of the Divine nature, for Jesus never sinned, and thus made no confession of it. However, He did suffer for righteousness' sake, leaving us an example, that we should "follow in His steps" (1 Pet 2:21).

The confession of sin, while mandatory, is not technically an expression of the Divine nature, for Jesus never sinned, and thus made no confession of it.

I realize that this may appear to be nothing more than a technicality. However, I see this as something that must be said to this generation. The failure of professing Christians to be more involved with the life of Christ is owing more to sin than anything else. When a professing Christian lives in such a manner that constant confession of sin is required, a fundamental flaw exists. Those in Christ are required to cleanse themselves "from all filthiness of flesh and spirit" (2 Cor 7:1). They are to take seriously the admonition to "sin not" (1 Cor 15:34; Eph 4:26; 1 John 2:1), and not philosophize about that requirement. Admittedly, when the people of God take that injunction seriously and earnestly and consistently set out to "lay aside every weight and sin that doth so easily beset us" (Heb 12:1), it will put a lot of religious professionals out of business. However, any profession or business that depends on failure and flaw in professing Christians ought to be put out of business! It certainly should not be afforded any dignity.

NOT DISPUTING WITH ANY MAN

“And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man . . .” Other versions read, Other versions read, “carrying on a discussion,” NASB “arguing with anyone,” NIV “in argument with any man,” BBE “discoursing to any one,” DARBY “talking with any person,” MRD “reasoning with any one,” YLT and “debating with anybody.” WILLIAMS

In my judgment, some of the versions misrepresent what Paul was saying, by translating the word “discussion,” or “discoursing,” or “reasoning.” While it is no doubt true that Paul was not reasoning in the Temple at the time of his arrest, such a procedure was frequently found in the synagogues or other precincts of the city of Jerusalem. The impression must not be left that this kind of speaking was out of order.

The word translated “disputing,” is the most common translation (KJV, NKJV, NRSV, RSV, ASV, CSB, DOUAY, ERV, ESV, GENEVA, PNT, RWB, TNT, WEB, WYCLIFFE). As the word is used here, the meaning of the Greek word from which it is translated (dialegomenon) is: “to converse, discourse with one, argue, discuss: absolutely . . . drawing arguments from the Scriptures, with the idea of disputing prominent” THAYER “disputations contend, argue, dispute,” FRIBERG “debate,” UBS and “to argue about differences of opinion - 'to argue, to dispute, argument.” LOUW-NIDA

At the time of our text, Paul had gone into the Temple to purify himself, joining with four Jewish men in a vow (Acts 21:24,26; 24:18). Prior to that, he also was in the Temple praying (Acts 22:17). When, therefore, the Jews found him, he was not testifying, preaching, or reasoning with the people. There is no record of Paul himself ever going into the Temple for this purpose. The charge, therefore, was false. Even when the Jews at first incited the people against Paul, they brought up what he has been teaching outside of the Temple, in other regions (Acts 21:28).

NOT RAISING UP THE PEOPLE

“ . . . neither raising up the people . . .” Other versions read, “inciting the crowd,” NKJV “causing a riot,” NASB “stirring up a crowd,” NIV “working up the feelings of the people,” BBE “collecting a crowd,” CJB , “causing a disturbance among the crowd,” CSB “making any tumultuous gathering,” DARBY “causing any concourse DOUAY “making uproar among the people,” GENEVA “instigating a riot among the people,” NAB “making a dissension of the multitude,” YLT and “or bring together a seditious crowd.” AMPLIFIED

A tumult had been raised in the Temple courts, but it had been caused by the Jews from Asia, not Paul (Acts 21:27-21). This fact was attested to in the letter sent by Lysias the captain to Felix. In that letter he said, “This man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman” (Acts 23:27). He had not rescued the people from Paul, but Paul from the people. Now, Paul’s testimony perfectly coincides with the letter sent by Lysias to the governor. There is no evidence that Paul knew what was in that letter. It was the Spirit who directed Paul what to say, fulfilling Matthew 10:19. He was not motivated by a thorough knowledge of the circumstances.

SUCH ACTIVITY WAS NOT FOUND IN THE SYNAGOGUE OR IN THE CITY

“ . . . neither in the synagogues, nor in the city . . .” Other versions read, “nor in the synagogues, nor in the city itself,” NASB “the synagogues or anywhere else in the city,” NIV “synagogues or throughout the city,” NRSV “the synagogues throughout the city,” GWN and “any synagogue or on the streets.” NLT

There were times when Paul disputed in the synagogues. He did so in Damascus (Acts 9:20), in Antioch of Pisidia (Acts 13:14-41), Thessalonica (Acts 17:1-5), Athens (Acts 17:17), Corinth (Acts 18:4-6), and Ephesus (Acts 18:19; 19:8), There is no record of Paul teaching, reasoning, or disputing, in one of the synagogues of Jerusalem. When he first went to Jerusalem, he was with the apostles, “coming in and going out at Jerusalem” (Acts 9:27-28). It is written that during that time Paul “spoke boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they went about to slay him” (Acts 9:29). It might be assumed that this was done in the synagogue, but the record does not say so. Of course, this was a considerable time before Paul’s travels throughout the world, which was the point of reference of the accusing Jews: “For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes” (Acts 24:5). Paul now affirms that the charge that he had caused trouble in Jerusalem was not true. It was the Jews that caused the trouble, not Paul.

THEIR CASE CANNOT BE PROVED

Thus, in a display of wisdom, Paul transfers the responsibility to his accusers, for they are the ones who must present the burden of the evidence.

“ 13 Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me.” Other versions read, “Other versions read, “And they cannot prove to you the charges they are now making against me,” NIV “they are not able to give facts in support of the things which they say against me now,” BBE “Nor can they give any proof of the things of which they are accusing,” CJB and “Neither can they present argument or evidence to prove to you what they now bring against me.” AMPLIFIED

Thus, in a display of wisdom, Paul transfers the responsibility to his accusers, for they are the ones who must present the burden of the evidence. In fact, that is why they have been summoned to come before Felix. Tertullus has presented the case for the Jews, but has furnished no evidence or corroborating witnesses. He presented the following charges.

- INFECTING SOCIETY. We have found this man a pestilent fellow.
- CAUSING INSURRECTION. We have found this man a mover of sedition among the Jews.
- LEADING A DAMAGING SECT. We have found this man a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes.
- DESECRATING THE TEMPLE. Paul went about to profane the temple.

The only charge that could possibly have any relevance in the context of Roman government was that of fomenting some kind of insurrection. The other matters were strictly issues to unbelieving Jews. This would further buttress the testimony of Lysias who had assessed the whole matter of opposing Paul as “questions of their law,” not of Roman law (Acts 23:29).

Although Tertullus was a legal orator, and able to speak in an outwardly convincing manner, he actually had presented a poor case. Now Paul draws attention to that fact.

The kind of circumstance that deals with false charges is referred to in the following words.

The word of the Lord is clear about our responsibility to avoid suffering because of wrong doing. “But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busybody in other men's matters” (1 Pet 4:15). It is not virtuous to submit to punishment for wrong doing – even though that is something that must be done.

- “Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake” (Matt 5:11).
- “Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ” (1 Pet 3:16).

CHRISTIANS ARE RESPONSIBLE TO CONDUCT THEIR LIVES PROPERLY

The word of the Lord is clear about our responsibility to avoid suffering because of wrong doing. “But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busybody in other men's matters” (1 Pet 4:15). It is not virtuous to submit to punishment for wrong doing – even though that is something that must be done. Peter reasons, “ For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God” (1 Pet 2:20). God is not glorified because His people patiently endure punishment that is proper. Their responsibility is to zealously avoid such penalization.

CONCLUSION

The nature of life devoted to the service of Christ (which is the only valid expression of real life in Christ) is seen in this account.

- Not only is God well pleased, Satan is displeased.
- Not only are the people of God comforted, the children of the wicked one are agitated.
- While believers become more reasonable, unbelievers become more unreasonable.
- Sound teaching enables disciples to be more aggressive in the commitment to the Lord, while it moves the wicked to be more aggressive in their expression of wickedness.
- Within the context of religion, sin becomes more sinful, and wickedness becomes more wicked.
- The worst of all sinners are religious sinners, for their religion tends to anesthetize them.
- Opposition, regardless of its strength, cannot overthrow the faith of God's elect.

Every person who is in Christ is, by virtue of their union with Him, in an enviable condition. When they live by faith and walk in the Spirit, they are perfectly suitable to be used by God.

Lesson #96

STANDING BEFORE FELIX

“ 24:14 But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets: 15 And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. 16 And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men. 17 Now after many years I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings. 18 Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult. 19 Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had ought against me. 20 Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council, 21 Except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them, Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day. 22 And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and said, When Lysias the chief captain shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter. 23 And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him. 24 And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess, he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ. 25 And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee. 26 He hoped also that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him: wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.

27 But after two years Porcius Festus came into Felix' room: and Felix, willing to show the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.” (Acts 24:14-27)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

Paul now commences his defense before Felix. The manner in which he does this, as well as the words that he chooses, is of especial significance. Here is a sterling example of a man that is close enough to the Lord to be consciously directed by Him. His words will be straightforward, with no attempt to minimize his faith. He will not be ashamed to identify himself with a group that is by no means popular or even condoned by the Jewish leaders. There is a boldness in his words that can only come from faith, and it is coupled with a precision that glorifies God and appeals to those who are of tender heart. Paul does not allow himself to be sidetracked to inconsequential matters, or to become absorbed with an effort to impress Felix. He tells the unvarnished truth concerning his activity, and the reason for it. It is clear from his presentation that he is not a religious opportunist. Also, he speaks in a manner that will not bring reproach on the Lord Jesus Christ.

THE TRUTH OF GOD

The Scriptures, are comprised of the writings of an estimated forty different men, over a period of 1,600 years. Yet there is nothing fragmented about its contents. They have a solitary focus, and fit together under the umbrella of Divine purpose. The understanding of the harmony of the Scriptures is determined by the extent of one's knowledge of God. The greater familiarity there is with the Lord, through Jesus Christ, and by the Holy Spirit, the more the Scriptures are seen as a single unit.

PROGRESSION IS SEEN

There is a progression seen in Scripture that strictly parallels the revelation given to men. The beginning of the Scriptures establishes that God is the Architect, Creator, and Sustainer of everything that is made.

IN THE CREATION, the nature and ability of God is seen: His “eternal power and Godhead,” or Divinity (Rom 1:20). Enough is revealed to lead men to worship God, and to ascribe causes to Him. However, Fallen man “changed the glory of God” into something that reflected their own desires or fears. No one concluded the right thing when they observed nature, thus confirming that the human race had, indeed, fallen.

AFTER THE EXPULSION AND BEFORE THE OLD COVENANT. In and after the expulsion of our parents from the garden, and until the giving of the Law, God revealed much of Himself. His intolerance of sin was seen.

- In the expulsion of Adam and Eve from the garden (Gen 3:24).
- It was seen again in God’s dealings with Cain (Gen 4:12).
- In the flood (Gen 6:13,17).
- In the cursing of Canaan (Gen 9:25).
- In the judgment in the plain of Shinar where the people sought to built a tower that reached into heaven. (Gen 11:8).
- In the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities of the plain (Gen 19:24-25).
- In the threat to take king Abimilech’s life because he sought Sarah, Abraham’s wife (Gen 20:3-6).

During this period, the possibility of identity with God was demonstrated in both Enoch and Noah walking with God (Gen 5:22; 5:24; 6:9). In Noah and Abraham God also revealed that He made covenants with people (Gen 6:18; 9:9,11,15; 17:2). In Noah, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob God confirmed that He told men things that would happen in the future, both near and far (Gen 6:17; 12:2; 15:12-14; 18:17; 26:3; 28:13-14; 35:12).

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE OLD COVENANT. Here God focused not only on the sin of man, but upon his sinful nature. It was a condition that could not remain in the dark recesses of ignorance. Therefore in preparation for a Savior from sin, the Law defined sin, making men knowledgeable of its nature and of man’s desperate for a Savior (Rom 3:20). Men were also made more knowledgeable of Divine purpose, the wages of sin, and the need for a Redeemer. The absolute necessity of righteousness was seen, as well as man’s impotence to make himself righteous.

THE MINISTRY OF JOHN THE BAPTIST. At the appointed time, John the Baptist appeared on the Judean scene. He had a fresh message that consisted of two key elements: men must repent, and the Kingdom of God was about to appear (Matt 3:23). In this men saw that it was God’s nature not to do something until He had first revealed it to His prophets (Amos 3:7). In John’s ministry the Lord made known that He makes preparations among men for what He is going to do (Lk 1:76).

THE MINISTRY OF JESUS CHRIST. Jesus was a bodily depiction of God Himself – Emmanuel (Matt 1:23). He translated the Divine nature into life – life that could be seen. In Him the goodness of God was seen, for He went about “doing good and healing, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil” (Acts 10:38). He confirmed the inferiority of the devil and his hosts, which could not do a thing to inhibit or in any way to restrain His ministry (Matt 8:16; Lk 11:20). He personified the grace of God (John 1:17), and in his teaching confirmed the abhorrence of Deity for hypocrisy and lifeless religion (Matt 17:7-9; 23:13-29).

As is true of all revelation, there is a certain progression in it that glorifies God. What Moses received was greater than what Noah and others before him received. The prophets received more than Moses, and John the Baptist was given to see more than the prophets before him.

THE NEW COVENANT. In the New Covenant, the Divine requirements for the acceptance of men were established and confirmed. Because of the atoning death of Christ and His triumphant resurrection, God could now write His laws upon the hearts of men and put them into their minds. He could now be their God by choice, and they could be His people. Their sins would be remembered no more, and He would be merciful to their unrighteousness (Heb 10:16). Men could now be born again (1 Pet 1:23), partake of Christ (Heb 3:14), and become a new creation (1 Cor 5:17). This confirmed that God could not receive men as they were. Further He could not save them unless it was righteous to do so. The New Covenant is established within the framework of the preparatory and continued work of Christ.

LIVED OUT IN THE BOOK OF ACTS. The book of Acts is the chronicles of newness of life being lived out. Men were involved in the good and acceptable and perfect will of God. The role of preaching, the essentiality of believing, and the triumphant nature of faith is seen. How do godly people go about making decisions concerning the will of God? It is lived out in the selecting of a replacement for Judas (Acts 1:24-25), responding to persecution (Acts 4:24-31), and where to preach the Gospel (Acts 13:2-3). How do people live when the Holy Spirit, takes up residence in them, and they yield to His influences? It is lived out in the book of Acts. If there are any questions about how God reacts to hypocrisy in His church, it is made quite clear in the case of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5). In all of this we see God's willingness and forwardness to employ His people in His service.

EXPOUNDED IN DOCTRINE. Confirming that God desires His Person and will to be known, these realities are expounded in the epistles. While human conduct is addressed in the epistles, that is not the heart of them. They are rather an exposition of Christ Jesus, the Gospel, the purpose of God, and the nature of spiritual life. These are the matters that are to be understood or comprehended – something that can only be accomplished by faith.

A WHOLLY UNITED BOOK

There is a unity in Scripture that could not possible have been achieved by human effort alone. The golden thread of Divine Purpose and the scarlet strand of redemption are woven throughout Scripture. The promises are reflected in the accounts of Scripture, as well as the true nature of spiritual life. There is a Divine cause made known in all revelation. In the various accounts the truth of God's sovereignty, the immutability of His counsel, and the effectiveness of His work are seen.

The record before us is no different. In it we are beholding the fulfillment of God's word, confirmation of His power, and the impact of faith upon those possessing it. We are also being exposed to the nature of the devil's work, as well as its absolute inferiority.

As is true of all revelation, there is a certain progression in it that glorifies God. What Moses received was greater than what Noah and others before him received. The prophets received more than Moses, and John the Baptist was given to see more than the prophets before him.

Unlike the world, "more" revelation does not involve the abrogation of previous revelations. For example, the Law has been ended as a means to righteousness (Rom 10:4), but remains "for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers, For whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for menstealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine" (1 Tim 1:9-10).

The progress revelations of God are like a light that gets brighter and brighter, providing a proper perspective of the past as well as the future. They are like the river of Ezekiel's vision that became wider and deeper as it progressed (Ezek 47).

No succeeding revelation contradicts a previous one. Rather, in fuller light we discern more clearly lesser lights, comprehending their purpose, which is not always eternal. Scripture refers to this kind of comprehension in these words: "For with Thee is the fountain of life: in Thy light shall we see light" (Psa 36:9). This is an indispensable form of vision.

I CONFESS UNTO THEE

" 24:14 But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets."

This is now Paul's third defense concerning the Jews dragging him out of the Temple and making false charges against him.

- Acts 22:1-21 – Before the Jewish council.
- Acts 23:1-6 – Before the Jewish council
- Acts 24:10-21 – Before Felix

The things included in this three-fold defense are worthy of your perusal.

ACTS 22:1-21

1. Paul was a Jew.
2. He was born in Tarsus.
3. He was brought up in Jerusalem at the feet of Gamaliel according to the perfect manner of the Law.
4. He was zealous toward God.
5. He persecuted the "the way" unto death, binding and delivering to prison both men and women.
6. He received letters from the high priest and the elders to bring believers from Damascus bound to Jerusalem.
7. He was confronted by the glorified Jesus en route to Damascus, whom he did not know.
8. He inquired who He was, and was told it was Jesus of Nazareth whom he was persecuting.
9. The men who were with him saw the light, were afraid, but did not understand the voice that was speaking to him.
10. Upon inquiry, he was told to go into Damascus where someone would tell him what he ought to do.
11. Being blinded by the bright light, he was led into the city by those who were with him.
12. A devout Jew named Ananias came to him to recover his sight, and telling him he was a chosen vessel to be Christ's witness.
13. At the word of Ananas, he was baptized, washing away his sins.
14. Later, when he came into Jerusalem, while he was praying in the Temple, the Lord appeared to him, instructing him to leave Jerusalem, for they would not receive Him.

15. He confessed to Jesus that he had imprisoned and beat believers in every synagogue, and had consented to the death of Stephen.

16. Jesus told him he would be sent to the Gentiles.

ACTS 23:1-6

17. Paul declared he had lived in all good conscience until that very day.

18. Perceiving that one part of the council was Pharisees, and the other Sadducees, Paul declared he had been called into question concerning the hope of the resurrection.

ACTS 24:10-21

19. He had only been in Jerusalem for twelve days.

20. He was not found disputing or raising up the people in the Temple, in the synagogues, or in the city.

21. The Jews could not prove their allegations against him.

22. He worshiped God after the way the Jews called heresy.

23. He believed all things written in Moses and the prophets.

24. He had hope toward God, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead. Both of the just and the unjust.

25. He exercised himself to always have a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men.

26. He had brought alms for his nation, and offerings.

27. Jews from Asia found him purified in the Temple, and he was not with a multitude or attended by tumult.

28. The original accusers should have been present at this hearing.

29. He challenges those at the hearing to make known any evil doing in him, exempting the tumult caused by him confessing he held to the hope of the resurrection.

I CONFESS UNTO THEE

“But this I confess unto thee . . .” Other versions read, “I admit,” NASB “I will say openly,” BBE “I avow,” DARBY “I acknowledge,” MRD “freely admit,” MESSAGE “certainly admit.” WILLIAMS and “I am avowing.” INTERLINEAR

What is a confession? It is an admission of something true. It is an acknowledgment of a certain condition or truth that has been embraced.

The etymological meaning of the word “confess” is, “to say the same thing as another, I. e. to agree with, assent . . . to profess,” THAYER “admit; declare, say plainly; promise; claim,” UBS and “to express openly one's allegiance to a proposition or person - 'to profess, to confess, confession.’” LOUW-NIDA

Paul has no shame concerning the truth he has embraced, and the way with which he has chosen to be identified. He knew that Jesus said, “Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation; of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels” (Mark 8:38). Even if his life appears to be jeopardized by his acknowledgment of being identified with a way that is unapproved by the Jewish leaders, and unknown by Gentile rulers, yet Paul will not hesitate to articulate openly what is in his heart.

THE WAY WHICH THEY CALL HERESY

“ . . . that after the way which they call heresy . . .” Other versions read, “the Way which they call a sect,” NKJV “after that Way, which to them is not the true religion,” BBE “the Way [of the Lord], which they call a [heretical, division-producing] sect,” AMPLIFIED “their leaders think that the Lord’s Way which I follow is based on wrong beliefs,” CEV “that Way which they say is false,” GNB and “the Way, which they malign as a dead-end street.” MESSAGE

One thing that can be said for the Jewish council – they did know that Paul’s commitment was to something radically different than their own. They chose to refer to “the way” he had embraced as a “heresy,” or division based upon things that were not true. It seems to me that it is in order to point out that “the way” has been greatly obscured in our day. This is “the way” that is “narrow,” and is entered at a “strait,” or “small” NASB gate and leads “unto life” (Matt 7:14). It is a “high way” that is called “The way of holiness,” and will not allow the “unclean” to walk upon it (Isa 35:8). This “way” is personified by Jesus Christ Himself, who is “the Way” (John 14:6). Whatever is unlike Christ, or contradicts His Person, character, and work, has nothing whatsoever to do with this “way.” Fulfilling the word of Peter, the Jewish leaders had spoken evil of “the way of truth” (2 Pet 2:2), even though that perspective was hidden from them. The way they called “heresy” was actually “the way of righteousness” (2 Pet 2:21) and “the way of God in truth” (Matt 22:16; Mk 12:14). It is “the way of peace” in which God and man are reconciled (Lk 1:79).

It was actually Paul’s opponents that were sectarian, having chosen to embrace their own heresy.

I WORSHIP THE GOD OF MY FATHERS

“ . . . so worship I the God of my fathers . . .” Other versions read, “I do serve,” NASB “so serve I,” ASV “I do give worship,” BBE “I worship (serve),” AMPLIFIED and “I am offering Divine service.” INTERLINEAR

In some circles, the word “worship” sparks a lot of controversy. In other circles, it is equated with a certain type of singing, referred to as “praise and worship.” In New Covenant writings, the word “worship” is never used in a stereotyped manner, or confined to a certain kind of gathering. The following table reflects its various tenses in some of the standard versions.

- qrhskei,a l (threskeia). Translated “worshiping,” KJV “worship,” NKJV/NASB/NIV/ NRSV/RSV

As you can see, the word “worship” is used in a variety of ways.

- Often it is associated with an outward motion, such as bowing the head (Gen 24:26,48; Ex 4:31;2:27).

- Bowing down to the earth (2 Chron 7:3).

- Lying prostrate with the face toward the earth (John 5:14; 2 Chron 20:18; 1 Cor 14:25).

- Jacob worshiped God, “leaning on the top of his staff” (Heb 11:21).

- Worship is also associated with speaking to the Lord (2 Chron 7:3; Matt 8:2).

- The Ethiopian eunuch came to Jerusalem “for to worship” (Acts 8:27). Years later Paul said he came to Jerusalem “for to worship” (Acts 24:11).

However, in this text, and in most apostolic doctrine, “worship” has to do with serving God – i.e. yielding up our lives to Him (John 4:23-24; John 9:31; Acts 16:14; 18:7; 24:14; Phil 3:3; Heb 10:2). It is in this sense that Paul confessed before Felix, “I worship the God of my fathers.”

Worship Under the Law

Under the Law worship was associated with ceremonies, times, and seasons. The vast majority of the Exodus- through-Malachi texts using the various forms of “worship” had to do with NOT worshipping other gods. At least seven uses of the term were prophetic in nature, foretelling the era of the New Covenant (Psa 22:27; 65:4; Isa 27:13; 49:7; Ezek 46:2-3; Zeph 2:11). In the Old Covenant writings, a significant number of references have to do with seasons and ceremonies (i.e. Deut 26:10; 1 Sam 1:3; 2 Kgs 17:36; Jer 7:2).

Worship in the Gospels

There are twenty-four references to “worship” (in all of its varied forms) in the Gospels. Nine of them have to do with people worshipping Jesus, bowing to Him, and generally asking Him for a blessing (Matt 2:2,11; 8:2;14:33; 15:25; 20:20; 28:17; Lk 24:52; John 9:38). Jesus told the woman at the well that God was seeking “true worshipers” who worshiped Him “in Spirit and in truth” (John 4:23-24). That is, that really did worship Him, in keeping with the truth made known about God, and their own character. He also told her that this kind of worship was not associated with a place.

Worship in the Book of Acts

There are eleven references to “worship” in the book of Acts. The eunuch went to Jerusalem to worship (Acts 8:27). Cornelius worshiped Peter, and Peter told him to stand up and cease such action (Acts 10:25-26). Lydia is said to be one “which worshiped God” (Acts 16:14). The same is said of Justus (Acts 18:7). Paul told the Athenian philosophers that God is not worshiped with men’s hands (Acts 17:25). Paul said he came to Jerusalem to worship (Acts 24:11), and that he was one that “worshiped the God of [his] fathers” (Acts 24:14).

Worship in the Epistles

The epistles contain nine reference to worship. Some of the references have to do with the worship of other gods, or NOT worshipping the true God (Rom 1:25; Col 2:19,23; 2 Thess 2:4). There is a record of angels being told to worship Jesus when He came into the world (Heb 1:6). The book of Hebrews mentions the “worshipers” that were under the Old Covenant, whose conscience was not purged by the sacrifices of old (Heb 10:2). It is also written that Jacob worshiped God while he was leaning His staff (Heb 11:21). Those who are in Christ are said to “worship God in the Spirit” (Phil 3:3).

Worship in the Book of the Revelation

The book of the Revelation contains thirteen references to worship. Heavenly personalities are said to worship God (Rev 4:10; 5:6; 7:11; 11:16; 19:4). Those on the earth are challenged to “worship Him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountain of waters” (Rev 14:7). It is prophesied that “all nations shall come and worship before” the Lord (Rev 15:4). John fell down before an angel to worship him, and was rebuked for it (Rev 19:10).

Paul Worshiped God

This statement is made in view of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. Paul was not speaking of routines, places, and periodic activities. He was rather speaking of his service to God – how that he conducted his life within an acute awareness of God, through Jesus Christ, and by the Holy Spirit. This is the kind of life the saved of the Lord live. It is not a goal, but a reality. This is confirmed by the word of Paul concerning the identity of the people of God: “For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh” (Phil 3:3). Some of the things involved in this worship are as follows. This is only representative of the nature of worship, but will provide a perspective that will assist the good and honest heart in a proper consideration of this grand reality – worship.

- Living unto the One who died for us and rose again (2 Cor 5:15).
- Yielding our bodies as a living sacrifice to God, and refusing to be conformed to this world (Rom 12:1-2).
- Seeking the things that are above, and setting our affection upon them (Col 3:1-2).
- Coming boldly to the throne of all grace (Heb 4:16).
- Drawing nigh to God (Heb 7:19; James 4:8).
- Expressing charity out of a pure heart, and maintaining a good conscience (1 Tim 1:5).
- Perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord (2 Cor 7:2).
- Yielding our members as instruments of righteousness unto God (Rom 6:13,16,19).
- Reckoning ourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, and alive unto God (Rom 6:11).
- Running the race set before us with patience, looking to Jesus (Heb 12:1-2).

This is a description of a manner of life that is characteristic of those who are living by faith and walking in the Spirit. No person who falls short in these areas is really capable of consistently worshipping God. Further, I do not know how you could offer hope to those who are not living in this manner. Failing in these critical areas is a matter that must be corrected, for they all depend upon the resources provided in the redemption that is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory.

Modern Worship

We are living in a period of time when the preachers, teachers, and spiritual leaders of the churches have allowed a spurious definition of worship to assume dominance in the churches. It is the kind of worship that can be turned on and off like a light switch. It has also been allowed to upstage the preaching of the Word, so that people are brought to imagine that frothy words repeated like a Hindu mantra are worship. People who obviously live at a distance from God can participate in such expressions, imagining they are the better for it. Now there is a new jargon in the churches – “praise and worship” – and it is imagined that it represents a revival of sorts. Of course, it has not stemmed the tide of iniquity that is pouring into the church, or resulted in a better understanding of the Person, purpose, and salvation of God.

What is called “praise and worship” in our time is more like the manner in which Israel worshiped the Lord. They honored Him with their lips, but their hearts were far from Him (Isa 29:13; Matt 15:7-9). Jesus soundly rebuked the generation extant at the time of His ministry, declaring that their worship was “vain,” or pointless and without profit. Yet, there has been an astounding revival of that kind of honor in our time.

Given what Jesus and apostolic doctrine says about “worship” such an approach to worship can by no means be justified. The thrust of the New Covenant must be ignored to entertain such shallow notions.

Even concerning God’s “great salvation” and the message of the Gospel, what is preached is in strict accord with what was written by Moses and the Prophets. This is declared in a number of places.

Further, if Paul were to stand in the average church and say, “so worship I the God of my fathers,” the people would not have the faintest idea what he was talking about. Some might think he was speaking about a certain style of music. Notice, that Paul relates “worship” with what was taught. That is why the Jews referred to the “way” in which he worshiped God as “heresy” – which is a doctrinal thrust the Jews perceived as incorrect. If Paul had merely been in the Temple and synagogues as an idle listener, he would have received no opposition. It is the doctrine that he preached and that directed his life that brought the opposition. In this regard, he mirrored the Lord Jesus Himself.

BELIEVING ALL THINGS WRITTEN IN MOSES AND THE PROPHETS

“ . . .believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets.” Other versions read, “believing everything that is in accordance with the Law, and that is written in the Prophets,” NASB “I believe everything that agrees with the Law and that is written in the Prophets,” NIV “believing everything laid down according to the law or written in the prophets,” NRSV and “still persuaded of the truth of and believing in and placing full confidence in everything laid down in the Law [of Moses] or written in the prophets.” AMPLIFIED

This is a challenging statement. Paul is saying more than, “I believe every word of the Bible.” He certainly did believe every word in the Scriptures, but his words reflect a larger consideration. He was saying that he shaped his understanding and perspective according to the Scriptures. That was the standard by which he measured all other expressions. In him the saying was fulfilled, “To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them” (Isa 8:20).

Even concerning God’s “great salvation” and the message of the Gospel, what is preached is in strict accord with what was written by Moses and the Prophets. This is declared in a number of places.

- PHILIP TESTIFIES TO NATHANAEL. “Philip findeth Nathanael, and saith unto him, We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph” (John 1:45).

- JESUS TO THE TWO ON THE ROAD TO EMMAUS. “And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself. (Luke 24:27).

- JESUS TO THE ELEVEN AND THOSE WITH THEM. “And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me. (Luke 24:44).

- THE PREACHING OF PAUL. “Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come” (Acts 26:22). “And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening” (Acts 28:23).

It was owing to the writings of Moses and the Prophets that those of honest and good hearts were able to recognize the Christ and embrace Him. That was the indispensable and primary ministry of Moses and the Prophets.

PETER IN THE TEMPLE. “Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days” (Acts 3:24).

- PETER AT THE HOUSE OF CORNELIUS. “To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins” (Acts 10:43).

- JAMES TO THE JERUSALEM CONFERENCE. “Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written” (Acts 15:14-15)

• PAUL TO THE BELIEVERS IN ROME. “But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets ” (Rom 3:21). “But now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets , according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith” (Rom 16:26).

• PETER TO THE SCATTERED JEWISH BELIEVERS. “Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow” (1 Pet 1:11).

• PAUL TO TIMOTHY. “And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures , which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus” (2 Tim 3:15).

It was owing to the writings of Moses and the Prophets that those of honest and good hearts were able to recognize the Christ and embrace Him. That was the indispensable and primary ministry of Moses and the Prophets.

What of Our Time?

Although the clear teaching of the apostles is that the Christ Himself, together with the salvation of God, was announced by Moses and the Prophets, one can scarcely find a professing believer that has an intelligent grasp of these things. A Jesus is being preached that cannot be confirmed by Moses and the Prophets. It is really “another Jesus” – a spurious one. A way of salvation is being preached that cannot be confirmed by Moses and the Prophets. One rarely hears what Moses and the Prophets foretold about the character and lives of those who are being saved – those associated with Christ and the New Covenant. Wholly erroneous ideas about these matters have easily arisen and been perpetrated with little objection or inquiry.

However, this was not the manner of preaching and profession in the beginning of the day of salvation. There was an acute awareness among the informed of the proclamation of “another Jesus,” “another Spirit,” and “another gospel” (2 Cor 11:4; Gal 1:6). In order to decipher the true from the false, at least two things were required. First, “the anointing” that teaches believers to distinguish the true from the false (1 John 2:20,27). Second, a knowledge of the prophecies of Moses and the Prophets. These were used by the Holy Spirit to teach distinctions to the people.

Where such a knowledge is lacking, it is difficult, if not altogether impossible, to know that the Jesus one has embraced is “the Lord’s Christ.” The modern church has not done well in assisting the people to take hold of this perspective. Much of what it is saying actually clouds the truth.

HOPE TOWARD GOD

“ 15 And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust.”

It is good to consider where Paul places the accent in this defense. This is not the first time he spoke in such a manner, or with such a thrust. You will find that, within the context of the contemporary Christian emphasis, there is a strange ring to what the apostle says. But that strangeness is only owing to the religious climate that has been produced by the preaching and teaching of our time.

HOPE TOWARD GOD

“And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow . . .” Other versions read, “I have hope in God,” NKJV “having hope in God,” NASB “hoping in God,” BBE “hope towards God,” DARBY “and I believe,” LIVING “belief in God,” IE “a hope directed towards God,” WEYMOUTH “look for,” MONTGOMERY “I am just as sure,” CEV “living in hopeful anticipation,” MESSAGE and “having expectation.” INTERLINEAR

Although some versions use the words “believe,” LIVING and “belief,” IE that is not a proper translation of the word used here. The Greek word is evlpi,da , which, as used here, has the following lexical meaning: “expectation of good . . . joyful and confident expectation,” THAYER “expected and awaited . . . prospect . . . expectation of a divinely provided future,” FRIBERG and “to look forward with confidence to that which is good and beneficial.” LOUW-NIDA

This Greek word is used fifty-three times from Acts through First John. It is not used a single time in the Gospels, or the book of the Revelation. An alternative word for hope (evlpi,zete) is used one time from Matthew through Revelation, where it speaks of lending to people in hope of gaining (Lk 6:34).

Hope in Genesis Through Malachi

The reality of hoping in God was introduced by Abraham, who is said to have “believed in hope” (Rom 4:18), although no reference is made directly to “hope” from Genesis through Judges. The first mentioning of “hope” in any tense is Ruth 1:12 – and there it refers to Naomi not hoping for a husband. Ezra referred to “hope” in regards to Israel refraining from marrying heathen women (Ezra 10:2). The book of Esther refers to “hope.” affirming that the Jew’s enemies “hoped” to have the rule over them (Esth 9:1). The book of Job contains sixteen reference to “hope” (4:6; 5:16; 6:11,20; 7:6; 8:13,14; 11:18,20; 14:7; 17:15; 19:20; 27:8; 31:24; 41:9). Most of the references were an expression of favor in the future.

The Psalms contain twenty-six references to hope. Some of them were prophecies of the coming Messiah (16:9; 22:9). Most of them are expressions of reliance upon the Lord (31:24; 33:18; 38:15; 39:7; 42:5,11; 43:5; 71:5,14; 78:7; 119:43, 49,74,81,114,116,147,165; 130:5,7; 131:3; 146:5; 147:11).

Proverbs contains seven references to hope, most of which are very general in nature (10:28; 11:7; 13:12; 14:32; 19:18; 26:12; 29:20).

There are twenty-seven references to hope in Isaiah through Malachi. The Lord is referred to as “the hope of Israel” (Jer 14:8; 17:13; 50:7). There are a number of references that accent conditions in which there was “no hope” (Isa 38:18; 57:10; Jer 2:25; 3:23; 18:12; Lam 3:18; Ezek 13:6; 19:5; 37:11). The blessing of hoping in the Lord is mentioned (Jer 17:7,17; Lam 3:21,24,26,29). God announces that there is hope for His people (Jer 31:17). Hosea mentioned “a door of hope” (Hos 2:15). Joel promised the Lord would be “the hope of His people” (Joel 3:16). Zechariah wrote of the “prisoners of hope” (Zech 9:12).

Romans through Jude contain forty-seven referemces to hope. Apostolic doctrine announces that we are “saved by hope” (Rom 8:24). There is “rejoicing in hope” (Rom 12:12; Heb 3:6), and “hope” that proceeds from the “patience and comfort” generated by “the Scriptures” (Rom 15:4). We read of “the God of hope” (Rom 15:13), hoping “all things” (1 Cor 13:7), and having “hope in Christ” (1 Cor 15:19). “Hope” is declared to be something we possess (2 Cor 3:12). There is “the hope of righteousness” for which we patiently wait through the ministry of the Holy Spirit (Gal 5:5). We read of “the hope of His calling” (Eph 1:18), “one hope” (Eph 4:4), and “the hope that is laid up for you in heaven” (Col 1:5). There is “the hope” that is generated through the Gospel (Col 1:23), “Christ in you, the hope of glory” (Col 1:27), and the “patience of hope” (1 Thess 1:3). We read of “the hope of salvation” that is a helmet to protect the mind (1 Thess 5:5). God has given to the saints “everlasting consolation and good hope through grace” (2 Thess 2:16). Jesus is referred to as “our hope” (1 Tim 1:1). There is “the hope of eternal life” (Tit 1:2; 3:7), and “the blessed hope” of “the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ” (Tit 2:13). We are told of “the full assurance of hope” (Heb 6:11), laying hold on “the hope set before us” (Heb 6:18), and “hope” that is an “anchor of the soul” (Heb 6:19). We have been “begotten again unto a lively hope” (1 Pet 1:3). Believers “hope unto the end” (1 Pet 1:13), and are to live so they can “give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason for the hope that in you” (1 Pet 3:15).

The Uniqueness of Hope Under the New Covenant

Notice the clarity and certitude that is related to hope now that sin has been put away, and Jesus is seated at the right hand of God. Hope is now fuller than it ever was before. No one prior to the enthronement of Jesus had such a strong hope concerning the end of the world and entrance into eternity. These things had simply not been brought to light as they have been in Christ Jesus. The best of believers prior to Jesus simply could not see as far as the saints can now. That is why it is written, “. . . God; Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began, but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel ” (2 Tim 1:8-10).

Paul now speaks of hope in this lofty sense. While he will acknowledge that the Jews had this hope, it was, because of limited revelation, not as mature and precise as Paul’s.

THERE SHALL BE A RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD

“. . . that there shall be a resurrection of the dead . . .” Other versions read, “shall certainly be a resurrection,” NASB “a coming back from the dead,” BBE “there is to be a resurrection,” DARBY “will come back to life,” GWN “He will raise,” NLT “the same resurrection from death,” TNT and “a rising again from the dead.” YLT

The resurrection of the dead will occur when Jesus comes – at the “last trump, when “the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.” At that time,. There will be no more enemies to defeat, for death is “the last enemy.” That means the present heavens and earth will also pass away, for they are in a state of decline

The resurrection of the dead will occur when Jesus comes – at the “last trump, when “the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed” (1 Cor 15:52). At that time,. There will be no more enemies to defeat, for death is “the last enemy” (1 Cor 15:26). That means the present heavens and earth will also pass away, for they are in a state of decline, having been made “subject to vanity” (Rom 8:20). It also means the end of Satan’s influence, for the domain in which he rules will have been done away.

Hope is faith in its forward posture. It looks forward with confidence to the consummation of the great salvation. In our text, Paul relates that “hope” to the resurrection of the dead – the appointed time when the saints will be made complete, with no vestige of the flesh remaining.

Revelation About the Resurrection Prior to Christ Jesus

Although the resurrection of the dead was not a frequent subject by the prophets, they did declare its reality in no uncertain words. It was a coming epoch that God Almighty did not want to be hidden from men.

• MEN SHALL LIVE AGAIN. “If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands” (Job 14:14-15).

• THE DEAD SHALL SEE GOD. “For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me” (Job 19:25-27).

• AWAKING WITH THE LORD’S LIKENESS. “As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness” (Psa 17:15).

• REDEEMED FROM THE POWER OF THE GRAVE. “But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave: for he shall receive me. Selah” (Psa 49:15).

• DEATH SWALLOWED UP IN VICTORY. “He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord GOD will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the LORD hath spoken it” (Isa 25:8).

• DEAD MEN SHALL LIVE. “Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead” (Isa 26:19).

• THOSE IN THE DUST OF THE EARTH SHALL AWAKE. “And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever” (Dan 12:2-3).

• RANSOMED FROM THE POWER OF THE GRAVE. “I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes” (Hosea 13:14).

Regarding the resurrection, it is tragic beyond description that many professing Christians speak less of, and lack the knowledge of, those living prior to “the day of salvation.” It is a condition that should cause great shame and aggressive repentance.

Proclamation of the Resurrection After the Enthronement of Jesus

Although there is not much talk about the resurrection of the dead in the church of our day, that event was frequently addressed in the apostolic writings and the record their preaching. Here is a sampling of those references.

• THE APOSTLES PREACHED THE RESURRECTION. “And as they spake unto the people, the priests, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees, came upon them, Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead” (Acts 4:1-2).

• THE SKEPTICS SCOFFED AT THE PROCLAMATION OF THE RESURRECTION. “Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoicks, encountered him. And some said, What will this babbler say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection” (Acts 17:18) . . . “And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked: and others said, We will hear thee again of this matter” (Acts 17:32).

• PAUL CONFESSED TO BELIEVING THE DEAD WOULD BE RAISED. “But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question” (Acts 23:6).

• PAUL TO AGRIPPA. “Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?” (Acts 26:8).

• THE REDEMPTION OF THE BODY. “And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body” (Rom 8:23).

• GOD WILL RAISE US UP. “And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power” (1 Cor 6:14).

• THE DEAD SHALL BE RAISED. “In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed” (1 Cor 15:52).

• GOD WILL RAISE US BY JESUS. “Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you ” (2 Cor 4:14).

• THE DESIRE TO KNOW THE POWER OF THE RESURRECTION, AND TO ATTAIN UNTO THE RESURRECTION. “That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead” (Phil 3:10-11).

• THE CHANGE OF THE VILE BODY. “Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself” (Phil 3:21).

• THOSE WHO HAVE DIED WILL BE BROUGHT BACK. “For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him” (1 Thess 4:14).

THE RESURRECTION, PART OF THE PRINCIPLES OF DOCTRINE. “Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment” (Heb 6:1-2).

BOTH OF THE JUST AND THE UNJUST

“ . . . both of the just and unjust.” Other versions read, “the righteous and the wicked,” NASB “the righteous and the unrighteous,” NRSV “upright men and wrongdoers,” BBE “that people with God's approval and those without it,” GWN “good and bad,” IE “the upright and the wicked,” WILLIAMS and “the righteous and the unrighteous (the just and the unjust).” AMPLIFIED

Some of the versions are a bit misleading at this point: “upright men and wrongdoers,” BBE and “good and bad.” GWN Whether intentional or not, this might leave people thinking that this is only a description of the outward conduct of the people. That is involved, to be sure, for a salvation that does not alter the conduct of those participating in it is really no salvation at all. The words “just” and “unjust” equate to “righteous” and “unrighteous,” or those who have been justified and those who have not.

In the broadest sense of the word, this means those whose life passes Divine scrutiny and those who do not. In the strictest sense, being righteous must be seen as the result of God's own work through Christ Jesus, for men are “made righteous” (Rom 5:19). The unjust are those who have not been made righteous.

Both of these categories will be raised at the same time, in a single resurrection. Jesus referred to this when speaking of His return, “Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation” (John 5:28-29).

The word “resurrections” does not appear in any standard translation of Scripture. “Resurrection” is nowhere mentioned in the plural – nowhere. We do read of a “first resurrection,” but never of a “second resurrection.” The expression “first resurrection” denotes an order or kind of resurrection. It is not a term indicating chronology. With consistency Scripture refers to “THE resurrection” (Matt 22:28,30,31; Mk 12:33; Lk 14:14; 20:33,35,36; Lk 20:36; John 5:29; John 11:24,25; Acts 4:2,33; 17:18,32; 23:6; 24:21; 1 Cor 15:21,42; Phil 3:11; 2 Tim 2:18; Heb 6:2). In all of these texts, the definite article for “the” appears, signifying a singular, not a plural, expression.

In spite of the clarity of Scripture, the popular idea of the resurrection of the dead is that there will be two resurrections – one of the just, and one of the unjust. These two resurrections are taught to be separated by a thousand years. During that time, the saints will be absent from the earth, having been raptured. Jesus, however, associated ultimate life and damnation with a single resurrection.

SOMETHING TO BE MAINTAINED

“ 16 And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men.”

Paul now confesses to a manner of living that is counter to the culture in which we live. Even within the professing church, this is an exceedingly rare admission. Indeed, some people have never heard a human being speak in this manner. However, this IS the manner of spiritual life

I EXERCISE MYSELF

“And herein do I exercise myself . . .” Other versions read, “I myself always strive,” NKJV “I do my best,” NASB “I strive always,” NIV “I always take pains,” RSV “I make a point of,” CJB “I endeavor,” DOUAY “I also labor,” MRD “I always try,” NLT “herein study I,” PNT “I try with all my strength,” LIVING “my own earnest endeavor,” WEYMOUTH and “I always exercise and discipline myself [mortifying my body, deadening my carnal affections, bodily appetites, and worldly desires, endeavoring in all respects].” AMPLIFIED

The Greek word translated “exercise” is avskw/ , which has the following lexical meaning: “to exercise (oneself), take pains, labor, strive,” THAYER “do one's best to, strive to, exert oneself to,” FRIBERG “endeavor, do one's best,” UBS and “engage in some activity, with both continuity and effort - 'to do one's best, to endeavor.” LOUW-NIDA

As used here, “exercise” involves extensive and consistent effort. The kind of life Paul described is elsewhere stated this way: “For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain” (Phil 1:21). Again he confessed, “I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me” (Gal 2:20). Stated yet another way it is living “unto Him which died for them and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15). Jesus spoke of this manner of life when He revealed what was required to be His disciple. “ Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for My sake shall find it” (Matt 16:24-25).

The kind of life Paul describes is not a more advanced kind of life. In fact, he himself stated that this kind of life was the objective of the commandment of God. “Now the purpose of the commandment is love from a pure heart, from a good conscience, and from sincere faith” NKJV (1 Tim 1:5). True spiritual life has no room for erratic and thoughtless living. Self-centeredness and a lack of proper spiritual focus are all traits of the flesh, and they are not acceptable before God. The absence of these qualities is always owing to some kind of distraction or temptation.

A CONSCIENCE VOID OF OFFENSE

“ . . . to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men.” Other versions read, “to have a conscience without offense toward God and men,” NKJV “to maintain always a blameless conscience both before God and before men,” NASB “always to keep my conscience clear before God and man,” NIV “to have no reason for shame before God or men,” BBE “to have in everything a conscience without offence towards God and men,” DARBY “to have always a pure conscience before God, and before men,” MRD “do what I believe is right before God and men,” LIVING and “to have a clear (unshaken, blameless) conscience, void of offense toward God and toward men.” AMPLIFIED

This way of thinking is not to be confused with pleasing men, for, as Paul wrote, “For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ” (Gal 1:10). It is never right to cater to the whims of men.

As concerns being void of “offense toward man,” Paul is referring to the sense of right and wrong that is maintained by men of moral integrity. This perspective is stated in Romans 14:17-18: “For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. For he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men .” In his epistle to Titus, Paul stated it this way: “In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works: in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you ” (Titus 2:7-8). This is also the condition described in Paul’s letter to the Philippians: “That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world ” (Phil 2:15).

There is such a thing as “having favor with all he people” (Acts 2:47). When this favor involves unregenerate people, it has to do with a helpful and productive life that brings benefit to society. It is understood that this does not exclude the possibility of rejection and persecution. But such responses will not be because of wrongdoing. No believer is to “suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busybody in other men's matters” (1 Pet 4:15). Thus Paul extended himself so as not to cause men to have a distorted view of God, or to live in such a way as to earn men’s disfavor by an ungodly manner of life. This frame of mind is one required of all believers.

They simply cannot approach life with themselves being the chief consideration.

It is not how they are treated that is the point, but if they are living above reproach. Godliness is an absolute requirement (Heb 12:14).

I CAME TO BRING ALMS

“ 17 Now after many years I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings.”

Paul is defending himself against the false charges of the Jews. They have charged him with being a trouble-maker among the Jews. If that was really the case, he would have spent a lot of time in Jerusalem, their chief city. However, instead of being a frequent visitor to Jerusalem, Paul now informs Felix of the facts.

I CAME AFTER MANY YEARS

“Now after many years I came . . .” Other versions read, “after several years,” NASB “after an absence of several years,” NIV “after some years,” NRSV “after a number of years,” BBE “after a lapse of many years,” DARBY and “I was away for many years.” IE

If Paul was really a troubler of the Jews, he would not have stayed away from the center of Jewish activity for “several years.” NASB Translated from the word pleio,nwn , the word “many” means, “greater in quantity: the object with which the comparison is made being,” THAYER “many, a larger number; greater (greater than of comparison),” UBS and “a relatively large quantity of objects or events - 'many, a great deal of, a great number of.’” LOUW-NIDA

The point of comparison is with the “twelve days” Paul had been in Jerusalem. If the charges that were leveled against him were true, it would prove exceedingly difficult to account for his absence from Jerusalem for a number of years.

Concerning the probable length of this period of absence, I will simply pass along an explanation provided in the Pulpit Commentary: “St. Paul’s last visit to Jerusalem was that mentioned in Acts 18:22. Since then he had spent “some time” (cro>non tina>) at Antioch, had gone over all the country of Phrygia and Galatia, had come to Ephesus, and stopped between two and three years there, had gone through Macedonia, had spent three months at Corinth, had returned to Macedonia, and from thence had come to Jerusalem in about fifty days. All which must have occupied four or five years — from A.D. 54 to A.D. 58 — according to most chronologers.”

Paul’s point is that his manner of life would not support the charges leveled against him.

TO BRING ALMS AND OFFERINGS

“ . . . to bring alms . . . and offerings.” Other versions read, “gifts for the poor . . . and offerings,” NIV “alms . . . and to offer sacrifices,” NRSV “give help and offerings,” BBE “bring charitable gifts and offerings,” CSB “gifts for the poor and offerings for God,” GWN “impart alms and present an offering,” MRD “do kind acts to my nation, and offerings,” YLT “money to aid . . . to offer a sacrifice to God,” LIVING “bring money . . . and to give some offerings,” IE “bring contributions of . . . and to offer sacrifices,” WILLIAMS and “bring . . . contributions of charity and offerings.” AMPLIFIED

As you can see, there are two completely different ideas reflected in the various versions.

- That both the alms and the offerings were presented to Paul’s nation – the Jews (NIV/BBE/CSB/IE/AMPLIFIED) .
- That alms were presented to the people, And a sacrifice was presented to God (NRSV/GWN/MRD/LIVING/WILLIAMS) .

The charitable gift of which he speaks consisted of the offerings gathered from various churches (1 Cor 16:1-2; 2 Cor 8; Rom 15:25-26,31). It is not likely that the offering he presented was the one related to the four men who had taken a vow (Acts 21:26). Paul did not come to Jerusalem to present that offering. It was made at the suggestion of James and the brethren after he had arrived in Jerusalem (Acts 21:22-24).

It seems to me to be best to consider the “offerings” to be but another view of the “alms.” In delineating this offering to the Corinthians, Paul wrote that what the people gave was really being given to God Himself. “Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have. For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not” (2 Cor 8:11-12). Although I am not willing to be contentious about it, I am persuaded that the “alms” and “offerings” were both referring to the gifts brought to the poor saints in Jerusalem.

TO MY NATION

“ . . . to my nation.” Other versions read, “my people,” NIV “the people of my own nation,” MRD “the Jews.” LIVING

This is a wise presentation of the case. Actually, the alms Paul had brought were not for the Jews in general, but for “the poor saints which are at Jerusalem” (Rom 15:26). In his exhortation to the Corinthians concerning this matter, this type of work is referred to as “the ministry to the saints ”

NASB (1 Cor 16:15). He also wrote to the Corinthians that this offering “supplieth the want of the saints ” (2 Cor 9:12). Jesus referred to such acts of philanthropy as ministering to “the least of these My brethren” (Matt 25:40). When rebuking professed believers that lacked the required evidence of sonship, James wrote, “If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?” (James 2:15-16). So, there is really no question about the intended recipients of the “alms” and “offerings” Paul brought to Jerusalem.

Yet Paul generalizes by saying he brought the alms to his “nation” – which he most assuredly did, even though only a part of the nation received them. Of course, it would have been no different if he had brought the offerings for the unbelieving Jews who were poor – only a part of the nation would have received them – the poor. However, this is not a matter on which to split hairs. Paul had been charged with being a defiling influence and one that fomented insurrection “among the Jews.” However, instead of causing agitation among his nation, he had assisted them in the hour of need. This is further something that could be corroborated. The charges, therefore, were not at all consistent with the real facts in the matter. Paul had been wholly misrepresented, and he wisely gives just enough information as can be fully corroborated.

THEY FOUND ME PURIFIED IN THE TEMPLE

“ 18 Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult. 19 Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had ought against me.”

Paul now spells out the circumstances at the time he was found by the Jews. Tertullus had been very general in his presentation – particularly regarding how the Jews had actually found Paul: “ Who also hath gone about to profane the temple: whom we took, and would have judged according to our law” (Acts 24:6). The clear implication is that they had found him profaning, or defiling, the Temple.

CERTAIN JEWS FROM ASIA

“Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me . . .” This was conveniently omitted from Tertullus’ charges. He spoke for the ones who were present – “whom WE took” – as though this whole matter had been detected and addressed by the Jews from Jerusalem. The true sequence of events was as follows.

- The Jews from Asia saw Paul “in the Temple” (Acts 21:27a).
- The Jews from Asia “stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him” (Acts 21:27b).

Instead of stirring up a tumult, Paul had been engaged in an activity directed toward God alone. That action had to do with a vow he had made to the Lord. He was living his life in view of the Lord, not with a mind to promote a sect, as his accusers alleged.

- The Jews from Asia cried out, calling upon the men of Israel to “help” them (Acts 21:28a).
- The Jews from Asia told the people Paul was teaching in every place “against the people, and the Law, and this place” [the Temple] (Acts 21:28b).
- The Jews from Asia told the people Paul had “brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place” (Acts 21:28c).

Tertullus made no reference to the Jews from Asia, or the fact that the local Jews had not entered into public opposition of Paul until they were provoked, by the Jews from Asia. Now Paul refers to this fact that had not been set before the court.

It ought to be noted that the only charges that should be brought against the people of God are those that are false. No child of God should “suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busybody in other men's matters” (1 Pet 4:15). That is, such things should never be charged against the people of God in truth.

FOUND ME PURIFIED IN THE TEMPLE

“ . . . purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult . . .” Other versions read, “occupied in the temple, having been purified, without any crowd or uproar,” NASB “I was ceremonially clean when they found me in the temple courts doing this. There was no crowd with me, nor was I involved in any disturbance,” NIV “they found me in the temple, completing the rite of purification, without any crowd or disturbance,” NRSV and “they found me [occupied in the rites of purification] in the temple, without any crowd or uproar.” AMPLIFIED

Instead of stirring up a tumult, Paul had been engaged in an activity directed toward God alone. That action had to do with a vow he had made to the Lord. He was living his life in view of the Lord, not with a mind to promote a sect, as his accusers alleged.

Tertullus had made no mention of this vow, or the fact that Paul was there with four Jewish men who also were completing a vow to the Lord. This was not a private thing for Paul, for, as James and the elders had suggested, it was also done in order that others might see and know that Paul was not engaged in disrupting the Jews and their customs. The Jews from Asia had seen this suggestion being carried out, but made no association at all of the activity with a consciousness of God.

So it is that when deeds are done in the presence of unbelievers with an interest to pleasing God and confirming the nature of spiritual life, it may not solicit their approbation. The children of God cannot afford to be naive about this situation.

THEY OUGHT TO HAVE BEEN HERE

“ . . . Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had ought against me.” Other versions read, “who ought to have been present before you, and to make accusation, if they should have anything against me,” NASB “it would have been better if they had come here to make a statement, if they have anything against me,” BBE “It is they who ought to be here before you to bring charges, if they have anything against me,” CSB and “whom it behoveth to be present before thee, and to accuse, if they had anything against me.” YLT

The reference is to the Jews from Asia who had raised the charges against Paul. Instead of the original accusers being there, Ananias and the council, or sanhedrin, were there, with Tertullus being their spokesman. The first time Ananias the high priest is mentioned is Acts 23:2. The council and the chief priests were summoned into the matter in Acts 22:39, well after the charges had been made. There is no record of Tertullus' involvement until the event that is now being reported.

Therefore, none of the original accusers were present at this trial. Well does Paul affirm they ought to have been there. This is a trial based upon hearsay and second and third reports, which violated both Jewish and Roman law. Jewish law required at least two witnesses to be present (Deut 17:6). The whole affair was nothing but a sham.

TESTIFY OF ANY EVIL FOUND IN ME

“ 20 Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council.” Other versions read, “any wrongdoing,” NKJV “misdeed,” NASB “what crime they found in me,” NIV “any iniquity,” DOUAY “any unjust thing,” GENEVA “what I was charged with while I stood in the council,” GWN “evil doing,” TNT “any unrighteousness,” YLT “they didn't find me guilty of anything when I was tried by their own council,” CEV and “So ask these others what crime they've caught me in. Don't let them hide behind this smooth-talking Tertullus.” MESSAGE

To this point, nothing specific has been presented against Paul – only vague generalities (Acts 24:5-6).

- Paul is charged with being a “pestilent fellow.”
- He is said to have been “a mover of sedition among the Jews throughout the world.”
- He is charged with being “a ring leader of the sect of the Nazarenes.”
- Paul is also said to have “gone about to profane the Temple.”

Thus, no specific charge has been laid against the apostle. A specific act that proved him to be a “pestilent fellow” has not been cited. No particular act of sedition has been mentioned. What is intended by the expression that he was a “ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes” has not been specified. Precisely how he went about to “profane the Temple” has not been particularized.

Such a sloppy procedure violated the Law given to the Jews. They were not permitted to simply make allegations against a person, but had to have more than one witness to a particular charge. It is not that the Jewish leaders were ignorant of this requirement. When they brought Jesus before Caiaphas, they relied on “two false witnesses” (Matt 26:60). When they tried Stephen, they saw to it that a plurality of “false witnesses” spoke against him (Acts 6:13). But in the case of Paul, they did not present a single witness to corroborate their charges. Paul now clarifies this to Felix.

THE SINGLE EXCEPTION

“21 Except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them, Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day.”

Paul has nothing to hide, and so will acknowledge anything that may, on the surface, appear to justify the allegation that he is a “Pestilent fellow” and caused insurrection among the people.

EXCEPT . . . FOR THIS ONE VOICE

“Except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them . . .” Other versions read, “this one statement which I shouted,” NKJV “this one sentence that I called out,” NRSV “this one thing which I said among them in a loud voice,” BBE “for this one voice only that I cried,” DOUAY “They could accuse me of only one thing. As I stood among them, I shouted,” GWN “unless it was my one outcry as I stood among them,” NAB and “unless it was in that one expression which I made use of,” LIVING

The statement to which Paul refers was not expressed in the Temple, nor was it addressed to the Jews in general. This was affirmed before the Jewish council, not as from an intruder, but as one who was defending himself before false charges. That council was comprised of Pharisees and Sadducees who differed significantly in their theology. Yet, they were quite willing to live with the variance, even though they were together hostile against Paul. The statement Paul made did cause a tumult in that assembly, and therefore Paul adds a one-sentence explanation.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD

“Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day.” Other versions read, “concerning the resurrection of the dead,” NKJV “other than for this one statement which I shouted out while standing among them, ‘For the resurrection of the dead I am on trial before you today,’” NASB and “In regard to the resurrection of the dead I am indicted and on trial before you this day!” AMPLIFIED

Notice, this statement that caused such an agitation in the council did not fall into any of the categories Tertullus presented before Felix. It did not confirm he was a pestilent fellow, for he acknowledge something that was common among the Jews – something that was revealed in their holy Scriptures. It certainly did not contribute to any political anarchy, and it was not a criminal offense.

Yet, by mentioning this pivotal fact, Paul has planted a seed, making reference to the resurrection of the dead. This will have an impact upon the council itself, as well as Felix. It will actually draw the attention away from him.

FELIX HAD A MORE PERFECT KNOWLEDGE

“ 22 And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and said, When Lysias the chief captain shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter.”

The text suggests that Paul knew the extent of Felix’s knowledge of “these things.” He therefore spoke in such a manner as to provoke Felix to serious thought about his case, thus avoiding Felix having to deal extensively with the Jews who were standing before him.

FELIX HAD A MORE PERFECT KNOWLEDGE

“And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way . . .” Other versions read, “more accurate knowledge of that way,” NASB “being well acquainted with the Way,” NIV “Rather well informed about the Way,” NRSV “more exact knowledge concerning the WAY,” ASV “a more detailed knowledge,” BBE “of things connected with the Way,” CJB “having most certain knowledge of this way,” DOUAY “who knew Christians,” LIVING “understood much about the way,” IE “fairly well informed about the new life,” WEYMOUTH “a fairly clear conception of the principles involved in The Way,” WEYMOUTH and “a pretty accurate knowledge of the Way.” MONTGOMERY

Felix was in Caesarea, the same city a certain centurion named Cornelius had been converted (Acts 10:1-48). Philip also came to this city, no doubt continuing “preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ” (Acts 8:12). It appears to me that possible exposure to those events, were now coupled with Paul’s testimony.

Once again, the doctrine and manner of life in Christ Jesus is referred to as “the Way.” This is an all-encompassing description that involves the purpose of God, the doctrine of Christ, and the manner of life of the believers. The purpose of God begins with a remedy for sin, and ends with conformity to the image of Christ in glory. The means through which this is accomplished is “the doctrine of Christ” (Heb 6:1; 2 John 1:9). Elsewhere it is referred to as “the record God has given of His Son” (1 John 5:10-11), and “the Gospel of Christ” (Rom 1:16).

These three components work harmoniously together. None of them is at variance with another. Further, “the Way” requires the presence of them all. The purpose of God cannot be fulfilled by “another gospel,” or false way. Neither, indeed, does the Gospel yield a manner of life that is contrary to it. A holy Word cannot produce an unholy people, and an unholy people cannot present an accurate picture of Christ.

During the time of our text, the followers of Jesus had made such an impact on society that people knew about “the way.”

In Our Time

In our time, and in this generation, certain concepts of “the way” have been formed in those who are beholding professing Christians. Is there a person of sound mind who does not know that the modern church has left a bad taste in the mouths of society? It is not their righteousness that has caused these reactions, but their unrighteousness.

More and more it is becoming fashionable for professing Christians to speak more of what they are not than what they are in Christ Jesus. This approach is thought to be humble, but that conclusion is questionable, to say the least. If it is true that those in Christ are a “new creation” (2 Cor 5:17 Gal 6:15), “created in Christ Jesus” (Eph 2:10), “born of God” (1 John 3:9), and “made the righteousness of God” in Christ, they we ought to expect some kind of change to be wrought in the character and conduct of such people. If it is remotely possible that such statements are really nothing more than a metaphor, then Jesus has not spoken to us plainly as He promised He would: “These things have I spoken unto you in proverbs: but the time cometh, when I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs, but I shall show you plainly of the Father” (John 16:25).

Every insightful believer can confess with Paul, “Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus” (Phil 3:12). This does not mean he slipped now and then, committing adultery, murder, lying, or some other outward sin. He did not even do that when he lived under the Law and without Jesus. He confessed, and the Spirit did not put a disclaimer on it, “touching the righteousness which is in the law, [I was] blameless” (Phil 3:6). Again he testified, “I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day” (Acts 23:1). His conscience was not perfect, to be sure, but he was outwardly living up to what he thought God required. When the Law did convict him of sin, it was not some act of outward immorality, but covetousness (Rom 7:7).

It is tragic that many professing Christians have more trouble maintaining a moral life than Paul did under the Law – or Zecharias and Elizabeth, parents of John the Baptist. It is said of them, “And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless” (Luke 1:6).

The concept of “the way” postulates an outward life that is not riddled with defects. Perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord (2 Cor 7:1) is certainly not a casual work, but it is underwritten by Divine power wherever such an effort is extended. I do not know that the Scriptures ever make a point of believers always sinning, being dominated by sin, captured by habits, helpless, or unable to successfully resist the devil. If that assessment is true, those who affirm such things owe us an explanation.

HE DEFERRED THEM

“ . . . he deferred them . . .” Other versions read, “he adjourned the proceedings,” NKJV “put them off,” NASB “adjourned the hearing,” NRSV “postponed the trial,” NAB “delayed them,” YLT and “told the Jews to wait.” LIVING

Even though Ananias and the council had traveled about seventy miles to stand before Felix and make their charges against Paul known, Felix simply dismisses the proceedings. He knows that he will need more information about these charges that have been delivered by the council. He also knows that what they have said did not agree with what he knew about those who were of “the Way.”

I WILL KNOW THE UTTERMOST OF YOUR MATTER

“ . . . and said, When Lysias the chief captain shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter.” Other versions read, “I will make a decision on your case,” NKJV “I will decide the case,” NASB “I will determine your matter,” ASV “I will give attention to your business,” BBE “I will hear you,” DOUAY “I will give hearing between you,” MRD “I will know the utmost of your matter,” PNT “I will know fully the things concerning you,” YLT and “I will determine your case more fully.” AMPLIFIED

Felix felt that when Lysias came and gave his report, he would have a full picture of the circumstances and be able to render a verdict. Although we will find his conduct was mixed with other motives, he did refuse to proceed any further until he was satisfied he knew all the facts in the case. Proper judgments cannot be rendered until all of the facts have been assessed.

KEEP PAUL, AND LET HIM HAVE LIBERTY

Paul, then, was a prisoner with special privileges. This indicates that Felix had, in fact, seen through the false charges of the Jews. More specifically, God had enabled him to see through those false charges, and to actually have sympathy for Paul. God is revealed as moving men to favor His people

“ 23 And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him.”

The trial being temporarily adjourned, what will Felix do with Paul? The verse that follows shows how God can give a man favor in the eyes of others who are not members of the household of faith. Remember, in Felix we do not find the paragon of virtue.

KEEP PAUL AND LET HIM HAVE LIBERTY

“And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty . . .” Other versions read, “ be kept in custody and yet have some freedom,” NASB “keep Paul under guard but to give him some freedom,” NIV “he should be kept in charge, and should have indulgence,” ASV “keep Paul under his control, and to let him have everything he had need of,” BBE “keep Paul in custody, but to let him have considerable liberty,” CJB “to keep Paul, and that he should have ease,” GENEVA “should be kept under arrest but free from restriction,” NJB and “keep [Paul] in custody, but to treat him with indulgence [giving him some liberty]” AMPLIFIED

The word translated “liberty” is anesisin, , which has the following lexical meaning, “a loosening, relaxing, spoken of a more tolerable condition in captivity . . . relief, rest,” THAYER “relaxation of custody mitigation, measure of freedom,” FRIBERG and “relaxation of custody mitigation, measure of freedom.” LOUW-NIDA This word can also mean relief from disease as well as pain. The Pulpit Commentary offers this word: “It is also a common medical term for the cessation or remission of pain or disease. St. Paul uses it four times in his Epistles for “rest” or “ease” (2 Corinthians 2:13; 7:5; 8:13; 2 Thessalonians 1:7).”

This provides a rather large consideration, ranging from the discomforts of incarceration to one of Paul’s chronic infirmities (2 Cor 11:30; 12:5,9,10), to the normal needs for nourishment and comfort.

Paul, then, was a prisoner with special privileges. This indicates that Felix had, in fact, seen through the false charges of the Jews. More specifically, God had enabled him to see through those false charges, and to actually have sympathy for Paul. God is revealed as moving men to favor His people.

• JOSEPH. “But the LORD was with Joseph, and showed him mercy, and gave him favor in the sight of the keeper of the prison” (Gen 39:21). “And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favor and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt and all his house” (Acts 7:10).

• ISRAEL. “And the LORD gave the people favor in the sight of the Egyptians. Moreover the man Moses was very great in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people” (Ex 11:3). “And the LORD gave the people favor in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they lent unto them such things as they required. And they spoiled the Egyptians” (Ex 12:36).

• DANIEL. “Now God had brought Daniel into favor and tender love with the prince of the eunuchs” (Dan 1:9).

That is precisely what took place in this text. The Lord turned the heart of Felix so he arranged for Paul's care and comfort – all at the government's expense.

FORBID NONE OF HIS ACQUAINTANCE

“ . . . and that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him.” Other versions read, “not to forbid any of his friends to provide for or visit him,” NKJV “not to prevent any of his friends from ministering to him,” NASB “permit his friends to take care of his needs,” NIV and “not to hinder his friends from ministering to his needs and serving him.” AMPLIFIED

Paul's “acquaintance” was doubtless the brethren – fellow believers. And why did Felix make such an arrangement? There is no record of any of them being present at the trial. Luke, who is writing this narrative, was no doubt among these acquaintances. In the report of this whole episode, Luke writes, “when WE were come to Jerusalem” (Lk 21:17). Some are of the opinion his ministry included some kind of care for Paul's infirmities. This is more than a mere possibility, as Paul referred to Luke as “the beloved physician” (Col 4:14).

We see in this a demonstration of the love of the brethren, by which we know we have passed from death unto life (1 John 3:14). The text also suggests that certain brethren were keeping abreast of the situation, and were there to help.

FELIX COMES AND SENDS FOR PAUL

“ 24 And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess, he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ.”

Now, after a period of time, Felix comes again. This time, however, he does not come to resume the trial. As far as the trial is concerned he is still waiting for Lysias to show up. His reason for coming is most arresting.

FELIX COMES AGAIN WITH HIS WIFE

Drusilla was the daughter of Herod Agrippa the elder, and was engaged to be married to Epiphanes, the son of King Antiochus, on condition that he would embrace the Jewish religion; but as he afterward refused to do that, the contract was broken off. Afterward she was given in marriage, by her brother Agrippa the younger, to Azizus, king of Emesa, upon his consent to be circumcised. When Felix was governor of Judea, he saw Drusilla and fell in love with her, and sent to her Simon, one of his friends, a Jew, by birth a Cyprian, who pretended to be a magician, to endeavour to persuade her to forsake her husband and to marry Felix. Accordingly, in order to avoid the envy of her sister Bernice, who treated her ill on account of her beauty, “she was prevailed on,” says Josephus, “to transgress the laws of her forefathers, and to marry Felix” (Josephus, Antiq., book 20, chapter 7, sections 1 and 2). – ALBERT BARNES

“And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla which was a Jewess . . .” Other versions read, “but some days later,” NASB “Several days later,” NIV “a few days later,” LIVING and “Not long after this.” WEYMOUTH

An English parallel for “certain days” is “a little while” – an unspecified period of time that was relatively brief. It was measured in terms of days, but only involved a few of them.

This time Felix has no intention of addressing the court case before him. Further, he comes with his wife, Drusilla, “which was a Jewess.” History records that she was the daughter of the Herod that was eaten of worms (Acts 12:23), and the sister of Agrippa, who will be mentioned in the next chapter. The text states that she was a Jewess – like Timothy’s mother (Acts 16:1). I do not have a satisfactory explanation for her being the daughter of Herod, and yet a Jewess, nor have I read one. Commentators tend to skirt the matter, as well as the dictionary and encyclopedic references I have. I have found no one who endeavors to explain how it is that she was called a “Jewess.” I do not understand that this term was ordinarily applied to a proselyte. It is generally understood that Herod was a descendant of Esau – an Edomite. Yet, by profession, the Herodian dynasty was Jewish, making it the religion of the state, and seeking to exploit it for personal advantage. With that, I will leave this subject, receiving the statement of Luke that Drusilla was a Jewess. I see no alternative to this procedure.

It is assumed that she is the one who compelled Felix to call for Paul. However, it can also be assumed that Felix was intrigued by Paul’s defense, and was thus prompted to make further inquiry into “the Way.”

HE SENT FOR PAUL AND HEARD HIM CONCERNING THE FAITH IN CHRIST

“ . . . he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ.” Other versions read, “and heard him speak about faith in Christ Jesus,” NASB and “listened to him [talk] about faith in Christ Jesus.” AMPLIFIED

There have not been many dignitaries that have extended themselves to hear of faith in Christ. A certain “deputy,” or “proconsul,” NKJV once called for Barnabas and Saul “and desired to hear the Word of God” (Acts 13:7). Now, however, Felix makes a special trip, bringing his wife, and hears Paul speak “concerning the faith in Christ.”

When I read this, I pondered who Felix might go to hear in our day, and what he would hear as well. I venture to say that many preachers would be found speechless if they were asked to speak “about faith in Christ.” NASB That is the essence of “the Way.” Remove “Christ” and “faith,” and there really is nothing left to talk about.

THE MANNER OF PAUL’S REASONING

“ 25a And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come . . . ”

What will Paul say? How will he speak? What will be his focus? Will he present an apologetic speech for becoming a disciple of Jesus? Will he cite proofs that Christ rose from the dead? Will he present the official doctrine of the church in Jerusalem? Or, will he adapt the message to every day life, telling Felix and his wife that Jesus is the answer to all of their problems, or that He is the secret to happiness? Perhaps he will major on the subject of marriage, seeing that a lot of unacceptable circumstances were related to their marriage. Then, he might give a dissertation on what is referred to by some as “the plan of salvation.” Does all of this sound a bit foolish? If so, that is because it is. Yet, who does not know that these are the kind of approaches he would hear in our day.

HE REASONED OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

“And as he reasoned of righteousness . . . ” Other versions read, “justice,” NRSV “God’s approval,” GWN “uprightness,” NJB “morality,” MONTGOMERY “doing right,” CEV “goodness,”

GNB and “right relations with God.” MESSAGE

As it is used here, the word “righteousness” has the following lexical meaning. “Equity of character of act,” STRONG’S “the state of him who is such as he ought to be . . . the condition acceptable to God,” THAYER “of the right behavior that God requires of persons righteousness, good behavior, uprightness,” FRIBERG “what God requires; what is right, righteousness, uprightness, justice; righting wrong,” UBS and “the act of doing what God requires -'righteousness, doing what God requires, doing what is right.” LOUW-NIDA

This has to do with human conduct. Jesus spoke of it in these words, “For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven” (Matt 5:20). Other versions read, “surpasses that of the scribes and Pharisees,” NASB “is not greater,” BBE and “is more than.” AMPLIFIED This does involve the unseen qualities of character, sincerity, devotion, and fervency. However, this is not to the exclusion of upright conduct.

While it is true that righteousness is imputed to those having faith, that righteousness is not surreal. It is what enables the one in Christ to live righteously, or in a righteous manner. This is essential, for “the unrighteous shall not inherit the Kingdom of God” (1 Cor 6:9). Furthermore, that statement is followed by a reference to the outbreak of sin in human conduct: “fornicators, idolaters, adulterers, effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind” – all evidence themselves in human behavior.

A salvation that does not impact upon the conduct of the individual is no salvation at all. A righteousness that is not confirmed in the behavior of the individual is really not righteousness. Men have invented a salvation that leaves the saved under the dominion of sin, even though such a condition belies what God has said about His great salvation.

In his first epistle John defined righteous by teaching it is confirmed in the doing of it. “If ye know that He is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of Him” (1 John 2:29). And again, “Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous” (1 John 3:7). And again, “In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother” (1 John 3:10). There should be no further need to establish the essentiality of a righteousness that is confirmed by conduct. A salvation that does not impact upon the conduct of the individual is no salvation at all. A righteousness that is not confirmed in the behavior of the individual is really not righteousness. Men have invented a salvation that leaves the saved under the dominion of sin, even though such a condition belies what God has said about His great salvation.

If these things were not so, precisely how could Paul reason with Felix concerning righteousness? Is it remotely possible that such reasoning could be achieved if God was really tolerant and understanding of unrighteousness? Such a thought is an insult to our intelligence. Paul reasoned with Felix about the necessity of righteousness, no doubt expounding the results of being unrighteous – as defined in apostolic doctrine.

HE REASONED OF TEMPERANCE

“And as he reasoned of . . . temperance . . .” Other versions reads, “self-control,” NKJV “chastity,” DOUAY “holiness,” MRD “self-restraint,” NAB and “purity of life (the control of the passions).” AMPLIFIED

The word “temperance” has the following lexical meaning: “self-control . . . the virtue of one who masters his desires and passions, especially his sensual appetites,” THAYER and “to exercise complete control over one's desires and actions - 'to control oneself, to exercise self- control, self-control.” LOUW-NIDA

The perception of the necessity of this virtue has nearly been obliterated by the religion of our day. There are religious systems that develop in those who adopt them a kind of sympathy for the person who cannot control their passions. In fact, some well known and popular recovery programs teach people to say they are believers in Christ, yet their lives are “out of control.”

“Temperance” is affirmed to be part of “the fruit of the Spirit” (Gal 5:23). That does not mean that it is a luxury, or that men can be saved without it. It is its essentiality that accounts for it being included in “the fruit of the Spirit.” In the working out of their salvation, believers are admonished to “add” temperance to their knowledge of the Lord (2 Pet 1:6). This admonition does not suggest that God will receive people without this quality. Rather, the reasoning is that He will not – that is why the virtue must be found in the professing Christian.

Intemperance is not all right in sinners, but unacceptable in saints. Under no condition is it acceptable. That is why Paul could reason on the matter. It is true that such a quality can openly be realized in Christ and through the Spirit. However, it is the necessity of this quality within men that makes such a circumstance such a blessing.

In reasoning with Felix concerning temperance, Paul was highlighting the necessity of controlling fleshly appetites. He did not tell Felix he could not possibly do this, anymore than the Law announced that no man could really keepm it. The point is that this is something God absolutely requires. Temperance is not a quality for the more advanced. Every person, whether in or out of Christ, is required to stop the outbreak of wicked inner desires. This why Paul, even after he was converted, kept under his body, bringing it under control (1 Cor 9:27). It is why grace teaches us to effectively reject the call of fleshly lusts (Tit 2:11-12). It is why believers are admonished to “abstain from fleshly lusts that war against the soul” (1 Pet 2:11). It is why believers are told to “mortify” their members that are upon the earth (Col 3:5), and put to death “the deeds of the body” (Rom 8:13). It is because this is necessary – not just for the saints, but for all men! Intemperance is not all right in sinners, but unacceptable in saints. Under no condition is it acceptable. That is why Paul could reason on the matter. It is true that such a quality can openly be realized in Christ and through the Spirit. However, it is the necessity of this quality within men that makes such a circumstance such a blessing.

I do not believe most professing Christians are aware of this requirement. And, with the rise of psychiatry and counseling, there appears to be a prevailing notion that God understands and is tolerant of the person who is lacking in this area.

HE REASONED OF JUDGMENT TO COME

“And as he reasoned of . . . judgment to come . . .” Other versions read, “the coming judgment,” NRSV “future judgment,” RSV “the judging which was to come,” BBE “the judgment about to come,” DARBY and “the judgment that is about to be.” YLT

This is another much neglected subject: “the day of judgment.” The Gospels present Jesus referring to this day no less than five times (Matt 10:15; 11:22,24; 12:36; Mk 6:11). He referred to “the judgment” seven times (Matt 5:21,22; 12:42; 27:19; Lk 10:14; 11:31,32; John 12:31). Peter mentions “the day of judgment” two times (2 Pet 2:9; 3:7). The epistles refer “the judgment” six times (Rom 2:2,3; 14:10; 2 Cor 5:21; Heb 9:27; Jude 1:6).

Solemnly the Spirit announces there are two appointments that every man will meet: death, and the judgment (Heb. 9:27). Jesus said that men would give an account to God for “every idle word” (Matt 12:36). Solomon said God would bring “every work into judgment” (Eccl 12:14). Paul said “we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ” (Rom 14:10; 2 Cor 5:10). There is an appointed day when “the books will be opened,” and “the dead . . . will be judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works” (Rev 20:12). This is an “appointed day”

(Heb 9:27), during which every word that God has ever spoken will be fully vindicated (Rom 3:4). Every person who has refused to believe the Gospel will be judged for not doing so. Every person who has failed to be “temperate in all things” (1 Cor 9:25) will be judged for not doing so. All who refused to restrain the flesh will be judged for that refusal.

In the day of judgment, only those who believed the Gospel and lived by faith, walking in the Spirit, will have “boldness,” or confidence (1 John 4:17). Men will be called into account before an assembled universe for living for themselves instead of for the One who died and rose again for them. Those who have received the love of the truth and lived in strict accord with it will be exonerated before all – even though the world had considered them foolish and impractical.

How does one account for the glaring absence of preaching and testifying about the day of judgment? Why are sinners like Felix not being told of this? In all of the religious tutelage about witnessing to the lost, why is this approach rarely, if ever, mentioned? Was not Felix a sinner? Had he not called for Paul to have him speak “concerning the faith in Christ,” or “faith in Christ” (Acts 24:24). Yet, this reasoning is what Paul presented to him, which means his words were directly related to faith in Christ. Today, it would be quite challenging to find a person who would reason in such a manner.

FELIX HEARS AND TREMBLES

“ 25b Felix trembled, and answered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee.”

The reaction of Felix to the words of Paul reveals at least two things. First, they confirm the fervency and exactness with which Paul spoke. Second, they are proof that the Holy Spirit worked with the words Paul used.

FELIX TREMBLED

“Felix trembled . . .” Other versions read, “was afraid,” NKJV “became frightened,” NASB “was alarmed,” RSV “was terrified,” ASV “had great fear,” BBE “filled with fear,” DARBY “took fright,” NJB “became alarmed and terrified,” AMPLIFIED and “ felt things getting a little too close for comfort.” MESSAGE

After hearing Paul’s reasoning, Felix was shaken to the core of his being. He had not heard accommodating words that left him thinking how very much God loved him. Rather, the thoughts of his heart were made known (Heb 4:12). If he would react properly to the fear that now gripped him, it would prepare him for a blessing. If he did not, his condemned state would only be accentuated.

In our time, a line of reasoning that produces trembling, fear, alarm, and being terrified, would be considered wholly unacceptable. Such a message would be perceived as too negative. Why didn’t Paul speak about how much God loved Felix? Why didn’t he tell the ruler that Jesus loved him so much He died for him? The answer to these such questions is straightforward. It is because such words did not match the circumstance. It would not have been appropriate to speak to Felix like Peter did to those on the day of Pentecost. His words had to be appropriate for the occasion.

Sinners ought to be afraid of their situation. They are not righteous, not temperate, and not ready for the day of judgment. After all, “It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God” (Heb 10:31). The thought of facing God in an unrighteous state ought to terrify the individual. The very thought of standing before the Lord having indulged fleshly appetites rather than subduing them, ought to cause a person to shake with fear – to tremble. To stand at the day of judgment without preparing for the occasion is frightening to any soul who takes the word of God seriously.

Our day is tainted by erroneous presentations of God, a minimization of the enormity of sin, and the ignoring of the necessity to refuse to allow lusts to express themselves.

Our day is tainted by erroneous presentations of God, a minimization of the enormity of sin, and the ignoring of the necessity to refuse to allow lusts to express themselves. Uninformed souls will say, “Well, it is just as bad to think it as to do it.” However, this only contains an element of truth. It is only true if the thought is welcomed and dwelt upon. Thoughts can be subdued, rejected, taken captive, and even cast down with spiritual weaponry (2 Cor 10:3-5; Tit 2:11-12).

GO THY WAY FOR THIS TIME

“ . . . and answered, Go thy way for this time . . .” Other versions read, “go away for now,” NKJV “go away for the present,” NASB “that’s enough for now,” NIV “For the time being, go away!,” CJB “Leave for now,” CSB and “thou hast done enough at this time.” TNT

Instead of capitalizing upon this opportunity, Felix sought to delay his decision. He had heard enough for now, and did not want to hear any more. The sophist would say that he had reached his capacity, but that is not the truth. Felix assumed he was going to live. He assumed that Paul would be available to him in the future. He thought he would actually have another opportunity to talk to Paul.

WHEN I HAVE A CONVENIENT SEASON

“ . . . when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee.” Other versions read, “when I have a convenient time,” NKJV “when I find time,” NASB “when I find it convenient,” NIV “when I have an opportunity,” NRSV “when the right time comes,” BBE and “when I have time,” IE “when I can find a convenient opportunity.” WEYMOUTH

A “convenient season” is one that does not interfere with the preferred way of living. Actually, from a higher point of view, the time could not have been more convenient for Felix than that very hour. A preacher had been sent to him from God, and if he would heed what he said, he was not far from the Kingdom of God. But Felix did not see this. His heart had been “hardened by the deceitfulness of sin” (Heb 3:13). He would continue living as he had been doing, and wait for a convenient time to hear more – a time that would not interfere with the normality of his life.

There is no record of Felix ever calling for Paul speak of the faith again. The only other time Felix is mentioned is found in Acts 25:14. Even then, the mention of his name was by Festus, who told Agrippa of Paul saying, “There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix.” Again, and for the final time, he was mentioned as being willing to please the Jews by leaving Paul in prison (Acts 24:27). What a foolish decision this man made at this most critical hour!

FELIX WAS LOOKING FOR A PAYOFF

“ 26 He hoped also that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him: wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.”

The Spirit now takes us behind the scenes, showing us the heart of Felix. This is something that Felix apparently did not express. He actually surmised that Paul was the same kind of man as himself, assuming he would do anything to be free.

HE HOPED HE WOULD RECEIVE MONEY

“He hoped also that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him . . .” Other versions read, “he was hoping that Paul would offer him a bribe,” NIV and “he had hopes of receiving money from Paul.” NJB

Now we learn there was an ulterior motive that was driving Felix. Paul must have discerned this to some extent, which perception shaped what he had to say to Felix. Felix saw Paul as an opportunity to gain some wealth. Although he had heard Paul's defense, he did not grasp its meaning at all. He knew nothing of living with a conscience toward God, and thus actually thought Paul would pay him a bribe to gain release from prison. The carnal mind cannot receive the things of God – not even when it regards the motives of those who are living for the Lord. It is spiritually inept.

HE SENT THE OFTENER

“ . . . wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.” Other versions read, “ more often,” NKJV “quite often,” NASB “frequently,” NIV “very often,” NRSV “from time to time,” LIVING and “he continued to send for him and was in his company and conversed with him often.”
AMPLIFIED

Although these were occasions that might be considered “more convenient,” it seems to me that this is not the case. At first, Felix wanted to hear about “the faith of Christ.” Now, the overriding concern was obtaining money. It successfully subdued any interest in knowing about faith in Christ or engaging in a fervent quest for righteousness, temperance, and readiness for the day of judgment. Thus, the interest he may have had in Christ was smothered.

FESTUS COMES, BUT FELIX IS WILLING TO PLEASE THE JEWS

Luke now passes over a period of two years, not informing us of what may have occurred during that time. Although I have noted this before, I do so again. In Scripture, a point is made of especially significant happenings. The history that is recorded in Scripture is not intended to be thorough as men consider it. Only people and events that are in some way related to the purpose of God are recorded.

AFTER TWO YEARS

“But after two years Porcius Festus came into Felix' room. . .” Other versions read, “succeeded Felix,” NKJV “Felix was succeeded by,” NASB “took the place of Felix,” BBE “Felix received a successor,” CSB “Felix was relieved,” DARBY and “Festus became governor.” IE

The word “room,” as used in the Authorized Version, refers to a place of occupancy. In this case a place that was filled by another – a “room,” so to speak, of responsibility. We use the word “room” in this general sense. “Is there room for me?” One song of the faith affirms, “There's room at the cross for you.” Here, of course, it is a political room, or area of responsibility.

“Porcius festus was put into the government of Judea in the sixth or seventh year of Nero.”
TREASURY OF SCRIPTURAL KNOWLEDGE We know little more of him, and he is only mentioned here because of Paul, Christ's messenger to the Gentiles.

WILLING TO SHOW THE JEWS A PLEASURE

“ . . . and Felix willing to show the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.” Other versions read, “wanting to do the Jews a favor,” NKJV “wanting to grant a favor to the Jews,” NIV “desiring to gain favor with the Jews,” ASV , “desiring to have the approval of the Jews,” BBE and “wishing to gain favor with the Jews.” AMPLIFIED

This text reminds us of Herod, who, when he “saw” that killing James “pleased the Jews, [and] proceeded further to take Peter also,” fully intending to do the same with him (Acts 12:3). The Jews of reference are not the believing Jews, but the ones who did not believe – particularly those who had leveled charges against Paul.

All of this was an effort to be well pleasing in the eyes of the Jews. The Jews would be glad because Paul, they thought, was at least taken out of commission. They no doubt reasoned that they would now have done with his influence. However, the Lord was in charge of this circumstance, and His will would be done, not theirs!

The hardness of Felix is seen in the fact that he left Paul in prison for two full years, only calling him out in expectation of receiving a bribe from him. He apparently could have set him free at any time, but chose not to do so. Under the dominion of sin, this man thought only of himself, which is the identifying mark of sin.

CONCLUSION

We have been exposed to the “narrow way” that makes no room for the flesh. In all of the oppression aimed at Paul, together with the refusal to release him from prison, it was only the outward man that was put at an inconvenience. Within, the peace of God was ruling (Col 3:15). That is one of the key factors that enabled Paul to respond in a godly manner to these experiences.

Lesson #97

PAUL APPEALS TO CAESAR

“ 25:1 Now when Festus was come into the province, after three days he ascended from Caesarea to Jerusalem. 2 Then the high priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him, 3 And desired favour against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, laying wait in the way to kill him. 4 But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Caesarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither. 5 Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him. 6 And when he had tarried among them more than ten days, he went down unto Caesarea; and the next day sitting on the judgment seat commanded Paul to be brought. 7 And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove. 8 While he answered for himself, Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Caesar, have I offended any thing at all. 9 But Festus, willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said, Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me? 10 Then said Paul, I stand at Caesar's judgment seat, where I ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest. 11 For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Caesar. 12 Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Caesar? unto Caesar shalt thou go.” (Acts 25:1-12)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

Paul now appears before Festus, who will ask him if he is willing to go to Jerusalem and be judged by him. He did this to pacify the Jews, catering to them for personal aggrandizement. Paul then stated that he was not willing to do so, because he is in Caesar's court, not that of the Jews. He affirmed that Festus knows very well he has done "no wrong" to the Jews. Conscientiously he stated that he was willing to die if he had done something that was worthy of death. If, on the other hand, the charges against him were totally false, no man had the right to deliver him to the Jews. He then appealed to the higher court, saying "I appeal to Caesar." Festus then conferred with the council and answered, "Hast thou appealed to Caesar? Unto Caesar shalt thou go." Thus, the word of Jesus to Paul, that he would "bear witness also at Rome" is set in motion. A series of events will follow that will clear the way for the fulfillment of that word. God was working all things together for good of Paul.

THE WORKING OF THE LORD

Throughout the book of Acts the hand of the Lord is seen at work – causing all things to work together for the good of His people, and ultimately, for the fulfillment of His "eternal purpose."

The Scriptures inform us that God uses all manner of people in the working out of His purpose. Some of them benefit from this use, and others do not. For example, Pharaoh was raised up that God's "name might be declared throughout the earth" (Ex 9:16; Rom 9:17). That purpose, however, did not work out for the benefit of Pharaoh himself. He was a vessel in the house, but one that was suited "for destruction" (Rom 9:22). Solomon wrote, "The LORD hath made all things for himself: yea, even the wicked for the day of evil" (Prov 16:4). Other versions read, "for the day of doom," NKJV "for the day of disaster," NIV "for the day of trouble," NRSV and "[are fitted for their role] for the day of calamity and evil." AMPLIFIED

The "Kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just" (Matt 13:47-49). The wicked are, indeed, "among the righteous" – not as an integral part of them, but as an admixture that will be removed at "the end of the world." Until then, they are "in the net," governed by God and used at His discretion. It is true that Satan works in and through such people, but all of that work is contained by the purpose of God. Ponder the different characters that have been involved in this episode of Paul.

- James and the elders in Jerusalem (Acts 21:18-22).
- Four Jewish men who had taken a vow (Acts 21:23).
- Jews from Asia (Acts 21:27-28).
- Trophimus, who was traveling with Paul (Acts 21:29).
- The people of Jerusalem (Acts 21:30-31).
- A Roman captain, Lysias by name (Acts 21:31).
- Roman soldiers and centurions (Acts 21:32).
- The chief priests of the Jews (Acts 21:30).
- The Jewish council, or Sanhedrin (Acts 21:30).
- The high priest Ananias (Acts 23:2a).
- The man who struck Paul on the mouth (Acts 23:2b).
- Those who stood by, responding to Paul's reaction to the smiting (Acts 23:3).
- The Pharisees (Acts 23:6).
- The Sadducees (Acts 23:6).
- The scribes (Acts 23:9).
- Forty Jewish men who took a vow to kill Paul (Acts 23:12-13).

Who but God could manage such a conglomeration of people, working out His own will, protecting His servant, and arranging for him to transported to his next place of ministry?

The chief priests and elders who sanctioned the vow (Acts 23:14-15).

- Paul's nephew (Acts 23:18).
- One of the centurions to whom Paul sent his nephew (Acts 23: 17).
- Two hundred soldiers (Acts 23:23a).
- Seventy horsemen (Acts 23:23b).
- Two hundred spearmen (Acts 23:23c).
- The governor Felix (Acts 23:26).
- An army (Acts 23:27).
- Tertullus (Acts 24:1).
- A centurion charged with keeping Paul safe (Acts 24:23).
- Drusilla, Felix's wife (Acts 24:24).
- Festus, who replaced Felix (Acts 24:27).
- Caesar Augustus (Acts 25:1).
- Agrippa (Acts 25:13a).
- Bernice, Agrippa's wife (Acts 25:13b).

There are twenty-one individuals, and hundreds of others: all Jerusalem, hundreds of Jews, hundreds of soldiers, the Sanhedrin numbering seventy, forty Jews who took a vow, seventy horsemen, and two hundred spearmen). Who but God could manage such a conglomeration of people, working out His own will, protecting His servant, and arranging for him to transported to his next place of ministry?

The Scriptures rarely spell out in doctrine how God is working everything together for good. An example of when this was done is the case of Joseph.

- When referring to his time in prison because of false charges, it is written, “But the LORD was with Joseph, and showed him mercy, and gave him favor in the sight of the keeper of the prison” (Gen 39:21).

- Concerning the sins of his brothers against him, he said: “But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive” (Gen 50:20).

- Speaking of Joseph’s tenure in Egypt, the Psalmist wrote: “ He sent a man before them, even Joseph, who was sold for a servant: Whose feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in iron: Until the time that his word came: the word of the LORD tried him. The king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people, and let him go free. He made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his substance: To bind his princes at his pleasure; and teach his senators wisdom” (Psa 105:17-22).

Such explanations are not always expressed in Scripture. However, for those with eyes to see and ears to hear, they are evident in accounts such as the one before us. When Asaph wrote, “For God is my King of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth” (Psa 74:12), the working of reference included various and sundry interventions in behalf of His people. That is one reason why it is written, “If God before us, who can be against us” (Rom 8:31).

While this applies to all of the children of God, it is particularly true of those who are engaged in His business. I do not know of any inspired expression that pledges such blessings will come to those with a divided heart (Hos 10:2), whose interests are slanted toward the earth ..

THREE DAYS LATER

“ 25:1 Now when Festus was come into the province, after three days he ascended from Caesarea to Jerusalem.”

Remembering that God is working all things together for Paul’s good, and that Jesus is preparing Paul to bear witness to Him in Rome, we learn something of God’s manners in this text

It is fashionable these days to find people who are crisis-driven. That is, their lives lack objectivity. As a result of this lack, there is a tendency to hurry, rush, and seek to finish things quickly.

It is fashionable these days to find people who are crisis-driven. That is, their lives lack objectivity. As a result of this lack, there is a tendency to hurry, rush, and seek to finish things quickly. To be sure, there are times when things must be done immediately – like Jesus raising Peter to the surface of the water during a fierce storm (Matt 14:30-31). However, this is not always the way the Lord works.

- Noah was commissioned to build an ark to the saving of his house, and the project extended over a period of one hundred and twenty years (Gen 6:3). Scripture describes that as a period of time in which God was waiting (1 Pet 3:20).

- Abraham was promised an offspring through whose lineage all the world would be blessed (Gen 12:4), yet had to wait twenty-five years to successfully father the promised child (Gen 21:5).

- Joseph was sent down to Egypt (Psa 105:17), “to save much people alive” (Gen 50:20). However, he had to wait for thirteen years for that mission to come to fruition – from when he was seventeen (Gen 37:2) until he was thirty (Gen 41:46).

- Moses told Israel a Prophet would be raised up to whom, the people would hearken (Deut 18:15,18). Yet, that Prophet did not come until two thousand years later (Acts 3:22-23).

- Isaiah prophesied that God would give Israel a child, and a Son upon whose shoulders the government would rest (Isa 9:6) – one whose name would be Emmanuel (Isa 7:14). Yet, that Holy Child was not born for over eight hundred years before that child was born (Matt 1:23).

Now we behold a similar manner in Paul's experience. What appears to the flesh as delays and unscheduled time-lags were actually God working out His purpose for Paul. It is not that God requires a lot of time to accomplish His will, and God forbid that we should entertain such a thought. What appears to be delays is actually the trying of the faith of those involved. Faith will stand the test of time, but men will not know this to be true unless they have to wait. All of those who were noted for going through delays kept the faith, and the faith kept them. Faith will stand the test of time, which is one of the most formidable tests of all.

Following are some of the supposed delays that have taken place in this incident alone.

PERIOD OF DELAY LENGTH

Twelve days (24:11) 12

After certain days (24:24) ?

Two years (24:27) 720

After certain days (25:13) ?

Three days (25:1) 3

Ten days (25:6) 10

Certain days (25:13) ?

Many days (25:14) ?

After having arrived in Caesarea, Festus lingers for three days, then “ascended from Caesarea to Jerusalem.” Note that once again a point is made of the high domain of Jerusalem, so that going to that city from the North, South, East, or West, involved an ascent.

At this point it is enough to say this is a most accurate and consistent depiction of the “Jerusalem that is above” (Gal 4:26). As with the natural Jerusalem, entry into the Jerusalem that is above involves an ascent – a going up: above the affairs of this world and life in it. Backsliding and all forms of spiritual retrogression involve a descent – going down to lower realms that are defiled and covered with the veil of flesh.

THE JEWS DESIRE A FAVOR

“ 2 Then the high priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him, 3 And desired favor against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, laying wait in the way to kill him.”

Now, after a rather lengthy period of time, the Jewish leaders are again standing before a Roman official. One might imagine that hatred for Paul was no longer so hot, and that time had tempered their feelings. But, alas, this was not the case at all.

THE HIGH PRIEST AND THE CHIEF OF THE JEWS INFORMED HIM

“Then the high priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him . . .” Other versions read, “brought charges against Paul,” NASB “presented the charges,” NIV “gave a report,” NRSV “presented their case,” BBE “laid out their case,” ESV “presented their formal charges,” NAB “made their accusations,” NLT and “made manifest to him the things.” YLT

It has been well over two years since the original charges had been presented against Paul. So far as the record is concerned, the Jewish leaders had no contact with the Roman officials during that period of time. Yet, their hatred of Paul had not diminished one whit. Even though Paul had not been among them during that time, bitterness and hatred continued to seethe in their hearts.

Now they stand before Festus, and present their case against Paul. He has come to Jerusalem rather than send for them to come to Caesarea. Apparently Tertullus did not present their case for them this time, as he did before Felix (Acts 24:1-2).

It is evident that time does not cause the world’s hatred to decrease. In the case of these opposing Jews, opposition to Paul continued with all of its initial fervor.

When the will, words, and works of men contradict, and even oppose, the purpose of God, it is just a matter of time – they will end up in the trash-heap of things that men were not able to do.

That is the nature of sin. It does not grow feeble with age, but becomes more and more robust. That is one treason delayed repentance from, and confession of sin is so dangerous. A “root of bitterness” tends to spread, not only among those subjected to it, but within the hearts of those who entertain such notions.

THEY DESIRED A FAVOR AGAINST PAUL

“And desired favor against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem . . .” Other versions read, “requesting a concession against Paul,” NASB “requested, as a favor to them against Paul,” NRSV “Requesting Festus to give effect to their design against him,” BBE and “Asking as a favor that he would have him brought to Jerusalem.” AMPLIFIED

These men are attempting to manipulate Festus for their own personal interests. They are insinuating they will stand behind Festus, and make his rule more satisfying and secure. The Jews did the same things in a more blatant way when they were accusing Jesus before Pilate: “If thou let this man go, thou art not Caesar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Caesar” (John 19:12). Although , in our text, there is a slight difference in the request of the Jews, the principle under which they operated is still the same. Their own interests were primary, and all of their requests were shaped by them. There was no interest in justice or hearing and presenting the facts in the case. That is what sin does to those dominated by it.

LAYING WAIT TO KILL HIM

“ . . . laying wait in the way to kill him.” Other versions read, “lay in ambush,” NKJV “setting an ambush,” NASB and “planning an ambush.” NRSV

More than two years before this, above forty Jews “banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul” (Acts 23:12). I assume they did not keep their vow, yielding to the need to eat and drink. However, their intention remained as strong as it ever was – perhaps stronger. Now they ask Festus to send Paul from Caesarea to Jerusalem. Should he consent to do so, they will set an ambush along the way and kill Paul – at least, that is what they purposed to do.

However, God is “for” Paul, which means that no one can effectively be “against” him (Rom 8:31). Even though forty men join hand in hand conspiring against this apostle of Christ, it is they that will be “punished,” not Paul (Prov 11:21; 16:5). Their purpose will fall to the ground! God will make it fall to the ground! When the will, words, and works of men contradict, and even oppose, the purpose of God, it is just a matter of time – they will end up in the trash-heap of things that men were not able to do.

Faith reckons on this reality, and thus sustains the weary soul during times of outward hardship. In my judgment all recovery proclaims, counseling groups, and how-to literature tend to cloud the fact that God sustains those who live by faith and walk in the Spirit. They teach professing believers to actually rely on the flesh, and thus push them into the area of flesh where effort of vain, and hopes are dashed upon the rocks of futility. Admittedly this is an enormously lucrative business enterprise. Yet, it is destined to ultimate failure, for it is not on The Foundation, nor is it an expression of God’s eternal purpose..

PAUL SHOULD BE KEPT IN CAESAREA

“ 4 But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Caesarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither. 5 Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him.”

All of these things are being done in the world, which is, on a lower level, under the control of Satan (1 John 5:19). They are often worked out in the crucible of conflict, where the odds seem to be against His people. However formidable foes may appear, they are utterly impotent before the Lord. He rules over them, and they are only His vassals.

As we consider this report, we must look behind the scenes, for what is taking place is being done through Divine influences and workings. This global aspect of the working of the Lord is confirmed in several affirmations. Here is a sampling of them.

- HE IS WORKING SALVATION. “For God is my King of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth” (Psa 74:12).

- HE IS PERFECTING HIS PEOPLE. “The LORD will perfect that which concerneth me: Thy mercy, O LORD, endureth for ever: forsake not the works of Thine own hands” (Psa 138:8).

- HE IS WEIGHING THE SPIRITS. “. . . the LORD weigheth the spirits” (Prov 16:2).

- HE IS TURNING MEN’S HEARTS. “The king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water: He turneth it whithersoever He will” (Prov 21:1).

- HE IS FRUSTRATING THE FOOLISH. “That frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish; That confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of His messengers . . .” (Isa 44:25-26).

- HE IS DOING HIS WILL. “And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay his hand, or say unto Him, What doest Thou?” (Dan 4:35).

- HE IS WORKING ALL THINGS TOGETHER. “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose” (Rom 8:28).

- JESUS IS BRINGING MANY SONS TO GLORY. “For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings” (Heb 2:10).

All of these things are being done in the world, which is, on a lower level, under the control of Satan (1 John 5:19). They are often worked out in the crucible of conflict, where the odds seem to be against His people. However formidable foes may appear, they are utterly impotent before the Lord. He rules over them, and they are only His vassals.

When these realities are discerned, a tranquility settles over the soul that cannot be comprehended or explained by the wisdom of this world. When they are perceived, the one perceiving them conducts himself as Paul is doing. One senses Paul himself is actually in control of the situation, even though Festus imagines that he is the one who will decide the outcome.

FESTUS ANSWERS

“But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Caesarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither . . .” Other versions read, “was being kept in custody in Caesarea” NASB “is being held,” NIV “was kept under guard,” CJB and “would keep Paul there.” GWN

With one brief word, Festus dismisses the words and the schemes of the Jews. He was going to return to Caesarea, and the proceedings would be held there. While he tarried briefly, Paul was in custody, and there really was no reason for bringing him to Jerusalem – even though that was the place where the complaint was raised against him. Thus their plot to kill Paul en route from Caesarea to Jerusalem was cast down to the ground, just as though it did not even exist. Paul had waited for the Lord, and God was honoring his faith, just as Isaiah promised: “. . . they shall not be ashamed that wait for Me” (Isa 49:23).

Child of God, this is the “children’s bread,” being their heritage. This text is a remarkable example of the faithfulness of God and the effectiveness of “the faith of God’s elect” (Tit 1:1).

GO DOWN WITH ME

“. . . Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him.” Other versions read, “let the influential men among you go there with me, and if there is anything wrong about the man, let them prosecute him,” NASB “Let some of your leaders come with me and press charges against the man there, if he has done anything wrong.” NIV “let those of you who have the authority come down with me, and if there is anything wrong about the man, let them accuse him,” NRSV and “let those who are in a position of authority and are influential among you go down with me, and if there is anything amiss or criminal about the man, let them so charge him.” AMPLIFIED

In a sense, he being in charge of the situation, the Jews have to bend to the desires of Festus, and not the contrary. Festus also insisted that they bring the most influential among them. The objective: to testify of any “wickedness,” “wrong,” “amiss,” or “criminal” in Paul. It had to be something of social or political transgression, and not simply a matter of their Law. Further, they could not come at their leisure, or ahead of him, or after he had departed. They were expected to travel with him in his return to Caesarea. That effectively thwarted the aim of the Jews to set an ambush in which they could kill Paul.

HE TARRIED TEN DAYS

“ 6 And when he had tarried among them more than ten days, he went down unto Caesarea; and the next day sitting on the judgment seat commanded Paul to be brought.”

After declaring his determination, that Paul must be tried in Caesarea, and following his orders that some of the chief men among the Jews accompany him to express their cause against Paul, Festus tarries in Jerusalem a few days longer. He was probably conducting some business there.

HE TARRIED AMONG THEM

“And when he had tarried among them more than ten days . . .” Other versions read, “And after he had spent not more than eight or ten days among them,” NASB “stayed in Jerusalem another eight or ten days” LIVING Thirty versions in my possession read, “eight or ten days.” Some precede these words with, “not more than,” NASB/NRSV/RSV/ASV/BBE/CSB/DARBY/RV/ESV/NET “at the most,” CJB/GWN/NJB “no more than,” DOUAY “about,” NLT/MESSAGE “another.” GNB

The phrase “among them” indicates that he remained in Jerusalem, as opposed to staying with the Jews who requested that he have Paul transferred from Caesarea to Jerusalem.

Other versions read, “no more than ten days.” GENEVA Still others read, “more than ten days,” KJV/NKJV/PNT/RWB/TNT/WEB/YLT/EMTV/ LITV

Thus, we have the following depictions of the period of time Festus remained in Jerusalem.

- More than ten days.
- Not more than eight or ten days.
- Eight or ten days.
- At the most eight or ten days.
- Another eight or ten days.
- Eight or ten days more.
- About eight or ten days.

These varying views have been duly noted by the commentators. A sampling of their observations follows. “The Alexandrian copy, and three of Beza’s copies, and some others, and the Vulgate Latin version read, “no more than eight or ten days.” JOHN GILL “The Syriac reads it, “eight or ten.” The Vulgate, “not more than eight or ten.” The Coptic, “eight or ten.” Griesbach supposes this to be the true reading, and has admitted it into the text.” ALBERT BARNES

While this may appear to be something inconsequential, the way in which this verse is represented changes its meaning slightly. If the “no more” view is taken, then it suggests that Festus headed back to Caesarea sooner than he had intended, to avoid a continued subjection to the Jew’s request. If the “more than” view is taken, then he remained for a while without undue concern about pressure from the Jews.

Thus we have a formal proceeding initiated, much like a case being tried in a court, under the guideline of certain rules and procedures. As in any civilized court, this is the proper way to establish the guilt or innocence of one that has been charged with a fault or crime.

The latter view appears to me to be more in keeping with the government of God over the situation. I say this knowing that the same thing could be said about him leaving earlier than he expected, as though God saw to it that he was removed from the scene. However, seeing that Festus insisted that the Jews travel with him, this does not seem to me to be a likely scenario. Notwithstanding, this is not a cause worthy of contention. Here, I merely point out that the translation of Scripture does involve a perception of the nature of Divine workings. When there is a choice to be made between certain Greek texts, the one should be chosen that is most in keeping with what God has made known concerning Himself and His purpose.

HE WENT DOWN TO CAESAREA

“ . . . he went down unto Caesarea; and the next day sitting on the judgment seat . . .” Other versions read, “took his seat on the tribunal,” NASB “convened the court,” NIV “the judge’s seat,” BBE “took his seat in court,” CJB “the judge’s bench,” CSB “open’s Paul’s trial,” LIVING “the judgment bench,” AMPLIFIED “took his place as judge,” CEV and “Sat down in the judgment court.” GNB

Perhaps you have heard people refer to the “judgement seat of Christ” as the “bema seat” – a special place for believers only, where they will receive various rewards. Much is made of “the bema seat” and that it is not the same as the great white throne judgment. It is of more than passing interest that in this text the word translated “judgment seat” is, in fact the Greek word “bema” (bh,mato j). In this case, it certainly was not a place for delivering rewards. Instead, it was a place where guilt or innocence was determined.

Thus we have a formal proceeding initiated, much like a case being tried in a court, under the guideline of certain rules and procedures. As in any civilized court, this is the proper way to establish the guilt or innocence of one that has been charged with a fault or crime.

Those who are familiar with the contemporary methods of the settling of church or religious institutional matters are keenly aware of the general absence of such an approach. Bigotry and prejudice play a large role in making determinations among professing Christians. This is a sad condition that testifies to the dominance of the flesh.

HE COMMANDED PAUL TO BE BROUGHT

“ . . . commanded Paul to be brought. Other versions read, “order Paul io be brought,” NASB “ordered that Paul be brought before him,” NIV “sent for Paul,” BBE “summoned Paul.” GWN

The language suggests that Paul was being held elsewhere, and had to be brought to the place where Festus’ judgment seat was located. We know that he was in the area of a centurion that was ordered to allow him some liberty, and permit his acquaintances to minister to him, and care for his needs NIV (Acts 24:23). This circumstance had continued for two consecutive years by Felix (Acts 24:27). Now, for the first time, Festus will confront Paul personally, together with the Jews who had spoken against him, spouting false charges they had not managed to substantiate. However, all of this is being done under the administration of “the heavens” (Dan 4:26).

MANY GRIEVOUS COMPLAINTS

“ 7 And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove.”

This is Paul’s fourth defense against the same trumped up charges. To this point none of the charges have been substantiated. To this point he has delivered a defense 1 to the crowd of angry Jews that had dragged him from the Temple (Acts 21:40-22:21), 2 the Jewish council (Acts 23:1-10), and 3 before Felix (Acts 24:10-21). Now, 4 he stands before Festus.

THE JEWS STOOD ROUND ABOUT

“And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about . . .” Other versions read, “stood about him,” NKJV “stood around him,” NASB “surrounded him,” NRSV “came around him,” BBE “gathered around,” NLT and “stood all around him,” AMPLIFIED

Were these Jews standing around Festus, or around Paul. I gather that the answer is “both.” Paul was standing before Festus, and the Jews were gathered around that area to make their case known.

Suffice it to say, it was a potentially intimidating situation. Those who were timorous would be tempted to make some kind of compromise to reduce the weight of the situation. But such a thing is not in the mind of Paul. He had embraced the Gospel he had preached, and obtained the faith that was resident in his doctrine. He is a man at peace with God, and can confidently say, “So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my Helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me” (Heb 13:6).

THEY LAID MANY AND GRIEVOUS COMPLAINTS AGAINST PAUL

“ . . . and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul . . .” Other versions read, “Many serious complaints,” NKJV “many and serious charges,” NASB “all sorts of serious statements,” BBE “a lot of serious accusations,” GWN “many and weighty charges,” MRD “many serious accusations,” NLT and “many grave accusations.” AMPLIFIED

The word translated “grievous” has the following lexical meaning. “Heavy . . . burdensome . . . impressive . . . weighty, of great moment . . . cruel, unsparing,” THAYER and “of important matters very significant, serious, momentous.” FRIBERG

I gather that the charges were weighty from a civil point of view, and that, if proved, they would justify the involvement and imposition of Festus. To this point, the charges that have been made against Paul include the following.

- TO THE JEWS. They charged that Paul taught everywhere “against the people [the Jews] , and the law, and this place [the Temple] .” Also, that he “brought Greeks into the Temple and hath polluted this holy place” (Acts 21:28).

- BEFORE FELIX. That Paul was “a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes” (Acts 24:5).

Perhaps in the intervening two years these accusing Jews have been able to invent some new charges that would sound more pertinent to the case. If so, those charges are not specified. However, the whole incident does confirm how flesh operates. No child of God should be naive about the persistence and subtlety of the flesh and those dominated by it.

WHICH THEY COULD NOT PROVE

“ . . . which they could not prove.” Other versions read, “which were not supported by the facts,” BBE “were not able to prove,” CSB “could make no plain proof,” GENEVA “were unable to substantiate,” MRD and “they couldn't prove any of them.” IE

Paul’s accusers could not substantiate any of the charges they leveled against him. All of them proved to be nothing more than opinions and imaginations.

Erroneous allegations against the saints are the only kind of charges that should be leveled against the saints of God. Peter had this in mind when he wrote, “But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear: Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ ” (1 Pet 3:16). Jesus also spoke to this matter with characteristic clarity: “Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely , for My sake” (Matt 5:11).

No believer has a right to suggest that people not look at what they can see them doing, insisting that they should not look at their flesh. That is loose thinking, and it is not becoming of one identified with Jesus Christ.

It is obvious that opinions, imaginations, and philosophizing are still very prominent in religion. We ought to expect such things in heathen religions, for they are the products of such expressions. But when it comes to the Scriptures and things pertaining to life and godliness, the theological woods are still filled with these aberrant modes of thought. There are too many things being said about God, Jesus, and salvation, that cannot be proved by the Scriptures. Yet, they are being taught as though they were the unvarnished truth. This circumstance cannot be glossed.

HE ANSWERS FOR HIMSELF

“ 8 While he answered for himself, Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Caesar, have I offended any thing at all.”

Paul’s trial is under way, and we are exposed to the Roman approach to justice. Speaking as a man, and without consideration being given to God’s control of the situation, the approach was fair. The charges were made, and the party being charged was given an opportunity to reply to the charges. This was precisely the manner in which Pilate conducted the trial of Jesus (John 18:29-38). Yet Pilate convened his trial with a mind to please the Jews rather than to adjudicate a proper judgment. Of course, there was a higher agenda being served that day. As the disciples said later when they prayed concerning boldness to speak the Word, “For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done ” (Acts 4:27-28).

My point here is that the Roman law itself was fair in its approach to charges, even though some who handled it were not. Of course, the true God was also governing the trial of which we are now reading. That is why the outcome of it will be different than the trial of the Lord Jesus, which was also governed by God..

HE ANSWERED FOR HIMSELF

“While he answered for himself . . .” Other versions read, “while Paul answered in his own defense,” NASB “Then Paul made his defense,” NIV “Paul said in his defense,” NRSV “Then Paul, in his answer to them, said,” BBE “In reply Paul said,” CJB “while Paul made the defense that,” CSB “Paul answering for himself,” DARBY “Paul argued in his defense,” ESV “Forasmuch as he answered,” GENEVA “meanwhile Paul maintained,” MRD “in defending himself Paul said,” NAB “Paul denied the charges,” LIVING and “Paul continued to maintain.” WILLIAMS

How will Paul answer these “many and grievous complaints?” He has heard the charges against him, and has doubtless took note of the absence of any proof of them. They were allegations that His opponents “could not prove.” Under those circumstances, it is not necessary for Paul to again declare why he came to Jerusalem, and what he was doing when the Jews from Asia found him. He will simply transfer the responsibility to his accusers.

HE HAD NOT OFFENDED IN ANYTHING

As I pondered this text, the thought occurred to me how few people could respond in this manner – that they had not offended in any way at all. It also was apparent to me that Paul had not embraced the “we-all-continue-to-sin” view that is currently being taught in the name of the Lord.

“ . . . Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Caesar, have I offended any thing at all.” Other versions read, “I have committed no offense,” NASB “I have done nothing wrong,” NIV “I have in no way committed an offense,” NRSV “Neither . . . have I sinned at all,” ASV “have committed no offense- not against the Torah to which the Jews hold, not against the Temple, and not against the Emperor,” CJB “Neither . . . have I offended in anything,” DARBY “Paul maintained, that he had committed no offence,” MRD and “Neither . . . have I offended in any way.” AMPLIFIED

As I pondered this text, the thought occurred to me how few people could respond in this manner – that they had not offended in any way at all. It also was apparent to me that Paul had not embraced the “we-all-continue-to-sin” view that is currently being taught in the name of the Lord. Paul conducted his life in such a manner as to avoid offenses against both God and man (Acts 24:16). That was a confession that was fully supported by his manner of life. Ponder some of the statements Paul made concerning how he lived.

- “I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel. Yea, ye yourselves know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me” (Acts 20:33-34).

- “If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things? If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless we have not used this power; but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ” (1 Cor 9:12).

- “Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel. But I have used none of these things: neither have I written these things, that it should be so done unto me: for it were better for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying void” (1 Cor 9:15).

- “What is my reward then? Verily that, when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not my power in the gospel. For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more” (1 Cor 9:18-19).

- “Receive us; we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man” (2 Cor 7:2).

- “And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself” (2 Cor 11:9).

- “Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you; and I will not be burdensome to you: for I seek not yours, but you: for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children” (2 Cor 12:14).

- “Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?” (2 Cor 12:17).

Paul’s life was lived in a manner that was consistent with the Gospel that he preached. Thus he spoke of counting all competing interests as nothing more than “dung,” in order that he might “gain Christ” NASB (Phil 3:7-14). He acknowledged that he was “crucified with Christ,” and that the life he now lived “in the flesh” was lived by “faith in the Son of God” (Gal 2:20).

Actually, this is the only kind of life that is acceptable to God. There is no such thing as a salvation that allows the recipient to maintain selfish priorities, or to live solely for himself. Paul is an excellent example of someone who believed the Gospel, was sensitive to the requirements of the Lord, and lived in a manner that was consistent with them. It is this posture of life that enabled him to speak so confidently before all men, whether the general populous, religious leaders, or political dignitaries.

WILLING TO PLEASE THE JEWS

“ 9 But Festus, willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said, Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?”

How does God work in the arena of conflict – where there are contradicting personalities. Ponder the kind of people that are present.

- First, there are the unbelieving Jews , who are relentless in their determination to kill Paul. They appear to have the upper hand, for this trial is allowing for them to make charges against Paul.

Political officials in all forms of government, even that of the United States, are often found catering to special interest groups in the hopes of gaining their favor. It is not that they are really interested in their cause. Rather, they seek to gain their favor for their own political advantage.

Second, there is a political ruler who has no particular interest in Paul himself. As we will see, he is really a compromiser at heart, and his interest on judicial propriety is, at the very best, secondary.

- Third, we have a prisoner who has been charged with acting in a criminal manner. He is a prisoner, is bound, and appears to be at the great disadvantage. No one is present to speak in his behalf, and no one present is really seeking his exoneration of the charges placed against him.

According to appearance, everything is stacked against Paul. But faith has enabled him to rise above such an assessment. He is a servant of God, with whom “all things are possible” (Matt 19:26). That is more than a mere theological statement. It is a truth upon which the saved can reckon. That is precisely the reason Paul is able to think clearly, and in concert with the fact that Jesus promised him he would preach the Gospel in Rome. Paul believed that word, and, as a result, the peace of God was keeping both his heart and his mind (Phil 4:7).

WILLING TO DO THE JEWS A PLEASURE

“But Festus, willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul . . .” Other versions read, “willing to do the Jews a favor,” NKJV “wishing to do the Jews a favor,” NIV “desiring to gain favor with the Jews,” ASV “desiring to get the approval of the Jews,” BBE “desirous of obliging the Jews,” DARBY “disposed to conciliate the favor of the Jews,” MRD “wanting to please the Jews,” NLT and “wishing to ingratiate himself with the Jews.” AMPLIFIED

Political officials in all forms of government, even that of the United States, are often found catering to special interest groups in the hopes of gaining their favor. It is not that they are really interested in their cause. Rather, they seek to gain their favor for their own political advantage.

Festus, we find, is doing this very thing. He is desiring to do something special for the Jews in order that he might gain their favor, and have a good report among them as the kind of ruler they would like to continue.

Think of other rulers that aligned themselves against God and His people in order to placate the Jews.

- PILATE: “And so Pilate, willing to content the people , released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified” (Mark 15:15).

- HEROD: “And he killed James the brother of John with the sword. And because he saw it pleased the Jews , he proceeded further to take Peter also . . .” (Acts 12:2-3).

- FELIX: “But after two years Porcius Festus came into Felix' room: and Felix, willing to show the Jews a pleasure , left Paul bound” (Acts 24:27).

Now, as the fourth person, Festus, joins this unholy group who, by virtue of its predilection to please the unbelieving Jews, had aligned itself against the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Here is a test of the will of man versus the will of God. How will those champions of the free will of natural men handle this incident? Are men really free to overturn the will of the Lord? And if they cannot do so, how can anyone postulate that their will is free? In this case you have the Jews who have willed to take the life of Paul. And, in this episode alone, you have three political rulers who are quite willing to please the Jews. How will all of this play out, and whose will is to triumph? Behold how subtle Festus is in his statement.

WILT THOU GO UP TO JERUSALEM?

“ . . . and said, Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?” Other versions read, “Are you willing to go up to Jerusalem and stand trial before me on these charges?,” NASB and “Are you willing to go up to Jerusalem and there be put on trial [before the Jewish Sanhedrin] in my presence concerning these charges?” AMPLIFIED

The question of Festus is draped with hope – but it is pretentious. By saying he would be tried before the Sanhedrin, yet judged by himself, Festus is suggesting that everything would be fair. Of course, he did not know that the Jews had already determined to kill Paul while he was en route to Jerusalem. Festus did not know this, but the Lord did. Thus the King of kings will impose his will in this situation. Using the very words of his own faithful servant, he will cause the whole situation to be altered. He will frustrate the plans of the Jews, will give Festus something else to consider, and will turn his heart to agree with what Paul states. That is Sovereignty at work!

PAUL HAD DONE THE JEWS NO WRONG

“ 10 Then said Paul, I stand at Caesar's judgment seat, where I ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest.”

Again, it is evident that Paul has a sound and peaceful mind. There is a sense in which he was, as a king and priest unto God, in charge of the proceedings. I understand that such a status cannot be guaranteed for every professing Christian, nor can it be codified, putting it in the reach of all. However, this is a possibility upon which faith can reckon. When the children of God are opposed, and even persecuted, they are not mere victims, and ought not to so regard themselves.

Paul did not ask for legal counsel, for he already had the highest Counselor on his side – and he knew it. Every believer must strive to know when it is proper to seek human assistance, and when it is not. There was a time when the people of God could go down to Egypt for help and protection. Abraham did it during the time of famine (Gen 12:10). Under the same kind of circumstances, however, it was not proper for Isaac to go down to Egypt during a famine (Gen 26:2). During yet another famine, it was proper for Jacob to depend upon Egypt for help (Gen 42:1-2). Later, the prophet Isaiah pronounced a woe to those who went “down to Egypt for help” (Isa 31:1). It was proper for Joseph, the husband of Mary, to flee with Mary and the Holy Child “into Egypt” (Matt 2:13-15).

Now, we will see a man who is believing and in subjection to Jesus, make correct decisions about what is proper.

I STAND AT CAESAR'S SEAT

“Then said Paul, I stand at Caesar's judgment seat . . .” Other versions read, “Caesar’s tribunal,” NASB “Caesar’s court,” NIV “ emperor’s tribunal,” NRSV “seat of Caesar’s authority,” BBE “court of the Emperor,” and “official Roman court.” NLT

This is the effect of living “unto Him which died for them, and rose again.” This is evidence that Christ was living in Paul, and the life he was living was not viewed as his own. This kind of thinking is the result of one yielding his body as a living sacrifice to God, and coming to know “what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God”

The word translated “Caesar’s” is Kai,saro,j , which is lexically defined as “Caesar (properly, the surname of Julius Caesar, which being adopted by Octavianus Augustus and his successors afterward became an appellative, and was appropriated by the Roman emperors as a part of their title.” THAYER

Paul was being tried under the jurisdiction of Caesar and the courts of Rome. Although this was fully known by Festus, Paul states it plainly, for he is going to found a plea upon that fact.

WHERE I OUGHT TO BE JUDGED

“ . . . where I ought to be judged . . .” Other versions read, “ought to be tried,” NASB “should be tried,” NRSV “where it is right for me to be judged,” BBE “must be tried,” GWN “where it behoveth me to be judged,” YLT and “it behoveth me to be judged,” WEYMOUTH

Because this was Caesar’s tribunal, it would not have been right to hand Paul over to a Jewish court – the Sanhedrin. Being familiar with Roman law, Paul knew this. Festus knew it also. That is why he asked Paul if he would consent to such a procedure. He knew he could not impose that circumstance on Paul without violating Roman law.

However, it ought to be remembered that although Paul knew this, he was motivated by something else. The Lord Jesus had promised him he would testify of Him in Rome (Acts 23:11). That promise is what was driving Paul – not a fear of a trial in Jerusalem. He had no doubt remembered what his nephew had heard when the Jews were plotting to kill him on the road. But his remembrance of the promise of the Lord had the greatest constraining power.

As it is written, “Therefore let no man glory in men. For all things are yours; Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; And ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's.” By saying that all “belong” to us, Paul is confirming that, properly approached, we can be advantaged by them all. None of them are ultimately intended to make us fall, or pull us away from Christ.

This is the effect of living “unto Him which died for them, and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15). This is evidence that Christ was living in Paul, and the life he was living was not viewed as his own (Gal 2:20). This kind of thinking is the result of one yielding his body as a living sacrifice to God, and coming to know “what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God” (Rom 12:2).

It is one thing to theoretically know these facts, but it is quite another to live in conformity with them. Faith is the enabling factor in all of this.

Although Paul was primarily a citizen of heaven (Phil 3:20), he knew that, in Christ, “all things” belonged to him. As it is written, “Therefore let no man glory in men. For all things are yours ; Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; And ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's” (1 Cor 3:23). By saying that all “belong” to us, Paul is confirming that, properly approached, we can be advantaged by them all. None of them are ultimately intended to make us fall, or pull us away from Christ. In the text before us, things that belonged to Paul included “ the world,” “life,” “death,” “things present,” and “things to come.” He thus seized them, using them to bring legitimate advantages in the carrying out of the will of God. It appears that very few people are aware of this facet of the Kingdom. However, there is no need for it to be so. The eyes of understanding can be opened to see and appropriate these benefits.

AS YOU KNOW, I HAVE NOT WRONGED THE JEWS

“ . . . to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest.” Other versions read, “I have done no wrong to the Jews, as you also very well know,” NASB “I have done no wrong to the Jews, as you are well able to see,” BBE “To the Jews I have done no wrong, as you yourselves know very well,” ESV “to Jews I did no unrighteousness, as thou dost also very well know,” YLT and “To the Jews I have done no wrong, as you know better [than your question implies].” AMPLIFIED

Had it been proven that Paul had, in fact, wronged the Jews in any way, it would have been proper for him to be tried in their court. However, if this was not true, it would have been out of order. Paul is now being tried as a Roman citizen charged with crimes that impacted upon that citizenship. It is right, therefore, that Paul brings up this matter of correctitude. It is never right to do wrong, and it would be wrong to conduct these hearings in Jerusalem.

Although the charges had originated in Jerusalem, the captain, Lysias, had already heard all of the evidence presented against Paul. He, as a Roman authority, concluded that the Jews did not have a legitimate case against Paul. He had therefore had Paul transferred to Caesarea, where the case would be resumed. For Festus to have returned Paul to Jerusalem, he would have been discounting the conclusions of a Roman authority. That itself would have been a crime. Thus, Festus approaches this matter with understandable caution – and behind it all, God is working things out.

Paul states that Festus is well aware that he has not wronged the Jews. It is not that he had been involved in the case, or was present when the original charges were made. Nor does this statement suggest that he had an understanding of Paul himself, his ministry, and his manner of life. Rather, he was aware of the letter from Lysias to his predecessor. Felix had probably spoken to Festus about Paul also. And now he had heard the charges of the Jews, and discerned they could not prove their allegations. The text also appears to include the idea of Festus knowing these things better than it appeared. Yet, God’s will in the matter will be done.

I APPEAL TO CAESAR

“ 11 For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Caesar.”

Once again, I want to point out who is actually in charge of this hearing. Paul not only sounds as though he is in control of things, but there is a sense in which he is, even though he is a prisoner. Just as surely as he will be given charge of the ship on which was a prisoner (Acts 27:22-23), so there is a sense in which he is in charge of this situation. He was announcing the determined will of God, even though it took the form of what appeared to be a suggestion.

I REFUSE NOT TO DIE

“For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die . . .” Other versions read, “I do not object to dying,” NJKV “I do not refuse to die,” NASB “I am not trying to escape death,” NRSV “I am ready for death,” BBE “I do not deprecate dying,” DARBY “I don't reject the idea of dying,” GWN and “I do not beg off and seek to escape death.” AMPLIFIED

Paul calls for any proof that he is a lawbreaker, and has committed any offense that is worthy of death. He says this because the Jews have, in fact, called for his death. When the captain Lysias gave him the right to speak to the Jews, they responded, “it is not fit that he should live” (Acts 22:22). Later, Festus will say to Agrippa, “all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying that he ought not to live any longer” (Acts 25:24). The Jews had charged him with capital offenses, and were seeking his death. He was not brought there to deal with some minor demeanor.

In Paul's words, we see that he condones the death penalty when properly administered. He knows why government has been established by God, for the political ruler is "the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil" (Rom 13:4). His administration includes the use of the "sword," which he does not bear in vain. That is, it is not just for looks, but for the execution of justice.

Those who, in the name of Jesus, oppose capital punishment will have to give an account of their words, since God Himself is the one who authored this mode of punishment (Gen 9:6). Of course, that is not the punishment for every infraction, but it is for some. That is why Paul did not refuse to die if he had done anything "worthy of death."

The punishment of the wicked, whether by death, imprisonment, stripes, etc, is not only for the offender. It is also for the sake of others, who may be tempted to be aggressive to break the law. Speaking of a wicked person who was put to death, the Lord said through Moses, "And all the people shall hear, and fear, and do no more presumptuously" (Deut 17:13). Again, speaking of the same kind of circumstance Moses said, "And those which remain shall hear, and fear, and shall henceforth commit no more any such evil among you" (Deu 19:20). When a disobedient child was stoned. Moses said, "And all the men of his city shall stone him with stones, that he die: so shalt thou put evil away from among you; and all Israel shall hear, and fear" (Deut 21:21).

I realize there are those who affirm that capital punishment is not a deterrent to the committing of that crime. In so saying, they have disagreed with God. Of course, God will be justified in all of His sayings, and overcome all of His critics (Rom 3:4).

IF NONE OF THESE THINGS ARE TRUE

" . . . but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them." Other versions read, "no man can hand me over to them," NASB "No man has the right to hand me over to them," NIV "no one can give me up and make a present of me [give me up freely] to them." AMPLIFIED

Paul applies the pressure where it ought to be placed. When charges are made against an individual there is a moral obligation to substantiate those claims.

There is also a corresponding responsibility placed on all believers to live above reproach. It is not common in this day of Indian rubber theology to hear a point being made of this. It is quite common to hear godly living spoken of as though it was a kind of goal that remains very distant in the future.

There is also a corresponding responsibility placed on all believers to live above reproach. It is not common in this day of Indian rubber theology to hear a point being made of this. It is quite common to hear godly living spoken of as though it was a kind of goal that remains very distant in the future. In the meantime, transgressors are placated with mindless chatter that reminds them we are all sinners, sin habitually, and are plagued with hurts, hangups, and habits. No one is really expected to be free from such things, but are rather told that God is eternally longsuffering while they work on their moral failures. Rather than mortifying their members that are upon the earth, as they are told to do (Col 3:5), and as those who are in Christ really do (Gal 5:24), they are encouraged to manage the flesh as best they can, expecting to fail now and then. However, the King has spoken on this matter, and we do well to hear it.

• BE HOLY: "But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation; Because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy” (1 Pet 1:15-16).

• WALK AS CHILDREN OF LIGHT. “For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light: (For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth); Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord” (Eph 5:9-10).

• BE BLAMELESS AND HARMLESS. “Do all things without murmurings and disputings: That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world” (Phil 2:15).

• YOUR WHOLE SPIRIT, SOUL, AND BODY BE PRESERVED BLAMELESS. “And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ” (1 Thess 5:23).

• BE FOUND SPOTLESS AND BLAMELESS. “Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless” (2 Pet 3:14).

• ABSTAIN FROM FLESHLY LUSTS. “Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul; Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, whereas they speak against you as evildoers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation ”(1 Pet 2:11).

The professing Christian who does not take these admonitions seriously will not be able to remain in the love of God and Christ. Jesus said, “He that hath My commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me: and he that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father, and I will love him , and will manifest Myself to him” (John 14:21). Again it is written, “Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love Me, he will keep My words: and My Father will love him , and We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him” (John 14:23). Yet again He said, “If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love; even as I have kept My Father's commandments, and abide in His love” (John 15:10).

My point here is simply this: Paul is able to conduct himself in this trial with spiritual poise because he had really lived for Jesus, has really crucified the flesh, and is really living by faith. Because he loves the Lord Jesus, and had confirmed it by keeping His word, Jesus was manifesting Himself to Paul, and He and the Father have taken up their abode in him.

The person who ignores these sayings, regardless of their profession, has revealed they do not love the Lord Jesus or keep of His commandments. They may salve their conscience by saying they believe in Jesus, and that is really enough. But they have only deceived themselves.

My point here is simply this: Paul is able to conduct himself in this trial with spiritual poise because he had really lived for Jesus, has really crucified the flesh, and is really living by faith. Because he loves the Lord Jesus, and had confirmed it by keeping His word, Jesus was manifesting Himself to Paul, and He and the Father have taken up their abode in him.

I APPEAL TO CAESAR

“ . . . I appeal unto Caesar.” Other versions read, “I appeal to the emperor,” NRSV “Let my cause come before Caesar,” BBE “I appeal my case to the emperor!,” GWN and “I announce an appeal to Caesar.” MRD

Paul recognizes that Festus, together with his predecessor Felix, are not able to satisfactorily conduct this trial. He also knows that Jesus has affirmed he is going to testify of Christ in Rome as he did in Jerusalem. In my judgment, this is the factor that most compelled Paul to appeal to Caesar. He was seeking more than civil rights or being cleared from the charges made against him.

This is an example of Divine direction, realized as one is living by faith and walking in the Spirit. There is enough said about this to encourage the trusting ones, but not enough to lead to the imagination that those who live after the flesh will be blessed with guidance from above.

- “The steps of a good man are ordered by the LORD: and he delighteth in His way” (Psa 37:23).
- “A man's heart deviseth his way: but the LORD directeth his steps” (Prov 16:9).
- “And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left” (Isa 30:21).

These poignant expressions confirm that those who are directed come to the point where they know what to do. Their faith perceives the direction in which the Lord is leading, and the Spirit gives them words appropriate to their circumstances. In the text before us, the steps of Paul were directed to a political ruler that would play a key role in getting Paul to Rome. Paul recognized the hand of the Lord and immediately appealed to Caesar. Oh, the blessedness of living unto the Lord rather than for self!

UNTO CAESAR THOU SHALT GO

“ 12 Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Caesar? unto Caesar shalt thou go.”

Here we are witnessing the turning of a ruler’s heart (Prov 21:1). Festus had a predilection to do a special favor for the Jews. Yet, out of his own mouth he sends Paul to another area of the world, where they would not have access to him. Oh, the joy of having acquaintance with the God of heaven through Jesus Christ. He is everything He has represented Himself to be, and that the Spirit has moved holy men to say about Him. He is worthy of a trust that liberates the soul from the tyranny of fretting and worrying.

WHEN HE HAD CONFERRED WITH THE COUNCIL

“Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered . . .” Other versions read, “when he had conferred with his council,” NASB “having had a discussion with the Jews,” BBE “after talking with his advisers,” CJB “conferred with his counselor,” MRD “Then spake Festus with deliberation ,” TNT and “consulted with the [men who formed his] council.” AMPLIFIED

The various versions are not agreed on this verse. Some specifically state that the ones with whom Festus conferred were the Jews (BBE, LITV) . Others say it was his own political council (NASB, NIV, NRSV, RSV, CSV, CSB, ESV, GWN, MRD, NAB, NAS, NAU, NET, NIB, NJB, NJB, NLT, LIVING, IE, CEV, GNB, MESSAGE) . Some are neutral, referring simply to “the council” (KJV, NKJV, ASV, DARBY, DOUAY, ERV, GENEVA, PNT, RWB, WEB, YLT, WEYMOUTH, WILLIAMS, MONTGOMERY, WYCLIFFE, EMTV, INTERLINEAR) .

It appears to me that the council of reference was a political one, not the Jewish Sanhedrin, as indicated by some versions. The text does not specify the council of reference, but merely refers to it as “the council.” It is not likely that he conferred with the Jewish council. He had already turned down their suggestion to have Paul transferred to Jerusalem. It is unreasonable to think that he conferred with them about sending Paul to Rome. He no doubt conferred with his own counsel to ensure that he was not violating any aspect of Roman law.

UNTO CAESAR THOU SHALT GO

“Hast thou appealed unto Caesar? unto Caesar shalt thou go.” Other versions read, “to the Emperor you will go,” NRSV and “you will go to the Emperor.” CJB

As a citizen of Rome, Paul has claimed his legal rights, and Festus will not be able to grant the Jews their favor, for it would be in contradiction of Roman law. From the viewpoint of Herod, sending Paul to Rome relieved him of the responsibility of trying him. Now he would not have to hear the conflicting testimonies, or make special concessions to prejudiced Jews. However, that was only according to appearance. Behind the scenes, and in the perception of Paul, several things were accomplished.

- Paul would be put out of reach of the Jews.
- He would not have to return to Jerusalem and listen to further charges.
- He would now be on his way to Rome to fulfill the determination of King Jesus.
- He would be granted free passage all the way.
- He was granted governmental protection throughout the trip.

CONCLUSION

We are being exposed to the details of one event in Paul’s life. The particulars that are involved in this event are an account of how God worked things together to get Paul to Rome. He could have moved him there like He did Philip to Azotus (Acts 8:40). Instead, He chose to work by orchestrating a series of events that stretched over a period of well over two years – and we have not yet got to the voyages by ship. In order to appreciate the meticulous control God exercised throughout this whole affair, consider the following sequence of events.

- Against the advise of the brethren, Paul determines to go to Jerusalem (Acts 12:13-14).
- He arrives in Jerusalem, and the brethren receive him gladly (Acts 21:17).
- § Paul reports the things God had done through his ministry. Paul goes in to James, and, in the presence of all the elders, reports the things God had wrought through his ministry (Acts 21:19).
- James tells Paul of false reports that have been circulated among the Jews concerning his ministry (Acts 21:21-22).
- Paul is advised to join with four Jewish men in the completion of their vows in order to confirm to the Jews that what they had heard about Paul was not true (Acts 21:23-25).
- Paul purifies himself with four men and enters the Temple, signifying when an offering would be presented for the completion of the vow (Acts 21:26).
- When the seven days for the completion of the vow were almost completed, some Jews from Asia see Paul in the Temple, and stirred up all of the people, laying hands on him (Acts 21:27).

We are being exposed to the details of one event in Paul’s life. The particulars that are involved in this event are an account of how God worked things together to get Paul to Rome. He could have moved him there like He did Philip to Azotus (Acts 8:40). Instead, He chose to work by orchestrating a series of events that stretched over a period of well over two years – and we have not yet got to the voyages by ship.

The Jews from Asia charge that Paul has been teaching everywhere against the Jews, against the Law, and against the Temple (Acts 21:28a).

- The Jews charge that Paul is defiling the Temple by bringing Greeks into it (Acts 21:28b).
- The whole city of Jerusalem is moved, the people ran together, dragged Paul out of the Temple, and shut the Temple doors (Acts 21:30).
- The Jews set out to kill Paul (Acts 21:31a).
- A military leader hears of the activities. News of the tumult came to a chief captain of Rome (Acts 21:31b).
- The activities of the Jews are interrupted. The captain immediately takes some soldiers, stopped Paul from being beaten, and took him into custody (Acts 21:32-33a).
- The captain demanded to know who Paul was, and what he had done (Acts 21:33b).
- Confusion erupted with some Jews saying one thing, and some another (Acts 21:34a).
- Adversarial conditions are aborted. When he could not ascertain for certain the answer to his questions, the captain took Paul to the military barracks (Acts 21:34b).
- Protection of Paul enforced. Soldiers protected Paul from the violence of the people, and he came to the stairs leading into the barracks (21:35).
- The multitude of people had followed Paul crying out, “Away with him!” (Acts 21:36).
- Paul asks to speak to the chief captain, who makes known that he thought Paul was a certain Egyptian who had made an uproar in Jerusalem (Acts 21:37-38).
- Paul makes known that he is a Roman citizen, and asks for permission to speak to the people (Acts 21:39).
- An unpredictable opportunity to speak to the people. Paul is granted permission, and begins to speak to the people in the Hebrew tongue (Acts 21:40).
- § Paul is granted the right to speak to his accusers, testifying of his calling and mission. Paul delivers his first defense to the people, identifying who he was, and testifying to his conversion (22:1-16).
- § Paul testifies of the Lord’s personal word to him. He tells of being in the Temple later, and of a special word that was delivered to him while he was in a trance (Acts 22:17-21).
- Upon hearing Paul say that Jesus said he would be sent to the Gentiles, the Jews begin to cast of their clothes and throw dust into the air (Acts 22:22-23).
- Protection of Paul forcefully implemented. The chief captain commands Paul to be brought into the barracks where he would be examined by scourging (Acts 22:24).
- As they were binding Paul with thongs, he asked the centurion if it was lawful to scourge a man who was a Roman when he was uncondemned (Acts 22:25).
- The centurion told the chief captain to be careful what he was doing – that Paul was a Roman citizen (Acts 22:26).
- The scheduled scourging of Paul is aborted. When he had verified that Paul was a Roman citizen, the captain terminated the scheduled examination by scourging (Acts 22:27-29).
- Convenience is mandated for Paul the prisoner. The next day Paul was loosed from his bonds, and the Jewish elders and council was called, with Paul being set before them (Acts 22:30).

- § *Paul testifies of the maintenance of a good conscience before God. Paul begins to speak to the council, and the high priest commanded him to be struck on the mouth. Paul responded and a brief exchange took place (Acts 23:1-5).

- § *Paul testifies of the hope of the resurrection. Paul discerns that part of the council was Pharisees and part Sadducees. Knowing they were divided, he said he had been called into question because of his hope of the resurrection (Acts 23:6).

- A tumult resulted because the Sadducees did not accept the resurrection of the dead, or the existence of angels and spirits, while the Pharisees did accept these things (Acts 23:7-9).

- Paul forcefully removed from danger. The dissension was so great that the captain had Paul removed by force, placing him inside the barracks (Acts 23:10).

- The Lord stands by Paul, comforting him. The next night, the Lord stood by Paul, telling him to be of good cheer, that he would testify of Him in Rome, just as he had in Jerusalem (Acts 23:11).

- When it was day, forty Jews bound themselves under a curse to not eat or drink until they had killed Paul (Acts 23:12-13).

- These forty men went to the Jewish council and told them their plans, telling the leaders to ask the captain to bring Paul down so they could inquire of him. Then, they said, they would kill him (Acts 23:14-15).

- The secret plans of the enemy overheard. Paul's nephew overhears the plot, and enters into the barracks, telling Paul of the plans of the Jews (Acts 23:16).

- A centurion listens and gives heed to Paul. Paul calls one of the centurions and tells him to take his nephew to the captain because he had something to tell him (Acts 23:17).

- A boy is taken to the one who can stop the plans of the Jews. The centurion took the boy to the captain and told him Paul had asked him to bring his nephew to tell him something (Acts 23:18).

- An army captain gives heed to the boy's advice. The captain took the boy aside privately and asked what he had to say. The boy told him of the plot, and then admonished the captain not to yield to the Jews' request. The captain received the boy's words, and told him not to tell anyone that he had told the captain these things (Acts 23:19-21).

- Paul escorted to Caesarea with a military group of 470 men. The captain quickly dispatched two centurions to gather two hundred soldiers, seventy horsemen, and two hundred spearmen, and take Paul to Felix the governor. They were also to provide mounts for Paul so he could be safely conducted to the governor (Acts 23:23-24).

- A military captain thinks to write an introductory letter to a governor. The captain wrote a letter to Felix, explaining the whole situation (Acts 23:25-30).

- A military escort takes Paul all the way to Caesarea. The soldiers took Paul and began their journey, stopping at Antipatris, then continuing to Caesarea with the soldiers returning to the barracks (Acts 23:31-32).

- Upon arriving in Caesarea, they delivered both the letter and Paul to Felix (Acts 23:33).

- When Felix had read the letter, he asked from what province Paul had come. Hearing that it was Cilicia, he consented to hear the case (Acts 23:34-35a).

- Felix commanded that Paul be kept in Herod’s judgment hall (Acts 23:35b).
- Five days later Ananias the high priest and the elders showed up with Tertullus, who presented the charges against Paul (Acts 24:1-9).
- § Paul provides the details involved in his return to Jerusalem, and of his hope. Upon a sign from Felix, Paul presented his defense (Acts 24:10-21).
- A scheduled hearing is forthrightly dismissed by Felix. After hearing Paul’s defense, Felix dismissed the hearing, saying he would wait until Lysias the captain came. Then he would have a fuller picture of the circumstances (Acts 24:22).
- Special privileges are vouchsafed to Paul the prisoner. Felix commands Paul to be guarded by a centurion, yet given some liberty, with his acquaintances being allowed to minister to him (Acts 24:23).
- Felix schedules a time when he can hear Paul concerning faith in Christ, his wife also being present. After certain days, Felix returned with his wife, and sent for Paul, hearing him concerning the faith in Christ (Acts 24:24).
- § Paul reasons with Felix concerning pivotal spiritual matters. Paul reasons with Felix of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come – causing Felix to “tremble” (Acts 24:25a).
- Felix dismissed Paul, saying he would call for him when he had a convenient season (Acts 24:25b).
- § Multiple opportunities are given for Paul to speak to Felix. Thinking Paul would offer him a bribe, Felix often called for Paul “and communed with him” (Acts 24:26).
- As a favor to the Jews, Felix left Paul bound in prison for two years (Acts 24:27b).
- A full two years later, Festus replaces Felix and comes to Jerusalem (Acts 25:1).
- Like lions coming in for the kill, the high priest and the chief of the Jews inform Festus “against Paul,” asking him to have Paul brought to Jerusalem (Acts 25:2-3a).
- The Jews sought to kill Paul while he was on the way to Jerusalem (Acts 25:3b).
- A ruler who was seeking the favor of the Jews denies their request. Festus denies the request, saying that Paul “should be kept in Caesarea” (Acts 25:4).
- Festus demands that the Jews who asked him to bring Paul to Jerusalem accompany him to Caesarea. Festus says he will leave for Caesarea shortly, and that the most capable among the Jews should accompany him, presenting their accusations formally when they arrive (Acts 25:5).
- After remaining in Jerusalem for more than ten days, he returns to Caesarea with the accompanying Jews, and calls for Paul to be brought (Acts 25:6).
- Upon Paul’s arrival, the Jews surround him and present their charges, none of which were accompanied by proof (Acts 25:7).
- § Paul boldly announces he has committed no offense. Paul answers for himself, stating he had committed no offence against the Jews, the Temple, or Caesar (Acts 25:8).
- Willing to make a concession to the Jews, Festus asked Paul if he was willing to go to Jerusalem to be tried before Festus himself (Acts 25:9).
- Paul refuses, declaring he was standing in Caesar’s court, where he ought to be judged (Acts 25:10a).
- Paul reaffirms that he has done nothing against the Jews, which, he said, Festus knew very well (Acts 25:10b).

- Paul states that he is willing to die if he has done anything worthy of death, but if such was not the case, he appealed to Caesar (Acts 25:11).

- Even though he was seeking to please the Jews, Festus agrees to send Paul to Rome . Festus confers with his own council, and agrees with Paul's assessment saying, "unto Caesar thou shalt go" (Acts 25:12).

I have listed sixty-nine segments of this whole episode. Hundreds of people have been involved, including groups of Jews (70 in the Sanhedrin and 40 who conspired to kill Paul), religious and political rulers, an army, Paul's nephew, and acquaintances that ministered to Paul during his two-year confinement.

Where it is obvious that some kind of intervention took place , I have preceded the point with a . Those times when Paul was able to speak or testify have been preceded by a §.

Now, I ask you, who but God could cause such a diversity of things – sixty-nine of them – to work out for the fulfillment of His own purpose and the good of Paul? Truly, this was the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes!

Lesson #98

PAUL INTRODUCED TO AGRIPPA

“ 25:13 And after certain days king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Caesarea to salute Festus. 14 And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix: 15 About whom, when I was at Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him. 16 To whom I answered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him. 17 Therefore, when they were come hither, without any delay on the morrow I sat on the judgment seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth. 18 Against whom when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed: 19 But had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive. 20 And because I doubted of such manner of questions, I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters. 21 But when Paul had appealed to be reserved unto the hearing of Augustus, I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Caesar. 22 Then Agrippa said unto Festus, I would also hear the man myself. To morrow, said he, thou shalt hear him. 23 And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Festus' commandment Paul was brought forth. 24 And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying that he ought not to live any longer. 25 But when I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, and that he himself hath appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him. 26 Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord. Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and specially before thee, O king Agrippa, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write. 27 For it seemeth to me unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.” (Acts 25:13-27)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

King Agrippa and his wife came to Caesarea to pay their respects to Festus. After several days, Festus brought up the matter of Paul, who had been “left in bonds by Felix.” After providing a rather lengthy report of the case, Agrippa replied that he wanted to hear Paul for himself. Festus replied that arrangements would be made the very next day for Agrippa to hear him. On the next day Agrippa and his wife arrived in a great display, accompanied by military commandants. The chief men of the city were also there at the commandment of Felix. Paul was called into the presence of this impressive and august assembly. Festus then told the assembly to behold Paul, concerning whom the Jews had been dealing with him. He told them he had found nothing worthy of death in Paul, and that this prisoner had appealed to Caesar. He further told the crowd that he had determined to send him to Caesar. However, he had convened this session in order to write something that identified the charges laid against him.

PAUL BELONGS TO US!

Among the “gifts” given to men are “apostles” (Eph 4:11) – and Paul is an apostle, particularly to the Gentiles (Rom 11:13). Paul, classing himself with Apollos and Cephas (Peter), said he was among the category of things belonging to us – i.e. the household of faith. “Therefore let no man glory in men. For all things are yours; Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; And ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's” (1 Cor 3:21-23). This is a most challenging thought, enlarging upon the diversity of resources that have been given to those who are in Christ Jesus. A brief review of them will enhance the value of Paul in our hearts and minds.

• PAUL. In the role of an apostle, Paul belongs to the body of Christ. His teachings belong to the members of Christ's body. The revelations given to him belong to them. All of his letters belong to us, and we can profit from them. His experiences belong to us as examples, testimonies, and confirmations of Divine direction. Paul is intended to bring us spiritual advantages, not questions or things beyond the capacity of our understanding.

• APOLLOS. What we know about Apollos belongs to us. We can learn of being "mighty in the Scriptures," although he was not an apostle. We can also benefit from beholding him as one who was "instructed in the way of the Lord, and fervent in Spirit." There is also the matter of him teaching "diligently" what he had been given to see (Acts 18:24-25). Apollos belongs to believers.

• CEPHAS. Cephas, or Peter, belongs to the whole church. Although "the ministry of the circumcision" was given to him, the Jews were not the only ones to profit from what he was given to see. His two letters belong to us, and his recorded messages are ours (Acts 2:14-41; 3:12-26; 4:8-12; 5:29-32; 10:34-43).

• THE WORLD. Although we are "not of the world" (John 15:19; 17:14,16), it belongs to us. We have been delivered from it (Gal 1:4), and yet it belongs to us. Nothing that takes place in the world can "separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom 8:39). God is working everything together for our good while we journey through the world (Rom 8:28). Because the world belongs to the saints, they can "use" it, and not abuse it (1 Cor 7:31).

I cannot leave this point without drawing attention to the advantages that are being worked out for Paul. They are not accruing for financial prosperity, political advantage, or the increase of pleasantries in this world.

• LIFE. In Christ "life" belongs to us, so that we, by the grace of God, can "reign in life" by Jesus Christ (Rom 5:17). The experiences of life do not need to throw us to the ground so that we cannot rise again.

• DEATH. Death is an appointment, yet it belongs to us. That is why it is turned to an unspeakable advantage, for to be "absent from the body" is to be "present with the Lord" (2 Cor 5:8). We no longer need to live in the "fear of death."

• THINGS PRESENT. Other versions read, "the present," NIV and "the immediate and threatening present." AMPLIFIED This can be viewed as present circumstances, particularly threatening ones – such as the one in which Paul finds himself. Circumstances are ultimately managed and orchestrated in heaven in the interest of the children of God. They have no power to separate us from the love of God, and thus there is no need to fear them. They are ours in the sense of being worked together for our good.

• THINGS TO COME. This refers to our future upon the earth in general, and specifically the ultimate passing of the earth and everything that goes with it. For those who love the truth and walk in it, the future belongs to them. The worldly fear those things "that are coming upon the earth" (Lk 21:26). But the saints look at such things quite differently. They see those as the times when their "redemption draweth nigh" (Lk 21:28).

The point here is that all of these realities are being lived out in our text. That is why everything is working out so Paul can bear witness to Christ in Rome.

WORLDLY INTERESTS ARE NOT THE POINT

I cannot leave this point without drawing attention to the advantages that are being worked out for Paul. They are not accruing for financial prosperity, political advantage, or the increase of pleasantries in this world. Not even Paul's health was guaranteed, as he suffered from infirmities in general, and a thorn in the flesh in particular (2 Cor 11:30; 12:5,7,9-10). For extended periods he endured hunger and thirst, nakedness and buffeting, and had “no certain dwelling place” (1 Cor 4:11).

Jesus told the other apostles, “In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world” (John 16:33). This was divulged on the night of Jesus’ betrayal, and AFTER Judas had been dismissed from the group. He told them that world hated them because He had chosen them out of the world (John 15:19). He also told them they would be persecuted (John 15:20). The world was the domain in which they would experience difficulties. However, as Paul taught elsewhere, those very hardships and trials would be properly called “light afflictions,” and would work for them “a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory” (2 Cor 4:17). This too is being lived out in our text, and should assist in shaping a proper perspective of salvation.

The leading of the Lord sometimes requires passing through both mountains and valleys – extraordinary times of spiritual exhilaration, and profound testing. There are times of triumph, as when Israel passed through the Red Sea (Ex 14:22), defeated the Amalekites (Ex 17:10-13), and overthrew Og and Sihon (Josh 2:10). There was the refreshment of an oasis in which were “twelve fountains of water and threescore and ten palm trees” (Num 33:9), But there was also that “great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents, and scorpions, and drought, where there was no water” (Deut 8:15). All of these were between Egypt and Canaan, and all of them were experienced by the Israelites. Those who were faithful made it through them all, arriving safely in Canaan, and coming into the possession of their inheritance.

John the Baptist was led through “the deserts till the day of his showing” (Lk 1:80). We are not told of the things that took place during that time, but assume he was tried and readied for his brief but essential ministry.

The Lord Jesus Himself was prepared for His ministry, when He went about doing good and healing all who were oppressed of the devil (Acts 10:38). He spent “forty days” in the wilderness, “tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts; and the angels ministered unto him” (Mark 1:13). Mark says “the Spirit drove Him into the wilderness” NKJV Mk 1:12). Matthew says He was “led up of the Spirit into the wilderness” (Matt 4:1). During that forty days, He was “tempted” by Satan (Mk 1:13), for the Spirit led Him into the wilderness “to be tempted of the devil” (Matt 4:1).

So it is with ministry for the Lord now, and the journey to glory, our promised land. Both are attended with trials and blessings, challenges and benefits, joys and sorrows. There are mountains to cross, that cannot be overcome with resources from this world. They are also valleys through which we must traverse where the light is not as profuse as we prefer. And, there are also those deserts in which our faith is tested and we learn more fully of Divine sustenance and preservation. All of this is seen in the trek of Paul from Jerusalem to Rome. A diversity of experiences are all being worked together.

AGRIPPA AND BERNICE ARRIVE IN CAESAREA

“25:13 And after certain days king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Caesarea to salute Festus. 14 And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix . . .”

This is the first mention of “Agrippa” in the Bible. He was a member of the Herodian family, and is mentioned twelve times from Acts 25:13 through Acts 26:32.

“The Agrippa before whom Paul was brought (Acts 25:13, 26) was the son of the foregoing [Herod who was smitten by an angel and eaten of worms] who died when he [Agrippa] was only seventeen years old (Josephus, Ant. 19, 9, 1), and hence he did not succeed to his father's dominions (Joseph. Ant. 19, 9, 2); but he was allowed by Claudius (A.D. 48) to enjoy the principality of Chalcis, which his uncle Herod had held (Josephus, Ant. 20, 5, 2; War, 2, 12, 1), together with the superintendence of the Temple at Jerusalem, and the privilege of nominating the high-priest (Josephus, Ant. 20, 1, 3).”

McCLINTOK AND STRONG’S

KING AGRIPPA AND BERNICE

“And after certain days king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Caesarea to salute Festus.”

FESTUS DECLARED PAUL’S CAUSE

“And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix . . .”

This was Agrippa II, the son of Agrippa I (Acts 12) [who killed the James, the brother of John], and consequently was the brother of Drusilla (Acts 24:24). PULPIT COMMENTARY Historians say that she was not the wife of this Agrippa, but was rather his sister – which could account for why she is not referred to as the “wife” of Agrippa, as Drusilla was of Felix (Acts 24:24). John Gill writes that Bernice “lived in too great familiarity with her brother Agrippa,” apparently living in an incestuous relationship with him.

The eldest daughter of Agrippa I (q.v.) by his wife Cypros: she was espoused at a very early age to Marcus, son of Alexander the Alabarch; but he died before the consummation of the marriage, and she then became the wife of her uncle Herod, king of Chalcis, by whom she had two sons (Josephus, Ant. 18, 5, 4; 19:5, 1; 9,1; 20:5, 2; 7, 3; War, 2, 11, 6). After the death of this Herod, A.D. 48, Bernice, then but 20 years old, lived for a considerable time with her own brother, Agrippa II (q.v.), and not without just suspicion of an incestuous commerce with him to avoid the scandal of which she induced Polemon, king of Cilicia, to marry her; but she soon deserted him and returned again to her brother (Joseph. Ant. 20, 7, 3; Juvenal, 6, 156), in connection with whom she is mentioned (Acts 25:13, 23; 26:30), as having visited Festus at Caesarea on his appointment as procurator of Judaea, when Paul defended himself before them all, A.D. 55.

Festus was newly appointed to the position formerly occupied by Felix. Agrippa and Bernice apparently came to Caesarea as a courteous gesture, as well as an official recognition of his appointment.

PAUL LEFT IN BONDS

During this occasion, Festus is moved to bring up the matter of Paul. He had been “left in bonds by Felix” – conveniently forgotten, because Felix “was willing to show the Jews a pleasure” (Acts 24:27). It appears as though Festus did not agree with this neglect, and thus brought it up to Agrippa. Of course, God is working in all of this for the good of Paul.

ACCORDING TO APPEARANCE

According to appearance, the visit of Agrippa and Bernice was a political activity that had little to do with the Kingdom of God or the working out of an eternal purpose. However, we must remember the words of our Lord: “Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment” (John 7:24).

This occasion would prove to be a setting in which Paul would speak of the things of God, doing so with great persuasive power. This is a slice of time in which God was “working salvation in the midst of the earth” (Psa 74:12). The details of Paul’s arrest and the circumstances that attended it, will be given to a political ruler. A point will be made of the injustice of it all, and of the total lack of any evidence that the charges brought against Paul were true.

These conversations between Festus and Agrippa will actually provoke the king to want to hear what Paul had to say. Further, Jesus had placed Paul into the ministry because He “counted,” or “considers,” NIV Paul to be “faithful” (1 Tim 1:12). Like Abraham, Paul could be trusted to handle what was given him correctly, passing it along to others (Gen 18:17-19). He was a faithful steward, which involves recognizing open doors. When an ordained opportunity was set before him, he would see it and respond accordingly.

OPPORTUNITIES

The Scriptural word “opportunity” is lexically defined as, “opportune or seasonable time: with verbs suggestive of the idea of advantage.” THAYER and “the right, proper, favorable time.” GINGRICH Opportunities can be used for evil or for good, but it is imperative that they be recognized. By their very nature, they are for a limited time. If they are missed, they have been in vain, for they will be closed. This is why the culturing of a generation that is not alert to their surroundings is the work of the evil one. It cannot be treated as some inconsequential thing. Oh, that men could see it! I shutter to think of the impact when the record of missed opportunities is divulged on the day of judgment.

Even the wicked can be alert for opportunities to fulfill their corrupt devices. Think of when Judas “sought opportunity to betray” Jesus (Matt 26:16). He even “sought opportunity to betray him . . . in the absence of the multitude” (Lk 22:6).

We are admonished, “As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith” (Gal 6:10). That postulates that we are alert, and in a posture of awareness. Paul commended the Philippians for their alertness, and fervent desire to meet the needs of himself, pointing out that they only lacked the opportunity to do so. “But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last your care of me hath flourished again; wherein ye were also careful, but ye lacked opportunity” (Phil 4:10). That too posits a state of alertness, else the words are meaningless.

An Aspect of Selflessness

When applied to Kingdom interests and spiritual life, this state of mind and posture of soul is an aspect of selflessness. The individual whose life is described as “Christ living in me,” and who is living “by faith in the Son of God” sees life differently (Gal 2:20). He is not living for the promotion of self, the attainment of riches, or some other selfish motive. Faith sharpens one's spiritual vision, so that doors that are opened by the Lord can be seen, and Divinely ordained opportunities can be seized to the glory of God.

Because one rarely hears any kind of extended word on this, I want to point to several examples of Paul's selfless life, confirming that he had, in fact, denied himself, taken up his cross, and followed Jesus.

- DAMASCUS. He preached Christ boldly, and disputed with those who contradicted him, even though it endangered his life (Acts 9:29-30)
- ANTIOCH. He preached boldly, enduring aggressive opposition. Yet, he told them the truth, and warned them of the judgment of God coming upon them (Acts 13:40-41, 44-46, 50).
- ICONIUM. He preached in the synagogue, and when the Jews stirred up the people, making them “evil affected against the brethren,” he remained “a long time, speaking boldly in the Lord” (Acts 14:1-3).

• LYSTRA. After being stoned in Lystra, and left for dead, he was raised up, went to Derbe, and preached the Gospel, also “Confirming the souls of the disciples” (Acts 14:19-22).

• THESSALONICA. In the synagogue of Thessalonica, Paul opened and alleged that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead – eventhough there were Jews who set the entire city in an uproar in opposition to Paul (Acts 17:1-5).

• ATHENS. Provoked by the dominance of idolatry in the city, Paul extended himself to show the absolute unreasonableness of idolatry. He was not thanked for his efforts, but called a “babblers.” When he was asked to say more on the subject, he did, and was “mocked” (Acts 17:16-32).

• CORINTH. In Corinth Paul was “pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews that when they heard his message. However, the chief ruler of the synagogue “believed on the Lord with all his house.” Further, Jesus appeared to him saying that he should remain in Corinth, for He had “much people in this city” (Acts 18:1-10).

• EPHESUS. Paul spoke boldly in the Ephesian synagogue for three months, “disputing and persuading the things concerning the Kingdom of God.” When many were hardened and believed not, he took the disciples and moved to the school of Tyrannus, where he continued to teach every day for two years. As a result “all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus” (Acts 19:8-10).

• TROAS. When sailing to Jerusalem, Paul stopped by Troas, spending seven days there. Finding disciples that were meeting on the first day of the week, he gathered with them and preached to them, bringing much comfort to them (Acts 20:6-12).

• TYRE. During their continued journey by boat, they came to Tyre, where the ship was to unload its cargo. Finding certain disciples, they remained there for seven days with them (Acts 21:3-6).

• PTOLEMAIS. Having arrived in Ptolemais, they saluted certain brethren, and continued with them for one day (Acts 21:7).

• CAESAREA. Arriving in Caesarea, Paul and company spent many days at the home of Philip the evangelist. At that time Agabus the prophet said that Paul would be delivered to the Gentiles in Jerusalem (Acts 21:8-13).

• JERUSALEM. Having arrived in Jerusalem, Paul reported “particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry.” He also received wise counsel concerning how to address some false reports that had been circulated about him (Acts 21:17-26).

• JERUSALEM AND CAESAREA. In the temple, Paul was opposed by the Jews, and dragged from the temple, being beaten and maligned. The events that follow, which our text is still relating, resulted in a number of opportunities.

• Paul testified to the Jews that accused him, with a military captain being present (Acts 21:39-22:21).

• He testified to the high priest and the Sanhedrin (Acts 23:1-10).

• He saw an opportunity to inform the Roman authorities of a plot to kill him (Acts 23:13-30).

• He testified before the Jewish council and Felix the governor (Acts 24:10-21).

• He reasoned with Felix and his wife about “righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come” (Acts 24:24-25).

• He testified before the accusing Jews and Festus the governor (Acts 25:8-11).

In all of these opportunities, Paul was able to enter into them with confidence. This is because he was not living for himself, but for the Lord. No person whose life is wrapped up in himself could discern these opportunities. They did not look like open doors – but they were.

Suffice it to say, many professing Christians rarely become involved in the work of the Lord. They have not denied themselves, nor have they taken up their cross. They are content to murmur and complain because, as they see it, life has not treated them fairly. But in their hard times, had they been living by faith, they would have seen open doors that would have brought joy to their hearts, advantages to others, and glory to God.

Opportunities to participate in the good and acceptable and perfect will of God may exist all about a person, and yet not be perceived. This is because the closer one is to the world, and the more absorbed they are in things wholly related to the world, the less apt they are to see open doors set before them. At the center of the life of self-denial spiritual matters become clearer. The more one is absorbed with self, the more such things are obscured – like being in a fog at first, and finally descending into the blackness of night.

Further, the very thought that only a few of the members of the body of Christ are involved in His will must be thrust from us, for it is a devilish delusion. There are no vestigial members of the body of Christ – parts that have no value, or cannot be used. Whether Paul, his nephew, or the brethren who ministered to him while he was incarcerated, there is work for all to do.

This is one of several reasons why I have such a detestation for “Babylon the Great,” that impressive harlot which is nothing more than Satan’s fabricated church (Rev 17:1-6; 18:1-20). This is the false church that has forged an alliance with the world, and therein have rejected the Lord’s Christ. It is a place of spiritual bondage and ignorance, dominated by pretentious leaders who have no genuine care for the “flock of God.” To them, being used by the Lord equates to cleaning buildings, mowing lawns, serving in soup-kitchens, and the likes. While this may be of some measured value, it certainly does not reflect the manners declared in the Scriptures. Such works are generally more associated with the institution than the revealed work of God.

The point is that the unseen superstructure of spiritual Babylon is not tailored for the involvement of the “body of Christ.” It does not allow for the free expression of spiritual insights, or the ministration of edification by the members within the assembly of the saints. Leadership has little or nothing to do with equipping the saints for the work of the ministry (Eph 4:11-16). In most churches, Paul would not even have an opportunity to speak, to say nothing of Barnabas, Silas, Timothy, and others. Relatively new converts like Stephen and Philip would be advised to go to Bible College, and perhaps seminary. In so doing, they would become vassals of Babylon, and assist in establishing her priorities.

Of course, during the time being covered by our text, such a surrounding did not exist – although it was found within the framework of Judaism.

Paul’s maintenance of his faith enabled him to capitalize on a great number of opportunities, and we are still reaping the benefit of his alertness.

FESTUS TELLS AGRIPPA OF PAUL

“ 14b . . . Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix 15 About whom, when I was at Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him. 16 To whom I answered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him.”

This is a most remarkable occurrence. Here, one non-Christian ruler speaks to another about the “cause” of a servant of God, who was hated by his own people. Unlike many political despots of our day, these two men will concur that Paul had not been treated justly, and that he accusers were unjustified in their charges against him. Today, in our very government, political leaders are passing laws, making rules, and passing ordinances that are oppressive to those who believe in Christ . They are listening to their opponents as though their charges were true, and caving in to the demands of the enemies of Jesus. In so doing, they reveal they are ranked beneath those who heard charges against Paul. That includes Lysias the captain, Felix the governor, Festus the governor, and now Agrippa the king. And how do you suppose it will go for such men on the day of judgment?

WHEN I WAS AT JERUSALEM

“About whom, when I was at Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him . . .”

Notice how accurate a report is given by Festus. He does not embellish the report with all manner of false statements, giving the advantage to himself. He tells it precisely as it happened.

Of the event it is written, “Now when Festus was come into the province, after three days he ascended from Caesarea to Jerusalem. Then the high priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul . . .” (Acts 25:1-3). Festus was not privy to their determination to kill Paul: “And desired favor against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, laying wait in the way to kill him” (Acts 25:3). However, he was aware that no proven charges had been leveled against Paul. I do not doubt that he was suspicious of their motives. Over and above these circumstances, God was orchestrating this whole series of events for the good of Paul.

IT IS NOT THE MANNER OF THE ROMANS

“To whom I answered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face . . .”

The actual account of Festus’ response agrees with what he tells Agrippa. “But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Caesarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither. Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him” (Acts 25:4-5).

Often the Jews, and even the professed church has operated beneath the dignity revealed in civil law. In the mock trials of Jesus and Stephen, the accusers did not approach the involved trials with the laws enunciated by Romans. In history, the trials of such men as Wycliffe, Tyndale, Luther, and others, were not attended by an insistence upon justice and proper procedure. Many modern ministers have been tried by groups of elders and church boards that would not have been allowed in the court of Felix, Festus, or Agrippa. This is not to mention that injustices that have been administered by educational institutions that exist under the banner of “Christian.”

- The Law of Moses demanded justice (Ex 23:11-8; Lev 19:13-20; Deut 25:1-4).
- The prophets delivered stern words concerning justice (Isa 1:17; 56:1; 59:14-15; Jer 22:1-4; Lam 3:35-36; Amos 5:11-12; Hab 1:4; Zech 8:16).
- Even Nicodemus knew the Divine requirement of justice (John 7:51).
- Jesus affirmed the necessity of judging righteously (John 7:24).

In Christ Jesus, the matter of justice is addressed at the highest level – through “charity,” or spiritual love. It is said of this godly virtue, “Charity . . . Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things” (1 Cor 13:6-7). This does not mean that love is gullible, but that it is not willing to accept things that cannot be substantiated. When faced with things difficult to discern, it defaults to the best conclusion, not the worst.

LICENSE TO ANSWER FOR HIMSELF

“ . . . and have licence to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him.” Other versions read, “has the opportunity to answer for himself,” NKJV “has the opportunity to make his defense,” NASB “has had an opportunity to defend himself.” NIV

Albert Barnes writes, “Tyrants permit people to be accused without knowing who the accusers are, and without an opportunity of meeting the charges. It is one great principle of modern jurisprudence that the accused may know the accusers, and be permitted to confront the witnesses, and to adduce all the testimony possible in his own defense.” ALBERT BARNES ON ACTS I might add that the Romans played a key role in establishing this approach within the context of government.

If the Jews had their way at the very beginning, they would not have allowed a single word to be uttered by Paul. Arousing the Jews in Jerusalem with their false allegations, they had seized him, dragged him out of the temple, and commenced beating him. Their aim, as they made abundantly clear, was to kill him. In so doing, they broke both their own law, and the law of the Romans as well.

OUR OWN SITUATION IN JOPLIN

I do not intend to make too much of this, but myself and The word of Truth Fellowship have experienced being charged falsely by some citizens of Joplin – people who are professed Christians. Over the last eighteen years some have referred to us as a cult, Blakelyites, those who have no grace, and only preach Law, and myself as being the origin of much controversy.

During these nearly two decades, not a single one of those to have painted us in such a manner have asked us about the charges. The rumors continue to this day to be circulated with only those who know us well making any effort to present a defense – and that is not because they have been asked.

Let it be clear that we have not been thrown into a state of consternation because of these charges. I personally view them as troublesome little gnats who lack both power and sense, buzzing here and there chattering about things of which they know nothing. In making their charges, they only confirm to the hearers that we are different from the established religious community. That only causes us to rejoice, because we have some understanding of the uniqueness of the things we have been given to see – things that are not especially for us, but are available to who all who are in Christ Jesus.

My point here is simply this: we are not to count it a “strange thing” when the world hates us – even if it is unjust in doing so. Jesus said, “If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you” (John 15:18-19). John wrote, “Marvel not, My brethren, if the world hate you. (1 John 3:13)

Those who imagine that believers become unsettled when they are maligned and falsely accused are only captured by vain imagination. Actually, when such people speak as they do, it enhances our joy, and brings more confidence to our hearts. That will, in turn, make us more determined to speak. Thus, the Scripture is fulfilled, “We having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak; knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you” (2 Cor 4:13-14). We can actually be helped by opposition.

FESTUS SUMMARIZES THE CHARGES AGAINST PAUL

“ 17 Therefore, when they were come hither, without any delay on the morrow I sat on the judgment seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth. 18 Against whom when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed: 19 But had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.”

Now Paul will have the opportunity to speak to a political dignitary, and he will do so zealously and extensively. This is not the result of an evangelistic outreach, but is introduced by an inquiry. That inquiry is not stimulated by the testimony of other believers, but by the report of another political figure.

Considering that Paul was not a political prisoner, like Barabbas, and looking at it as mere history, makes this account all the more remarkable. To the body of Christ, Paul is a most remarkable man with unusual spiritual insights that were revealed to him. But to the Romans, he was a nobody – at least politically speaking. Now, he had drawn the curiosity of at least four notable Roman officials: a military captain, two governors, and one king. Festus even calls Paul by name (Acts 25:19,21). Earlier, when he was in the charge of Lysias the captain, a centurion came to him and referred to Paul as “Paul the prisoner” (Acts 23:18).

Even though Lysias the captain, Felix, Festus, and Agrippa knew that no valid charges had been brought against Paul, yet he was the subject of conversation in higher government circles. This was in strict accord with the words Jesus said to Ananias when he was called to minister to Paul (then Saul of Tarsus): “But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel” (Acts 9:15).

When addressing the twelve, Jesus spoke of them also speaking before government officials. He even elaborated on the reason for this circumstance: “And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles” (Matt 10:18).

Now Paul will have the opportunity to speak to a political dignitary, and he will do so zealously and extensively. This is not the result of an evangelistic outreach, but is introduced by an inquiry. That inquiry is not stimulated by the testimony of other believers, but by the report of another political figure.

HE SAT ON THE JUDGMENT SEAT WITHOUT DELAY

“Therefore, when they were come hither, without any delay on the morrow I sat on the judgment seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth.”

The historical record of the above statement reads, “And when he had tarried among them more than ten days, he went down unto Caesarea; and the next day sitting on the judgment seat commanded Paul to be brought” (Acts 25:6).

Even though Festus was a subordinate of Agrippa, he presented his case factually and without embellishment. I do not doubt that this was a bit unusual. No delay was made in this matter, even though it was not a highly publicized political trial. The matter was given precedence because it was being orchestrated from above.

THEY HAD NO VALID ACCUSATIONS

“Against whom when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed . . .” Other versions read, “bringing charges against him not of such crimes as I was expecting,” NASB “they did not charge him with any of the crimes I had expected,” NIV and “they brought forward no accusation [in his case] of any such misconduct as I was expecting.” AMPLIFIED

The fact that Paul had been left in prison for two years probably led Festus to think he had been charged with some serious crimes: political insurrection, rabble-rousing, murder, or some other all-important infraction of civil law. Technically, of course, they had said that Paul was “a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world” (Acts 24:5). However, the charges of the Jews were not taken seriously by Lysias the captain, Felix the governor, nor Festus the governor. They were utterly lacking of any evidence, and were thus dismissed just as though they had never been spoken.

Had Paul’s life been marked by inconsistency and trouble-making, the charges against him could have easily been established. However, his life was flawless, frustrating his adversaries. This is as it should be with all believers. Thus Paul admonished Titus, “In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works: in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, Sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you” (Titus 2:7-8). The target for all believers is to be “blameless and harmless, the sons of God without rebuke, in he midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world” (Phil 2:15). Peter wrote, “Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, whereas they speak against you as evildoers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation” (1 Pet 2:12). And again he wrote, “For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men ” (1 Pet 2:15). And yet again, “But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear: Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ ” (1 Pet 3:15-16).

Owing to the contemporary approach to working constantly with flawed living among professed believers, these words have been largely ignored and forgotten. Even though they were written with most sober tones, leaving no room for violating them, in the average church it is as though they were not even in the Scriptures. While sophists are busy explaining why people are dominated by sin, living reproachful lives, and living at a distance from God, that very God has made it quite clear that it is not acceptable to dabble in sin, or leave the impression that Christians are really no different than anyone else.

Well, this was certainly not the mindset within the early church. Those who thought in such a manner were generally eliminated from the body – like Ananias and Sapphira, who were clearly the exception to the rule of righteousness.

Even more so, competent spiritual leaders and thinkers should not spend their time in trivial pursuits, and dealing extensively with those who insist on walking in the dark. No minister of the Word should consume his time dabbling in the personal affairs of men.

In addition to this, there is something else to be noted here. It is clear that Festus saw no value in continuing to deal with false and unsubstantiated reports. It was a waste of his time, and he knew it. Even more so, competent spiritual leaders and thinkers should not spend their time in trivial pursuits, and dealing extensively with those who insist on walking in the dark. No minister of the Word should consume his time dabbling in the personal affairs of men. Understand there are things that occasionally must be addressed – like a person taking heed to their ministry (Col 4:17)), or someone who is immoral continuing to be identified with the assembly (1 Cor 5:1-5). But such things must be dealt with forthrightly and without undue tolerance. Under the Law, where people were unconverted and God's laws were not written upon their hearts, provision was made for judges among the people – generally to settle disputes (Ex 21:6-22; 22:8-9; Deut 1:16-17). Even then, we have no record of such things as marriage counseling and the rearing of children being addressed on a personal basis.

All such things may have a “show of wisdom,” but they are really career-driven . In Christ provision has been made to address any personal or domestic difficulties. People have the Word of God (1 Pet 2:2), the Holy Spirit (Gal 4:6; 1 John 2:20,27), and access to God (Eph 3:12). They are implored to obtain the wisdom that is from above (James 1:5-6), and to let their requests be made known unto God (Phil 4:6). It is not right for remain in a fundamentally unlearned state. It is also out of order to continue working with those who have remained without spiritual understanding for an inordinately long period of time. Even Festus called a halt to fruitless proceedings, and believers should have even more wisdom than him.

SUPERSTITIONS, AND ONE JESUS

“But had certain questions against him of their own superstition . . . ” Other versions read, “about their own religion, and about a certain Jesus,” NKJV “about their own religion and a dead man, Jesus,” NASB “certain questions of their own system of worship, and concerning a certain Jesus who is dead,” DARBY and “about their own religion or superstition and concerning one Jesus.” AMPLIFIED

The word translated “superstition” is deisidaimoni,aj , and has the following lexical meaning: “in a good sense, reverence for the good piety, religion . . . superstition . . . employs the word ambiguously and cautiously, in Acts 25:19, of the Jewish religion, viz. so as to leave his own judgment concerning its truth in suspense,” THAYER “in a bad sense superstition; in a neutral sense, a system of beliefs religion,” FRIBERG

This Greek word, in all of its varied forms, is found only two times in Scripture. Once in Acts 17:22 (“too superstitious”), and once in our text (Acts 25:19 – “superstitious”).The English words “religion” and “religious” are used six times in the KJV, NKJV and NASB (Acts 13:43; 26:5; Gal 1:13-14; James 1:26,27). The NIV contains those words ten times (Amos 5:21; 8:10; Acts 17:22; 25:29; 26:5; Col 2:16; 1 Tim 5:4; Hen 10:11; James 1:26,27). The NRSV standard version uses them seven times (Acts 17:22; 25:19; 26:5; 1 Tim 3:16; 5:4; James 1:26-27). As used in the KJV, NKJV, and NASB, the words “religion” and “religious” refer to outward actions – some legitimate, and some pretentious. There is a form of “religion” that allows one to conduct himself improperly, and James says such a religion is “vain,” or pointless (James 1:26).

The Herodian Family

In our text, it appears to me that “superstitious” is the proper word. While it may include the idea of activities of the body, it seems to me to be emphasizing what they had embraced in their minds. There is also a hint of denigration in it. We understand that Agrippa was a Jew by profession, but it was only for political advantage. McClintok and Strong's Cyclopedia says of Herod Agrippa, a member of the Herodian family, “In the fulness of time a descendant of Esau established a false counterpart of the promised glories of the Messiah . . . The general policy of the whole Herodian family, though modified by the personal characteristics of the successive rulers, was the same. It centered in the endeavor to found a great and independent kingdom, in which the power of Judaism should subserve the consolidation of a state.”

Herodian predecessors of Agrippa revealed their sectarian priorities. His grandfather slaughtered the innocents around Bethlehem in an attempt to kill the infant Jesus. His father killed James, the brother of John, and would have done the same to Peter had not the Lord delivered him. The government of that family was much like spiritual Babylon. It was an attempt to adopt a revealed religion for the promotion of earthly interests.

At any rate, Herod did not speak as a faithful Jew when he referred to the Jews charges against Paul being “of their own superstition.” Although he had adopted their religion to “subserve the consolidation of a state,” he now made clear that he was not at all attracted to their theological tenets, or the fact that they had received their Law from God Almighty.

Two Perspectives

In Herod and Paul we see two different perspectives – two different ways to look at life in this world, theology, and religion. In using these expressions I mean the following.

- LIFE IN THIS WORLD. Life in the body, and the activities that are associated with this world. This is the framework within which basic things, objectives, and benefits are defined and evaluated.
- THEOLOGY. Theology has to do with the knowledge of (ology) God (theo). It defines the perspective of an individual, or how he looks at things. It is the framework within which the concept of religion is developed.
- RELIGION. Religion has to do with outward living, or expression. It relates to how people structure their lives, what they do, when they do it, and why they do it. It relates specifically to one’s perception of God and His requirements.

The particular kind of living that is being accented in our time posits that the here and now is the most important thing. The realization of plans for living in this world are considered primary. It is a disastrous way of living, as is confirmed by the rapid proliferation of greed, pleasure, and immorality.

Paul lived knowing that the world was created and sustained by the Lord – specifically the Lord Jesus Christ. He knew that it was a place in which preparations were to be made for eternity. He was also keenly aware of the contaminating influences of the world and of its spiritual gravitation pull downward – away from God and His great salvation. Rather than the world using him, he use the world (1 Cor 7:31), but he held it loosely, knowing that his tenure here was comparatively brief. Christ had given him a work to do, and that, together with the maintenance and maturity of the newness of life, was his priority. He made no attempt to merge worldly concepts with his theology, or worldly manners with his religion.

Festus and his predecessors, on the other hand, thought quite differently. To them, theology meant very little at all. Religion, or the outward expression of theology, was perceived as helpful to the government. He saw it as a means of uniting the people under the Roman rule. Thus he, together with his predecessors, provided many outward advantages for the Jews, including the construction of the magnificent Temple. He sought to please the Jews, not because he had any respect for their Law or the manner in which they went about serving God. He only sought to make good Roman citizens out of them, leaving a good impression in his superiors.

The Herodian view is reflected with remarkable precision in Babylon the Great, that great fornicating fabrication that seeks to emulate the true church. We have lived to see concessions to the flesh that were unimaginable a few decades in the past. Now, the majority – the vast majority – of the activity of the average church has to do with life in the world. Activities range from diet and exercising, to politics and outings for the seniors. A sizeable budget is allocated for the entertainment of the youth. Gymnasiums are now used more extensively than auditoriums, and bandstands have replace pulpits.

The theology, which drives all of this religious activity, now presents a tolerating God who is able to handle sin among His people, loving everyone, and not being insistent that they cleanse themselves of all filthiness of the flesh, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord. Sophistry is at such a high level that the new birth, regeneration, and transformation are, for all practical purposes, denied. There is not a clear distinction between the righteous and the unrighteous, unless it be that Christians are “forgiven” – even though there is little, if any, evidence that this is true.

By the middle of the first century, this erroneous way of thinking was already being developed. It is seen in Agrippa the pretender – but there were others.

- CORINTH. It is seen in Corinth, and the presence of immorality (1 Cor 6:1-5), self-centeredness (1 Cor 6:5-8; 11:21), despising the table of the Lord (1 Cor 20:21; 11:20-30), inconsideration of weaker believers (1 Cor 8:1-13), doubting that Paul was an apostle (1 Cor 9:1-5), the toleration and even acceptance of those teaching “another Jesus,” “another gospel,” and “another Spirit” (2 Cor 11:4), and even declaring there was no resurrection of the dead (1 Cor 15:12-13).

- GALATIA. The churches in Galatia had removed themselves from Him, who had called them into the grace of Christ (Gal 1:6), had been bewitched by false teachers (Gal 3:1), had embraced “another gospel” (Gal 1:6-7), and had lost their spiritual bearings. They were reverting to a system of Law for justification, after they had been delivered from the Law (Gal 1:4; 2:16).

- COLOSSAE. The church at Colossae was being subjected to philosophy and vaion deceit (Col 2:8), was being lured into obeying ordinances that were developed for those who had not died with Christ (Col 2:20-23).

Furthermore, if you do not behold the glory of the Lord in the face of Jesus Christ, you will not be changed from one increasing stage of glory to another, for that gaze is the appointed means of the God-ordained change

And what did all of these departures have in common? They all focused on the world and life in it. Because of that, Jesus Christ Himself was minimized, being glorified was thrust into the background, and standing before the judgment seat of Christ was no longer a primary consideration.

“This present evil world” (Gal 1:4) casts a long and obscuring shadow. If you insist on walking in that shadow, you will not be able to look intently to Jesus, running the race with patience that has been set before you (Heb 12:1-2). Furthermore, if you do not behold the glory of the Lord in the face of Jesus Christ, you will not be changed from one increasing stage of glory to another, for that gaze is the appointed means of the God-ordained change (2 Cor 3:18).

A whole host of people are not growing spiritually because they are not beholding the glory of the Lord in the face of Jesus Christ. Their worldly interests have shifted their vision, and now they see too much of the world and too little of Jesus. They are unwittingly caught in the same trap in which Felix and Festus found themselves. The Christian life is interesting, but not the fundamental concern. They have some casual interest in the Bible, but not enough to “live by every word of God” (Lk 4:4).

Such people are more like Felix, Festus, and Agrippa than they are like Paul. And, unless they change their focus, they will soon be making evaluations like those men did. Instead of fellowshiping with the saints, they will be obliged to make an effort to judge them, not knowing what they are doing.

PAUL AFFIRMED TO BE ALIVE

“ . . . and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.” Other versions read, “asserted to be alive,” NASB “claimed was alive,” NIV and “Whom Paul kept asserting [over and over] to be alive.” AMPLIFIED

Notice Festus’ perception of the emphasis of Paul: “a certain Jesus, who had died, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.” NKJV This is a key point of Apostolic doctrine – not merely what Jesus can do for you, but who He is: a risen and exalted Savior. Ponder what has been written about the risen Lord.

THE PROPHETS

- “I will declare the decree: the LORD hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee” (Psa 2:7). “So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to day have I begotten thee” (Heb 5:5).
- “Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth: my flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption” (Psa 16:9-10). “Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. For David speaketh concerning him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved: Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope: Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption” (Acts 2:24-27).

THE TESTIMONY OF JESUS

- “For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth” (Matt 12:40).

How marvelous it is to ponder the extensive application of Christ’s resurrection to the life of faith. His resurrection life is what saves us, and confirms everything said about Him.

“From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day” (Matt 16:21).

- “And they shall kill him, and the third day he shall be raised again. And they were exceeding sorry” (Matt 17:23),
- “And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again” (Matt 20:19).
- “But after I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee” (Matt 26:32).

THE APOSTLES

- “Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that he should be holden of it” (Acts 2:24)
- “And killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses” (Acts 3:15).
- “Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole” (Acts 4:10).
- “The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree” (Acts 5:30).
- “Him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly” (Acts 10:40).
- “And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulcher. But God raised him from the dead” (Acts 13:29-30).
- “Opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom I preach unto you, is Christ” (Acts 17:3).

- “Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead” (Acts 17:31).

- “That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles” (Acts 26:23).

PIVOTAL TO APOSTOLIC DOCTRINE

How marvelous it is to ponder the extensive application of Christ’s resurrection to the life of faith. His resurrection life is what saves us, and confirms everything said about Him.

- Declared to be the Son of God with Power. “And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead” (Rom 1:4).

- The imputation of righteousness. “But for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification” (Rom 4:25).

- Saved by His resurrection life. “For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life” (Rom 5:10).

- Makes baptism effective. “Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life” (Rom 6:4). “The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 3:21).

- The sanctified life. “But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you” (Rom 8:11). “Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body” (2 Cor 4:10).

- Christ’s intercession. “Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us” (Rom 8:34).

- Believing unto salvation. “That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved” (Rom 10:9).

- Our own resurrection from the dead. “And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by His own power” (1 Cor 6:14).

- The power that is toward us. “And what is the exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, Which He wrought in Christ, when he raised Him from the dead, and set him at His own right hand in the heavenly places” (Eph 1:20).

- Being the Head of the body. “And He is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things He might have the preeminence” (Col 1:18).

- Deliverance from the wrath to come. “And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come” (1 Thess 1:10).

- to be remembered. “Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David was raised from the dead according to my gospel” (2 Tim 2:8).

• Being he Great Shepherd of the sheep. “Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant” (Heb 13:20).

• Being begotten by God. “Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead” (1 Pet 1:3).

• Believing in God. “Who by Him do believe in God, that raised Him up from the dead, and gave Him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God” (1 Pet 1:21).

• Being the Prince of the kings of the earth. “ And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood” (Rev 1:5).

• Having the keys of Hades and the grave. “I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death” (Rev 1:18).

These days enough is not being said about the resurrected Christ. It is not being given its proper place, because it cannot be exploited for fleshy advantage. Paul said if Christ is not risen from the dead preaching is vain, faith is vain, the apostles are liars, we are yet in our sins, and the dead are perished (1 Cor 15:14-18). The fact that Festus summarized what Paul said by referring to Christ’s death and resurrection says a lot! It stands in stark contrast with “another Jesus” (2 Cor 11:4).

FESTUS DOUBTED THE MANNER OF QUESTIONS

“ 20 And because I doubted of such manner of questions, I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters. 21 But when Paul had appealed to be reserved unto the hearing of Augustus, I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Caesar.”

Festus is giving a rather lengthy and precise account of his exposure to Paul. Politically, this makes no sense, for Paul has really introduced no social or political disruption. However, Paul was a servant of the Lord, who is working salvation in the midst of the earth. The “eternal purpose” being brought to fruition by the Lord trumps all other purposes and dwarfs all other priorities. The Lord is using these men, who are really nothing more than vessels in His house, even though, at the time, they were vessels “to dishonor” (2 Tim 2:20). That is, these were men who were not immediately and intimately involved in the work of the Lord, but were like unwitting slaves that were carrying out His will. We are reading of some of the details involved in God working all things together for the good of His servant, Paul.

Incidentally, for those who stand in criticism of Paul, it is most advantageous to behold how God works in his behalf. For the most part, that contradicts many speak of Paul disparagingly. It is also a stirring rebuke to those who conveniently and consistently ignore what he taught.

I DOUBTED THE MANNER

One of the invariable traits of the wicked is their tendency to present themselves in the view most favored by men. This is what Festus was doing. However, behind the scenes God was orchestrating this whole matter. He was working in such a way as to make these two dignitaries “willing in the day of His power.”

“And because I doubted of such manner of questions . . .” Other versions read, “I was uncertain of such questions,” NKJV “being at a loss how to investigate such matters,” NASB “being perplexed how to inquire concerning these things,” ASV “as I had not enough knowledge for the discussion of these things,” BBE “Their debate about these things left me puzzled,” GWN “Not feeling qualified to deal with questions of this sort,” NJB and “And I, being puzzled to know how to make inquiries into such questions.” AMPLIFIED

At this point, Festus departs from his hitherto honest and forthright report. He tells Agrippa that he was not sure how to handle the case, and therefore asked Paul if he would consent to be tried by himself in Jerusalem. This was not the whole truth . Luke reports it this way – and his account is inspired: “But Festus, willing to do the Jews a pleasure , answered Paul, and said, Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?” (Acts 25:9). Actually, therefore, he was conceding to the pressure of the Jews, not attempting to find a place for the trial that was more conducive to understanding the case.

When speaking to Agrippa, Festus says something that is politically expedient. He is attempting to justify his decision to send Paul to Rome. Rather than acknowledging that, speaking as a man, he really had no other alternative, he chose to represent the case as too difficult for himself, painting the picture as though Paul would have a better chance to receive a just judgment in Caesar’ court.

One of the invariable traits of the wicked is their tendency to present themselves in the view most favored by men. This is what Festus was doing. However, behind the scenes God was orchestrating this whole matter. He was working in such a way as to make these two dignitaries “willing in the day of His power” (Psa 110:3). He turned their hearts (Prov 21:1) to act as though they were actually seeking Paul’s best interests.

Festus conveniently omits conferring with his council, and the fact that he said Paul was going to go to Caesar. There was no hint of delay in the words he said to Paul, even though I suppose it might be surmised that it would require time to carry out the decree. The point is that in his report, Festus gave himself every advantage, not highlighting the injustice of the whole charade.

I ASKED WHETHER HE WOULD GO TO JERUSALEM

“ . . . I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters . . . ”

Festus returns to a more factual presentation of the case. Of this incident Luke wrote, “But Festus, willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said, Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?” (Acts 25:9). It is assumed that Agrippa understood that the trial would be before Festus, although here he did not say so. Luke reported the incident with characteristic accuracy.

PAUL APPEALED

“ . . . But when Paul had appealed to be reserved unto the hearing of Augustus . . . ” Other versions read, “reserved for the decision of Augustus,” NKJV “to be held in custody for the Emperor's decision,” NASB “made a request that he might be judged by Caesar,” BBE “to be held for trial by the Emperor,” CSB “to be kept for the cognisance of Augustus,” DARBY and “to be reserved to the examination of Augustus.” GENEVA

Luke’s account of Paul’s response reads, “ I stand at Caesar's judgment seat, where I ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest. For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Caesar” (Acts 25:10-11).

That is certainly a more extensive report than the one Festus gave to Agrippa. Paul did not say he consented to be “reserved,” or “held in custody,” until he could have a hearing before Caesar – although I suppose that could be assumed. The thrust of his word suggested that there be no delay in the matter. Paul presented the case as a matter of propriety and legality. This, however, is not how Festus presented the matter to Agrippa.

I COMMANDED HIM TO BE KEPT

“ . . . I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Caesar.” Other versions read, “kept in custody until I send him to Caesar,” NASB and “ordered him to be held until I could send him to the emperor.” NRSV

Luke’s account reads, “Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Caesar? unto Caesar shalt thou go” (Acts 25:12). Festus conveniently omits conferring with his council, and the fact that he said Paul was going to go to Caesar. There was no hint of delay in the words he said to Paul, even though I suppose it might be surmised that it would require time to carry out the decree. The point is that in his report, Festus gave himself every advantage, not highlighting the injustice of the whole charade.

Thus we once again see the propensities of the flesh to justify itself and, for that reason, slant the truth, if possible, to give self the ultimate advantage. Such approaches are not to be found among the people of God. They are always to defer to the truth, in both thought and expression. Preaching and testimony are both to be correct and precise. There really is no reason for either of them if this is not the case. Preaching that does not center in Christ is only “talk.”

AGRIPPA WANTS TO HEAR PAUL FOR HIMSELF

“ 22 Then Agrippa said unto Festus, I would also hear the man myself. To morrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.”

Do not miss the obvious willingness that is evidenced in both Agrippa and Festus. It is almost as though they were being moved by some unapparent power. And, of course, that is precisely what was happening. It may appear on the surface as though this was all the exercise of free moral agents. However, that explanation is far too simplistic for those who have understanding. This is God at work, not the merely the human intellect. It is He who is moving things in a certain direction – a direction that clearly reflects His priorities and purpose.

AGRIPPA WANTS TO HEAR PAUL

“Then Agrippa said unto Festus, I would also hear the man myself . . .” Other versions read, “I would like to hear this man myself.” NIV

What moved Agrippa to want to hear Paul for himself. There really was nothing about the case that demanded his attention, and the decision had already been made that he would go to Caesar. He had not come to Caesarea to hear about this case, but to officially visit Festus in his new capacity as Felix’s replacement. His only knowledge of Paul came through a casual and unofficial conversation with Festus.

Yet, through the providence of God he will now be exposed to the Gospel, as well as to the calling of its premier proclaimer. A door will be opened to him, and he will be given an opportunity to enter into it.

None of this would have taken place if Paul had not been alert and pressed the issue. After Jesus told him he would testify in Rome, Paul did not forget what was told him. It shaped how he thought and what he said.

It appears to me that a great deal of spiritual deficiency experienced by professed believers is owing to them forgetting what the Gospel has announced. Also, there is a professed gospel that is being preached by many that does not accent Jesus Himself. He is set within the context of everyday human problems, and treated as though He existed primarily to assist us to live in this world. Actually,

He is bringing the sons to glory (Heb 2:10), and bringing them to God as well (1 Pet 3:18). If this is not being declared with power, there really is little reason to mention Jesus at all. For if we are not brought to God now, and eventually brought to glory, life has really been lived in vain – no matter how blessed it may appear to have been.

TOMORROW, HE WOULD HEAR PAUL

“ . . . To morrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.” Felix kept Paul bound for two whole years. Festus will release him in a day. That circumstance is reminiscent of Joseph’s sudden release from prison (Gen 41:14). What was the difference between Felix and Festus? Actually, very little. Both of them were quite content with pleasing the Jews (Acts 24:27; 25:9). The real difference was the time – a time when the Divine agenda would take the precedence. We do not know anything about what occurred during the two years Paul was held bound. But we will come to know very much about what takes place after he is released. Paul’s time had come, and he would take full advantage of it. Agrippa will probably remember what Paul says to him for a long time.

THE DANGER OF LITTLE FOXES

The Shulamite woman said, “Catch us the foxes, The little foxes that spoil the vines, For our vines have tender grapes” NKJV (Song of Sol 2:15).

There are many cares and concerns that are, comparatively speaking, like “little foxes” nibbling at the vine of spiritual life, and gradually weakening it. They look like they are major concerns, but they have nothing to do with laying up treasures in heaven, preparing for the coming of the Lord, and being a good and faithful servant of God. For example, Paul could have spent two years in prison thinking about the conditions there, which were no doubt not the best. Who knows what fiery darts were hurled at him by the wicked one, in an attempt to get his mind off of what Jesus said and on to the things men had said. It is apparent from this text that Paul quenched those fiery darts with the shield of faith, else he would not have been prepared to speak as he did.

This is an area of life where men cannot legislate. But they can exhort the people of God to put their affection where it belongs – on things above, and NOT on things on the earth. An inordinate amount of time must not be consumed on people and things that do not yield glory to God. The individual himself must determine what is inordinate, and none other can do it for him. However, if your thoughts and words are wrapped around something other than working out your own salvation with fear and trembling, take care to note the signs of danger.

If your joy is fleeting, discouragement is turning into a kind of monster, and there are more questions than answers, the “little foxes” are at work. Catch them, lest they leave you with no fruit at all! Oh, that believers would take more care for consuming locusts and foxes! Be a follower of Paul, as he also was of Christ (1 Cor 11:1).

AGRIPPA AND BERNICE ARRIVE WITH GREAT POMP

“ 23 And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Festus' commandment Paul was brought forth.”

The purpose of this gathering is for Agrippa to hear Paul. Already Felix had come with his wife Drusilla to hear “him concerning the faith in Christ,” and Paul had reasoned with him “of righteousness, of temperance, and of judgment to come” (Acts 24:24-25). There is no record of Paul preaching or reasoning with Festus to this point. So far as the record is concerned, Paul only said he had done nothing “against the Jews, neither against the Temple, nor yet against Caesar.” When Festus asked if he was willing to go to Jerusalem, Paul declined, saying he was in Caesar’s judgment seat where he ought to be. He then appealed to Caesar (Acts 25:8-11). What Festus knew about Paul was apparently learned from Felix. Now, however, Festus would hear an extended defense, and considerable detail about Paul's calling and work.

A LOT OF POMP

“And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city . . .” Other versions read, “in great glory had come into the public place of hearing,” BBE “with much pageantry,” CJB “with a lot of fanfare,” GWN “with great ceremony,” NAB “in great state,” NJB “with much display,” YLT “dressed and acted like very important people,” IE “made a great show,” CEV and “made a flourishing grand entrance.” MESSAGE

Most of the versions use the word “pomp.” This comes from a word that has the following lexical meaning, “show, showy appearance, display, pomp,” THAYER “an appearance made for effect, for showing off cheap display, pomp, pageantry,” FRIBERG “a pompous ceremony, implying a cheap display of high status - 'pomp and ceremony, pompous display.” LOUW-NIDA In his Word Pictures, Robertson

Now, with all of these dignitaries present, a prisoner is brought in. He will not be interrogated, but will speak in defense of himself, giving an account of why he was there. But Paul is not seeking for attention to be drawn to himself, so he will speak quite differently than those before whom he now stands. He no doubt looked composed, unafraid, and not intimidated by this impressive gathering of officials.

says of this occasion , “Festus decided to gratify the wish of Agrippa by making the ‘hearing’ of Paul the prisoner (verse 22) an occasion for paying a compliment to Agrippa (Rackham) by a public gathering of the notables in Caesarea. Festus just assumed that Paul would fall in with this plan for a grand entertainment though he did not have to do it.”

This is the manner of the flesh, to draw attention to itself, glorying in appearance. Although it is a worldly tendency, it was found in the religious arena, among scribes and Pharisees. Jesus said of them, “But all their works they do for to be seen of men: they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments, and love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi” (Matt 23:5-7). Paul wrote that this carnal tendency had also penetrated the church. He wrote of those who “glory in appearance, and not in heart” (2 Cor 5:12). Elsewhere he spoke of those who “desire to make a fair show in the flesh” (Gal 6:12). Paul said of that kind of people, “For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise” (2 Cor 10:12).

What a gallery of dignitaries was present: “chief captains and principle men of the city.” Other versions read, “commanders and prominent men of the city,” NKJV “high ranking officers and the leading men of the city,” NIV and “the military commandants and the prominent citizens of the city.” AMPLIFIED Thus both military and political officials of the city of Caesarea were gathered together in the hall. Felix had gathered them to appeal to the pride of Agrippa, but God had gathered them to hear Paul!

PAUL WAS BROUGHT FORTH

“ . . . at Festus' commandment Paul was brought forth.”

Now, with all of these dignitaries present, a prisoner is brought in. He will not be interrogated, but will speak in defense of himself, giving an account of why he was there. But Paul is not seeking for attention to be drawn to himself, so he will speak quite differently than those before whom he now stands. He no doubt looked composed, unafraid, and not intimidated by this impressive gathering of officials. Several years earlier Jesus had told Ananias Paul would speak before “kings.” Now he is doing it.

One can only imagine how Paul must have appeared to this august and pompous assembly. He himself said he was “base” among the cultured Corinthians (2 Cor 10:1). The Corinthians said “his bodily appearance is weak” (2 Cor 10:10). As time pushes forward, however, those with discernment will sense he is in charge of this situation.

FESTUS DRAWS ATTENTION TO PAUL

“ 24 And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying that he ought not to live any longer. 25 But when I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, and that he himself hath appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him. 26a Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord.”

Having called Paul before them all, Festus now introduces him, stating the case before him, and confessing he does not have anything to write to Caesar introducing the case he is sending to him. It all must have sounded a bit strange to officials gathered there. But they will doubtless be stricken with the fact that no valid charge can be brought against this man. He had maintained a spotless character, and no one could successfully contradict it.

In other words, Paul had lived out what he preached. In his letter to the Philippians he wrote, “be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life . . .” (Phil 2:15-16). He wrote to the Thessalonians, “And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ” (1 Thess 5:23).

These were not mere words. They were spoken with a keen awareness that salvation provides those who possess it the things required to live in a blameless manner. He who has glaring faults is not apt to be heard if he dares to speak for Jesus. It will do no good to say that we all sin, or that no one is perfect. Solemnly believers are told, “Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God” (2 Cor 7:1).

Paul had lived in that manner, and now when his opponents searched for some cause to rid themselves of him, they could find none. Political figures who were expert in finding flaws could find none in Paul, and they admitted it. Pilate said of Jesus, “I find no fault in this man” (Lk 23:4). Festus said essentially the same thing when he said he had found Paul had not committed anything worthy of death – which his accusers were demanding.

Paul urged this he taught us to live in this manner. To Titus he wrote, “In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works: in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you” (Titus 2:8).

And why did he say such things? Because when sin erupts outwardly, it gives the enemies of Christ cause to blaspheme His worthy name and word (James 2:7). It is possible for the word of God to be blasphemed because of the sloppy lives of professing Christians (Tit 2:5). The same is true of the name of God, which is blasphemed because of certain people (Rom 2:5).

Our generation needs to hear about these things, because a Gospel is being preached that makes men comfortable in sin. Men are being led to believe that sin is not as serious as the Lord has said. The result is that the name of the Lord and His word are being blasphemed.

Our generation needs to hear about these things, because a Gospel is being preached that makes men comfortable in sin. Men are being led to believe that sin is not as serious as the Lord has said. The result is that the name of the Lord and His word are being blasphemed. However, when Paul is examined by the Jews, the Roman captain, Felix, Festus, and now Agrippa, they will not be able to point out any moral flaw.

Today certain recovery programs teach people to dismiss their failures by saying they are not God. Well, Paul was not God either, yet no man was able to support a legitimate charge against him. His life is a giant negation of the false gospels of our time.

YE SEE THIS MAN

“And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us, ye see this man , about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying that he ought not to live any longer . . .”

Notice that Festus calls for the attention of all “who are present, focusing their attention upon Paul himself. Furthermore, Paul has been brought here to speak in his defense. Can you imagine him objecting to the public nature of the whole gathering, saying he was fatigued with a two-year imprisonment, and was not prepared to speak to such an impressive assembly. I personally know of an staggering number of professed preachers and teachers who simply could not take advantage of such an opportunity. However, you may rest assured that Paul will be up for the occasion. The reason – he had been living by faith and walking in the Spirit. He had been basking in the fellowship of the Son, and had been thinking of proper things, having set his affection on things above, and not on things on the earth.

Some people see exhortations to come higher, think more consistently, and live with more focus, as commandments that are too difficult to keep. They cringe when they hear the following.

- Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling (Phil 2:12).
- Be followers of God as dear children (Eph 5:1).
- Seek the things that are above (Col 3:1-2).
- Let us cleanse ourselves of all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord (2 Cor 7:1).
- Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might (Eph 6:10).
- Resist the devil (James 4:7).
- Be not weary in well doing (2 Thess 3:13).

However, those with faith extend themselves to do what the King requires, and as they do, Christ gives them a discernible measure of success. It is in this manner of living that a person is prepared to “give an answer to every man who asketh a reason for the hope that is within him” (1 Pet). This is why Paul was able to speak so boldly and extensively during this occasion. Being an apostle does not exclude the necessity of the above admonitions, and Paul knew it.

Attempting to live for the Lord erratically will not yield a satisfying or effective life.

I FOUND THAT HE HAD COMMITTED NOTHING WORTHY OF DEATH

“ . . . But when I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death . . .”

Everything would have been greatly simplified for Festus if a fundamental moral flaw could have been found in Paul. According to Roman law, he could have moved forward with a punitive judgment without any delay. But he could not find such a flaw, or anyone who could testify and prove that they had seen one. Is it possible that the enemies of God could actually be confounded in their quest to find outward moral blemishes in the people of God?

The Case of Daniel

Once, when the enemies of Daniel sought some cause worthy of exploitation and punishment in Daniel. It is said of that effort, “they could find none occasion nor fault; forasmuch as he was faithful, neither was there any error or fault found in him” (Dan 6:4). The only way they felt they could trap him was to find some kind of conflict with the Babylonish manner of life that was caused by Daniel’s devotion to his God (Dan 6:5). Even then, they had to have a special law passed that required Daniel to do something that was against the Law of his God. From the very beginning, they knew Daniel would not obey that Law.

The revealed history of Daniel forever dispels any arguments against the possibility of moral purity. Oh, if you were to have asked Daniel what he thought of himself, he would not have declared that he had no fault or flaw – but it certainly was not apparent to others, even though he, like Paul, was keenly aware of a condition from which he had to be delivered (Rom 7:24-25).

So far as our appearance before men is concerned, we are told, “Do all things without murmurings and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world” (Phil 2:14-15). You must make it your business to so live that your peers can have “no evil thing to say of you” (Tit 2:8). The aspiration of every person living by faith is to conduct their lives in such a manner that any criticism leveled against them must be a false accusation (Matt 5:11; 1 Pet 3:16). My point here is simply that Paul’s boldness in the faith was partly owing to the purity and consistency of his life before God. Salvation provides resources for living in such a manner, and they are to be faithfully declared to the people of God. The church must once and for all be purged of any and all teachers who provide convenient explanations for sin, and teach men to manage sin, rather than to live in the power of the Spirit.

HE HATH APPEALED TO AUGUSTUS

“ . . . and that he himself hath appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him . . . ”

Festus did not have the faintest idea concerning the reason for Paul appealing to Caesar. It was not primarily for justice, but in order to the fulfillment of Christ’s promise to him that he would bear testimony to Him in Rome – and Caesar was in Rome.

However, Paul’s request was made with his knowledge of how Roman law worked, and what alternatives were open to him. He saw an open door concerning how to get to Rome, and quickly took advantage of it. He also knew that Festus knew the law as well, and could not turn down his request without violating that law.

Without spending an inordinate amount of time on this matter, there are professing Christians who are living at a distance from God. Because of that circumstance they are unable to see advantages that are set before them, and thus they continue to stumble on in the dark.

I HAVE NO CERTAIN THING TO WRITE

“ . . . Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord.” Other versions read, “I have nothing definite about him to write to my lord,” NASB “I have nothing definite to write to His Majesty about him,” NIV and “I have nothing in particular and definite to write to my lord concerning him.”

AMPLIFIED

It must have been a frightening thought to Festus to send a prisoner to Caesar for examination, and yet provide no written reason for doing so. After all, even when Lysias the captain sent Paul to Felix, he also sent a letter detailing the reason for sending him there (Acts 23:25-30). Lysias said he could find “nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or bonds” (Acts 23:29). Festus’ predecessor, Felix, could find no fault in Paul – in fact he even “trembled” when Paul had reasoned with him concerning “righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come” (Acts 24:25).

Do not fail to see the utter helplessness of Paul’s enemies and those to whom they appealed. If there was so much as a speck in Paul’s eye, they would have found it. However they were totally powerless and thus incapable of raising any just accusation against him. They were, as it was, grasping for straws, and any charge, no matter how small on the Roman scale of infractions, would suffice.

Now, after hearing from Felix the details of Paul’s case, Festus, with all of his governmental expertise, could find no fault with Paul. But he knew that it would not be a wise thing to send Paul to Caesar with no accompanying explanation, concerning a case that had stretched over a period of more than two years. Perhaps with Agrippa, military dignitaries, and the chief men of the city, something could be discovered about Paul that could be written down and sent to Caesar. Surely, with this impressive cortege of dignitaries some helpful information could be garnered that would make the transport of Paul to Rome more comfortable for Festus.

Do not fail to see the utter helplessness of Paul’s enemies and those to whom they appealed. If there was so much as a speck in Paul’s eye, they would have found it. However they were totally powerless and thus incapable of raising any just accusation against him. They were, as it was, grasping for straws, and any charge, no matter how small on the Roman scale of infractions, would suffice. But, like the Babylonian wise men who opposed Daniel, they could not find a thing.

Of course, Paul was not the first person who could challenge his opponents to find something blameable in him.

When the people chided Moses as though he had committed an infraction against the people, he became angry and said to the Lord, “Respect not thou their offering: I have not taken one ass from them, neither have I hurt one of them” (Num 16:15).

Samuel did the same when he said to a discontent Israel, “Behold, here I am: witness against me before the LORD, and before his anointed: whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it you” (1 Sam 12:3). With shamefacedness the people answered, “Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken ought of any man's hand” (1 Sam 12:4).

Paul said to the elders of Ephesus, “I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel” (Acts 20:33). He wrote to the Corinthians, “Receive us; we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man” (2 Cor 7:2).

If Paul had committed some evil against the Jews, exploited them in any way, or brought disadvantage to them, that would have substantiated their charge that he had taught “all men everywhere against the people” [the Jews] (Acts 21:28), and was “a mover of sedition among all Jews” (Acts 24:5). In such a case, in the interest of maintaining order in the empire, the arrest and punishment of Paul could be justified. But, alas, no charge could be substantiated.

THE AIM OF THE PRESENTATION

“ 26b Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and specially before thee, O king Agrippa, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write. 27 For it seemeth to me unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.”

It is as though Festus had laid the whole matter of Paul in the lap of Agrippa, doing so amidst much pomp and splendor, appealing to his pride. Actually, he was thinking of himself, imagining that he could gain some advantage by this whole process.

I HAVE BROUGHT HIM FORTH

“Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and specially before thee, O king Agrippa . . .” Another version reads, “I have brought him before you all and especially before you, King Agrippa,” NASB

Festus addresses the entire assembly: “the chief captains, and principal men of the city.” Then, in the presence of them all, he said, “King Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us , ye see this man” (Acts 25:23-24).

Now Festus again appeals to the entire crowd of officials, drawing their particular attention to Paul the prisoner. His motive was to marshal all of their legal expertise for the purpose of establishing a valid charge against Paul. However, behind the scenes, God was preparing them to hear what Paul would say. What a focused congregation he would have at that time ! They would carefully weigh every word that he said, looking for a flaw, yet being exposed to a word that would discover the thoughts and intents of their hearts (Heb 4:12).

THAT I MAY HAVE SOMEWHAT TO WRITE

“ . . . that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write . . .”

Here Festus states his motive, neutralizing its abrasiveness by appealing to the pride of the officials. He wants to prepare a letter to accompany Paul when he is sent to the head of the Roman empire.

IT SEEMED TO ME TO BE UNREASONABLE

“ . . . For it seemeth to me unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.” Other versions read, “For it seems absurd to me in sending a prisoner, not to indicate also the charges against him,” NASB “For it seems to me senseless and absurd to send a prisoner and not state the accusations against him.” AMPLIFIED

Festus means by this that, at that time, he could not establish the truth of any charges that had been made. He refused to simply repeat what the Jews had said. There had already been four Roman officials who had heard them – Lysias, Felix, Festus, and Agrippa. All of them knew the charges could not be substantiated, so it would have been foolish and even dangerous to send them along to Caesar.

I have noticed over the years that within the Christian community there often is no reluctance to pass along unprovable charges. Many a child of God has suffered at the hands of his peers because of unsubstantiated charges. In fact, the mere repetition of a false charge has often resulted in the denigration, and often expulsion, of good and honest men of God. It is one thing to see this take place among the unregenerate. But among the saints?

CONCLUSION

Thus the stage is set for Paul's most lengthy defense – and it is before a crowd of politically elite people. Luke devotes twenty-one verses to Paul's defense before his Jewish accusers (Acts 22:1-21). He devotes eleven verses to his defense before Felix (Acts 24:10-21). Now Paul will commence a defense that is represented by twenty-nine verses (Acts 26:1-29). He will reveal things that were not made known in the record of his former defenses. Further, none of the defenses were exactly the same. They were a living testimony, forged in the crucible of the furnace of affliction. This is a marvelous confirmation that those who wait upon the Lord increasing in strength, mounting up with wings like eagles, running and not being weary, and walking, yet not fainting (Isa 40:31). Take heart when you read it, for the same resources available to Paul are for you also.

Lesson #99

PAUL'S DEFENSE BEFORE AGRIPPA, #1

“ 26:1 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul stretched forth the hand, and answered for himself: 2 I think myself happy, king Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews: 3 Especially because I know thee to be expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews: wherefore I beseech thee to hear me patiently. 4 My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews; 5 Which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify, that after the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee. 6 And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: 7 Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. 8 Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead? 9 I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. 10 Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them. 11 And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities. 12 Whereupon as I went to Damascus with authority and commission from the chief priests.” (Acts 26:1-12)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

Given the opportunity to speak for himself, Paul does not hesitate to do so. He provides an overview of his life, accenting the time when Jesus Christ apprehended him en route to Damascus. It should not surprise us that some professing Christian teachers have criticized this defense, charging Paul with embellishing the account, and misrepresenting what took place when the exalted Christ confronted him when he was on his way to persecute believers. This lesson will confirm the absurdity of that claim. Standing before Agrippa, Paul faithfully presented himself, fellow believers in Christ, and conscientious Jews. He accents the fact of redemptive change, and sets before his audience the fact that he is no longer the man he was. He further places stress upon the centrality of Christ and the hope of the resurrection. This will provide ample proof that he has been misrepresented by his Jewish enemies. The expertise with which he speaks is noteworthy.

GIVING AN ANSWER

Peter admonished believers concerning readiness: “But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear: having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ. For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing” (1 Pet 3:15-17).

First , note that the context of this statement is suffering “for righteousness’ sake” (v 14) – i.e. suffering for doing what is right in the eyes of the Lord. First, the declaration is made: “happy are ye.” Other versions read , “you are blessed,” NKJV “God will reward you for it,” NLT “you are to be envied,” LIVING “you should be happy,” IE and “[you are] blessed (happy, to be envied).” AMPLIFIED And why is it that those who are suffering because of their righteousness are said to be happy, blessed, or to be envied? It is because of what the suffering confirms to the heart of the suffering one.

- The fact that they are not of the world has been recognized (John 15:19).
- The sufferer is realizing the fellowship of Christ's sufferings (Phil 3:10).
- The sufferer is partaking of the sufferings that have been left behind (Col 1:24).
- God is with the sufferer "in trouble" (Psa 91:15).
- To the degree the sufferings abound in us, so it is with the consolation by Christ (2 Cor 1:5).
- The suffering brightens the prospect of reigning with Christ (Rom 8:17).

Second , the suffering ones must not be afraid of their oppressors or their "terror." Nor, indeed, are they to be "troubled" over the circumstances in which they find themselves. They can have "perfect peace" during the circumstance (Isa 26:3), knowing that He that is in them "is greater than he that is in the world" (1 John 4:4).

Third , the believer is required to sanctify the Lord God in their heart, making Him their chief joy and unquestionable Master. They are to be prepared at all times to give an answer of the hope that is within them, hereby accounting for their difference.

Fourth , their answer is to be attended by meekness before men, and fear before God. It is also to flow from a good conscience.

Sixth , the appointed outcome is that the persecutors may be ashamed, not being able to establish a legitimate charge against their holy manner of life. They may accuse falsely, and launch what appears to be an effective persecution. But in the end, if not during the process of time, they will ultimately be ashamed for what they have done.

These things are being lived out by Paul. He has conducted his life within the circumference of an acute awareness of God, and has ordered his life so as to maintain that posture. He did this while he was preaching in foreign countries, among the Gentiles. He did it when he was laboring with the Jews. He did it as a free man, and when he was incarcerated as well. He did it when he was received by the brethren, or persecuted by his enemies. He did not alter his message when men could not receive it. He did not embellish it when men did receive it. He did it when he had all that he needed, and he did it when he was suffering need.

THE EFFECT OF CORRUPT RELIGION

One of the dreadful effects of a corrupt religion is that it leaves the people fundamentally unprepared. Under such influence, the people are not prepared to be persecuted for righteousness' sake. They are not prepared to give an answer for the hope, which may or may not be in them. They are not prepared to serve the Lord. They are not prepared to die. They are not prepared to stand before the judgment seat of Christ, and, they are not prepared for eternity. Additionally, they are not prepared for varied trials. They are not prepared to take advantage of holy opportunities and open doors. They are not prepared for temptation, and, they are not prepared for the complexities of life. If the Lord is calling them, they are not prepared to hear. If the devil is wooing them, they are not prepared to resist. They are not prepared to put on the whole armor of God, and they are not prepared to come boldly to the throne of all grace to obtain mercy and find grace to help in the time of need. They are not prepared to find the door of escape that accompanies every temptation. They are not prepared to throw down imaginations, and take captive every thought to the obedience of Christ. They are not prepared to fight the good of faith and to lay hold on eternal life.

Is there any person of sound mind who imagines that those whose preaching and teaching has left people in such a shape will be overlooked by the Savior of the body? If a message has been preached that did not prepare people to present their bodies a living sacrifice unto God, will that circumstance be ignored? Speaking of this very thing, the Holy Spirit moved Paul to write, “Know ye not that ye [plural] are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy ; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are” (1 Cor 3:17). That is not an overstatement, and no person who defiles the temple of God with unsuitable people will escape the judgment that is foretold. This is a solemn warning to be taken seriously.

PAUL IS PREPARED

Having been living by faith and walking in the Spirit, maintaining fellowship with Christ, and fighting the good fight of faith, Paul is fully prepared for the opportunity now set before him. He is ready to give an answer for his hope.

PERMITTED TO SPEAK FOR HIMSELF

“ 26:1 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul stretched forth the hand, and answered for himself.”

PERMITTED TO SPEAK FOR HIMSELF

“Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself . . .” Other versions read, “You have permission to speak for yourself,” NIV “You may put your cause before us,” BBE “You're free to speak for yourself,” GWN and “You may speak in your defense .” NLT

Under Roman law, Paul could not begin speaking on his own. He had to be granted permission to do so. This was not a privilege he was given when standing before the Jews. However, more is involved here than Paul answering for himself. This is an opportunity to bear witness to the grace of God that was extended to Paul. It is also a chance to testify to the nature of the Lord's Christ, and to the purpose of God Himself. Paul will seize this opportunity, taking the kingdom by force (Matt 11:12).

THEN PAUL ANSWERED FOR HIMSELF

“ . . . Then Paul stretched forth the hand, and answered for himself.”

Immediately Paul answers, speaking for himself. In unparalleled confidence, he stretches forth his hand in a gesture that denoted the sureness he possessed, and the boldness with which he will speak.

As when he spoke to others, he will not come “with excellency of speech or of wisdom” recognized by the world (1 Cor 2:1). His speech will be “seasoned with salt,” and he will know how he “ought to answer every man” (Col 4:6), using “sound speech that cannot be condemned” (Tit 2:8). He will “walk in wisdom toward them that are without” (Col 4:5), and will “walk honestly toward them” (1 Thess 4:12). His answer will be clothed with insight and wisdom.

I SHALL ANSWER FOR MYSELF

“ 2 I think myself happy, king Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews:”

I THINK MYSELF HAPPY

“I think myself happy, king Agrippa . . .” Other versions read, “I consider myself fortunate,” NASB “In my opinion, I am happy,” BBE “I consider myself highly favored,” MRD “I think it is a privilege,” IE “I am glad for this chance,” CEV and “I can't think of anyone, King Agrippa, before whom I'd rather be answering.” MESSAGE

As used here, the word “happy” is translated from the Greek word maka,rion , which means , “of persons characterized by transcendent happiness or religious joy blessed, happy (MT 5.3); without religious connotation fortunate,” FRIBERG “pertaining to being happy, with the implication of enjoying favorable circumstances - ‘happy.’” LOUW-NIDA “blessed, fortunate, happy usually in the sense of privileged recipient of Divine favor.” GINGRICH

This is the same word translated “blessed” in the beatitudes (Matt 5:5-11). Paul employed the word in regard to unparalleled blessings from the Lord (Rom 4:7-8). James did the same (James 1:12,25). Peter also used the word in this way (1 Pet 4:14; 4:14). But it is also used to denote a state of privilege or advantage in this world (Rom 14:22; 1 Cor 7:40).

Here the word can be understood both ways. One is from the viewpoint of Paul – being blessed by God. The other is as it is perceived by Agrippa – fortunate or privileged. I understand that Paul used the word so it could be perceived both ways. So far as Agrippa was concerned, Paul considered it a privilege to speak before him. So far as his own heart was concerned, he knew that this was a door opened by the Lord, and was thus a blessing. The manner in which he lived made him adequate.

BECAUSE I SHALL ANSWER FOR MYSELF

“ . . . because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews.” Other versions read, “make my defense against the accusations of the Jews,” NIV “to give my answer before you today to all these things which the Jews say against me,” BBE and “am defending myself against all the charges made against me by Jews.” CJB

In his defense, Paul will conduct himself in strict keeping with the nature of spiritual life. He will not employ the wisdom of this world, nor will he appeal to it for certification of his innocence. On another occasion, when he was being criticized and questioned by some within the Corinthian church, he said he did not even dare to proceed in such a manner. “For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise” (2 Cor 10:12).

He will not compare himself with others who spend their time boasting and commending themselves. He will not join the league of those who compare themselves with one another, imagining that such a means of measurement is not flawed to the core. This devastates the ideas of heroes and those who model life after the flesh. All of that is worldly wisdom, and Paul will not descend into the plains of Ono (Neh 6:2) to indulge in such vanity. He will make no attempt to outboast those who are noted for commending themselves, who even “call their own lands after their own names” (Psa 49:11).

Neither will Paul speak of things that lie outside the circumference of the ministry to which he had been appointed. As he said elsewhere, “But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us” (2 Cor 10:13). That is, he will not glory in something that lies outside of his own ministry and commission.

A KINGDOM APPROACH

Paul’s approach is that of the Kingdom of God, which is in “righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit” (Rom 14:17). This kind of mind-set is rarely seen in our time. This is because of the fierce competition that exists between sectarian bodies and purported ministries. It is not unusual to find scores of “ministries” appealing to the same people for support. This is highlighted by generally confining their appeals to members and organizations belonging to their sect. This very circumstance forces them into making the kind of comparisons Paul intentionally, zealously, and consistently avoided. Such things cannot possibly be right.

I KNOW YOU ARE AN EXPERT

“ 3 Especially because I know thee to be expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews: wherefore I beseech thee to hear me patiently.”

Paul introduces his defense by appealing to Agrippa’s knowledge of the customs and questions of the Jews.

I KNOW YOU ARE EXPERT

“Especially because I know thee to be expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews . . .” Other versions read, “customs and controversies,” NIV “all questions to do with the Jews and their way,” BBE “controversies and laws of the Jews,” MRD “customs and speculations that prevail among the Jews,” IE “religious customs and the beliefs that divide us,” CEV “Jewish customs and disputes,” GNB and “Jewish ways and all our family quarrels.” MESSAGE

First, note they were a people identified by their manners and controversies – the Jews. They were apparently not caught up in the issues of the day – at least that is not how they were identified. They had their own social identity, and could be easily distinguished from the rest of the people. In fact, the very city of Jerusalem was a testimony to the identity of the Jews. It was not a mere tourist attraction, but a place occupied largely by Jews, and was the place where devout Jews from around the world gathered for special occasions. It was the city where God Himself had placed His name (1 Kgs 11:36). Non-Jews who did not live there were referred to as “strangers.” The prophet Joel even spoke of a time when such people would not pass through Jerusalem any more. “So shall ye know that I am the LORD your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more ” (Joel 3:17). I realize that has a strange sound, yet, its strangeness is only owing to the adoption of strange spiritual concepts.

Politically speaking, Agrippa was over Judaea, in which Jerusalem was located. Unlike some who had been over the Jews, Agrippa made it his business to know of their religion – of all their “customs and questions.” He doubtless did it for political advantage, yet Paul now makes a special note of his expertise in the Jewish way of life, and the kind of controversies they had among themselves. There was obviously a clear distinction between them and the Gentiles, “which know not God” (1 Thess 4:5), else there would have been no point to Paul’s words.

Speaking of the time when the veil will be lifted from Israel, the prophets said, “Thus saith the LORD of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you” (Zech 8:23). Although this was not fulfilled in Agrippa, we see a type of such inquiry in him. He made it his business to learn the ways of the people over whom he had political authority, and now Paul appeals to that knowledge

When truth is available to a person, they are responsible for diligently seeking it out. Jesus said that the Queen of the south would rise up in the day of judgment with the generation of that time, “and shall condemn it: for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here” (Matt 12:42).

When John the Baptist came on the scene, the people came to him (Matt 3:5; Mk 1:5; Lk 3:7; John 3:23).

Those living in the time when Jesus went about “doing good and healing all who were oppressed of the devil” were responsible to find Him, and hear what He had to say. Indeed, that is what people did (Matt 4:25; 8:1; 12:15; 13:2; 15:30; 19:2; Lk 5:15; 14:26).

The Case of the Lions

Here it is in order to mention an incident recorded in Scripture that reveals something of the Divine nature. The event relates to people being in God's land that did not know God's ways. It is recorded in the seventh chapter of Second Kings. Verse twenty-five of that chapter reads, "And so it was at the beginning of their dwelling there, that they feared not the LORD: therefore the LORD sent lions among them, which slew some of them."

In the inordinate quest to get sinners into the congregations, could it be that we now have a situation where the people are no longer acquainted with the Head of the church, and what He requires of the people?

During the time of this text, the Lord had "removed Israel" out of the land of Canaan because of their sin, as He said He would do through Moses and the prophets (Lev 18:26-28; Jer 9:19; 16:17; Ezek 36:17-18). Only the tribe of Judah was left in the land (2 Kgs 17:18). Judah, however, did not keep the commandments of God either, but chose to walk in the statutes "which they made" (2 Kgs 17:19). That is when the Lord removed them from the land.

Having overcome Israel, the king of Assyria "brought men from Babylon, and from Cuthah, and from Ava, and from Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria instead of the children of Israel: and they possessed Samaria, and dwelt in the cities thereof." (2 Kgs 17:24). What he did not know is that these people were dwelling in God's own land (Isa 14:25; Jer 2:7). During the beginning of their occupancy of the land, "it came about at the beginning of their living there, that they did not fear the LORD; therefore the LORD sent lions among them which killed some of them" NASB (2 Kgs 17:25).

Although they were heathen, and quite unlike the people of our nation, the occupants of the land figured out what the trouble was. They said to the king of Assyria, "The nations which thou hast removed, and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of the God of the land: therefore He hath sent lions among them, and, behold, they slay them, because they know not the manner of the God of the land" (2 Kgs 17:26). The king commanded to find one of the priests and let him go and dwell in the land "to teach them the manner of the God of the land." Then one of the priests came and "taught them how they should fear the Lord" (2 Kgs 17:27-28).

The people of that text are to be commended for their wisdom. They did not ask the king to send someone to teach them how to trap lions, or show them some way to repel them, or even hunt them down and kill them. They did not ask for the scholars to write a book on "How to Handle an Invasion of Lions," or to have a series of workshops on the subject.

Do you see any similarities to the condition of the churches of our day? Is there not a prevailing ignorance of the Head of the church and of what He requires? And, is it not time for something to be done about it?

In the inordinate quest to get sinners into the congregations, could it be that we now have a situation where the people are no longer acquainted with the Head of the church, and what He requires of the people? The modern church has hired all manner of professed experts who are basically ignorant of the nature of God and Jesus, the accomplishments and provisions of salvation, and the objectives that are being fulfilled in Christ Jesus. So, in a manner of speaking lions have entered among the people and are devouring them. The youth are in a pitiful condition, marriages are falling apart, an astounding amount of divisions exist, immorality is pouring into the churches, and basic disinterest is sitting on the throne. Entertainment has been vaulted into prominence. Even though faith "comes by hearing," visuals are the thing of the day. The professed church is no longer a token of God's grace, but is rather a disgrace to the name of Jesus, and a cause for blaspheming the Word of God.

All of this has happened because the sheep have not been fed, the church has not been edified and built up, and the stress has been placed on recruitment – which is never mentioned to any of the churches of Scriptural record. These include Jerusalem, Samaria, Antioch, Rome, Corinth, Galatia, Ephesus, Philippi, Colossae, and Thessalonica. No personal letters stress recruitment, including letters to Timothy, Titus, Philemon, Gaius, and the elect lady. The stress is always placed on edification, strengthening the believers, and growing up into Christ in all things. No congregation of Scriptural record was ever chided for being too small, or commended for being large. No group of believers was ever rebuked for not bringing others into the fold, or commended for being especially productive in that area. Yet, such a marked emphasis has been placed upon enlarging the number of people that we now have a sea of spiritual infants who are unlearned and untaught. They simply do not know the manner of the kingdom.

What we sorely need is faithful men who have the mind of Christ, who know the Lord, and are acquainted with the manner of the Kingdom. Unless the people are taught of the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and of the Head of the body, the lions that have been loosed upon the church will continue to consume them.

I know full well that this will not set well with some people, but these things still have to be said. The wrong people are leading the thinking of the Christian masses, and their fruit confirms that to be the case. At some point, the right people have to be asked about the situation – like those of the house of Chloe inquired of Paul (1 Cor 1:11).

HEAR ME PATIENTLY

“ . . . wherefore I beseech thee to hear me patiently.” Other versions read, “listen to me patiently,” NIV “give me a hearing to the end,” BBE and “hear me with indulgence.” MRD

The word “patiently” comes from the Greek word makroqumw, which has the following lexical meaning: “with longanimity.” THAYER and “therefore I beg you to listen to me without interrupting' or '... without stopping me.” LOUW-NIDA The idea here is not merely enduring a lengthy speech, but permitting the presentation to be made in its entirety. The reason the request is made is that the words of Paul will be an intricately woven tapestry of thought. It will all fit together, being perfectly cohesive. The facts that are related will not only fit together in a logical manner, they will also be perfectly harmonious with the nature of the God he serves and with the eternal purpose into which he had been called.

One of the great incongruities found in contemporary preaching and teaching is that a considerable percentage of it is out of harmony with the nature of God and Christ, the eternal purpose of God, the work and ministry of Christ, and the various ministries that have been placed in the church. Firmly resolved to bring help to people, as opposed to doing the will of God, men do not often ponder the Divine nature, what God has purposed, what Christ has and is doing, and the intention of the gifts placed within the body of Christ. Having adopted another agenda, and given priority to other things, much labor is expended just as though God did not exist, and His purpose had never been determined.

Therefore, in a quest for the glory of God, Paul pleads with Agrippa to hear him without interruption as he testifies to the nature of his calling, his life, and his ministry. It will all blend perfectly with both the nature and the purpose of God.

MY MANNER OF LIFE FROM A YOUTH

“ 4 My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews. ”

Here we are exposed to a Jewish family whose lives were shaped around the Law and identity with God. This is how the Jews were divinely cultured – to be around their own people, and learn the manner of life taught under the Law. Solemnly they were told not to learn the way of the heathen (Deut 12:29-30; 18:26-30), or intermarry with them (Ex 34:16; Deut 7:3-4; Josh 23:12-13). When they about to enter the promised land, God commanded the people, “When thou art come into the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations ” (Deut 18:9).

In the days of Ezra and Nehemiah, many Israelites had failed to live isolated lives from the heathen, and a point was made of it by those noble leaders (Ezra 9:1-7; Neh 13:23-28). They had lived in contradiction of the manner of the Jews – a manner that God had commanded.

The American church has not done well in teaching this kind of mindset. In fact, they have brought the ways of the world into the church. Worldly concepts of music have been brought in, together with a worldly manner of dress. There was a time, for example, when harlots were known by the way they dressed –i.e. “The attire of an harlot” (Prov 7:10). In our time, however, and even in some congregations, it would be difficult to distinguish a harlot from some of the other women in the congregation. This is not to mention importing the world’s manner of raising money, appealing to the minds of people, and many other such things.

In the thunderous words of Paul it is written, “Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, And will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty” (2 Cor 6:14-18).

One can hardly misunderstand such a strong affirmation – written to the church at Corinth. God’s reception of them as sons and daughters was conditioned on their separateness from unbelievers. There may be those who feel this is too strong, but it is nevertheless the truth, and they will be judged by it in the day of the Lord.

My point here is that Paul was reared with this kind of perspective. Those who are sloppy about their association with the ungodly – no matter who they are – are far beneath the manner in which the family of Paul lived. This is not to mention how men are to live within the conscience framework of the New Covenant. The notion that you must become friends with worldly people to win them to Christ is wholly unsupported by the Word of God. It is nothing more than the utterance of worldly wisdom which is not from above.

Paul now founds his defense on his separateness from the heathen from the time he was a child. If this was an unwise manner in which to have been raised, it would certainly not have been a good way to testify before king Agrippa. The effects of Paul’s testimony will demolish any imagination that sees the manner in which he was raised being an unwise and unproductive one.

MY MANNER OF LIFE FROM MY YOUTH

“My manner of life from my youth . . .” Other versions read, “from my youth up,” NASB “ever since I was a child,” NIV “from my early years,” BBE “from my childhood,” GENEVA “the earliest days of my youth,” GWN “from my earliest childhood,” LIVING and “since I was young.” GNB

Paul testified to this period of life before the Jews who at first had accused him. This opposition was fomented by the Jews from Asia, who probably were not acquainted with Paul’s past life. “I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous toward God, as ye all are this day” (Acts 22:3).

The word “youth” is translated from the Greek word neotētoj . The lexical definition of this word is “youthful age . . . boyhood,” THAYER and “an early period of life, youth.” FRIBERG This word is also used to describe Timothy: “Let no man despise thy youth ; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity” (1 Tim 4:12). If this is considered according to the flesh, it would be the final stage of youthfulness. However, even with Timothy. It was his rearing when he was a child that is accredited with making him “wise unto salvation” (2 Tim 3:15).

The rich young ruler who asked Jesus what to do to obtain eternal life was told to keep the commandments. When Jesus specified some of them, the young man replied, “All these things have I kept from my youth up” (Matt 19:20; Mk 10:20; Lk18:21). The word that describes the man being “young” at the time is a different word: neani,skoj . This word is said to be descriptive of a man under forty years of age. STRONG’S and is lexically defined as “a young man .” THAYER/UBS “ a young man beyond the age of puberty, but normally before marriage - ‘young man .’” LOUW-NIDA

I have observed over the years the damaging effects of children not being among God’s people. While there are varying views on this subject, the people of God are to take the greatest care concerning the influences brought to bear upon their children.

However, the word used in our text accents the period of life prior to manhood – a time beyond infancy, and when the mind could be shaped by being subjected to the teaching of the Law.

Another example of someone who was raised among the people of God and according to the Law from a very young age was Samuel (1 Sam 1:22-28; 2:18).

AT JERUSALEM

“ . . . which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem . . . ” Other versions read, “was spent among my own nation and at Jerusalem,” NASB “in my own country and also in Jerusalem,” NIV “among my own people and in Jerusalem,” NRSV ““among my own nation in Jerusalem,” DARBY and “among my own nation at Jerusalem ,” GENEVA/NAB/PNT/RWB/TNT/WEB/YLT/EMTV/ LITV/MESSAGE

There is a difference in the way the various versions represent this verse. Some read, “in my own country AND also at Jerusalem.” NIV Other versions reflecting this view include the following: NASB, NRSV, RSV, ASV, BBE, CJB, CSB, ERV, ESV, GWN, MRD, NAB, NAS, NAU, NET, NIB, NJB, NLT, LIVING, IE, WEYMOUTH, WILLIAMS, MONTGOMERY, CEV, GNB. Those representing the text as saying the people among whom he was raised were “IN” or “AT” Jerusalem include the following: KJV, NKJV, DARBY, DOUAY, GENEVA, PNT, RWB, TNT, WEB, NLT, AMPLIFIED, EMTV, LITV, MESSAGE.

Earlier, when speaking to the Jews, Paul specified more of the details, saying that he was “brought up in this city [Jerusalem] at the feet of Gamaliel , and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers ” (Acts 22:3). The distance from Jerusalem to Tarsus was slightly more than 376 miles. That would make it highly unlikely that there were seasonal visits to Jerusalem. I take it that the text means precisely what is represented by the older versions – namely, that Paul was brought up among the Jews in Jerusalem , specially at the feet of Gamaliel.

Of course, this is a strange sound to the average professing Christian of our time, just as the raising of Samuel and Timothy. Professing Christians are sorely lacking in their perception of influences upon their young children. Paul does not say he was raised among mere relatives, but among his people at Jerusalem. That is not the manner in which relatives according to the flesh would be described.

I have observed over the years the damaging effects of children not being among God's people. While there are varying views on this subject, the people of God are to take the greatest care concerning the influences brought to bear upon their children.

A mind shaped by the Word of God is more disciplined, versatile, and is more apt to serve the Lord. This is because the most advanced expression of thought is found in Scripture, which is God-breathed. Oh, that more professing Christian parents were keenly aware of this.

KNOW ALL THE JEWS

“. . . know all the Jews.” Other versions read, “all the Jews know,” NKJV “the Jews all know,” NIV “is known by all the Jews,” RSV “all the Jews have knowledge of,” BBE “the Jewish leaders are well aware,” and “is known by all the Jews; [they are aware].” AMPLIFIED

Just as Timothy, when young, was known among all the brethren (Acts 16:1-2), so Paul in his youth was known among all the Jews. With the help of proper parental direction, he had been given the advantage of the spiritual resources available to him – and all of the Jews knew it. That is why those who stoned Stephen laid their garments at his feet as the stoning began (Acts 7:58).

THEY KNEW, IF THEY WOULD TESTIFY

“ 5 Which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify, that after the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee.”

The modern Christian culture is not even conducive to this kind of development. Provisions for the young are by no means found in men of the caliber of Gamaliel. There are rather game rooms, retreats of pleasure, and a plethora of activities in which the teaching of Scripture is a strange thing.

Paul is building a case that accounts for his moral and spiritual change. Yet, it did not change the fact that he was living in all good conscience before God, unless it be that this was clarified and enhanced by the newness of life. This explanation will serve to show the falsity of the charges laid against him.

THEY KNEW ME FROM THE BEGINNING

“Which knew me from the beginning . . .” Other versions read, “from the first,” NKJV “for a long time previously,” NASB “for a long time,” NIV “for quite some time,” CSB “from the outset of my life,” DARBY “heretofore,” GENEVA “from the start,” NAB “from time past,” NET “that I have always been,” LIVING “of old,” WEYMOUTH “have always known,” GNB and “who watched me grow up.” MESSAGE

When was “the beginning” to which he refers? It is the time when he was a youth, brought up in the city of Jerusalem at the feet of Gamaliel. He was apparently the kind of young man that stood out, noted for his seriousness, attentiveness, and devotion.

Occasionally, in our society, unusual children can be noted who devote themselves to some noble pursuit. However, it is most unusual when such a youth can be found that is devoted to religion – particularly a study of the Scriptures. Yet, this is the kind of person Paul was from a youth. In this respect he bore a marked resemblance to the Lord Himself, who was found in the Temple, talking to the doctors of the Law, at the age of twelve (Lk 12:42-47). Judaism was a framework in which such a youthful posture was encouraged, and for which abundant provision was made. If men took due advantage of it, a Joseph could assume significant responsibilities at the age of seventeen, and an Aaron, Miriam, or Moses could be raised to lead. A young Samuel could serve in the tabernacle. A young David could be ready for exploits while still in his teens. A young Josiah could be reared for kingship. If there was no other reason for this manner of culturing, Jesus Christ was reason enough.

The modern Christian culture is not even conducive to this kind of development. Provisions for the young are by no means found in men of the caliber of Gamaliel. There are rather game rooms, retreats of pleasure, and a plethora of activities in which the teaching of Scripture is a strange thing. In other words, even though the era of the New Covenant is one of superior provision and opportunities, the Gentile church has managed to occupy a position that is much lower than that which existed under an inferior covenant. All of this has happened under the watch of a supposedly professionally trained and educated clergy. It will be a sad day, indeed, when they are called to give an account for the environment they produced, either directly or indirectly. One thing is for sure, Paul would have had no decided advantage in the nominal church of our day, or the educational institutions associated with it.

IF THEY WOULD TESTIFY

“ . . . if they would testify . . .” Other versions read, “if they were willing to testify,” NKJV “and can testify if they are willing,” NIV “if they would give witness,” BBE “if they want to,” IE and “if they would but testify to it.” WILLIAMS

The argument Paul is presenting is simply this: what he has said is glaringly obvious. He is not boasting in himself, but stating the obvious. He made it obvious elsewhere that he refused to boast in something about himself that was not true. Thus he wrote.

• REMAINING WITHIN THE CONFINES OF HIS COMMISSION. “But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you” (2 Cor 10:13). The Amplified Bible reads, “We, on the other hand, will not boast beyond our legitimate province and proper limit, but will keep within the limits [of our commission which] God has allotted us as our measuring line and which reaches and includes even you.”

Integral to his commission was the insight he had been granted concerning God’s eternal purpose, the nature of justification by faith, the accomplishments of Jesus, etc. He did not speak about things he did not understand, or that he had not been given to see. When Jesus made Paul a minister “to make all men see,” He first illuminated Paul. What was made clear to Paul is what he labored to “make all men see” (Eph 3:2-12).

• NOT BOASTING IN ANOTHER MAN’S LABORS. “Not boasting of things without our measure, that is, of other men's labors; but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly” (2 Cor 10:15). The Amplified Bible reads, “We do not boast therefore, beyond our proper limit, over other men’s labors , but we have the hope and confident expectation that as your faith continues to grow, our field among you may be greatly enlarged, still within the limits of our commission.”

In this regard, Paul was not propagating a movement that someone else had started – a practice that is common in our day.

When the person speaking for God confines himself to what he has been given to see, and refuses to boast in what someone else has done, he will be used of God to strengthen the disciples and minister to those who are of a humble and contrite spirit. He will also be blessed by the Lord, who remains with those He has illuminated and sent out. This circumstance changes the way a person looks at, what is called, a theological education. While there is certainly a place for benefitting from what others have seen, all preaching and teaching must be confined to what the speaker has personally seen and heard from the Lord.

All of this has a great deal to do with Paul's defense, for he is going to show that he was not motivated by a hatred for the Jews, or a desire to oppose their customs. He was doing what he had been commissioned by the Lord to do.

I LIVED A PHARISEE

“ . . . that after the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee.” Other versions read, “strictest sect of our religion,” NKJV “that division of our religion which is most regular in the keeping of the law,” BBE “the most exact sect of our worship,” YLT “the strictest of Pharisees when it comes to obedience to Jewish laws and customs,” LIVING and “the Pharisees obey the laws of the Jewish faith more carefully than any other group of Jewish people.” IE

McClintok and Strong's Cyclopaedia says of the word Pharisee, “. . . properly denotes one who is separated, i.e., by special practices; or, as the dictionary called Aruch (s.v.) defines it, "one who separated himself from Levitical impurity and Levitically impure food" (comp. also Talmud, Chagigah, 18 b; Sabbath, 13 a). The derivation of it from vriP;, in the sense of unfolding, explaining, and the assertion that the followers of this sect were called Pharisees — interpreters of the Bible, in contradistinction to the Sadducees, who adhered to the letter of the Scriptures.”

In his former life, Paul even excelled as a Pharisee, which was the most disciplined part of the Jewish family. Many of these men gloried in appearance, appearing righteous outwardly, but inwardly full of dead men's bones (Matt 23:28). However, there is no record of Paul, when Saul of Tarsus, being such a man. His life was marked by an acute consciousness of God (Acts 23:1). He advanced “in the Jews' religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers.” (Gal 1:14). He not only excelled among the Jewish populous, but among the Pharisees themselves.

While many professed servants of God point out their immoral and iniquitous past, Paul pointed out his zealotry among the Jews, and wholehearted devotion to the Lord. Elsewhere he affirms he “was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief” (1 Tim 1:13). The instant he was confronted with the risen Christ, he ended his campaign against him. Paul will testify powerfully to this fact.

The point here is that Paul was never known for being a profligate, hypocritical, or causing a tumult among the Jews. Charges against him that affirmed such things could not be substantiated in any phase of his life – before or after his conversion.

While many professed servants of God point out their immoral and iniquitous past, Paul pointed out his zealotry among the Jews, and wholehearted devotion to the Lord.

Paul's defense will rest upon the powerful witness of moral and spiritual change – even when the past involved a zealotry for God that is marked by ignorance. We have among us some who earnestly sought to please God while entertaining a misapprehension of the nature of God and of His requirements for men. Such people are not at all common in our time, but methinks they are duly noted in the heavenly realms.

A word ought to be said concerning the hypocrisy of a claim of being a professing Christian, yet remaining basically unchanged. When a person is more like the world than Jesus, it is questionable that they have been converted. Nothing in Scripture suggests a continuance in worldly ways follows being born again, or becoming a new creation. Someone who is “weak in the faith” is not noted for immorality and ungodliness. That condition is one that describes a deficiency in understanding, as expounded in the fourteenth chapter of Romans (Rom 14:1-15; 1 Cor 8:1-7).

When it comes to immorality, or the outward overflow of iniquity, we are told, “But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. Be not ye therefore partakers with them” (Eph 5:3-7). There is to be a total intolerance of such expressions in the household of faith (1 Cor 5:9-12). This is not a sign of weakness in the faith, but of the dominance of the flesh, which was crucified when we were baptized into Christ (Rom 6:6; Gal 5:24).

Had Paul formerly been an immoral person who indulged the sins of the flesh, his testimony would have been less strong. However, as all Jews knew, he was noted for his devotion to the Lord and commitment to Jewish manners. It is not likely that a man such as this would be noted for agitating and denigrating the Jews “throughout the world,” as the Jews had charged (Acts 24:5). Not only were their charges unfounded, they contradicted the life and conduct of Paul from the time of his youth.

How we raise our children can be a distinct advantage or disadvantage to them when they come of age.

THE HOPE OF THE PROMISE

“ 6 And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers.”

Paul will now show that he has actually embraced what was promised by God to the Jewish fathers – Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Rather than being a renegade Jew who had abandoned Jewish manners, he was really a genuine Jew who had taken the promise of God seriously and embraced what was made known of it to him. By inference, this means that the Jews who were accusing him were actually the renegades, who had refused to believe the promises, even though Paul himself had declared the fulfillment of them to the very crowd that was accusing him.

THE HOPE OF THE PROMISE

“And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise . . .” Other versions read, “because of my hope in what God has promised our fathers,” NIV “on account of my hope in the promise made by God to our ancestors,” NRSV and “on the ground] of the hope of that promise made to our forefathers by God.” AMPLIFIED

Paul’s life was ordered by his embrace of the promises God made to the fathers. It was the interpretation of that circumstance that dictated the charges raised by the Jews. What they had seen in Paul was his zeal for the promise. What they thought, is that it was opposition to the Jews.

Some, because of their own ignorance, view this as a total misrepresentation of the charges leveled against Paul. However, this is in perfect keeping with the circumstances. Paul’s life was ordered by his embrace of the promises God made to the fathers. It was the interpretation of that circumstance that dictated the charges raised by the Jews. What they had seen in Paul was his zeal for the promise. What they thought, is that it was opposition to the Jews.

The phrase “the hope of the promise” is an interesting one. It not only speaks of believing “the promise,” but of shaping one’s life around it, so that the whole of life is lived in expectation of what God promised. From Adam to Abraham (approximately 1900 years), the godly lived in anticipation of the fulfillment of a single promise: “And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel” (Gen 3:15). Ironically, this word was delivered to the devil, with the whole human race being present. Technically, Adam and Eve overheard this word, but they apparently took hold of it, and passed it along to succeeding generations, keeping hope alive.

Technically, “hope” is produced by believing the promise of God. In our text, it is specifically, “the promise” pertaining to the coming Seed of Abraham, and to His administration of the New Covenant. Thus Peter declared, “Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days” (Acts 3:24). Paul also preached this powerfully in the synagogue of Antioch of Pisidia: “And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David” (Acts 13:34).

There are other references to this promise.

- “And hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as He spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began” (Luke 1:69-70).
- “Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers” (Rom 15:8).
- “And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise : but God gave it to Abraham by promise ” (Gal 3:17-18).

The prophets were given to see various aspects of the promise made to the fathers, and they declared it, even though its fulness was not known to them (1 Pet 1:11-12). Here is a brief sampling of their words.

- MOSES – A Prophet. “The LORD thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto Him ye shall hearken” (Deut 18:15; Acts 3:22-23).
- DAVID – A King. “Yet have I set My king upon My holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree: the LORD hath said unto Me, Thou art My Son; this day have I begotten Thee” (Psa 2:6-7; Matt 3:17; Heb 1:5).
- ISAIAH – A Glorious Branch. “In that day shall the Branch of the LORD be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel” (Isa 4:2; 11:1; Jer 33:5; Zech 3:8; 6:12; John 1:14).

The Government will be Upon His Shoulder. “For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given: and the government shall be upon His shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon His kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the LORD of hosts will perform this” (Isa 9:6-7).

- JEREMIAH – A Means to Righteousness. “Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In His days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is His name whereby He shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS” (Jer 23:5-6; Rom 3:22; 1 Cor 1:30; 2 Cor 5:21; Phil 3:9).

• EZEKIEL – A Shepherd. “And I will set up one Shepherd over them, and He shall feed them, even My servant David; He shall feed them, and He shall be their shepherd” (Ezek 34:23; John 10:11; Heb 13:20; 1 Pet 2:25; 5:4).

• DANIEL – One with Dominion. “I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought Him near before him. And there was given Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve Him: His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed” (Dan 7:13-14; Matt 28:18; 1 Cor 15:27; Eph 1:20-22; Phil 2:9-11; 1 Pet 3:22).

• MALACHI – Healing and Restoration. “But unto you that fear My name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in His wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall” (Mal 4:2; John 1:4,8; 8:12; Acts 13:47; 26:18; 1 John 2:8).

When promises such as these are believed, they generate a hope that does not make ashamed.

The promise and the promises were all summarized in a person: The Lord Jesus Christ. Commensurate with His exaltation the “day of salvation” began, the New Covenant was inaugurated, and a state of imputed, yet genuine, righteousness was found in those who were joined to Him. The promise would culminate in the resurrection from the dead, when the last remnants of Adam, the body, would be exchanged for an immortal body – “a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens” (2 Cor 5:1).

MADE OF GOD UNTO OUR FATHERS

“ . . . made of God unto our fathers.” Other versions read, “what God has promised our fathers,” NIV ‘made by God to our ancestors,’ NRSV “made by God to our forefathers,” WEYMOUTH and “that promise Made to our forefathers by God.” AMPLIFIED

The words translated “the fathers” (tou.j pate,raj) has the following lexical meaning: “literally, nourisher, protector, upholder . . . properly, equivalent to generator or male ancestor . . . the founder of a race or tribe, progenitor of a people, forefather so Abraham is called” THAYER “originator.” LEH

When it comes to the matter of God revealing His purpose, He does not reveal it directly to everyone. That is why our text says that Paul and others lived in the hope of the promise – a promise that was given to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They held on to that ancient promise, and to the periodic development of it by the prophets.

As used here, there are several things inherent in the word “fathers” (Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob), of whom, Abraham was the progenitor, or the one from whom the Jewish race came.

• Progenitor. Abraham is the one from whom the race came. Isaac and Jacob were the ones through whom the race was narrowed. This was a miraculous beginning, for Abraham “was as good as dead” when the promise was given to him (Heb 11:12). Yet, his faith was strong, and he “being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah’s womb: he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God” (Rom 4:20).

• Nourisher. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were the nourishers of the race, because the root-promise was given directly to them (Ex 3:6; 4:5; Matt 22:32; Acts 3:13). This circumstance is what accounts for “the root and fatness” of the natural olive tree of Israel (Rom 11:17).

• Protector. It was the remembrance of Abraham that kept these people from being destroyed, even though were a wicked and gainsaying people. There were times when Israel's protection was traced to God remembering "his covenant with Abraham" (Ex 2:24; 32:13; Psa 105:42; Deut 9:5,27; Mic 7:20).

• Upholder. The promise of the Jews in the working of the Lord was largely owing to Abraham. He is the one with whom the covenant was originally made. It was the covenant made with Abraham that was renewed to Isaac and Jacob (Lev 26:42; 2 Kgs 13:23).

When it comes to the matter of God revealing His purpose, He does not reveal it directly to everyone. That is why our text says that Paul and others lived in the hope of the promise – a promise that was given to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They held on to that ancient promise, and to the periodic development of it by the prophets.

In this defense, Paul gives no recognition to Jews who were not holding to the promise, and living in the hope of its fulfillment. He knew very well that "they are not all Israel, which are of Israel" (Rom 9:6). While this may appear to be a small point, it does reveal the manner of the Kingdom. This is also true of all of his writings. He never gives official recognition to those who have no evidences of belonging to Christ. His letters, however, are written so that such people must evaluate themselves, or examine themselves to see if they are in the faith. He does not go out of his way to condemn those whose lives are questionable. He does, however, speak and write in such a manner that will never leave the indolent and disobedient thinking they are approved.

INSTANTLY SERVING GOD DAY AND NIGHT

"7a Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come."

OUR TWELVE TRIBES

"Unto which promise our twelve tribes . . ." Other versions read, "to this promise our twelve tribes," NKJV "our whole twelve tribes," DARBY "the twelve tribes of Israel," NLT/LIVING/GNB/MESSAGE and "all the twelve tribes." IE The literal translation of this clause reads, "into which the two-ten tribes of us." INTERLINEAR

The idea here is that all of the true Israelites with the twelve tribes have been focused upon the fulfillment of the promise of reference. This equates with the expression, "all the tribes of the children of Israel" (Rev 7:4), "all Israel" (Rom 11:26), and "the whole house of Israel" (Ezek 37:11). The commitment of God is this, "And so all Israel shall be saved : as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob : for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins" (Rom 11:26-27). Jeremiah related this to the New Covenant. "Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the LORD: But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the LORD, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the LORD: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the LORD: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more. Thus saith the LORD, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; The LORD of hosts is his name: If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the LORD, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever. Thus saith the LORD; If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the LORD ” (Jer 31:31-37).

This is a high view, and Paul is speaking in strict accord with the revelation of God concerning Israel. In the Revelation, Jesus revealed to John that the earth would not be destroyed until the servants of God were sealed. He then heard a voice saying that 144,000 were sealed as God intended. This vast number was specifically identified as “all the tribes of the children of Israel.” Showing the completeness of the work, each tribe is said to have had 12,000 who were sealed. This is a picture of all Israel being saved – that is, the true Israel that was within the fleshly Israel. This is not a prophecy of the Gentiles, but of the natural olive tree into which they have been grafted.

INSTANTLY SERVING GOD DAY AND NIGHT

“ . . . instantly serving God day and night . . . ” Other versions read, “earnestly serving,” NKJV “they earnestly serve God,” NASB “Earnestly worship,” NRSV “working and waiting,” BBE “serving incessantly,” DARBY “worship with intense devotion,” GWN “with earnest prayers,” MRD “fervently worship,” NAB “constant in worship,” NJB “zealously worship,” NLT “assiduously serving,” WEB “intently night and day serving, YLT “strive night and day,” LIVING “intense devotedness,” WEYMOUTH and “fervently worship [without ceasing] night and day.” AMPLIFIED

Every professing Jew was not living in such a manner – but the real Jews were – everyone who was “a Jew inwardly” (Rom 2:28).

HOPE TO COME

“ . . . hope to come.” This was the hope related to the coming Messiah through whom the Abrahamic promise of blessing would be realized.

Conscientious Jews were alert, and watching for the fulfillment of the promise. When Jesus was born, aged Anna was present when Simeon blessed Mary, Joseph, and the Holy Child. Immediately she left the Temple and “spoke of Him that looked for redemption in Jerusalem” (Lk 2:38). When John the Baptist commenced to prepare the way of the Lord, “the people were in expectation” (Lk 3:15). After Philip had heard Jesus he found Nathanael, “and saith unto him, We have found Him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph” (John 1:45). When the woman of Samaria had conversed with Jesus at the well of Jacob she said, “is not this the Christ?” (John 4:29). When other Samaritans had heard Jesus they said, “we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world” (John 4:42).

Now Paul is identifying himself with those who believed the promise and were waiting for its fulfillment. He testifies of the ideal, not the faltering. He does not recognize those who are not serving God in this hope as legitimate Jews, even though their lineage went back to Abraham.

However, there are certain evidences that a person is a real follower of Christ, and has really been accepted by God. It is not fashionable to review such matters, and some even think it is intrusive to do so, charging the person who looks for such evidences as being judgmental.

This is now a foreign way of thinking. Today, people assume others are believers, living in hope, without any substantial evidence of such a condition. In fact few people look for any kind of confirmed evidence of people being in Christ. It is enough that they are identified with a particular sect.

However, there are certain evidences that a person is a real follower of Christ, and has really been accepted by God. It is not fashionable to review such matters, and some even think it is intrusive to do so, charging the person who looks for such evidences as being judgmental. However, through Moses, the Prophets, the Lord Jesus, and the Apostles, the Lord has addressed this matter, and it is our business to be knowledgeable of what has been said, and to receive it without doubting or equivocation.

MARKS OF THOSE WHO ARE IN CHRIST JESUS

None of these are declared to be things those in Christ should be. They are not a statement of goals, but of reality. These are distinguishing traits that have resulted from the “operation,” or working, of the Lord.

- They have a new heart (Ezek 36:26).
- They have a new spirit (Ezek 36:26).
- Their stony heart has been removed (Ezek 36:26).
- Their hearts have been circumcised (Deut 30:6; Phil 3:3; Col 2:11).
- They are the light of the world and the salt of the earth (Matt 5:13-14).
- They have forsaken all to follow Christ (Lk 14:33).
- They are taught by God (John 6:45; Eph 4:20-21).
- They have been chosen out of the world, therefore the world hates them (John 15:19; 17:14,16).
- They are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit (Rom 8:9).
- They are washed, sanctified, and justified (1 Cor 6:11).
- They are a new creation (2 Cor 5:17; Gal 6:15).
- They are the children of God by faith (Gal 3:26).
- They have been baptized into Christ and put on Christ (Gal 3:27).
- God has sent the Holy Spirit into their hearts because they are sons (Gal 4:6).
- They have crucified the flesh (Gal 5:24).
- They have been raised up and made to sit together with Christ in the heavenly places (Eph 2:6).
- They are created for good works (Eph 2:10).
- They worship God in the Spirit (Phil 3:3).
- They rejoice in Christ Jesus (Phil 3:3).
- They have no confidence in the flesh (Phil 3:3).
- They are complete in Christ (Col 2:10).
- They are dead, and their lives are hid with Christ in God (Col 3:3).
- They have been made partakers of Christ (Heb 3:14).
- They have been enlightened (Heb 6:4).
- They have tasted of the heavenly gift (Heb 6:4).
- They have been made partakers of the Holy Spirit (Heb 6:4).
- They have tasted of the good word of God (Heb 6:5).
- They have tasted of the powers of the world to come (Heb 6:5).
- God’s laws have been put into their minds (Heb 8:10).
- God’s laws have been written upon their hearts (Heb 8:10).

- They know the Lord (Heb 8:11).
- They have been illuminated (Heb 10:32).
- They are “not of them that draw back unto perdition” (Heb 10:39).
- They are come “unto mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel” (Heb 12:22-24).
- They have been born again (1 Pet 1:23).
- They are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, and a peculiar people (1 Pet 2:9).
- They are strangers and pilgrims in the world (1 Pet 2:11).
- They have “escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust” (2 Pet 1:4).
- Being saved by hope (Rom 8:25), they are purifying themselves even as Jesus is pure (1 John 3:1-3).
- They do not remain in sin, and cannot go on sinning (1 John 3:9).

Is it possible to be a child of God who is in Christ Jesus, or accepted by God, yet any of these be missing? Is there a single one of these benefits that make the saints vulnerable, or contribute to a slothful manner of life? Do any of them encourage sin, excuse sin, and leave one susceptible to the devil?

- They have passed from death unto life (1 John 4:14; John 5:24).
- They love others who are begotten of God (1 John 5:1).
- They overcome the world (1 John 5:4).
- They do not live in sin, they keep themselves from sin, and the wicked one does not touch them (1 John 5:18).

Is it possible to be a child of God who is in Christ Jesus, or accepted by God, yet any of these be missing? Is there a single one of these benefits that make the saints vulnerable, or contribute to a slothful manner of life? Do any of them encourage sin, excuse sin, and leave one susceptible to the devil? Is it remotely possibly that such marvelous things could be possessed, yet emit no evidence of their presence? It is true that there is growth in these matters. However, that does not erase the fact of their presence.

If they are true – and that is unquestionably the case – they will assist in fulfilling the Divine requirement: “Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?” (2 Cor 13:5). If they are too difficult to receive, then do whatever is necessary for them to be received without doubting or equivocation.

A people without an identity is not a people. Yet, the modern church is increasingly being noted for a near-total lack of evidence of being indwelt by Deity and possessing a motivating hope.

ACCUSED FOR THE HOPE

“7b For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews.” Other versions read, “and for this hope,” NASB “because of this hope,” NIV “concerning this hope,” ASV “in connection with this hope,” BBE and “and for that hope.” AMPLIFIED

As I have already pointed out, some commentators are persuaded that Paul misrepresented his case in these words. But they are wrong – seriously wrong. Paul is not looking at his arrest from the Jews point of view. Rather, he is considering the actions to which they have objected as springing from his hope. He is viewing the events through the lense of spirituality reality.

Hope – the kind of hope that is based upon the revelation of Divine intention in the Scriptures – has a vivifying impact upon the soul. John says that it compels the one possessing it to “purify himself even as He is pure” (1 John 3:3). Elsewhere, Paul says that we are “saved by hope” (Rom 8:24). That is, the life of the saved is shaped by what they are anticipating at the coming of the Lord. At that time they will be loosed from the bondage of corruption – this vile body (Phil 3:20-21). Spiritual haziness and knowing in part will be a thing of the past (1 Cor 3:12). All of the effects of sin will be removed, including tears, pain, sorrow, death, crying, the curse, and night (Rev 21:4; 22:3-4).

Such things as being confessed by Jesus before God and the holy angels (Lk 12:8; Rev 3:5), being praised by God (1 Cor 4:5), and Jesus coming forth to serve us (Lk 12:37) compel us to live differently. Those who live in hope ponder reigning with Christ (2 Tim 2:12; Rev 22:5), judging the world and angels (1 Cor 6:2-3), and receiving the kingdom (Dan 7:18,22,27; Lk 12:32). When they look at the difficulties and vicissitudes of this life, they conclude that they “are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us” (Rom 8:18). Their minds have been so impacted that they think of “whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things” (Phil 4:8). Their affection is set on things above, and not on things on the earth (Col 3:1-2), and they are looking “for a city which hath foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God” (Heb 11:10). They are willing to forfeit all competing interests to “win Christ,” and be “found in Him” not having a righteousness of their own (Phil 3:7-9). Because of their hope they “abstain from fleshly lusts that war against the soul” (1 Pet 2:11). When they consider life, they conclude that it is better to be “absent from the body and present with the Lord” (2 Cor 5:8).

Peter reminds us that God “according to His abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead” (1 Pet 1:3). Paul tells us that the same grace that saves us teaches us to reject ungodliness and worldly lusts, living “soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world,” all the while “looking for that blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God and Savior Jesus Christ” (Tit 2:11-13). Further “having no hope” is a mark of those who are “without God in the world” (Eph 2:12). There simply is no excuse for a failure to proclaim this hope, or for it to be absent within the professing Christian.

PAUL’S HOPE MADE HIM

WHAT HE WAS

Paul was not a political reactionist, nor was he a religious sectarian. He did not bring a rabble-raising message, nor had his attention been captured by political or social circumstances. Whether it was coming to Jerusalem, going into the Temple, or attending the synagogues – it was his hope that compelled him to do as he did.

He would not have lived or spoken as he did were it not for the hope he possessed. That is precisely why he said his hope was the cause for which the Jews had falsely accused him.

THE MODERN ABSENCE OF A DOMINATING HOPE

The absence of this dominating hope within nominal Christendom is a betrayal of its alienation from God. Preaching about the coming of the Lord and the consequent glory to be enjoyed by the elect is nearly a thing of the past. Songs of heaven are disappearing from the song books – at least where Christians dare to use hymn books, refusing to cave in to the demands of spiritual juveniles – and that is the most polite way of referring to them.

The modern church has shifted its focus from the body to the individual, and from conformity to the image of God to the resolution of personal problems. The earthly family has now upstaged the family of God, and husbands and wives are now given more attention than Christ and His betrothed bride. The world is stressed more than the world to come, and involvement in politics has been deemed more important than involvement in the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Is all of this simply an innocent departure from the most noble. Is it something the church has been commissioned to do? Indeed not! This is evidence that the masses of professing Christendom had removed themselves from the one who called them into the grace of Christ, just as surely as the Galatians (Gal 1:6). God is known less now than He was at the commencement of the church. The incident involving Ananias and Sapphira appears to be totally acceptable when compared with what the conditions that are being made known in the modern church. In today's society they probably would have been counseled about stewardship. However, their offense would certainly not have been viewed as a critical one.

This is the era of religious talk and powerless form. The body of Christ is no longer viewed as the vehicle through whom Christ is working. Now it is a body of people that contribute to career development and the amassment of riches.

And why is this so? It is because of the absence of hope – sanctifying hope! It may be affirmed in creedal statements. However, if a person is not purifying himself, it is because he is lacking hope. If he is steadfast, it is because he has the anchor of hope, firmly fixed in the heavenly realm. We are, indeed, saved by hope.

WHAT IS SO INCREDIBLE ABOUT IT?

“ 8 Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?”

The candor of Paul is refreshing. He is speaking with a king and before a number of political and military dignitaries. Yet, he reasons with them without any apparent restraint. This is because stands up under any kind of assault, and it challenges the greatest of intellects. There is no cause for any believer to fear affirming the truth before those who are skeptical of it.

WHY SHOULD IT BE THOUGHT A THING INCREDIBLE?

“Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you . . .” Other versions read, “incredible among you?” NASB “why should any of you consider it incredible?” NIV “thought incredible by any of you?” NRSV “why is it judged incredible with you?” ASV “Why, in your opinion, is it outside belief?” BBE “Why do you people consider it incredible,” CJB “Why do all of you refuse to believe?” GWN “Why is it thought unbelievable among you,” NAB “But is it a crime to believe in the resurrection of the dead? Does it seem incredible to you” LIVING “Why do you think it is impossible,” IE “Why is it deemed with all of you a thing past belief,” WEYMOUTH “Why should any of you doubt,” CEV and “I can't see why it's a criminal offense to believe.” MESSAGE

The word “incredible” is translated from the Greek word apiston which is the negative of faith: not faith, or unbelievable. It's lexical meaning is, “1– not to be trusted, perfidious; 2– incredible; 3– incredulous,” THAYER and “impossible to be true . . . untrustworthy, substantially unreliable.” FRIBERG Something that is “incredible” is perceived as outside the boundary of human reasoning. That is why no significant thought is given to the matter thought to be so classified. English synonyms are, “incogitable, inconceivable, insupposable, unbelievable, unimaginable, unthinkable.”

Related words are specified as “absurd, outlandish, preposterous, ridiculous; impossible, untenable.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

Worldly wisdom cannot extend one millimeter beyond the creation. The domain from which it gathers temporal. The sole

Perhaps of the resurrection of the dead was actually preached as it should be, we would find that many people claiming to be Christian think it is an incredible thing. After all, there were some in Corinth who said “there is no resurrection of the dead” means of acquiring valid information is the human senses. Confined to such a realm, and to senses related exclusively with the body, the man of this world considers anything outside of that domain to be “incredible,” or “unbelievable.” Worldly wisdom does not think within the context of Almighty God. It has no access to faith, which enables the one possessing it to believe God without any equivocation whatsoever.

Unbelief is to be challenged, for it is totally unreasonable. This is particularly true because of how God views worldly wisdom – as “foolishness.” Thus it is written, “For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain” (1 Cor 3:19-20). Rather than attempting to establish the wisdom of God, Paul simply asks why anyone would think what God has affirmed is incredible.

THAT GOD SHOULD RAISE THE DEAD

“... that God should raise the dead?” Other versions read, “that God raises the dead,” NKJV “if God does raise the dead,” NASB “for God to make the dead come to life again?” BBE and “that God can bring dead people back to life?” GENEVA

This is the that offended the Athenian philosophers, causing some of them to mock what Paul preached (Acts 17:18,21). Throughout the book of Acts, much is said about the resurrection of the dead being preached, with the resurrection of Jesus from the dead being pivotal (Acts 2:31; 3:15; 4:2,33; 17:18,32). The apostles also make a point of the resurrection of the dead (1 Cor 6:14; 15:12-57; 2 Cor 4:14; Phil 3:10-11,21; 1 Thess 4:14-16; 2 Tim 2:18; Heb 6:2).

One cannot help but wonder why so very little is being said these days about the resurrection of the dead. Perhaps it is because it seems to incredible to be the subject of preaching. I have noticed over the years that as soon as the theological spotlight is turned to things beyond this world, many preachers and teachers become noticeably uncomfortable. They do not appear able to traffic in the realms of the unseen, or deal with matters that follow death and the passing of the present heavens and the earth.

I remember several years ago when I attended a local Preaching and Teaching. Various topics had been assigned to each speaker concerning the fundamentals of the faith. One speaker had been assigned the subject of the resurrection of the dead. When this up-and-coming preacher began to speak, he stated that if he had a choice in the matter, he would have chosen a subject that was more relevant. In a classic error of judgment, the allowed the speaker to continue.

Actually, that young man had given utterance to the opinion of many better known preachers who rarely, if ever, speak on the subject of the resurrection of the dead. The Master Teacher, Jesus Christ the Lord, addressed this subject several times (Matt 22:23-32; 24:31; 25:1-13; Mk 12:18-27; Lk 14:14; 20:27-38; John 5:21,25,28-28; 6:49,40,44,54; 11:23-25; 14:19).

If God is going to raise the dead, that fact alters how life is viewed.

- It means men will give an account for how they lived.
- It means God will be vindicated in everything He has said.
- It means that the righteous will be rewarded and the wicked punished.
- It means that death does not end it all.
- It implies that it is on the part of wisdom to prepare for the resurrection. Or, as Paul put it, to “attain to the resurrection of the dead” (Phil 3:9).

Perhaps of the resurrection of the dead was actually preached as it should be, we would find that many people claiming to be Christian think it is an incredible thing. After all, there were some in Corinth who said “there is no resurrection of the dead” (1 Cor 15:12).

CONSCIENTIOUS IN OPPOSITION

“ 9 I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth.”

I THOUGHT WITH MYSELF

“I verily thought with myself . . .” Other versions read, “I myself thought,” NKJV “I thought to myself,” NASB “I too was convinced,” NIV “I myself was convinced,” NRSV “truly, I was of the opinion,” BBE “I used to think,” CJB “I myself supposed,” CSB “I indeed did formerly think,” DOUAY “at first, resolved in my own mind,” MRD and “I myself indeed was [once] persuaded.”
AMPLIFIED

Paul is confessing to a former way of thinking. With him, this was not merely a matter of hatred, or objecting to a message that was contrary to what he had embraced. This was a matter of conscience – conscience toward God. Individuals who live for themselves alone will not be able to comprehend what motivated Paul. Even though his view was wrong, he held it as a proper view before God Almighty. This confirms the truth of what he had formerly confessed to the Jews who sought to kill him: “Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day” (Acts 23:1).

The extreme rarity of this kind of mind-set in our time makes it most difficult for some to receive what Paul is saying. He was living purposefully for the Lord, and considered it his duty before the Lord to “do all that was possible to oppose the name of Jesus of Nazareth.” NIV He was wrong, but he was not hypocritical. His conclusions were incorrect, but they were not the result of a devotion to sectarianism.

THAT I OUGHT TO DO MANY THINGS

“ . . . that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth.” Other versions read, “ had to do many things hostile,” NASB “ ought to do all that was possible to oppose the name of Jesus of Nazareth,” NIV “ it was right for me to do a number of things against the name of Jesus of Nazareth,” BBE “ it was my duty to do all I could to combat,” CJB and “ I must do many things against.” IE

Saul of Tarsus thought he was doing what was right. He knew what the Law had said about false prophets, and felt that Jesus of Nazareth was in that category. Concerning false prophets, Moses wrote: “But the prophet, which shall presume to speak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die ” (Deut 18:20).

Concerning those who followed other gods, the Law was clear. “If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers; Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; Thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him: but thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people ” (Deut 13:9). In his former mind-set, Paul thought he was carrying out those Divine mandates in arresting those who were followers of Jesus. This accounts for the words that follow. He had never set out to be a trouble maker, but one who served God.

The historical account of his activity confirms his zeal in this matter. “As for Saul, he made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison. Therefore they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word” (Acts 8:3-4). And again, “And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest” (Acts 9:1).

I SHUT THE SAINTS IN PRISON

“ 10a Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests.”

With great power Paul is bearing witness to a former way of thinking – one that he had long ago abandoned, having seen the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

I DID IT IN JERUSALEM

“Which thing I also did in Jerusalem . . .” Other versions read, “this is just what I did in Jerusalem,” NASB “and in Jerusalem I did so,” CJB “this I actually did in Jerusalem,” CSB and “that was how I acted in Jerusalem.” WEYMOUTH

Paul not only thought he should do whatever he could against the name of Jesus of Nazareth, he conducted his life in strict harmony with his conviction. He did this “even in Jerusalem,” where a mighty move of God had taken place, and where he was well known, having been brought up there.

“ . . . and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests.” Other versions read, “many of God’s people,” CJB “many Christians,” GWN “the holy ones,” NAB “God’s holy people,” NJB “many believers,” NLT and “many of the [faithful] saints (holy ones).” AMPLIFIED

It appears that Paul was designated by the Jewish officials as the leader of a persecution against the saints in Jerusalem. Later he will say that he expanded the persecution by obtaining letters of approval to go into other regions.

Here again, the sloppiness of some of the versions is made known: i.e. “Christians,” GWN and “believers.” NLT The words translated “the saints” are tw/n a`gi,wn , which means, “pure, sinless, upright, holy . . . set apart for God, to be, as it were, exclusively his . . . saints,” THAYER “as human beings belonging to God; saints, God’s people,” FRIBERG “pertaining to being holy in the sense of superior moral qualities and possessing certain essentially divine qualities in contrast with what is human - 'holy, pure, divine,' ” LOUW-NIDA and “set apart for God . . . holy . . . pure upright.” GINGRICH There is no way the Greek words used here can be properly translated “Christians” or “believers.” There are specific Greek words for these terms, and they are not even remotely connected with the word used here.

Observe how Paul refers to the people he once opposed: “saints,” or “holy ones.” This is certainly not how Paul thought of them when he persecuted these people – even though that is precisely what they were. He now saw them as they really were – so closely knit to the Jesus, whom he formerly thought he should oppose. That very Jesus said of Saul’s persecution of them, “Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou ME ?” (Acts 9:4). Paul now has “the mind of Christ” concerning His people, and therefore refers to them as they really are.

THE SAINTS IMPRISONED BY AUTHORITY FROM THE CHIEF PRIESTS

Other versions read, “did I lock up . . . in prison,” NASB “put many . . . in prison,” NIV and “threw many . . . in prison.” CJB

This was done in Jerusalem by authority of the chief priests. The record of this persecution does not detail the matter of imprisonment, although it is inferred. It is written, he had “authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name” (Acts 9:14).

It appears that Paul was designated by the Jewish officials as the leader of a persecution against the saints in Jerusalem. Later he will say that he expanded the persecution by obtaining letters of approval to go into other regions that were in other countries, extending the persecution..

I GAVE MY VOICE AGAINST THEM

“ 10b . . . and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them.” Other versions read, “and when they were put to death, I cast my vote against them,” NKJV “and when they were put to death, I gave my decision against them,” BBE “and when they were put to death, I brought the sentence,” DOUAY “I voted to have them killed every time a vote was taken,” GWN and “when they were put to death by them, I took part with those that condemned them.” MRD

This describes Paul activity in Jerusalem. The record in Acts reads, “As for Saul, he made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison” (Acts 8:3). Pointing out that this went on for an extended period in Jerusalem Luke reports, “And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord . . .” (Acts 9:1).

Speaking of his past, Paul wrote to the Corinthians, “I persecuted the church of God” (1 Cor 15:9). He wrote to the Galatians, “I persecuted the church of God and wasted it” (Gal 1:13). To the Philippians he wrote of his past life, “concerning zeal, persecuting the church” (Phil 3:6). He testified to Timothy, “Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief” (1 Tim 1:13).

Perhaps you have heard some refer to Paul as a former murderer. It is interesting to note that he is never so identified in Scripture, nor does Paul confess to ever having killed a Christian. Such a thing may be possible, but a point is never made of Paul being such a man.

I PUNISHED THEM, COMPELLED THEM TO BLASPHEME, AND PERSECUTED THEM

“ 11 And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities.”

Paul now provides some details that are not provided by Luke in earlier accounts. The extent of his persecution is a testimony to how zealous he was, even though it was wrongly directed.

I PUNISHED THEM OFT IN EVERY SYNAGOGUE

“And I punished them oft in every synagogue . . .” Other versions read, “I punished them often in all the synagogues,” NASB and “many a time I went from one synagogue to another to have them punished.” NIV

It is estimated by Josephus that there were fifty-eight synagogues in old Jerusalem. WIKIPEDIA It is not certain how many synagogues existed in Jerusalem during the time of Saul’s persecution, but it appears as though there were many.

Those who oppose believers gathering in special buildings often say the early church met in the homes of individuals. That this did occur cannot be denied (Acts 2:46; Rom 16:5; 1 Cor 16:19; Col 4:15; Phile 1:2). Those references, however, hardly justify the development of a teaching that confines the gathering of the people of God to a house. Believers are also said to have gathered in the Temple (Luke 24:53; Acts 2:46; 5:42). In this text we find they were also known to meet in the synagogues.

Saul was relentless in his opposition of the followers of Christ. He pursued them “in every synagogue,” where they were apparently prone to meet. Many of them no doubt bore witness to their faith, else I do not know how Saul would have been able to identify them. The synagogue did provide an environment in which the people could speak and testify to what they had seen.

I COMPELLED THEM TO BLASPHEME

“ . . . and compelled them to blaspheme . . .” Other versions read, “tried to force them to blaspheme,” NASB “tried to make them blaspheme,” NRSV “I strove to make them blaspheme,” ASV “forcing them to say things against God,” BBE “forced them to curse the name of Jesus,” GWN “I punished them in an attempt to force them to blaspheme,” NAB and “I was constraining them to speak evil” YLT

The word “compelled” means “to constrain by force and threats.” STRONG’S It appears that here the emphasis is on the intention of Saul rather than the accomplishment of that intention. It may very well be that a few weak souls did actually deny Christ, but I doubt that it was many, if, indeed, any at all. Else there would be little point to referring to the saints being imprisoned and finally put to death.

BEING EXCEEDINGLY MAD AGAINST THEM

“ . . . and being exceedingly mad against them . . .” Other versions read, “exceedingly enraged,” NKJV “furiously enraged,” NASB “obsession against them,” NIV “in raging fury,” RSV “burning with passion,” BBE “wild fury,” CJB “more and more against them,” DOUAY “violently opposed,” LIVING “crazed against,” IE and “in my bitter fury.” AMPLIFIED

The words “exceedingly mad” are translated from a single Greek word (perissw/j). Its lexical meaning is, “over and above, more than is necessary, superadded . . . superior, extraordinary, surpassing, uncommon,” THAYER “of what exceeds usual expectation extraordinary, remarkable.” FRIBERG Like a blazing inferno that intensified in heat, so the opposition of Saul of Tarsus to “the saints” kept growing, and never waned. This was not the rage of maniac, but a calculated and intelligent opposition that looked for opportunities to harass the followers of Christ.

In other words, this was not simply an authorization to arrest followers of Christ, but a mandate to do so. It appears that the chief priests designated Saul to head up this mission of opposition.

Saul did this out of devotion to God, thinking that this rapidly spreading movement was an encroachment upon the truth that had been vouchsafed to the Jews. He was increasingly zealous in his opposition, but it was not a good cause. By the grace of God, he was forgiven of this outrageous conduct, because he did it “ignorantly and in unbelief” (1 Tim 1:13).

This confirms what ignorance and unbelief can prompt an otherwise devoted person to do.

I PERSECUTED THEME UNTO STRANGE CITIES

“ . . . I persecuted them even unto strange cities.” Other versions read, “foreign cities,” NKJV “far-away towns,” BBE “cities outside the country,” CJB “cities out of our own land,” DARBY “cities outside Jerusalem,” GWN “cities in foreign lands,” LIVING “other towns,” IE and “distant towns.” WILLIAMS

Here again, some of the versions do little more than document the ignorance of the translators. Inappropriate expressions include “cities outside Jerusalem,” “other towns,” and “distant towns.” The reference is to cities outside of “the land of the Jews” (Acts 10:39). The next verse will name one of those cities, which was in Syria.

It ought to be noted that following Saul’s conversion, and commencing with him being referred to as “Paul,” this same man was as zealous to strengthen the people of God as he once was to oppress them. He focused his energy on another cause.

I WENT TO DAMASCUS WITH AUTHORITY

“ 12 Whereupon as I went to Damascus with authority and commission from the chief priests.”

I WENT TO DAMASCUS WITH AUTHORITY AND COMMISSION

Other versions read, “authority and orders,” BBE “authority and power,” CJB “authority and permission,” DOUAY “authority and license,” MRD “authorization and commission,” NAB and “full powers and a commission.” NJB

The lexical meaning of the word translated “commission” is “full authority to carry out an assignment, commission, trust.” FRIBERG In other words, this was not simply an authorization to arrest followers of Christ, but a mandate to do so. It appears that the chief priests designated Saul to head up this mission of opposition.

The actual account of this commission reports that Saul was on the initiative to seek such authority. “And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest, and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem” (Acts 9:1-2). Paul also referred to this when testifying before the Jews who had dragged him from the Temple, initiating this whole episode. “As also the high priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders: from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished” (Acts 22:5).

Although the circumstance is anything but ideal, we see here how the chief priests sought to protect the sanctity of synagogue gatherings. They granted the needed authority, as well as orders to carry out the mandate, to interrupt synagogue proceedings by arresting and binding those who were of “this way” – the path involved in following Jesus Christ.

Those who heard of his mission said that he “destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?” (Acts 9:21).

Early believers were alert to the dangers facing them, and communicated with one another concerning them. This is indication of how they were knit tightly together – a circumstance that is rarely found in our time. Today, the shift has been made to individuals rather than the body.

CONCLUSION

The whole point of Paul's testimony is that he has changed. He has always been devoted to God, as those who knew him could testify. However, something has altered the way he thought, and he has become another man. It is that change that accounts for what he preached and how he went about it. That is what brought an end to his opposition of "the saints." He now had embraced the Jesus whom he once opposed.

We are now living in an era in which moral and spiritual change is, for all practical purposes, ignored. Were Paul to be accepted into a modern recovery group, he would be required to say, "I am a persecutor, that is my nature, and I confess I am unable to control this tendency." He would probably become a part of a special "persecutors" group that was struggling with overcoming this wretched tendency that continued to dominate them.

If all of that sounds ridiculous, it is because it is. Paul not only ceased to be a persecutor, he became the most prolific edifier and strengthener of the body of Christ the world has ever known. He was genuinely changed, given a new heart and a new spirit. His heart had been circumcised, and he had been made a partaker of Christ. That is the point he is making in this defenses, and it is a point that was beyond all controversy. Such is the manner of the Kingdom.

Lesson #100

PAUL'S DEFENSE BEFORE AGRIPPA, #2

“ 26:13 At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me. 14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. 15 And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest. 16 But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; 17 Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, 18 To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me. 19 Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision: 20 But showed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judaea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance. 21 For these causes the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me. 22 Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: 23 That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.” (Acts 26:13-23)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

In his defense, Paul relates the Lord's appearance to him on the road to Damascus. He spells out the commission that was delivered to him, and boldly declares that he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. In relating the details of his calling and commission, Paul also affirms that this is what he was found doing when the Jews "caught" him "in the Temple." He was not causing dissension, or inciting to riot those who were in the Temple. Instead, he was about serving the Lord. Notwithstanding, he tells Agrippa and those with him that he had obtained help from God, and was witnessing to both small and great, declaring only what the prophets and Moses said would come to pass. This was in stark contrast with the charges that he was speaking against the Jews and their customs. If they were sincere, they would have paid attention to, and recognized, the truth of what he was saying. Thus, the spotlight has been turned on his accusers.

THOUGHTS CONCERNING DEFENSE

The idea of giving a defense of oneself is worthy of some consideration. Of old time Tola defended Israel (Judges 10:1). God's people were admonished to "defend the poor" (Psa 82:3). Paul defended himself before the accusing Jews (Acts 22:1). He also said he defended and confirmed the Gospel (Phil 1:7). He even declared that he was "set for," or "appointed for," NKJV "the defense of Gospel" (Phil 1:17).

The word "defense" is translated from the Greek word avpologi,an (apologeeah) – which is transliterated "apology." The lexical meaning of the word is, "verbal defense, speech in defense," THAYER and "to speak on behalf of oneself or of others against accusations presumed to be false." LOUW-NIDA This is the same word employed in First Peter 3:15, where it is translated, "give an answer to every man that asketh a reason for the hope that is in you."

Other Uses of This Word

In his first epistle to the Corinthians Paul defended himself against those were examining him and questioning his apostleship. As in the First Peter text, here the word "answer" is used to translate the Greek word: "Mine answer to them that do examine me is this" (1 Cor 9:3). In his second letter to Timothy, Paul referred to a time when no man stood with him, and all forsook him: "At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge. Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion” (2 Tim 4:16-17). The time during which this occurred is not specified. I assume that it was a trial that took place in Rome. Paul was not actually on trial in any of the cases covered thus far (before the Jews, Felix, and nor Agrippa).

I understand that Peter (1 Pet 3:15) is admonishing all believers to prepare to give an account of their hope before anyone who inquires concerning its reason. It is not common to hear this admonition in our day.

Involved in Confessing Christ

Giving an answer for the hope that is in you, which is what Paul is doing in this text, is involved in confessing Christ before men. Jesus said, “Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before My Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny Me before men, him will I also deny before My Father which is in heaven” (Mat 10:32-33). The context of these words indicates that Jesus was speaking about the response of His disciples to opposition. “What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops . And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell” (Mat 10:27-28).

Therefore, Paul is underscoring his association with Christ, and his commitment to the preaching of the Gospel. He is further doing so with unquestionable certainty and commitment to Jesus.

It is clear that when the followers of Jesus are maligned and opposed because of what they have declared, they are to take care not to mitigate their profession of faith. Their alliance with and allegiance to Christ is not to be hidden. They are not to react in such a manner as to reduce the significance of their embrace of, and commitment to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Therefore, Paul is underscoring his association with Christ, and his commitment to the preaching of the Gospel. He is further doing so with unquestionable certainty and commitment to Jesus. He is not ashamed of Christ or of the Gospel. He chooses not to minimize the commission that was delivered to him by the Lord’s Christ. He does not agree to keep silence, or the refrain from preaching the Gospel.

There are many professing Christians who have ceased to declare the Gospel because it has chaffed against those to whom they made it known. Others have minimized their association with Christ, and sought to paint themselves as a friend to those who do not believe. They have winked the eye at sin, and even blasphemy, imagining that God will strengthen their toned-down witness. But it is all nothing more than a denial of Christ, and is so regarded in heaven. It is a less-than-subtle way of saying, “I know not the man.”

SOMETHING TO BE CONSIDERED

To “deny” Christ is not limited to affirming a lack of faith in Him, or the repudiation of His Person and position. There are at least two ways this denial takes place.

• REFUSING TO SUFFER FOR HIM. “If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us: If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself” (2 Tim 2:12-13). Here, denial is presented as the opposite of suffering, or bearing opposition and persecution that result from being steadfast in the faith. When a person modifies their speech and conduct to avoid the reaction of the ungodly, Christ has been denied.

• DENYING THE LORD IN OUR WORKS. “They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate” (Titus 1:16). A professing Christian that is lacking in the “good works,” which have been ordained for us to walk in them (Eph 2:10), has, in fact, denied the Lord. Those who fail to do what the Lord has required of them are denying him. That is just the way things are.

In our text, we have Paul who has been vigorously opposed for serving the Lord, speaking His Word, and not being ashamed to acknowledge that he lives in the hope of the resurrection of the dead. In order to avoid being dragged from the Temple, and finally incarcerated in prison for two years, all he had to do was cease expressing his faith. However, he refused to do so, even though that resulted in an enormous amount of inconvenience and hardship. It also apparently took him away from his arduous travels and labors. However, he does not balk at any of this, but continues to seize every opportunity to identify himself with Jesus Christ, and declare himself to be faithful to the commission delivered to him.

In doing this, Paul distances himself from all religious pretension. He disassociates himself from lukewarmness and spiritual indolence. Both his stance and his words are a stirring rebuke to half-heartedness, casualness, and carnal convenience. In this, he sets a godly example before us – one we should imitate. Our faith will be put to the test, just as surely as Paul’s faith was tested. Be ready for the test! Be ready to stand, and to answer.

I SAW A LIGHT FROM HEAVEN

“26:13 At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me.”

Remember, Paul is accounting for the change that has taken place in him – an effective moral and spiritual change. Nothing prior to Paul’s confrontation of the Christ of God had wrought a spiritual change in Paul. The Law was not designed to work such a change, but was a system of outward regimentation. The Spirit affirms that the entire service of the Tabernacle “stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation” (Heb 9:10). Remember, the Law itself did not allow the people to draw near to God. The high priest was appointed to represent the people before God, for they could not come into the precincts of the Divine presence themselves (Lev 9:7,15,18; 16:15,24; Num 16:47).

It had been about twenty-one years since the event Paul now describes had taken place. He had traveled extensively, preaching the Gospel in Syria, Crete, Pisidia, Galatia, Phrygia, Macedonia, Greece, and Asia. He had written epistles to believers in Thessalonica, Corinth, Galatia, and Rome. He had been beaten by the Jews five times, beaten three times with rods, stoned once, spent a day and night in the deep, and been in three shipwrecks. This is not to mention perils he had faced in waters, among robbers, among his own countrymen, among the heathen, in the city, in the wilderness, in the sea, and among false brethren. He had also experienced weariness, painfulness, sleeplessness, hunger and thirst, being without food, and being cold and without proper clothing (2 Cor 11:24-27).

Yet, Paul never forgot that memorable day when he was met by the Lord’s Christ, while he was on a mission to make havoc of the Lord’s church! You must never forget that conversion is of such a nature that it will always appear greater than the adversities of life. Many a believing soul has been sustained by the holy recollection of when he passed from death to life, and from being condemned to being justified freely.

I SAW A LIGHT FROM HEAVEN

“At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun . . .” Other versions read, “brighter than the sun,” NASB “about noon,” NIV “shining more brilliantly than the sun,” NJB and “surpassing the brightness of the sun.” WEB

Luke records the event in the following manner. “. . . suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven” (Acts 9:3). Before his Jewish accusers Paul said, “about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me” (Acts 22:6).

This light was a revelation of Divine glory – a glory that supercedes the brilliance of any created light. It was the kind of glory that burst forth from Jesus when He was transfigured, and “His face did shine as the sun” (Matt 17:1). When the sun was at its highest and brightest, a light from heaven dwarfed it in sheer magnitude. Something similar appeared at Mount Sinai – “lightnings,” or “lightning flashes” NASB (Ex 19:16; 20:18).

SHINING ROUND ABOUT ME AND THEM WHICH JOURNEYED WITH ME

“. . . shining round about me and them which journeyed with me.” Other versions read, “blazing all around me and my companions,” NIV and “flashing about me and those who were traveling with me.” AMPLIFIED

What a scene that must have been! Flashes of blinding light all around Saul and those traveling with him.

Luke’s record of the account reads, “And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven” (Acts 9:3). Paul gave this account before the Jews: “And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me” (Acts 22:6).

The light was focused upon Saul, and yet it affected those who were traveling with him as well. Here was a Divine intrusion that halted what Saul was doing, and struck fear onto the hearts of those who were with him. Let no one doubt whether or not the glorified Christ can cause evil intentions to immediately abort, and capture the unmitigated attention of those he is apprehending. This is the event to which Paul referred when he said he had been “apprehended” (Phil 3:12). It was the time when Christ “took hold of” him. NIV Other versions read, “laid hold of by Christ Jesus,” NASB and “laid hold of me and made me His own.” AMPLIFIED Whether or not a person’s theology will allow the acknowledgment of this or not, here is a case where a sinner was forced to confront Jesus, even though he was not seeking Him.

The Lord captured his attention in a manner than could not be contested, and was not resisted.

I HEARD A VOICE

“ 14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.”

WE WERE ALL FALLEN TO THE EARTH

“And when we were all fallen to the earth . . .” Other versions read, “when we all had fallen to the ground,” NASB and “all gone down on the earth.” BBE

The entire entourage traveling with Paul, fell down to the earth with him. This was a Divine intrusion they could not ignore, and the flesh crumbled beneath the shear weight of the glory of Jesus. It was only owing to the mercy and purpose of the Lord that they were not all consumed. Saul was being “apprehended,” and all who were traveling with him were witnesses.

In Christian gatherings, the spirit of casualness and a general lack of interest suggests the absence of the awareness of the Lord Himself. If it is true that Jesus Himself is in the midst of those who have gathered together in His name, then being unaware of that circumstance is a transgression of the greatest magnitude.

This had often been the reaction of those on earth to a heavenly presence injecting itself into the domain of men. Even Balaam's donkey "fell down" at the sight of an angel (Num 22:27). Moses twice "fell down" in the presence of the Lord (Deut 9:18,25). Job "fell down upon the ground" after hearing of the loss of his possessions and children (Job 1:20). When the wise men from the east saw the infant Messiah, they "fell down and worshiped Him" (Matt 1:20). Unclean spirits "fell down before Him" when they saw Jesus (Mk 3:11). When the woman with an issue of blood was healed by Jesus, she "came and fell down before Him" (Mk 5:33). When the knowledge of the Person of Christ dawned upon Peter, "he fell down at Jesus' knees" (Lk 5:8). When Jairus confronted Jesus, he "fell down at Jesus' feet" (Lk 8:41). A healed leper returned to Jesus and "fell down on his face at His feet" (Lk 17:16). Mary, Lazarus' sister, "fell down" at the feet of Jesus (John 11:32). Paul said that when a stranger or unbeliever entered the assembly of the saints, and the "secrets of his heart" were made known by the insightful words of the members of Christ's body, he would be seen "falling down on his face" and worshipping God (1 Cor 14:25). The twenty-four elders of Revelation "fell down before the Lamb" (Rev 5:8,14). The four living creatures of Revelation "fell down and worshiped God" (Rev 19:4). When John saw an angel, he "fell down" (Rev 22:8).

The idea is that of the superiority of the glory of God and the words that are sent by Him to men. The more aware men are of the Lord and the things and personalities in heaven, the more they are humbled, and the less power and dominion their flesh has. By the same token, where there is no consciousness of God or of heavenly influences, the fear of the Lord will not be present. In Christian gatherings, the spirit of casualness and a general lack of interest suggests the absence of the awareness of the Lord Himself. If it is true that Jesus Himself is in the midst of those who have gathered together in His name, then being unaware of that circumstance is a transgression of the greatest magnitude. During the ministry of Jesus, there were some people who were less cognizant of His person than the demons.

The Lord can strike people down to the ground with His glory. Eventually, "when He shall come in His own glory, and in the Father's, and of the holy angels" (Lk 9:26), there will not be a dissenting voice in the universe. No people will gather against Him then, and there will be no blaspheming of His holy name. He will force Himself into the affairs of men. The saints will rejoice, and all of the others will tremble, pleading for something or someone to hide them from the wrath of the Lamb (Rev 6:16-17). Until that time, those with faith are preparing for the day when they will "be like Him," for they will "see Him as He is" (1 John 3:1-3). Now, they bow. Then, every knee shall bow (Rom 14:11; Phil 2:10).

I HEARD A VOICE SPEAKING TO ME

" . . . I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue . . ." Other versions read, "the Hebrew language," NKJV "the Hebrew dialect," NASB "in Aramaic," NIV/NET/NLT/IE/CEV "in Hebrew," CJB and "Hebrews vernacular." INTERLINEAR

Here again, the varied versions introduce some confusion on the matter, some of the Greek lexicons doing the same thing. Even though the word translated "Hebrew" is clearly stated (~Ebrai<di dialektwl – "Hebrew dialect" or language – yet some Greek lexicons add the following: "Hebrew, the Hebrew language; not that however in which the O. T. was written, but the Chaldee (not Syro-Chaldaic, as it is commonly but incorrectly called; cf. A. Th. Hoffmann, Grammat. Syriac., p. 14), which at the time of Jesus and the apostles had long superseded it in Palestine," THAYER "the Hebrew dialect, referring to the particular form of Hebrew (possibly Aramaic) spoken in Palestine," FRIBERG "Hebrew language (i.e. Aramaic), UBS and "Hebrew language, i.e. the Aramaic spoken at that time in Palestine. " GINGRICH The Louw-Nida lexicon presents a better view: "(derivative of ~ Ebrai/oj 'a Hebrew,' 93.105) pertaining to the Hebrews - 'Hebrew' (Lk 23.38, apparatus). The addition of grammasin in some manuscripts literally applies to Hebrew letters, though the reference seems to be to the language, probably Aramaic. In Ac 21.40, 22.2, and 26.14 a peculiar form of ~Ebrai?ko,j, h., o,n occurs, namely, ~Ebrai<di syholarj, hosewer, ecplain it aj from ~Ebrai<j , i<doj relating it to ~Ebrai/oj ou (93.105) .

This rather tedious explanation has been given for a purpose. First, there is nothing in Scripture to indicate that the purity of the Hebrew language was not maintained by devout Jews – particularly sinse their language had been a point of contention and rebuke during their history (Neh 13:24-26). Second, the Aramaic language is not once mentioned in Scripture. Some are of the opinion that the language of the Chaldees was synonymous with “Aramaic.” Third, the Aramaic language was the language of Syria, and was anything but unique to the Hebrews. INTERNATIONAL STANDARD BIBLE DICTIONARY Fourth, the fact that Jesus spoke to Saul in the Hebrew tongue made His communication unique and not common, which appears to be the reason for the Lord speaking in such a manner. Fifth, special note is made of the Hebrews tongue in the Gospels and the book of the Revelation. In John 5:2 the sheep-market pool was called “Bethesda” in the “Hebrew tongue.” The angel of the bottomless pit in the Revelation was called “Apollyon” in the Greek language, but “Abaddon” on the “Hebrew tongue” (Rev 9:11). Also the gathering of the enemies of the Lord is said to be in a place called “Armageddon” in the “Hebrew tongue” (Rev 16:16).

I therefore conclude that the text means precisely what it says.

WHY PERSECUTEST THOU ME?

“ . . . Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me? . . .” Other versions read, “Why are you persecuting Me?” NASB “Why do you persecute Me?” NIV “why are you attacking me so cruelly,” BBE “Why do you keep persecuting me?” CJB “Why do you continue to persecute me?” WILLIAMS and “why do you continue to persecute Me [to harass and trouble and molest Me]?” AMPLIFIED

Here is a perspective of persecution that is hidden from every single person who makes it difficult for the saints of God, or that in any way opposes or afflicts them. This is the ultimate outcome of unbelief, which puts people into the hands of the devil.

The question that is asked is not one to which the glorified Christ is seeking an answer. It rather shines the light upon the ignorance that then dominated Saul (1 Tim 1:13). The question highlighted what Saul of Tarsus did not know, for as soon as he did know who Jesus of Nazareth was, he ceased his campaign against those who believed on Him.

IT IS HARD FOR THEE TO KICK AGAINST THE PRICKS

THE OX GOAD

“Twas observable that in plowing they used goads of an extraordinary size; upon measuring of several I found them to be about eight feet long, and at the bigger end six inches in circumference. They are armed at the lesser end with a sharp prickle for driving the oxen, and at the other end with a small spade or paddle of iron, strong and massy, to clear thee plough from the clay that encumbers it in working” McCLINTOK and STRONG’S CYCLOPEDIA

“ . . . it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.” Other versions read, “It is hard for you to kick against the goads,” NKJV “It hurts you to kick against the goads,” NRSV “It is hard for you to go against the impulse which is driving you,” BBE “It's hard on you to be kicking against the ox-goads!” CJB “It's hard for a mortal like you to resist God,” GWN and “It is dangerous and turns out badly for you to keep kicking against the goads [to keep offering vain and perilous resistance].” AMPLIFIED

3 Now we come to a circumstance that was within. There was a goading that was taking place in Saul of Tarsus – a goading of the conscience that was sharp and difficult to bear. The specific cause of the pricking of conscience is not spelled out. Perhaps it was witnessing the stoning of Stephen and the spiritual composure he maintained until he breathed his last breath. It could have been the call of Stephen to the glorified Christ, “Lord, lay not this sin to their charge” (Acts 7:60).

Perhaps it was some of the experiences that took place when he hauled both men and women out of their homes and synagogues, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against them. What images had been stamped upon his soul as he relentlessly sought to make them blaspheme the name of the Lord, disowning Him in a public manner?

And, who was it that was wielding this tormenting goad? This was doubtless the Holy Spirit, convicting Saul of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment. If so, it was all associated with his opposition to Christ Jesus and those who were believing on Him. As Jesus opened more fully to Saul, there is a dissoluble unity between Himself and His people.

The fact that Saul did not deny the existence of the goads tells us something. He knew at this time that whoever he had confronted, it was certainly not an ordinary man. Here was a Person who reached back more than two decades, and with penetrating insight probes the conscience of this Jewish zealot.

Jesus can certainly do such things, and there is no indication that this ability has been relegated to the past. The Lord is still known as “He that searcheth the hearts” (Rom 8:27). The glorified Christ Himself said to the seven churches of Asia, “I am He which searcheth the reins and hearts” (Rev 2:23). Elsewhere it is said of Him, “all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom, we have to do” (Heb 4:13). When the disciples were about to choose a replacement for the bishopric vacated by Judas, they addressed the Lord in this manner: “Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men” (Acts 1:24).

Saul of Tarsus, knowing the Scriptures, knew that the prophets spoke of this Divine attribute. “But the righteous God trieth the hearts and reigns” (Psa 7:8). And again, “He knoweth the secrets of the heart” (Psa 44:21). Jeremiah said God “tries the reins and the heart” (Jer 11:20). God Himself said, “I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins” (Jer 17:10). He “sees the reins and the heart” (Jer 20:12). Even when Jesus walked among men, “He knew what was in man” (John 2:25).

I do not believe enough is made of this in our time – a time when men appear more interested in psychoanalyzing the people, rather than informing them that God knows their thoughts, their motives, and their intentions. Perhaps these things are known theoretically, or even acknowledged in a creedal form. However, the academic knowledge of the fact of the discerning and probing eye of the Lord has not produced fruit that glorifies God. It appears to me that a significant number of religious people have not been exposed to enough truth concerning God Himself to cause their conscience to be pricked. A concept of God has been produced that does not allow for conviction, which means that it is a false concept.

I SAID, “WHO ART THOU, LORD?”

“ 15 And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.”

Saul immediately responded to the voice of the Lord. He did not faint with fear, although fear had unquestionably come upon him. The glory that threw him to the ground, as it were, did not rob him of sound thought. Not knowing who he had confronted, he inquired with humility who was speaking to him.

WHO ART THOU LORD?

“And I said, Who art thou, Lord? . . . ” Other versions read, “who are you, sir,” CJB/GWN/NAB/LIVING/WILLIAMS and “My Lord, who art thou?” MRD The word translated “Lord” is the customary Greek word for this expression – ku,rioj . The lexical meaning of the word is, “having power or authority) (from Pindar down), he to whom a person or thing belongs, about which he has the power of deciding; master, lord; used a. universally, of the possessor and disposer of a thing, the owner . . . one who has control of the person,” THAYER “(strong, authoritative); hence, one having legal power lord, master,” FRIBERG and “a title for God and for Christ) one who exercises supernatural authority over mankind - Lord, Ruler, One who commands.” LOUW-NIDA

At the very least, Saul’s use of this word was a recognition of the superiority personality that had confronted him, whether perceived as an angel or the Lord of glory. Saul had immediately recognized that he was vastly inferior to the one who appeared to him. It was obvious He was not one of his peers.

Luke’s recounting of this incident represents Saul as saying, “Who art thou, Lord?” (Acts 9:5). When Paul testified to the Jews, he reported the same thing: “Who art thou, Lord?”

The term Lord (ku,rioj) is used 747 times from Matthew through Revelation. Its prevailing use is applied to Deity, and infrequently to holy and glorious angels. It is used 113 times in the book of Acts. In those instances, with only three exceptions, the word always applies to Deity. The three exceptions are as follows.

- Cornelius to the angel of the Lord: “What is it Lord ?” (Acts 10:4).
- The “ masters ” who had enslaved the woman with a demon in Macedonia (Acts 16:19).
- The jailer to Paul and Silas: “ sirs , what must I do to be saved” (Acts 16:30).

Even in the exceptions, the persons being addressed were perceived as being in control of the situation, and were seen as greater than the person with whom they were associated. The English word “sir” once meant “a man of rank or position.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER Today, however, it is usually used to denote respect for an individual. It is too weak of a word for this text, as represented in several modern versions (CJB/GWN/NAB/LIVING/ WILLIAMS). At the very least, Saul’s use of this word was a recognition of the superiority personality that had confronted him, whether perceived as an angel or the Lord of glory. Saul had immediately recognized that he was vastly inferior to the one who appeared to him. It was obvious He was not one of his peers.

I AM JESUS WHOM THOU PERSECUTEST

“ . . . And He said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.” Other versions read, “I am Jesus whom you are persecuting,” NKJV “I am Jesus, whom you are attacking,” BBE “I am Yeshua, and you are persecuting me!,” CJB and “I am Jesus, the one you're persecuting.” GWN

When Paul reported this incident to the Jews, he said, “And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest” (Acts 22:8). Earlier, Paul had told Agrippa that he had thought within himself that he “ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth” (Acts 26:9). This distinguished Jesus of Nazareth from others who had the same name (Colossians 4:11, surnamed Justus, and Hebrews 4:8, Joshua).

Again, the identity of the saints with the Lord Jesus is quite clear. Of old time, it was said of the Israelites, “He kept him as the apple of His eye” (Deut 32:10). Again, Zechariah the prophet declared, “he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of His eye” (Zech 2:8).

In redemption, however, the relationship of the saved with the Savior is much closer.

• THEY ARE ONE SPIRIT WITH THE LORD. “But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit” (1 Cor 6:17).

• THEY ARE OF CHRIST’S FLESH, AND OF HIS BONE. “For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones” (Eph 5:30).

• THEY HAVE BEEN ADDED TO THE LORD. “And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women” (Acts 5:14).

• THEY HAVE BEEN BAPTIZED INTO CHRIST. “For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ” (Gal 3:27).

• THEY ARE ONE WITH THE FATHER AND THE SON. “That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me” (John 17:21).

• THEY ARE THE BODY OF CHRIST. “And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence” (Col 1:18). “Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular” (1 Cor 12:27).

+ This revealed affinity is why Jesus could say, “I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.” It is a very real association, and not merely a figurative one. That is what makes the persecution of believers, and causing them grief, so serious. It reveals what the offenders really think of the Lord Jesus, and of God the Father. Jesus said, “Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth Me; and he that receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me” (John 13:20). Again He said, “He that heareth you heareth Me; and he that despiseth you despiseth Me; and he that despiseth Me despiseth Him that sent Me” (Luke 10:16). That is how closely we are united with the Lord.

When the people of God are harmed in any way, or maligned, or despised, or hated, it is duly noted in heaven. No such treatment is ignored in the pure and holy precincts of heaven! It is duly noted, and is taken personally by Jesus. It will help you to survive the assaults of the wicked if you will keep this in mind.

I HAVE APPEARED UNTO THEE FOR THIS PURPOSE

“ 16 But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee.”

The words Paul now relates must have been especially sweet to him when they were spoken. Upon hearing that this was Jesus who, he was persecuting, there is no note of vengeance in the Lord’s word. It is rather a consoling words that accentuated the marvelous grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

RISE AND STAND UPON THY FEET

“But rise, and stand upon thy feet . . .” Other versions read, “Now get up and stand on your feet,” NIV and “Stand up!” GWN Thus the words of the Psalmist were fulfilled: “The Lord . . . raiseth up all those that be bowed down” (Psa 145:14). A salient statement in the prayer of Hannah was also fulfilled: “He bringeth low and lifteth up” (1 Sam 2:7). The word of Hosea was also seen in our Lord’s dealing with Saul: “He hath smitten and He will bind us up” (Hos 6:1).

Blessed is the person who realizes that holy alertness always follows being perceptibly humbled!

I HAVE APPEARED UNTO THEE FOR THIS PURPOSE

“ . . . for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose . . .” Other versions read, “for this purpose I have appeared to you,” NASB “to this end have I appeared unto thee,” ASV “I have appeared to you for a reason,” GWN “for this very purpose,” WEYMOUTH and “in order to.” MONTGOMERY

This account is not given in Luke’s record of the appearance of Jesus to Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9:6). Some have conjectured that Paul combined what was said directly by Jesus, and what was said through Ananias.

Experience is not an end of itself. I do not receive this explanation. I prefer to take Paul at his word, that this was said to him on the road to Damascus, and that Ananias provided a confirming testimony regarding the reason for Christ’s appearance to Saul.

Valid experience is not an end of itself. Some entertain the notion that experience stands by itself, without regard to purpose or Divine intent. This is not, however, the manner of the Kingdom. The Lord Himself makes this inclusive statement: “ye shall know that I have not done without cause all that I have done in it, saith the Lord GOD” (Ezek 14:23). All of God’s callings are associated with a purpose, or objective.

TO MAKE THEE A MINISTER AND A WITNESS

“ . . . to make thee a minister and a witness . . .” Other versions read, “servant and as a witness,” NIV “to serve and testify,” NRSV “serve and bear witness,” RSV “designate you in advance as a servant and witness,” NET “appoint you as My servant and as witness,” NJB “appoint thee an officer and a witness,” YLT “chosen you to be My servant. You will be My witness,” IE and “to serve as [My] minister, and to bear witness,” AMPLIFIED

The original word translated “make” means, “to choose, to appoint,” THAYER “to choose, elect,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “choose for oneself, select, appoint.” GINGRICH This word is used only twice in the Greek Scriptures (Acts 22:14; 26:15). Both instances refer to the calling of Paul.

The Scriptures record that Ananias also confirmed this testimony to Saul: “And he said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee , that thou shouldest know His will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of His mouth” (Acts 22:14).

Right here we are exposed to the Kingdom concept of a “servant.” The word means more than a mere slave. As defined by the word of Ananias, it involves being chosen to KNOW Christ’s will. Thus Jesus distinguished His servants from mere slaves who went about doing what they were told, yet without any understanding of the purpose of their master. “Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of My Father I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in My name, He may give it you” (John 15:15-16). The word to the eleven apostles is an exact parallel of the word delivered to Saul.

This includes Paul’s experience on the road to Damascus, what was told him by Jesus, the insight that was received from it, and the commission given to him. In short, he was to testify as to how the Lord Jesus had apprehended him, and the purpose for that apprehension.

This refers to the sending of insightful proclaimers as stated in Romans 10:14-15: “How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent ? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!” Such messengers are not sent out by missionary boards and other humanly devised organizations. In my judgment, the telling difference between those who can effectively communicate the Gospel and those who cannot is traced back to their appointment by the Head of the church. This is also involved in the placement of the various members of the body where it has pleased God (1 Cor 12:18).

From a human point of view, how likely is it that Saul of Tarsus would be so appointed? There certainly is no indication that any of the believers suspected this would happen. In fact, at the first, Ananias, who was called by Jesus to minister to Saul, found it difficult to see Paul as a “chosen vessel” (Acts 9:15).

The Concept of Serving Christ

Our day is marked by an astounding ignorance of what it means to “serve” Christ. Some perceive this as doing some Christian work that they themselves have birthed. Jesus said of such people, “If any man serve me, let him follow Me; and where I am, there shall also My servant be: if any man serve Me, him will My Father honor” (John 12:26).

A servant of Christ is noted for following Him, and being where Jesus is. He is carrying out the Savior’s will, being taught by Him, and directed by Him as well.

THESE THINGS WHICH THOU HAST SEEN

“ . . . both of these things which thou hast seen . . .” Other versions read, “of what you have seen of Me,” NIV “the things in which You have seen Me,” NRSV “wherein thou hast seen Me,” ASV “what you have already seen of Me,” CJB “a witness of this thy seeing me,” MRD and “as a witness of this vision in which you have seen me.” NJB

This includes Paul’s experience on the road to Damascus, what was told him by Jesus, the insight that was received from it, and the commission given to him. In short, he was to testify as to how the Lord Jesus had apprehended him, and the purpose for that apprehension.

It is a principle woven throughout the Lord’s dealings with men, that what they have been given to see is to be declared. This is in order that He might be properly glorified. In the episode recorded in Acts chapters 22-26, Paul has already testified of what he first saw two times (Acts 22:6-11; 26:13-18).

THOSE THINGS IN WHICH I WILL APPEAR UNTO THEE

“ . . . and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee.” Other versions read, “things which I will yet reveal to you,” NKJV “the things in which I will appear to you,” NASB “and what I will show you,” NIV “and of those in which you will see Me,” BBE “what you will see when I appear to you in the future,” CJB and “what I will show you.” GWN

The glorified Christ would show Paul more. As a faithful steward, counted to be “faithful” (1 Tim 1:12), Paul would declare those coming revelations. In spiritual life, there is a twofold perspective: what you have seen, and what you will see. We have records of him doing precisely this. Here are three rather broad categories.

- CONCERNING THE LORD’S SUPPER – 1 Corinthians 11:23-32.
- CONCERNING THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE MYSTERY OF CHRIST – Ephesians 3:4-7.
- CONCERNING THE UNSEARCHABLE RICHES OF CHRIST – Ephesians 3:7.

I have compiled a partial listing of teachings that are, for the most part, unique to Paul. I list them here in order to emphasize the extensive revelation that was vouchsafed to Paul.

PAUL'S UNIQUE TEACHING

THINGS GIVEN FOR ALL MEN TO HEAR

1. That the church is the body of Christ (Rom 12:4-5; 1 Cor 12:12-27; Eph 1:23; 2:16; 3:6; 4:4,12-16; 5:23,30; Col 1:16; 2:19; 3:15).
2. Jesus Christ as the Head of the body (Eph 5:23; Col 1:18; 2:19).
3. The merging of Jew and Gentile in Christ (Eph 2:15-16,19).
4. The exposition of justification by faith (Rom 3:20-5:18; Gal 2:16-17; 3:8-24).
5. The distinction between the Old and New Covenants (2 Cor 3:6-14; 7:22; 8:8-13; 10:16-17; Gal 3:15-17; 4:22-28; Heb 9:15-20).
6. The reality of "the old man" and "the new man" (Rom 6:6; Eph 5:22-24; Col 3:9-10).
7. The inner warfare experienced by those who live by faith (Rom 7:15-25; Gal 5:17).
8. The spiritual logic that declares the coming conversion of the Jews (Romans chapters 9-11).
9. The High Priesthood of Christ (Heb 3:1; 4:14-15; 5:5,10; 6:20; 7:26; 8:1; 9:11; 10:21).
10. The relation of Abraham to those who believe (Rom 4:1-16; Gal 3:6-18).
11. The significance of Melchizedec (Heb 5:6,10; 6:20; 7:1, 10-21).
12. The eternal purpose of God (Rom 8:28; Eph 1:11; 3:11; 2 Tim 1:9).
13. What took place behind the scenes when Jesus died (Col 1:20; 2:14-15; Heb 2:14; 9:26).
14. The whole armor of God (Rom 13:12; 2 Cor 6:7; Eph 6:10-18).
15. Spiritual weaponry (2 Cor 10:4-5; Eph 6:17).
16. Believers battling with principalities and powers (Eph 6:12).
17. The fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22-23; Eph 5:9).
18. The works of the flesh (Gal 5:19-21).
19. The office of a Bishop (1 Tim 3:1-7; Tit 1:7-11).
20. The office of a deacon (1 Tim 3:10-13).
21. The exposition of spiritual gifts, and how they are administered (Rom 12:3-8; 1 Cor 12:1-31; 14:1-12; Eph 4:11-16).
22. Why men cannot be justified by works (Rom 3:26; 4:2; Gal 2:16; 3:2-5).
23. The imputation of righteousness upon the basis of faith (Rom 1:7; 3:22-25; 4:5-25; 10:6-10; Phil 3:9).
24. Extensive teaching concerning baptism into Christ (Rom 6:1-23; Gal 3:27; Eph 4:5; Col 2:11-15).
25. The comparison of Adam and Christ (Rom 5:14-21; 1 Cor 15:22,45).
26. Extensive teaching on the resurrection of the dead (1 Cor 15:15-57).
27. The ministry of the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:11-14, 26-27; 2 Cor 3:3-18; Gal 4:6, 29; 5:5,16-18,22-24; 6:8; Eph 2:22; Eph 5:9).

28. The intercession and mediation of Christ Jesus (Heb 7:25; 1 Tim 2:5; Heb 8:6; 9:15; 12:24).
29. The intercession of the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:26-27).
30. Predestination and election (Rom 8:29-33; 9:11; 11:5-7,28; Eph 1:5,11; Col 3:12; 1 Thess 1:4; 2 Tim 2:10; Tit 1:1).
31. The body being for the Lord (Rom 12:1-2; 1 Cor 6:-13-20).
32. God's objective for believers (Rom 8:29-30; Eph 3:15-30; 4:12-16; Col 1:9-11).
33. The resurrection body (2 Cor 5:1-5).
34. The accomplishments of the cross (Eph 2:16; Phil 2:8; Col 1:20; 2:14-15).
35. Extensive teaching concerning the Lord's Table (1 Cor 10:21; 11:23-29).
36. Types and shadows (Gal 4:24; Col 2:17; Heb 8:5; 9:24; 10:1).
37. Extensive teaching of the grace of God (Rom 3:24; 4:4,16; 5:2, 15-17, 20-21; 6:14-15; ; 11:5-6; 12:3-6; 1 Cor 15:10; 2 Cor 8:9; Gal 1:15; Eph 2:5-8; 2 Thess 2:16; 1 Tim 1:14; 2 Tim 1:9; Tit 2:11-12; Tit 3:7; Heb 2:9; 4:16; 12:28).
38. Heavenly hosts being tutored concerning God's wisdom through the church (Eph 3:10).
39. Angels being present in the assembly of the saints (1 Cor 11:10; Heb 12:22).
40. How the church is to respond to immoral people among them (1 Cor 5:1-9).
41. With the exceptions of six references to the "Gospel" in the book of Acts, and five references in the epistles and Revelation, every mention of that word from in Romans through Revelation (seventy-five) is found in Paul's writings.
42. The ascension of Jesus and its bearing on the gifts given to the church (Eph 1:20; 4:8-11; 1 Tim 3:16; Heb 1:3; 4:14; 9:14).
43. The use of the word "heavenly" (1 Cor 15:48,49; Eph 1:3,20; 2:6; 3:10; 2 Tim 4:18; Heb 3:1; 6:4; 8:5).
44. The degeneracy of the Gentile world without Christ (Rom 1:19-32).
45. With the exception of two references in First Peter, and one in Third John, the remaining teaching concerning Gentiles is given by Paul (48 references).
46. The fact that some of the Jewish branches were broken off, and some Gentiles were grafted into the Jewish olive tree (Rom 11:11-24).
47. The "man of sin" and the "son of perdition" (2 Thess 2:3).
48. The destruction of the man of sin at the coming of the Lord (2 Thess 2:3-10).
49. Receiving the love of the truth, and the consequences of not doing so (2 Thess 2:10-12).
50. What was involved in the condescension of Christ coming into the world (Phil 2:5-8).
51. What we are "come to" in Christ Jesus (Heb 12:22-24).

The fact that the vast majority of Christendom is abysmally ignorant of nearly all of these subjects confirms that the ministry of Paul has been largely rejected in our day.

52. +In showing the folly of seeking to be justified by Law, the allegory of Hagar and Sarah in explaining the distinction of the New Covenant (Gal 4:21-31).

53. The circumcision of Christ and of the heart (Rom 2:29; Col 2:11-12).
54. Newness of life and newness of spirit (Rom 6:4; 7:6).
55. The church is the Temple of God (1 Cor 3:16-17).
56. The church is built together for a habitation of God through the Spirit (Eph 2:22).
57. A warning to take heed how one builds upon the foundation of Christ (1 Cor 3:10-11).
58. Products of preaching referred to as wood, hay, stubble, gold, silver, and precious stones – some to be ultimately rejected, some to be received (1 Cor 3:12-16).
59. Whoever defiles the temple of God with inferior converts will be destroyed (1 Cor 3:17).
60. Delivering a professing Christian to Satan for the destruction of the flesh (1 Cor 5:5).
61. The means of supporting the proclaimer of Word as being typified under the Law (1 Cor 9:11-14).
62. The faithful receiving praise from God (1 Cor 4:5).
63. The purpose for civil government (Rom 13:1-7).
64. That the grace of God teaches the saved to reject ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world (Tit 2:11-12).
65. That “the flesh,” or the “old man” is to be crucified (Rom 6:6; Gal 2:20; 5:24; 6:14).
66. That we can walk in the Spirit (Gal 5:16,25).
67. That is we walk in the Spirit, we will not fulfill the lust of the flesh (Gal 5:16,25).
68. That there is “no condemnation” to them which are in Christ Jesus (Rom 8:1).
69. That we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ (Rom 5:1).
70. All of the teaching on reconciliation to God (Rom 5:10; 11:15; 2 Cor 5:18-20; Eph 2:16; Col 1:20-21; Heb 2:17).
71. With the exception of two brief references by Peter (1 Pet 1:2; 3:15), and one by Jude (Jude 1:1), all of the doctrine concerning sanctification comes from Paul (Rom 15:16; 1 Cor 1:2,30; 6:11; Eph 5:26; 1 Thess 4:3-4; 5:23; 2 Thess 2:13; 2 Tim 2:21; Heb 2:11; 10:10,14,29; 13:12).
72. A comparison of the glory of the Old Covenant as compared with the glory of the New Covenant (2 Cor 3:7-11).
73. That those who indulge the flesh will have no part in the inheritance reserved for those in Christ Jesus (1 Cor 6:9-10; Gal 5:19-21; Eph 5:5-7).
74. On the subject of reprobacy (Rom 1:18; 2 Cor 13:5-6; 2 Tim 3:8; Tit 1:6).

The fact that the vast majority of Christendom is abysmally ignorant of nearly all of these subjects confirms that the ministry of Paul has been largely rejected in our day. These revelations were given to him to make them known, particularly to the church. Jesus did what He said He was going to do – show Paul many things. Paul did what he was supposed to do – make them known. Now it is the solemn responsibility of every believer to not be ignorant in these areas. To remain in a state of ignorance after such a phenomenal outpouring of Divine wisdom and insight is inexcusable! It is a betrayal of the heart and the low level of understanding.

DELIVERING AND SENDING

“ 17 Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee.”

The Lord Jesus pledged to protect Paul, so that nothing would ultimately interfere with carrying out the commission that will be delivered to him. This equates to the promise made to the twelve apostles: “lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen” (Matt 28:20).

DELIVERING THEE FROM THE PEOPLE

“Delivering thee from the people . . .” Other versions read, “to deliver you from the Jewish people,” NKJV “I will rescue you from your own people,” NIV “keep you safe from the people,” BBE “taking thee out from among the people,” DARBY “Delivering thee from this people,” GENEVA “protect you from . . . your own people,” LIVING “save you from the Jewish people,” IE and “continue to rescue you from the Jewish people.” WILLIAMS

How many times the Lord did deliver Paul from the malicious intentions of the Jews! While he did endure five beatings from them (2 Cor 11:24), they could not carry out their determination to kill him. Here are some of those deliverances.

- The Jews in Damascus (Acts 9:23-25).
- The Jews in Jerusalem (Acts 9:29-30).
- The Jews in Antioch of Pisidia (Acts 13:50-51).
- The Jews in Iconium (Acts 14:5-6).
- When he was stoned by the Jews in Lystra (Acts 14:19-20).
- The Jews in Thessalonica (Acts 17:1-10).
- The Jews from Thessalonica who sought Paul out in Berea (Acts 17:13-15).
- The Jews in Corinth (Acts 18:8-10).
- The Jews who charged Paul before Gallio (Acts 18:12-16).
- The Jews who sought to kill him when he went into the Temple (Acts 21:18-31).
- The Jews who charged him before the Roman captain (Acts 22:21-24; 23:10).
- The Jews who sought to have Festus transport him from Caesarea to Jerusalem (Acts 25:3-4).

DELIVERING THEE FROM THE GENTILES

“ . . . and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee.”

There were also deliverances from Gentile idol-worshippers.

- The Gentiles in Iconium who were stirred up by the Jews (Acts 14:5-6)
- The Gentiles in Philippi (Acts 16:26-39).
- The Gentiles in Ephesus (Acts 19:28-41).
- The Gentiles soldiers who had determined to kill the prisoners on their boat during a storm (Acts 27:42-43).
- From the beasts in Ephesus (1 Cor 15:32).
- From three shipwrecks (2 Cor 11:25).

- From perils among the heathen (2 Cor 11:28).

This is not to mention the times Paul was delivered from perils in waters, among robbers, in the wilderness, in the sea, and among false brethren (2 Cor 11:26-27).

Behold the faithfulness of the Lord Jesus in the preservation of Paul! Nothing was able to separate him from the love God, thwart his ministry, or pluck him from the hand of Jesus. Paul's faith sustained him as he was being "kept by the power of God" (1 Pet 1: 5). He put on the whole armor of God, and thus survived assault after assault. He was delivered, was being delivered, and would be delivered.

THE COMMISSION

" 18 To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me."

Here is a commission that is omitted in other accounts of Paul being apprehended by Jesus (Acts 9:6-18; 22:10-18). This does not mean the other accounts are in any way deficient. Further, this was a unique opportunity to bear witness to the things he had been given to see. Before him stands a gathering of dignitaries that are not seeking his life. He will share with them some things he was not able to share with others. There are people whose condition robs them of the right to the "unsearchable riches of Christ."

TO OPEN THEIR EYES

"To open their eyes . . ." Other versions read, "to make their eyes open," BBE "you will open their eyes," GWN "you are to open their eyes," CEV "to open the eyes of the outsiders so they can see the difference," MESSAGE and "to up-open viewers." INTERLINEAR

It ought to be apparent that everyone does not have such a commission – but Paul did. He was granted a dispensation of grace that enabled him to cause people to have spiritual comprehension – to see the sense of redemption and take hold of the message of salvation by grace through faith.

Paul did not do this by laying hands upon people and thus enabling them to see the things of God. He did it by preaching and teaching what He had seen and heard. The truth of the matter is that if people will hear what Paul declares, and receive it as from God, their eyes will be opened. This is what took place among the Thessalonians. "For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe " (1 Thess 2:13).

If, however, the teaching of Paul is neglected or rejected, there is no other way to arrive at the truth he was uniquely given to see. He was appointed by Jesus to open the eyes of those willingly and eagerly subjected to his word.

To clarify once again, the opening of men's eyes has to do with comprehension, discernment, and understanding. It is bringing men to a point where they are "able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God" (Eph 3:18-19). It is a condition where the "eyes of" their "understanding" are opened (Eph 1:18), and they are "filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding" (Col 1:9).

All of this has particularly to do with discerning what God has and is doing through the Lord Jesus Christ. This is not a kind of novel knowledge, but what is required to sustain the good fight of faith, and finish the race that is set before us.

All of this has particularly to do with discerning what God has and is doing through the Lord Jesus Christ. This is not a kind of novel knowledge, but what is required to sustain the good fight of faith, and finish the race that is set before us.

TO TURN THEM FROM DARKNESS TO LIGHT

“ . . . and to turn them from darkness to light . . .” Other versions read, “so that they may turn from darkness to light,” NASB and “that they may turn from darkness to light.” AMPLIFIED

This is the reason for opening the eyes of the people – that they may turn from darkness to light. This “light” is elsewhere described as “the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 4:6), and “beholding as in a glass [mirror] the glory of the Lord” (2 Cor 3:18). As stated in Second Corinthians 3:18, this is the means by which we “are constantly being transfigured into His very own image in ever increasing splendor and from one degree of glory to another; [for this comes] from the Lord [Who is] the Spirit.” AMPLIFIED

This change is facilitated by the opening of the eyes of our understanding, when what God has and is doing through Jesus Christ is seen with holy clarity. Until this understanding is obtained, no measurable change into the likeness of Christ can occur.

The lack of this understanding is cause for great concern. To be “without understanding” is a mark of the heathen (Rom 1:31), and is a sure mark of being lost (Eph 4:18). The “church world” is quite content for this condition to exist, but heaven is not! An ignorant and untaught church is a contradiction of the salvation of God. To a significant degree, this condition in the Gentile church exists because what was revealed to Paul is not being made known to the people. I do not know how this can this conclusion can be successfully contradicted.

TO TURN THEM FROM THE POWER OF SATAN UNTO GOD

“ . . . and from the power of Satan unto God . . .” Other versions read, “from the dominion of Satan to God,” NASB “from the power of the adversary to God,” CJB “from Satan’s control to God’s,” GWN “from the authority of the adversary unto God,” YLT “live in the light of God instead of in Satan's darkness,” LIVING “from the obedience to Satan to God,” WEYMOUTH and “see the difference between Satan and God.” MESSAGE

Why does sin appear to be flourishing in the church? Why are families falling apart, and people remaining in bondage to all manner of sin? What is the cause of this? Why is there such a seeming need for counselors, recovery programs, and various forms of human discipline? The situation may be glossed by cursory observations. However, the truth of the matter is that masses of professing Christians have not been turned from the power of Satan under God. They are enslaved by gross appetites, and are being taken captive by Satan “at his will” (2 Tim 2:26).

Why should such a condition continue when Jesus has appointed an effective minister with a message that can turn men from the power of Satan unto God, and from being dominated by Satan to being willingly governed by God? Why is Paul’s teaching being neglected, and sometimes rejected by the very people to whom he has been sent – the Gentiles?

Just as with Corinth and Galatia, “another gospel” has been preached – another message (2 Cor 11:4; Gal 1:6-7). However, this corrupt message has no power. It is a “form of godliness that denies,” or rejects, “the power” (2 Tim 3:5). This is precisely why professing Christians remain enslaved to Satan and sin. Simply put, Jesus does not work through these watered down worldly-wise messages! Any message that, when received, does not produce freedom from the guilt and power of sin, and liberty from the dominion of Satan, is a spurious message. Such a word has come from the devil himself, and is calculated to keep men in bondage to him.

Men may banter on and on about which message is true, and which church is valid. But the fruit tells the whole story, and blessed is the person who can see it.

THAT THEY MAY RECEIVE FORGIVENESS OF SINS

“ . . . that they may receive forgiveness of sins . . .” Other versions read, “receive remission of sins,” ASV “receive, through faith in me, forgiveness of their sins,” NJB “receive forgiveness for their sins,” LIVING “have their sins forgiven,” WILLIAMS and “receive forgiveness and release from their sins.” AMPLIFIED

Observe, the forgiveness of sins follows the opening of the eyes, being turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God! This forgiveness cannot be obtained independently of the opening and turning of reference.

What does it mean to receive the forgiveness of sins? Perhaps you have heard the psycho-babel that says, “I know God has forgiven me, but I have not been able to forgive myself.” And what kind of miserable work is that? What inspired man ever uttered or wrote such an absurdity?

The forgiveness of sins involves the conscience of the forgiven one. In fact, in baptism, which is declared to be “for the remission of sins” (Acts 2:38), and the washing away of sins (Acts 22:16), there is an appeal to God for a “good conscience.” Peter wrote that “baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 3:21). The Amplified Bible reads, “by [providing you with] the answer of a good and clear conscience (inward cleanness and peace) before God.” Other versions read , “an appeal to God for a good conscience,” NASB “An appeal to God for a clear conscience,” RSV “the interrogation of a good conscience toward God,” ASV and “a confident demanding which a good conscience maketh to God.” GENEVA

Peter also points out the difference between a mere ceremonial washing, as under the Law, and the effective cleansing of the conscience: “not the putting away of the filth of the flesh.” Several of the versions butcher this text, like unlearned novices hacking away at the sacred text. “The removal of dirt from the flesh,” NASB “the removal of dirt from the body,” NIV “the removing of outward body filth [bathing],” AMPLIFIED and “ the removing of outward body filth [bathing].” BBE

Peter is saying that baptism bears no similarity to the ceremonial washings that took place under the Law (Heb 9:10). Those only had to do with qualifying a person to walk among the people of God. They had nothing whatsoever to do with the purging, or cleansing, of the conscience. Thus it is written of the highest and most holy day of atonement, “Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience ” (Heb 9:9). And again, “For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins ” (Heb 10:1-2). Thus, the ancient sacrifices stirred to the “remembrance of sin” (Heb 10:3).

By way of comparison, the forgiveness of sins has to do with remembering that sins have been forgiven, and that the person has been “justified from all things” (Acts 13:39). This has to do with knowing there “is therefore now no condemnation” (Rom 8:1). The person who labors under the condemning goad of the conscience has not received the forgiveness of reference – even though they may have “obeyed the Gospel” (Rom 10:16). Thus believers are told, “For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?” (Heb 9:14).

In my understanding, everyone that is baptized into Christ begins newness of life with this cleansed conscience. They begin with the “rejoicing of the hope” that is to be kept “firm unto the end” (Heb 3:6). It is quite true that this can be more intuitive than cognitive. However, through the insightful teaching of Paul every believer can obtain a more firm grasp on the truth of forgiveness, and thus begin to “reign in life” (Rom 5:17). Oh, the blessedness of receiving the forgiveness of sins!

THAT THEY MAY RECEIVE INHERITANCE

There is no advantage whatsoever in an approach to spiritual life that excludes or minimizes the inheritance.

“ . . . and inheritance . . .” Other versions read, “and a place among those,” NIV “and an inheritance,” ASV “a heritage,” BBE “a share among those,” CSB “a lot among,” DOUAY “a portion with,” MRD “a share in the inheritance,” NJB “and God’s inheritance,” LIVING “have a possession among,” WILLIAMS “a place and portion among,” AMPLIFIED “become a part of,” CEV and “inviting them into the company of.” MESSAGE

As used in this text the word “inheritance” means, “what is obtained by lot, allotted portion,” THAYER “as what is assigned or allotted portion, share, possession,” FRIBERG “share, part, place,” UBS “share, portion Dt 10,9; that which is assigned by lot, office, service Neh 10,35; plot of land 1 Ezzr 4,56; inheritance,” LEH “that which is assigned by lot, portion, share, place.” GINGRICH

The word can also mean the means by which the lot was determined – a pebble, stone, or some other object. But that is not the meaning of the word here. The point is WHAT is inherited, not the means by which the determination is made. It is the inheritance itself, not the people with whom it is shared. Those with whom the inheritance is shared are mentioned in the next clause.

Some versions place the emphasis upon the people receiving the inheritance rather than the inheritance itself. This makes the expression a redundancy. It is the business of translators to know the message they are translating.

The inheritance of the people of God is declared in several expressions.

- They will “inherit the earth” (Matt 5:5).
- “Everlasting life” is an inheritance (Matt 19:28).
- “The Kingdom of God” is said to be the inheritance (1 Cor 6:10).
- The inheritance is said to be “in the kingdom of Christ and of God” (Eph 5:5).
- We are speaking of an “eternal inheritance” (Heb 9:15).
- It is also referred to as being “incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you” (1 Pet 1:4).
- Those who overcome are said to “inherit all things” (Rev 21:7).

There is no advantage whatsoever in an approach to spiritual life that excludes or minimizes the inheritance. For Paul, a necessary part of his ministry was preparing people for their inheritance – their “eternal inheritance.” This involved acquainting them with the inheritance itself. Of course, to the carnally minded, this makes no sense at all, for they are living for “this present evil world,” and that is not the inheritance God has for His children.

If men do not receive the inheritance, it really makes no difference what they may have done with their lives. All of their effort has been wasted, and will all go up in flames. Those who know this will take great care in the manner in which they live, and what they choose to occupy their time and capture their attention.

AMONG THEM WHICH ARE SANCTIFIED

“ . . . among them which are sanctified by faith that is in Me.” Other versions read, “those who have been sanctified by faith,” NASB “those who are made holy by faith in Me,” BBE “those who have been separated for holiness by putting their trust in Me,” CJB “people who are made holy by believing in Me,” GWN “those who have been consecrated by faith in Me,” NAB “God's people, who are set apart by faith in Me,” NLT “been sanctified, by faith that is toward Me,” YLT “all people everywhere whose sins are cleansed away, who are set apart by faith in Me,” LIVING and “those who are consecrated and purified by faith in Me.” AMPLIFIED

In redemption, the people with whom you are identified is a critical matter. If they are not people whose faith has made them peculiarly God's, then they are not the people with whom you are to be identified. The people who are promised the inheritance are to be your closest friends and acquaintance – the people of preference. These are the people with whom God is identified. They are His own inheritance (Eph 1:18). They are His “household” (Eph 2:19), the “temple of God” (1 Cor 3:16-17), “God's heritage” (1 Pet 5:3), and His “family” (Eph 3:15). Their faith is what has set them apart from all other people – not their creed, not the denomination, and not their claim.

Where people do not exhibit faith, there is no proof they are among God's people. In such a case, there is no evidence that they have been set apart for Him, that He has received them, or that their names are written in heaven.

The appointed inheritance will be divided to the children of God, with each one receiving his portion. That portion will be in strict comportment with what they have been given, and how they handled their stewardship.

THE IMPACT OF PROPER MOTIVATION

The commission Jesus delivered to Paul became his motivation. He ministered with the intention of opening men's eyes, turning them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God. His aim was that his hearers would receive the forgiveness of sins here and now, and the inheritance then and there. He sought to bring people into identity with the ones who have been, and are, sanctified by faith that is in Christ Jesus.

THIS IS A TIME OF RARE LABORERS

I will tell you that this kind of motivation is exceedingly rare in this day of apostasy. Scarcely will you be able to find a preacher or teacher who is devoted to such things. When and if you do find such a person, they are invariably at odds with the institution, and are spiritual renegades of sorts. This is because the professing church has been hijacked by charlatans, and is being exploited for the personal advantage of men who are eager for the wrong things, and an institution that serves the wrong purposes. This is a most grievous circumstance, yet is one with which we have to deal!

I WAS NOT DISOBEDIENT

“ 19 Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision: 20 But showed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judaea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.”

The apostle is rather showing that his life had not only been radically changed, but that he had been, and continued to, live consistently with his calling. The value of such a testimony cannot be overstated.

Because Paul's life was like an open book, what he now confesses can be readily substantiated.

This it not a vain boast, nor is it an attempt to elevate what king Agrippa thinks of Paul . The apostle is rather showing that his life had not only been radically changed, but that he had been, and continued to, live consistently with his calling. The value of such a testimony cannot be overstated.

I WAS NOT DISOBEDIENT

“Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision . . .” Other versions read, “I did not prove disobedient to the heavenly vision,” NASB “I was not disobedient to the vision from heaven,” NIV “I did not go against the vision from heaven,” BBE “I did not disobey the vision from heaven!” CJB “I was not incredulous to the heavenly vision,” DOUAY “I did not contumaciously [stubbornly] withstand the heavenly vision,” MRD “I could not disobey the heavenly vision,” NJB and “I obeyed that vision from heaven.” NLT

When the magnitude of the message delivered to Paul is seen, the significance of his obedience to it is greatly appreciated. While such obedience is unusual in the modern church, it ought not to be so.

I SHOWED FIRST UNTO THEM OF DAMASCUS

“ . . . But showed first unto them of Damascus . . .” Other versions read, “declared first to those in Damascus,” NKJV “I preached to those in Damascus first,” CSB “I spread the message that I first told to the Jewish people in Damascus,” GWN “I started preaching, first to the people of Damascus,” NJB and “made known openly first of all to those at Damascus.” AMPLIFIED

The account of Paul first preaching in Damascus is recorded in Acts 9:19-22. It followed his confrontation of Jesus on the road to Damascus, the word delivered to him by Ananias, and his baptism into Christ. “And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that He is the Son of God . . . But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ ” (Acts 9:20,22).

AND AT JERUSALEM AND THROUGHOUT ALL THE COASTS OF JUDAEA

“ . . . and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judaea . . .”

The account of Paul’s preaching in Jerusalem and all the coasts of Judea is recorded in Acts 9:28-29.

AND THEN TO THE GENTILES

“ . . . and then to the Gentiles . . .”

The record of Paul preaching to the Gentiles is recorded in Acts 13:6-7,46-48; 14:18-21; 16:6,9-12; 18:5-8,11,23; 19:21-22; 20:1-3.

THAT THEY SHOULD REPENT

“ . . . that they should repent and turn to God . . .” Other versions read, “that they should repent, turn to God . . .” NKJV/NASB/NIV/NASB/A,MPLIFIED

This is a kind of summation of what Paul preached, and is not intended to be a detailed account of everything he declared. This is an example of him being obedient to the heavenly vision. It is what is involved in opening men’s eyes in order that they might turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, It also is involved in appropriating the forgiveness of sins and an inheritance among those who are sanctified by faith.

Repenting and turning to God is descriptive of a change – a very real change. Repentance is something that God requires of all men, and He commands them to “repent” (Acts 17:30-31).

The word “repent” is an especially strong word. Lexically it is defined as follows: “to change one's mind, I. e. to repent (to feel sorry that one has done this or that . . . to change one's mind for the better, heartily to amend with abhorrence of one's past . . . conduct worthy of a heart changed and abhorring sin,” THAYER “predominately of a religious and ethical change in the way one thinks about acts,” FRIBERG “have a change of heart, turn from one's sins, change one's ways,” UBS and “change one's way of life as the result of a complete change of thought and attitude with regard to sin and righteousness - 'to repent, to change one's way, repentance.’” LOUW-NIDA

This is not a mere sorrow for transgressing the word and will of the Lord. It is rather the result of a godly sorrow. As it is written, “For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of: but the sorrow of the world worketh death” (2 Cor 7:10). This is the repentance that leads salvation. It causes the heart of the sinner to break, a condition from which he could never recover if God was not in the matter.

This is not a goal for Christians, but is a requirement to become a Christian in the first place. These days, this kind of message is not being heard as it should. It must be affirmed that men are to repent AND turn to God – turn to Him for grace, forgiveness, and direction. Until that is done, salvation cannot be experienced.

AND DO WORKS MEET FOR REPENTANCE

“ . . . and do works meet for repentance.” Other versions read, “ and do works befitting repentance,” NKJV “performing deeds appropriate to repentance,” NASB “and prove their repentance by their deeds,” NIV “and do deeds consistent with repentance,” NRSV and “and do works and live lives consistent with and worthy of their repentance.” AMPLIFIED

Here is a matter that is said even less frequently than the requirement to repent. John the Baptist first introduced this requirement. When he was confronted by some who sought to be baptized, he boldly said, “Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance,” or “fruit in keeping with repentance” NIV (Matt 3:8). This is the same thing Paul preached. What is the meaning of this requirement?

A person's outward conduct has got to change before salvation can be realized. That change of conduct confirms the person has, in fact, repented. If the individual continues to transgress, allowing lust to express itself in conduct, he has not repented. If, for example, a person is a drunkard, that has to stop before any further benefit from God can be realized.

If it is countered that the person has no power to do such a thing, it must be seen that God will grant the power to those who extend the effort. A lame man will be able to pick up his bed and then commence walking. There is no legitimate response to God that is not attended with Divine power.

Even though it is true that God gives repentance, and that Jesus has been exalted to give repentance, it is the commandment to repent that sets the whole work into motion. When that commandment is taken seriously, and a conscientious effort is expended to obey it, a very real repentance will be realized, and confirmed in deed. Where this does not occur, a state of lostness exists.

FOR THESE CAUSES

“ 21 For these causes the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.”

Paul will now accentuate that his life was lived in view of the commission that had been delivered to him. He was wholly committed to fulfilling this mission.

FOR THESE CAUSES

“For these causes . . .” Other versions read, “for these reasons,” NKJV “for this reason,” NASB “that is why,” NIV “it was because of these things,” CJB “on account of these things,” DARBY and “for preaching this.” NLT

Embedded in Jesus’ words to Paul was the promise that He would deliver Paul from the Jews. That is included in the “causes” to which he refers. Because of the promise of the glorified Christ, Paul had not feared the Jews, apparently even anticipating their opposition.

Thus the conscientiousness of Paul has been established. The basis for that careful and deliberate action has been established as a word from the Lord Jesus Christ. Now the Jews are seen as opposing Jesus, not merely Paul.

When he was apprehended by the Jews, there is no record of him preaching at the time. Further, Paul is not suggesting that he was arrested for preaching, although efforts to do this frequently arose. He is rather accenting that as he was involved in carrying out the mission of the Lord, he had went to Jerusalem, where he gave an account of what he was preaching and how the Lord had worked through his ministry. His presence in the Temple resulted from counsel that was given him by James and the elders. At that time, he had been misrepresented by the Jews, and therefore took he measures to confirm to the Jews that they had heard false reports of him.

You may recall that when the Jews from Asia stirred up the people, they said, “Men of Israel, help: This is the man, that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place . . .” (Acts 21:28). In Paul’s teaching “everywhere,” he was carrying out the work Jesus gave him to do. Were it not for that, the Jews from Asia would have had nothing to say. Thus, Paul precisely represented the case. It was because he was fulfilling the word of Jesus that they came against him.

THE JEWS CAUGHT ME AND WENT ABOUT TO KILL ME

“ . . . the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.” Other versions read, “seized me in the Temple and tried to kill me,” NKJV “some Jews seized me in the Temple and tried to put me to death,” NASB and “the Jews seized me in the temple [enclosure] and tried to do away with me.” AMPLIFIED

Thus the conscientiousness of Paul has been established. The basis for that careful and deliberate action has been established as a word from the Lord Jesus Christ. Now the Jews are seen as opposing Jesus, not merely Paul.

HAVING OBTAINED HELP FROM GOD

“ 22 Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come.”

Not content to let the matter rest there, Paul continues to draw attention to the Lord Jesus who apprehended and commissioned him to open men’s eyes, that they might turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God; that they might receive forgiveness of sins, and the inheritance that will be given to all who are sanctified by faith.

It will be challenging to see how he states the case. It will be at once apparent that he had not been captured by the traditions of men. His answer will not blend with any form of sectarianism or heresy. He will be able to summarize his activity in a God-honoring manner.

HAVING THEREFORE OBTAINED HELP FROM GOD

“Having therefore obtained help of God . . .” Other versions read, “I have had God’s help,” NIV “I have had help from God,” NRSV “and so, by God’s help,” BBE “I have obtained help that comes from God,” CSB “having therefore met with the help which is from God,” DARBY “being aided by the help of God,” DOUAY “God has been helping me,” GWN “I have experienced help from God,” NET and “I have had the help which comes from God [as my ally].” AMPLIFIED

Notice what Paul does NOT say.

- He DOES NOT SAY he had been rescued from the Jews’ intentions by captain Lysias.
- He DOES NOT say that Gallio refused to hear the charges of the Jews against Paul.
- He DOES NOT SAY that he alerted the centurion and Lysias that he was a Roman citizen.
- He DOES NOT SAY that his nephew had overheard a plot by the Jews which led to him informing the captain.
- He DOES NOT say that Lysias provided four hundred and seventy soldiers to escort him to Caesarea.
- He DOES NOT say that Felix told the Jews he would wait for Lysias to come and inform him of the real circumstances.
- He DOES NOT say that he told Festus that he appealed to Caesar, and that Festus honored his request.
- He DOES NOT say that when the Jews asked Festus to have Paul tried in Jerusalem, Festus refused to do so, choosing rather to hear the case in Caesarea.

All of the above things really did happen, but none of them were the real causes for Paul’s safety. It was God who had helped him, moving men to rule in favor of Paul, and refuse to honor the request of the Jews. Paul traces his safety to its ultimate source, for “safety is of the Lord” (Prov 21:31). Through the prophet Isaiah God promised, “I will help thee” (Isa 41:10,13,14; 44:2). Paul was able to see his circumstances through the lens of God’s promise.

I CONTINUE TO THIS DAY

“ . . . I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great . . .” Other versions read, “to this day I stand,” NKJV “testifying both to small and great,” NASB and “so I stand here and testify to small and great alike.” NIV

Notice the constancy, diligence, and continuance that characterized Paul’s life. This is the common trait of faith, but not of the generation in which we live. It has become exceedingly rare to find a professing believer that is steadfast in their commitment to the Lord. The so called Christian life is often characterized by vacillation, wavering, fluctuation, and variation. People blow hot and cold, go from dependability to a lack thereof, and are quite often unreliable. I could not begin to estimate the number of ministries that I have witnessed in their beginning and in their demise. There are people who once appeared strong, who are now noted for their weakness.

There is a religious system in place that makes erratic spiritual behavior appear common and usual. But this is not the manner of the Kingdom. It is said of Abraham, “He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God” (Rom 4:20). Believers are exhorted, “Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised)” (Heb 10:23). And again it is written, “If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed”

(James 1:5-6). James traces instability to a double mind: “A double minded man is unstable in all his ways” (James 1:8). Peter says such poor souls bare more easily beguiled: “Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls . . .” (2 Pet 2:14). He also affirms that such souls tend to wrest the Scriptures: “As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest , as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction” (2 Pet 3:16).

However, this was not the manner of Paul. There is a consistency to his ministry that continued from its beginning to the day he departed from this world. He took advantage of the grace that is available to all who are in Christ Jesus.

Small and Great

This expression can apply to age (young and old), social rank (servants and kings), or spiritual status (babes and mature). While Paul often addressed some traits unique to those categories, his fundamental message was the same to all . The Gospel of Christ addresses men at the point where commonality exists. Outside of Christ, it addresses men as sinners, those who are alienated, and who are strangers in the courts of the Lord. In Christ, they are addressed as members of the household of faith, those who are reconciled to God, who have been washed, sanctified, and justified. Those who tailor their preaching and teaching for certain fleshly distinctions have no precedent for such an approach in Scripture. There is not a Gospel for the young, and another for the old; one for servants, and another for kings; one for man and another for woman; one for Jews and another for Gentiles.. “Small and great” takes in everyone, regardless of fleshly distinctions. Such a stance does not make for career development, special training, and a unique education. But such things have no validity at all in the Kingdom of God.

SAYING NONE OTHER THINGS THAN THOSE WHICH THE PROPHETS AND MOSES DID SAY SHOULD COME

“ . . . saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come.” other versions read, “saying no other things,” NKJV “stating nothing but,” NASB “I am saying nothing beyond,” NIV “I tell them only what,” GWN “Saying nothing different from,” NAB “saying nothing except,” NET “I teach nothing except,” NLT “saying nothing besides,” YLT and “asserting nothing beyond.” AMPLIFIED

Right here we confront the heart of the message delivered by those commissioned by Jesus. Inspired men confined themselves to what Moses and the Prophets “did say should come.” This was in strict keeping with something God had revealed about what He purposed. “Surely the Lord GOD will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets” (Amos 3:7). Other versions read, “Surely the Sovereign LORD does nothing without revealing his plan to his servants the prophets,” NIV and “Surely the Lord God will do nothing without revealing His secret to His servants the prophets.” AMPLIFIED On the Isle of Patmos, John was told the same thing: “But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as He hath declared to his servants the prophets ” (Rev 10:7). This is, then, a Divine manner.

Later, when Paul was in Rome, he was given his own “hired house” in which he taught those who came to him. Concerning his message it is written, “And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets , from morning till evening” (Acts 28:23). When Jesus expounded His own Person to the two on the road to Emmaus, He did so “beginning at Moses and all the prophets” (Luke 24:27). When He appeared to His disciples, He said to them, “These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms , concerning Me” (Luke 24:44). When Philip heard Jesus, he found Nathanael and said to him, “We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write . . .” (John 1:45).

This Jesus is virtually unknown in our time. “Another Jesus” (2 Cor 11:4) has been created that reflects the preferences of those who walk after the flesh. In speaking of the Lord Jesus, there are numerous references to the fulfillment of prophecies given by Moses and the Prophets.

- He was born of a virgin (Matt 1:22-23; Isa 7:14).
- He was called out of Egypt (Matt 2:15; Hos 11:1).
- He was called a Nazarene (Matt 2:23; Isa 53:1-2).
- He ministered in Galilee (Matt 4:14-16; Isa 9:1-2).
- He carried men’s sicknesses (Matt 8:17; Isa 53:4).
- Concerning His reaction to men, not breaking a bruised reed or quenching a smoking flax (Matt 12:16-21; Isa 42:3-4).
- Speaking in parables (Matt 13:34-35; Psa 78:2).
- His triumphal enter into Jerusalem (Matt 21:4-5; Zech 9:9).
- The disciples forsaking Him when He was arrested (Matt 26:58; Zech 13:7).
- The casting of lots for His garments when He was crucified (Matt 27:35; Psa 22:18).
- The failure of those to whom He spoke to believe Him (John 12:37-41; Isa 53:1).

Paul did not preach a Jesus whom He personally defined. He did not tailor a special Jesus for the society in which he lived. He rather correlated the activities of the Lord Jesus with what Moses and the Prophets foretold of Him. This is how Jesus is to be known.

- Being hated without a cause (John 15:25; Psa 35:19).
- The betrayal of Judas (John 17:12; Psa 109:6-19).
- Jesus saying “I thirst” upon the cross (John 19:28; Psa 22:15; 60:21).

Particular aspects of the accomplishments and ministry of Jesus were detailed by Moses and the prophets. Here are a few of them.

- The people would hearken to Him, and whoever refused to do so would be destroyed from among the people (Gen Deut 18:18-19; Acts 3:22-23).
- The people would be gathered to Him (Gen 49:10).
- He would come to do God’s will (Psa 40:6-10; Heb 10:5-12).
- He would ascend into heaven and give gifts to men (Psa 68:18; Eph 4:8-11).
- A Stone which the builders rejected (Psa 118:22,26; Acts 4:11; 1 Pet 2:4-8).
- The government would be placed upon His shoulder (Isa 9:6-7; 1 Cor 15:25; Eph 1:20-22).
- A root springing out from Jesse (Isa 11:1-16; Rev 5:5; 22:16).
- A foundation and a sure foundation (1 Pet 2:6-8).
- A tender and good shepherd (Isa 40:11; John 10:11-16; Heb 13:20; 1 Pet 2:25).
- When oppressed, He would not cry nor lift up His voice in the streets (Isa 42:1-2; Matt 12:19-20).
- Inhibiting influences would be overcome: mountains leveled and valleys raised (Isa 49:11; Lk 3:4-5).

- He would make intercession for the people (Isa 53:12; Heb 7:25).
- He would be called “The Lord Our Righteousness” (Jer 23:6; 1 Cor 1:30; 2 Cor 5:21).
- The Kingdom and all dominion would be given to Him (Dan 7:13-14; Matt 28:18; 1 Pet 3:22).
- He would make an end of sins, make reconciliation for iniquity, and bring in everlasting righteousness (Dan 9:24; Heb 9:26; Col 1:20; 2 Cor 5:21).
- He would be born in Bethlehem (Micah 5:2).

Paul did not preach a Jesus whom He personally defined. He did not tailor a special Jesus for the society in which he lived. He rather correlated the activities of the Lord Jesus with what Moses and the Prophets foretold of Him. This is how Jesus is to be known. As the Servant of God (Isa 42:1), He is primarily carrying out the will of God, not the will of man. It is a serious error in judgment to present a Jesus that is purported to be the resolution to problems peculiar to our generation. Though this practice is quite common, it is one in which the power of God is not resident, and the will of God will not be accomplished. Jesus was not sent from God at the behest of humanity.

A SUMMATION OF WHAT MOSES AND THE PROPHETS SAID SHOULD COME

“ 23 That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.”

Here is a marvelous and appropriate summation of what Moses and the prophets foretold of the Christ. This is also a summing up of what Paul preached.

THAT CHRIST SHOULD SUFFER

“That Christ should suffer . . .” Other versions read, “would suffer,” NKJV “was to suffer,” NASB “must suffer,” NRSV “would go through pain,” BBE “would die,” CJB “is to suffer,” YLT “was to be a suffering Christ.” IE

Precisely how is prophecy to be viewed? Is it a mere look into the future, then foretelling what is seen. Or, is prophecy the declaration of what God has determined to do? If the former is a proper definition, then there is a theoretic risk that it may not be fulfilled. Not only is vacillating humanity involved, the crafty devil is also involved, together with principalities, powers, the rulers of darkness, and spiritual wickedness in high places. Without some kind of Divine control, I do not know how a person can substantiate the sureness of prophecy.

If, however, the latter is a proper definition – namely that prophecy is a declaration of what the Lord is going to do – the prophecies of a suffering Christ were a declaration of the will of God. That this is true is substantiated by a number of declarations.

- AS IT WAS DETERMINED. “And truly the Son of man goeth, as it was determined : but woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed!” (Luke 22:22).
- MUST BE ACCOMPLISHED. “For I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in me, And he was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning me have an end” (Luke 22:37).
- MUST BE FULFILLED. “And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled , which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning Me. Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures, And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day” (Luke 24:44-46).

• COMMANDED TO LAY DOWN HIS LIFE. “Therefore doth My Father love Me, because I lay down My life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of My Father ” (John 10:17-18).

• DELIVERED BY THE DETERMINATE COUNSEL AND FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD. “Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain” (Acts 2:23).

• CHRIST SHOULD SUFFER. “But those things, which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, He hath so fulfilled ” (Acts 3:18).

• GOD’S COUNSEL DETERMINED BEFORE TO BE DONE. “For of a truth against Thy Holy Child Jesus, whom Thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever Thy hand and Thy counsel determined before to be done ” (Acts 4:28).

• MUST NEEDS HAVE SUFFERED . “Opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered , and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom I preach unto you, is Christ” (Acts 17:3).

• FOR THE SUFFERING OF DEATH. “But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death , crowned with glory and honor; that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man” (Heb 2:9).

• CAME TO DO GOD’S WILL. “Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of Me,) to do Thy will, O God. Above when He said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin Thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law; Then said He, Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that He may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all” (Heb 10:7-10).

• TESTIFIED BEFOREHAND. “Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow” (1 Pet 1:11).

• FOREORDAINED BEFORE THE FOUNDATION OF THE WORLD. “Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world , but was manifest in these last times for you” (1 Pet 1:20).

Some might imagine that it makes no difference whether or not the matter of Divine determination is comprehended. If such a thing is true, why did Jesus and His messengers say so much about the matter? Certainly it was not because it was really of no consequence.

+SLAIN FROM THE FOUNDATION OF THE WORLD. “And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world ” (Rev 13:8).

Does This Make Any Difference

Some might imagine that it makes no difference whether or not the matter of Divine determination is comprehended. If such a thing is true, why did Jesus and His messengers say so much about the matter? Certainly it was not because it was really of no consequence.

There is a frothy view of the sufferings and death of Jesus that presents Him more as a martyr than a Savior. His profound love for mankind is seen as the compelling factor in Christ’s submission to suffering and death. Jesus, however, presented it as a matter of obeying the commandment of the Father, and doing the will of God.

It is wrong to view the sufferings and death of the Lord Jesus as something men did, only to have God convert it all to something good. Were it not for the will of God in the matter, no man could have been able to beat Jesus, spit in His face, or crucify Him. He said, “No man taketh is [His life] from Me” (John 10:18).

Therefore Paul preached that “Christ should suffer.” Moses and the prophets declared it before hand, not simply as a matter that would happen, but as something God had determined. All of this was done in order to satisfy the justice of God, which cannot continue to “wink” at sin. Sin had to be judged in order for God to be righteous in justifying sinners (Rom 3:26).

It is a terrible display of gross ignorance that this revealed perspective is heard so little in our time. As long as that circumstance continues, men will keep on developing erroneous concepts of God, of Christ, and the great salvation that is offered to men through Jesus Christ. I do not believe it is possible to fully state the magnitude of the distortion of the Gospel.

THAT CHRIST SHOULD BE THE FIRST TO RISE FROM THE DEAD

“ . . . and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead . . . ” Other versions read, “the first to rise from the dead,” NIV “the first to come back from the dead,” BBE “become the first fruits of the resurrection from the dead.” MRD

The resurrection of Christ is a key point in apostolic doctrine (Acts 2:24,31-32; 3:15; 4:10,33; 5:30-31; 10:40-41; 13:30-34; 17:3,31; Rom 1:4; 4:24,25; 5:10; 6:4-5,9-11; 10:9; ; 1 Cor 6:14; 15:3-8,12-23;; 2 Cor 4:10-11,14; 5:15; Gal 1:1; Eph 1:20; 3:10; 3:10; 2:21; 1 Thess 1:10; 4:14; 2 Tim 2:8; Heb 13:20; 1 Pet 1:3,21; 3:18,21; Rev 1:5,18).

The resurrected Christ is the One with whom we now have to do.

- It is His resurrected “life” that saves us (Rom 5:10).
- It is the “power of His resurrection” that is to be experienced now (Phil 3:10).
- The power that is “toward us” is the very power that raised Jesus from the dead (Eph 1:19-20).
- He is the “firstborn from the dead that in all things He might have the preeminence” (Col 1:18).
- In being raised from the dead, Jesus “delivered us from the wrath to come” (1 Thess 1:10).
- God has begotten us to a living hope “by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead” (1 Pet 1:3).
- Jesus was raised from the dead “that your faith and hope might be in God” (1 Pet 1:21).
- Baptism “saves us . . . by the resurrection of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 3:21).

The fact that so little is being said these days concerning the resurrection of Jesus Christ defines the nature of the times in which we live. The Christ that is being preached is too often not the One concerning which Moses and the Prophets testified.

The fact that so little is being said these days concerning the resurrection of Jesus Christ defines the nature of the times in which we live. The Christ that is being preached is too often not the One

THAT CHRIST SHOULD SHOW LIGHT UNTO THE PEOPLE

“ . . . and should show light unto the people. . . ” Other versions read, “proclaim light to the Jewish people,” NKJV “proclaim light to His own people,” NIV “give light to the people,” BBE “should announce light . . . to the people,” DARBY “spread light to Jewish . . . people,” GWN “announce God’s light to Jew,” NLT “bring light to Jews,” LIVING “proclaim a message of light . . . to the Jewish people,” IE “announce the light of salvation to the Jews,” GNB and “He would be the first rays of God's daylight shining on people far and near.” MESSAGE

When Jesus began His ministry in Judea, it is written, “The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up” (Matt 4:16). This, Matthew records, fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah (Isa 9:1-2). Zechariah, father of John the Baptist said of Jesus’ coming into the world, “Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the dayspring from on high hath visited us, To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace” (Luke 1:78-79). When aged Simeon saw the infant Christ he referred to Him as “the glory of Thy people Israel” (Lk 2:32).

That marvelous light was but an introduction to the light that was shed forth after Jesus was raised from the dead and returned to heaven. Now the light of the Gospel is preached “to the Jew first” (Rom 1:16). And why so? Because “salvation is of the Jews” (John 4:22). They were prepared for it, being tutored by the Prophets concerning the coming Savior, and the nature of His exalted ministry.

This necessarily infers that the Jews, have not been written off as some allege. God still has a covenant with them. As it is written, “And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins” (Rom 11:26-27). Incidentally, the term “Jacob” is nowhere applied to the body of Christ as a whole – and neither is “Israel.” Both of those terms are derived from Jacob, grandson to Abraham. I do not believe the church is ever associated directly with Jacob. Those who believe on Christ are referred to as “the children of Abraham” (Gal 3:7). However, they are never called the children of “Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,” or “the children of Isaac,” or “the children of Jacob.” Also, those who teach that a special gospel will be preached to the Jews that is distinct from the one preached to the Gentiles, have attempted to impose their theology upon the Scriptures. However, they are not able to do it. The light Jesus dispensed is the same for both the Jews and the Gentiles, as this text unquestionably affirms.

• RISEN CHRIST SENT TO BLESS ISRAEL FIRST. “Unto you first God, having raised up His Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities” (Acts 3:26).

• IT WAS NECESSARY TO FIRST DECLARE THE GOSPEL TO THE JEWS. “Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles” (Acts 13:46).

THAT CHRIST SHOULD SHOW LIGHT UNTO THE GENTILES

“ . . . and should show light . . . to the Gentiles.” Other versions read, “and to the nations,” DARBY “and non-Jewish people,” GWN “and Gentiles alike,” NLT “and to the heathen,” WILLIAMS and “godless.” MESSAGE

Both Moses and the Prophets spoke of the Gentiles being blessed by God. Moses alluded to this circumstance, but the Prophets wrote of it in detail.

• GOD WOULD PROVOKE THE JEWS. Through Moses, God spoke of provoking the Jews to jealousy by giving attention to those who were not a people. “They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God; they have provoked me to anger with their vanities: and I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation” (Deu 32:21). Paul cited this prophecy when speaking of the preaching of the Gospel. “But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you” (Rom 10:19).

• THE HEATHEN PROMISED TO THE MESSIAH. “Ask of Me, and I shall give Thee the heathen for Thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession” (Psa 2:8).

• ALL THE ENDS OF THE EARTH. “All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the LORD: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before Thee” (Psa 22:27).

• THE GENTILES WOULD SEEK. “And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious” (Isa 11:10).

• GIVEN FOR A COVENANT TO THE GENTILES. “I the LORD have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles” (Isa 42:6).

• A LIGHT TO THE GENTILES. “And he said, It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth” (Isa 49:6).

• GOD’S HAND LIFTED UP TO THE GENTILES. “Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I will lift up Mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up My standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders” (Isa 49:22).

• ISRAEL TOO SMALL TO BE THE ONLY ONES. “Indeed He says, 'It is too small a thing that You should be My Servant To raise up the tribes of Jacob, And to restore the preserved ones of Israel; I will also give You as a light to the Gentiles, That You should be My salvation to the ends of the earth” (Isa 49:6).

The risen Christ is the Administrator of a Kingdom of light. Ignorance has no place where Jesus is ministering. Now there is:

• illumination (Heb 10:32).

• enlightenment (Eph 1:18; Heb 6:4).

• comprehension (Eph 3:18).

• discernment (1 Cor 2:14; 1 Cor 11:29; 12:10; Heb 5:14).

• understanding (Matt 13:23; Acts 8:30; Rom 15:21; 1 Cor 12:3; 14:15,19,20; Eph 1:18; 3:4; 5:17; Col 1:9; 2:22; Tim 2:7; Heb 11:3; 1 John 5:20).

An unilluminated people who profess to be Christian are a living contradiction. Among professed believers, a continued state of ignorance contradicts the very nature of salvation. To continue walking in darkness when the greatest light is shining betrays a hard heart and a rebellious spirit. Although this condition is common among the churches of our day. It is not at all common in heaven. In Christ Jesus, and because of justification and reconciliation, God has placed the truth within the reach of every humble and contrite spirit. The way has been cleared to the Divine classroom, and the heavenly Teacher stands ready to teach whoever will come to Him. Jesus explained the failure of men to take advantage of this light. “And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God” (John 3:19-21).

That is the real situation, contrary claims notwithstanding.

CONCLUSION

The wisdom and thoroughness with which Paul gave his defense is most arresting. Paul introduced his defense by saying, “I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews” (Acts 26:2). Yet, in all of his defense, he spends no extensive time either mentioning or directly contradicting the charges brought against him. Instead, he introduces a body of evidence that contradicts what was said of him. In so doing he is providing a context in which the charges will be seen as incredulous and absurd. Ponder the remarkable scope of Paul’s defense.

1. His manner of life was known publically since he was young (26:4).
2. His manner of life was known to all of the Jews, who knew him from the beginning (26:5a).
3. He lived as a Pharisee, the strictest sect of the Jewish religion (26:5b).
4. He is being judged for the hope of the promise that was made to the Jewish fathers: Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (26:6).
5. All faithful Jews – the twelve tribes – lived with this hope. It was not a strange thing among them (26:7a).
6. It was this hope that caused the Jews to make their accusation against Paul – a hope that was being lived out with consistency and zeal (26:7b).
7. He asks Agrippa and those with him why they would think it incredible that God would raise the dead (26:8).
8. In his prior life, he was convinced he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus (26:9).
9. He lived consistent with this thought shutting many saints in prison (26:10a).
10. He did not go about this opposition in a disorderly way, or in any kind of opposition to Jewish authorities. He rather obtained authority from the chief priests to do so (26:10b).
11. When these saints were put to death for their allegiance to Christ, Paul gave his voice against them (26:10c).
12. Pursuing his conviction, he punished believers in the synagogues, pressuring them blaspheme (26:11a).

13. He even launched an initiative against the believers in cities outside of his own country (26:11b).

14. Jesus Himself accosted Paul as he went to Damascus with authority and commission from the chief priests (26:12).

15. At midday, when the sun was at its highest, a light from heaven, brighter than the sun, focused on him, also shining around those who were with him (26:13).

16. Both Paul and those with him were struck to the ground by something and someone that was superior to them (26:14a).

17. He heard a voice speaking to him in the Hebrew tongue asking why he was persecuting the Speaker (26:14b).

18. With penetrating insight, the voice said it was difficulty for him to kick against the goads of his conscience (26:14c).

19. He asked who was speaking to him (26:15a).

20. The voice replied that He was Jesus whom he was persecuting (26:15b).

21. Jesus told him to get up on his feet (26:16a).

22. Jesus told him why He had appeared to him (26:16b).

23. Jesus had appeared to him to make him a minister and a witness of what he had seen (26:16c).

24. Jesus was also making him a minister and a witness to the things he would show him in the future (26:16d).

25. Jesus told him He would deliver him from the Jews (26:17a).

26. Jesus told him he would deliver him from the Gentiles, to whom, He would now send him (26:17b).

27. Jesus appointed him to open men's eyes (26:18a).

28. Jesus appointed him to turn men from darkness to light (16:18b).

29. Jesus appointed him to turn men from the power of Satan unto God (26:18c).

30. Jesus appointed him to turn men so they could receive forgiveness of sins (26:18d).

31. Jesus appointed him to turn men so they could receive an inheritance among those who are sanctified by faith (26:18e).

32. He was not disobedient to the heavenly vision (26:19).

33. First he showed these things to the Jews in Damascus (26:20a).

34. Then he showed them at Jerusalem (26:20b).

35. Then he showed them throughout the coasts of Judea (26:20c).

36. They he showed them to the Gentiles (26:20d).

37. He declared that they should repent and turn to God (26:20e).

38. He declared that they should do works appropriate for repentance (26:20f).

39. It is for these causes, while he was engaged in fulfilling the mandate of Jesus, that the Jews caught him in the Temple and sought to kill him (26:21).

40. He had obtained help from God (26:22a).

41. Until that very day he had continued witnessing to both small and great (26:22b).

42. He said nothing except what the Prophets and Moses said should come (26:22c).
43. He declared that Christ had to suffer (26:23a).
44. He declared that Christ had to be the first to rise from the dead (26:23b).
45. He declared that Christ had to show light to the Jews (26:23c).
46. He declared that Christ had to show light to the Gentiles (26:23d).

Of these forty-six points, note the following.

- Four refer to his strict Jewish upbringing.
- Three refer to the “hope” in the promises of God.
- Two refer to the resurrection of the dead.
- One refers to his persuasion that he should oppose Jesus.
- Six refer to his zealous initiative against believers in Christ.
- Eighteen refer to Jesus apprehending and commissioning him.
- One refers to the difficulty he had kicking against a goading conscience.
- Twenty-one directly refer to Jesus Christ.
- Seven refer to his faithfulness in carrying out the commission of Jesus.
- One refers to the Jews apprehending him while he was carrying out Jesus’ commission.
- Two refer to the fact that God helped him.
- One refers to the totality of the people to whom he witnessed.
- Five refer to the summation of what the Prophets and Moses said about Jesus.

That is an example of being ready to give an answer for the hope that is within!

Lesson #101

RESPONSES BY FESTUS AND AGRIPPA

“ 26:24 And as he thus spake for himself, Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad. 25 But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness. 26 For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely: for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. 27 King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest. 28 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian. 29 And Paul said, I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds. 30 And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them: 31 And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, This man doeth nothing worthy of death or of bonds. 32 Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Caesar.” (Acts 26:24-32)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

Upon hearing the testimony of Paul, Festus shouts out in derision that Paul's much learning has made him mad, or insane. Paul answers that he was not mad, and that this ought to be evident, for the things of which he had spoken were done publicly, and not in privacy. He then focuses his attention on Agrippa, he apparently being more alert and sensitive. He asks him if he believes the prophets, also stating that he knows Agrippa does. The king then confesses that he, because of Paul's words, was almost persuaded to be a Christian. Paul then expressed his desire that Agrippa and those with him were altogether persuaded to be as himself – except for his bonds. Agrippa, Festus, Bernice and those who were with them then arose and went into another area privately. Agrippa then acknowledged Paul had done nothing worthy of death, and could have been set free if he had not appealed to Caesar. Little did he know that this was all being worked by God.

LIVING SOLELY FOR THE LORD

There is only one kind of life that is acceptable to God – one that is lived solely for the Lord. It is written that Jesus “died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again” (2 Cor 5:15). This is something that both the novice and the mature can do. The new convert and the one seasoned in the ways of the Lord can live solely for the Lord. When it comes to priorities, Jesus said the first things to be sought are “the Kingdom of God and His righteousness” (Matt 6:33). No other quest can be allowed to be primary!

This solitary manner of living is found throughout the apostolic doctrine. Redemption does not simply set men free to roam in the open field of self satisfaction. It rather frees to live unto the Lord without a condemning conscience, and in the power of the Holy Spirit.

• WALK IN NEWNESS OF LIFE. “Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also SHOULD walk in newness of life ” (Rom 6:4).

• TO BE MARRIED TO CHRIST AND BEAR FRUIT UNTO GOD. “Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye SHOULD be married to another , even to Him who is raised from the dead, that we SHOULD bring forth fruit unto God ” (Rom 7:4).

• TO SERVE IN NEWNESS OF SPIRIT. “But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we SHOULD serve in newness of spirit , and not in the oldness of the letter” (Rom 7:6).

• NOT LIVE FOR SELF, BUT UNTO JESUS. “And that He died for all, that they which live SHOULD not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them, and rose again ” (2 Cor 5:15).

- TO BE HOLY AND WITHOUT BLAME. “According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we SHOULD be holy and without blame before Him in love ” (Eph 1:4).

- WALK IN THE WORKS GOD ORDAINED. “For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we SHOULD walk in them ” (Eph 2:10).

- BE HOLY AND WITHOUT BLEMISH. “That He might present it to Himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish ” (Eph 5:27).

- ABSTAIN FROM FORNICATION AND KNOW HOW TO POSSESS OUR VESSELS IN SANCTIFICATION AND HONOR. “For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication : that every one of you SHOULD know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honor ” (1 Thess 4:4).

- LIVE TOGETHER WITH CHRIST. “Who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we SHOULD live together with Him ” (1 Thess 5:10).

- LIVE SOBERLY, GODLY, AND RIGHTEOUSLY. “Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we SHOULD live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world ” (Titus 2:12).

- THAT WE SHOULD BE A KIND OF FIRSTFRUITS OF HIS CREATION. “Of His own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we SHOULD be a kind of firstfruits of His creatures ” (James 1:18).

- TO SHOW FORTH THE PRAISES OF GOD. “But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye SHOULD show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light” (1 Pet 2:9).

- TO FOLLOW IN CHRIST’S STEPS. “For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye SHOULD follow his steps ” (1 Pet 2:21).

- TO LIVE UNTO RIGHTEOUSNESS. “Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, SHOULD live unto righteousness : by whose stripes ye were healed” (1 Pet 2:24).

- LIVE THE REST OF OUR TIME TO THE WILL OF GOD. “That he no longer SHOULD live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God ” (1 Pet 4:2).

That will suffice to confirm that the intention of salvation has been spelled out in remarkable detail. The question occurs to me if it is even possible to conclude a person is saved if they are consistently lacking the things declared to be the objective of salvation. I understand this is very difficult for some to receive, and I certainly am not going to sit in the Judges chair – at least not until Jesus comes. However, it seems to me that the examination of self should include a survey for the presence of these stated objectives.

THE POINT OF IT ALL

The point of bringing up these matters is that they were actually lived out by Paul. That is precisely why he was able to seize the opportunity set before him, and give a defense that would glorify God, edify the saints, and convict sinners.

Many people are unable to enter open doors set before them because they are not actually living for God. They have adopted an inferior agenda for their lives, and are too close to the world. As a result, they are not able to recognize when an opportunity is placed before them to bring glory to God and be used in His work. In fact, they do not think of life from this perspective.

One of the key aspects of the “falling away” of which the apostle speaks (2 Thess 2:2; 2 Tim 3:1-5) is the impact of false teaching. The fact that it is false, and even a “lie,” is not its only trait. It also produces lives that are, at the very least, skewed in the wrong direction – toward this present evil world. Truth sanctifies (John 17:17). The lie defiles and subverts. Whether men wish to acknowledge it or not, the way professing Christians live is the direct result of the doctrine they have embraced. Their view of what God is doing in Christ directly impacts on how they live.

Paul sets a sterling example for us, maintaining his faith under great duress, and immediately laying hold of the opportunities set before him. Now, we will see the effectiveness of his insightful defense.

FESTUS SAID WITH A LOUD VOICE

“ 26:24 And as he thus spake for himself, Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad.”

Now, Festus can be quiet no longer. He has heard so much about Jesus, His apprehension of Paul, and His commission to Paul, that he cannot hold his peace.

Keep in mind what Paul has just finished saying! He has outlined how Jesus apprehended him, and what He commissioned him to do. He has provided a summation of what the Prophets and Moses said about Jesus, and has testified concerning what he consistently preached. He has addressed no exhortation to the crowd before him – unless it be that Agrippa listen to what he said without interruption. He has offered no invitation. He has not diagnosed the crowd before him, or sought to psychoanalyze any of them. In a sense, what he said was not personally about them. He made no offer to them. He held forth no promise to them. He did tell them that everyone was required to repent, turn to God, and do works appropriate for repentance. Now, how will all of this set with the people – particularly Festus and Agrippa?

HE SPAKE FOR HIMSELF

“And as he thus spake for himself . . .” Other versions read, “as he thus made his defense,” NKJV “while Paul was saying this in his defense,” NASB “At this point Festus interrupted Paul’s defense,” NIV “just as he reached this point in his defense,” BBE and “As Paul was defending himself in this way,” GWN “as he thus proceeded with his defense.” AMPLIFIED

Thus Paul’s defense is interrupted. And at what point was this? What was Paul saying that moved the interruption to take place? Here is what he had just finished saying. “Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: That Christ should suffer, and that He should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles” (Acts 26:22-23).

Later Paul will say of the Lord, “whose I am, and whom I serve” (Acts 27:23). That, in effect, is what he has said to this group of dignitaries. Further, he has said it for himself, not requiring someone else to speak for him, as the Jews did when they brought Tertullus to state their case against Paul before Felix.

Now, Festus can be quiet no longer. He has heard so much about Jesus, His apprehension of Paul, and His commission to Paul, that he cannot hold his peace.

THOU ART BESIDE THYSELF

“ . . . Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself . . . ” Other versions read, “you are out of your mind,” NASB “you are mad,” RSV “you are off your head,” BBE “you’re crazy,” GWN “you have lost your mind,” NET “you are insane,” NLT and “You rave.” LITV

This is the same charge some of the people made against Jesus (John 10:20). When Rhoda reported to the disciples that Peter, who had been imprisoned, was at the door, they responded, “Thou art mad” (Acts 12:15). Paul said if a stranger or unbeliever came into their assembly, and they all were speaking in tongues, the stranger would “say that ye are mad” (1 Cor 14:23). What does this expression mean?

This expression simply means Festus thought Paul was not in control of his mind. He was not in his right mind, and was not being rational or logical in what he was saying. To Festus, Paul’s presentation was not reasonable. That was the assessment of Festus when he heard of a vision of a risen Jesus, the commission of one who had died, and of angels, and the resurrection of the dead. Perhaps if there was more talk about these things today, we would find that this kind of assessment is still quite common. That is because the truth concerning Jesus Christ does not fit within the framework of human opinion. It is something that has to be received by faith, not by human reasoning.

THY MUCH LEARNING HATH MADE THEE MAD

“ . . . much learning doth make thee mad.” Other versions read, “much learning is driving you mad,” NKJV “your great learning is driving you insane,” NIV “too much learning is driving you insane,” NRSV “your great learning has made you unbalanced,” BBE “too much study is driving you mad,” CSB and “much study hath enraged thee.” MRD

With a brashness that is fostered by unbelief, Festus writes off everything Paul has said by alleging that he is out of his mind. He also charges that what he had learned had made him insane.

It ought to be noted that the expression “much learning” does not refer to advanced education in the schools of men. What schools of men ever have taught them to rely upon what Moses and the Prophets said would come to pass? What secular education majors on Jesus Christ, or testifies to His resurrection, or the resurrection of all of the dead? The “learning” to which Festus refers included his Jewish upbringing, and exposure to Moses and the Prophets. There is not one whit of evidence in Scripture that Paul was ever trained in the schools of the heathen.

What Prompted this Response of Festus?

What would move a political official to shout out such thing? He was evidently stirred by what Paul had said – not the way he said it, or the intonation of his voice, but the actual words that he said.

Consider Paul’s defense, and behold how the governor Festus was offended by it. Here is a classic example of the flesh’s response to truth.

- Paul has testified of his strict upbringing (26:4-5).
- He has declared his hope in the promise made by God to the Jewish fathers, which hope was common among all believing Jews (26:6-7).
- He asked Agrippa and those with him why it should be thought incredible that God would raise the dead (26:8).
- He testified that he once thought it was proper to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth, and therefore zealously persecuted those who believed on Him (26:9-12).

- He declared Christ's apprehension of him, and of the vision that attended it (26:13-16a).
- He related the commission Jesus delivered to him (26:16b-18).
- He affirmed he had not been disobedient to the heavenly vision (26:19-20).

As Paul declared these things in a spiritually expert manner, and in words that were taught by the Holy Spirit, the listeners were divided into classes: those with good inclinations toward the truth, and those with no interest in the truth.

- He told how the Jews caught him in the Temple while he was carrying out the commission Jesus gave him (26:21).
- He affirmed that he had obtained help from God to continue to that very day faithfully witnessing to both small and great (26:22a).
- He detailed the message that he preached, declaring that it was in strict conformity with the things the Prophets and Moses said would come to pass (26:22b).
- He summarized the Gospel concerning Christ (26:23).

Observe the unnatural things to which Paul had testified – things that were foreign to the way flesh thinks.

- A supernatural light greater than the most magnificent natural light to which men are exposed.
- The words and commission of a Living Man who was dead, and had raised from the dead
- A vision from heaven.
- The resurrection of the dead.
- Being turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God.
- Receiving an inheritance that was not specified, yet was declared to belong to all who had faith.

As Paul declared these things in a spiritually expert manner, and in words that were taught by the Holy Spirit, the listeners were divided into classes: those with good inclinations toward the truth, and those with no interest in the truth. What Paul said will be used to reveal the hearts and preferences of men. It is the peculiar prerogative of truth to make such distinctions.

Additionally, it is quite possible it irritated Festus that Paul did not directly address him as he did Agrippa during his defense (26:2,7,19,27). It is the nature of flesh to be proud, and to be irritated when it is not afforded the attention it desires.

WORDS OF TRUTH AND SOBERNESS

“ 25 But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness.”

Paul is quick to respond to the outburst of Festus, yet his answer is tempered with godly wisdom, and saturated with his love of the truth. He recognizes that Festus is a political dignitary, yet is not hesitant to deny that there was any truth in what he said. This is something someone who fears man cannot do. He knew what Solomon had said, perhaps even better than Solomon knew it: “The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the LORD shall be safe” (Prov 29:25). It is never right to fear man, and it is never wrong to fear God.

I AM NOT MAD

“But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus . . .” Other versions read, “I am not out of my mind, most excellent Festus,” NASB “I am not insane,” NIV “I am not off my head,” BBE “No, I am not 'crazy,' Festus, your Excellency.” CSB and “I am not deranged, excellent Festus.” MRD

Sometimes it is good to simply deny false charges: “I am not . . .” I am aware that this is the way the worldly-minded also replies to allegations made against them. Often, however, the charges are verified by some evidence that contradicts such denials. However, this is not the manner of the Kingdom. In Christ Jesus, the evidence always perfectly accords with the claim. There is no such thing as a real salvation that is controverted by the way those claiming to possess it speak and live. Tritely the carnal will spout, “You cannot judge a book by its cover.” You will never hear such benighted souls say, “You cannot judge a tree by its fruit.” Of course, there is such a thing as the appearance contradicting the claim. But that is only when corruptness is within, and the claim is false. That is never said of those who are clean within having a contradicting and worldly appearance. Those who insist on saying that such a condition does exist – clean within, yet defiled without – are simply wrong. Were such a thing possible, the work of God would be properly maligned.

Therefore, Paul affirms that in speaking he has not departed from reason. He has not spoken to give himself the advantage, or present himself as other than he really is. He has been in full possession of all of his mental faculties as he spoke. He was not overcharged with emotion. He was not hastily reacting to the circumstances.

WORDS OF TRUTH AND SOBERNESS

“ . . . but speak forth the words of truth and soberness.” Other versions read, “but speak the words of truth and reason,” NKJV “but I utter sober truth,” NASB “my words are true and wise,” BBE “I am speaking words of truth and honesty,” CSB “I am speaking true and rational words,” ESV “and speak words of truth and rectitude,” MRD and “I am uttering the straight, sound truth.” AMPLIFIED

“Words of truth” are expressions that perfectly match reality. They are words that depict a very real situation. As used here, they are utterances that are in perfect harmony with the nature of God, the reality of salvation, and the word of the Gospel. They contradict neither the text of Scripture, nor the purpose of God. They do not contravene what Paul had actually experienced, or what Jesus had really said to him. They reflected the mind of Christ, and were in strict accord with the eternal purpose of God. Paul had spoken as the “oracles of God” (1 Pet 4:11). Because of this circumstance, the Lord will work through what Paul has said – a privilege that is withheld from all who use improper and self-conceived words.

“Words of . . . soberness” are words that have result in men being sober-minded. They are not words that are characterized by levity, or tend to make men scatterbrained. “Soberness,” “sobriety,” or being “sober” refers to, “soundness of mind, self-control,” THAYER “sensibleness, intellectual soundness, rationality, reasonableness, good sense,” FRIBERG and “to have understanding about practical matters and thus be able to act sensibly - to have sound judgment, to be sensible, to use good sense, sound judgment.” LOUW-NIDA

As used in this text, “words of truth and soberness” are words that are perfectly aligned with God and what He has purposed. These are not to be construed as words that are politically correct, or are designed to placate men, or makes friends with them. They are in harmony with both the nature of God and the purpose of God. They blend with the salvation of God and the true sanctification of men. They are in no way at a variance with the Scriptures, and reflect the reality of the situation or subject of which they speak.

Words such as this do not blend with the flesh, the ways of the world, or the exaltation of self. They do not commingle with the wisdom of this world. They sharply contradict the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life. It is for this reason that those who are of the world consider “words of truth and soberness” to be the expression of madness. When a person speaks such words to them, they at once think that he is beside himself, and is not speaking in accord with the way things really are. However, these are wholly foolish assessments, and the people making them do not know what they are talking about.

In the end, when the world to which their minds are nailed, has passed away, the risen and exalted Christ is confronted, and the people they maligned are seen as they really are, then they will know how wrong they were – but it will be too late. Even though they are to be expelled from the presence of the Lord and the glory of His power, they will make certain confessions before they are banished. Before an assembled universe, they will bow the knee to Jesus, and confess that He is, in fact, Lord of all. They will acknowledge they have been wrong, and that God was right. They will also bow before those who brought the truth of God to them, and will acknowledge before every created personality that the ones they hated were the very ones God loved. They will also give an account of all of their idle words, all their sayings, and for all their deeds. None will be overlooked.

This sort of thing was told to Felix by Paul, when he reasoned with Him about righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come (Acts 24:25). Jesus spoke of similar things when He announced to the generation among whom he walked, that in the day of judgment the men of Nineveh who repented at the preaching of Jonah would rise up and condemn them, because they did not hear the One who is “greater than Jonah” (Matt 12:41). He also said the Queen of Sheba would rise up and condemn their generation, because she came from afar to hear the wisdom of Solomon, but they refused to hear the One who is “greater than Solomon” (Matt 12:42). He said that it would more “more tolerable” for the wicked cities of Sodom and Gomorrah on the day of judgment, than for a city who did not receive the messengers He sent to them (Matt 10:15). He told the citizens of Capernaum that they would be “brought down to hell” because they had ignored the mighty works that had been done among them (Matt 11:23).

Words “of truth and soberness” do not seem to me to allow much room for levity – the presence of which is quite prominent in our time. The people of God should take care not to give their attention to sayings or matters that find their terminus in laughter alone. A manner of speaking is legitimate only to the degree that it makes for a sober mind.

What will be the outcome of those who hear “words of truth and soberness,” and view them as the words of a person who is not in their right mind? That is certainly something worth thinking about! I cannot imagine a person in heaven is lacking in seriousness, one that was lighthearted, or one that took God’s word lightly. The environment will not be conducive to that.

NOT DONE IN A CORNER

“ 26 For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely: for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner.”

The governor has heard the testimony of a man who has been commissioned by the Savior of the world, and has written it off as madness, insanity, and the display of a deranged mind. No further words will be said to him!

Now Paul turns his attention once again to Agrippa. He does not speak long with Festus because of the manifested hardness of his heart. The governor has heard the testimony of a man who has been commissioned by the Savior of the world, and has written it off as madness, insanity, and the display of a deranged mind. No further words will be said to him! Throughout all of Scripture, the only other words addressed to Festus came from Agrippa, which report is the last mentioning of his name (Acts 26:32). So far as the record is concerned, not one more word was uttered to him by Paul.

While this is a sensitive subject, there does come a time when the witness is withdrawn from those with hardened hearts. There are examples in Scripture of such a time, both with the world, cities, large bodies of people, and individuals. When this occurs, there is no further opportunity granted. It fulfills words stated by Solomon: "He, that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy" (Prov 29:1). Again, he stated in Proverbs 6:14-15, where it says of a "wicked man," "Frowardness is in his heart, he deviseth mischief continually; he soweth discord. Therefore shall his calamity come suddenly; suddenly shall he be broken without remedy."

Scriptural examples of those whose time ran out include the following.

- CAIN. "And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand; When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength; a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth" (Gen 4:11-12).

- THE WORLD. "And the LORD said, My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh: yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years" (Gen 6:3).

- SODOM AND THE CITIES OF THE PLAIN. "And the LORD said, Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous; I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, I will know . . . For we will destroy this place, because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the LORD; and the LORD hath sent us to destroy it" (Gen 18:20-21; 19:13).

- GENERATIONS OF THE GENTILE WORLD. "Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies between themselves . . . For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections: for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature . . . And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient" (Rom 1:24,26,28)

- THE TEN UNFAITHFUL SPIES AND ALL THOSE WHO BELIEVED THEM. "I the LORD have said, I will surely do it unto all this evil congregation, that are gathered together against me: in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die" (Num 14:35).

- ELI'S HOUSE. "And therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever" (1 Sam 3:14).

- WHOLE GENERATIONS OF THE JEWS. "Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee" (Jer 7:16). "For as Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of man be to this generation. The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them: for she came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here. The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here" (Luke 11:30-32).

- CERTAIN INHABITANTS OF JERUSALEM. "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Mat 23:38-39).

- UNBELIEVING JEWS IN ANTIOCH OF PISIDIA. "Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles . . . But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium” (Acts 13:46,51).

• HYMENAËUS AND ALEXANDER. “Of whom is Hymenaeus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme” (1 Tim 1:20).

• GOD HAS BEEN KNOWN TO WITHDRAW HIMSELF FROM PEOPLE. “They shall go with their flocks and with their herds to seek the LORD; but they shall not find him; he hath withdrawn himself from them” (Hosea 5:6).

This is not an area in which men can speculate, to be sure. The best thing to do is take these warnings seriously, and endeavor with all of your might not to tempt the Lord with unseemly conduct, words, or thoughts. Holy men have spoken solemnly about this Divine trait. Joshua warned the people, “ If ye forsake the LORD, and serve strange gods, then He will turn and do you hurt, and consume you, after that He hath done you good” (Josh 24:20). Azariah told Asa the king, “Hear ye me, Asa, and all Judah and Benjamin; The LORD is with you, while ye be with Him; and if ye seek Him, He will be found of you; but if ye forsake Him, He will forsake you ” (2 Chron 15:2). Ezra declared, “The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek Him; but His power and His wrath is against all them that forsake Him ” (Ezra 8:22). Isaiah affirmed, “And the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the LORD shall be consumed ” (Isa 1:28).

To this day, there are multitudes that do not believe God will fulfill those words. They imagine that they can reject the Lord, deny His Word, and do the things He has forbidden – all with impunity. But they are deceived. They have reacted to the truth of God in precisely the same manner as Festus, viewing His Word and work as unreasonable. What a tragic error in judgment! Men cannot trifle with God without paying a most grievous penalty. They cannot view the words of His servants as insane and unmeaningful without the God of heaven noting it, and eventually responding to it in judgment.

THE KING KNOWETH

“For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely . . .” Other versions read, “is familiar with these things,” NIV “has knowledge of these things,” BBE “understands these matters,” CJB “is informed about these things,” DARBY “well acquainted with these things,” MRD “knows what I am talking about,” CEV and “understands about these things well enough.” AMPLIFIED

At this point it is necessary to say that those who are lacking in a acquaintance with Scripture are at a decided disadvantage. It is not insurmountable, but such ignorance must be dissipated before any fruit can be expected.

What “things” did Herod know? They probably included some knowledge of the life and ministry of Jesus, the change of Saul of Tarsus, the persecution of believers, as well as some knowledge of the writings of the Moses and the Prophets. Agrippa did not know the truth in the sense affirmed by Jesus: “And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free” (John 8:32). At this point he had not acknowledged the truth, as stated in Second Timothy 2:25. His knowledge appears to have been an academic one. That was not enough to save the man, although a person must begin with that kind of knowledge in order to acknowledge truth and be made free by it.

Paul knew that you can reason with a person who has been exposed to the truth of God, and is at least familiar with what God has said. However, you cannot reason concerning the salvation of God with someone who has no knowledge of what God has said about salvation. That is precisely why Paul spoke as he did to the Athenian philosophers (Acts 17:22-31). For example, they were hearing for the first time about the resurrection of the dead (Acts 17:18,32). However, this was not the case with Agrippa. He was acquainted with what the Jews taught, as well as with their manners.

I have observed over the years that a lot of the purported witnessing that is done in the name of Jesus assumes that the people know more than they actually do. Under such conditions, at the very best, any commitment that is made is shallow – too shallow to sustain the professed believer. For example, knowing what the Scriptures say is imperative, but not enough. Satan knows what they say, but the Word of God has no sanctifying power upon him. The word of God must do its work within for it to be profitable. Therefore, it is said of the Word, “as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe” (1 Thess 2:13). It is good to bear witness to someone who is aware of what the Word says, yet that is not sufficient of itself. It appears from the text that the knowledge of these things distinguished Agrippa from Festus. Paul speaks to him with these things in mind.

At this point it is necessary to say that those who are lacking in a acquaintance with Scripture are at a decided disadvantage. It is not insurmountable, but such ignorance must be dissipated before any fruit can be expected. Judging from the content of much of the preaching and teaching in our time, this is not generally known – at least not with discernment.

I SPEAK FREELY

“ . . . before whom also I speak freely . . .” Other versions read, “I speak to him also with confidence,” NASB “I can speak freely with him,” NIV “It is to him I am actually speaking boldly,” CSB “I therefore speak confidently before him,” MRD “to him I now speak fearlessly,” NJB “I speak frankly,” LIVING and “[therefore] to him I speak with bold frankness and confidence.” AMPLIFIED

Lexically, the word “freely” is translated (parrhiazomenoj) from a word meaning, “to bear oneself boldly or confidently . . . to use freedom in speaking . . . to grow confident, have boldness, show assurance, assume a bold bearing,” THAYER “as acting with an attitude of openness that comes from freedom and lack of fear,” FRIBERG and “as acting with an attitude of openness that comes from freedom and lack of fear.” LOUW-NIDA

In the English language, and as it is used here, “freely” means, “ in a free manner: a. as of one's own accord; b: with freedom from external control c: without restraint or reservation.” MERIAM-WEBSTER

It was the knowledge that Agrippa possessed that permitted Paul to speak with such liberty – without having to guard every word he said, carefully weighing whether or not he was casting pearls before a swine (Matt 7:6). For one thing, when he appealed to Moses and the Prophets, Agrippa would be able to pick up on the general sense of what Paul was saying. This was to his advantage if he would but give heed to it. We might liken it to someone having a wholesome respect for the Bible, so that he would not speak against it.

When a person speaks the truth of God to an uninformed audience – like the group at Athens (Acts 17:22-32), or the idolaters in Lystra (Acts 14:14-17) – the speaker is actually limited in what he can say. For example, it is pointless to speak about Jesus or Christ if there is no cursory knowledge of who He is. If, on the other hand, one is acquainted with Moses and the Prophets, and what they foretold about the coming Messiah, the speaker has something to work with – and so does the Holy Spirit.

The Danger of a Private Interpretation of Jesus Christ

Right here, a word must be said about the danger of preaching a human interpretation of Jesus Christ, what He did, and why He did it. There is a lot of this happening in our time, so that the understanding of people is being shaped by an erroneous view of Jesus, His love, His work, and what He is doing at this time.

Right here, a word must be said about the danger of preaching a human interpretation of Jesus Christ, what He did, and why He did it. There is a lot of this happening in our time, so that the understanding of people is being shaped by an erroneous view of Jesus, His love, His work, and what He is doing at this time. All of this is done in order to supposedly make Jesus relevant to the hearers. However, what is actually being done is that the real Jesus is being further obscured, with men being led to think of Him as a kind of hero that is waging a war against poverty, disease, and marital and social disorder. Scripture refers these kind of presentations as “another Jesus” (2 Cor 11:4), or “false Christs” (Matt 24:24).

It is important to again mention that the true Jesus is the One who fulfilled the prophecies of Moses and the Prophets. Any Jesus who does not precisely fulfill those prophecies cannot possibly be the real Jesus, and to lead men to believe that it is, is to lead them astray.

- The factual Jesus is the One who magnified the Law and made it honorable (Isa 42:21).
- It is One that loves righteousness and hates iniquity (Heb 1:9).
- It is the One who will come in flaming fire, taking vengeance on those who know not God and obey not the Gospel (2 Thess 1:8).
- It is one who reconciles men to God, so that they are in harmony with Him (Col 1:20-21).
- This is the Jesus who made an end of sin and brought in everlasting righteousness (Dan 9:24; Heb 9:26; 1 Cor 1:30).
- It is one in whom we die to sin and are made alive unto God (Rom 6:11).
- This is the Jesus who comes to give us an understanding, that we might know Him that is true (1 John 5:20).
- It is the One who says “sin no more!” (John 5:13; 8:11).
- He speaks of abiding in His love (John 15:10), bearing fruit (John 15:2-8), and taking up your cross and following Him (Lk 9:23).
- He tells men that if they do not forsake all that they have, they cannot be His disciples (Lk 14:33).

This is all in keeping with Moses’ prophecy of Jesus: that He would be a Prophet to whom the people would hearken. Those who refused to hearken to Him would be destroyed from among the people (Deut 18:15, 18-19; Acts 2:22-23). For those of tender heart, and according to Isaiah, He is the One who will not break a bruised reed or quench a smoking flax (Isa 42:3; Matt 12:20).

Because Agrippa had some knowledge of Jewish manners and of Moses and the Prophets, Paul was able to speak more freely than he apparently could to Festus.

I AM PERSUADED

“ . . . for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him . . .” Other versions read, “for I am convinced that none of these things escapes his attention,” NKJV “I am persuaded that none of these things escape his notice,” NASB “being certain that all this is common knowledge to him,” BBE “because I am sure that none of these things have been hidden from him.” CJB “I am sure these events are all familiar to him, NLT and “I am convinced that not one of these things has escaped his notice.” AMPLIFIED

Once again, the things that were rehearsed to Agrippa include the following. Paul infers they were all of a public nature, and that word of them had been heard by the king. This was no doubt owing to the fact that Judea was the domain over which he presided, and he kept abreast of any events that could potentially cause disruption of the peace. Although these happenings included the manner in which Paul was raised, and his zeal for the Lord, it seems to me that his focus was on the Lord Jesus Christ and the particular prophecies that related to Him.

- The promise made to the fathers (26:6-7).
- That God should raise the dead (26:8).
- The name of Jesus of Nazareth (26:9).
- The appearance of Jesus to Paul on the road to Damascus (26:12-18).
- The preaching of Christ throughout the coasts of Judea (26:20).
- That Christ should suffer (26:23a).
- That Christ should be the first to rise from the dead (26:23b).
- That Christ should show light to the Jewish people (26:23c).
- That Christ should show light to the Gentiles (26:23d).

These were all matters with which anyone attending the synagogues, or subjected to the Scriptures would have some familiarity. That was enough to have provoked earnest inquiry as it did in Cornelius and other proselytes from that region.

THESE THINGS WERE NOT DONE IN A CORNER

“ . . . for this thing was not done in a corner.” Other versions read, “since this thing was not done in a corner.” NKJV “for this has not been done in a corner.” NASB “for it has not been done in secret.” BBE “they didn't happen in some back alley.” CJB “for all this did not take place in a corner [in secret].” AMPLIFIED

This had particular regard to what the Living God had done among the people – things pertaining to Jesus Christ. They included at least the following public matters.

- The news of the birth of Jesus, which the angels affirmed was intended for “all people” (Lk 2:10).
- At the time of Jesus’ dedication as the firstfruit of the womb, Anna the prophetess also proclaimed Christ also declared Him to those who “looked for redemption in Jerusalem” (Lk 38).
- The ministry of Jesus, who “went about doing good, and healing all who were that were oppressed of the devil” (Acts 10:38).
- During Christ’s prodigious ministry “His fame” even went “throughout all Syria” (Matt 4:24). It was also spread through all the “land” of the Jews (Matt 9:26), and throughout “all that country” (Matt 9:31).
- Even Herod the Tetrarch, a relative of Agrippa, “heard of the fame of Jesus” (Matt 14:1).

And what may be said now that over two millennia have past? If the knowledge of those happenings was more than enough to provoke earnest inquiry, what can be said of our time, when the fulness of Scripture is available to men, and enough is said about Jesus every day to move men to seek Him?

The fame of Jesus spread through all of Galilee (Mk 1:28), spreading “out into every place of the country round about” (Lk 4:37).

- The fame of Jesus also went “abroad” (Lk 5:15).
- The events of the day of Pentecost, and the proclamation of Jesus was a public matter (Acts 2:2:6).
- In all of this, especially in the preaching of the Gospel, God Himself “set forth,” or “declared publicly,” NASB Jesus as “a propitiation through faith in His blood” (Rom 3:25).
- Add to that the fact that in every synagogue, on every Sabbath, throughout the land, the Scriptures of both Moses and the Prophets were read publicly (Acts 15:21,27).

Indeed, the things that were wrought for the salvation of men were “not done in a corner.”

And what may be said now that over two millennia have past? If the knowledge of those happenings was more than enough to provoke earnest inquiry, what can be said of our time, when the fulness of Scripture is available to men, and enough is said about Jesus every day to move men to seek Him? Even though there is corruptness throughout the Christian world, yet, even under those less-than-ideal circumstances, enough of the truth has been made known to leave men without excuse. There simply is no satisfactory reason for not seeking the Lord, and striving to obtain an understanding of Him.

BELIEVEST THOU THE PROPHETS?

“ 27 King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest.”

Behold how Paul presses the matter upon Agrippa. He does not draw back from one who is paying attention to him. He knows nothing of toning down the message to awaken interest, but beholds in Agrippa a man who is wrestling with the truth. He does not shout out in derision like Festus, but displays some interest, even though it will prove to not be enough.

BELIEVEST THOU THE PROPHETS?

“King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets?” Other versions read, “Do you believe the Prophets?” NASB “have you faith in the prophets?” BBE and “do you believe the prophets? [Do you give credence to God’s messengers and their words?]” AMPLIFIED

In asking this question, Paul is not inquiring about the whole of the Prophets, but particularly of what they declared about the coming Christ. That is what Paul affirmed he consistently preached: “saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come” (Acts 26:22).

Some of the Prophets Prophecies

- A “Righteous Branch” who would reign and prosper (Jer 23:5; Zech 3:8).
- A “Child” upon whose shoulder the government would be placed (Isa 9:6).
- One whose name would appropriately be called “Wonderful, Counselor, The Mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace” (Isa 9:6).
- A “Witness,” “a Leader,” and “a Commander” (Isa 55:4).
- A “covenant of the people and a light to the Gentiles” (Isa 42:5).
- “David their king,” raised up for Israel (Jer 30:9).
- He would be called “Messiah the Prince” (Dan 9:25).

- He would be the “Plant of Renown” who would satisfy man’s deepest hunger (Ezek 34:29).
- For those who believe on Him, He would be “a Sanctuary.” For those who do not, He would be “ Stumblingstone ” (Isa 8:14).
- He was the “Shiloh” unto whom the people would gather (Gen 49:10).
- He would be “the Son of righteousness,” who would arise “with healing in His wings” (Mal 4:2).

And what may be said now that over two millennia have past? If the knowledge of those happenings was more than enough to provoke earnest inquiry, what can be said of our time, when the fulness of Scripture is available to men, and enough is said about Jesus every day to move men to seek Him?

He would be “despised and rejected of men” (Isa 53:3).

- He would bear “our griefs,” and carry our “sorrows” (Isa 53:4).
- He was “wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed” (Isa 53:5).
- The “Desire of all nations” (Hag 2:7).
- God’s “Servant,” His “Elect” (Isa 42:1).
- His name would be “Immanuel,” God with us (Isa 7:14).
- As a root, He will spring from Jesse, shall stand for “an ensign of the people,” the Gentiles will “seek” Him, and His rest will be glorious (Isa 11:10).
- He will be a foundation stone, a tried stone, a precious cornerstone, and a sure foundation. Because of this, “He that believeth shall not make haste,” or be disturbed NASB (Isa 28:16).
- In Him a fountain will be opened “for sin and uncleanness” (Zech 13:1).
- He would be God’s own “fellow,” who would be smitten by the Lord’s own sword (Zech 13:7).
- He would be called, “the Lord our Righteousness” (Jer 23:6).
- He would be noted as “a Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief” (Isa 53:3).
- He would be “the Messenger of the Covenant ” (Mal 3:1).

Now, in the light of that sampling of the Prophets, how does this question sound? “Do you believe the prophets?” NIV

A Point of Profound Concern

I am stricken with a sense of shame for the church of our generation because it is largely behind Agrippa in its knowledge of the prophets – particularly what they said about the coming Christ. I do not doubt that Agrippa will stand up with this generation like the Queen of the south will stand up with the generation that was exposed to the bodily presence of the Son of God. Regardless of the opinions of men, God will hold men responsible for being knowledgeable of what has been revealed to their generation. While there are men who chide religious sloths for leaving the Bibles on the shelf, so to speak, they ought to be reminding them of their answerability for that circumstance. This also applies to the exposure of people to faithful preachers and teachers of the Word of God. Sound preaching and teaching is like a Divine invitation to come to the feast of salvation that God has prepared. Those who imagine they have their own personal business to which they must attend have, by that posture, been excluded from participation in the salvation of God. That is the particular point of the parable of a man making a great supper, and inviting many. When those who were invited “began to make excuse,” the master of the supper became “angry.” He said of those who declined his invitation, “For I say unto you, That none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper” (Luke 14:24).

Two invitations were sent out to those servants. The first informed them that a great supper was being prepared, and they were invited to it (Lk 14:16). The second came when the supper was prepared, and the table set – “for all things are now ready” (Lk 14:17). Their excuses confirmed they had not taken the first invitation seriously. It was not, so to speak, marked on their calendars.

The messages of the Prophets concerning the coming Christ were like the first invitation. They were designed to whet the appetite of the people, and awaken them to the necessity of preparation. Then, when Jesus actually arrived on the scene, the people were expected to come to Him.

But what of those who, with Bibles in their homes, are still unaware of the first invitation? What can really be said about those who have taken no time to probe into what the prophets said about a coming Savior, and to culture an appetite for Him? And what of preachers, teachers, and elders who have long been so known, yet have not apprised “the flock of God” of the revelations God gave of Christ through the prophets? Are these conditions something that can be excused? Are they not matters concerning which God has spoken with remarkable clarity?

Add to that the Gospel of Christ, and the exposition of that Gospel in the Epistles. What of those who have neglected all of that revelation, both by hearing and the personal ingestion of the Word of God? Do you suppose leaving such noble pursuits to culture earthly relationships, occupations, and pleasures will be met with a heavenly smile and toleration?

It must be acknowledged that if the question Paul asked Agrippa was asked of the average American church member, it would be met with a questionable and befuddled stare. “Do you believe the prophets?” NKJV Some would blurt out, “Of course!” – even though they would have no idea what the interrogator was talking about. It would be an affirmation similar to the way they would answer, “Do you believe every word of the Bible?” – even though had read very little of it.

I KNOW THAT THOU BELIEVEST

“ . . . I know that thou believest.”

Paul is not speaking of believing like Abraham, who acted upon the Word of the Lord. This is rather an acknowledgment of the truth of Scripture – not formally questioning what it says. In the last 50-55 years, with an amazing plethora of translations designed to make it easier for simpletons to understand, there has actually been a rise in Scriptural illiteracy. As if that were not enough, there has been an explosion of doubt unleashed in the Christian community that has questioned the reliability of the Scriptures themselves. Add to that the environment of a significant percentage of higher and specialized Christian education to read and study more non-Biblical writings than the Scriptures themselves. As a result, a torrent of religious sewage is being dumped on congregations both directly, and through electronic media.

In other words, even though they did not live up to what they knew of the Scriptures, at least they kept the knowledge of the them alive both among themselves, and the social environment in which they existed.

What I am saying in all of this is that what Paul said to Agrippa could not now be said to a staggering number of professing Christians. Add to that the political officials who say they are Christians who have far from a working knowledge of the Scriptures. What man of God could stand before the highest political officials in the land and say, “I know that you do believe”?

Although the Jewish leaders had developed a lot of hoary tradition, and had nullified the commands of God with their tradition, the Scriptures were still read in their gatherings, and a general acquaintance with Scripture was maintained. That is why most of Paul's preaching and teaching was in the synagogues, not in amphitheaters, coliseums, and other social gathering places.

The same was seen in the ministry of Jesus, who regularly went to the synagogues, and often spent every day in the Temple. In other words, even though they did not live up to what they knew of the Scriptures, at least they kept the knowledge of the them alive both among themselves, and the social environment in which they existed. King Agrippa is a testimony to that fact, as well as every proselyte who embraced the Scriptures placed in the hands of the Jews (Rom 9:4).

In this day of greater light, the availability of greater understanding, and the development of Moses and the Prophets by the apostles, there should be a better and more productive understanding of the Prophets. Further, this level of ignorance has taken place in the midst of religious professionals, specialized ministers, extensive Christian education, and an explosion of supposed Christian writing. And what has all of this wave of new knowledge produced? What fruit has it borne? How has God been glorified by it all? A proper answer to such questions will reveal the nature of the times in which we live.

ALMOST THOU PERSUADEST ME

“ 28 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.”

ALMOST

“Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost . . .” Other versions read, “In a short time you will,” NASB “Do you think that in a short time you can,” NIV “Are you so quickly,” NRSV “in a short time you think,” RSV “with but a little,” ASV “a little more,” BBE “Somewhat thou,” PNT “with trivial proofs like these,” LIVING “in brief, you are doing your best,” WEYMOUTH “You think it a small task to make a Christian of me [just offhand to induce me with little ado,” AMPLIFIED and “keep this up much longer.” MESSAGE

Once again, the differing versions throw dust on the passage, obscuring its meaning. It is like the men providing such miserable translations forgot to read the next verse. Ponder the diversity displayed in the English versions of this text.

- Agrippa is depicted as asking a question, not making a statement.
- Agrippa suggests what Paul said was trivial, and thus incapable of inducing him to be a Christian.
- Agrippa charged Paul with doing his best in a short period of time that could not possibly move Agrippa to change his mind about Christ.
- If Paul kept on, Agrippa might be convinced.
- Agrippa asks Paul if he actually thinks he can convince Agrippa with such a brief presentation.

The Greek word translated “almost” is ovli,gwl . In his Word Pictures, Robertson points out that the meaning of the word, as used in this text, is not easy for the linguist to comprehend. He points out the manner in which Tyndale translates the word: “somewhat.” The Bishop's Bible translates it the same way. The word itself means “of degree or intensity, slight . . . profitable for little,” THAYER “of degree little, mild, slight . . . to a small extent,” FRIBERG and “for a little while, in only a small way.” UBS

In order to arrive at the meaning, it must be determined if Agrippa was referring to the amount of time Paul used in his defense, or if he was speaking of the impact of Paul's words upon himself. The versions that I have questioned defer to the first meaning. In this, however, I think they are incorrect. I adduce the following reasons for this conclusion.

- First, it was the weight of Paul's words that made them so effective, not the amount of time he spent giving them.
- Second, it is the Word of God that works effectively, disclosing the thoughts and intents of the heart, not the words of men.
- Third, Paul was not trying to persuade Agrippa to become a Christian, but was giving an account of his own life.
- Fourth, if Agrippa was chiding Paul for thinking such a brief presentation would convince him, he would have fallen into the same category as Festus.
- Fifth, the answer of Paul suggests that Paul took the words of Agrippa precisely as the Authorized Version presents them – a statement of Agrippa being “almost,” or nearly, persuaded.

PERSUADEST ME TO BE A CHRISTIAN

“ . . . Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.” Other versions read, “to become a Christian,” NKJV “make me a Christian,” RSV “become Messianic,” CJB “to play the Christian,” NAB and “make a Christian of me.” NJB

There are still many people who are in this “almost” category. They know there are Divinely prepared options available to them, and sense that they ought to avail themselves of them. Yet, they are too firmly fixed to this present evil world to break loose from it.

Again, the various versions tend to muddle the text. As you can see, some paint the text as Paul doing something – making Agrippa a Christian. Others represent Agrippa as being moved by what Paul said to almost become a Christian. In my judgment, the latter is the true sense of the text.

This text is one of three verses in the entire Bible in which the word “Christian” appears. The word means, “follower of Christ,” STRONG'S/THAYER and “one who is identified as a believer in and follower of Christ.” LOUW-NIDA

- “And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch” (Acts 11:26). This is how believers came to be known by the Gentiles, who were not themselves joined to the Lord. Some allege that this verse is a fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah, “and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name” (Isa 62:2). However, the fact that no inspired man ever addressed believers as “Christians,” or admonished unbelievers to become “Christians,” dispels this myth. That God would call His people by a name He never uses is an absurdity unworthy of any further consideration.

- “Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian” (Acts 26:28). Again, this term was used by someone who was not himself a follower of Jesus.

- “Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf” (1 Pet 4:16). Once again, this is the persecutors' view the believers. It is not an inside view.

Thus, Agrippa interrupts Paul's defense, indicating that he felt the nudging of his conscience, yet did not yield to it.

There are still many people who are in this “almost” category. They know there are Divinely prepared options available to them, and sense that they ought to avail themselves of them. Yet, they are too firmly fixed to this present evil world to break loose from it. They are willing to be a church member, as ordinarily perceived, and even to frequent the gatherings of believers when they have nothing else they prefer to do. However, a “follower of Jesus?” – Well, they are not prepared to make a commitment of that magnitude. That would mean they would have to remain with Jesus – all of the time – and they simply are not prepared to go that far!

- Sometimes following Jesus requires the abandonment of cherished human responsibilities. Jesus indicated this when He told a would-be disciple who asked to remain at home until he could bury his father, “Follow me; and let the dead bury their dead” (Matt 8:22).

- In order to follow Him, Jesus said one must “deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me” (Matt 16:24; Mk 8:34; Lk 9:23).

- Jesus told a covetous rich man who had inquired about obtaining eternal life, “If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow Me” (Matt 19:21-24).

- Jesus also said that serving Him required following Him, and that where He was, His servant would also be: “If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve me, him will my Father honor” (John 12:26).

Paul is an example of someone who followed Christ. Jesus, “If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve me, him will my Father honor” (John 12:26). See if you can find anything in the Scriptures that Paul did after He was apprehended by Jesus, that was not directly related to Jesus.

I WOULD TO GOD

“ 29 And Paul said, I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds.”

The answer of Paul confirms that Agrippa had indicated a very real attraction to what Paul had said. He was not, as some versions suggest, merely mocking Paul by suggesting he could not convince him to be a Christian with such a brief presentation. In the first place, so far as the record is concerned, I am not sure it would be proper to view Paul’s defense before Agrippa as something that was brief, or in any manner inadequate. I have already shown the remarkable concentration of truth that was made known in what Paul said. Now, let us make a cursory comparison of the number of words contained in his speech.

- Stephen’s defense before the Sanhedrin (Acts 7:2-53) 1,268 words
- Paul’s words at Antioch of Pisidia (Acts 13:16-)
 - 611 words
 - Paul’s words to Agrippa , before the interruption of Festus (Acts 26:2-23) 564 words
- Paul’s defense before the Jewish Sanhedrin (Acts 22:1-21) 526 words
- Peter on Pentecost (Acts 2:14-36) 531 words
- Peter in Solomon’s porch after healing the lame man: (Acts 3:12-26) 390 words
- Paul at Athens (Acts 17:22-31): 266 words .
- Paul and Barnabas to the idolaters in Lystra (Acts 14:15-17) 85 words

• Paul’s words to Festus after his allegation that Paul was “mad (Acts 26:25-26) 51
words

So far as recorded content is concerned, Paul’s defense before Agrippa ranks third in volume of the speeches recorded in the book of Acts. I do not know what form of reasoning would justify Agrippa thinking it was “a short time,” NASB/NIV “quickly,” NRSV “a little,” ASV “brief,” WEYMOUTH or “trivial.” LIVING

What Exactly Did Paul Proclaim

What did Paul declare that had an impact upon Agrippa? Excluding his own background and experience, here are some of the things Paul confidently affirmed.

- That hope in the promise of God had been the driving factor in himself, and among all serious Jews (26:6-7).
- That God raises the dead (26:8).
- That Jesus was the one Paul was persecuting in his opposition to the saints (26:14-15).
- That Jesus had commissioned him to “open men’s eyes.” (26:18a).
- That Jesus had commissioned him to turn men “from darkness to light.”
- That Jesus had commissioned him to turn men “from the power of Satan unto God” (26:18b).
- That Jesus had commissioned him to so speak as to bring men to “receive forgiveness of sins” (26:18c).
- That Jesus had commissioned him to so speak as to qualify men to obtain an “inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith” (26:18d).
- That, in keeping with Jesus commission, he had declared to men that they ought to “repent and turn to God” (26:20a).
- That he had declared to men that they ought to “do works meet for repentance” (26:20b).
- That, according to the Prophets, Jesus “should suffer” (26:23a).
- That, according to the Prophets, Jesus should “be the first that should rise from the dead” (26:23b).
- That, according to the Prophets, Jesus should “show light” to the Jewish people (26:23c).
- That, according to the Prophets, Jesus should show light “to the Gentiles” (26:23d).

Whatever you may think about those words, heaven was well pleased with them, and used them to discern the thoughts and intent of Agrippa’s heart. Like all valid witnessing, words must be employed that can be used by the Holy Spirit to reach into the hearts and consciences of men. This cannot be accomplished by subjects and words that are not fully supported by the Word of God.

I WOULD TO GOD

“And Paul said, I would to God . . .” Other versions read, “I pray God,” NIV “I pray to God,” NRSV “It is my prayer to God,” BBE “I wish to God,” CJB “I wish before God,” CSB “I would pray to God,” NAB “I wish before God,” NJB “I would have wished to God,” YLT “I wish,” CEV and “That’s what I’m praying for.” MESSAGE

The phrase “would to God” is translated from the Greek expression Ευχαι,μην α'ν tw/l qew/l . Lexically, and as used in this text, this phrase is defined as, “to pray to God . . . to pray, to pray for;” THAYER “of petitionary prayer or appeal to God pray, offer prayer, ask; (2) of a strong desire for something; want, wish for;” FRIBERG “pray; wish, long;” UBS “to speak to or to make requests of God - 'to pray, to speak to God, to ask God for, prayer;” LOUW-NIDA “to pray for a thing, long or wish for;” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “wish (for).” GINGRICH

This Greek word appears seven times in Acts through First John – and nowhere else. In the texts below, I have put the words translated from this Greek word in bold type.

- “And Paul said, I would to God , that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds” (Acts 26:29). Other versions read, “pray God,” NIV and “pray to God,” NRSV The Greek word for “God” is used in this text – “to GOD.”

- “Then fearing lest we should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day” (Acts 27:29). Other versions read, “prayed for,” NKJV/NIV//RSVNRSV

- “For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh” (Rom 9:3). Other versions read, “have a desire.” BBE The word for God is not used in this text.

- “Now I pray to God that ye do no evil; not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is honest, though we be as reprobates” (2 Cor 13:7). Most versions read “pray to God.” This is because the Greek word for God (qeo.n)is used in the text: “pray to GOD.”

- “For we are glad, when we are weak, and ye are strong: and this also we wish , even your perfection” (2 Cor 13:9). Other versions read, “pray,” NKJV/NASB/NIV/NRSV/RSV/ASV “God” is not specified in the text.

- “Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much” (James 5:16). Most versions read “pray.” The word “God” is not in this text.

- “Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth” (3 John 1:2). Other versions read, “pray,” NKJV/ NASB/NIV/NRSV/RSV “desire,” DARBY “hope,” NAB/NJB

Based on the use of the word, I conclude that “wish” speaks of an especially strong and compelling desire. There is nothing casual or uncertain about the word. As used here, the desire is toward the Lord, seeking His will and power in the matter. In some of the other texts, prayer to God may be assumed, but it is not integral to the text. When the men aboard the vessel in a fierce storm are said to have “wished for the day,” the emphasis was that they were fervently looking for the passing of the storm, when the light would no longer be hidden by the dark clouds. For Paul and Luke, prayer to God was no doubt made. For the others, they may very well have prayed to their gods. The point of the text, however, was the strength of their desire.

In the text before us, Paul is expressing his heart’s desire – something for which he fervently longed. This was a desire that shaped his speech, moving him to speak with words the Lord could use to turn the heart of the king toward the Lord Jesus.

One of the Jeopardies of Our Time

One of the jeopardies of our time is the dulling effect that entertainment and pleasure have upon the hearts of men. With such a variety of things being served up to the masses, a fervent desire for one thing, particularly the right thing, is exceedingly rare.

Strong spiritual desires are not at all common in the professed Christian community. This is involved in being “fervent in spirit” (Acts 18:25; Rom 12:11). Is an aspect of “laboring fervently in prayers” (Col 4:12). We do well to remember that it is an “effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man” that “availeth much” (James 5:16). We are to “love one another with a pure heart fervently” (1 Pet 1:22), having “fervent charity among” ourselves (1 Pet 4:8).

Such holy traits are neutralized by religious entertainment, distractions, and childish simplicity. People who cave in to such pressures will not have compelling desires such as those Paul expresses in this text. They will be locked into mediocrity.

ALSO ALL THAT HEAR ME THIS DAY

“ . . . that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day . . .” Other versions read, “not only you but all who are listening to me today,” NIV “not only thou, but all who have heard me this day,” DARBY and “both you and everyone here in this audience,” NLT

With one sweeping word, Paul addresses an entire assembly of political and military dignitaries, stating his fervent desire that they would be fully persuaded of the things he had spoken.

Salvation Is Universal in Its Provision

Men are very prone to sift truth through their own conclusions, rather than sifting their conclusions through the truth of God. If a person is going to have peace within, and do the work of the Lord with a good conscience, he must do the latter.

Paul’s words underscore the universality of salvation’s provision. No member of Adam’s race has been excluded, for “the iniquity of us all” were laid upon Christ (Isa 53:6). Jesus did, in fact, take away “the sin of the world” (John 1:29), and “put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself” (Heb 9:26). Jesus partook of flesh and blood in order “that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil,” thus providing for the thorough deliverance of all who believe (Heb 2:14). With remarkable precision it is written that Christ “died for all ” (2 Cor 5:14-15).

The remedy for sin reaches as far as the transgression, which defiled all men, and even all creation (Rom 5:12-19).

When Jesus entered into the world, an angel announced this was an era of “good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people ” (Lk 2:10). Jesus is said to have given Himself “a ransom for all ” (1 Tim 2:4). There is a sense in which God is “the Savior of all men ” (1 Tim 4:10). The grace of God that brings salvation “hath appeared to all men ” (Tit 2:11). So far as potentiality is concerned, no offspring of Adam has been excluded from the provision of salvation. Whoever believes will receive it – “ everyone that believeth” (Rom 1:16; 10:4).

It is the knowledge of this glorious circumstance that enabled Paul to express his desire for everyone within the sound of his voice: “not only you, but also all who are listening to me today.”
AMPLIFIED

There is such a thing as “the election of grace” (Rom 11:5), and those who were foreknown (Rom 8:29). Predestination is not merely a theological term, but is a revealed reality (Rom 8:29-30; Eph 1:5,11). There are those who are “chosen . . . to salvation” (2 Thess 2:13).

However, the knowledge of these facts is not to impact on the manner in which the Gospel is preached. This is because the details of such things have not yet been revealed. By its very nature, the Gospel is designed for all men – “ every creature” (Mk 16:15). It is in the preaching of this Gospel that the election of God is made known. Those who have the Spirit of God will have His attitude as well: “Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth” (1 Tim 2:4). How men handle this truth may very well vary, but the truth itself remains constant. It may prove difficult for some to even think in such a manner, but they do well to learn to adjust their thinking to be in agreement with the God who made and saved them.

Men are very prone to sift truth through their own conclusions, rather than sifting their conclusions through the truth of God. If a person is going to have peace within, and do the work of the Lord with a good conscience, he must do the latter.

All of this is to say that Paul was not simply spouting rhetoric when he declared his desire for everyone listening to him. This is really the way he thought, and his heart was in his words.

BOTH ALMOST AND ALTOGETHER AS I AM

“ . . . were both almost, and altogether such as I am . . .” Other versions read, “might become both almost and altogether,” NKJV “whether in a short or a long time . . . might become such as I am,” NASB “Short time or long . . . may become what I am,” NIV “Whether it takes a short time or a long time . . . might become just like me,” CJB “either easily or with difficulty . . . might become as I am,” CSB “whether with little or with much, not thou only, but also all that hear me this day, might become such as I am,” ASV “were both almost, and altogether such as I am,” GENEVA “sooner or later not only you but all who listen to me today might become as I am,” NAB “Whether quickly or not, I pray to God that both you and everyone here in this audience might become the same as I am,” NLT “both somewhat, and also in a great deal, such as I am,” PNT “were not somewhat only but altogether such as I am.” TNT

The point of being like Paul refers to the advantages realized in Christ Jesus: being justified from all things, forgiven, sanctified, and having access to God. Being made free, being made an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ, and having his name written in heaven. He is not talking about social status, but of heavenly Divine acceptance.

Furthermore, the point is not the length of time it would take to bring the people to such a state. In my judgment, the many translations that leave this impression are 100% wrong. Paul is speaking about the level of their persuasion, not of the length of time or number of words required to obtain that persuasion.

Once again, the alarming absence of persuasion among professed believers is of great concern. Too many questions are being asked, which betrays the absence of, or at least a deficiency in, persuasion. This is not good. The Scriptures confirm that those who were accepted by God were a persuaded people.

- It is said of Paul and Barnabas that they “ persuaded ” many Jews and proselytes to “continue in the grace of God” (Acts 13:43).
- While in Corinth, Paul went into the synagogue “and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks” (Acts 18:4).
- In Ephesus Paul “ persuaded . . . much people” (Acts 19:26).
- It is said of Abraham that he was “fully persuaded that” what God had “promised, He was able also to perform” (Rom 4:21).
- Paul was “ persuaded , that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord” (Rom 8:38-39).

- Believers who hold to conflicting views are admonished to be “fully persuaded ” in their own mind (Rom 14:5).

- Paul was “ persuaded ” that God was “able to keep” what he had “committed to Him against that day” (2 Tim 1:12).

- Those who lived prior to Christ, and even prior to the Law, saw the promises “afar off, and were persuaded of them” (Heb 11:13).

Make no mistake about it, a lack of persuasion is a fundamental lack. Such a condition must not be allowed to continue, for it puts the individual lacking such persuasion in a vulnerable situation.

EXCEPT THESE BONDS

“ . . . except these bonds.” Other versions read, “except for these chains,” NKJV and “except for being a prisoner.” GWN

Paul knew well what it meant to suffer “for righteousness’ sake” (Matt 5:10). He did not mitigate his testimony to avoid incarceration, nor was he ashamed of his chain. He wrote to Timothy, saying that Onesiphorus was not ashamed of his chain: “The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus; for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain” (2 Tim 1:16). He also admonished Timothy not to be ashamed of the fact that he (Paul) was a prisoner: “Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner: but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God” (2 Tim 1:8). Like the apostles, he no doubt was rejoicing that he was “counted worthy to suffer shame for His name” (Acts 5:41).

Notwithstanding this man of God did not desire for any one else to be in chains because of their persuasion. He knew there was no glory in suffering itself, for a person can suffer because he is an “evildoer, or as a busybody in other men’s matters” (1 Pet 4:15). That is the kind of suffering that must be avoided, for it reproaches Christ and demeans the Gospel. A Gospel that has no power, and does not change those who embrace it, ought not to be preached to anyone, much less everyone.

Paul knows that those who “live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution” (2 Tim 3:12), yet he does not desire the saints to be persecuted or placed in chains.

For those unacquainted with the ways of the Lord, this is a difficult thing to harmonize. This is particularly true of those who have a bent toward Law, which views everything from a strictly legal point of view. Such people are unable to distinguish between results and responsibilities – and they are not always synonymous.

There appears to be another lesser reason for Paul referring to his chains – holding them up before the audience, so to speak. He was in chains unjustly, and he would not let the officials forget it. Throughout this episode, he has made frequent reference to his innocence.

- To Felix he said, “And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city: Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me ” Acts 24:12-13).

- Again he said to Felix, “Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult. Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had ought against me. Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council ” (Acts 24:18-20).

- Paul told Festus, “Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Caesar, have I offended any thing at all ” (Acts 25:8).

- To Festus he said, “to the Jews I have done no wrong ” (25:10).

- “For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Caesar ” (Acts 25:11).

The point is that the people of God are to live above reproach, so that no charges against them can be confirmed. The admonitions to see to it that we live in such a manner are numerous. These expose those who excuse sin and tell us that believers all sin all of the time, and constantly need to have their hearts broken and to repent.

In addition to his own testimony,

- Lysias the captain had reported, “Whom I perceived to be accused of questions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds ” (Acts 23:29).
- When charges were brought against Paul before Festus, it was observed, “And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove ” (Acts 25:7).
- Festus told Agrippa, “Against whom when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed ” (Acts 25:18).
- He also said to Agrippa, “But had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive. And because I doubted of such manner of questions , I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters” (Acts 25:20).

The Example of Jesus

The Lord Jesus Himself challenged His opponents to raise a legitimate charge against Him.

- “Which of you convinceth Me of sin? And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe Me?” (John 8:46).
- “Many good works have I showed you from My Father; for which of those works do ye stone Me?” (John 10:32).

The point is that the people of God are to live above reproach, so that no charges against them can be confirmed. The admonitions to see to it that we live in such a manner are numerous. These expose those who excuse sin and tell us that believers all sin all of the time, and constantly need to have their hearts broken and to repent. That such action should take place when sin is committed is certainly true. However, it is wise not to neglect the admonitions directed to the saints.

- “Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely , for My sake” (Matt 5:11).
- “Awake to righteousness, and sin not ; for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame” (1 Cor 15:34)
- “Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God” (2 Cor 7:1).
- “But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you , as becometh saints: neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks” (Eph 5:3-4).
- “That ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ” (Phil 1:10).
- “Do all things without murmurings and disputings: That ye may be blameless and harmless , the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world” (Phil 2:14-15).

- “And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ” (1 Thess 5:23).

- “But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear: Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ ” (1 Pet 3:15-16).

- “Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless ” (2 Pet 3:14).

- “My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not . And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous” (1 John 2:1).

There is more to a holy life than simply doing what we have been commanded to do. Such a life is a visible witness to the effectiveness of grace. Those who are honest will be forced to acknowledge the effectiveness of the grace of God – even though that is not precisely how they view it. In this extended episode the innocence of Paul has been both witnessed and confessed by Lysias the captain, Felix, Festus, and now Agrippa.

Scripture also attests that false accusers will be brought to shame for leveling false accusations at the righteous (1 Pet 3:16). False accusers will also “glorify God in the day of visitation” (1 Pet 2:12). Ultimately, this will take place when Jesus confesses the saints to God and before the holy angels (Rev 3:5). It can also occur if Jesus visits the accusers as He did Saul of Tarsus. During that visitation, Saul instantly ceased his opposition to the saints, and heartily embraced their Savior and cause. Jesus also reminded the persecuted church in Philadelphia, “Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee ” (Rev 3:9). None of these promises apply to those who fail to mortify their members, subduing fleshly inclinations. An unholy life actually disqualifies one from obtaining the promises of reference.

THIS MAN MIGHT HAVE BEEN SET AT LIBERTY

“ 30 And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them: 31 And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, This man doeth nothing worthy of death or of bonds. 32 Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Caesar.”

Having heard the witness of Paul, this meeting was dismissed. No further questions were asked of Paul. He had given a reason for the hope that was within him, and had done so in an effective manner, thereby bringing honor to both God and Christ.

THEY TALKED AMONG THEMSELVES

“And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them.”

Agrippa, Festus, and Bernice got up, and “those who were sitting with them.” NASB Thus, we are apprised that the whole group had been sitting, with their attention fastened upon Paul. Technically, it was an evaluation session, but this group of people, probably, significant in number, had heard more than they thought they would. Earlier this group of people were defined as , “Agrippa . . . and Bernice . . . with the chief captains, and principal men of the city” (Acts 25:23). Festus was there as well. In our day, this would be like speaking to the president, the whitehouse staff, and the senators and representatives. Jesus had told Ananias that Paul would bear His name “before kings” (Acts 9:15). But who could have imagined something of this magnitude?

The last words Paul said to them all were, “And Paul said, I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds” (Acts 26:29).

Keep in mind that at this gathering no accusing Jews were present. They had already heard Paul’s witness and rejected it. Now he had been able to bear witness to Agrippa without the encumbering presence of the unbelieving Jews. This too was ordered by the Lord, fulfilling the word of Solomon: “The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the LORD” (Prov 16:33).

NOTHING WORTHY OF DEATH OR OF BONDS

But there was more to this matter than Paul’s personal experience. Neither, indeed, was this strictly a matter of justice and social correctness. Jesus had personally revealed to Paul, “Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome”

“And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, This man doeth nothing worthy of death or of bonds.” Other versions read, “when they had drawn aside, they began talking with one another, saying, This man is not doing anything worthy of death or imprisonment,” NASB “while talking with one another they said,” NIV “as they were leaving,” NRSV “As they talked it over afterwards they agreed,” LIVING “as they continued to talk the matter over together,” WILLIAMS “They quickly agreed on Paul’s innocence saying, “There’s nothing in this man deserving prison, let alone death,” MESSAGE “This man practices nothing worthy of death or chains,” EMTV and “after they had gone out, they said to one another, This man is doing nothing deserving of death or [even] of imprisonment.” AMPLIFIED

The hearers were all in perfect accord: Paul had not done, nor was he practicing, anything deserving of either death or imprisonment. Festus did not speak up again, saying Paul was “mad,” as he had earlier. Had he done so, he would have been in disagreement with the king, and that would not have been wise. Thus his mouth was stopped, so that he raised no contention about the matter.

This group of heathens, uncultured for truth, were more sensitive to it than the accusing Jews were, who had been cultured to receive the truth.

MIGHT HAVE BEEN SET AT LIBERTY

“Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Caesar.” Other versions read, “might have been set free,” NKJV “might have been made free,” BBE “could have been released,” CJB “might have been let go,” DARBY and “might have been loosed.” GENEVA

So far as legality was concerned, king Agrippa saw that the death or incarceration of Paul could in no way be justified. Had Paul not appealed to Caesar, which right would not be withdrawn from him, he might have been fully exonerated from all charges, and consequently freed.

But there was more to this matter than Paul’s personal experience. Neither, indeed, was this strictly a matter of justice and social correctness. Jesus had personally revealed to Paul, “Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome” (Acts 23:11). While under house arrest, he would preach there “for two whole years,” with Rome paying the bills (Acts 28:30-31). It is the promise of this opportunity that was driving Paul.

Thus, in the midst of a distracting, and even painful experience, Divine direction was realized.

Among other things, this confirms the need for spiritual alertness during difficult times. Care must be taken not to become absorbed with our trials, lest we miss something from heaven that may be intended by them. This is the sort of thing that cannot be outlined or legislated.

The revelation was not given to Paul until this entire episode was well under way. He had been dragged from the Temple, beaten, rescued by captain Lysias, and made a defense before the Jews. During that time, he had set his accusers against themselves by pointing out that he was a Pharisee, and affirmed that he had been called into question because of “the hope and resurrection of the dead” (Acts 23:8). The tumult grew so intense that Paul was sequestered away from the crowd. It was the following night that Jesus told him he would testify about Him in Rome.

Thus, in the midst of a distracting, and even painful experience, Divine direction was realized. Among other things, this confirms the need for spiritual alertness during difficult times. Care must be taken not to become absorbed with our trials, lest we miss something from heaven that may be intended by them. This is the sort of thing that cannot be outlined or legislated. Nevertheless, it is involved in being “sober” (1 Thess 5:6,8), “awake” (Rom 13:11; 1 Cor 15:34; Eph 5:14), and properly focused (2 Cor 4:18; Heb 12:1-2). The Kingdom of God does not center around us; we are not the main persons. We are participants, but the focus is not upon us. However, if, in our trials, we become absorbed with what is happening to us, we have, in fact, shifted the focus to ourselves. That will yield no good thing.

CONCLUSION

This entire account, commencing in Acts 21:27, is a macro view of Jesus governing His Kingdom. The government has been placed upon His shoulder (Isa 9:6-7), and this is an example of His administration. Notice the people that have been involved thus far.

- Jews from Asia (21:27).
- “All the people” who were in the Temple complex at that time (21:27b-28).
- Trophimus, who was traveling with Paul, and was a Greek (21:29).
- All the city of Jerusalem (21:30).
- A chief captain of the Roman army (21:31).
- The soldiers and centurions that came with the captain (21:32).
- The soldiers who carried Paul to safety (21:35).
- A centurion to whom Paul spoke concerning Roman law (21:25-26).
- The chief priests (21:30).
- The Jewish council (21:30).
- The high priest Ananias (23:2).
- The servant who struck Paul on the mouth (23:2-3).
- Those who were standing by when Paul responded to the action, challenging what he said (23:4).
- Sadducees (23:6).
- Pharisees (23:6).
- Forty Jews who banded together and plotted to kill Paul (23:12-13).
- The elders (23:14).

- Paul's sister (23:16).
- Paul's sister's son (23:16).
- One of the centurions whom Paul instructed to take his nephew to the captain, informing him of the plot against him (23:17).
- Two centurions that Lysias called to arrange for Paul being conducted to Caesarea (23:23).
 - Two hundred soldiers (23:23).
 - Seventy horsemen (23:23).
 - Two hundred spearmen (23:23).
 - Felix the governor (23:26).
 - Tertullus, an orator (24:1-2),
 - The Jews that brought Tertullus (24:9).
 - Drusilla, Felix's wife (24:24).
 - Festus, who replaced Felix (25:27).
 - Caesar (25:11-12).
 - Agrippa (25:13).
 - Bernice (25:13).
 - The chief captains of Caesarea (25:23).
 - The chief men of the city of Caesarea (25:23).

There is a brief listing of hundreds, and even thousands of people, that became involved in this affair. They included foreign Jews, the entire city of Jerusalem, Jewish authorities, an army, military leaders, governors, a governor's wife, a king, and a king's sister.

There are also places involved: the Temple, the city of Jerusalem, the city of Antipatris, the city of Caesarea, and the governor's mansion.

Which of these individuals, groups, or places was not under the government of Jesus? Could any of them successfully void the will of the Lord? Indeed not! There was a sense in which they were all pawns in the hands of the Lord – vessels to be used as He saw fit. In it all, the Lord was working all things together for the good of Paul. Over and above that, He was so working as to cause praise in heaven and among the discerning on earth. He was also revealing His control of the wicked one and all of his seen and unseen forces. Indeed, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

Lesson #102

PAUL WARNS OF IMPENDING DANGER

“ 21:1 And when it was determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius, a centurion of Augustus' band. 2 And entering into a ship of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia; one Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us. 3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself. 4 And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary. 5 And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia. 6 And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein. 7 And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Cnidus, the wind not suffering us, we sailed under Crete, over against Salmone; 8 And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called The fair havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea. 9 Now when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, because the fast was now already past, Paul admonished them, 10 And said unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives. 11 Nevertheless the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by

Paul.” (Acts 27:1-11)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

Paul having appealed to Caesar, arrangements are now made to transport him, together with some other prisoners, to Italy. Considerable authority will be given to a certain military man who is in charge of the trip. He will arrange for different ships as needed, and will manifest, by Divine providence, a certain special care for Paul. A brother in the Lord from Thessalonica joins Paul in the journey, thereby confirming his love for this man of God. Along the way, contrary winds were encountered, which called for further unplanned decisions. Confirming that godliness does not rob an individual of practical discretionary powers, Paul warns those in charge that he perceives this voyage will be with much hurt and damage, not only to the ship, but also endangering the lives of its occupants. However, the centurion in charge believed the master and owner of the ship more than the words of Paul. As the trip proceeds, it will be confirmed that Paul had given a proper assessment.

DIVINE DIRECTION

Throughout this entire episode, the providence and direction of the mighty God of heaven has been evident. Satan has been aggressive against Paul, working through those enslaved to him, seeking to hinder the work of the Lord. However, Jesus, being Lord over Satan, and in charge of His appointed demise, has called Paul out of darkness into light, and turned him from the power of Satan unto God. He has charged Paul with a most aggressive mission, and done so in such a manner as to challenge the adversary and all of his cohorts to stop it. The devil has been totally powerless to turn Paul away from the strait and narrow way, or to abort his mission. All of that is involved in Divine providence and direction. The Lord could not successfully direct or protect His people if He was not “over all” (Rom 9:5). Men may philosophize about whether or not God intervenes in the affairs of men, or the role of free will in men, but when all is said and done, “all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay His hand, or say unto Him, What doest thou?” (Dan 4:35). Even among the hosts of darkness, there is not a single word that depicts them as saying to God, “What do you think you are doing?” Men have waxed bold and said such things, but they have been nothing more than puffs of harmless smoke. All of this is being lived out in this extended episode, the record of which commences in Acts 21:27, and will continue to the close of this book

- The Jews of Asia were not able stop Paul.
- The Jews who joined them could not abort the purpose of God for Paul.
- Those forty men who conspired to kill Paul could not do what they had willed.
- Ananias the high priest was powerless to abort Paul's mission.
- The elders could not stop the work.
- The Sanhedrin with all of their pretended power could not cut Paul's work short.
- The Pharisees proved powerless to interfere with the work of God.
- The Sadducees were totally frustrated in their attempts.
- Tertullus could not move the governor against Paul.
- Felix could not cause Paul to move out on his own, purchasing freedom for himself.
- The indecision of Festus, and his shouts of Paul being a madman had no effect on the work.
- Two years in prison had no deterring effect upon Paul.

While all of this involved Paul's determination and resolve, the greater cause was the working of the Lord. His providence was a key factor, as it is in all of His dealings with those of whom He approves. The word "providence" is not used in Scripture, but evidence of this kind of work is everywhere. It is a theological word that began to be employed in the fourteenth century. In the English language, it is defined as follows: "Divine guidance or care capitalized : God conceived as the power sustaining and guiding human destiny." MERRIAM-WEBSTER It involves the idea of Divine purpose, and the carrying out of the same through the working of God. It assumes the superiority of God, the invincibility of His purpose, and, as regards that purpose, His immediate involvement in the affairs of men. The presence of God is integral to His will. Some Scriptural expressions of this are as follows.

• THE BLESSING OF ABRAHAM. "That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies" (Gen 22:17).

• THE BLESSING OF ISAAC. "And I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed " (Gen 26:4).

• PRESERVING ISRAEL THROUGH JOSEPH. "Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: for God did send me before you to preserve life" (Gen 45:5). "But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good , to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive" (Gen 50:20).

• JACOB'S BLESSING OF JOSEPH. "Even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee ; and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts, and of the womb" (Gen 49:25).

• SUSTAINING ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS. "For the LORD thy God hath blessed thee in all the works of thy hand: he knoweth thy walking through this great wilderness: these forty years the LORD thy God hath been with thee ; thou hast lacked nothing" (Deut 2:7).

• GENERAL BLESSINGS FOR MEN. "Nevertheless he left not Himself without witness, in that He did good , and gave us rain from heaven, and What God has determined will be carried out. This is written in every line of this record, and accounts for the fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness” (Acts 14:17).

• WORKING ALL THINGS TOGETHER FOR THE GOOD OF HIS PEOPLE.

“And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose” (Rom 8:28).

• THE BLESSING OF THOSE IN CHRIST WITH ADEQUACY. “And God is able to make all grace abound toward you ; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work” (2 Cor 9:8).

• THE FURTHERANCE OF THE GOSPEL. “But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel ” (Phil 1:12).

• THINGS TURNING OUT FOR OUR SALVATION. “For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ” (Phil 1:19).

When the Lord Jesus apprehended Paul He said, “But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee , To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me” (Acts 26:16-18). That purpose was not simply left in the hands of Paul. He was responsible for devoting himself to it, and being faithful to his calling. However, the actual carrying out of that purpose was governed by, what we call, the providence of God. There is an overriding fact that pervades every facet of God’s will: “He which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ” (Phil 1:6). If necessary, He will turn the hearts of kings (Prov 21:1), frustrate the devices of the ungodly (Isa 44:25), and make a way even in the wilderness of impossibility (Isa 43:19). If there are temptations, He will “ make a way to escape” (1 Cor 10:13). If His people need “strength and power,” He will give it (Psa 68:35). He is fully able to effectively “rebuke the devourer” (Mal 3:11), and “command deliverances” (Psa 44:4).

What God has determined will be carried out. This is written in every line of this record, and accounts for the steady progress of Paul in the good and acceptable and perfect will of God. What is contained in doctrine is lived out in this history.

DETERMINED WE SHOULD SAIL TO ITALY

“ 21:1 And when it was determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius, a centurion of Augustus' band.”

Now the trip to Italy begins. Paul is one of many being transported, along with special cargo. The trip will take a while, and various decisions will have to be made: whether the weather is acceptable for sailing, where to stop over for the winter, and selecting a change of vessels when required.

As the crow flies, this trip would be well over 1,300 miles. By boat it would, at the very least, be 1,750 miles, and could possibly be near 2,000 miles – by sea! This would be a challenging trip in one of the large vessels of our day. A boat today can travel 112 miles in four hours. Against the wind, it requires six hours to travel 48 miles. By today’s standards, therefore, this trip would require from 2-2.5 months, 62.5-71.4 days. To that can be added at least 82 days, not counting two periods (listed below) referred to as “many days.” That would make the trip somewhere between 4.7 and 5.1 months, or between 141 and 153 days – nearly half a year!

“A day” in Sidon Acts 27:3

“Many days” Acts 27:7

“Many days” Acts 27:20

“Fourteen nights” Acts 27:35

“Three days” Acts 28:7

“Three months” Acts 28:11

“Three days” Acts 28:12

“One day” Acts 28:13

“Seven days” Acts 28:14

Think About It

Does that not define more fully what Paul meant when he said he faced “perils in the sea” (2 Cor 11:26). During that time the devil must have sought for any kind of opportunity to destroy Paul. He could not do it when Paul was on the land. He could not do it while Paul was in prison. And, he could not do it when Paul was on the sea! God was protecting this man, and not a hair of his head would perish (Lk 21:18). Of course, had Paul plotted his own path, and taken matters into his own hand, as some are prone to do, all of this would have been forfeited.

The glory of this whole matter is that Paul knew what Jesus was doing. He may not have known all of the details, but he did know he was going to bear witness to Christ in Rome – even though over 1,300 miles of water separated him from that destination. Further, he did not own anything that could enable him to get to Rome, and did not have the finances either. Yet, he will land safely in Italy, and do precisely what Jesus said he would do.

IT WAS DETERMINED

“And when it was determined that we should sail into Italy . . .” Other versions read, “it was decided,” NKJV “the decision had been made,” BBE “it was concluded,” GENEVA “arrangements were finally made,” LIVING “Now when it was determined that we [including Luke] should sail for Italy,” AMPLIFIED “when it was time for us to sail to Rome,” CEV “decided for us,” LITV and “As soon as arrangements were complete.” MESSAGE

It is not stated who made the determination that Paul would be transported to Italy, but I suspect that the original decision was made by Festus. It was to him that Paul made his request known: “I appeal to Caesar,” and it was Festus who said, “Hast thou appealed unto Caesar? Unto Caesar shalt thou go” (Acts 25:11-12).

Luke, who is writing this account, said it was determined that “WE should sail, to Italy.” Luke was, then, with them as they commenced this trip. It is apparent that the political and military officials condoned Luke going along, being favorably inclined to him. Here is another example of someone obtaining favor with men due to Divine influence (Ex 3:21; 11:3; ; 12:36; Dan 1:4,9; Acts 7:10).

The presence of Luke is referenced frequently in the travels of Paul by the use of the pronouns “we” and “us.” If we are not alert to this, we will miss the fact that Luke was with Paul.

- When Paul went to Macedonia (Acts 16:10-11).

- In Philippi, and when Paul preached to the Lydia and those who were with her (Acts 16:12-13).
- When Paul confronted the woman with a spirit of divination (Acts 16:16).
- When Paul sailed from Philippi to Troas, and when he preached in Troas, also raising Eutychus from the dead (Acts 16:6-11).
- When Paul left Troas, Luke and others met him at Assos, where they continued to sail with him (Acts 20:13-15).
- Sailing to Coos, Rhodes, Patara, Phenicia, Syria, Tyre, Ptolemais, and Caesarea (Acts 21:1-7).
- When they remained in the house of Philip the evangelist (Acts 21:8-9).
- Luke was present when Agabus prophesied of Paul being bound in Jerusalem (Acts 21:14).
- He was with Paul when he went to Jerusalem (Acts 21:15-19).
- In our text, he sets out with Paul for Italy (Acts 27:1-7).
- He went through the storm Euroclydon with Paul (Acts 27:8-26).
- He was in the ship that wrecked, and made it safely with the others to the Isle of Melita (Acts 27:27-44).
- He was there when the Barbarous people treated shipwrecked victims kindly, and when Paul was bitten by a poisonous snake (Acts 28:1-6).
- He was there when Publius and healed, and many islanders came to Paul and were healed as well (Acts 28:7-10).
- He continued the trip with Paul, landing at Syracuse. Going to Rhegium, and Puteoli where they found brethren and continued for seven days (Acts 28:14).
- He was with Paul when brethren came from Rome, meeting them in Appii Forum. At that time Paul thanked God and took courage. (Acts 28:15).
- He arrived in Rome with Paul (Acts 28:16).

Considering that Luke was a physician (Col 4:14), this must have involved considerable inconvenience to the flesh. Yet, it appears from what is said of him that he devoted his medical skills to the care of Paul during this time. There were also times when “only Luke” remained with Paul (2 Tim 4:11). He was also a worker together with Paul, who referred to him as among “my fellowlaborers” (Phile 1:24).

A Word Concerning Serving the Lord

In Luke, we find an excellent example of a professional man who fully gave himself to the Lord. The fact that there is only a single reference to him being a “physician” served to underscore this fact.

As used in Scripture, the word “physician” has the following lexical meaning: “a physician,” THAYER “healer,” FRIBERG “doctor,” UBS “one who causes someone to be healed - physician, doctor, healer,” LOUW-NIDA and “one who heals, a mediciner, physician or surgeon (for there seems to have been no professional distinction).” LIDDELL-SCOTT

Perhaps you are not aware of the history of medicine. This includes surgical procedures, ophthalmology, skeletal procedures, and the use of medical drugs. I only show this to confirm that this was a respected profession, well developed, and of great value. While there may have been some superstitious practices among some barbaric people, this science had been well developed with extensive textbooks being written around 3000 B.C.

HISTORY OF MEDICINE

Egyptian medicine 3290 B.C.

Babylonian medicine 1069 B.C.

Medicine in India 2000-1000 B.C.

Chinese Medicine 2698 B.C.

I do not doubt that, under normal circumstances, Luke could well have been in great demand, and that his skills were sought. Yet, he apparently devoted himself entirely to Paul for a significant period of time, possibly as long as ten years (from the original trip to Macedonia (Acts 16:9-11) until their arrival in Rome (Acts 28:16). His commitment to the Lord led him to devote his skills related to being a physician to the Lord.

Throughout modern history, there have been men with unusual professional skills devote them to the Lord. Men with astute minds have done so: Luther, Calvin, Clarke, Henry, Campbell, etc. Poets have done so: Fortunates, John Milton, and George Herbert, John Greenleaf Whittier. Men with persuasive and oratorical skills : Spurgeon, Whitefield, Campbell. Those with song-writing skills : Isaac Watts, Fanny Crosby, John and Charles Wesley. Great musicians : Bach, Handel, Mozart, and Mendelssohn. The point is that throughout history there have been unusually gifted men who gave their talents to the Lord.

A Man Named Sterling Theobald

I well remember a eminent heart surgeon and specialist from the Chicago area. I came into contact with him when he was treating one of our brethren in Indiana. He was in high demand, and was noted for his special knowledge and treatment of the heart. At the time, we had just started meeting as “The Church at 26 th and Colfax, in Gary, Indiana. There were about thirty of us meeting at the time. This physician, Sterling Theobald, was drawn to us by the testimony of brother Harold Lohse, whom he was treating. He began meeting with us in a small structure, about 40' X 20'. His family came with him – a wife and two children in their early teens. Although people of means, they did not hesitate to be identified with us. I was about twenty-five years of age at the time. In the process of time, brother Theobald felt that he should give his medical abilities to the Lord. He took his family and became identified with New Tribes Mission – a community that focuses on people groups that have not heard the Gospel during recent times. He took their training, which consisted of survival techniques in remote regions of the earth, as well as of extensive exposure to the text of Scripture. When he finally went to some of these remote areas, he treated all of the missionaries free of charge, while joining in the preaching and teaching of the Word. Brother Theobald is in his eighties now, and I have neither seen nor heard from him for at least four decades. However, I have never forgotten the testimony that he left of the impact of the love of Christ upon those who discern it.

I have known precious few men of this caliber, and I should suppose such souls have always been relatively rare. My beloved father was one such person, gifted with an astute and disciplined mind, which he gave to the Lord for the Lord's work.

The Roman Empire had some characteristics that were particularly significant. Among other things, there was a division of authority, so that various men were made leaders of certain segments of the Empire. Although this was not totally unique to Rome, it seems to have been accentuated by them.

Luke was such a man, setting forth a most vivid example of the possibilities that are placed before believers. The conduct of many professing believers confirms that the allurements of this world are stronger than some have been led to believe. It is a noble person, indeed, who takes the gifts God has given to him, and devotes them directly to the Lord for the advancement of His Kingdom.

THEY DELIVERED PAUL AND CERTAIN OTHER PRISONERS

“ . . . they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius, a centurion of Augustus' band.” Other versions read, “Paul and some other prisoners were handed over,” NIV “transferred Paul and some other prisoners,” NRSV “they gave Paul and certain other prisoners into the care of,” BBE and “Paul and several other prisoners were placed in the custody of.” LIVING

A Centurion of Augustus' Band

Other versions read, “the Augustan Regiment,” NKJV “the Augustan cohort,” NASB “the Imperial Regiment,” NIV “the Emperor's Regiment,” CJB “Augustus' company,” DARBY “the band of Augustus,” GENEVA “Caesars' soldiers,” TNT “the band of Sebastus,” YLT “a member of the imperial guard,” LIVING and “the Augustan battalian.” IE

The word “Augustus” is a title of honor, translated from the Greek word Sebasth/j (transliterated Sebastas,” which term is used in Young's Literal Translation). It is said that it was applied to certain military “legions, or cohorts, or battalions “for valour.” STRONG'S/THAYER In this text the word “band” means “the group of soldiers who protected the Emperor' or ... who were under the direct command of the Emperor.” LOUW-NIDA

There is no mention of notable political prisoners being in the group with Paul. However, this unusual arrangement is to be considered the hand of God being upon Paul. As the trip proceeds, it will become apparent that he is, in fact, the most notable prisoner of all. The ship will even be delivered into his hands, and he will announce the means of divinely appointed safety.

Julius, A Centurion: A Type of Servants in the Kingdom of God

The responsibilities assigned to Julius are interesting to consider. They are rather significant. He will make all of the decisions, including the choice of vessels, the route, and the manner in which the prisoners are handled.

The significant thing about this is its relation to the prophecy of Daniel concerning global governments that would arise, and during which God would set up His Kingdom. There were four of these global kingdoms that are mentioned in particular. The first three are mentioned by name, and the last one is left unnamed. It would supplant the Grecian Empire, and would be a kingdom of uniqueness. That was the kingdom during which the prophecy of Daniel was fulfilled. “And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever” (Dan 2:44).

The Roman Empire had some characteristics that were particularly significant. Among other things, there was a division of authority, so that various men were made leaders of certain segments of the Empire. Although this was not totally unique to Rome, it seems to have been accentuated by them. Julius is a case in point – a man with significant authority, whose judgment was apparently trusted by the Emperor himself.

A similar situation exists in the Kingdom of God. Jesus affirmed this in one of His parables. “For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch” (Mark 13:34). Again, in the parable of the talents He said, “For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey” (Mat 25:14-15).

While I am aware this is not a point to be stressed overly much, it seems to me that it contains an aspect of the Kingdom that must not be overlooked. There are at least two approaches to authority that exist in the professed Christian community. The first revolves around authorities that are over every aspect of religious responsibility. At the most obvious level, this would be seen in the Roman Pope, and the vicars that are in charge of the various Orthodox branches of certain churches. At the local level, this is seen in the various views of ministers, elders, and church boards. In spiritual Babylon, everyone, small and great, are subordinate to these entities. However, this is not the manner of the Kingdom of God. It is rather the manner of this world.

In the body of Christ, various gifts are given to the members that denote responsibility more than authority – although there is a degree of authority associated with them. The concept is that of a “steward,” as compared to a mere slave. A steward is responsible for the area assigned to him, whether it be that of a prophet, an evangelist, a pastor/teacher, an exhorter, one showing mercy, one speaking a word of wisdom, a deacon, etc. Such individuals are like those who received a talent of money for which they were responsible. It was given to them in strict accord with their God-given ability and appointment, and they are expected to be faithful in their handling of it.

If they are a poet and a songster like David, then they are expected to be faithful in the stewardship of that ability, just as he was. If it is unusual wisdom, then they are to be faithful over it as Solomon was in his wisdom, speaking and writing it for others. If it involves the distribution of unusual insights, as with Paul, they are expected to be faithful and productive in the handling of such things, as Paul was. If it is putting things together and arriving at a valid conclusion concerning Kingdom matters, they are to respond faithfully as James did during the controversy about circumcision.

Stewards are required to trade and increase what they have been given (Lk 19:15,23). The degree of success of the steward will be measured by the impact of their gift upon the body of Christ, for that is the reason for all of the spiritual gifts (1 Cor 12:7). Strict accountability is demanded, for “it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful” (1 Cor 4:2). No attempt must be made to prostitute a God-given ability by giving it to the world, or using it only for self.

I do not believe this is generally understood among professed believers. Too often those with God-given aptitudes are giving them to the world. I do realize that we cannot make laws in this area. However, it is the responsibility of the church to apprise the people of what is expected of them. They are to be faithful to God, as Julius was to Rome. I further recognize that God has various ways of honing the ability he gives that, at the first, appear relatively unrelated to the work of the Lord. However, such training bears resemblance to a college education in preparation for a certain role. To be more specific, Joseph’s skills were honed to a fine edge in Potiphar’s house and in Pharaoh’s prison. Moses’ skills were developed in a desert, watching over flocks, as well as were the skills of David. However, when those aptitudes were duly developed, they no longer remained in those training places, but began working more directly with the Lord in fulfilling His purposes.

ARISTARCHUS WAS WITH US

“ 2 And entering into a ship of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia; one Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us.”

Notice the manner in which this trip is recorded. If one was exposed to this text alone, it would appear as though they were merely going on a trip together, even though Paul was a “prisoner” (Acts 23:18; 25:27; 27:1,42; 28:16-17). However, the report does not accentuate the fact of Paul being a prisoner, but rather highlights that he is going to Rome to bear witness of Jesus. Although he was very much a prisoner, he preferred to think of himself as “the prisoner of Jesus Christ” (Eph 3:1; Phile 1:1,9), “the prisoner of the Lord” (Eph 4:1), and “His prisoner” (2 Tim 1:6). He does not mean that Jesus had captured and incarcerated him, but that his prisonership was the result of serving the Lord Jesus Christ, and that the Savior was with him in the experience. That means he will be productive for the Lord in the status of “prisoner.”

For many professing Christians, it is very difficult to associate the experience of hardship with the Lord Jesus Christ. However, suffering “for righteousness’ sake” (Matt 5:10; 1 Pet 3:14) is a very real circumstance, and the blessing of God is upon those who suffer because of their faith. When the suffering is induced by those that are particularly close to us, perhaps even in our own families, it will be helpful to consider it suffering “for righteousness’ sake,” or “for Jesus’ sake” (2 Cor 4:11). That is, after all, a very appropriate description of such suffering, regardless of those who cause it.

WE LAUNCHED

“And entering into a ship of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia . . .” Other versions read, “And embarking in an Adramyttian ship, which was about to sail to the regions along the coast of Asia,” NASB “We boarded a ship from Adramyttium about to sail for ports along the coast of the province of Asia, and we put out to sea,” NIV and “going aboard a ship from Adramyttium which was about to sail for the ports along the coast of [the province of] Asia, we put out to sea.” AMPLIFIED

The actual place of boarding was Caesarea. The vessel into which they entered was “from Adramyttium ,” a sea-port city in the region of Mysia, which was in the northern part of Asia. This would be a trip that would carry them as far as 2,000 miles away. They would travel close to the coast of Asia until they come to Cnidus. Then they would head toward the island of Crete, from which they would launch into the open sea (Acts 27:7). All of this required some understanding of sailing schedules and destinations that would bring them eventually to Rome. According to appearance, this would all be handled by Julius. However, behind the scenes, the Lord was orchestrating things to fulfill his word to Paul – that he would bear witness of Him in Rome.

ARISTARCHUS BEING WITH US

“ . . . one Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us.” Other versions read, “accompanied by Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica,” NASB “Aristarchus out of Macedonia, of the country of Thessalonica, tarrying still with us,” PNT “Aristarchus, the Macedonian, from Thessalonica, forming one of our party,” WEYMOUTH “On board with us was Aristarchus, a Macedonian from Thessalonica,” WILLIAMS “Aristarchus from Thessalonica in Macedonia sailed on the ship with us,” CEV and “Aristarchus, a Macedonian from Thessalonica, went with us.” MESSAGE

Aristarchus is notable for his devotion to the Lord and His servant Paul. He is first mentioned in Acts 19:29, where he is described as being with Paul in Ephesus. There he is described as one of “Paul’s companions in travel.” There he, together with Gaius, was “seized” and dragged into “the theater,” or “amphitheater.” AMPLIFIED

In Acts 20:4 he is said to have accompanied Paul from Greece, where Paul; had spent three months, when he went to Asia. At that time, others traveling with Paul included Sopater of Berea; Secundus; of Thessalonica, Gaius of Derbe, Timotheus, Tychicus and Trophimus of Asia.

Not only did Aristarchus travel with Paul, he was also imprisoned with him when he wrote to the Colossians (Col 4:10). When Paul wrote to Philemon, Aristarchus was with him, together with Mark. Demas, and Luke (Phile 1:24).

Now, in the voyage to Rome, with several other prisoners, Aristarchus it still with Paul. There is no hint of inconvenience, or an encroachment upon the time of this disciple. He was clearly devoted to the work of the Lord, which, in this case, included remaining with Paul while he was a prisoner en route to Rome. It is also quite possible that he remained with Paul during his two-year imprisonment in Rome.

In his journeys, several of his companions are mentioned. These are men who sacrificed their personal interests in favor of being with Paul and ministering to him. They include the following.

- Aristarchus, from Thessalonica (Acts 19:29; 20:4; 27:1)
- Erastus, from Corinth (Acts 19:22)
- Gaius, from Derbe (Acts 20:4)
- Luke, Homeland unknown (Lk 1:1-3; Acts 1:1; 2 Tim 4:11)
- Secundus, from Thessalonica (Acts 20:4)
- Sopater, from Berea (Acts 20:4)
- Timotheus, from Derbe (Acts 20:4)
- Trophimus, from Asia (Acts 20:4; 2 Tim 4:20)
- Tychicus, from Asia (Acst 20:4)
- Paul and his company (Acts 13:13).
- Paul's company (Acts 21:8).

To me, it is evident that Paul added brethren to this group as he preached here and there. These were no doubt men who evidenced an above-average interest in the things of God, and would not be a distraction to Paul's prodigious ministry. With the advent of higher Christian education, there appears to be little need for discerning the caliber of disciples in order that they might travel along with men of God, aiding them in the work. To a very significant degree, that work is now left to religious professionals.

The result of this methodology, however, has not proved effective for the glory of God and the advancement of His work.

COURTEOUSLY ENTREATED

“ 3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself.”

The trip commences at Caesarea, which was a seaport city. Luke now records their first stop, and what took place at that time. That these events are being orchestrated from heaven will be evident.

WE TOUCHED AT SIDON

“And the next day we touched at Sidon . . .” Other versions read, “landed at Sidon,” NKJV “put in at Sison,” NASB “arrived at Sidon,” DARBY and “docked at Sidon,” NLT

The idea is that they docked at Sidon, most likely unloading or taking on some cargo at that point. Sidon was located about 65 miles from Caesarea, their starting point. The length of time required to sail for that distance would be somewhere around twelve hours, or one half of a day. A little more than 3% of the total distance had been traveled.

Sidon was an ancient city, being first mentioned in Genesis 10:19 as one being one of the border-points of Canaan. Tyre (a little south of Sidon) and Sidon are mentioned nine times in the Gospels (Matt 11:21,22; 15:21; Mk 3:8; 7:24,31; Lk 9:17; 10:13,14). Jesus went to that territory during His ministry. In fact, the woman who came to Him for her demon-possessed daughter besought Jesus in her behalf while He was there (Matt 15:21-22). A great multitude also came from that area to hear Jesus (Mk 3:8). Once Jesus healed a great multitude from that area (Lk 6:17-19).

As you must know, that part of the world is rich with Divine history, being the part of the world in which the Garden of Eden was located. Abraham was called from that area, and the rich history of Israel, including the Babylonian captivity, was in that part of the world.

JULIUS COURTEOUSLY ENTREATED PAUL

Other versions read, “treated Paul kindly,” NKJV “treated Paul with consideration,” NASB and “treated Paul in a loving way, with much consideration (kindness and care).” AMPLIFIED

I fear that many of this generation would not have noted the kindness of Julius. They would rather have expected such kindness was deserved, since Paul had done nothing wrong. However, Luke took note of this, doubtless seeing the hand of God in the matter. Why did he give special favor to Paul? This was the Lord providing mercy for His servant, working through the heart of a heathen.

We do not know if this was the same Centurion whom Felix commanded to let Paul “have liberty, and that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come to him” (Acts 24:23).

Other examples of this kind of kindness and consideration are as follows.

- Potiphar was inclined to young Joseph, making him overseer over all of his house (Gen 39:1-6).
- Pharaoh sanctioning Joseph giving Jacob and his family the choice land of Goshen. He consented to this because the land was conducive to shepherding, yet the Egyptians considered shepherds an abomination (Gen 46:34-47:6).
- The prisoner keeper where Joseph was incarcerated showed him mercy, and gave him favor – this coming from the Lord (Gen 39:21).
- God gave Joseph favor and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh, who “made him governor over Egypt and all of his house” (Acts 7:10).
- When Israel left Egypt the people favored them, giving them everything they needed (Ex 3:21; 11:3; 12:36).
- King Artaxerxes showed Nehemish favor when he asked leave from being his cupbearer, to go and rebuilt the wall of Jerusalem (Neh 2:5-8).
- The prince of the eunuchs which was over the young Israelite captives in Babylon, especially favored Daniel (Dan 1:9-14).
- Nebuchadnezzar made Daniel ruler over all the province of Babylon, and chief of the governors over all the wise men of Babylon (Dan 2:48).
- King Darius preferred Daniel above all of the other political figures in Babylon (Dan 6:3).

- Belshazzar made Daniel the third ruler in the kingdom of Babylon (Dan 5:29).
- Daniel prospered in the reign of Cyrus the Persian, as well as during the reign of Darius (Dan 6:28).

It is still true, “Man’s goings are of the Lord” (Prov 20:24), and “the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord” (Psa 37:23). “It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps,” and no one should proceed in life as though that was not the truth (Jer 10:23). When the Lord sends a person on a mission, he clears the way for the fulfillment of that mission. This clearing of the way includes deliverance, provisions, and even causing potential adversaries to be inclined to help the servant of the Lord. This is why it is wrong to be consumed with concern about potential dangers. It is not that we are indifferent to such things. Rather, it is that we choose to trust the one who governs circumstances. He will direct those who walk in the light, and maintain their fellowship with Christ, to know when it is time to flee, have the brethren aid you in an escape, or stay and stand for the Lord. All of this is lived out in the events recorded in this book.

HE GAVE HIM LIBERTY

“ . . . gave him liberty to go unto his friends” Other versions read, “allowed him to go to his friends,” NIV “gave him leave to go to his friends,” RSV “to go visit his friends,” CSB “let him go ashore to visit with friends,” NLT and “did permit him, having gone on unto friends.” YLT

Remember, Paul is a prisoner. I cannot see any logical reason according to the flesh why a military official would allow such freedom for a prisoner. Yet, he is allowed to go to shore, visit his friends, and receive what he needed, being refreshed.

There is a certain spiritual logic to be seen when those who do not know the Lord favor the servants of God. First, the faithful are surrounded by Divine favor and preference. This supercedes all circumstance and all enemies. There is also angelic protection, for “The angel of the LORD encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them” (Psa 34:7). These holy personalities are vastly superior to humanity, whether we are speaking of a single powerful individual, or thousands of inimical hosts. If these angels are commissioned to stop the enemy, that is precisely what will happen. Further, the closer a person is to the Lord, the more pleasing he is to the Lord, and the more involved he is in the work of the Lord, the more active these angels become.

Nothing can touch those who are pleasing to the Lord that is not first approved by Him. If it is approved, there is a purpose for it. It may be a matter of testing. It may also be the development of an example that can be seen by others. There is also the matter of confirming the superiority of faith, as well as displaying the manifold wisdom of God to heavenly principalities and powers. Sometimes there are opportunities developed that lead to inquiry by those who are otherwise contrary.

Those who are surrounded by Divine favor, and protected by angelic hosts, move otherwise hostile persons to show mercy, and be inclined to be lenient. They favor such people – not merely because they like them, but because the favor of the Lord can impact upon how a person appears to others. There is no inviolable rule involved here. The enemies may stone Stephen, beat Paul, and kill James. The favor of which I speak is an explanation for the mercy that is shown the servants of the Lord. It is not intended to guarantee our enemies will always treat us in such a manner.

To Go To His Friends

So far as the Scriptural record goes, this was Paul’s first visit to Sidon – and yet there were believers there with whom he could easily connect. With the exception of the literal Interlinear, all of the versions read “friends.” The Interlinear reads “fond ones.”

It is obvious that these were not casual acquaintances – like fellow church-members, or coming from the same region, or fellow-citizens. These “friends” were not business associates, national acquaintances, or family members. These were saints of God who not only could minister to Paul, but wanted to do so.

As used here, the lexical meaning of the Greek word translated “friends” is, “associate . . . near friend . . . he who associates familiarly with one, a companion,” THAYER “beloved, dear, loving, friendly, devoted . . . congenial associate, close companion,” FRIBERG “person with whom one associates and for whom there is affection or personal regard,” LOUW-NIDA and “kindly disposed, devoted.” GINGRICH

It is obvious that these were not casual acquaintances – like fellow church-members, or coming from the same region, or fellow-citizens. These “friends” were not business associates, national acquaintances, or family members. These were saints of God who not only could minister to Paul, but wanted to do so.

As previously noted, this appears to be the first time that Paul visited Sidon – and even now, it was as a Roman prisoner. Yet, he was able to connect with brethren of “like precious faith” (2 Pet 1:1), the “common faith” (Tit 1:4) – those who had tasted of a “common salvation” (Jude 1:3).

- In Antioch, Paul and Barnabas “abode long time with the disciples” (Acts 14:26-27).
- Paul determined to visit the “brethren in every city where” they had “preached the word of the Lord” (Acts 15:36).
- Paul and Silas “entered the house of Lydia,” who had obeyed the Gospel earlier, saw the brethren, and “comforted them” (Acts 16:40).
- Paul went “over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia . . . strengthening all the disciples” (Acts 18:23).
- The brethren wrote certain brethren in Achaia, “exhorting the disciples to receive” Apollos (Acts 18:27).
- Paul found “certain disciples” in Ephesus who needed to be instructed more perfectly in the way of the Lord (Acts 19:1-5).
- Certain chief men of Asia, brethren in Christ,” sent into him, desiring him that he would not enter into the theater,” where a tumult was taking pace (Acts 19:31).
- In Troas, Paul sought out the disciples, and preached to them on the first day of the week (Acts 20:7).
- From Miletus, Paul called for the elders of the church in Ephesus, and delivered a stirring exhortation to them (Acts 20:17-38).
- In Tyre, Paul found “disciples,” and tarried with them for seven days (Acts 21:3-4).
- In Ptolemais, Paul saluted the brethren, and stayed with them for one day (Acts 21:7).
- Certain disciples from Caesarea joined Paul when he “went up to Jerusalem” (Acts 21:15-16).
- In our text, Paul went to “his friends” in Sidon, who refreshed him (Acts 27:3).
- In Puteoli Paul and company “found brethren, and were desirous to tarry with them seven days” (Acts 28:13-14).
- Brethren from Rome came to meet with Paul on the last leg of his journey to Rome (Acts 28:15).

The point to be seen in all of this is that Paul, like the brethren chronicled earlier in the book of Acts (chapters one through twelve), cultured their association with the people of God.

Sadly, I have known a number of professing believers who did not do this. They confined themselves to their own relatives, or perhaps to the particular fellowship with whom they were identified. Consequently, they have not been helped like others who have preferred God's people above all others. That, of course, is the very way the entire Godhead views humanity. Their preference is the saints, to whom they minister, and with whom they dwell.

That He Might Refresh Himself

“. . . to refresh himself.” Other versions read, “and receive care,” NASB “so they might provide for his needs,” NIV “and be cared for,” RSV “and receive what he needed,” CSB “so they could provide for his needs,” NLT and “to receive their care.” YLT

The language strongly suggests that Paul was suffering from some infirmity. Perhaps some of it was associated with being in prison in Caesarea for two years. The prison accommodations during those times were certainly not conducive to comfort. Besides that he had been in chains the whole time. Now, Julius is moved by the Lord to see to it that Paul receives the care that he required – something that probably was not the portion of most prisoners. Had Paul not cultured holy associations, such provision would have been less likely. However, since he had preferred Jesus and the company of His people, now he realized the benefit of receiving “an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands,” as well as the persecutions that accompanied such preferences (Mark 10:30).

This manner of life is not one that can be forced by law upon people. It is the result of spiritual understanding and a total commitment to the Lord. However, for those who are willing to make the sacrifices required for closeness with Christ and His people, there will be times when a harvest of care, comfort, and refreshment will be realized. This is, what we might call, “body life.”

THE WINDS WERE CONTRARY

“ 4 And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary.”

Paul having been refreshed, and the ship have been loaded/unloaded, the trip now continues to Rome Italy.

WE LAUNCHED FROM THENCE

“And when we had launched from thence . . .” Other versions read, “put out to sea from there,” NKJV “put out to sea again,” NIV “putting out to sea from there.” NRSV

Apparently, those who had joined Paul on the initiation of this journey remained with him. We do not know how many brethren were with him. However, as indicated earlier, it could have been more than just Luke. We know Luke was there, recording the events. Luke's frequent use of “we” and “us” suggests there could have been other brethren with them. Of course, it also could have been intended to denote the other prisoners and military men. However, I would think it would be a bit unusual to speak of Paul and Luke as being part of the general group.

WE SAILED UNDER CYPRUS BECAUSE THE WINDS WERE CONTRARY

“. . . we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary.” Other versions read, “under the shelter of Cyprus, because the winds were contrary” NKJV “passed to the lee of Cyprus because the winds were against us,” NIV “we sailed under the lee of Cyprus, because the winds were against us,” NRSV “we went on under cover of Cyprus,” BBE “we sailed close to the sheltered side of Cyprus,” CJB “sailed hard by Cyprus,” GENEVA “we sailed on the northern side of the island of Cyprus,” GWN and “so we sailed north of Cyprus between the island and the mainland” NLT The words “lee” NIV/NRSV and “leeward,” AMPLIFIED used by several versions, means “protecting shelter . . . the side of the ship that is sheltered from the wind.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

The contrary winds, as depicted in the chart above, were on the open sea, pushing toward the land. We still have hurricanes and the likes that head toward shore from the open sea. The island of Cyprus was a natural barrier that diminished the force of the winds. Therefore, the captain of the ship sailed between the mainland and Cyprus, taking advantage of the shelter of the island.

THE CENTURION FOUND A SHIP

“ 5 And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia. 6 And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.”

WE SAILED OVER THE SEA OF CILICIA

“And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia we came to Myra, a city of Lycia . . .” Other versions read, “over the sea which is off Cilicia and Pamphylia,” NKJV and “through the sea along the coast of Cilicia and Pamphylia,” NASB “over [the whole length] of sea which lies off Cilicia and Pamphylia.” AMPLIFIED Sailing around Cyprus, the port of Myra was around 300 miles from Sidon. Considering that they were battling contrary winds, this could have required, at the very least, from 6-7 days.

Myra was one of the chief cities of Lycia, and was a port in which ships docked, loaded, and unloaded.

THE CENTURION FOUND A SHIP

“ . . . And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.”

Alexandria was in Egypt, and was located about 300 miles due south of Myra. Here the group disembarked from a ship based in Adramyrium and boarded one that was based in Alexandria. This particular ship was sailing for Italy, the destination of Julius and his band of prisoners.

It must be remembered that the fine-tuned schedules of vessels were probably not published regularly during those ancient times, there being too many variables to allow for such a thing. Yet, Julius had set out for Italy in an orderly manner, no doubt hoping to find a vessel that would take them to their ultimate destination.

That some effort was required on the part of Julius is evidenced by the language, “the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy.” Another version reads, “came across a ship.” BBE

As used here, the word “found” means, “to come upon, hit upon, to meet with; after searching, to find a thing sought,” THAYER and “to find after searching discover, come on.” FRIBERG

Notice not only the responsibility given to Julius, but his faithfulness to fulfill it. Festus did not provide Julius with a fine tuned schedule and reservations on known vessels headed for Italy. That was something the Centurion would discover along the way. He knew the original port of departure, and the final destination. Along the way He would have to develop the various means required to fulfill that mission.

I cannot ignore the remarkable parallel to spiritual life. We are apprised of where our journey begins – in this world, and at the point when we “first trusted in Christ” (Eph 1:12), and were “baptized into Christ” (Gal 3:27). We are also told of the appointed destination. We are being brought to “to glory” (Heb 2:10). We are being prepared for the revelation of Jesus Christ, and the grace that He will bring to us (1 Pet 1:13). We are being cultured for marriage to Jesus Christ (Rev 19:7; 21:9), when we will be with Him where He is (John 14:3; 17:24). We will all land at the port of judgment, which will be the point from which we will enter our eternal destiny (2 Cor 5:10; Heb 9:27).

Along the way we must make judgments that precisely relate to our appointed destination. To become involved in things that lead away from Christ and glory would be like Julius taking his group and boarding a ship headed for Nineveh. Our choices must have something to do with where we are going – where we will spend eternity. As simplistic as that may appear, many professing Christians are, so to speak, boarding ships that are not headed for glory.

A Vain Imagination

There is also the vain imagination that supposes the beginning of the voyage to glory is the primary thing. A theology has been developed that leads people to think in this manner, as though once you are on the ship, you are always on it. But this is not at all the case. There are points along the way when major decisions are made that impact where we will finally land. Tests of faith are like ports of entry where a proper vessel must be chosen. Temptations are points at which something must take place that will ensure we remain on the right course.

Those who have been called by God to do something have always been directed while the journey was in progress. The details of Abraham’s trip to the promised land were divulged while he was on the way. The specifics concerning the commanded sacrifice of Isaac were made known on the way. This was true of Israel being delivered from Egypt to go to Canaan. Joseph was sent by God into Egypt, but the details were revealed during his tenure in Egypt.

The main thing is really not to enter the original ship, although that is essential. It is rather to arrive at the proper destination. This places the emphasis on the trip itself, and not on its commencement. However, there is a theological posture that makes too much of starting the trip, and not enough of properly concluding it.

Another Danger

There is also the danger of making too much of the details of the trip, so that men become bogged down with the appearance of the vessel, or the storms through which it must sail. Decisions involved in the life of faith are not always a once-for-all thing. Sometimes plans have to be adjusted when unforeseen difficulties arise. Sometimes enemies confront us that must be fought. There are trials of our faith that we never imagined we would face. Sometimes there are successes that tend to distract us, and move us to glory in the wrong thing.

When all is said and done, the person en route to glory must look for a proper vessel, like Lucius searched for, and found, a proper ship. Part of salvation is the responsibility to make proper choices. According to Scripture, this is working out our own salvation “with fear and trembling” (Phil 2:12).

Those who have been called by God to do something have always been directed while the journey was in progress. The details of Abraham’s trip to the promised land were divulged while he was on the way. The specifics concerning the commanded sacrifice of Isaac were made known on the way. This was true of Israel being delivered from Egypt to go to Canaan. Joseph was sent by God into Egypt (Psa 105:17), but the details were revealed during his tenure in Egypt. This pattern is revealed throughout Scripture.

The person who does not engage in “the good fight of faith” (1 Tim 6:12), “run with patience the race” set before him (Heb 12:1-2), and “perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord ” (2 Cor 7:1), will always be confused about what he is to do. Those who do not “add to their faith” (2 Pet 1:5-8), work out their “own salvation with fear and trembling” (Phil 2:12), putting “on the new man,” and putting “off the old man” (Eph 4:22-24) will never experience the satisfying direction of the Lord. Such are living their lives in contradiction of the Kingdom manner. They are like Abraham leaving Ur of the Chaldees and settling down in the next town. They are like Abraham attempting to offer up Isaac a short distance from his home, or like Joseph seeking to make a career out of being the steward of Potiphar’s house, or the permanent manager of the prisoners in the prison. They are like Israel leaving Egypt, and building a city just on the other side of Red Sea. They are like Lucius landing in Myra and waiting for a ship master to come to him, informing him of the next ship that was going to Egypt.

Does all of that sound absurd? Know that the parallels are remarkably precise.

THE WIND NOT SUFFERING US

“ 7 And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Cnidus, the wind not suffering us, we sailed under Crete, over against Salmone; 8 And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called The fair havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.”

Luke now provides some more details about the voyage, and the difficulties that were faced.

WE SAILED SLOWLY MANY DAYS

“And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Cnidus . . .” Other versions read, “sailed slowly for a good many days,” NASB “made slow headway for many days,” NIV “sailed slowly for a number of days,” NRSV and “For a number of days we made slow progress and arrived with difficulty off Cnidus.” AMPLIFIED

By sea, the trip from Myra to Cnidus was about 150 miles. Sailing against contrary winds, that would require about three days. However, the storm was apparently growing worse, and thus it took them a significant number of days to complete this leg of their journey – possibly five to ten days.

Of course, these ancient vessels did not have automatic pilots, and were not driven by engines. The amount of time keeping the sails hoisted, and placing them properly must have been staggering. Yet, the sailors of those times were prepared for such adversity, and knew how to handle it. Not only was the progress slow, but the work required was much more. The sailors had to throw themselves more fully into the work, and do so for greater lengths of time. Sailing in a storm is not at all like sailing on a calm and tranquil sea! That also is like our journey to glory.

THE WIND NOT SUFFERING US

“ . . . the wind not suffering us . . .” Other versions read, “the wind not permitting us to proceed,” NKJV “the wind did not permit us to go farther,” NASB “the wind did not allow us to hold our course,” NIV “the wind was against us,” BBE and “But since the wind did not allow us to approach it” [Cnidus]. CSB

The wind did not allow the vessel to dock at Cnidus, so they had to pass it by. They had to adapt to the storm, and do so without getting off course.

WE SAILED UNDER CRETE

“ . . . we sailed under Crete, over against Salmone; 8 And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called The fair havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.” Other versions read, “passing it with difficulty,” NKJV “we moved along the coast with difficulty,” NIV and “coasting along it with difficulty.” AMPLIFIED

The trip from Cnidus to Fair Havens was about 250 miles – a trip that would have required over five days with some contrary winds. In the fierce gales they were facing, a significant number of days were required – possibly even measured in terms of weeks. They sailed “under” Crete, or close to the southern portion of the island, in order to arrive at the port at Fair Havens.

Several versions use the term “coasting” for “hardly passing it” (Salome). I am not sure of the appropriateness of such a word, unless it is intended to denote that they were at the mercy of the wind, being carried along wherever it led them. However, this does not make sense, because very real progress was made with difficulty. To me, that does not describe a situation where the wind is simply carrying the boat along without any direction. Making slow progress presumes they were making progress in reaching their goal, and were not hopelessly adrift.

Thus, having made very slow progress, they finally arrived at Fair Havens, which required considerable effort.

The Parallel to Spiritual Life

Again, this trip bears a remarkable resemblance to the nature of spiritual life. Some trials are unusually fierce, and the desired progress is not made throughout their duration. They are, in a manner of speaking, tests, to determine the moral strength, spiritual stamina and commitment of the individual. This is not for the purpose of informing God, but to assist the believer in the examination of self. It also serves to demonstrate to principalities and powers in heavenly places the outcome of Divine choice and the effectiveness of faith.

- Developing Toughness. Spiritual life requires a kind of toughness, stamina, or staying power. If believers were being led to glory on flowery beds of ease, their lives would not accrue to God’s glory as they do when placed under oppression, restriction, and difficulty. The Scriptures do not speak commendably of those who faint in “the day of adversity,” declaring that those who faint during such times have “small” strength (Prov 24:10). Solomon also affirmed that the thing to do in the day of adversity is “consider” (Eccl 7:14). It is essential that those in Christ learn to contend with horses as well as with footmen. Jeremiah said, “If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses? and if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustedst, they wearied thee, then how wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?” (Jer 12:5).

- Maturing Wisdom. Wisdom is hammered out on the anvil of affliction, and blessed is the person who knows it. In trouble we can learn more about God, life, trouble, faith, and ourselves as well. It is good to know how to handle the ship of life in a storm, as well as upon a placid sea. During especially trying moral and spiritual storms, we learn not only what is really needed, but what can be expended as well.

- Honing up determination. One of the liabilities of a life of ease is that godly determination often wanes. Outward tranquility can lead us to feel more at home in this present evil world. Trouble, on the other hand, awakens determination, moving those who believe to apply more effort to reaching the goal, fastening on the future rather than present experience.

- Developing spiritual stamina. Trouble can wear people out, sap their strength, and move them to view godliness as pointless. Faith will overcome these inclinations – but without faith the person will be crushed. When the individual maintains a godly course when the storms are blowing, a certain godly stamina is perfected. Endurance is one thing, enduring during storms is quite another. Those whose faith has been tried in the furnace of affliction are more apt to endure to the end. This is the meaning of the expression, “tribulation worketh patience” (Rom 5:3). Other versions read, “tribulation produces perseverance,” NKJV “suffering produces endurance,” NRSV and “pressure and affliction and hardship produce patient and unswerving endurance.” AMPLIFIED

SAILING WAS NOW DANGEROUS

“ 9 Now when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, because the fast was now already past, Paul admonished them, 10 And said unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.”

The storm through which the vessel was sailing had slowed the journey considerably. Much wisdom and stamina had to be employed to maintain any degree of progress. Now, a point arrives when a decision must be made.

WHEN MUCH TIME HAD BEEN SPENT

“Now when much time was spent . . .” Other versions read, “considerable time had passed,” NASB “much time had been lost,” NIV “a long time had gone by,” BBE “had lost so much time,” GWN “we were there a long time,” MRD “much time being spent,” YLT “There we stayed or several days,” LIVING “Our voyage thus far had occupied a considerable time,” WEYMOUTH and “By this time the season was far advanced.” MONTGOMERY

This text refers to the time they spent in Fair Havens, a harbor in the island of Crete, where the boat was apparently docked. It is quite possible that Paul was given liberty to preach the Gospel in Lasea, the nearby city. However, no details of their stay in this place are provided. It is only said that they spent “much time” there, apparently waiting for the storm to subside.

SAILING WAS NOW DANGEROUS

“ . . . and when sailing was now dangerous . . .” Other versions read, “the voyage was now dangerous,” NASB “sailing had already become dangerous,” NIV “the journey was now full of danger,” BBE “navigation being already dangerous,” DARBY “sailing was now jeopardous,” GENEVA “it was hazardous [then] for any one to go by sea,” MRD “The weather was becoming dangerous for sea travel,” NLT “The weather was becoming dangerous for long voyages by then,” LIVING and “the navigation being now unsafe,” WEYMOUTH

The storm did not let up, but appears to have gotten even worse. Now sailing involved more than making slow and tedious progress. It was now dangerous to set out to sea. As used here, the word “dangerous” means “to cause to fall,” or “prone to fall,” THAYER “insecure, unsafe,” FRIBERG and “unstable, precarious,” LIDDELL-SCOTT

Crete was an island in the midst of the sea, about 70 miles from Asia, 50 miles from Greece, and several hundred miles from Sicily and Italy. This compounded the whole situation, as the open sea would be much more dangerous than in the immediate vicinity of Crete. Yet, as will see, a decision will have to be made concerning staying in Fair Havens, or finding a more suitable place to dock for the winter.

THE FAST WAS ALREADY PAST

“ . . . because the fast was now already past . . .” Other versions read, “the Fast was already over,” NKJV “by now it was after the Fast,” NIV “even the Fast had already gone by,” NRSV “because it was late in the year,” BBE/LIVING “because it was already past Yom-Kippur,” CJB “the day of fasting had already past,” GWN “after the day of the Jewish fast,” MRD “it was after the Fast. {That is, the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur)}.” NIB “because it was so late in the fall,” NLT “they had overlong fasted,” PNT/TNT “for the Autumn Fast was past,” MONTGOMERY “for the time for the Fast [the Day of Atonement, about the beginning of October] had already gone by,” AMPLIFIED “In fact, even the Great Day of Forgiveness was past,” CEV “for by now the Day of Atonement was already past,” GNB and “We had passed the autumn equinox.” MESSAGE

Here the various versions present quite a distorted picture concerning what is intended by the words “the fast.”

- Some present it as merely referring to the latter part of the year. BBE/LIVING
- One says it was “late in the fall.” NLT
- Others present it as being the time of an Autumn Fast. MONTGOMERY
- Still others say it was Yom-Kippur – the Day of Atonement. CJB/NIB
- One version says it was the equinox, probably the one in the Fall, when the sun crosses the equator, and day and night everywhere on earth are approximately equal. MESSAGE

• Other versions present it as a period of time in which they had simply been fasting, PNT/TNT with no formal cause being identified. In such a case, it may very well have been a time given to prayer, such as took place later in the trip (Acts 27:33).

I am rather inclined to the latter view – that “the fast” refers to the abstinence from food that was stimulated by a certain fear of the storm – such as occurred later. You may recall that when the Lord sent a storm upon the boat in which fleeing Jonah was found, “the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god” (Jonah 1:5). However, in the absence of any solid statement on this matter, I will simply state my preference and proceed.

PAUL ADMONISHED THEM

“Paul admonished them, 10 And said unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.” Other versions read, “I perceive that this voyage will end with disaster and much loss, not only of the cargo and ship, but also our lives,” NKJV “I can see that our voyage is going to be disastrous and bring great loss to ship and cargo, and to our own lives also,” NIV “I can see that our voyage is going to be a catastrophe, not only with huge losses to the cargo and the ship but with loss of our lives as well,” CJB “Men, we’re going to face a disaster and heavy losses on this voyage. This disaster will cause damage to the cargo and the ship, and it will affect our lives,” GWN and “I perceive [after careful observation] that this voyage will be attended with disaster and much heavy loss, not only of the cargo and the ship but of our lives also.” AMPLIFIED

As they were waiting in Fair Havens, Paul had been assessing the situation. I do not doubt that he prayed about the matter. Even though a specific answer may not have been given to him from heaven, as would be the case later (Acts 27:23-25), his great mind had been bathed in the glory of the Lord. If any man was capable of rendering a wise assessment of the situation, it would be one that had been in the presence of the Lord, and had shaped his life around His will.

Spiritual understanding is superior understanding. Because of that, it can enable a person to perceive more in certain areas than those who have been trained to be experts in them.

Paul stated that what he was about to say was something he had “perceived.” Other versions read, “I can see,” NIV and “I believe.” NLT As used here, the word “perceived” means “to perceive with the eyes . . . to ascertain, find out, by seeing,” THAYER and “through mental perception understand, perceive,” FRIBERG This was a perception that came by seeing something, then assessing it, and comprehending the implications involved. Other places where the Greek word used here (qewrw /) is found include the following.

- The women who beheld Jesus on the cross (Matt 27:55).
- Mary Magdalene coming to see the sepulcher where Jesus was buried (Matt 28:1).
- Unclean spirits seeing Jesus, and falling down before him (Mk 3:11).
- Those who came to see the restored maniac from Gadara (Mk 5:15).
- Jesus beholding how men cast their money into the Temple treasury (Mk 12:41).
- Considering how great Jesus is (Heb 7:4).
- Seeing that a brother has need (1 John 3:17).

That will suffice to confirm that this is speaking of something that was really seen, or perceived. This word is not used to describe a vain imagination or a mere human opinion.

Of course, Paul was not an official mariner, and he was not speaking as though he was. Nor, indeed, has he been licensed to diagnose storms. However, his prodigious mind had been honed to a fine point in courts of the Lord, and he could see more in things and events than others.

Here is a case where a man of God knew more than the experts on storms and sailing. He could say with David, “I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation” (Psa 119:99).

Spiritual understanding is superior understanding. Because of that, it can enable a person to perceive more in certain areas than those who have been trained to be experts in them. I have personally experienced this kind of wisdom, as well as many others with whom I am acquainted. When a person lives by faith and walks in the Spirit, a harvest is reaped in every legitimate aspect of life. Throughout the ages, there have been those who can attest to this fact.

THE CENTURION BELIEVED THE MASTER OF THE SHIP

“ 11 Nevertheless the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul.”

Paul has given a wise word concerning sailing in this storm. Notwithstanding, he was not the only one that had given some advice. The centurion, Julius, must now decide who he will listen to, for the ship is apparently being driven by an agenda he sets. Of itself, and on the surface, that is a most peculiar situation. However, when you take into account that the ultimate agenda has been set by the Lord, all of this makes perfect sense.

So far as heaven was concerned, the fundamental passenger on this ship was Paul. If heaven gives a word concerning the propriety of sailing at this time, it will come through Paul, not those who appear to be in charge of the voyage.

There are bodies of people among whom representatives from the Lord are found. It is not unusual for the entire group to be forced to adapt to the heavenly agenda – like Egypt preparing for a seven-year famine, in order that the children of Israel might be preserved, multiplied, and delivered. As Joseph told his brothers concerning his stint in Egypt, “But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive” (Gen 50:20). Heaven does not shape its agenda around the ungodly who are really “not a people” (1 Pet 2:10).

THE DANGER OF SECULARIZATION

By “secularization,” I mean precisely what the dictionary says of this term: “1. To make secular. 2. To transfer from ecclesiastical to civil or lay use, possession, or control. 3. To convert to or imbue with secularism.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER The word “secular” means, “1 a. Of or relating to the worldly or temporal [secular concerns] b. Not overtly or specifically religious.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

When life, and the objectives of life, are defined without God being at the center of things, it has been secularized. When careers, earning money, and rising to the top of the economic and business heap becomes the fundamental thing, secularization has taken place. The undue vaunting of pleasure, and even the maintenance of a sectarian religious structure necessitates the abandonment of God-centeredness. As a result, preparing to please and stand before God is no longer important enough to abandon any pursuit of emphasis that does not allow for such preparation.

Now, all of this is pictured in the text before us. I suppose the ship on which these souls were traveling was carrying some precious cargo: goods that were to be sold and meet the needs of the people. However, before the voyage is over, they will be thrown overboard in the interest of preserving life.

Over and above those more practical matters, there was a man on board this ship who had been called and commissioned by the glorified Christ. He was given a message that would change the lives of individuals, stabilize the church, and significantly impact the entire world. The exalted Lord will manage this entire voyage with this man in mind, together with those helpers who were with him. The world would be able to do without the goods this ship was carrying. It could manage well without Julius the centurion, or the pilot and owner of the ship. But it could not do without Paul. The vast majority of the knowledge of the purpose of God would be expounded by this man.

Of course, little of this was known by the passengers aboard this vessel – certainly it was not known by Julius and, the pilot and owner of the ship. Nevertheless, it was the truth, and ultimately the will of the Lord will be done, and Paul will bear witness to Jesus in Rome.

A Practical Observation

In our society diversion to the inferior is aggressively promoted. It is in the educational and religious structures, and the entertainment and business worlds as well. Those in Christ are to heed the words of Jesus: “In your patience possess ye your souls” (Luke 21:19). We are not to allow worldly priorities to be found in us. Our lives are not to be driven by inferior and decaying agendas.

This is not something that can be accomplished by following a routine, or developing new habits. It is part and parcel of working out your own salvation with fear and trembling. It is a posture you are responsible for developing, and no man can force you to do so.

NEVERTHELESS

“Nevertheless . . .” Other versions read, “But,” NASB and “However.” CJB

Life is structured in such a manner as requires choices. This cannot be avoided, for it is integral to life itself. For the believer, these times are tests. For the unbelievers, they are times that reveal the inadequacy of worldly wisdom.

It is my persuasion that every major decision made by men is preceded by advice or suggestions that are opposed to each other. One leads to advantage, and one to disadvantage. In our text, in the crucible of physical danger, two pieces of advice were given to the centurion. One came from Paul who said that if this voyage continued, it would be at the peril of the vessel, what was in it, and the lives of those on board. The other piece of advice came from the pilot and the owner of the ship. It appears these were two different men, the pilot, or helmsman, working for the owner. They advised that they move ahead to the next port, which, we will find, was thought to be more commodious.

MORE THAN THE THINGS WHICH WERE SPOKEN BY PAUL

“ . . . the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul.” Other versions read, “was more persuaded by the helmsman and the owner of the ship,” NKJV “by the pilot and captain of the ship,” NASB “followed the advice of the pilot and the owner,” NIV “paid more attention to the pilot and the owner,” NRSV and “to the captain and the owner.” RSV

The centurion, Julius, chose to believe the pilot and the owner. After all, the sea was their domain, and they surely would know the best course to take. You may recall when Jesus, a carpenter by trade (Mk 6:3), twice advised professional fisherman where to cast their nets (Lk 5:4-5; John 21:5-6). Those with legitimate worldly wisdom sometimes have to told what is best for them to do in the very field in which they are experts. Examples of this are Joseph, Moses, and Daniel.

God still works in this way, choosing to work through what the world considers to be foolishness. As it is written, “But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: That no flesh should glory in his presence ” (1 Cor 1:27-29). This is simply the way the Lord works.

In this case, Julius was overly confident in the wisdom of the pilot and owner. He did not recognize Paul as possessing wisdom in this matter. However, he was wrong – seriously wrong. Unknown to him was the fact that the highest form of worldly wisdom has a boundary beyond which it cannot go. Men are hesitant, to say the least, to acknowledge this. However, experience will prove it to be true. This was one such occasion.

CONCLUSION

The witness of Jesus to Paul was straightforward. He had been dragged from the Temple, rescued by Lysias and his army, testified to the Jews, rescued from them again, for they sought to kill him, and spent the night in the military barracks. The following night Jesus said to him, “Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome” (Acts 23:11). Surely that would bring an end to the trouble he had endured, being beaten, and endured aggression that would have torn him in pieces if he had not been rescued. However, the fulfilling of that word was not simplistic. Ponder what Paul has experienced since that words was spoken to him.

Surely that would bring an end to the trouble he had endured, being beaten, and endured aggression that would have torn him in pieces if he had not been rescued. However, the fulfilling of that word was not simplistic.

- The day following that word from Jesus, forty Jews bound themselves with an oath that they would neither eat nor drink until they had killed Paul (Acts 23:12).
- Those forty men came to the chief priests and elders, requesting that they speak to the chief captain, and ask him to bring Paul to them as though they were going to inquire about something. When he brought Paul, they would kill him on the way (Acts 23:15).
- Paul’s sister’s son overheard the plot and told Paul, who in turn told one of the centurions to take the boy to the chief captain, telling him he had something to say that he ought to hear (Acts 23:15-22).
- The chief captain then arranged for Paul to be transported to Caesarea, escorted by four hundred and seventy soldiers (Acts 23:23-24).
- Lysias wrote an accompanying letter detailing the case about Paul (Acts 23:25-32).
- When Paul arrived and Felix the governor had read the letter, he informed Paul that he would hear his case when his accusers arrived from Jerusalem. He then commanded that Paul be incarcerated in the judgment hall (Acts 23:33-35).

- Five days later Ananias the high priest arrived with his entourage, and an orator by the name of Tertullus presented the Jews' case against Paul (Acts 24:1-9).

- After the presentation of the charges, the governor gave Paul an opportunity to defend himself before his accusers (Acts 24:10).

- Paul presented his case, pointing out that no charges against him had been verified (Acts 24:10-21).

- Felix then told Paul he would wait until Lysias the captain came, and see what he had to say about the whole matter (Acts 24:22).

- Felix then remanded Paul to be temporarily incarcerated, commanded that he be given liberty to move about, and that his friends should be permitted to minister to him (Acts 24:23).

- After some days had passed, Felix brought his wife Drusilla, sent for Paul, and heard him speak concerning faith in Christ (Acts 24:24).

- Paul reasoned with Felix concerning righteousness, temperance, and judgement to come, moving Felix to tremble. He said he would call for Paul at a more convenient season (Acts 24:25).

- Felix often called for Paul to appear before him, hoping he would offer him some money to obtain freedom (Acts 24:26).

- Paul was left bound in prison for two years (Acts 24:27).

- Festus, who replaced Felix went up to Jerusalem, where he heard charges once again leveled against Paul. The Jews asked him to bring Paul to Jerusalem for trial, fully intending to kill Paul along the way (Acts 25:1-3).

- Festus replied that Paul would be kept in Caesarea where he ought to be, and that they would have to journey to Caesarea to present their charges. (Acts 25:4-6).

- Festus remained in Jerusalem for more than ten days, at which time he departed for Caesarea (Acts 25:6-7).

- Upon arrival, he commanded Paul to be brought before him, where the Jews would present their case. Paul was given an opportunity to defend himself against the charges (Acts 25:8).

- Attempting to do the Jews a favor, Festus asked Paul if he would be willing to go to Jerusalem and be tried there. Paul said he was not willing, and could not be compelled to do so. He then appealed to Caesar. Festus agreed, saying "Hast thou appealed unto Caesar? Unto Caesar shalt thou go" (Acts 25:9-12).

- After many days, king Agrippa and Bernice showed up, and Festus spoke to him about the case of Paul. Agrippa said he wanted to hear Paul for himself (Acts 25:13-22).

- The next day Paul was summoned before Agrippa, Bernice, Festus, the chief men of the city, and the military leaders. He delivered his most lengthy defense at that time, eliciting responses from both Festus and Agrippa. In conference the audience agreed that Paul had done nothing worthy of imprisonment or death. If he had not appealed to Caesar he could have been set free (Acts 25:23-26:29).

- At this point, the lengthy trip to Italy commenced. At the time of our text, it had been in progress for some time, and would continue for a few more months.

I have taken the time to provide these general details to confirm the nature of the manner and works of the Lord. He does not fulfill His will in the context of convenience and ease, and men are not wise to imagine that He does. For a person who is hasty in his judgments, this would have proved very distracting. However, this has not been the case with Paul. He has seized every opportunity put before him, and entered into every opened door. He has been able to speak insightfully and effectively, and has not been caught up in the controversies presented by the Jews, or the insults thrown at him by Festus, or the casual interest of Agrippa.

May you be able to correlate these events with your own life, enabling you to detect how and when the Lord is working with you. Be imitators of Paul in the matter of maintaining your composure, keeping the faith, and clinging to the promises of God. These things are all within the grasp of those who are living by faith.

Lesson #103

A COMFORTING WORD IN THE STORM

“ 27:12 And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the south west and north west. 13 And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete. 14 But not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon. 15 And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive. 16 And running under a certain island which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat: 17 Which when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, struck sail, and so were driven. 18 And we being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship; 19 And the third day we cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship. 20 And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away. 21 But after long abstinence Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss. 22 And now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship. 23 For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve, 24 Saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Caesar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee. 25 Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me. 26 Howbeit we must be cast upon a certain island.” (Acts 27:12-26)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

By now, the winter was coming on, and it was apparently not possible to travel by ship at that time. The pilot and ship master judged that Fair Havens was not a good place to spend the winter, and they should move to a more convenient location. Having set out for the next port, they encountered some violent wind that required a stopover at the small island of Clauda. There they had to undergird the ship. Because they were in danger of sinking into quicksands, or sandbars, they had to lower the sails and be driven along by the raging sea. They were forced to lighten the boat by throwing its cargo and tackling overboard. After spending a long time without food, Paul stood forth and announced that the angel of the Lord had appeared to him, informing him that he would stand before Caesar. The boat would be lost, but all of the people on board would be saved. The board would be wrecked, and they would end up on a certain island, tried and tired, but safe. He

WISDOM IN PRACTICAL MATTERS

There is a wisdom dispensed from heaven that has to do with practical matters. The wisdom given to Solomon is an example of this type of soundness of mind. Twenty-nine times the book of Ecclesiastes refers to this kind of wisdom as pertaining to things “under the sun.” It has to do with practicalities relating to life in this world. This is valid wisdom, but does not directly integrate with the salvation that is in Christ Jesus. By that, I mean it does not contribute to the effectiveness of salvation. Paul spoke of times and circumstances in which it was not wise to marry, for it would cause “trouble in the flesh” (1 Cor 7:26-28). If men did marry, they were not sinning in doing so, but would experience some inconvenience that might very well impact upon living unto God.

- When He sent out His disciples, Jesus told them, “Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves” (Mat 10:16).
- There are matters that are technically lawful, yet, from the standpoint of this kind of wisdom, they are not expedient. “All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any” (1 Cor 6:12).

- There are other matters that are technically permissible. However, from the standpoint of this kind of wisdom, they are not expedient. “All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not” (1 Cor 10:23).

- Paul advised the Corinthians on a wise way of fulfilling their commitment to send aid to the poor saints in Jerusalem. “And herein I give my advice: for this is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but also to be forward a year ago” (2 Cor 8:10).

- The saints are admonished to “be wise unto that which is good” (Rom 16:19).

- Paul was a “wise masterbuilder” (1 Cor 3:10).

- Believers are to “walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil” (Eph 5:15-16).

- Paul warned and taught every man “in all wisdom” (Col 1:28).

- Those in Christ are to “walk I wisdom toward those who are without” (Col 4:5).

It is true that there is a kind of wisdom that is directly related to salvation. It has to do with avoiding sin and being involved in righteousness. This is a higher form of wisdom, and impacts directly on whether a person goes to heaven or hell.

- James admonished that if, in the matter of being perfect and entire, wanting nothing, any believer lacked wisdom, we are to “ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him” (James 1:5).

Wisdom in these areas does not elevate one’s fellowship with Christ. It is not the level at which salvation or damnation is determined. This does not mean there is no need for such wisdom, for often the lack of it makes one more vulnerable to the attacks of the wicked one, and puts one at an unnecessary disadvantage. This kind of wisdom does not promote growth in Christ. It is not the appointed means of overcoming the devil, or gaining an eternal inheritance. Yet, no person of God should be content to be without it.

Again, there is a practical wisdom that comes down from above – wisdom that is not bound on every soul, for it does not immediately pertain to God’s great salvation. Nor, indeed, does it deal with matters that are common to everyone. In our text, it pertained to people in an earthly storm. In Corinthians it had to do with people considering marriage, and the considerate gathering of a collection. However, it is very real wisdom, and assists God’s children in avoiding many unnecessary hardships and difficulties.

This is the kind of wisdom Paul exhibited when he said the voyage would be with peril to the cargo, the ship, and the people. It is lower form of wisdom that has been sanctified by the Lord. It has to do with living wisely in this present evil world.

THERE IS A HIGHER WISDOM

It is true that there is a kind of wisdom that is directly related to salvation. It has to do with avoiding sin and being involved in righteousness. This is a higher form of wisdom, and impacts directly on whether a person goes to heaven or hell. Of this wisdom it is written:

- “But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption” (1 Cor 1:30).

- “That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him” (Eph 1:17).

- “For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9).

- “In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge” (Col 2:3).

This is a wisdom that is associated with the appropriation and maintenance of eternal life. It has to do with recognizing the ploys of the devil and the promises of God. It has to do with how men conduct themselves before God, and what they do with the work He has given them to do – whether they are faithful or unfaithful servants.

The wisdom expressed in this text had to do with surviving a storm. The higher wisdom had to do with bearing witness to Jesus in Rome. The first had to do with surviving a natural storm, the second with surviving the assaults of the devil.

The person who can distinguish between these two forms of wisdom, and assign proper priorities to them, is one who will be able to navigate through difficulties in the best manner, and land at last on the eternal shore.

THE HAVEN WAS NOT COMMODIOUS

“ 27:12 And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the south west and north west.”

The decision to move ahead, even though sailing was “dangerous,” apparently involved considerable consultation and reasoning. The fact that Julius yielded to the opinions of the pilot and the owner, choosing to reject the counsel of Paul, let to some further reasoning that involved others. It appears from the text that there was some kind of consensus reached that involved quite a few people.

THE HAVEN WAS NOT COMMODIOUS

“And because the haven was not commodious to winter in . . .” Other versions read, “was not suitable to winter in,” NKJV “was not suitable for wintering,” NASB “not suitable for spending the winter,” NRSV “not a good one in which to be for the winter,” BBE “not well suited to sitting out the winter,” CJB “being ill adapted to winter in,” DARBY and “was not well situated and so unsuitable to winter in.” AMPLIFIED

Here, the advisors thought of the whole trip rather than the portion of it they were then experiencing. It was apparently known that while on the trip to Rome, they would have to spend the winter someplace. From that perspective, Fair Havens was suited better for the non-winter seasons. It does not appear that it was an intended haven for ships at all times of the year.

In order to think in this manner, they had to forget their present peril. They also had to treat the word of Paul as though it was not true. Additionally, they had to view the storm as lasting briefly, and that it would allow them to safely make it to a better place for the future. As their experience will confirm, this was nothing more than an exercise in vain thinking. They had been warned by Paul that moving on to the next port would involve the loss of their cargo, the loss of the ship, and possibly the loss of their lives. But all of that was meaningless to them, because they were thinking within the wrong context.

A PARALLEL TO SPIRITUAL LIFE

There is a parallel here to spiritual life, and it is worthy of special consideration. When the children of God are passing through trials, the most important consideration is getting safely through them. This will require obtaining mercy and grace to help in the time of need (Heb 4:16). It will necessitate trusting in God during the present distress, realizing that it is their faith that is being tested (1 Pet 1:7). Satan will also be present during the times of testing, seeking to allure us out of the safety zone, and into the broad road that leads to destruction (1 Pet 5:7-8).

If ever there is a time to avoid carnal assumptions, it is during the time of trial. It is possible to think of the future from an earthly point of view, assuming that you will soon be through the trial. However, that may not at all be the case. While there is a sense in which you must focus on the future, it must be an eternal future, not a temporal one. From this perspective, the trying of your faith is in order that it might be found “unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet 1:7). That means that we must conduct ourselves properly throughout the trial, not living by assumption, but by faith. It is faith that must be maintained in trial, and that is why it is imperative that we approach such times with wisdom and godly determination.

THE MORE PART ADVISED

Paul did not categorically tell the pilot and owner of the ship what to do. He did, however, warn them that proceeding with the trip at that time would bring them into certain danger of losing their cargo, the ship, and their lives as well. Now, it appears that there was further discussion on the matter that swayed Julius to proceed to a supposedly more convenient port.

The More Part Advised

Other versions read, “the majority advised,” NKJV “The majority reached the conclusion,” NASB “the majority was in favor of” NIV “the greater number of them were for going out to sea,” BBE and “the majority favored the plan of putting to sea again from there.” AMPLIFIED

This is what is called consensus, or general agreement. It is the principle by which certain countries determine who will be their president. Some view it as a democratic process, and value it very highly. It is, in fact, considered by some to be a vital element of political freedom.

However, the majority is not always right – in fact they rarely can be so described. In Noah’s day, the majority were wrong. The same was true of the cities of Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim. When the “children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron,” although they were in the majority, they were totally wrong. For the majority to be right, they must be righteous, and have a grasp of the truth – and that is a circumstance that has rarely, if ever, been found among the sons of men.

+ It is true that Solomon wrote, “Where no counsel is, the people fall: but in the multitude of counselors there is safety” (Prov 11:14). And again, “Without counsel purposes are disappointed: but in the multitude of counselors they are established” (Prov 15:22). And yet again, “For by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war: and in multitude of counselors there is safety” (Prov 24:6). However, is this set forth as proper protocol in Christ Jesus? In the salvation of God, “wise counselors” are those who know the ways and will of the Lord. They are people who, like penitent Israel, “asked counsel of the Lord” (Judges 20:23). At no point can the work of the Lord be approached as though it involved a democracy. I say this knowing full well that it is possible for the saints to be “perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment” (1 Cor 1:10). However, that is not the kind of oneness that is described in this text.

Attain Unto Phenice

“ . . . the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the south west and north west.” Other versions read, “if by any means they could reach Phoenix,” NKJV “if somehow they could reach Phoenix,” NASB “hoping to reach Phoenix and to winter there,” NIV and “on the chance that somehow they could reach Phoenix.” NRSV

The trip from Fair Havens to Phoenix, or Phenice, was from 50-60 miles as the crow flies. “Phoenix” is a transliteration of the name used here, while “Phenice” is a translation of it.

The majority felt as though it would be best to winter in that harbor, which was more commodious, comfortable, and conveniently spacious. Apparently it was situated so the winds of the winter would not have as great an impact on the vessel as they would in Fair Havens. At least, that is what the people thought.

It seems to me that Luke records this in vindication of Paul – to confirm that he had access to superior wisdom on the matter. The record will show that this is precisely correct.

When decisions are made like those of the greater number of people in this text, there is too much assumption.

- They assume the conditions will remain as they are.
- They assume conditions will not get worse.
- They assume they will be able to safely navigate for a short while on the tempestuous sea of life.
- They overestimate their ability.
- They underestimate the danger that confronts them.

A PARALLEL OF SPIRITUAL LIFE

What do the children of God do in times of danger and stress – when it seems as though everything is against them? Is that really the time to seek convenience, more freedom to move about, and more external protection? Nearly all worldly counselors advise such a procedure. That is why those who deal with the mind often offer sedatives to calm the oppressed. It is why there are such things as retreats, and havens for the weary. I would not venture to say such things are of themselves wrong. The point here is whether or not they are right.

When we are under fire should we not seek to resist the encroachments of the devil rather than to hide from them. Ought we not to cast down imaginations, rather than to flee to a cave where they are least apt to bother us? Was Israel right in withdrawing from the battle when the Philistine giant appeared and intimidated them with his shouting?

Convenience is a thing that is to be assessed – filtered through the will of the Lord, and attended by much prayer and supplication. Felix told Paul he would call for him when he had “a convenient season” (Acts 24:25). He was, so to speak, seeking another harbor he felt was more “commodious.” The Gentile world, having refused to “retain God in their knowledge,” resorted to another harbor in which they could do things that were not really “convenient” as regards their eternal welfare (Rom 1:28).

Paul warned of conduct that is preferred by many, and portrays a kind of lifestyle that seems to have more freedom, and be more commodious. However that is not really the case at all. He wrote, “But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints; Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks” (Eph 5:3-4).

Some, who are feeling the winds of conviction, seek to locate in another place where they imagine they will be more comfortable. They listen to the testimony of others who say they are happy, and are having more fun. Thus they seek to relocate in an environment that gives the flesh the upper hand. Consequently, they are in greater danger than they have ever been before.

When called to go to Nineveh, Jonah thought it more convenient to get in a boat at his own expense, and head for another place. Because of his choice, he had a terrible experience, and when he was graciously delivered from it, he had still had to go to Nineveh, just as God had said.

There is a most intriguing word in the book of First Kings concerning a prophet who gave heed to the contradicting word of another prophet. It confirms the necessity of giving heed to the Lord, as opposed to listening to the counsel of others. This record concerns the prophet sent to king Jeroboam, restoring his hand that withered when he cried out against the altar (1 Kgs 13:1-7). This text commences with the king's request for the prophet to enter his house so he could receive refreshment and a reward. I am quoting the text from the New King James Version.

Some, who are feeling the winds of conviction, seek to locate in another place where they imagine they will be more comfortable. They listen to the testimony of others who say they are happy, and are having more fun. Thus they seek to relocate in an environment that gives the flesh the upper hand. Consequently, they are in greater danger than they have ever been before.

“But the man of God said to the king, If you were to give me half your house, I would not go in with you; nor would I eat bread nor drink water in this place. For so it was commanded me by the word of the LORD, saying, 'You shall not eat bread, nor drink water, nor return by the same way you came.' So he went another way and did not return by the way he came to Bethel. Now an old prophet dwelt in Bethel, and his sons came and told him all the works that the man of God had done that day in Bethel; they also told their father the words which he had spoken to the king. And their father said to them, "Which way did he go?" For his sons had seen which way the man of God went who came from Judah. Then he said to his sons, 'Saddle the donkey for me.' So they saddled the donkey for him; and he rode on it, and went after the man of God, and found him sitting under an oak. Then he said to him, 'Are you the man of God who came from Judah?' And he said, 'I am.' Then he said to him, "Come home with me and eat bread. And he said, "I cannot return with you nor go in with you; neither can I eat bread nor drink water with you in this place. For I have been told by the word of the LORD, 'You shall not eat bread nor drink water there, nor return by going the way you came.' He said to him, 'I too am a prophet as you are, and an angel spoke to me by the word of the LORD, saying, Bring him back with you to your house, that he may eat bread and drink water.' (He was lying to him.) So he went back with him, and ate bread in his house, and drank water. Now it happened, as they sat at the table, that the word of the LORD came to the prophet who had brought him back; and he cried out to the man of God who came from Judah, saying, 'Thus says the LORD: Because you have disobeyed the word of the LORD, and have not kept the commandment which the LORD your God commanded you, but you came back, ate bread, and drank water in the place of which the Lord said to you, Eat no bread and drink no water, your corpse shall not come to the tomb of your fathers.' So it was, after he had eaten bread and after he had drunk, that he saddled the donkey for him, the prophet whom he had brought back. When he was gone, a lion met him on the road and killed him. And his corpse was thrown on the road, and the donkey stood by it. The lion also stood by the corpse. And there, men passed by and saw the corpse thrown on the road, and the lion standing by the corpse. Then they went and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt. Now when the prophet who had brought him back from the way heard it, he said, 'It is the man of God who was disobedient to the word of the LORD. Therefore the LORD has delivered him to the lion, which has torn him and killed him, according to the word of the LORD which He spoke to him” (1 Kgs 13:8-26).

The penalty for not giving heed to the word of Paul will not be as harsh as the one paid by that prophet, who believed a lie. That is only because Paul’s word did not concern specific directions from God. However, the events that follow clarify how serious it is to ignore a word delivered by a man of God. It is only because Paul was on board the boat that the repercussions were not more serious.

THEY SUPPOSED

“ 13 And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete.”

Now, giving heed to those who agreed it was appropriate to proceed to the next port, the ship and its occupants commence the journey to that more convenient port. Things will appear at first to justify their conclusion, but time will confirm they had made a big mistake.

WHEN THE SOUTH WIND BLEW SOFTLY

“And when the south wind blew softly . . .” Other versions read, “when a moderate wind came up,” NASB “when a gentle wind began to blow,” NIV and “when the south wind blew gently.” RSV

There was a sudden change in the weather, with the storm apparently subsiding. Sailing would now be much easier, with the wind softly blowing upon the hoisted sails. Everything was favorable – at least that is the way it appeared.

THEY SUPPOSED THEY WERE RIGHT

“ . . . supposing that they had obtained their purpose . . .” Other versions read, “supposing they had obtained their desire,” NKJV “they thought they had obtained what they wanted,” NIV “they thought they could achieve their purpose,” NRSV “supposing they were gaining their object.” AMPLIFIED

Having made the determination that they should sail to the next port, the circumstance appeared to justify their view. The wind was ideal, and therefore they concluded they were right. Any hesitation to carry out their will was dissolved, and they proceeded to do what they had determined.

THEY SAILED CLOSE TO CRETE

“ . . . loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete.” Other versions read, “putting out to sea,” NKJV “weighed anchor and began sailing along Crete,” NASB “so they weighed anchor and sailed along the shore of Crete,” NIV and “they weighed anchor and sailed along Crete, hugging the coast.” AMPLIFIED

Experience in the sea caused them to use some caution, not venturing into the deep. Thus they sailed as close to the shore of Crete as they could, apparently judging that if the weather changed, they could maintain some degree of safety.

The expression “weigh anchor” is a nautical term, and means the following. “Weigh anchor is a nautical term indicating the final preparation of a sea vessel for getting underway. Weighing anchor literally means raising the anchor of the vessel from the sea floor and pulling it up to the side of the vessel after the engines have been brought up to operating power.” WIKIPEDIA “put up the anchor: Synonyms: bring the anchor home, cast off, loose for sea, put to sea, unmoor, up-anchor.” VISUAL THESAURUS “To weigh anchor means to take up or lift the anchor off the sea bed when getting underway or ‘under weigh.’” NAUTICAL TERMS

Preparing to sail took considerable effort, for this was no small vessel. In addition to cargo and ship tackling, there were 276 people on board. An idea of the size of this vessel is provided by Bible History On Line : “The Apostle Paul's ship was actually a grain ship . . . It was of enormous size and the corn ship that Paul traveled on carried 276 men. Ships of this size had a tonnage of 2,600 tons. The hull ran up to a bird's-head carving above the bows and a bird's-tail at the stern. In the midst was a high mast, usually of cedar wood and near the prow was a smaller one for hoisting a small sail. Two large oars were used to steer. On the deck was a wooden hut for the helmsman which was also used as a temple of worship containing an idol.” BIBLE HISTORY ON LINE

I provide this information, that is admittedly not precisely accurate, to confirm the magnitude of the effort required to sail, as well as the enormity of the danger associated with sailing the open seas.

Above is an ancient artist’s drawing of the kind of ship involved in our text. Estimates of the size of these ships as provided by ship specialists, estimated to be 413-424 feet in length, and 62 feet in breadth (top to bottom). WAPEDIA, SHIPS That would be equivalent to a six story building, with a surface significantly larger in length than a football field. This is only an estimate, but provides a rational idea concerning the size of the ship involved in this text. It was doubtless considered strong enough to withstand considerable waves of water.

PARALLEL TO SPIRITUAL LIFE

There is a remarkable parallel to spiritual life in this account. As you probably know already, one of the characteristics of crises is that they tend to reveal the scope of one’s understanding. Also a sense of values is made known. Because of a weakness in their faith, and a consequent lack of familiarity with both the nature of God and of the life that is in Christ Jesus, many professed believers venture into dangerous territory, when there is no need to do so. They experience unnecessary hardship, and fall into snares they could have been avoided. They are too hasty in many things, and thus are unable to see the larger picture. Trouble rushes upon them, and, having acted unwisely, they do not know why.

There are also those who are devoted more to institutions than to Christ Himself. Like mariners of our text, the largeness of the institution affords some sense of safety to them. However, this runs counter to every aspect of Divine revelation. Noah and his family were in the minority. Lot and those who escaped with him were in the minority. The Israelites were the smallest of all nations. Gideon’s army was far too large at first, and had to be whittled down from 32,000 to 300 before it could be used by God. Jesus said the way that leads to life is found only by a “few.” Yet, in all of these instances, safety was found among those who were approved by God. It is never wise to glory in largeness, or boast in bigness. It is not that there is some virtue in smallness. Rather, throughout history,. God receives the greater glory from the few of any given generation. Their outward smallness is one reason why they live by faith.

BUT NOT LONG AFTER

“ 14 But not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.”

Suddenly, in a moment of time, the environment was changed, and something the mariners did not expect happened. It is something on which they did not reckon, and so it caught them by complete surprise.

NOT LONG AFTER

“But not long after . . .” Other versions read, “But before very long,” NASB “But soon,” NRSV and “But soon afterward.” AMPLIFIED

Hardly had the crew launched their ship, sailing close to the island of Crete, when they faced something that apparently had not entered their minds. Apart from faith, the mind of man is not astute enough to account for every possible circumstance or adversity. It can only reckon on what they have gone through. Most men have learned this by experience, but few men live with this in mind.

AGAINST IT

“ . . . there arose against it . . .” Other versions read, “there rushed down from the land,” NASB “a wind of hurricane force . . . swept down from the island,” NIV “rushed down from Crete,” NRSV and “came bursting down from the island.” AMPLIFIED

The fierce wind seemed to focus on the ship itself, as though there was no other objective than it.

A TEMPESTUOUS WIND

“ . . . a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.” Other versions read, “a violent wind, called Euraquilo,” NASB “a wind of hurricane force, called the "northeaster,” NIV “a violent wind, called the northeaster, rushed down from Crete,” NRSV and “a violent wind [of the character of a typhoon], called a northeaster.” AMPLIFIED

The wind against which they had been battling came from the sea, and therefore in attempting to go from Fair Havens to Phenice, they sailed close to the island of Crete. Now, however, they faced something on which they had not reckoned: a wind coming at them from the land – and it was apparently of greater ferocity than the one that was generated on the sea. Rather than sailing out of danger, they had actually sailed into danger.

THE PARALLEL TO SPIRITUAL LIFE

It is not a stretch of the imagination to liken this voyage to our pilgrimage through this present evil world. It is a grand lesson when we learn that temporal life is tailored to acquaint us with spiritual life. Spiritual life is not a mere duplication of earthly life, only on a higher level. Sound reasoning must not begin with the earth – the eternal cannot be patterned after the temporal. It should require nothing more than an affirmation to establish that to insightful souls.

There is a certain liberty permitted the believer that allows for making decisions. The purpose of God is not shaped by those determinations, but the participation of the saints is. In our text Paul going to Rome was, as it were, cast in stone. How he arrived there allowed for some decisions by the people involved. Paul chose wisely, seeing that proceeding with the proposed trip to Phenice was too perilous. The Centurion, however, made a harmful choice, and was allowed by heaven to do so.

The Case of the Printer from New Elliott

I personally know of the danger of wrong choices. I also know by experience of the Lord’s deliverance from the consequences of such choices. During the early part of 1970, myself and my father, Fred O. Blakely, were faced with the results of a burgeoning mailing list for The Banner of Truth and The Word of Truth. The costs for these publications had escalated due to increasing printing and mailing costs. My father was ministering at a congregation in New Elliott Indiana, while I was ministering in Merrillville, a nearby community. During that time, a new family came to fellowship in New Elliott. The man was a professional printer, and owned a local print shop. Having been apprized of our publications, he offered to have them printed for the cost of the paper alone. The only stipulation was that we perform the labor required to set the type. My father and I talked about the matter, and entered into fervent prayer about it. The cost savings would be thousands of dollars each month for the two publications.

We finally concluded that this was the Lord’s will, and that He had provided this convenient outlet. We determined to announce our decision the next Lord’s Day, and inform the printer we would proceed in formalizing the agreement.

On the Friday prior to the Lord's Day, the local newspaper, The Hammond Times, featured a special article on the front page. We both recognized the accompanying picture to be that of the printer with whom we were going to make the agreement. The article chronicled this man's arrest and the seizure of his printing establishment. He was guilty of printing bogus bonds and other financial documents, and was subsequently imprisoned.

After again meeting, my father and I concluded that this had all been a test, and that we had made the wrong decision out of haste, and an undue regard for financial advantage. The Lord graciously delivered us from a circumstance that would have seriously impacted our ministry for years to come. We had been momentarily diverted by the apparently good sound of a temporary advantage.

An Application

Many a poor soul has suffered needlessly because of poor decisions. Their thinking was too hasty, and did not duly consider the circumstances set before them. As a result, some people had to suffer unspeakable inconvenience, as will be the case with the voyage covered in this text.

THE SHIP COULD NOT BEAR UP

“ 15 And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive.”

The northeastern wind forced the ship further away from the island of Crete, and the pilot found he could not control the ship any longer.

WHEN THE SHIP WAS CAUGHT

“And when the ship was caught . . .”

+Other versions read, “the ship was caught by the storm,” NIV “the ship got into the grip of it,” BBE “caught and driven,” DARBY “the wind carried the ship away,” GWN “the ship was whirled about by the wind,” MRD “the ship was snatched along by it,” WILLIAMS and “the ship was seized by it.” EMTV

Those who thought they could make it to Phenice imagined they could maintain control of the ship all along the way, even though they probably knew it would require a lot of effort. However, there were seasoned sailors among them, and they felt confident of their abilities. They had probably navigated through many storms, and were sure they could do so through this one.

However, they were wrong – seriously wrong. Instead of mastering the storm, the storm now had the mastery over them. Having ventured into the domain in which the storm ruled, the ship was seized by the storm, and was pulled into its ferocity, all of the efforts of the sailors notwithstanding.

COULD NOT BEAR UP INTO THE WIND

“ . . . and could not bear up into the wind . . .” Other versions read, “could not head into the wind,” NKJV “could not be turned head-on into the wind,” NRSV “could not face the wind,” RSV “was not able to make headway into the wind,” BBE “not able to bring her head into the wind,” DARBY “could not resist the wind,” GENEVA “couldn't sail against the wind,” GWN and “could not resist the wind.” TNT

Suddenly, the mariners had entered an impossible situation. They could not navigate the ship under these circumstances. All of their expertise withered, and they were absolutely impotent to manage the situation.

There was a certain technique employed to capitalize on the wind. This was accomplished by various sails. By independent, yet coordinated settings, they would cause the wind to serve their purposes, and drive the ship in the precise direction they desired. Large vessels had rather complex sails-systems, as the ship graphics image indicates.

Every possible scenario was addressed by the size and position of these sails so that, ordinarily, the ship could progress through the waters toward its destination, whether the winds were gentle or fierce. Those in charge of the ship based their decision to sail on the existent weather conditions plus their expertise, and in view of the equipment on board the ship. It all seemed to make perfect sense.

Now, however, they faced a storm of extraordinary proportions. Their expertise was no longer valid. The equipment they had was not adequate. The pilot could not steer the ship, and thus they could not advance toward their goal. The wind had captured their vessel, and there was not a thing they could do about it.

WE LET HER DRIVE

“ . . . we let her drive.” Other versions read, “let ourselves be driven along,” NASB “gave way to it and were driven,” NRSV “giving up the ship to the winds, we were driven,” DOUAY “were carried away,” GENEVA “were carried along by the wind,” GWN “resigned [the ship] to its power,” MRD “were driven by the weather,” PNT “let go, and were drave by the weather,” TNT “we stopped trying to resist and let the wind blow us,” LIVING “we gave up and were swept along,” ISV and “we gave up and, letting her drift, were borne along.” AMPLIFIED

It is to be assumed that the mariners did everything they knew to do. They used every tool available to them. Yet, it was all in vain. They finally had to give up, for there was nothing left in their arsenal, or sea-wisdom and equipment. The sails did not function correctly. The rudder was useless. The pilot’s hands were tied, so there was nothing left to do but submit to the wind, and let it carry the vessel without any effective human intervention.

PARALLEL TO SPIRITUAL LIFE

The parallel to spiritual life is most arresting. It simply cannot be mere coincidence.

Spiritual trouble and danger are like a whirlpool that draws the individual into it, like the storm seized the ship. There is a kind of perimeter to this danger that will protect us if we maintain a distance from it. But should a person venture too close to that perimeter, he will be drawn into the vortex of the whirlpool, just as surely was the ship of our text was drawn into the storm. Once they are caught in that vortex, there no hope of working out of it by human strength of wisdom.

This perimeter is not clearly marked. It may appear as though favorable and gentle circumstances lie all about it – like the gentle wind of in text seemed to nullify any supposed danger. Should a person imagine they can get close to contaminating influences without being affected by them, they have not thought correctly. “Evil communications corrupt good manners” – that is the unmitigated truth (1 Cor 15:33). Other versions read, “Bad company corrupts good morals,” NASB “Bad company corrupts good character,” NIV and “Evil companionships (communion, associations) corrupt and deprave good manners and morals and character.” AMPLIFIED Many a poor soul has been overcome by evil in some form because they ventured too close to it. They made the wrong friends, went to the wrong places, and subjected themselves to the wrong influences. Suddenly they were seized, like the ship on which Paul was sailing was seized a fierce wind.

Apostolic Doctrine

A vivid picture of this sort of thing is declared in the apostles’ doctrine. In it the purpose of God is stated as involving the growth and maturity of His people. The intended objective for the various teaching ministries is stated this way: “That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ” (Eph 4:14-15).

The implications are clear: growth into Christ is not possible if we are being tossed to and fro by the winds of man-made doctrines. Those doctrines can take hold of a person’s life and throw them about like the Euroclydon tossed the Alexandrian ship of our text. How many times I have witnessed professing Christians immersed in confusion because of what they have been taught by pretentious preachers and teachers. It is no wonder that we are warned about getting involved in matters that minister questions instead of godly edifying. As it is written, “Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith: so do” (1 Tim 1:4). And again, “But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes” (2 Tim 2:23).

Concerning those who teach things that minister questions, as well as our response to them, it is written, “If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting [to be lavish or excessive in one’s attention, fondness, or affection MERRIAM-WEBSTER] about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself” (1 Tim 6:3-5).

God’s ministers bring affirmations, not questions, and they are to be seriously pondered.

A CERTAIN ISLAND CALLED CLAUDA

“ 16 And running under a certain island which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat: 17 Which when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, struck sail, and so were driven.”

Having put out to sea against the advise of Paul, they not only will endure more danger, but will have to work the harder to get to their intended destination.

RUNNING UNDER A CERTAIN ISLAND

“And running under a certain island which is called Clauda . . .” Other versions read, “And running under the shelter of a small island called Clauda,” NASB “As we passed to the lee of a small island called Clauda.” NIV

Clauda was several miles off the coast of Crete, the wind having carried them a considerable distance off course. Using the island as a shelter from the wind, they sailed to the south of it. This island is seven miles long, and three miles wide. McCLINTOK-STRONG’S

WE HAD MUCH WORK

“. . . we had much work to come by the boat . . .” Other versions read, “we secured the skiff with difficulty,” NKJV “we scarcely were able to get the ship’s boat under control,” NIV and “we managed with [much] difficulty to draw the [ship’s small] boat on deck and secure it.” AMPLIFIED

The “boat” of reference is not the ship itself, but the skiff, or lifeboat that was probably hanging on the side. They hoisted it onboard for at least two reasons. First, they probably were thinking of possibly using it should the ship be wrecked at sea. Second, it was no doubt used to assist in girding the ship, which is referenced in the next clause.

UNDERGIRDING THE SHIP

“ . . . Which when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship . . .” Other versions read, “had hoisted it aboard, they passed ropes under the ship to hold it together,” NIV “hoisting it up, they took measure to undergird the ship,” NRSV “After hoisting it on board, they used supports with ropes to undergird and brace the ship,” AMPLIFIED “banded the ship with ropes to strengthen the hull,” LIVING “After the men took the lifeboat in, they tied ropes around the ship to hold the ship together,” IE “They pulled it up on deck and used ropes to brace the ship.” ISV

GIRDING OR FRAPPING

“To draw together, to bind with a view to secure and strengthen, as a vessel by passing cables around it; as a tackle by drawing the lines together.” Tottem [1913 - Webster

Nautical girding is a technique called “frapping.” It is accomplished by passing ropes under the vessel and drawing them tight in order to strength the hull of the ship. Considering the amount of the vessel that was under the water (possibly as much as 20-30 feet), this was a sizeable undertaking, and no doubt associated with danger. Yet, these seasoned sailors knew how to do the proper things in the hour of crisis.

Notice how they strengthened the unseen part of the ship – the hull. They did not simply reorganize the deck. The part of the ship that supported it was made stronger.

FEARING THE SANDS

“ . . . and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands . . .” Other versions read, “and fearing they should run aground on the Syrtis sands,” NKJV “and fearing that they might run aground on the shallows of Syrtis,” NASB “fearing that they would run aground on the sandbars of Syrtis,” NIV “fearing they would run on the Syrtus,” NRSV and “afraid it might hit the sandbanks in the gulf of Syrtis,” CEV “afraid that they might run into the sandbanks off the coast of Libya,” GNB “afraid that they would be driven into the Syrtis [quicksands off the north coast of Africa].” AMPLIFIED

The coast of Africa was about 350 southwest of Clauda. Along its coast, and between it and Cyrene, were two “quicksands” – sandy areas barely covered by water.

THE QUICKSANDS OF SYRTIS

“Modern explorations find both of them to be highly dangerous bays, where the treacherous sandy shore is barely covered with water, and where terrific clouds of sand are suddenly raised by the wind, obscuring then sight and overwhelming men and even ships, The Greater Syrtis is now called the Gulf of Sidra, between Tripoli and Barea; and the Lesser the Gulf of Cabes. The former is specially intended in the account of Paul’s shipwreck .” McCLINTOK & STRONG’S

The winds were of such ferocity, and characterized by an obvious longevity, that the mariners feared being mired in the quicksands just off the coasts of Africa. Yet, these seamen did not fall apart or despair – at least not yet. They still had some things they could do, and they set out to do them.

WE STRUCK SAIL, AND SO WERE DRIVEN

“ . . . struck sail and so were driven.” Other versions read, “let down the sea anchor, and so let themselves be driven along,” NASB “they lowered the gear, and so were driven,” RSV “they let down the sails and so went running before the wind,” BBE “they lowered the topsails and thus continued drifting,” CJB “they lowered the drift-anchor, and in this way they were driven along,” CSB “they let down the sail yard, and so were driven,” DOUAY “they strake sail, and so were carried,” GENEVA

“floated out the sea-anchor and so let themselves drift,” NJB “they let down a vessel, and were carried,” PNT “having let down the mast -- so were borne on,” YLT “they lowered the gear (sails and ropes) and so were driven along.” AMPLIFIED “let down the driving anchor, thus they were being driven along by the wind,” CEV “lowering the tackle, so they were borne along,” LITV and “We only managed to avoid them by throwing out drift anchors,” MESSAGE

The various versions present thirteen views of what “struck sail” means.

- Let down the sea anchor. The main anchor let down to the sea floor.
- Lowered the gear.
- Let down the sails.
- Lowered the top sails.
- Lowered the drift anchor. This was pulled behind the ship, consisting of canvas or other materials, and designed to slow the vessel down.
- Let down the sail guard. Similiar to, if not identical with the drift anchor.
- Floated out the sea anchor. Similiar to, if not identical to the drift anchor.
- Let down a vessel.
- Let down the mast – The pole holding the main sail.
- Lowered the gear (sails and ropes).
- Let down the driving anchor. Similiar to, if not identical to the drift anchor.
- Lowering the tackle.
- Throwing out drift anchors. Similiar to, if not identical to the drift anchor.

While this may appear quite incidental, here is how I view the matter. First, if something is written by the inspiration of God, I want to know what it means. As you can see, if one confines himself to searching the various versions of the English Scripture, this sometimes becomes an impossible task. Second if we can substantiate that historical incidents have spiritual parallels, it is imperative that we obtain a proper understanding of what is written concerning those events.

Albert Barnes says of this passage, “There has been a great variety of interpretations proposed on this passage. The most probable is that they took down the mast, by cutting or otherwise, as is now done in storms at sea, to save the ship. They were at the mercy of the winds and waves, and their only hope was by taking away the sails.”

Adam Clarke says, “Some think that lowering the yards, and taking down the top-mast, is what is intended; but in such a perilous situation this would have been of little service. Others think, letting go their main or sheet anchor, is what is meant; but this seems without foundation, as it would have been foolishness in the extreme to have hoped to ride out the storm in such a sea. Passing by a variety of meanings, I suppose cutting away, or by some means letting down the mast, is the action intended to be expressed here; and this would be the most likely means of saving the vessel from foundering.”

John Gill notes, “the mast is never cut down before the loss of other things; wherefore this is to be understood of letting down the sail yard, and contracting the sails; the Syriac version renders it, “we let down the main sail”; or, “the sail”, using the Greek word ‘Armenon,’ which signifies ‘a sail.’”

The passage informs us WHY they performed this action – it was because they feared being run aground in the quicksands of Syrtis. Therefore, in my judgment, this had to do with lowering the sails, particularly the most prominent ones, to slow the progress of the ship. It would be better for the winds to simply carry the ship, rather than be aided by hoisted sails.

There are circumstances where luxuries and conveniences make things more difficult. Such times are made even more difficult when an appetite for such things has been cultured and preferred above all else.

THE SPIRITUAL PARALLEL

When believers are being carried along by circumstance, and are alert to their situation, they should do everything possible to slow the speed of carrying away.

Because of the nature of life in this world, believers are to be as expert as possible in handling crises. As you know, all such circumstances are not apparently, or obviously, solvable. But we must do everything possible to avoid being mired in the quicksands of carnality.

As in this event, the storm itself cannot be managed by those who are in it. Storms, whether natural or spiritual, can only be managed by God. It is possible for believers to waste a lot of time trying to control the circumstance, when it is best to make every effort to survive the experience. That, to me, is one of the geniuses of spiritual life – learning to live unto the Lord. This will appear to many to be an effort to ignore the circumstance. However, when something cannot be controlled or managed, it is less than wise to expend a lot of effort thinking about it. In such a case, it is best to endeavor to pass through the thing with the Lord.

Little Sails

These gigantic ships had a variety of sails. Some of them were very large, and determined the speed with which the craft traveled, and any major directional adjustments that had to be made. Other sails were small, and did not play a major part in either direction of speed. Yet, they allowed for minor adjustments that bore on the ultimate destination of the ship. If they were not set properly, they would cause the ship to gradually be pulled off course. In dangerous storms, such as that of our text, they had to be lowered altogether.

Likewise, in the voyage of life there are matters that, under ordinary circumstances, are rather inconsequential. It is not that such things are wrong, or evil of themselves. However, under certain circumstances – like a severe trial – they can cause the individual to get off course. For example, if, during his trial, Job had insisted on eating regularly, or carrying out some of his mundane tasks, it would have been spiritually disastrous. Time was better spent in an earnest quest to hear from the Lord.

Many a poor soul has experienced unnecessary hardships, and even spiritual shipwreck, when they were occupied with smaller matters during the hour of trial. They have, so to speak, left their smaller sails aloft when they should have taken them down. This is because they have overestimated their strength, and have considered themselves to be more in control of their life than they really are.

If the professed believer will allow circumstance to testify to the conscience, it will discover certain frailties and ineptitude that must be known. It will also identify what is essential and what is not, what should be emphasized, and what should be considered secondary. The things that determine how you live must be carefully and regularly reviewed. There are things that must be put into the background during trials.

THEY LIGHTENED THE SHIP

“ 18 And we being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship; 19 And the third day we cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship.”

The vessel on which Paul and company are sailing to Rome, continues to be buffeted by a fierce storm. They have girded the ship, making its hull more stable against the battering waves. They have also lowered the sails, and taken measures to ensure that the ship is not propelled at an unwarranted pace into the dangerous quicksands of Africa. But it is still not enough.

EXCEEDINGLY TOSSED WITH A TEMPEST

“And we being exceedingly tossed with a tempest . . .” Other versions read, “exceedingly tempest-tossed,” NKJV “being violently storm-tossed,” NASB “we took such a battering from the storm,” NIV “being pounded by the storm so violently,” NRSV and “being dangerously tossed about by the violence of the storm.” AMPLIFIED

One thing to be noted about a storm of this magnitude: you would not want to be in a small or frail vessel. It is good that they are at least in a ship that is sea-worthy. Now the battering reaches into a second and then third day. The storm is without interruption, and the vessel cannot continue to carry the same weight. The storm will not adapt to the ship, so it must be adapted to handle the storm.

THEY LIGHTENED THE SHIP

“ . . . the next day they lightened the ship . . .” Other versions read, “they began to jettison the cargo,” NASB “began to throw the cargo overboard,” NIV “began to throw the freight overboard,” ASV and “made a start at getting the goods out of the ship.” BBE

Once again, there is a parallel to spiritual life. In the hour of crisis, when remaining alive unto God is jeopardized, there are some things that must be abandoned. They may be friendships, certain neutral habits or places, forms of entertainment, means of occupying leisurely times, etc.

These were goods the ship was transporting for other people – most likely businesses. When it came to a wise course of action, the first thing determined was to save the people. The first thing to go is what did not belong to those people – things that constituted the greatest weight, probably bulk goods. In the interest of preserving the people and the vessel that was carrying them, they began throwing the cargo overboard – casting it into the raging sea. Perhaps now they will be able to navigate the ship in a more acceptable manner. However, alas, that is not how it all turned out, as the third day will confirm.

THEY CAST OUT THE TACKLING

“ . . . And the third day we cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship.” Other versions read, “the ship’s tackle,” NKJV “the sailing apparatus,” BBE “the ship’s sailing equipment,” CJB “the ship’s gear,” CSB “the ship’s equipment (the tackle and the furniture),” AMPLIFIED “the ship’s spare gear,” WEYMOUTH and “throwing off all the tackle and provisions.” MESSAGE

A ship’s tackling, according to McClintok & Strong’s Cyclopaedia, consists of “the spars, ropes, chains, etc., of a vessel’s furniture.” Easton’s Bible Dictionary says the tackling is “all that could be removed from the ship.” That is, this was apparatus that was unique to the ship, but was not a part of the construction itself. It was used to adapt to various circumstances associated with the sailing and maintenance of the ship. This could be used to raise and lower the sails, secure them, etc. But now, in the midst of a fierce storm, the equipment that was ordinarily helpful became a hindrance. Not only was it not required at that time, but its presence jeopardized the lives of the passengers, and the survival of the vessel as well.

THE SPIRITUAL PARALLEL

Once again, there is a parallel to spiritual life. In the hour of crisis, when remaining alive unto God is jeopardized, there are some things that must be abandoned. They may be friendships, certain neutral habits or places, forms of entertainment, means of occupying leisurely times, etc. Under ordinary circumstances these things can be integrated into life without any undue distraction.

There is a certain liberty in spiritual life that allows for such things if they are not distracting to the soul. However, in the times of testing, things must be thrown overboard that ordinarily could be kept. To do this, valid priorities must be maintained.

ALL HOPE WAS TAKEN AWAY

“ 20 And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away.”

There are storms, and there are STORMS. Some are small, some are large, and some reduce men to a state of hopelessness as concerns their own endeavors. The storm in this text was in the latter category. The mariners had done everything they knew to do. They had no doubt been in many storms before, and had gained some expertise in surviving fierce winds upon the sea. But their proficiency was not adequate for this storm.

THE CIRCUMSTANCE

“And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us . . .” Other versions read, “and the storm continued raging,” NIV “a great storm was on us,” BBE “the severe storm kept raging,” CSB “The storm wouldn't let up,” GWN “the storm held on for many days,” MRD “no small storm was assailing us,” NAB “The terrible storm raged unabated many day,” LIVING “the terrific gale still harassed us,” WEYMOUTH and “a great tempest still beat upon us.” MONTGOMERY

As if the wind itself was not enough, dark clouds had blotted out all light, so that neither the sun nor the stars, by which men navigated, was not seen for many days. The condition of the sea could be felt, but it could not be seen.

As if the wind itself was not enough, dark clouds had blotted out all light, so that neither the sun nor the stars, by which men navigated, was not seen for many days. The condition of the sea could be felt, but it could not be seen. They did not know precisely where they were, if they were within range of land, or in the midst of the sea. They could not assess their situation with the aid of vision, which is nearly always essential for evaluating difficult outward situations. Being in a boat during a fierce and relentless storm is one thing, being in the dark all the while is something else.

The tempest “lay” on the vessel. That is, it did not let up for even a moment. If anything, it kept getting stronger and stronger, and “many days” passed. Prior to this storm, they had sailed slowly for “many days,” finally coming into “The Fair Havens” on the southern part of Crete (Acts 27:7). A little later Paul will speak up “when the fourteenth night was come” (Acts 27:27). That means at the time of this text they had been tossed about in the relentless storm for about two weeks.

ALL HOPE WAS TAKEN AWAY

“ . . . all hope that we should be saved was then taken away.” Other versions read, “all hope that we would be saved was finally given up,” NKJV “all hope of our being saved was gradually abandoned,” NASB “all hope of our being saved was at last abandoned,” NRSV “until gradually all hope of survival vanished,” CJB and “all hope of our surviving was wholly cut off.” MRD

Hope was not instantly taken away, but gradually faded away. As long as there was something they thought they could do about the situation, hope remained alive. However, it gradually became apparent that this circumstance was beyond their control. No matter how much they knew about sailing and navigating in storms, it was not adequate for this situation.

Some people do not believe it is possible to get into such a situation. They cling to the notion that if they can only see more and know more, they will be able to control the situation. However, life will confirm that this is a false assumption.

THE SPIRITUAL PARALLEL

On the strait way that leads to life, there are some difficult experiences that last for a long time. They are like tests to confirm our continual need of a Savior, Intercessor, Captain, Shepherd, and High Priest. Most trials can be safely negotiated with the benefits we have already received: the whole armor of God, spiritual weaponry, the fruit of the Spirit, wisdom from above, etc. However, there are some winds of adversity that are of such strength that all hope of a rescue from them is removed. Paul spoke of such an experience in his second letter to the Corinthians. “For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life : But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead : Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us” (2 Cor 1:8-10).

There is a holy rationale in such trials. They are designed to push us beyond our present capacity in order that we do not trust in ourselves – even though we ourselves have much from the Lord to sustain us. However, our faith is to be in the Giver, not the gift – and men are prone to place their trust in what has been provided rather than the One who has provided it. Our faith, for example, is not in “the whole armor of God,” but in the God who supplies it.

It is quite true that God will not allow us to be tempted beyond our ability, but will provide way of escape with every temptation that we may be able to bear it. Sometimes, however, that way of escape is not readily apparent, and we are required to wait long for its appearance. Even then the escape may involve the wrecking of a vessel, and a treacherous trip to shore by swimming or hanging on to some plank of grace.

On a more practical note, sometimes hope is held out too soon – before conviction has taken place, or a perception of the real situation. Take, for example, the day of Pentecost and the insightful words of Peter. He first interpreted what was taking place among the disciples (Acts 2:14-21). He then affirmed the guilt of the people in rejecting Christ and having Him slain through the hands of lawless men (Acts 2:22-23). He announced that God has raised Jesus from the dead, and enthroned Him at His own right hand (Acts 2:24-37). Until that point he held out no specific hope to the people, but rather left them in the wake of conviction (Acts 2:39-40).

It is certainly not in order to develop a procedural manner of preaching in this regard. However, it is important to have some cogent thought about the state of the people before announcing a remedy for their situation. Too often, I fear, people are being told what to do before they have any interest in being saved.

In the text before us, Paul will not announce the revealed answer to the situation until it becomes apparent that there is no way the mariners can work themselves out of the dilemma of the storm. Further, the mariners themselves will know this.

AFTER LONG ABSTINENCE

“ 21a But after long abstinence Paul stood forth in the midst of them . . . ”

Throughout this ordeal Paul has apparently maintained silence. I do not doubt that he assisted in any tasks possible. However, now the time has come to speak, for the Lord has spoken to him about this very circumstance.

AFTER A LONG ABSTINENCE

“But after long abstinence . . .” Other versions read, “when they had gone a long time without food,” NASB “as they had been long without food,” NRSV “when they had gone a long time without eating,” CJB “after they had fasted a long time,” DOUAY “Since hardly anyone wanted to eat,” GWN “And as no one had taken a meal of food,” MRD “When many would no longer eat,” NAB and “they had eaten nothing for a long time.” AMPLIFIED

“The literal rendering is, when there was a great (or, general) loss of appetite among the crew. The terror, the discomfort, the sea-sickness, the constant pressure of danger and labor, the difficulty of cooking, the unpalatableness of the food, combined to take away relish of their food, and they were becoming weak for want of nourishment.” PULPIT COMMENTARY

While men are prone to eat regularly whenever it is possible, a fierce and unrelenting storm can redefine what is deemed necessary or essential. During this hour of trial, the mariners and passengers no doubt lost their appetite for food. When one’s life is in danger, there is a rearranging of priorities.

PAUL STOOD FORTH IN THE MIDST

“Paul stood forth in the midst of them . . .” Other versions read, “Paul stood up before them,” NIV “Paul then stood among them,” NRSV “Paul then came forward among them,” RSV “Paul stood in front of them,” CJB and “Paul came forward into their midst.” AMPLIFIED

Having been in the background, so far as speaking is concerned, Paul now has something to say – and it is at a time when there was apparently very little being said. Prior to this, there had been speaking and agreement on the matter of whether or not they should make an effort to reach the commodious port in Phenice. It is not likely that there will be an decision on that subject now, for the circumstance in which they found themselves was testimony enough about the folly of the choice they had made.

YOU SHOULD HAVE HEARKENED UNTO ME

“ 21b . . . and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss.”

The manner in which Paul speaks reflects the Divine nature. He is not accommodating to his listeners, as though they had made their choice in the environment of freedom and moral right. From heaven’s point of view, men never have the right to be wrong. That is a “right” the Lord does not give to men. Doing wrong is always a result of being deceived. Much more is involved than simply making a foolish choice. This is God’s world, and He is ruling in it. He created and positioned men in order that they might seek Him, and feel after Him in a conscientious effort to find Him (Acts 17:26-27).

That is a hard lesson for some to learn, for they are regularly taught that man is free to do what he wants. Indeed, it may look that way, but men are not to judge according to appearance. The pilot and owner of this ship had been given sound advice by a man of God. They chose to confer with one another, rather than inquire why Paul issued his warning.

YOU SHOULD HAVE HEARKENED UNTO ME

“ . . . and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete . . .” Other versions read, “Men, you should have listened to me, and not have sailed from Crete” NKJV “Men, you ought to have followed my advice and not to have set sail from Crete,” NASB “Friends, it would have been better if you had given attention to me and not gone sailing out from Crete,” BBE “It behoved you, indeed, O men – having hearkened to me – not to set sail from Crete.” YLT

For several days, Paul has kept silence, not speaking prematurely. This was not owing to any doubt he had entertained concerning his advice. Rather, he did not speak until it was readily apparent that he was correct in his assessment of the situation.

Now, it was obvious to all that Paul had spoken wisely when he advised them not to sail from Crete. In the midst of the crisis, it is quite probable that those on board had forgotten what Paul said. That, of course, is because they did not value his advice in the first place. Paul, however, will not let them forget what he had said, for he knew that he had spoken the truth. In fact, we have every reason to believe that he had been given wisdom “from above” on this matter. I do not know how you could otherwise account for Paul having confirmed understanding in this matter.

Under any other circumstances, it seems to me that Paul’s words would have counted for nothing in the minds of the hearers. Now, however, the situation is different, and Paul knows it very well. He will speak now to bring the greatest advantage to the people, reminding them of the wise counsel he had given them several days prior. Now, they have expended much energy, lost much of the cargo, and even threw the ship tackling overboard. Their self-confidence had run out, and it was apparent to them that all of their efforts were for nothing. No matter what they did, they could not improve their situation.

Paul does not step forward and command the storm to cease – something Jesus twice did, but only for His disciples (Matt 4:39; 14:32). Even then, He rebuked them for their lack of faith (Matt 14:31; Lk 8:25). This was not a time to halt the storm, for more of the working of the Lord had to be seen.

An Application to Spiritual Life

In dealing with people who insist on pursuing a wayward course of life, there does come a time when they must be reminded of any warnings that were issued to them. This is not always easy to do, but it is often necessary to nail wise counsel into their conscience, so they will be less apt to forget it. After duly warning Israel of their unacceptable manners, God said to them, “For they have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind: it hath no stalk: the bud shall yield no meal: if so be it yield, the strangers shall swallow it up” (Hosea 8:7). He then added, “Israel is swallowed up: now shall they be among the Gentiles as a vessel wherein is no pleasure” (Hosea 8:8).

Those who recover from the snare of the devil must first be brought to the point where they acknowledge the truth. It is not enough to simply seek deliverance from the trouble brought upon them because of their sin. This is written, “And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will” (2 Tim 2:24-26).

In our text, Paul is an excellent example of someone who did not strive, or be quarrelsome, NASB with the people. He simply affirmed the truth, and did not enter into an argument with the people. Really, there was nothing to argue about. A wrong choice had been made, and Paul apprised them of it, doing so gently, and not lingering on the subject.

I doubt that very many people on that Alexandrian ship remembered the words of Paul. I say this because they did not value the person who had spoken to them, and therefore it was easier to forget his words. They might not have liked what Paul said, but he said it anyway, because it was the truth.

Although some may not consider this to be a wise course of action, it is one that allows for the honor of God, speaking a word through which God can work, and inducing people to consider their wayward manners.

THE NEEDLESSNESS OF REALIZING SUCH HARM AND LOSS

“ . . . and to have gained this harm and loss.” Other versions read, “incurred this disaster and loss,” NKJV “incurred this damage and loss,” NASB “this injury and loss,” RSV “this disastrous loss,” CJB “all this trouble and loss,” IE “hardship and damage,” ISV and “this disaster and harm and misery and loss.” AMPLIFIED

Think of the results that have been experienced because of the decision to sail from Crete to Phenice.

- The ship has suffered damage.
- Time had to be spent undergirding the ship.
- An extraordinary amount of labor had to be exerted by the mariners.
- Cargo which was being transported for other people was lost.
- The tackling of the ship was thrown overboard.
- Misery had been experienced that could easily have been avoided.

Now Paul reminds them that all of this could have been avoided if they would hearkened to his words and not have said from Crete. This is not an expression of pride, but one of wisdom.

Failing to heed wise counsel is always attended by some form of loss. Furthermore, it is good to remind those who ignored good counsel that this is why they are having such difficulty. I doubt that very many people on that Alexandrian ship remembered the words of Paul. I say this because they did not value the person who had spoken to them, and therefore it was easier to forget his words. They might not have liked what Paul said, but he said it anyway, because it was the truth.

Of course, all of this postulates that wise counsel is spoken, and men are not left to their own devices without due warning. Solemnly the church is told, “warn them that are unruly” (1 Thess 5:14). Other versions read “disorderly,” ASV “not well ordered,” BBE “lazy,” CJB “not living right,” GWN “undisciplined,” NET and “admonish (warn and seriously advise) those who are out of line [the loafers, the disorderly, and the unruly].” AMPLIFIED

It ought to be noted that all of this postulates a fellowship with Christ Jesus on the part of the speaker. Effective warnings are not the expressions of mere human opinion, but of a person who has received wisdom from above. Time will prove that the expression of such wisdom precisely accorded with the truth. Most of us have at some time spoken warnings that did not prove to be on target. Our aim must be to reduce such occurrences, which reduction will take place to the degree that we walk in the light as He is in the light, always judging “righteous judgment” (John 7:24). Those who live in aloofness from the Lord forfeit their usefulness to Him.

May the Lord so work in those who walk with Him as to enable them to be expert in the issuance of warnings, and faithful in drawing attention to their fulfillment, doing so with humility and without a spirit of vindictiveness.

BE OF GOOD CHEER, ONLY THE SHIP WILL BE LOST

“ 22 And now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship.”

Good ministers do not take delight in delivering bad news. When speaking of the demise of Jerusalem under the besieging of the Romans, Jesus “wept over it” (Lk 19:41). By the same token, good news from heaven is always cheerful news to such an individual, as Paul will now confirm.

BE OF GOOD CHEER

“And now I exhort you to be of good cheer . . .” Other versions read, “I urge you to take heart,” NKJV “I urge you to keep up your courage,” NASB “I counsel you to be without anxiety,” MRD “I ask you not to give way to despair,” NJB “I am telling you to cheer up,” IE and “I beg you to be in good spirits and take heart.” AMPLIFIED

How utterly contradictory of their experience this must have sounded. They were thinking everyone was going to die! They were miles from any shore, and to this point their only protection was the ship in which they were being tossed about. Now Paul boldly announces that not so much as a single life will be lost as a result of this storm.

Paul is speaking to a body of people who have lost all hope. They have lost hope after doing everything they could possibly do under the circumstances, and yet their condition was no better. They were being driven by a ferocious storm over which they had no power. Their condition was complicated by the fact that they had been duly warned, and yet had chosen to ignore the warning. Now Paul boldly tells them to be of good cheer, take heart, and be courageous. He is affirming that things are not as bad as they seem, and, at this point, they have nothing more than his word on the matter. Yet, now, after spending nearly two solid weeks in the grip of an unrelenting and life-threatening storm, they can assign a greater value to Paul’s words than they did before. They have experienced precisely what he said they would experience. Now, they will listen with an attentiveness they did not have before, even though they are standing at the door of death.

NO LOSS OF LIFE

“ . . . for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you . . .” Other versions read, “not one of you will be lost,” NIV “there will be no loss of life among you,” NRSV “Not one of us will lose our lives,” LIVING and “None of you will die!” IE

How utterly contradictory of their experience this must have sounded. They were thinking everyone was going to die! They were miles from any shore, and to this point their only protection was the ship in which they were being tossed about. Now Paul boldly announces that not so much as a single life will be lost as a result of this storm.

THE LOSS OF THE SHIP

“ . . . but of the ship.” Other versions read, “but only of the ship,” NKJV “only the ship will be destroyed,” NIV and “only the ship will be lost.” CJB

Under the circumstances, this would call for some kind of miraculous intervention. If a great ship could not survive the storm, how could frail persons survive the storm in the midst of the sea? At this point they are in the open sea, nearly 500 miles away from Clauda. They are enveloped by darkness, and can only feel and hear the crashing waves and roaring wind. Yet, Paul stands boldly before them and says not a single soul will perish, even though the ship will be lost.

A SPIRITUAL PARALLEL

We are also in a tenuous situation. The storms of life confirm that the world is going down, and our present bodies are destined for corruption. We can pour ourselves into efforts to keep the world here, and ensure that our bodies are in the best state of health possible. But they will both finally give way to the storm of mortality.

But there is no need for any soul to perish. Provision has been made to survive the demise of both the world and our bodies, and do so safely. In the process of the storm, insightful souls are learning what they can throw overboard, dispensing with it in order to their survival. Those who have formed an inordinate attachment to the cargo and tackling of life will find this most difficult to do. But once a person has settled it in his mind that his own survival depends upon such decisive action, he will throw certain things out of his life. The desire to survive, attaining to the resurrection of the dead, causes everything to be seen differently, and with greater clarity.

FOR THERE STOOD BY ME THIS NIGHT

“ 23 For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve, 24 Saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Caesar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee.”

THERE STOOD BY ME

“For there stood by me this night . . .” Other versions read, “this very night,” NASB and “last night.” NIV

While the storm was raging, and the ship was being lightened, and all hope had faded away, special attention had been given to Paul by heaven. When the hearts of others were failing them for fear, someone greater than the storm stood by Paul. Something was vouchsafed to him that was not given to others. An insight was ministered to him exclusively, and the only way others would hear of it was for Paul to tell it.

There is a sense in which God does not treat all men alike. There are times when everyone who needs help does not hear from the Lord. There are times when the destiny of people absolutely depends upon someone being among them who is reconciled to God, and to whom He makes known His will.

Away with the spirit of independence, when men think they do not need the interposition of others – others who know the Lord, and are walking in the light!

THE ANGEL OF GOD

“ . . . the angel of God . . .” Other versions read, “the angel of God,” GENEVA and “the angel of that God.” MRD

This was a heavenly messenger, for an angel is “a messenger, envoy, one who is sent” THAYER by God from heaven. They bring a word to men that could not otherwise be known. It is not possible to deduce with the human mind the word that is delivered by angels – “ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation” (Heb 1:14). Angels have appeared to the following.

- Abraham (Gen 18:2; 22:11-18)
- Hagar (Gen 16:7)
- Lot (Gen 19:1-17)
- Jacob (Gen 28:12)
- Moses (Ex 3:2)
- The Israelites (Ex 14:19; Judges 2:1-4)
- Balaam (Num 22:31)
- Joshua (Josh 5:15)
- Gideon (Judges 6:11-22)

- Manoah (Judges 13:6, 15-20)
- David (2 Sam 24:16-17; 1 Chron 21:15-16)
- Elijah (1 Kgs 19:5)
- Elisha (2 Kgs 6:16-17)
- Daniel (Dan 6:22; 8:16; 9:21; 10:5-10, 16-18; 12:5-7)
- Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Dan 3:25,28)
- Zechariah (Zech 2:3; 3:1-2; 4:1)
- Joseph, Mary's husband (Matt 1:20; 2:13,19)
- Mary (Lk 1:26-38)
- Zecharias (Lk 1:11-38)
- Certain shepherds (Lk 2:9-14)
- Jesus (Matt 4:11; Lk 22:43)
- At the sepulcher of Jesus (Matt 28:2-5; Mk 16:5-7; Lk 24:23; John 20:12)
- At the ascension of Christ (Acts 1:10-11)
- The apostles John (Acts 5:18-19)
- Philip (Acts 8:26)
- Cornelius (Acts 10:3, 30-32)
- Peter (Acts 12:7-11)
- Paul (Acts 27:23)
- John (Rev 1:1; 5:2; 7:11; 10:9; 11:1; 17:7; 19:10; 22:8)

None of the above cases involved the appropriation of information that could have been obtained from an earthly resource or natural aptitude. These incidents, along with our text, are examples of heavenly government – of God doing His will among the inhabitants of the earth.

However, this was not the case with Paul. The reason for his life was obvious, and that is precisely why he could speak so candidly about it. When he said, “I labored more abundantly than they all” (1 Cor 15:10), no one stepped forward to dispute the statement.

It ought to be noted, that mariners of old were sometimes noted for calling upon their gods when in the midst of a storm. It is written of those manning the ship on which Jonah was fleeing from the Lord, “Then the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them” (Jonah 1:5). The prophets of Baal vainly called upon Baal, but heard nothing from him (1 Kgs 18:28). Isaiah said men other than the Israelites “maketh a god, even his graven image: he falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and prayeth unto it, and saith, Deliver me ; for thou art my god” (Isa 44:17). Later he said they “pray unto a god that cannot save” (Isa 45:20). Jeremiah chided Israel for creating false gods: “But where are thy gods that thou hast made thee? let them arise, if they can save thee in the time of thy trouble: for according to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah” (Jer 2:28). But none of those gods answered or delivered the oppressed.

Therefore, Paul will further identify the God of whom he speaks, lest there be any doubts among the listeners.

WHOSE I AM AND WHOM I SERVE

“...whose I am, and whom I serve ...” Other versions read, “to whom I belong and whom I serve,” NKJV “to whom I belong and whom I worship,” NRSV “who is my Master and whose servant I am,” BBE and “to Whom I belong and Whom I serve and worship .” AMPLIFIED

Here Paul encapsulates true discipleship. It involves discernment: “whose I am.” It also involves total commitment: “whom I serve.”

“Whose I Am”

As one who has been purchased, or “bought with a price,” Paul belonged God, through the Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor 6:19-20). He was “redeemed” (Gal 3:13; Tit 2:14), “created in Christ Jesus” (Eph 2:10), and “delivered from the power of darkness” (Col 1:13). Those are the facts of the case. However, Paul perceived this, and that is what made the difference. This was not merely a creedal statement, but a confession from the heart.

“Whom I Serve”

This is the confession lived out. Elsewhere Paul states it this way: “I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me” (Gal 2:20). The very “life of Jesus” was made manifest in his “mortal flesh” (2 Cor 4:11). Peter referred to this as living “to the will of God” (1 Pet 4:2).

Here is the weakness of modern Christianity. There is too much of self in it, and too little of Christ. Underlying much of the teaching that is being offered in the name of the Lord is the sanctity of the human will, and God’s desire to grant people what they want. In other words there is a strong appeal to covetousness, just as Peter foretold: “And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you : whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not” (2 Pet 2:3).

However, this was not the case with Paul. The reason for his life was obvious, and that is precisely why he could speak so candidly about it. When he said, “I labored more abundantly than they all” (1 Cor 15:10), no one stepped forward to dispute the statement.

He no doubt states this because it accounts for why an angel of God stood by him instead of the pilot of the vessel, or the owner of the ship. The word was actually for them all, but it was given to the one who was being conducted to Rome for the work of the Lord.

FEAR NOT, PAUL

“Saying, Fear not, Paul . . .” Other versions read, “Do not be afraid, Paul” NKJV “Have no fear, Paul,” BBE “Dismiss all fear, Paul,” WEYMOUTH “Stop being afraid, Paul!” WILLIAMS “Do not be frightened, Paul!” AMPLIFIED and “Don't give up, Paul.” MESSAGE

Now Paul speaks so when deliverance is realized, the people will know its cause. It will not come by the storm ceasing, but by a miraculous deliverance while in the very midst of it. They will not suddenly and peacefully land on a convenient shore with everything kept in tact.

Notice how personal this messenger is. He addresses his words to Paul, the spokesman that has been chosen by heaven for this occasion. Now Paul speaks so when deliverance is realized, the people will know its cause. It will not come by the storm ceasing, but by a miraculous deliverance while in the very midst of it. They will not suddenly and peacefully land on a convenient shore with everything kept in tact.

THOU MUST BE BROUGHT BEFORE CAESAR

“ . . . thou must be brought before Caesar . . .” Other versions read, “you must stand before Caesar,” NASB “you must stand trial before Caesar,” NIV “you must stand before the emperor,” NRSV “you have to stand before the emperor,” CJB “You must present your case to the emperor,” GWN “You are destined to stand before Caesar,” NAB “you will surely stand trial before Caesar,” NLT and “It is necessary for you to stand before Caesar.” AMPLIFIED

Paul does not provide the details of his trip to Rome. Jesus had told him, “Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of Me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome ” (Acts 23:11). It would not have been appropriate, however, for Paul to relate this to the crowd before him. They would not be able to understand why a person called to witness for their Lord had been arrested, and was to be tried before Casesar. It was enough to limit his remarks to the known reason why he was going to Rome – he had appealed to Caesar, and to Caesar he was going.

However, Paul now adds something that had not been revealed before the prior night. The angel had divulged a heavenly decision that had not be known before.

GOD HAS GIVEN YOU ALL WHO ARE SAILING WITH YOU

“ . . . and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee.” Other versions read, “indeed, God has granted you all those who sail with you,” NKJV God has graciously given you the lives of all who sail with you,” NIV “God has granted safety to those who are sailing with you,” NRSV “God has granted your request and will save the lives of all those sailing with you,” LIVING “And God to give you something good: He will save the lives of all those sailing with you,” IE “because of you, God will save the lives of everyone on the ship,” CEV “God in his goodness to you has spared the lives of all those who are sailing with you,” GNB and “and everyone sailing with you is also going to make it.” MESSAGE

Here is an arresting revelation: some people are spared because of those with whom they are traveling. This is a Divine manner, and is to be duly noted. Moses once said to the son of his father-in-law, “We are journeying unto the place of which the LORD said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good: for the LORD hath spoken good concerning Israel ” (Num 10:29). The people of the world might consider this a proud statement, and yet it was the truth. Even though they eventually rebelled against the Lord, there was a “mixed multitude” that came out of Egypt with Israel (Ex 12:38). At the time of their departure, these people no doubt sought to gain the advantage of being with the Israelites, whom God had singularly blessed.

There is a kind of circumference that surrounds those who are approved and blessed by the Lord. One of the more obvious manifestations of this are godly parents. There is a sense in which young children are protected and advanced because of the faith of their parents – like Timothy in his youth. Paul said of him, “When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also” (2 Tim 1:5). Timothy took advantage of the environment in which raised, appropriating the faith that first dwelt in his grandmother and mother.

This is the kind of thing that men cannot capitalize on for personal gain, but it is a truth upon which we can reckon. Of course, if a person is not living by faith and walking in the Spirit, there is no circumference of blessing around him. Also, a statement such as this must not be uttered hastily, and without some obvious support. It is not something that takes place automatically, so that anywhere a child of God is found, those about that person are guaranteed safety. All of those around Noah, who found grace in the eyes of the Lord, were destroyed except for his wife, his sons, and their wives. Sodom was not spared because Lot, “that righteous man” (2 Pet 2:8), was there. However, in the text before us, those onboard the ship in which Paul was traveling, were guaranteed safety because of him. As the passage will verify, this involved following his counsel, and not violating what he told them to do. By heaven's decree, their lives were in his hands.

BE OF GOOD CHEER, FOR I BELIEVE GOD

“ 25 Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me.”

It is imperative that believers know what to do with what is made known to them. Here Paul expresses a word that is designed to conquer despair. He speaks it in the midst of a devastating storm, when blackness is hiding the sun by day and the stars by night. Yet he speaks with the confidence of faith.

BE OF GOOD CHEER

“Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer . . .” Other versions read, “take heart,” NKJV “keep up your courage,” NASB “be of good courage,” GENEVA “be ye courageous,” MRD “cheer up,” IE and “be cheered.” LITV

The word translated “cheer” (ευφουμει/τε) is lexically defined as, “to put in good spirits, gladden, make cheerful . . . to be joyful, be of good cheer, of good courage.” THAYER It is used four times in Scripture, three of which are in this chapter (Acts 27:22,25,36), and one in James 5:13, where it is translated “merry.”

This was spoken to people of whom it was said, “all hope that we should be saved was taken away” (Acts 27:20). A fierce, protracted, and unrelenting storm caused that despair. Can a mere word from a prisoner enable the emotions of the people to change so radically and so suddenly? Yes, it can, depending upon the reliability of the word, and the enablement of the people to believe it. It is in this sense that Solomon wrote, “A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold In settings of silver” (Prov 25:11).

FOR I BELIEVE GOD

“ . . . for I believe God . . .” Other versions read, “I have faith in God,” NIV “I trust God and believe,” CJB “I trust God,” GWN “I confide in God,” MRD “I have confidence in my God,” WILLIAMS “I have faith (complete confidence) in God,” AMPLIFIED and “I am sure.” CEV

When men falter, it is because of unbelief. When they doubt, it can be traced back to not believing. There can be no true confidence or trust where there is no faith, and there can be no wavering or doubt where there is faith.

See, “faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen” (Heb 11:1). Faith is convinced of the truth of what God has said, and proceeds in life upon the basis of that persuasion. When men falter, it is because of unbelief. When they doubt, it can be traced back to not believing. There can be no true confidence or trust where there is no faith, and there can be no wavering or doubt where there is faith. Keep in mind, that Paul said these words when there was not the slightest bit of visible evidence that they were true. It was in the midst of the storm that he expressed his confidence in God – a confidence that was based upon what God said.

The “good fight of faith” has to do with extending effort to keep the faith, and not lose trust in the Lord. This requires the use of spiritual weaponry designed to cast down imaginations and every high thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God. It also necessitates bringing into captivity every thought, making it obedient to Christ (2 Cor 10:5). Other versions read, “We are destroying speculations and every lofty thing raised up against the knowledge of God, and we are taking every thought captive to the obedience of Christ,” NASB “We demolish arguments and every pretension that sets itself up against the knowledge of God, and we take captive every thought to make it obedient to Christ,” NIV and “refute arguments and theories and reasonings and every proud and lofty thing that sets itself up against the [true] knowledge of God; and we lead every thought and purpose away captive into the obedience of Christ (the Messiah, the Anointed One).” AMPLIFIED

Paul had used these weapons to throw down the contrary thoughts of the pilot and owner of the ship, and the suggestions that were thrown at him by the sight and sound of the storm in which they found themselves. He placed a greater value on what the angel of the Lord said than upon what men and nature were declaring. I am going to wax bold and affirm that much of modern Christianity does not encourage such determination. It is too humanistic.

IT SHALL BE EVEN AS IT WAS TOLD ME

“ . . . that it shall be even as it was told me.” Other versions read, “it will be just as it was told me,” NKJV “exactly as I have been told,” NASB “what I have been told will come true,” CJB “it will turn out exactly as I have been told,” NAS and “Everything will happen just as His angel told me.” LIVING

Paul does not take a portion of what the angel said, but accepts every word declared to him. There is no generality in his faith. He has confidence that things will turn out precisely as the angel has said. That is how faith reasons: whatever is declared by the Lord is accepted without reservation or staggering. Even though the storm shouts “No!” faith responds, “It shall be so!”

How must such an outburst of confidence have sounded to those mariners and passengers? The details of their response are not made known, but I have no doubt that Paul’s word was the best word they had heard in a long time. It is apparent that his conduct during the voyage in no way contradicted what he has now declared to them. Some testimonies are rejected because of the life of the one testifying.

WE MUST BE CAST UPON A CERTAIN ISLAND

“ 26 Howbeit we must be cast upon a certain island.”

Paul now reveals, something that was apparently revealed to him, even though he previously made no reference to it. He introduces what may, to the shallow thinker, appear on the surface to be a contradiction of what he just said.

HOWBEIT

“Howbeit . . .” Other versions read, “However,” NKJV “But,” NASB “Nevertheless,” NIV and “Yet.” MRD As used in this text, “Howbeit” means “by way of opposition and distinction; it is added to statements opposed to a preceding statement,” THAYER “to emphasize contrast; as a correlative with (on the one hand) . . . but (on the other hand).” FRIBERG

This is an elaboration of the testimony he has given, which involved more than the loss of the ship, yet the saving of the lives of all who were aboard it. Paul now testifies to the fact that there will be a difficult end to this experience, yet the lives of none will be lost because of it.

WE MUST BE CAST UPON A CERTAIN ISLAND

“ . . . we must be cast upon a certain island.” Other versions read, “we must run aground on a certain island,” NKJV “we shall have to run on some island,” RSV “we will be sent on a certain island,” BBE “we have to run aground on some island,” CJB “we are destined to run aground on some island,” NAB “we are to be stranded on some island,” NJB “we will be shipwrecked on an island,” NLT “on a certain island it behoveth us to be cast,” YLT “we shall have to be stranded on some island,” AMPLIFIED “we will first be shipwrecked on some island,” CEV and “It is necessary for us to run aground on a certain island.” EMTV

At the time of this word, they appeared to be in the open sea, having no knowledge at all concerning the location. The island on which they will be stranded is later identified as Melita. It was about five hundred miles from Clauda, which gives some idea of the strength and duration of the wind that was pushing them westward, and slightly to the north.

Paul’s language suggests that this was more than the foretelling of an event. There was a Divine purpose that was driving this matter. God intended all along that people disembark from the boat and go to this island. The purpose of it all will be made known in the narrative that follows.

The English word “must” is certainly a proper word here. It is translated from the Greek word dei / which means, “it is necessary, there is need of, it behooves, is right and proper,” THAYER “as expressing compulsion, necessity, or inevitability in an event it is necessary, one must, one has to,” FRIBERG and “as expressing compulsion, necessity, or inevitability in an event it is necessary, one must, one has to” LOUW-NIDA

Here is a classic fulfillment of the following description of God, “the LORD hath His way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of His feet” (Nahum 1:3). It might be argued that this was a necessary consequence of the bad decision of the pilot and the owner of the ship. However, the word is too certain to express such a generality. They will not simply be cast upon a island, but “a certain island.”

Whether it is readily apparent to the reader or not, this whole event was being controlled and orchestrated by God. An aspect of His purpose will be fulfilled that just a few days earlier would have seemed impossible.

CONCLUSION

This text has confirmed the practicality of faith: how diagnosis and awareness of circumstances are integral to living by faith and walking in the Spirit. This is an aspect of spiritual life that is not common among professing believers of our time. Instead of living by faith, Christians are often taught to live by routine and fleshly regimen. Key aspects of living in the flesh – marriage, the home, etc. – are represented as best lived out within the context of a systematic plan. This is also carried over into the maintenance of spiritual life and the activities of the assembly of the saints. It is even projected into the realm of witnessing for Christ and seeking to constrain others to come to Him. Who is able to estimate the volumes of books, the number of workshops, and the development of sure-fire plans that have flooded the Christian world on these matters?

From a business point of view, we are speaking of a religious financial empire that is staggering in size. Rather than faith being associated with one’s identity with God Himself, His great salvation, and the procurement of an eternal inheritance, it is confined to temporal life. This approach has satisfied the religious multitudes, and they have poured their money and devotion into it. In terms of Scripture, this fulfills the word of Paul: “For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables” (2 Tim 4:3-4).

Thus the people have defined what they want to hear, and have given their allegiance to those who meet their wishes. Jesus defined such a generation in these words: “Whereunto then shall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like? They are like unto children sitting in the marketplace, and calling one to another, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept” (Luke 7:31-32). After hearing some word from God, such a generation might reply, “What has this got to do with us today?” Or, “We want something that is more practical.” Or “We need something that is relevant to everyday life.”

It all has a sound of wisdom, and has thus snared many a immature soul. But who has been able to work up a system for encountering a sudden storm, or a sinking ship, or being lost in the midst of the sea? Everyone who is familiar with these canned systems knows there are situations that arise that cannot be resolved by such an approach. So, those who market them to the people are really the people who are dealing with things that are not relevant.

Right here is where our text takes on special meaning. It confirms that faith can adapt to any circumstance, enabling its possessor to keep afloat, so to speak and adapt to the circumstance in an effective manner. There simply is no situation for which faith – real faith – is unequal. No person who believes that Jesus is the Son of God can get into a situation where such a posture has no applicability. In confirmation of this it is written, “For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?” (1 John 5:4-5).

That is what is being lived out in this text. It is the faith of Paul that is both being tried and put on display. Its versatility can be seen, as well as its calming and stabilizing impact upon those who possess it.

Lesson #104

SHIPWRECKED, BUT ALL SAVED ALIVE

“ 27:27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country; 28 And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms: and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms. 29 Then fearing lest we should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day. 30 And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under color as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship, 31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved. 32 Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off. 33 And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing. 34 Wherefore I pray you to take some meat: for this is for your health: for there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you. 35 And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat. 36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat. 37 And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen souls. 38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea. 39 And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship. 40 And when they had taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder bands, and hoisted up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore. 41 And falling into a place where two seas met, they ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

Sensing that they were near land, the mariners confirmed that by testing the waters. They anchored the ship, lest they be dashed upon the rocks. Some tried to escape in a boat, but were told by Paul that unless they stayed on board, they could not be saved. Immediately, the boat was cut off, removing the temptation to escape the ship prematurely. A considerable amount of effort was required to prepare the ship to navigate toward shore in the storm. The anchors that had been lowered to stabilize the ship were raised, the rudders again placed into the water, and the main sail hoisted, with the nose of the ship pointing into the island inlet. As they made their way to a piece of land that jutted out from the island, they ran aground on a sandbar. The waves were so violent, they tore off the back part of the vessel. Eventually, the boat was destroyed. Yet, everyone made it safe to shore, some swimming, and some using boards from the wrecked vessel. It was a harrowing experience, but not a hopeless one.

DIVINE DIRECTION

The voyage of Paul from Caesarea to Rome provides an index to the manner in which the Lord leads or directs His people. Sometimes it is by a specific word, as when the Lord Jesus Himself spoke to Paul (Acts 23:11), and when the angel of God spoke to him (Acts 27:23-24). Sometimes it is through a governor, such as Felix, who told him he was going to Caesar (Acts 25:21). It is the business of those being directed by the Lord to remain spiritually alert and sensitive of the circumstances in which they find themselves. There really is no time when the disciple can be slothful or asleep, without paying a great price.

The directions are generally not through calm and restful circumstances, although from time to time that may be the experience of the one being directed by God. Take, for example the lengthy trip of Paul.

- On the second leg of the journey, when they left Sidon, when passing Cyprus “the winds were contrary” (Acts 27:4).
- They sailed “slowly many days,” hardly able to pass by Cnidus, sailing under Crete, against Salmone, and into Fair Havens (Acts 27:7-8).
- Ignoring the counsel of Paul, the ship set out for Phenice, encountering a fierce storm that required them to gird the ship near Clauda (Acts 27:13-17).
- Being “exceedingly tossed with a tempest,” they had to lighten the ship, throwing some of the cargo overboard (Acts 27:18).
- The third day, they had to throw the ship’s tackling overboard (Acts 27:19).
- For “many days” neither the sun nor the stars could be seen, and all hope of survival was taken away (Acts 27:20).
- A special messenger was sent from heaven to Paul, announcing that he would arrive safely in Rome, and that those on board the ship were now in his charge, and that none of them would be lost owing to this storm (Acts 27:21-25).
- In our text, the ship runs aground, is wrecked, and the passengers have to make it to the shore of Melita, an island that was hundreds of miles from where they first encountered hindering winds. Some swam to shore, while those that could not do that came in on pieces of the boat (Acts 27:43-44). This was done even though Julius was advised to kill all of the prisoners, lest some of them escape.
- While Paul is gathering some firewood, he is bitten by a poisonous snake (Acts 28:3-4).
- They remain among some barbarians for three months, although those very people treated them kindly, and provided them with the supplies necessary to continue their trip (Acts 28:1-11).
- The trip continued through Syracuse (Acts 28:12), Rhegium (Acts 28:13), and Puteoli, where they spent seven days with brethren (Acts 28:13-14).
- Brethren came to meet them, encouraging the heart of Paul (Acts 28:15).
- They finally arrived in Rome (Acts 28:16).

All of this took at least six months, and possibly more.

THE TRIP FROM CAESAREA TO ROME

“A day” in Sidon Acts 27:3

“Many days” Acts 27:7

“Many days” Acts 27:20

“Fourteen nights” Acts 27:35

“Three days” Acts 28:7

“Three months” Acts 28:11

“Three days” Acts 28:12

“One day” Acts 28:13

“Seven days” Acts 28:14

Four months are accounted for, with two periods of “many days.” A trip of that length (about 2,000 miles), under ideal conditions, would require approximately half a year.

All of this fits in with Paul’s testimony of the things he experienced while engaged in carrying out Christ’s commission to him. Those experiences involved unusual labors, an abundance of stripes, frequent imprisonments, and often confronting death. Five times he was beaten by the Jews with thirty-nine stripes, and three times he was beaten with rods. Once he was stoned, and three times he was shipwrecked, apparently in addition to the one of which we are now reading. He even spent “a day and a night in the open sea.” NIV He was constantly on the move, NIV experiencing perils among robbers, his own countrymen, and the heathen. He confronted perils in the city, the wilderness, the sea, and among false brethren. He experienced weariness, painfulness, going without sleep, hungering and thirsting, going without food, being cold, and not having adequate clothing (2 Cor 11:23-28).

All of these things, together with our text, were experienced while Paul was faithfully and zealously involved in the work of the Lord. This is not to mention tumults, dishonor, evil reports, being unknown, chastened, being sorrowful, and having nothing (2 Cor 6:9-10). Add to that being “troubled on every side,” being “perplexed,” “persecuted,” and “cast down” (2 Cor 4:8-9). How does all of that fit in with aiming for a religious career, popularity with the masses, a lot of wealth, and spotless health? This is one of the princes of the Kingdom – one who did more work than anyone else, wrote more than any other apostle, and traveled extensively, often at his own expense.

This was a man directed by the Lord. He did not go through anything that was not on the Divine agenda, or was without purpose or heavenly objective. The map shown on this page represents the travels of Paul for about six months – travels in which he was a prisoner. Conservative estimates have his ministry extending over a period of about thirty years (37 AD through 67 AD [Acts 9-28], when he was martyred under the reign of Nero).

There were few times during that entire period when he was not being opposed, oppressed, or in some way severely inconvenienced. In addition to the physical abuse he endured, it is estimated that he spent at least five years in prison (one sixth of the time of his ministry). This does not take into consideration any brief imprisonments like that experienced in Philippi.

In the record of this single episode, extending from Acts 21:27 thru 28:31, he endured the following.

- He was dragged out of the temple (Acts 21:30).
- He was beaten (Acts 21:32).
- The multitudes of Jews sought to kill him (Acts 21:36; 22:23).
- He was incarcerated in army barracks in Jerusalem (Acts 22:24; 23:10).
- He was bound with thongs (Acts 22:25).
- Charges were formally leveled against him by the Jews (Acts 22:30).
- At the order of Ananias the high priest, he was struck on the mouth (Acts 23:2).
- Forty Jews bound themselves with a curse not to eat or drink until they had killed Paul (Acts 23:12-15).
- He was transported under armed guards from Jerusalem to Caesarea (Acts 23:22-24).
- He was incarcerated in Herod’s judgment hall for five days (Acts 23:35-24:1).
- Formal charges were presented against him by Tertullus, an orator who spoke for the Jews (Acts 24:1-9).

- Paul was incarcerated by Felix, who gave him special liberties (Acts 24:23).
- He is left in prison for two years by Felix (Acts 24:26-27).
- The high priest requested Festus to bring Paul from Caesarea to Jerusalem, plotting to kill him along the way (Acts 25:1-3).
- Hearing Paul's testimony, Festus publically shouts out that he is mad (Acts 26:24).
- Paul is delivered as a prisoner to Julius, to be transported to Rome (Acts 27:1-2).
- They sailed through contrary winds from Sidon to Myra (Acts 27:4-5).
- They sailed slowly for many days until they arrived at Fair Havens harbor in Crete (Acts 27:7-8).
- Against the advice of Paul, when sailing was dangerous, they set sail for Phenice, supposing it to be a better port in which to winter (Acts 27:9-12).
- They encountered a fierce storm, Euroclydon, that forced them to lighten the ship, gird the ship, throw their tackling overboard, and be shrouded in darkness for fourteen days (Acts 27:14-20).
- The vessel is finally dashed against the rocks and destroyed, all 276 occupants of the boat having to make it through the storm to the shore of Melita (Acts 27:41-44).

All of this was under the government of Christ Jesus, and in order to the fulfillment of His will. At no time was Paul's life out of control, or his ministry put on hold. Yet. His work was fulfilled in the midst of seeming turmoil and restriction. At least five years of his thirty-year ministry was spent in prison (17%) – two years in Caesarea, three years in Rome, and a few more unidentifiable years prior to him being martyred in Rome.

Thus we see that more abundant labors also yield more abundant sufferings. As Paul said of his own ministry, "Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more; in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft" (2 Cor 11:23).

As indicated in the above image, grace sets the tone for everything in Christ Jesus. One's labors are in direct proportion to the grace he has received. Valid suffering is determined by how much a person labors. The extent of comfort is according to the degree of suffering. The final reward is according to the amount of productive labor. All of these things work together for the glory of God and the benefit of the believer. One should not associate serving the Lord with a life of luxury and ease.

Today we are faced with a cross-less form of Christianity. It does not involve suffering because it does not require much effort, nor is spiritual life represented as being in conflict with the world. The ministry of Paul stands in stark contrast to this empty form of religion.

WHEN THE FOURTEENTH NIGHT WAS COME

" 27:27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country; 28 And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms: and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms."

For two solid weeks they have been battling this storm. Part of the time was spent in utter hopelessness. However, Paul had spoken comfortably to them, affirming that an angel of God had assured that no person would die in this storm, and that they would all arrive safely on a certain island. Our text will confirm that the spirits of the people were lifted, and their alertness honed to a fine edge.

THE FOURTEENTH NIGHT

“But when the fourteenth night was come . . .” Other versions read, “about midnight of the fourteenth night of the storm,” NLT “It was now the fourteenth night.” ISV This was fourteen days of storm, from the time they had left Fair Havens. How did the men know it was the fourteenth night? Remember, the sun and the stars had not appeared “for many days” (Acts 27:20) – how many, we do not know. However, even though the ordinary means of marking time could not bring them to this conclusion, they had found a way to count the nights. While the method they used is not specified, we are to understand that God so directs His people that they can maintain certain sound assessments that are relevant to their survival.

DRIVEN UP AND DOWN IN ADRIA

“ . . . as we were driven up and down in Adria . . .” Other versions read, “driven up and down in the Adriatic Sea,” NKJV “driven about in the Adriatic Sea,” NASB “driven across the Adriatic Sea,” NIV and “drifting across the sea of Adria.” NRSV

Being in an area where two seas met, there apparently were two different flows of water that, coupled with the wind, moved the ship “up and down,” or directionally two and fro. The dominate part of the water at that point was that of the Adriatic Sea. According to the Columbia Encyclopedia, The “ Adriatic Sea , [is an] arm of the Mediterranean Sea, between Italy and the Balkan Peninsula. It extends 500 miles from the Gulf of Venice, at its head, SE to the Strait of Otranto, which leads to the Ionian Sea. It is from 58 to 140 miles, with a maximum depth of 4,100 ft.” Therefore, this was a sizeable body of water. At the point it merged with the Mediterranean sea, it was 140 miles wide, 500 miles from north to south, being 4,100 feet deep [well over 8/10 ths of a mile].

In the midst of such a large body of water, with the motions associated with two seas meeting, and a fierce wind of hurricane strength, the passengers were in an absolutely uncontrollable situation – at least from a human point of view. Yet, a certain change of attitude has occurred because Paul has related a message he has received from heaven. At his advice, they have taken some nourishment, and now they are more alert to their situation, and will be more sensitive to windows of opportunity that the hand of the Lord will set before them.

A Parallel to Spiritual Life

One of the characteristics of edification is that it tends to encourage, build up, and enable the believer to be more alert and sensitive. It is the Divine manner to draw the attention of those who are to be delivered to their destiny, so they can respond to His direction in a more thorough and effective manner. Many professed believers have had gaping doors of opportunity set before them, yet because their minds were nailed to the earth, they have passed them by, unaware of Divine direction, and unable to hear.

Our assemblies must be such as sharpen both mind and spirit, ministering encouragement, enlightenment, and rebuke as it is necessary. The impact of such an assembly will bear directly upon the entirety of life, and yield benefits that can scarcely be imagined.

THE SHIPMEN DEEMED

“ . . . about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country . . .” Other versions read, “sensed they were drawing near some land,” NKJV “began to surmise that they were approaching some land,” NASB “suspected that they were nearing land,” NRSV “had an idea that they were getting near land,” BBE “thought they were approaching land,” CSB and conceived that they approached land.” MRD

The lexical meaning of the Greek word (u`peno,oun) translated “deemed” is, “to suppose, surmise,” THAYER “generally suppose, conjecture, assume,” FRIBERG “suppose, think, suspect.” UBS

Although the word is not always used in this manner, in this text “deemed” is more than a mere opinion or suspicion. This was the kind of sense sailors had, and was a aptitude that had been cultured on the seas. Some of the indications with which sailors were familiar are suggested by certain writers.

- Heard the waves breaking upon the shore. PULPIT COMMENTARY
- The faint outline of land. JOHN GILL
- Agitation of the water. ALBERT BARNES
- Flight of sea-birds. ADAM CLARKE
- Smell of the land. ADAM CLARKE

At any rate, this was not a mere fleeting thought that was wholly unsupported by any form of evidence. This had to do with senses that were the unique property of sailors. Paul had told them they would be cast upon an island, so their minds were the more alert for any evidence of land, and their developed senses equipped them to have the needed advantage in this circumstance.

THEY SOUNDED

“ . . . and sounded, and found it twenty fathoms: and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms.” Other versions read, “they took soundings,” NASB “let down the lead,” BBE “dropped a plumbline,” CJB “threw a line with a weight on it into the water.” GWN

The word “sounded” comes from a word having the following meaning: “a line and plummet with which mariners sound the depth of the sea, a sounding-lead,” THAYER “as a nautical technical term heave the lead bolij) ; hence take soundings, drop a weighted line.” FRIBERG In English the word means, “to measure the depth of (as a body of water) typically with a weighted line <sounding the distance to the bottom.>” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

Two times they took a measurement of the depth of the waters. The first time it was twenty fathoms, and the second time fifteen fathoms. A fathom is six feet. Thus the first measurement confirmed the water was 120 feet deep, and the second 90 feet. They were, indeed, approaching a shore.

THE PARALLEL OF SPIRITUAL LIFE

Living by faith also requires the development of certain spiritual senses. If these senses are not properly acquired, the person will suffer disadvantages and setbacks that could have been avoided. Paul wrote of such aptitudes. “But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil ” (Heb 5:14). Other versions represent “senses” as “faculties,” NRSV “their powers of discernment,” ESV “wits,” GENEVA “minds,” GWN “perceptions,” NET “spiritual faculties,” WEYMOUTH and “mental faculties,” AMPLIFIED

As noted in this text, these “senses” have to be “exercised.” Other versions read, “trained,” NASB “trained by practice,” NRSV “trained by continuous exercise,” CJB “trained by constant practice,” ESV and “carefully trained.” WEMOUTH

The use or training results in the ability to “discern both good and evil.” Other versions read,

“distinguish good from evil,” NIV “see what is good and what is evil,” BBE “know the difference between good and evil, GWN “discriminate good and evil,” MRD “recognize the difference between right and wrong,” NLT and “discriminate and distinguish between what is morally good and noble and what is evil and contrary either to divine or human law.” AMPLIFIED

It is at this point that much confusion exists in the Christian community. Due to distorted teaching, how salvation commences, and the objective of that salvation, have been nearly totally obscured. Those who have been “baptized into Christ” (Gal 3:27), “added to the church” (Acts 2:47), “joined unto the Lord” (1 Cor 6:17), and “delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of God’s dear Son” (Col 1:13) are appropriately described as a “new “creature,” or “new creation” (2 Cor 5:17). They have been “created in Christ Jesus” (Eph 2:10), and ’ have been “born again of incorruptible seed” (1 Pet 1:23).

They all commenced with all of their trespasses forgiven (Col 2:13), being “justified from all things” (Acts 13:39), “reconciled” to God (Col 1:21), and their names written in heaven (Heb 12:23).

They were raised up and made to “sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus” (Eph 2:6). Moreover, that is the exact place where God has blessed them “with all spiritual blessings” (Eph 1:3). They have been “made partakers of Christ” (Heb 3:14), and by means of “exceeding great and precious promises,” and “made partakers of the Divine nature” (2 Pet 1:4). God Himself placed them in the body where it has pleased Him (1 Cor 12:28), and each has been given the “measure of faith,” which enables them to contribute to the edification of the body of Christ (Rom 12:3-8; 1 Cor 12:6-7).

All of the benefits received at the point we are born again, are in an undeveloped state. Just as Jesus Himself, when entering into the world, “increased in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man” (Lk 2:52), so a growth process has been ordained for all who are in Christ Jesus. It is referred to as growing “up into Christ in all things” (Eph 4:15), being “conformed to the image” of God’s Son (Rom 8:29), and being changed by the Holy Spirit “from glory unto glory” (2 Cor 3:18).

There is no way to participate in the process of glorification, without going through the motions of growth, or being conformed to the image of God’s Son. The omission of this necessity in much of the teaching of our day is very serious. Shallow teaching, frothy views, and a spirit of casualness are spiritually counter-productive. That is, they interfere with Divine objectives, and are more related to the seduction in Eden than to the work of the Lord. Such has robbed many believers of the things that are essential to the necessary exercise of their spiritual senses. As a consequence, they cannot discern good from evil. Unlike the sailors aboard the vessel of our text, they cannot sense when they are near spiritual land, where safety and nourishment can be realized. They hoist their sails when it is out of order to do so, and leave them down when they ought to be raised. I do not believe there is a thoroughly satisfying way of expressing the gravity of that situation.

Taking A Measurement

The sailors knew how to take a measurement of the depth of the water. Without that measurement they had no sure way of knowing whether they were going further into the sea, or nearing a shore.

Even though believers are told to “examine” themselves (2 Cor 13:5), “try the spirits” (1 John 4:1), and note those who “cause divisions” (Rom 16:17), yet it appears that few know how to take a spiritual measurement. Further, it is not possible to arrive at such a knowledge academically. Some people are “not far from the Kingdom of God” (Mk 12:34), but do not know it. Others are drifting in the open sea of flesh, and seem blissfully unaware of it.

Every assembly of the godly should be an occasion when a depth-reading can be taken, and some kind of assessment can be made of whether we are closer to, or further from the living God.

The necessity of spiritual measurement is confirmed in the Revelation of Jesus to the churches of Asia. In that revelation John was given a measuring rod, something like a yardstick, with which certain measurements were to be made. He was even told what was NOT to be measured. “And there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months” (Rev 11:1-2).

The Temple of God

And what is the area the Gentiles have corrupted? It is not the holy of holies into which believers are urged to come. They have rather stressed “how” to be saved, and “how” to clean up human conduct. The methods that are presented for these tasks are as numerous as the number of denominations.

The “temple of God” is the church which is categorically referred to as that temple (1 Cor 3:16-17). Does the professed church measure up to Divine requirements. Is it the kind of place in which God dwells, or takes up residence (John 14:23; 2 Cor 6:16)? Is it shining “as lights in the world” (Phil 2:15). Has it been crucified unto the world, and the world unto it (Gal 6:14). Is it realizing the victory that overcomes the world (1 John 5:4-5)? Is the Holy Spirit producing His fruit in her (Gal 5:22-23; Eph 5:9). Is it crucifying the flesh with the affections and lusts (Gal 5:24)? Is she running the race with patience that has been set before her (Heb 12:1-2)? Is she fighting the good fight of faith and laying hold on eternal life (1 Tim 6:12)? Is she resisting the devil, steadfast in the faith (1 Pet 5:8-9). Is she growing up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:15)? Measure the church! Put the Divine plumbline to it! Where is she at in regards to Divine requirements?

The Altar

The altar speaks of the means of atonement (Rom 5:12). It is where reconciliation is made (2 Cor 5:18-19), and sins taken away (Heb 9:26). Here, at the altar, is where peace has been made (Col 1:20). It is where the people are sanctified (Heb 10:14). What is the church presenting as the means through which men are made suitable to stand before God? Measure her message! Put it to the test! Is she properly presenting the means through which men draw nigh unto God? Is the Gospel of Christ her core message? Does the cross of Christ occupy a prominent place?

They That Worship

Measure the worshipers! Put the Divine plumbline to them. Is the law written on their hearts and put into their minds (Heb 8:10; 10:16)? Are they living by faith (Heb 10:38), and walking in the Spirit (Gal 5:16,25)? Are they “true worshipers” who worship the God “in spirit and in truth” (John 4:23-24)? Have they crucified the flesh (Gal 3:24), and do they rejoice in Christ Jesus (Phil 3:3). Measure the worshipers, even though some may object, shouting out, “Judge not!” Are they pressing toward the mark (Phil 3:14), growing up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:15), and looking the blessed hope and glorious appearing of the Great God and Savior, Jesus Christ (Tit 2:12)? Measure the worshipers, and use the Divine standard to do so!

Do Not Measure the Outer Court

John was told NOT to measure the outer court – the area of approach. That area, he was told, had been “give unto the Gentiles” (Rev 11:2). And what is the area the Gentiles have corrupted? It is not the holy of holies into which believers are urged to come (Heb 10:19). They have rather stressed “how” to be saved, and “how” to clean up human conduct. The methods that are presented for these tasks are as numerous as the number of denominations. And how is it that they have been able to so corrupt the truth in these matters of approach? It is because that is the area God has given over to them. The fact that they have distorted matters pertaining to approaching the Lord is proof enough of their own depravity. Do not measure the era of approach. Rather, resign yourself to the fact that it has been corrupted – and that by Divine permission, so to speak. Set forth the truth concerning the Temple, the Altar, and the Worshipers. Within that context, the approach is made clear for those who are of a humble and contrite spirit. Once those things are seen, no one will have trouble responding correctly to what they ought to do. It is wrong to linger in the outer court – for any reason, according to a word from heaven, corrupted, being given to the Gentiles.

THEY CAST FOUR ANCHORS

“ 29 Then fearing lest we should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day.”

Behold what is required because the counsel of Paul was ignored: extra work, ship damage, loss of the cargo, fatigue, and even despair. Yet, after Paul had told them of the word he received from an angel of God, and they had eaten, they were better able to confront the crisis in which they found themselves.

MOVED BY FEAR

“Then fearing lest we should have fallen upon rocks . . .” Other versions read, “Then, fearing lest we should run aground on the rocks,” NKJV “Fearing that we would be dashed against the rocks,” NIV “fearing lest we should be cast on rocky places,” DARBY “we feared lest we should be caught in places where were rock,” MRD and “Then fearing that we might fall off [our course] onto rocks.” AMPLIFIED

Even though Paul had told them the ship would be lost, and they would all be saved, yet wisdom was needed before they could safely disembark. To have the ship dashed upon the rocks, and there be no solid land accessible to them would leave them stranded on rocks in the sea. They would have to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling, looking for the opportunity of which Paul spoke to appear.

FOUR ANCHORS

“ . . . they cast four anchors out of the stern . . .” Other versions read, “we dropped four anchors from the stern,” NKJV “they let down four hooks from the back of the ship,” BBE and “dropped four anchors from the back of the ship.” GWN

The last time they determined the depth of the water, it was ninety feet deep. We do not know how much further they had gone since then. However, in order to go through the night with some degree of safety, they dropped four anchors to stop the ship from going any further. They dropped them from the hinder part of the ship so the boat would not be tipped to the side by being secured to the floor of the sea. The ship would also be kept in a position that would enable them to more readily advance to the shore in the light.

Behold what wisdom these men used, and their presence of mind, so they were able to think clearly and make the appropriate adjustments. It was before this that they languished in despair, having given up all hope. However, because of a word of hope spoken by Paul, the whole environment of the ship was changed. Now they were working as those with hope, looking forward to being out of the storm and on a stable shore. See what a good word can do!

WISHED FOR A DAY

“ . . . and wished for the day.” Other versions read, “prayed for day to come,” NKJV “wished for daybreak,” NASB “prayed for the daylight,” NIV “made prayers for the coming of day,” BBE “prayed for morning to come,” GWN and “kept wishing for daybreak to come.” AMPLIFIED

The word “wished” is translated from the Greek word hu;conto . Its lexical meaning is, “to pray to God . . . wish: adhere to the religious sense, to pray, pray for,” THAYER “of petitionary prayer or appeal to God pray, offer prayer, ask,” FRIBERG “of petitionary prayer or appeal to God pray, offer prayer, ask.” LOUW-NIDA The apparent accent of the word is placed on a strong and fervent desire. While “wishing” is properly seen as praying, it is a fervent prayer that is intended. That is why several versions use the word “wish” – as something that is fervently sought.

This Greek word is used seven times in the Scriptures.

- ACTS 26:29. “And Paul said, I would to God , that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds” (Acts 26:29).

- ACTS 27:29. “Then fearing lest we should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day” (Acts 27:29).

- ROMANS 9:3. “For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh” (Rom 9:3).

- 2 CORINTHIANS 13:7. “Now I pray to God that ye do no evil; not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is honest, though we be as reprobates” (2 Cor 13:7).

- 2 CORINTHIANS 13:9. “For we are glad, when we are weak, and ye are strong: and this also we wish , even your perfection” (2 Cor 13:9).

- JAMES 5:16. “Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much” (James 5:16).

- 3 JOHN1:2. “Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth” (3 John 1:2).

As in the case with those aboard the boat on which Jonah was fleeing the presence of the Lord, the mariners were no doubt calling upon their god, while those with Paul were calling upon the true God. It is said of those on Jonah’s ship, “Then the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god , and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. But Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship; and he lay, and was fast asleep. So the shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, O sleeper? arise, call upon thy God , if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not” (Jonah 1:5-6).

In this text, the people were no doubt praying for the day to come – i.e. they were praying to be able to make it through the night until they were able to see more clearly. When the night seems long, and the future is threatening, prayer is in order. It is clear that the prayers of Paul and his companions were indicative of prayers that would be heard by God. Prayers to other gods simply fell on deaf ears, for such gods “have ears, but they hear not” (Psa 115:6).

AN OBSERVATION

It ought to be noted that the nearer we are to the shore, the more important stability becomes. In our text, it would have been a tragedy to be so near to the shore, yet be destroyed needlessly by not giving heed to necessary things. There are some things to be done while waiting for the final day to dawn. There is securing the vessel so it is not dashed upon the rocks, or drug back out to sea. There is also the matter of prayer, and the resistance of false and damaging thoughts.

Many a poor soul has been pulled off course at the last minute of their lives by giving their attention to the wrong things.

THEY HAD TO STAY ON THE SHIP

“ 30 And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under color as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship, 31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved. 32 Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.”

Paul had announced that no lives of those on board the ship would be lost. But that declaration would not automatically be carried out. Satan will move some to challenge the saying by maintaining their own lives, independent of the working of God. Paul, however, will be alert to the situation, and elaborate on the salvation that had been promised.

THE SHIPMEN WERE ABOUT TO FLEE OUT OF THE SHIP

“And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under color as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship . . .”

It was night, and the storm was still raging. Preparation had been made to keep the ship stable until the day dawned. Yet, the “shipmen,” or “sailors,” NKJV were not at all content with the situation. Ignoring the rest of the souls on the ship, they sought to get off of it immediately. In order to do this, they deliberately misrepresented themselves. Moving as though they were going to throw some anchors out of the front part of the ship, they fully intended to lower the boat into the sea that had previously been hoisted on board (Acts 27:16).

They started letting the boat down into the sea “under colors, as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship.” Other versions read, “under pretense of putting out anchors from the prow,” NKJV “pretending they were going to lower some anchors from the bow,” NIV “under color as though they would lay out anchors from the foreship,” ASV and “as if they were about to put down hooks from the front of the ship,” BBE

Scripture twice translates the word “cloak,” as though a royal garment had covered up an abominable deed. The Revelation depicts the false church as a harlot woman who clothed herself in royal apparel of “scarlet color.”

+ The words “under color” are a translation of the Greek word profa,sei , which means, “a pretext (alleged reason, pretended cause),” THAYER and “ generally, of what is made to appear to others to hide the true state of things, opposite avlh,qeia (truth); (1) as what is said pretext, excuse; (2) as what is done pretense, cover-up.” FRIBERG

This Greek word is used eight times in Scripture.

• TRANSLATED “PRETENSE.” “Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretense make long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation” (Matt 23:14; Mk 12:40; Lk 20:47)

“What then? notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretense , or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice” (Phil 1:18).

• TRANSLATED “CLOAK.” “If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloak for their sin” (John 15:22).

“For neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetousness; God is witness” (1 Thess 2:5).

• TRANSLATED “UNDER COLOR.” “And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under color as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship” (Acts 27:30).

• TRANSLATED “COLOR.” “And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication” (Rev 17:4).

Actually, the words “under colors” are a good translation. People still speak of something that has been deliberately misrepresented as something that is “tainted,” or “colored.” Scripture twice translates the word “cloak,” as though a royal garment had covered up an abominable deed. The Revelation depicts the false church as a harlot woman who clothed herself in royal apparel of “scarlet color.”

Thus these “shipmen” went about to flee from the ship, going through whatever motions were required to lower anchors into the sea.

EXCEPT THESE ABODE ON THE SHIP

“Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.”

The church is like a vessel sailing on a stormy ocean. It has already passed through many a storm, and yet it is afloat. Some, seeing the damage that has been rendered to the vessel, imagine that they ought to leave it, and strike out on their own.

Paul is alert to the attempt of the shipmen to escape from the ship. He quickly speaks, not because he has such a high regard for shipmen, but for the honor and glory of God. He knows the angel of God has announced that no one on board the ship would lose their lives. He also knows the angel had delivered them into his hands. He therefore announces that they “cannot be saved” except they “abide in the ship.” There will be no salvation outside of the ship, whether the people are seasoned shipmen or not.

Their lives will only be saved if they remain with the one who has been charged with their care – given that commission from heaven.

Paul does not shout this to the shipmen, but to the centurion and soldiers, who are the government officials charged with the care of the prisoners. So far as appearance was concerned, Julius and his soldiers were managing the boat. Already, Julius has no doubt seen how wrong he was to consent to the advice of the pilot and the owner of the ship. He order the boat to sail, and now he has seen the error of his way. This time, he will choose to honor the words of Paul. The Lord turned his heart.

THE SOLDIERS CUT THE ROPES

“Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.”

The boat was in the process of being lowered into the water, and, as yet, no one was in it. Julius does not shout out to the sailors, but simply orders the ropes that were holding the boat to be “cut off.” Thus, it fell into the raging sea where it could by no means be retrieved, thereby terminating any imagined usefulness.

A SPIRITUAL PARALLEL

Although the parallel is not exact in every detail, there is in it a most vivid depiction of some essentials. I gather that this is not something that is mere happenstance.

The church is like a vessel sailing on a stormy ocean. It has already passed through many a storm, and yet it is afloat. Some, seeing the damage that has been rendered to the vessel, imagine that they ought to leave it, and strike out on their own. But the call of the Spirit goes out much like the words of Paul, “Except ye abide . . . ye cannot be saved” (John 15:4). Of course, this vessel will not be dashed upon the rocks, but will arrive safely on the shores of glory, so to speak.

Even in a more exact way, some poor souls have become so fatigued, they imagine they would be better off if they just took their lives, and launched out into eternity. But such people are like the sailors, lowering a boat and imagining they can get to shore safely in some other way. Except we remain in this temporal body, considering it to be a member of Christ (1 Cor 6:15), one cannot be saved. Our times are in the Lord’s hands, not on our own, and we cannot plan, so to speak, the time when we will leave the body. We can experience the salvation of God in this frail body, fighting the good fight of faith, and enduring all manner of storms and afflictions.

Ride out the storm, brethren. Ride it out! Stay aboard during the night, and until the time for our appointed disembarkment comes to pass.

Don’t quit! There may be things to throw overboard that will lighten your load. Some of the tackling that is ordinarily used for repairs and navigation may have to be cast into the sea as well. Sometimes the sails have to be lowered, and other times they must be hoisted – and it is imperative that proper times be known. However, unless we stay on the ship, we cannot be saved. It is imperative to stay where God has put you.

WHILE THE DAY WAS COMING ON

“ 33 And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing. 34 Wherefore I pray you to take some meat: for this is for your health: for there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you. 35 And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat. 36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat. 37 And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen souls. 38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea.”

Since those on board the ship had been given into the hands of Paul, he immediately sought their welfare. His first word dealt with the necessity for them to be strong, and not remain weakened by a fast of about two weeks. Strength would be needed to prepare to go to land, and to safely make it there as well.

WHILE THE DAY WAS COMING ON

“And while the day was coming on . . .” Other versions read, “as day was about to dawn,” NKJV “just before dawn,” NIV “just before daybreak,” NRSV “and when the dawn was near,” BBE “betwixt that and day,” TNT “till the day was about to be,” YLT and “While they waited until it should become day.” AMPLIFIED

The idea here is that as night passed away and the day was beginning to dawn, Paul kept exhorting the people. He was preparing them for the day, when they would make their way to the land.

This implies that the overcast sky had ended. Prior to this, for many days, neither the sun nor the stars had appeared (Acts 27:20). Now that they are about to be delivered, God will give some light so they will not have to suffer the terrors of darkness any longer. There is something about the dawning of the day that awakens hope.

PAUL BESOUGHT THEM

“ . . . Paul besought them all to take meat, saying . . . ” Other versions read, “Paul implored them,” NKJV “Paul was encouraging them,” NASB “Paul urged them,” NIV “Paul gave them all orders,” BBE “Paul exhorted them,” DARBY “Paul advised them,” MRD “Paul kept urging all,” NAB “Paul was calling upon all,” YLT and “Paul entreated them.” AMPLIFIED

Those who have been thrown to the ground by hopelessness require much exhortation and pleading to make adequate preparations. There are also times when urging is necessary. When Jacob met Esau, he sought to give him a gift. Esau responded, “I have enough, my brother, keep that thou hast to thyself.” Jacob, however, was not content to let the matter pass. God had dealt graciously with him, and thus he responded to Esau, “Nay, I pray thee, if now I have found grace in thy sight, then receive my present at my hand: for therefore I have seen thy face, as though I had seen the face of God, and thou wast pleased with me. Take, I pray thee, my blessing that is brought to thee; because God hath dealt graciously with me, and because I have enough.” It is then written, “ And he urged him, and he took it ” (Gen 33:9-11).

That is the kind of urging Paul was doing. It was fervent, and it was continual.

THIS IS THE FOURTEENTH DAY

“This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing. Wherefore I pray you to take some meat: for this is for your health: for there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you . . . ”

Solemnly, yet sounding the note of hope, Paul reasoned with them. For fourteen days they had “continued without food, and eaten nothing.” NKJV He therefore reasoned with them, “. . . take some food. You need it to survive. Not one of you will lose a single hair from his head.” NIV They are not to eat in hopes that somehow they will survive, but with the assurance that they WILL survive, without so much as a hair perishing from any of their heads.

Paul knew that although their deliverance was guaranteed by the Almighty, yet it would require considerable effort on their part. However, that effort would not be in vain.

HE TOOK BREAD

“ . . . And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat . . . ”

My point here is that they all heard Paul. They all saw him take bread. They all heard him thank God. They all saw him eat the bread. That means their attention was riveted upon Paul – something that is exceedingly rare, for example, in a church gathering of that size.

Paul himself would be the example of what they should do. He would not conduct himself in private, but in the presence of them all. Therefore, “he took some bread, thanked God in front of everyone, broke it, and began to eat.” GWN He was not ashamed to own the true God as his God, doing so in their very presence. There were Roman military men there, prisoners, sailors, the pilot of the ship, and the owner of the ship. It is doubtless true that many, if not all of them, worshiped other gods. But Paul stands before them all and thanks the God who had sent the comforting angel to him. In so doing, he was confessing the Lord before men (Matt 10:32).

THEY ALL WERE OF GOOD CHEER

“ . . . Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat . . . ” Other versions read, “they were all encouraged, and also took food themselves” NKJV “they all took heart and did the same” BBE and “They all plucked up courage and took something to eat themselves.” NJB

For several days the people, particularly the sailors, had displayed great courage. They adjusted and lowered sails, climbing the masts in a treacherous storm. They had thrown cargo overboard, and even the tackling of the ship, which itself must have been no small task. Now, however, it was as though their courage had fallen to the ground, and they were no longer able to maintain it. But at Paul's word, they reached down and picked it up again, as hope began to pulse within them.

And how did all of this take place? What was the means through which courage and hope were renewed? All of this was because of a word! There had been no visible miraculous intervention. The storm had not ceased. The waves have not stopped crashing against the hull of the ship. The anchors were not withdrawn. The burst of morning light had not yet taken place. Yet hope had been renewed by a word – a word from a man of God who lived out a peaceful spirit before them all

Never doubt the power of insightful words! They have restored joy and anticipation to many a weary soul!

NO SMALL NUMBER OF PEOPLE

“And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen souls . . .” Other versions read, “And in all we were two hundred and seventy-six persons on the ship.” NKJV

If each person only took up three square feet, the floor space required to contain them would be 828 square feet – a space about forty feet long and twenty-one feet wide. My point here is that they all heard Paul. They all saw him take bread. They all heard him thank God. They all saw him eat the bread. That means their attention was riveted upon Paul – something that is exceedingly rare, for example, in a church gathering of that size. You might say the people on board that ship, at least in this moment of time, were of one mind.

THEY LIGHTENED THE SHIP

“ . . . And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea.” Other versions read, “eaten as much as they wanted,” NIV “satisfied their hunger,” NRSV “having eaten sufficient nourishment,” YLT and “had eaten sufficiently.” AMPLIFIED

The people all ate until they had “enough” – enough to strengthen them, and ready them for rigorous activity. None was lacking in nourishment. Then, they threw the wheat into the sea – but only after they had eaten. It is assumed that this wheat comprised some of the food they ate. After eating, there was no further need for this cargo.

THE SPIRITUAL PARALLEL

The spiritual parallels in this passage are powerful and numerous for those who can perceive them.

There Is A Time to Be Encouraged

This is no time for the saints to be pining away, without hope, and in a spirit of slumber. Men must arise who can insightfully and powerfully declare, “ now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light” (Rom 13:11-12).

Just as surely as day was coming on in our text, so the bursting forth of the day of the Lord is fast approaching. This is not the time to lose hope.

Progress Must Be Made in the Light

The sailors knew that any progress toward land must be made in the light, when the goal was, to some measurable degree, seen. So it is with spiritual life. Advancement in the Lord not be made in the darkness. Some imagine that faith navigates in the dark, but this is not a proper perception. Faith itself sheds light around those who possess it. This is because faith is in God, and God directs by means of light.

As much as possible, those in Christ need to get guessing, surmising, and conjecture out of their lives. Where this is not totally possible, extreme caution must be exercised, and haste must be avoided – all the while calling upon the name of the Lord.

Much of the crisis found in the lives of professing believers is directly related to a decision to proceed in life like a sailor navigating in the dark. Such an approach to life will result in them ending up in strange places, and far off course from the appointed destination.

Incentives for Encouragement

It is not enough simply to tell people they ought to be optimistic. There is a reason for staying on board the ship to glory, and doing so with expectation. Jesus has also promised His followers, just as Paul did those on board the ship, “But there shall not an hair of your head perish” (Luke 21:18). Everyone who is in the hand of Christ will make it safely home, and nothing will be able to pluck them out of His hand – whether person or storm.

Everyone Must Be Fed

It is a principle in the Kingdom of God that enough is provided for every person to ingest what they need. The gathering of the manna is specified as “according to each one’s need” NKJV (Ex 16:18). The capacities of all the people were not the same, but everyone’s need was met. When Jesus twice fed the multitudes, “they did all eat, and were filled” (Matt 14:20; 15:37).

The Lord always spreads a table with sufficient nourishment for all who are sitting there. Whether man or woman, young or aged, everyone eats from the same source, fully meeting what is required to sustain them. This is why shallow and childish preaching and teaching is so wrong. It disgraces the Lord when enough spiritual bread is not put forth so the youthful and mature can be filled; so the novice and those of full age can be nourished and grow. For a church to tailor its gatherings for the uninformed is a grievous sin, and it ought not be tolerated. As demonstrated in the giving of manna and the feeding of the five thousand and four thousand, the children ate the same bread the adults ate – only in smaller measure. Or, to put it another way, the mature ate the same bread as the immature, only in larger measure.

When Jesus told Nicodemus of the new birth, He said He was speaking of “earthly things” (John 3:12). Yet, his words provide food for thought among the most advanced disciples. When Paul taught the Corinthians, He said, “I have fed you with milk” (1 Cor 3:2), and yet his words continue to challenge the most mature.

I realize this parallel is not exact in every detail. There are some things that spiritual juvenileness withholds from the people, as described in Paul’s letter to the Corinthians (1 Cor 1-2), and his letter to the Hebrews (Heb 5:11-12). However, as confirmed in those two letters, this does NOT justify failing to declare the profound realities of the Kingdom of God.

THEY DISCOVERED A CERTAIN CREEK WITH A SHORE

“39 And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship. 40 And when they had taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder bands, and hoisted up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore.”

Paul had told those on the ship that none of them would die as a result of this ordeal (Acts 27:22). He told them they would be “cast upon a certain island” (Acts 27:26), and expressed their safety in these words: “there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you” (Acts 27:34). Now we will see how all of this plays out – what is involved in a body of people being delivered safely from a raging sea-storm.

WHEN IT WAS DAY, THEY KNEW NOT

“And when it was day, they knew not the land . . .” Other versions read, “they did not recognize the land,” NKJV “they could not recognize the land,” NASB “they had no knowledge of the land,” BBE “they knew not the country,” GENEVA “the sailors knew not what land it was,” MRD “they didn't recognize the coastline,” LIVING and “they did not know where we were.” IE

Apparently the sailors and ship pilot had never been this way before. They did not recognize the island, which indicates they had never before docked there. Any knowledge they will have about this island must be appropriated now. They will have to be alert, assuming this is the island God has appointed as their landing place. That is something that will be confirmed when and if they safely reach the land.

THEY DISCOVERED A CERTAIN CREEK

“ . . . but they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship . . .” Other versions read, “they observed a bay with a beach,” NKJV “a bay with a sandy beach,” NIV “they saw an inlet of the sea with a floor of sand,” BBE “but they perceived a certain bay having a strand,” DARBY “a certain creek with a bank,” GENEVA “they saw on the margin of the land an inlet of the sea,” MRD and “they spied a certain haven with a bank.” PNT

The island of Melita is today called Malata. There is a section of the island that is called “Saint Paul’s Bay.” It is the inlet described in our text as “a certain creek,” or sea inlet to the island. The island is purported, as a whole, to have been very rocky. McCLINTOK & STRONG’S However, there was a little finger of land jutting out into the “creek” that apparently had a sandy beach, and a soft floor that would be more conducive to landing a vessel – particularly in a fierce storm.

Keep in mind that these observations have been made during a life-threatening storm at sea. Yet these men had the presence of mind to assess their situation and make, what they deemed to be, appropriate plans.

THEY TOOK UP THE ANCHORS, LOOSED THE RUDDER BANDS AND HOISTED UP THE MAINSAIL

“And when they had taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder bands, and hoisted up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore.”

They Had Taken Up the Anchors

Other versions read, “let go the anchors,” NKJV “casting off their anchors,” NASB “cutting loose the anchors,” NIV “cutting away the hooks,” BBE “taken up the anchors,” GENEVA/PNT/RWB/TNT/YLT “slipped the anchors,” NJB and “they cut the cables and severed the anchors.” AMPLIFIED

The words “taken up” are translated from a words that means, “to take away, to take up,” STRONG’S “to take away altogether and entirely,” THAYER “as a nautical technical term, of an anchor lift, raise; cut off, cast off,” FRIBERG and “take away, remove; cut away (of anchors).” UBS

It is not clear whether the text means they took the anchors away from the sea floor, or cut them off from the boat. Considering that they knew the ship would be lost, and they would have no further need for them, they probably removed them from the ship.

They Committed Themselves to the Sea

Other versions read, “and left them in the sea,” NKJV “letting them go into the sea,” BBE “they committed themselves to the sea, DARBY/PNT/RWB/TNT/WEB “they committed the ship unto the sea,” GENEVA “let them fall into the sea,” NJB and “they were committing it to the sea.” YLT

It seems to me that the idea here is that they committed themselves to the sea, to manage the ship rather than secure it with anchors. In other words, they were doing what was necessary to commence navigating intelligently to the shore.

They Loosed the Rudder Bands

Other versions read, “loosing the rudder ropes,” NKJV “untied the ropes that held the rudders,” NIV and “freeing the cords of the guiding blades.” BBE

In ancient ships, the “rudders” were large oars used to steer the ship. When these oars not in use, they were hoisted out of the water and secured. This verse speaks of untying these oars so they could be lowered into the water and used expeditiously to guide the ship.

They Hoisted Up the Mainsail

Therefore, they had not cut down the mast as some commentators have suggested. They do not hoist the sail for lengthy voyage on the raging sea, but to enable them to navigate into the narrow strait, referred as a “creek” in verse thirty-nine.

They Made Toward Shore

Other versions read, “headed for the beach,” NASB “made for the beach,” NIV “went in the direction of the inlet,” BBE “made for the strand,” DARBY “drew to the shore,” GENEVA “made way towards the land,” MRD and “steered toward the beach.” NET

When they sailed from Sidon to Myra, the winds were “contrary” to them – a trip of over 250 miles. From Myra to Cnidus, progress was unusually slow – for about 125 miles. From Cnidus, sailing under the protection of Crete, they had barely made it to Fair Havens – a trip of about 150 miles. They had set out on this leg of the journey from Fair Havens to Phenice – a trip of 50-60 miles. Encountering Euroclydon they had been blown off course around 500 miles away. Thus they had already sailed over 1,000 miles. Now they are attempting to simply make it to some land that they can see – perhaps measured in terms of yards rather than miles. Further, it will take all of the expertise and all of the helps they have to make it this short distance.

All of the hardship and loss that have been experienced since they left Fair Havens (above two weeks ago), has been owing to them ignoring the counsel of Paul.

- They had to work hard to make any progress at all.
- They were about 500 miles off course.
- They went without eating for two weeks.
- They got into a situation where they were at the mercy of the sea.
- They were in a situation where all of the expertise on the seas was of little value.
- They had to throw much of the cargo overboard.

- They had to throw the tackling out of the ship.
- Although the sailors were seasoned veterans of the sea, yet they, along with the others, were reduced to a state of hopelessness.
- They arrived at a point where the mere sight of land was a refreshing sight.

It is no wonder that before relating the word delivered to him by an angel, Paul said, “Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss” (Acts 27:21). Not to be forgotten is this: they could battle the sea for two weeks without eating, but they had to eat their fill in order to make it to the shore that was within sight.

THE SPIRITUAL PARALLEL

In fierce trials, it will require all of our resources to make it a small amount of progress. This is particularly true of trials that have resulted from not following the will of the Lord. In the case of required chastening, it is only “afterward” that spiritual growth is realized. As it is written, “If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. Furthermore we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but He for our profit, that we might be partakers of His holiness . Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby” (Heb 12:9-11).

Personal holiness is not some-thing that is easily obtained. That is precisely why chastening is associated with its attainment. It is true, “if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged” (1 Cor 11:31). Yet, I have never known a believer who has managed to totally escape the chastening of the Lord. This is a testimony to the pervasive nature of sin, the total lack of goodness in the flesh, and the subtlety of the wicked one.

The necessity for chastening is reduced (although it cannot be totally eliminated), when the individual is living “unto the Lord” – the norm for those who are in Christ Jesus (2 Cor 5:15). However, as soon as self-will enters into the picture, and there is a deference to the flesh, life becomes more complicated.

In all of this there is a knottiness that must not be overlooked. When a person is lured into a manner of life that places self-interests at the top, a kind of paralysis takes place in the soul. Sound thought becomes very difficult at the inception of such a manner of life, and proceeds to a state of impossibility. So far as one’s identity with God is concerned, sleep settles on the soul, hearing becomes dull, and eyes are closed. This is why it is so difficult to deal with those whose minds are nailed like Sisera’s head to the earth, and are caught up in minding earthly things.

When one’s chief concerns relate to life in the flesh and the here and now, storm clouds begin loom on the horizon of life. What honest and good heart has not found it to be so?

A PLACE WHERE TWO SEAS MET

“ 41 And falling into a place where two seas met, they ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.”

Here is a technical explanation that accounts for why the ship ran aground and was eventually broken. The high explanation is found in the working of the Lord. Here we read of the means He employed to bring the ship within reach of land.

WHERE TWO SEAS MET

“And falling into a place where two seas met . . .” Other versions read, “coming to a point between two seas,” BBE “where two currents meet,” CJB “between two channels of the sea,” MRD “a patch of crosscurrents,” NET “the cross currents,” NJB “a place which had the sea on both sides,” PNT and “striking a crosscurrent (a place open to two seas).” AMPLIFIED

A number of versions omit this reference to “where two seas met.”

Because of the nature of this text, it seems to me that it is best to retain the text as represented in the Authorized Version. Being in the vicinity where two seas (the Adriatic and the Mediterranean) met, was the circumstance that caused the events that follow.

The graphic on this page shows some photographs of oceanic places where two seas meet. As may be noted, it is place of much agitation under ordinary circumstances. The fierceness of the storm in which this ship was found greatly compounded the problem.

A place where two seas meet is one in which contradicting flows of water meet. Such a condition does not exist throughout the sea, but is only found in certain locations. I am not acquainted with the accepted rules of oceanic sailing, but it seems to me that such places would be voided because of the turbulence associated with them.

In this text, the ship was driven by a raging storm into this uncomfortable place. This was the result of not following the counsel of Paul.

THEY RAN THE SHIP AGROUND AND IT REMAINED UNMOVEABLE

“ . . . they ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable . . .” Other versions read, “the prow stuck fast and remained unmoveable,” NKJV “the bow stuck fast and would not move,” NIV “the foreship struck and remained unmoveable,” ASV “The bow jammed fast and remained immovable,” CSB and “and the forepart stuck fast, and could not be moved.” GENEVA

Having hoisted the sail, and put the rudders into the water, the ship had properly advanced into the small “creek” or bay they had targeted. The vessel entered the area as was intended. Now, however, the front part of the ship run aground, probably into a sand bar of some sort. It must have been traveling at a fair rate of speed, being driven by the storm. As a consequence, the bow of the ship was mired in the sand, and could not be moved away from it.

Whereas they had been tossed on the open sea by the stormy waves, now they were grounded by the same storm. With the ship unable to be moved, it would eventually be dashed to pieces by the very waves that were once carrying it.

THE HINDER PART WAS BROKEN

“ . . . but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.” Other versions read, “the stern was being broken up by the violence of the waves,” NKJV “the stern began to be broken up by the force of the waves,” NASB “the stern was broken to pieces by the pounding of the surf,” NIV and “the stern began to break up under the violent force of the waves.” AMPLIFIED

When you consider the size of this vessel, with much cargo, and two hundred and seventy six persons on board, you get an idea of the fierceness of this storm. Remember, it had been blowing across the sea for about five hundred miles, and apparently had still retained its strength, maybe even increasing in magnitude.

At this point, no one is saved yet. No one has left the ship, even though the shore was within view. Paul had said no one could be saved unless they remained on the ship, and thus they were remaining.

Very soon, however, the time for disembarking will come. Those on board must patiently wait for the appointed time.

PARALLELS TO SPIRITUAL LIFE

The parallels to spiritual life are remarkable. Have gone through hard trials know how they tend to increase and drain the strength of those who experience them. Paul spoke of a hurricane-like trial in which he and others with him “were pressed beyond measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life” (2 Cor 1:8). This is a depiction of trials that increase in magnitude. Paul also shares the purpose of such trials, referring to that particular trial as having the sentence of death in themselves, “that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead” (2 Cor 1:9).

There are some trials from which you cannot escape – like a boat that is stuck fast and cannot be removed.

There are some trials from which you cannot escape – like a boat that is stuck fast and cannot be removed.

But there is another kind of trial that is the result of being where two conflicting moral influences crash against each other, creating spiritual turbulence.

Some of these occasions cannot easily be avoided. You may confront moneychangers and merchandisers in the Temple of God, or Judas in the Garden of Gethsemane. However, there are other times when men walk too close to the world, and put themselves in a close proximity to unwholesome influences. This is generally the result of failing to heed words of exhortation or admonition. Men are thus brought into an area where two varying seas of spiritual and carnal thought clash, creating spiritual havoc and danger.

For example, one may choose to ignore the solemn warning, “Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners” (1 Cor 15:33), by choosing to gather with religious people they know are not of one mind in the Lord. Even though the Lord says “Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers” (2 Cor 6:14), they forge an alliance with them anyway – all in the hopes of influencing them for the good. Now, when they are in the presence of such people, and throw out some precious pearl of truth, there is a thunderous clash of right and wrong, like a storm on the sea of life. Suddenly the vessel of life is carried far away from shore, and precious things like peace and assurance are threatened. It is important to have an understanding what to do at that time.

Let it be clear, that a walk in the Spirit has directly to do with the companions we choose, and the amount of time we invest in the lives of others. It may require that a bold proclaimer of the Word call out to the opponents of the faith, and thus lose his life rather than remaining tolerant of them in hopes of preserving it (Acts 7:51-53). It will determine whether Paul and Silas stay in Antioch, urging recalcitrant Jews, or whether they move on to a more tranquil setting (Acts 13:46). It will determine whether Paul stays in a synagogue in Ephesus among volatile Jews, or takes the disciples and moves to the school of Tyrannus (Acts 19:9).

True peacemakers do not choose to sail where two seas meet! They do not prefer to strive (2 Tim 2:21), or to remain in unnecessary contact with those who “resist the truth” (2 Tim 3:6). They know very well that such environments are fraught with danger – like a body of water where two seas meet.

This is not an area of life where men are to make rules, imposing a manner of life that is really not discerned by the people. However, it is the responsibility every believer to maintain a sensitive heart – one that can pick up on valid warnings and admonitions.

Believers are admonished, “And I beseech you, brethren, suffer the word of exhortation” (Heb 13:22). And again, “Despise not prophesyings” (1 Thess 5:20). Discerning people see the sense of such words, and give due heed to them. Others pass on and find themselves in great trouble.

MAN’S PLAN IS THWARTED, WHILE GOD’S PURPOSE MARCHES ON

“ 42 And the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out, and escape. 43 But the centurion, willing to save Paul, kept them from their purpose; and commanded that they which could swim should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land: 44 And the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And so it came to pass, that they escaped all safe to land.”

The hand of the Lord will be at work in this whole event – and it will be primarily in the interest of Paul, whom He is sending to Rome.

THE SOLDIERS’ COUNSEL

“And the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out, and escape . . .” Other versions read, “the soldiers planned to kill the prisoners,” NIV “the soldiers were disposed to slay the prisoners,” MRD “The soldiers advised their commanding officer to let them kill the prisoners,” LIVING “The soldiers decided to kill the prisoners,” IE and “the soldiers recommended that the prisoners should be killed.” WEYMOUTH

To the soldiers, this seemed like the best thing to do. Under th circumstances, each person would obviously be intent on saving himself. Why take the chance of the prisoners, for whom they were responsible, getting to land first, and somehow escaping. It would certainly not go well with them when they reported such a thing.

And what was there that could stop their plan. It was a good plan militarily, and was thought up in consideration of the responsibilities that belonged to them. However, there was a special prisoner on board, and God had placed him in charge this landing. Now, let us see how God will protect His servant.

“BUT”

“But . . .” One version reads, “However.” GWN All of the other versions I possess read “but.”

Translated from a Greek word , “but” is defined as follows: “universally, by way of opposition and distinction; it is added to statements opposed to a preceding statement.” THAYER It introduces a condition that differs from the preceding statement. In this case, it is a condition that overrode the counsel of the soldiers.

So far as Scripture is concerned, this is a general a word that introduces Divine control and providence. In the New Covenant writings, it reveals the offsetting influence of the will of God, which is the controlling factor. Here are some examples of its use.

• IN THE CASE OF JOSEPH. “And the patriarchs, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt: but God was with him” (Acts 7:9).

• IN THE CHANGING OF PETER’S MIND. “And he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean” (Acts 10:28).

• IN THE JEWS KILLING OF JESUS. “ But God raised him from the dead” (Acts 13:30).

• IN THE UNIVERSAL SINFULNESS OF MEN. “ But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us” (Rom 5:8).

• IN THE CHANGE OF THE SAVED. “ But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you” (Rom 6:17).

• IN THE COMPETING WISDOM OF THIS WORLD. “ But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty” (1 Cor 1:27).

• IN REGARD TO THE HIDDEN PURPOSE OF GOD. “ But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God” (1 Cor 2:10).

• IN THE MATTER OF TEMPTATION. “There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it” (1 Cor 10:13).

• REGARDING OUR DEATH IN TRESPASSES AND SINS. “ But God , who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved)” (Eph 2:4-5).

Jesus had determined that Paul would bear witness of Him in Rome, and noone would thwart that determination – not even soldiers who thought they knew what course of action was the best.

Suffice it to say, the person who knows of the greatness of God, the invincibility of His purpose, and His power to change circumstance sees life from a different perspective. One thrown into a lion’s den will see that all is not loss. If three faithful servants of God are threatened with being thrown into a fiery furnace, they will think differently of the matter. If Peter is cast into prison, he will sleep soundly. If Paul and Silas are beaten and thrown into prison, they will sing loudly.

With all of the professed experts in human behavior in the religious arena, the greatness of our God has been minimized, and the emphasis placed upon human wisdom. However, it had not altered the moral landscape. In fact, it appears as though things have actually gotten worse under these merchants of worldly wisdom.

Our text is not one of doctrine, but of how the will of God was worked out among men – even hostile men. It confirms what the doctrine teaches: “If God be for us, who can be against us” (Rom 8:31). And again, “The Lord is my Helper. I will not fear what man shall do unto me” (Heb 13:6).

This does not mean that nothing harmful will ever happen to the saints. Joseph was imprisoned, and his feet placed in fetters. Peter and John were beaten and imprisoned. Paul and Silas were in prison. The saints were persecuted and scattered abroad out of Jerusalem. We should not be naive about such matters.

However, when it comes to the fulfillment of God’s purpose, it will be done, whether men oppose it or not. Those who are faithfully laboring in the Kingdom will not be overcome and their labors aborted by the devil. If an apostle is in a powerful and unrelenting storm, he will still make it to the destination His Lord has determined!

Of course, all of this means nothing if people live unto themselves, establish their own agenda, and neglect their souls in the process.

THE CENTURION WAS WILLING TO SAVE PAUL

“ . . . the centurion, willing to save Paul, kept them from their purpose . . .” Other versions read, “wanting to save Paul,” NKJV “wanting to bring Paul safely through,” NASB “wanted to spare Paul’s life,” NIV “desiring to keep Paul safe,” BBE and “was determined to bring Paul safely through” NJB

How do you account for the willingness of Julius to save the life of Paul? And why did he not think of all of the other prisoners? It was because God gave Paul favor with men, as with He did with Joseph (Gen 39:6; 41:43-44; Acts 7:10), Daniel (Dan 1:9; 2:48; 6:1), and others.

Julius was inclined to protect Paul. Perhaps the great apostle had witnessed to him, or even was used of God to bring faith to him. We do not know the details – but we do know the reason for this inclination. Jesus had determined that Paul would bear witness of Him in Rome, and no one would thwart that determination – not even soldiers who thought they knew what course of action was the best.

However, Paul was not the only one exempted from the purpose of the soldiers. The plan was to kill them all, Paul included. However, because of Paul – or for his sake – all of them were spared.

Of course, this is a Divine manner – to spare certain people because of His inclination to others. Those who present God as loving everyone “so much,” and therefore seeks their earthly good, overlook this key factor. Often unworthy souls are saved and blessed because of someone else.

Abraham

Take, for example, the blessings that were dispensed for Abraham’s sake (Gen 19:29; 26:24). God told Isaac He would multiply his seed “for My servant Abraham’s sake” (Gen 26:24). When God sent Lot out of Sodom prior to its destruction, we are told it was because He “remembered Abraham” (Gen 19:29). Moses told Israel God would drive the heathen out of Canaan, “Not for thy righteousness, or for the uprightness of thine heart, dost thou go to possess their land: but for the wickedness of these nations the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee, and that He may perform the word which the LORD sware unto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob ” (Deut 9:5).

Joseph

Then, there was the matter of Potiphar. Joseph became his slave, and was eventually set over all of his house, because Potiphar saw that everything Joseph did prospered. However, the Spirit provided an explanation for that circumstance. “And it came to pass from the time that he had made him overseer in his house, and over all that he had, that the LORD blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake ; and the blessing of the LORD was upon all that he had in the house, and in the field” (Gen 39:5).

Jonathan

The souls of David and Jonathan were knit together (1 Sam 18:1). Following the death of Saul and Jonathan, David determined to bless whoever he could find of the house of Saul. In describing his intention he said, “Is there yet any that is left of the house of Saul, that I may show him kindness for Jonathan's sake ?” (2 Sam 9:1). When he found the lame son of Jonathan Mephibosheth in Lodebar, he detected the boy was afraid. He said to him, “ Fear not: for I will surely show thee kindness for Jonathan thy father's sake , and will restore thee all the land of Saul thy father; and thou shalt eat bread at my table continually” (2 Sam 9:7).

David

The number of people who were blessed for the sake of David, the man after God’s own heart, was significant. They included Solomon, the tribe of Judah, the kingly part of David’s family, Jerusalem, and kings (1 Kgs 11:12,32,34; 15:4; 2 Kgs 8:19; 2 Kgs 19:34; Psa 132:10; Isa 37:35).

The Ultimate Example

The ultimate example of people being blessed because of someone else is the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. Those who are blessed with salvation must realize that it has been for Jesus sake. Were it not for Him, there would be no “eternal salvation” (Heb 5:9).

- God, we are told, has forgiven us “for Christ’s sake” (Eph 4:32).
- John reminded us, “your sins are forgiven you, for His name’s sake” (1 John 2:12).
- That is why redemption is said to be “in Christ Jesus” (Rom 3:24).
- It is why the love of God is declared to be “in Christ Jesus our Lord” (Rom 8:39).
- This is the reason God put us into Christ Jesus (1 Cor 1:30).
- It accounts for why God establishes us (2 Cor 1:21).
- It is why we are caused to triumph (2 Cor 2:14).
- Jesus is the explanation for our calling (1 Pet 5:10).
- Christ Jesus is why, and the appointed means through which, we believe in God (1 Pet 1:21).

The modern church has not made much of the essentiality of Christ, who Himself is:

- The First and the Last (Rev 1:1,17; 2:8; 22:13).
- The Beginning and the Ending (Rev 1:8).
- The Beginning and the End (Rev 21:6; 22:13).
- The Alpha and the Omega (Rev 1:8,11; 21:6; 22:13).
- The Author of eternal salvation (Heb 5:9).
- The Author and the Finisher of our faith (Heb 12:2).
- The One who made all things, and for whom they were made (Col 1:16).
- He upholds all things by the Word of His power (Heb 1:3).
- In Him all consist, or are held together (Col 1:17).
- The fulness of the Godhead dwells in Him (Col 1:19; 2:9).

How is it that the Son of God ranks so low in modern preaching and teaching? Why have ministries to temporal needs upstaged the proclamation and exposition of His great salvation? Why is so very little known of Him, what He has done, what He is doing, and what He will do?

These grievous conditions are the direct result of the failure to comprehend the absolute centrality of Jesus Christ. Further, this is owing to the general failure of those who have been charged with feeding the flock of God. In other words, we have a situation in which God is under no obligation to bless, lead, guard, and direct many professing Christians. The appointed means of blessing remains Jesus Himself, and where there is an ignorance of Him, the salvation of God becomes virtually impossible.

SWIMMERS IN FIRST

“ . . . and commanded that they which could swim should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land . . .” Other versions read, “He ordered those who could swim to jump overboard first and get to land,” NIV and “gave orders that those who had knowledge of swimming were to go off the ship and get first to land.” BBE

Remember, this was a swim in a fierce storm, with waves so strong they broke off the hinder part of the ship (Acts 27:41). It would require considerable effort to make it to the shore by swimming. Nevertheless, it was a wise word given by Julius. Perhaps he recalled that Paul had declared no life would be lost. Notwithstanding, it would take a lot of effort to work out their salvation, so to speak, with fear and trembling. By swimming to shore, these more able sailors would be able to assist those who arrived their with various helps. They could also prepare the land, for nearly three hundred people would be coming ashore.

Spiritual Parallel

Those who can do more are expected to do so. This applies to matters of the Kingdom as well as those related to this world. Oftentimes, because of the suffocating effects of sectarianism, those with superior spiritual aptitudes are not required to do much at all . There are churches in this very area that have capable people sitting idly in the pews, doing little or nothing, although they are quite capable of doing a lot.

Jesus taught us, “For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more” (Luke 12:48). Yet I have often seen capable spiritual leaders asked to refrain from contributing their thoughts, seeing it was disruptive to the church environment. I myself have frequented numerous assemblies where it was apparent very little was known of the manner of the Kingdom. Yet, if I did desire to say anything, I almost had to force myself into the discussion. That must never be said of a godly assembly.

Also, those who have received much should not require the attention and assistance reserved for those who have received little. They should not be coddled, or served up infant-food. They should be required to swim, so to speak, and get to the truth so they can assist others in appropriating it. But, alas, this is not the manner of Babylon the Great!

AND THE REST

“And the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship . . .” Other versions read, “some on planks, and others on various things from the ship,” NASB “planks or on pieces of the ship,” NIV “planks or whatever they could find from the ship,” CJB “some on planks, others on debris from the ship,” NAB “either on planks or on pieces of wreckage,” NJB and “heavy boards or pieces of the vessel.” AMPLIFIED

For those who could not swim, the breaking up of the ship was an advantage, providing them pieces of wood that could float, and on which they could make it safely to shore. For them. A way of escape was provided from the breaking of the vessel on which they had been sailing.

It is likely that many of the materials used to convey the non-swimmers to shore, were already in the sea. They probably could be accessed with considerable effort, whether from the brink of the ship or while they were in the water. It is also possible that those who swam to shore first provided some floating materials for those who could not swim. The point to be seen is that it took a lot of effort for the deliverance to be accomplished. The fact that none of the passengers would be lost was something appointed by God. However, for it to be fulfilled, a lot was required of those who were delivered.

Spiritual Parallel

Just as surely as there was a means for escaping that sinking ship, so there is an appointed means for escaping the sinking ship of spiritual Babylon – or any other moral or spiritual wrecked vessel. Peter alluded to this when he said concerning our redemption, “Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers” (1 Pet 1:18). No person has to go down with a broken spiritual vessel. When erroneous forms of religion fail, the people caught in the snare do not have to go down with it.

It is fashionable these days for salvation to be oversimplified. In fact, it is often said, “There is nothing you can do. It has all been done for you.” However, this is not at all an accurate statement. It is true that the foundations and basis for salvation have all been done by Jesus. He has “made peace” (Col 1:20). He has taken away sin (Heb 9:26). He has opened a new and living way (Heb 10:20). He has destroyed the devil (Heb 2:14), and spoiled principalities and powers (Col 2:15). He has reconciled us to God (Col 1:21), and ended the Law as a means to righteousness (Rom 10:4).

But there are some things Jesus did not do for us. He did not repent for us (Acts 17:30). He did not believe for us (Heb 10:39). He did not confess His name for us (Rom 10:9-10). He was not baptized for us (Col 2:11-12). He did not obey the truth for us (Rom 2:8). He did not bring forth fruit meet for repentance for us (Acts 26:20). He did not perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord for us (2 Cor 7:1). He did not deny ungodliness and worldly lusts for us (Tit 2:11-12). He did not run the race for us (Heb 12:1-2). Those are all matters we must do. It is true that He strengthens and enables us to do these things, but in the end, we must do them, just as surely as those passengers had to extend themselves to get to shore.

God directed Abraham to come away from Ur of the Chaldees and all of his relation – but Abraham had to do it. God delivered Israel from Egypt, but they had to personally prepare, and come out, and walk through the midst of the Red Sea. God promised to overcome the enemies of Israel, but they had to fight. Jesus delivered us from the dominion of Satan but we have to resist him. This is the manner of the kingdom.

SO IT CAME TO PASS

“ . . . And so it came to pass, that they escaped all safe to land.” Other versions read, “they were all brought safely to land,” NASB “everyone reached land in safety,” NIV “every soul got safe to land,” DOUAY and “all came safe and sound to land,” NJB

We do not know how long this took – two hundred and seventy-six making it safely to shore. I can see how they would have been greatly wearied, and perhaps some of them sustained some minor injuries. I do not doubt that many of them assisted one another. Perhaps some of them were old. Paul himself was probably feeble, and may even have been ill at the time. In order to make it through those agitated and murky waters, fear had to be overcome. They probably had to keep their eye on the shore in order not to be overly discouraged by the task before them. Some of them may very well have wrestled with the thought that it was not possible for them to make it. But they all made it safely to land, and none of them were lost – just as Paul had told them. I do not doubt that on the way to shore many recalled his words and were encouraged.

CONCLUSION

THE EVENTFUL VOYAGE

“And thus ended the eventful voyage of about four hundred and eighty miles (as laid down in the charts) from Clauda to the Point of Koura on the north coast of Malta. It is one of the striking proofs of the identity of Melita with Malta, that the rate at which it is calculated that a large ship laying to in a gale would drift in twenty-four hours, viz. thirty-six miles, multiplied by thirteen and a half (the number of days occupied by the voyage), gives four hundred and eighty-six miles as the whole distance. (36X13.5 = 486). Smith thinks that the coincidence between “the actual bearing of St. Paul’s Bay from Clauda, and the direction in which the ship must have driven,” with the wind blowing in the quarter we know it did,” is, if possible, still more striking.” PULPIT COMMENTARY

Having disembarked from Caesarea some weeks prior, and changed ships at Myra [at least a 5-6 day trip], Paul and company had finally landed where they will spend the winter. They had sailed “slowly many days” past Cnidus, and under Crete, until they finally arrived at Fair Havens, which was on the southern coast of Crete. From there, and against the advice of Paul, they had set out to get to Phenice, where they thought it would be best to spend the winter. That voyage proved to be a disastrous one. After at least two weeks in a raging storm, they were shipwrecked on the island of Melita, having lost their cargo and the ship. Thus far, they had spent about one month on the water [5-6 days + many days + 14 days).

This entire trip bears remarkable similarity to the believers voyage through life. I cannot help but believe this is intentional, and not coincidental.

- A change of ship was required to get to their ultimate destination. At Myra, about 300 miles into the journey to Rome, the centurion found a ship going to Italy, and they placed everyone on that vessel (27:5-6). Similarly, many of the saints, after being in Christ for a season, found it necessary to change their environment, choosing one that was more conducive to landing safe in heaven to forever be with the Lord.

- After a good beginning, they made slow progress because of contrary winds. Having encountered some contrary winds, the ship on which Paul was traveling “sailed slowly many days,” not making rapid progress (Acts 27:7-8). This parallels a rather common experience among believers, when living for the Lord became more tedious because of opposing forces.

- They had to navigate with wisdom and discretion. Especially after they encountered opposing winds, and finally a fierce and unrelenting storm, wisdom was required to navigate successfully (Acts 27:10). Such wisdom is also required in the voyage to glory. It is no wonder Paul prayed that believers would be “filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9).

- They had to choose between conflicting ideas. When Paul gave his advice, some conflicting advice was given by the pilot and the owner of the ship. A choice had to be made between these conflicting views (Acts 27:10-12). Likewise, there comes a time when opposing ideas must be cast down (2 Cor 10:4-5), and a preference for eternal things carried out (Col 3:1-2). They must be “wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil” (Rom 16:19). There must be a discernment between good and evil (Heb 5:14).

- Making the wrong choice, they had to ensure a storm unnecessarily. When they decided to make an attempt to reach the next harbor, they encountered a storm worse than the one in which they had been sailing (Acts 27:13-14). It is ever true that if we judge ourselves, we should be judged. If, on the other hand, we choose not to do this, “we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world” (1 Cor 11:32).

- They had to work harder in the storm. Making progress in a raging storm required an unusual amount of work (Acts 27:15-17). Everyone has to work out their own salvation “with fear and trembling” (Phil 2:12). However, wrong choices often thrust men into a position where they “have trouble in the flesh” (1 Cor 7:28).

- They had to decide how to lighten their load, and what to throw overboard. Having chosen to ignore the advice of Paul, not they were faced with the need to throw some of their cargo, and the tackling of the ship as well, into the sea (Acts 27:18-19). Even so, many a child of God, failing to follow spiritual godly inclinations, has come to a point where certain things have to be discarded – things that could have been kept had they kept to the proper course of life.

- Under fierce adversity, all hope was finally lost. Navigating in the wisdom of men, traveling in darkness and tempest, all hope finally was dissipated (Acts 27:20). When men are not motivated by faith, adversity finally whips all confidence and hope out of the hearts of men. Caught in the downward spiral of flesh, hope finally withers and dies.

- In their trial, God sent a word of comfort to His servant. God did not speak out of the sky to everyone aboard this vessel, but sent a message to His servant concerning the dilemma (Acts 27:22-26). Even so, in times of testing, answers cannot be found in books, worldly wisdom, or other fleshly resources. Legitimate assessments and answers will be given to those who are walking in the light, and it is their word that is to be followed.

- They had to take nourishment to prepare for survival. Before they could escape from the situation, it was necessary for them to eat and be strengthened (Acts 27:33-34). One of the sad results of spiritual malnourishment is that it puts a person in a condition where they cannot escape danger, or face the inevitability or death. It is essential that any effective action be performed in a strengthened condition, where the soul has been fed.

- They had to know when to lower and when to hoist their sails. The varying circumstances required some understanding of when to use the sails, and when they would be a detriment – when to attempt to steer the ship, and when it was best to let it be carried by the storm (Acts 27:15,17,40). There are trials through which the saints can navigate deliberately. There are others that are like storms that carry us along. Blessed is the person who can distinguish between the two. There are things that are “lawful,” but under certain circumstances “are not expedient” (1 Cor 6:12; 10:23).

safety. When those in charge of the ship saw land, they had to know how to safely get within its proximity without endangering the occupants of the ship (Acts 27:27-29, 38-40). It is good to “know how to abound,” as well as “how to be abased,” and “be instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and suffer need” (Phil 4:12). What you do in the difficult times, and in crises, reveals the mount of real wisdom you possess.

- To be saved, they had to lose most, if not all, of their possessions. During the storm, they had to throw the cargo, the tacklings, and the wheat overboard (Acts 27:18-19,38). Jesus said that in order to be His disciple one had to “forsake all” (Lk 14:33). Walking in the light and living by faith clarifies this every time a circumstance of life arises that requires the discarding of some possession or preference that proves to be a hindering factor during stress.

- Those who could swim had to do so in stormy waters. Two classes of people were saved: those who could swim and those who could not. The swimmers were required to use all of their capacities to save themselves – swimming in a stormy sea (Acts 27:43-44). The abilities of the mature child of God are not always exercised under quiet and favorable circumstances. Often they must be employed under the most difficult of circumstances, which tend to confirm just how able believers are. But if they will use what they have from God, they will arrive safely.

- Those who could not swim had to use helps to get to shore. Those who could not swim were provided a means by which they could get to shore. That means had to be appropriated and employed all the way to the shore (Acts 27:44). It is sometimes necessary for those lacking certain abilities to employ “helps” in order to survive. It may require relying on some word from a fellow believer, or visiting a certain Ebenezer where the blessing of the Lord was once experienced. It may be retiring to some secret place for prayer, or rehearsing the wonderful works of God. Such activities are like priming a pump when the water is not flowing freely, and holy thoughts do not come easily. Properly used, they will enable the believer to navigate to safety.

- Everyone did all that they could under the circumstances, and they all made it safely to shore. In a sense, every man was for himself in getting to the shore, having to use everything accessible to him (Acts 27:43-44). We should not expect salvation to be accomplished easily, with minimal or occasional effort. Working out your own salvation with fear and trembling always requires the “whole armor of God,” “all spiritual blessings,” and “all things that pertain to life and godliness” (Eph 6:10-18; 1:3; 2 Pet 1:3). The believer must bring all of his heart, soul, mind, and strength into the race to glory, and leave nothing undone.

Just as Paul’s voyage to Rome was not in stormy weather all of the way, and was often attended by special visitations from the Lord, and contact with various brethren, so the trip to glory is not through an uninterrupted storm. Like the early church who went through persecutions and hardships, so the Lord has ordained that individuals and whole churches experience “rest,” and are “edified, walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Spirit, even being “multiplied” (Acts 9:31). How thankful we are that our times are in His hands (Psa 31:15), and He is working everything together for our good (Rom 8:28).

Notwithstanding those seasons of refreshment, there are perils on the way to glory – moral and spiritual storms. It is the nature of the life of faith to work out our salvation in the midst of such trials, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord, and walking in the light, though all about us often appears to be pervasive darkness. The caliber and strength of our faith is being tested, like the storms testing the sailing expertise of the mariners in our text.

What will it take to cause hope to wither? What will cause despair to set in, battering the heart and causing grief to the soul? Everything that is required to confront and overcome these circumstances is supplied in Christ Jesus, and faith is fully able to take hold of them and use them. That is involved in being “complete” in Christ.

Lesson #105

EXPERIENCES ON MELITA

“ 28:1 And when they were escaped, then they knew that the island was called Melita. 2 And the barbarous people showed us no little kindness: for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold. 3 And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. 4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live. 5 And he shook off the beast into the fire, and felt no harm. 6 Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly: but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said that he was a god. 7 In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously. 8 And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him. 9 So when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed: 10 Who also honored us with many honors; and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary. 11 And after three months we departed in a ship of Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, whose sign was Castor and Pollux.” (Acts 28:1-11)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

When all of the passengers arrived safely on the island, they found a barbarous people. Yet, the people were inclined to them and treated them graciously. While assisting in the gathering of wood for a fire, Paul is unexpectedly bitten by a poisonous viper which was hidden in the wood. Because the snake fastened itself on Paul's hand, the whole event was very public, and the natives watched him, convinced that he was a murderer who was being judged, and would therefore die. When Paul does not, or show any signs of harm whatsoever, they think he is a god. This shows how rapidly the minds of people can change when they honestly consider what they behold. The governor of the island received the travelers into his home for three days, and there Paul finds the leader's father ill. Going in to him, he prayed, laid his hands on him, and healed him. Following this many from the island who had diseases came to Paul, and they also were healed. When they left the governor's home, the people honored them in many ways. When they got ready to depart, the people furnished them with all of the supplies they needed. After three months, apparently spent in some other quarters, and the winter being over, they resumed their journey to Rome in another ship from Alexandria Egypt. God had graciously cared for them., and has done so through trials fatigue, challenge, severe tests, losses, lengthy trials, and timely favors.

THE CONTEXT OF LIFE

Life itself is maintained in a certain context, with certain things being involved. For mankind, nothing about the maintenance of life is robot-like, or reflexive. There are dangers and benefits, hurts and comforts, losses and gains. A normal life is maintained through eating, sleeping, and exercise. The mind faces challenges, and the body adverse circumstances. There are periods of elation, and times of sorrows. We face friend and foe, helpers and those who hinder. Our bodies are subject to the elements, and must be nourished by food and water. There is refreshment and fatigue, rejoicing and mourning, heights and depths of emotion. An appetite that is left unassuaged cries out, creating discomfort. All of these, and much more, are simply part of the process of life, and most people know it.

However, when it comes to the maintenance of spiritual life, the knowledge of its manner is not commonly known. In doctrine, insinuation, and mental tone, a myriad people have been left with the impression that spiritual life proceeds on its own, without any involvement from men. It is this persuasion that birthed the heresy referred to as "once saved, always saved." and "eternal security." In these, and other such doctrines, the necessity of faith is conveniently overlooked – the means by which newness of life is both received and maintained. Other things that pertain to "this present evil world," become dominant.

Faith must be "kept" (2 Tim 4:7; Rev 14:12), and not thrown overboard like the cargo on the ship on which Paul and others were sailing (2 Tim 2:18; Acts 27:18,38). Faith, like a mustard seed, grows, advances, and becomes mature (Lk 17:5; 2 Thess 1:3). It must be finished by Jesus as well as authored by Him (Heb 12:2). It is important to be like Abraham, of whom it is written, "being not weak in faith" (Rom 4:19), but rather being "strong in faith" (Rom 4:20).

And how is faith actually maintained? What are the influences that bring it to maturity? Men are, after all, exhorted to "continue in the faith" (Acts 14:22). There are such things as being "established in the faith" (Acts 16:5; Col 2:7), standing "fast in the faith" (1 Cor 16:13), being "grounded and settled" in the faith (Col 1:23), and being "steadfast in the faith" (1 Pet 5:9). Is there a person of sound mind that imagines that men will be wafted into heaven without these qualities being addressed? And what of the admonition to do something with your faith, adding to it certain indispensable traits of rectitude: virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity (2 Pet 1:5-7). Can the promise attached to that activity be experienced without the addition of such things? "For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ . . . if ye do these things, ye shall never fall" (2 Pet 1:8-10). Is this not one of the means by which life is maintained, in order to realize its objective to "bring forth fruit unto God" Rom 7:4)?

God never intended for spiritual life to be maintained in a moral and spiritual vacuum – where there is little activity, no hostility, and no tests.

God never intended for spiritual life to be maintained in a moral and spiritual vacuum – where there is little activity, no hostility, and no tests. Instead, it is like Paul’s divinely determined voyage to Rome. There are trials of various intensity, aggressive oppositions, and seasons of darkness to endure. These are all designed to show the validity of the faith one claims to possess. It is at the time of testing that the absence of faith, of its inadequacy is revealed. Conversely, during the same tests a strong faith is made known that does not waver or doubt. This is done in the presence of principalities and power in heavenly places who are, in these situations, the ones to whom the “manifold wisdom of God” is being made known (Eph 3:10).

There is a certain separation that takes place during the pilgrimage to glory. Some things have to go in order that other things may be obtained. This matter is addressed in several ways in Scripture.

- “The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light” (Rom 13:12).
- “Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us” (Heb 12:1).
- “Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God” (2 Cor 7:1).
- “That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts” (Eph 4:22).
- “Wherefore laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby” (1 Pet 2:1-2).

Those en route to glory are especially reminded of these requirements when they are in the midst of moral; and spiritual storms. For the immature, it then becomes more apparent that there are certain hindrances to spiritual progress that must be thrust from us. God has a way of directing our lives so that this can become very obvious. It is then that there is no sense of loss when casting such things out of our lives. That action rather brings refreshment and hope. Vision is clarified, and spiritual senses exercised.

TREATED WITH KINDNESS BY A BARBAROUS PEOPLE

“ 28:1 And when they were escaped, then they knew that the island was called Melita. 2 And the barbarous people showed us no little kindness: for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold.”

Everyone had made it safely to shore. As it is written, “And so it came to pass, that they escaped all safe to land” (Acts 27:44). Now Luke provides some details that confirm the hand of the Lord was with them. Every legitimate need will be met, kindness will be realized from strangers, and an event that would have caused death under any other circumstance will have no power. All of this was the doing of the Lord.

WHEN THEY WERE ESCAPED

“And when they were escaped . . .” Other versions read, “and when they had been brought safely through,” NASB “once safely on shore,” NIV “had reached safety,” NRSV “got safe to land,” DARBY “having been saved,” YLT “Our lives having been thus preserved,” WEYMOUTH and “had been rescued,” WILLIAMS

The word “escaped” is translated from the Greek word διασωγε,ντεj This word means, “preserve through danger, to bring safe through; to save . . . bring him through . . . keep safe, keep from perishing . . . to save out of danger, rescue,” THAYER and “to rescue completely from danger - 'to save, to rescue.” LOUW-NIDA

There is a lot in this word “escape.” It involves being preserved in the midst of the circumstance from which one is ultimately delivered. It also includes being brought out of a dangerous environment – the act of deliverance itself. Then there is the objective of the deliverance, which is to arrive safely at the appointed destination. No one escapes who is finally overcome by the oppressive environment. No one escapes who does not eventually come out of the situation in which life is threatened. Escape also postulates the safe arrival at a place where the former danger does not exist.

Thus, for those in our text, escaping, or deliverance involved not being destroyed by the storm while they were on the sea. It included the provision of a means to get from the boat to the shore. There was also preservation while they were on their way. Finally, the deliverance included the safe arrival of everyone on the land.

An Application

Having said that, there is an uncomfortable amount of teaching these days that claims deliverance that does not meet these conditions. Those who claim healing that leaves the person with the symptoms of the disease from which he was purportedly healed are among those who teach such absurdities. As if that was not enough, there are a growing number of religious pretenders who boast of being saved, yet who continue to be dominated by sin.

There a number of deliverances described in Scripture to which these principles can be applied.

- DELIVERED FROM THIS PRESENT EVIL WORLD. “Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father” (Gal 1:4).

- DELIVERED FROM THE LAW. “But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter” (Rom 7:6).

- ESCAPING FROM TEMPTATION. “There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it” (1 Cor 10:13).

- DELIVERED FROM THE POWER OF DARKNESS. “Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son” (Col 1:13).

- DELIVERED FROM THE WRATH TO COME. “And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come” (1 Thess 1:10).

- DELIVERANCE FROM BONDAGE. “And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage” (Heb 2:15).

- ESCAPING THE CORRUPTION THAT IS IN THE WORLD THROUGH LUST. “Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust” (2 Pet 1:4).

- DELIVERED OUT OF TEMPTATION. “The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished” (2 Pet 2:9)

• ESCAPED FROM THOSE WHO LIVE IN ERROR. “For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error” (2 Pet 2:18).

• ESCAPING THE POLLUTIONS OF THE WORLD. “For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning” (2 Pet 2:20).

What would we say of the people who were languishing in the storm, lightening the ship, and having all hope removed from them, if they shouted out, “We have been delivered?” We would consider them to be lacking in perception at the best, and totally dishonest at the worst. And what if they had cried out, “We have escaped,” when the helm of the boat was stuck fast in the sand, and the hinder part of the boat was being dashed to pieces? Or what if while they were making their way to the shore, some swimming, and some on pieces of the ship, relaxed their effort and said, “Finally, we have been saved” – what would we think of such a testimonial? The truth of the matter is that until they arrived safely on that shore, they were in jeopardy, and it was foolish to pretend as though this was not the case.

We have entered an era of Christianity where men feel more free to boast of identity with Christ without showing any indications of escape or deliverance from sin. Now there is a new kind of Christian business that allows for people to maintain their profession of faith, while at the same time confessing to their lives being out of control. It is a most lamentable condition, to say the least, for it sets before the world a kind of salvation that leaves the people essentially the same as those who admittedly are not Christians. Such a salvation is not real, and is not to be recognized as though it was.

THEN THEY KNEW

“ . . . then they knew that the island was called Melita.” Other versions read, “they found out,” NKJV “we then learned,” NRSV “we made the discovery that the island was named Melita,” BBE and “We soon learned.” LIVING

The text reads as though they had asked the natives the name of the island, and thus the name of it was “learned” – was made known to them.

FACTS CONCERNING MELITA

Cicero says, here pirates used to winter almost every year, and yet did not spoil the temple of Juno, as Verres did: though some say it was so called from the great abundance of honey found in it; for it was a very pleasant and fruitful island, bringing forth great plenty of wheat, rye, flax, cummin, cotton, figs, wine, roses, thyme, lavender, and many other sweet and delightful herbs, from whence bees did gather great plenty of honey. It was, according to Pliny, distant from Camerina eighty four miles, and from Lilybaeum a hundred and thirteen; and it is said to be distant from the promontory of Sicily an hundred miles, though others say sixty; and that it was so far from Syracuse, which is the next place the apostle came to in this voyage, was from Africa an hundred and ninety miles. On the east side, a little from the chief city of it, now called Malta, was a famous temple of Juno, spoiled by Verres, as before observed; and on the south side another of Hercules, the ruins of both which are yet to be seen. The compass of the island is about sixty miles, the length twenty, and the breadth twelve, and has in it five ports, and about sixty villages. JOHN GILL

A Spiritual Application

Due to inferior teaching, as well as to the nature of the beginning of newness of life, many who come into Christ do not know yet know where they are. The benefits of being in Christ may not be known, and a clear definition of what has taken place in them may not be discerned. Many of us remember very well when we were in just such a state. It took someone who was familiar with life in Christ to give us some perception the lay of the spiritual land, to help us form an adequate perception of the glory of Emmanuel's land (Isa 8:8).

One can only imagine how foolish it would have been to inquire from some long-time natives of the land what it was called, and where it was, only to have them respond that they did not know. They might have told the people they had been there a long time, but simply had not taken the time to find out where they were, or what resources were there. Anyone confronting such a situation would realize the foolishness of the circumstance. The only justification for being in such a stance would be that the people were blind and deaf, and perhaps did not possess good rational faculties. At any rate, no person of sound mind would expect a long-time citizen of a county to be ignorant of what it was, where it was at, and what was available to its citizens.

Yet, we are faced with countless numbers of professing Christians who have very little understanding of where they are, and of the privileges that have been vouchsafed to those who are "in Christ Jesus." There is a lot of good work to be done in this area – assisting the saints of God in coming to an understanding of what has taken place in salvation, and the plethora of spiritual resources that are available to them. If you have a lucid view of where you are in Christ Jesus, and of the abundance that is accessible to you, there is certainly a place for you to ministry to many very real brothers and sisters in Christ who do not yet have this kind of understanding.

THE BARBAROUS PEOPLE

"And the barbarous people . . ." Other versions read, "the natives," NKJV "islanders," NIV "simple people," BBE "local people," CSB "the people who lived on the island," GWN "local inhabitants," NET "the strangers," PNT and "the foreigners." YLT

Several of the newer versions, in my judgment, give an incorrect translation of the word, making it refer to the habitat of the people (natives, islanders, local people, people who lived on the island, local inhabitants). This is not at all the point of the text, even though the people did live on the island. The word "barbarous" is a transliteration of ba,rbaroi (barb aroi). Its etymology includes "foreigner," STRONG'S "properly, one whose speech is rude, rough, harsh, as if repeating the syllables . . . one who speaks a foreign or strange language which is not understood by another." THAYER "barbarian, foreign, strange; as a substantive non-Greek, uncivilized person, barbarian," FRIBERG "non-Greek; uncivilized; foreigner; native," UBS and "non-Greek; uncivilized; foreigner; native." LOUW-NIDA In no case is it meant to connote a geographical area. This term is set within the context of Greek being the universal language at that time, as well as being separate from the Jews, who had their own language primary language, which was not Greek.

Other texts using this word indicate that it is a cultural term rather than of denoting place or environment.

• ROMANS 1:14 : "I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise" (Rom 1:14).

• 1 CORINTHIANS 14:11 : "Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me" (1 Cor 14:11).

• COLOSSIANS 3:11 : "Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all" (Col 3:11).

Hebrew was the language of the Jews, Greek was the universal language, and Latin was the language of the Roman empire. Yet, these people apparently had their own language, not speaking any of those languages. Perhaps this is why there is no record of a single word being spoken by Paul while he was on this island (Acts 28:1-11). He gathered sticks (28:3), shook a viper off in the fire (28:5), healed the father of Publius (28:8), and healed others of the island who had diseases (28:9). This does not mean there was no preaching and teaching – but if there was, Paul must have spoken in tongues, as Peter and the others did on Pentecost, so the people could understand.

Yet, the people of the island recognized the dilemma of those who had escaped the sinking ship, and treated them with kindness, which itself is a universal language.

Typology Seen in Different Languages

At its root, and in the religious world, there are three different ways of speaking.

- There is the language of the world, universally understood by sinners. This is a language those with faith do not choose as their means of communication (1 Cor 2:1-6). Those who are of the world, John wrote, speak “of the world, and the world heareth them” (1 John 4:5).
- There is religious jargon – the speech of spiritual Babylon. It is an admixture that attempts to mingle the vocabulary of the world with the words taught by the Holy Spirit. It is the language of human tradition (Matt 15:3,6; Col 2:8; 1 Pet 1:18), philosophy (Col 2:8), and attempts to bind law upon people (1 Tim 1:7).
- There is also the language that employs words “taught by the Spirit, combining spiritual thoughts with spiritual words” NASB (1 Cor 2:13).

To the world, the language taught by the Spirit seems barbaric. Traditional religious language that has its roots in flesh also appears to the world to be barbaric. Yet there is enough of the world in it for so that it is not altogether strange. To those who “have the mind of Christ” (1 Cor 2:16), and “live by every word of God” (Lk 4:4), both the language of the world and that of spiritual Babylon is barbaric.

NO LITTLE KINDNESS

“And the barbarous people showed us no little kindness . . .” Other versions read, “showed us unusual kindness,” NKJV “Showed us extraordinary kindness,” NASB “showed us no common kindness,” ASV “were uncommonly kind to us,” BBE “showed us no small courtesy,” DOUAY “showed us many kindnesses,” MRD “showed us extraordinary hospitality,” NAB “Were very kind to us,” NLT “showed us remarkable kindness,” WEYMOUTH and “showed us unusual and remarkable kindness.” AMPLIFIED

Ordinarily hostility exists between people who do not understand each other – at least some kind of aversion. This was the primary means through which the people in the land of Shinar were scattered “upon the face of the earth” (Gen 11:7-9).

In this manner, God provided the immediate needs of all the people. However, in the last analysis, it was really for Paul’s sake that this was all done, for he is the one Jesus was sending to Rome. Those who were with him were therefore blessed because of him.

In this circumstance, the people were kindly disposed to the people who were not on their island – two hundred and seventy-six of them! Some of these people, probably the majority, were military men. Yet, the natives did not consider their land to have been invaded, or that this large number of people posed a threat to them. Instead, they lavished kindness upon them in various and effective ways.

THEY RECEIVED EVERYONE

“ . . . for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold.”

The islanders did not leave it to the survivors to make their own fire, but made one for them, receiving “everyone” of them. In relating why they did this, Luke informs us that it was raining, and was cold, owing to the winter coming on. Other versions read, “because of the rain that was falling and because of the cold.” That means the survivors not only made their way to land during a storm, but during rain and coldness as well. They were probably soaked to the bone with frigid waters, and, so far as the record is concerned, the storm was still in progress, probably sending sheets of rain upon them. Also, the waters had been agitated by the storm, and all sorts of filth and contamination were probably on all two hundred and seventy-six of the people.

What a congregation that was! A ship pilot, the owner of the ship, a considerable number of sailors, some prisoners, and the brethren that were with Paul. However, the natives made a fire for them all, so they could dry out and be warmed. It was no doubt a sizeable fire, for I cannot imagine a campfire being sufficient to dry out and warm nearly three hundred souls. I assume that it was also built in some sheltered area of either rocks or trees.

In this manner, God provided the immediate needs of all the people. However, in the last analysis, it was really for Paul’s sake that this was all done, for he is the one Jesus was sending to Rome. Those who were with him were therefore blessed because of him.

The parallel to life in Christ Jesus is so apparent, there is no need for extensive elaboration on the matter. Whatever benefits we receive from God are “for Jesus’ sake,” and not merely because of who we are. God is no closer us than we are to His Son.

PAUL IS BITTEN BY A POISONOUS SNAKE

“ 3 And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. 4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live. 5 And he shook off the beast into the fire, and felt no harm.”

Even though Paul has been through a harrowing and exhaustive experience, and even though he was a prisoner, yet he joins in the labor to provides warmth to the multitude. His faith has made him considerate, thoughtful, and industrious, and it will do no less in those who are joined to the Lord by their faith.

I want to keep before you the fact that other brethren were with Paul, endured the shipwreck, and made it safely to shore. We do not know precisely how many brethren were traveling with him, but we do know two of them: Luke and Aristarchus (Acts 27:2). It seems to me that this was a most unusual circumstance – for close friends to accompany the transport of a prisoner. Yet, this afforded Paul sustaining companionship along the way.

PAUL GATHERED A BUNDLE OF STICKS

“And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire . . .” Other versions read, “gathered a pile of brushwood and, as he put it on the fire,” NIV “got some sticks together and put them on the fire,” BBE “was adding them to the fire,” CJB “gathered a certain quantity of sticks together in a bundle and laid it on the fire,” DARBY “picked up a pile of sticks for the fire,” IE “ and thrown them on the fire.” MONTGOMERY

Considering that Paul was noted for his infirmities (2 Cor 11:30; 12:5), this account is all the more remarkable. We do not know if Paul swam to shore, or was one of those riding in on a plank or piece of the ship. Yet, after the fatiguing trip to shore, we find Paul gathering a bundle of sticks for the fire. What an index to his magnanimous character! No task was too lowly for him. That is how faith impacts upon the human character.

The sticks that were gathered required some discretion, for they had to be dry – and it was raining.

THERE CAME A VIPER OUT OF THE HEAT

“ . . . there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand . . .” Other versions read, “a viper came out because of the heat,” NKJV “a viper, driven out by the heat.” NIV

Here was a public event – something that would be noted by everyone present. While doing a good work, assisting in the need of the moment. Paul is bitten by a poisonous snake – not just an ordinary snake, but an especially venomous one. This event will prove to be an effective introduction of Paul to the natives of the island. It will establish that he, not Julius, is the most significant person of the group that has just made it safely to shore. I do not doubt that there were other men who appeared more impressive, stronger, and of more influence. But the mind-set of the group around that fire will now be focused upon Paul the apostle. This was the Lord’s doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes.

It is not unusual for a crisis of great magnitude to cause those with strong faith and insight to surface. Those who are defeated by circumstance are not Kingdom leaders, for a true leader takes the people through crises as well as blessings – like Moses, Joshua, David, etc.

ABOUT THE VIPER

“It is said that this remarkable reptile has the biggest and flattest head of all the serpent kind; its usual length is about half an ell, and its thickness an inch; its snout is not unlike that of a hog; it has sixteen small immovable teeth in each jaw, besides two other large, sharp, hooked, hollow, transparent, canine teeth, situate at each side of the upper jaw, which are those that do the mischief: these are flexible in their articulation, and are ordinarily laid flat along the jaw, the animal never raising them but when it would bite The roots or bases of these teeth, or fangs, are encompassed with a vesicle or bladder, containing the quantity of a large drop of a yellow insipid salivous juice. — It has only one row of teeth, whereas all other serpents have two; its body is not at all fetid, whereas the inner parts of the bodies of other serpents are intolerable. — It creeps very slowly, and never leaps like other serpents, though it is nimble enough to bite when provoked. — Its body is of two colours, ash coloured or yellow, and the ground speckled with longish brown spots; the scales under its belly are of the color of well polished steel. Its bite is exceeding venomous, and its poison the most dangerous.” CHAMBER’S CYCLOPAEDIA

A “viper” has always been known for its venomous bite. It is noted for being the most “venomous serpent in Northern Africa and South-western-Asia,” McCLINTOK & STRONG’S It is therefore used as a type of spiritually dangerous people and obnoxious people. John the Baptist referred to certain Pharisees and Sadducees as a “generation of vipers” (Matt 3:7; Lk 3:7). Jesus did the same in regards to the Pharisees (Matt 12:34), and the scribes and Pharisees (Matt 23:33).

In the text before us, one of these particularly poison snakes was driven out of the sticks by the heat of the fire upon which they were placed. The narrative suggests it was in the bundle of sticks that Paul had picked up. When he placed that bundle upon the fire, the viper was forced into the open, and, having bitten Paul, was fastened on his hand. Apparently the many teeth that it had were so embedded in the hand of Paul that the viper could not withdraw itself. This allowed the maximum amount of poison to pass into Paul's body, making the bite especially lethal.

A Lesson to be Learned

Sometimes the very things we are carrying about with us appear to be harmless. Yet, in the heat of spiritual exposure, evil things surface, seeking, to do damage to the individual carrying them.

While this circumstance, like that in which Paul was found, cannot always be avoided, we are to understand that anything picked up from the earth has the potential of containing harmful influences. It is only as a person is identified with the Lord and engaged in his work that protection can be granted. Jesus gave an example of this in His words to the seventy whom He sent forth: "Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you" (Luke 10:19). His words to His disciples following His resurrection were much the same. "They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them" (Mark 16:18). As indicated in our text, this was not something intentionally done to attract the attention of men. It was rather something that would occur while they were engaged in the work of the Lord. This promise was fulfilled in Paul, as well as those who Jesus sent out before him.

THE BARBARIANS SAW

"And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live . . ." Other versions read, "Undoubtedly this man is a murderer, and though he has been saved from the sea, justice has not allowed him to live," NASB "Doubtless this man is a murderer, for though he has been saved from the sea, Justice [the goddess of avenging] has not permitted that he should live." AMPLIFIED "Justice hath not suffered him to live," ASV/NIV/ERV not let him go on living," BBE "Nemesis has not allowed to live," DARBY "Vengeance," GENEVA/RWB "Justice herself," NET and "the goddess of justice." CEV

Some of translations indicate that "Justice" or "Vengeance" was the name of a god, rather than simply the statement of the principle of justice. Some commentators do not see this as a valid point. I am not sure that this is what is intended by the text, but it does make a lot of sense.

ON THE WORD JUSTICE

"The Greek word "Dice" rendered "vengeance", is the name of a goddess among the Heathens, said to be the daughter of Jupiter and Themis. Apollodorus de Deorum Origin. 50:1. p. 6. Phurnutus de Natura Deorum, p. 80 She is represented as sitting by her father Jupiter; and when anyone does injury to another, informs him of it. She is painted sorrowful, and with a contracted forehead, a grave countenance, and a rough aspect, to strike terror in unrighteous persons, and give confidence to righteous ones, agreeably to her name, which signifies "justice". This deity the barbarians supposed pursued Paul; and though she let him escape the sea, she will not suffer him to live any longer; for they looked upon the viper's fastening on him, as to be sent by her, so to be immediate death to him." JOHN GILL

These islanders had a sense of morality and accountability that is nearly defunct in our country. Even within the professed church, there is a glaring absence of the perception of strict accountability and Divine retribution. Joseph's brothers thought of this when they confronted Joseph years after they had sold him (Gen 42:21-22). The sailors on the ship in which Jonah fled from the presence of the Lord considered the fierce storm they were facing as having been brought on because of someone who did wrong (Jonah 1:7,14).

AN ASPECT OF THE DIVINE NATURE

Of course, there is more to the matter of retribution than the intuitions and traditions of men. God has revealed that He repays. To Moses He revealed, “Know therefore that the LORD thy God, He is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love Him and keep his commandments to a thousand generations; and repayeth them that hate him to their face, to destroy them: he will not be slack to him that hateth him, he will repay him to his face” (Deut 7:9-10). Isaiah affirmed, “According to their deeds, accordingly He will repay, fury to his adversaries, recompense to His enemies; to the islands He will repay recompense” (Isa 59:18). Apostolic doctrine affirms, “Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord” (Rom 12:19).

This is God’s nature, and, from the very beginning, has been revealed in the Scriptural record in His dealings with men.

- The sin of Adam and Eve (Gen 2:17; 3:16-19).
- The sin of Cain (Gen 4:10-12).
- The world of Noah’s day (Gen 6:3-7).
- The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen 18:20; 19:13,24-25).
- Israel (Ex 32:34; Psa 95:11).
- Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:1-10).
- Herod (Acts 12:23).

In these few examples, we see that this aspect of the Divine nature was revealed at the beginning of time, before the Law, during the Law, and after the Law – even during the day of salvation.

It appears that a sense of this is built into the Divine imagery that is within mankind. There is a sense of Divine retribution resident in the conscience of men. Admittedly, this can be ignored and even subdued, as is evidenced in our time. That, of course, compounds the problem.

Salvation is a means provided by God to address this aspect of His nature. Sin was atoned for by God visiting the iniquity of humanity in the Person of Christ, upon whom the sins of the world were laid. To ignore that provision will cause one to incur the wrath of God “without mixture” (Rev 14:10).

HE SHOOK OFF THE BEAST

“And he shook off the beast into the fire . . .” Other versions read, “But Paul shook the snake off into the fire,” NIV and “Then [Paul simply] shook off the small creature into the fire.” AMPLIFIED

There is a calmness in Paul’s reaction that is baffling to the flesh. The text conveys no idea of crisis or fear. The Amplified Bible captures this sense by reading “Then [Paul simply] shook off the small creature into the fire.”

However, note where he “shook off” the viper. This was a very deliberate act, for he shook off the snake “into the fire,” where it could be the more easily destroyed. He did not shake it off at random, so it could bite someone else. Paul was, indeed, thinking and acting with a sound and considerate mind.

AND FELT NO HARM

“ . . . and felt no harm.” Other versions read, “suffered no ill effects,” NIV “he got no damage,” BBE “suffered no evil,” YLT “was not hurt,” IE “suffered no evil effects,” AMPLIFIED “without being harmed at all,” GNB and “none the worse for wear.” MESSAGE

Consider what was against Paul not being harmed. He was probably in a physically weakened state after coming safely to shore. The viper was an especially poisonous snake. The snake had fastened itself on Paul's hand, probably emptying the maximum amount of venom into the apostle. Yet, so far as the condition of Paul was concerned, it was as though the event had never even taken place. There were no immediate or after-effects of the bite. There were no symptoms of a snake-bite, unless it be fang marks in his hand.

A SPIRITUAL PARALLEL

It is possible for the people of God to endure very real afflictions without there being any observable evidence of them.

- When Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego came out of the fiery furnace it is written of them, "upon whose bodies the fire had no power, nor was an hair of their head singed, neither were their coats changed, nor the smell of fire had passed on them" (Dan 3:27).
- When Daniel came out of the lion's den, there was no indication that he had ever been in such an environment. As it is written, "So Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God" (Dan 6:23).

While we are not guarantee we will always surface from trials without any evidence that we have been in them, such a condition is possible. Jesus promised His disciples, "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover" (Mark 16:17-18). I understand that this is not a guarantee that we will never be harmed, but it is something we may very well experience at the Lord's discretion.

Paul did not always surface from trials with no evidence he had been in them. Speaking of some of the things he had endured for Jesus' sake, he wrote: "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus" (Gal 6:17). These were marks that could be seen. They were in his body. He carried these marks with him wherever he went, and they could be seen by others. However, the snake-bite on Melita was not such an occasion. There was no evidence of harm upon him.

PAUL'S CONDITION IS NOTED BY THE PEOPLE

"6 Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly: but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said that he was a god."

To this point, the natives had observed the viper clinging to Paul's hand, concluding that he was being punished for being a murderer. However, the event had not yet been concluded. They continued to observe Paul to see the outcome of it all.

HE SHOULD HAVE SWOLLEN

"Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly . . ." Other versions read, "they were expecting that he would swell up or suddenly fall down dead," NKJV "were expecting that he was about to swell up or suddenly fall down dead," NASB and "they had the idea that they would see him becoming ill, or suddenly falling down dead." BBE

Evidently, these people had no doubt witnessed others being bitten by a viper, and knew the sure results that would take place. They made no attempt to treat the bite, for it was evidently known that any bite from such a snake was lethal, and death would follow shortly. Therefore, they just waited for the anticipated results, unable to do anything to correct or neutralize the situation. This was a moment when, so far as they were concerned, human wisdom was totally useless. What had taken place put them into a situation where intellectuality and every form of the wisdom of men had been excluded – totally shut out.

THEY LOOKED A GREAT WHILE

“ . . . but after they had looked a great

Amidst the sorrow, lament, and tears that are brought on by the death of brethren in Jesus, the candle of hope is still aglow. We do not sorrow as though there is no hope.

while, and saw no harm come to him . . .” Other versions read, “But after they had waited a long time and had seen nothing unusual happen to him,” NASB “but when they had waited a long time and saw no misfortune come to him,” RSV “but when they were long in expectation and beheld nothing amiss come to him,” ASV “but after they had looked a great while, and saw no inconvenience come to him,” GENEVA and “but when they had watched him a long time and saw nothing fatal or harmful come to him.” AMPLIFIED

How long they waited is stated in general terms – “a great while.” It was probably in terms of a few hours. They looked for some of the signs that accompanied a bite from such a viper. The beginning of such signs would assure them that the bite was, in fact, lethal. However, there was not the faintest sign or indication that Paul had even been bitten by a poisonous snake. There was no soreness, no redness, and no dissipation of strength: no vomiting, no pain, no change in the color of Paul’s skin, and no sweat. Yet, there was no doubt that he had been bitten by a viper, for they had seen the snake fastened to his hand, remaining there until Paul had shaken it off in the fire. They were witnessing something that, according to their firm persuasion, only a god could do. These results were not possible within the circumference of human strength and wisdom, and they knew it.

A Spiritual Application

It ought to be noted here that due attention is paid to professing Christians during the times of trial – times when the world knows how it would react. When, in times of crisis and sorrow, the same kind of reactions are seen in Christians as those seen among unbelievers, a certain reproach is brought upon God. That is why Paul spoke of the reaction of believers to the death of their companions in Christ. “But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope” (1 Thess 4:13). There is sorrow at the passing of members of the body of Christ, to be sure. However, it is sorrow of another sort – a sorrow that is totally unknown to the world.

Amidst the sorrow, lament, and tears that are brought on by the death of brethren in Jesus, the candle of hope is still aglow. We do not sorrow as though there is no hope. However, those who struggle through the death of their brethren without the evidence of hope do greatly err. They are leaving a witness that mitigates anything they may have to say about Christ, the Bible, or believing God. If Jesus could say to the widow of Nain as she marched in the funeral procession of her own son, “Weep not” (Lk 7:13), what must He say to those who have lost someone close to them who is in Christ Jesus? He said the very same words – “Weep not” – to those we mourned the death of Jairus’ twelve year old daughter (Lk 8:52). And why did He say such words? It is because there was hope! For those to whom He spoke, that hope would be realized immediately. But whether immediate or not, hope can wait expectantly. Hope can ignite rejoicing in what will yet take place (Rom 12:12), even though the individual may weep “for a night” (Psa 30:5).

Death is only one circumstance in which those who are of the world crumble and fall in discouragement. Any trial encountered by a believer that is also common to those who are of this world ought to be accompanied by the distinguishing response of faith and hope. Where these are not obvious a spiritual swelling and redness takes place that contradicts the claim of faith. This is a sobering reality, and worthy of much consideration. In my judgment, there is far too much worldly response to difficulties that is found among professing believers. It has had a profound effect upon the unbelievers who have heard the profession of faith. This is especially true when professing Christian leaders invent doctrines that justify such responses, affirming that they are common to all believers.

THEY CHANGED THEIR MINDS

“ . . . they changed their minds, and said that he was a god.” Other versions read, “changing their opinion, they said he was a god,” BBE “they reversed their opinion and said he was a god,” CJB “they changed their language, and said, that he was a god,” MRD “they changed their minds and kept saying over and over that he was a god,” AMPLIFIED and “they jumped to the conclusion that he was a god!” MESSAGE

Although this was a wrong conclusion, it was driven by the persuasion that Deity does exist. There was no question in the minds of these natives concerning the reality of God. They certainly had not embraced the philosophy of the fool who affirms, “There is no God” (Psa 14:1; 53:1).

This was the same conclusion reached by those in Lystra when they witnessed Paul heal a man who had been “a cripple from his mother’s womb.” Barnabas and Saul aborted their attempts to offer sacrifices to them with insightful words (Acts 14:8-18). However, there is no record of such effort being expended here. I gather this was because the natives made no effort to make sacrifice to Paul. Also, whereas Paul and Barnabas left Lystra, Paul was going to remain on the island of Melita for three months. That altered the whole situation. He would be given time to confirm the true nature of what had happened, and to clarify the reality of the living God. Much of this would be done by example.

HOSPITALITY AND AN ACT OF MERCY

“ 7 In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously. 8 And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.”

The care of the Lord for His own will now be manifested. He will use a barbarous people to take care of Paul and his companions. These people have already seen that Paul was no ordinary man. Now they will learn that the presence of him and all of the people with him will pose no threat to their island.

The care of the Lord for His own will now be manifested. He will use a barbarous people to take care of Paul and his companions. These people have already seen that Paul was no ordinary man. Now they will learn that the presence of him and all of the people with him will pose no threat to their island. No attempt will be made to take over the environment or abuse the people. In fact, help will be ministered to them in the name of the Lord.

From this text throughout their duration on the island, there will not be a solitary word mentioned about the ship pilot, the owner of the ship, the sailors, Julius the centurion, the soldiers, or the prisoners. The text reads as though the only people present were Paul and those aligned with him.

And why is this so? Because, from heaven’s point of view, they were the principle occupants of the island. The activities of Melita will now center around Paul the apostle.

POSSESSIONS OF THE CHIEF MAN

“In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously . . .” Other versions read, “In that region there was an estate of the leading citizen of the island, whose name was Publius, who received us and entertained us courteously for three days,” NKJV “Now in the neighborhood of that place were lands belonging to the leading man of the island, named Publius, who welcomed us and entertained us courteously three days,” NASB and “In the vicinity of that place there were estates belonging to the head man of the island, named Publius, who accepted and welcomed and entertained us with hearty hospitality for three days.” AMPLIFIED

Publius is described as “the chief man of the island,” the “leading man,” NASB or the “head man of the island.” AMPLIFIED It is generally understood that this man was the “deputy,” KJV “proconsul,” NASB “ruler,” BBE or “governor” BBE of the island, as Sergius Paulus was of Cyprus (Acts 13:7). This man was evidently a man of unusual means, as the reference to his “possessions,” or “estates,” AMPLIFIED indicates.

For three days this man considerately lodged Paul and company. There is a divergence of opinion here concerning who is intended by the words “us.” Some are of the opinion that it was “the centurion, St. Paul, St. Luke, Aristarchus, and possibly one or two others, but not the whole two hundred and seventy-six.” PULPIT COMMENTARY Others conclude, “this was a very considerable instance of humanity and hospitality, to receive so many strangers at once into his houses, as two hundred three score and sixteen; and give them food and lodging, for three days together, and that in such a kind, friendly, and cheerful manner.” JOHN GILL

It appears to me that there is no point of mentioning the many possessions of Publius if he only entertained four or five people. That does not seem to fit well into the account Luke is giving. Further, if this man did not entertain the entire group, what point is there in mentioning “three days” of courteous treatment. How could it be virtuous for a man of such means to house less than two percent of the people who were stranded on the island he governed? I rather prefer to see this as Publius taking care of all of the people for three days, supposing that during that time they could find suitable lodging for the group for the next three months. The maintenance of prisoners during the winter, it seems to me, would require special provisions that were not readily available in the estate of Publius.

This is a classic example of the principle taught in Hebrews 13:2: “Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares.” While this particular text is not speaking of entertaining angels, Publius did not know the manner of man Paul was, nor was he aware of the true natures of Luke and Aristarchus. Yet, under Divine compulsion, he cared for people he had never met before, and with whom he had no knowledge other than their shipwreck and Paul’s encounter with a viper.

The Virtue of Hospitality

We live in a day when hospitality is not common. Many professed believers have never offered their homes as a haven to anyone except themselves and their family. However, hospitality is a godly virtue.

- Apostolic doctrine admonishes believers to be “given to hospitality” (Rom 12:12).
- A “bishop” or “elder” is to be one who is “given to hospitality” (1 Tim 3:2). He is even to be described as “a lover of hospitality” (Tit 1:8).
- One of the qualifications for a widow to be regularly supported by the church is, “if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints feet” (1 Tim 5:10).
- Solemnly, the saints are admonished, “Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares” (Heb 13:2).
- Peter admonishes, “Use hospitality one to another without grudging” (1 Pet 4:9).

In this text, Publius was hospitable, and during the time Paul was with him, his father was graciously healed.

THE FATHER OF PUBLIUS

“And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux . . .” Other versions read, “And it happened that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and dysentery,” NKJV “And it came about that the father of Publius was lying in bed afflicted with recurrent fever and dysentery,” NASB “And the father of Publius was ill, with a disease of the stomach,” BBE and “And it happened that the father of Publius was sick in bed with recurring attacks of fever and dysentery.” AMPLIFIED

The words “bloody flux” are translated from the Greek word dusenteri,wl , which is transliterated “dusentario.” or “dysentery.” The lexical meaning of this word is, “as an infectious intestinal disease dysentery,” FRIBERG and “as an infectious intestinal disease dysentery,” LOUW-NIDA The English word “dysentery” is defined as “a disease characterized by severe diarrhea with passage of mucus and blood and usually caused by infection.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

The language of the text indicates this was an ongoing, or reoccurring, disease, NASB/AMPLIFIED resulting in the man being confined to a bed.

Note the confidence of the apostle. He “went to see” the man, entering into the place where he laid sick and dissipated. He apparently did not wonder whether or not he should do this, but appeared constrained to do so.

PAUL HEALED HIM

“ . . . to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.” Other versions read, “Paul went in to see him and, after prayer, placed his hands on him and healed him,” NIV “Paul visited him and cured him by praying and putting his hands on him,” NRSV and “Paul went to see him, and after praying and laying his hands on him, he healed him.” AMPLIFIED

Paul Entered In

Note the confidence of the apostle. He “went to see” the man, entering into the place where he laid sick and dissipated. He apparently did not wonder whether or not he should do this, but appeared constrained to do so. Even though he had escaped from a storm over which he had no control, yet he did not hesitate to enter into this open door.

During His earthly ministry, when Jesus had sent out the twelve, He spoke of a person and their house being worthy. “And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy ; and there abide till ye go thence. And when ye come into an house, salute it. And if the house be worthy , let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you” (Matt 10:11-13). Publius and the house in which he dwelt were certainly worthy. He had received Paul and company courteously, supplying their needs and a place to stay for three days. Now, Paul will bring a blessing to his house.

Paul Prayed

The absolute dependence of those early saints upon the Lord is revealed in the times and nature of their prayers.

- When choosing a replacement for Judas (Acts 1:24).
- When threatened by the Jewish leaders (Acts 4:31).

- When setting apart those who had charge of the daily distribution to the believing widows (Acts 6:6).
- When Peter and John prayed that the Samaritans would receive the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:15).
- When Peter raised Dorcas from the dead (Acts 9:40).
- When the church in Antioch sent forth Barnabas and Saul, after being instructed by the Spirit to do so (Acts 13:3).
- When Paul and Barnabas ordained elders in every church (Acts 14:23).
- When Paul and Silas were in prison (Acts 16:25).
- When Paul left the elders from Ephesus (Acts 20:36).
- When Paul left the brethren and families in Tyre (Acts 21:5).

Now, in a display of dependence upon the Lord, Paul prays concerning the father of Publius.

Paul Laid His Hands on the Man

The laying of hands upon the sick was practiced by the Lord Jesus Himself (Mk 6:5; 7:32-34; Lk 4:40; 5:15). When He sent out His disciples to preach the Gospel to every creature, He said certain signs would follow those who believe. One of them was, “they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover” (Mk 16:18). There was even an occasion when “God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul: so that from his body were brought unto the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them” (Acts 19:11-12).

It ought to be obvious that there is a not a certain procedure that is common in all healing. Some people were apparently never healed of their infirmities – like Paul (2 Cor 11:30; 12:5) and Timothy (1 Tim 5:23).

There is no need to attempt to establish that the laying on of hands was intended to be a consistent action that accompanied the healing of the sick. James spoke of praying over, and anointing the sick with oil (James 5:14). At the direction of the Lord, the prophet Isaiah used “a lump of figs” to heal a dangerous boil (2 Kgs 20:7; Isa 38:21). Jesus healed the servant of a certain centurion by simply speaking a word (Matt 8:13). One woman was healed by touching His clothing (Mk 5:27-29). Other sick people sought to touch Jesus Himself, and when they did, virtue went out from Him, and they were healed (Lk 6:17-19). Some lepers were healed by Jesus as they went to show themselves to the priest (Lk 17:14-15). Paul healed an impotent man who was cripple from his mother’s womb by simply telling him to stand up (Acts 14:9-10). In this case, Paul prayed, laid his hands on the man, and healed him.

It ought to be obvious that there is a not a certain procedure that is common in all healing. Some people were apparently never healed of their infirmities – like Paul (2 Cor 11:30; 12:5) and Timothy (1 Tim 5:23).

It is enough to say that healing, like all other spiritual gifts, is traced back to the Holy Spirit (1 Cor 12:4). Such gifts are administrated by the Lord (1 Cor 12:5). It is God who works them wherever they are found (1 Cor 12:5). There is a diversity of operations found in these gifts, but the same God works in them all (1 Cor 12:6). The purpose of all of these gifts is the “profit” of all of the members of the body (1 Cor 12:7). “Gifts of healing” is one of these gifts, and it is “by the same Spirit” (1 Cor 12:9).

Questions about whether of not people can be healed are all foolish. Healing has always been at the discretion of the Lord, and there were even some places where none, or only a very limited number, of this type of miracle could be done (Mk 6:5).

Paul maintained his life so that should the Lord have a work of this kind to do, he was available and suitable to be the vessel through which it was accomplished. That, in my judgment, is to be the stance of the believer – to be “prepared unto every good work.” or “prepared to do any good work” NIV (2 Tim 2:21).

When you are addressing the matter of Divine expression, it is not wise to think of it in terms of a limited period of time, or only in association with certain regions. Those of any age do well to remember “the mighty acts of God” (Psa 106:2; 145:4,12; 150:2). It is a grievous transgression to attempt to deprive the people of God of the persuasion that God can and does work in a manner that is transcendent to nature. God has urged His people to let their “requests be made known unto God” (Phil 4:6). If that requests is for the miraculous intervention of God in the life and affairs of men, it is not to be subdued. If it was not proper to ask for such things, God certainly would not guarantee that His peace would keep their hearts and minds through Christ Jesus (Phil 4:7). It is still true, “all things are possible to him that believeth” (Mk 9:23), and “The things which are impossible with men are possible with God” (Luke 18:27).

Paul Healed the Man

The text is clear in what it states. Paul “healed him.” The one who prayed “healed him.” The one who laid his hands on Publius’ father “healed him.” Like Peter, Paul could say “why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk?” (Acts 3:12). We understand that it was the exalted Christ who did this – but He did it through His servant Paul. That is the point Luke is making.

When Jesus, prior to dying and being raised from the dead, send out the twelve, He said to them, “Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give” (Mat 10:8). It is understood that “He gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of disease” (Matt 10:1). Not limiting such power to the twelve, the Lord also sent out “other seventy also” – that is, in addition to the twelve, and at another time. When these men returned, they confessed, “even the demons are subject to us in Your name.” Jesus explained why this was the case. “Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you” (Luke 10:17-19).

Later, after Jesus had ascended into glory, “Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people” (Acts 6:8). I realize that some declare this was because the apostles laid hands on him, transferring, as it were, the power to do such things. However, the Word of God does not say this. It rather says they were brought to the apostles to be “appointed” over the work of administration, at which time they “prayed” and “laid their hands on them” (Acts 6:6). However, Stephen was full of the Holy Spirit before the apostles laid hands on him (Acts 6:5).

Later, Philip did “miracles” in the city of Samaria. It is written of that occasion, “And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed. And there was great joy in that city” (Acts 8:6-8).

The gifts God put in the church includes “the working of miracles” and “gifts of healing.” These are mentioned in the same breath with “the word of wisdom,” “the word of knowledge,” “faith,” “prophecy,” “the discerning of spirits,” “teachers,” and “governments” (1 Cor 12:10,28-29). The point here is that it is exceedingly difficult to sweep aside “spiritual gifts” as though they were limited to a certain period of time. This is particularly true in view of the mentioning of them in other apostolic writings. Ephesians 4:11 mentions “gifts,” including “evangelists, pastors and teacher.” The twelfth chapter of Romans also mentioned gifts, including “ministering,” or serving, NIV exhorting,” “giving,” “ruling,” and “showing mercy” (Rom 12:6-8). Peter also refers to the “gifts,” including “speaking,” and “ministering” or serving (1 Pet 4:10-11). With the exception of the apostles, I do not believe contends for the cessation of these.

In all of these gifts, the point is not their miraculous nature, but the contribution they make to the people of God. To speak of them as nothing more than a passing fad is to open the door for unbelief, and make life even more difficult for the saints than it already is. If someone responds that they will pass away, we acknowledge this to be true. But faith and hope will also pass away, giving way to the obtaining of the things for which we both long and hope. These things are in the hands of the Lord, and we must view them in that way.

GRACIOUS BENEFITS FOR ALL THE PEOPLE

“ 9 So when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed.”

The healing of the father of Publius was a kind of spiritual catalyst that quickly spread throughout the island.

WHEN THIS WAS DONE

“So when this was done . . .” Other versions read, “after this had happened,” NASB “when this had taken place,” RSV “after this,” CSB “after this event,” MRD “this, therefore, being done,” YLT “after this occurred,” IE “because this cure was performed,” WILLIAMS and “This, then, having taken place.” ABP

A lot of, for want of a better expression, contemporary Christianity is really nothing more than talk. Men banter back and forth about ideas, interpretations, and philosophies, without much of the truth of God being lived out. In distinction to this circumstance, our text speaks of something that was “done” – something that was externalized, and made visible to the sons of men.

Jesus spoke to His disciples about “good works” that could be seen (Matt 5:16). It is also interesting to note that the expression “good works” is never used in a derogatory or unprofitable manner (Matt 5:16; 26:10; Mk 14:6; John 10:32,33; Acts 9:36; Rom 13:3; 2 Cor 9:8; Eph 2:10; Phil 1:6; Col 1:10; 1 Tim 2:10; 3:1; 5:10; 6:18; 2 Tim 2:21; 3:17; Tit 1:16; 2:7,14; 3:1,8,14; Heb 10:24; 13:21; 1 Pet 2:12). In the KJV, NKJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV, and RSV there is only one use of the expression “good work” from Genesis through Malachi. It is found in Nehemiah 2:18, where Nehemiah affirmed the Lord had strengthened the hand of the people to do a “good work.”

The era of the New Covenant is one of godly doing! With hearts made new, the laws of God written upon the heart, and the Holy Spirit living within, men have been equipped to do righteousness, not simply talk about it. Furthermore, when good is done, and righteousness expressed, it provides an environment in which the Lord can work for His own glory.

OTHERS ALSO

When diseased people from all over this island came to Paul and were healed, the word must have quickly spread. Also, there was at least one other ship docked on the island at this time, and may very well have been others. That made the potential for making this work done very large.

“ . . . others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed.” Other versions read, “the rest of those on the island who had diseases also came and were healed,” NKJV “the rest of the people on the island who had diseases were coming to him and getting cured,” NASB “other also in the Isle, which had diseases, came to him, and were healed,” GENEVA “other sick people on the island went to Paul and were made well,” GWN “the other people on the island who had diseases also kept coming and were cured,” AMPLIFIED “began to come to Paul. Paul healed them, too,” IE “the other sick people on the island came, and continued to be restored to health,” MONTGOMERY and “having sicknesses in the land came forward, and were cured.” ABP

The word of the healing of Publius’ father quickly spread, and those on the island who had diseases came, and all of them were healed. This is obviously something to which they were not accustomed, for false gods cannot do such things. The clear insinuation of the verse is that everyone that came was healed – all who extended themselves to get to Paul were blessed with being made well. Note that the people came to Paul, as opposed to others bringing them.

Further, the language indicates continuity – they kept on coming, probably in droves from various parts of the island. This island is seventeen miles in length, and nine to ten miles in breadth. McCLINTOK & STRONG’S That makes it an area of about 170 square miles. It was located about sixty miles from Sicily, and was a kind of crossroads for those traveling by sea. What was done in this island could easily be made known over an extensive territory, ranging from Asia to Africa, and Italy. When diseased people from all over this island came to Paul and were healed, the word must have quickly spread. Also, there was at least one other ship docked on the island at this time, and may very well have been others. That made the potential for making this work done very large.

Throughout Scriptural history, there have been a number of mass healings. During the plague of the serpents, with great numbers of people being bitten, “everyone that was bitten” was promised they would live if they looked upon a brazen serpent that Moses was commanded to make. It came to pass that “if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived” (Num 21:9). We have no idea how many people were healed/ However, in light of the fact that “much people of Israel died” before the Moses made the serpent (Num 21:6), it must have been a large number. This was by no means a common occurrence.

All of this is a picture of an even greater healing of the soul (Psa 41:4). Bodily healings are not to compared with occasions when multitudes of people believed on Jesus and were delivered from the guilt and power of sin.

However, commensurate with the ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ, such things happened with alarming frequency.

- “And His fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto Him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and He healed them ” (Matt 4:24).
- “When the even was come, they brought unto Him many that were possessed with devils: and He cast out the spirits with His word, and healed all that were sick ” (Matt 8:16).
- “But when Jesus knew it, He withdrew himself from thence: and great multitudes followed Him, and He healed them all ” (Matt 12:15).
- “Now when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto Him; and He laid His hands on every one of them, and healed them ” (Luke 4:40).
- “And the whole multitude sought to touch Him: for there went virtue out of Him, and healed them all ” (Luke 6:19).
- “And the people, when they knew it, followed Him: and He received them, and spake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing ” (Luke 9:11).
- “Insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them ” (Acts 5:15).

- “There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one ” (Acts 5:16).

- “And God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul: So that from his body were brought unto the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them ” (Acts 19:11-12).

MASS CONVERSIONS

All of this is a picture of an even greater healing of the soul (Psa 41:4). Bodily healings are not to compared with occasions when multitudes of people believed on Jesus and were delivered from the guilt and power of sin.

- “Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls ” (Acts 2:41).

- “Howbeit many of them which heard the word believed; and the number of the men was about five thousand ” (Acts 4:4).

- “And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women” (Acts 5:14).

- “And the word of God increased ; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith” (Acts 6:7).

- “Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake , hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed. And there was great joy in that city ” (Acts 8:5-8).

- “Then had the churches rest throughout all Judaea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied ” (Acts 9:31).

- “And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord” (Acts 9:35).

- “And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed , and turned unto the Lord” (Acts 11:21).

- “But the word of God grew and multiplied ” (Acts 12:24).

- “And it came to pass in Iconium, that they went both together into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed ” (Acts 14:1).

- “And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few ” (Acts 17:4).

That is the kind of power that is resident in the Gospel! When it is preached in its purity, by those in whom the purpose of God is being worked out, there is no known limit of its influence. Former occultists have been known to at once abandon their views and burn their books of curious arts (Acts 19:19). If a whole city of considerable size could repent when hearing a message of doom (Jonah 3:5-10; Matt 12:41), what can take place when glad tidings of good things are insightfully declared?

In our time much of this power has been forfeited because men insist on attempting to mingle their thoughts with those of the Lord, then declaring their own conclusions as though they were true. Such an admixture makes the word of God “of none effect” (Matt 15:6; Mk 7:13), rendering it powerless in the matter of salvation.

The salvational working of the Lord will only be found where the truth of the Gospel is being declared. The marvelous benefits of salvation cannot be realized through the proclamation of a lie. That is why the Scriptures refer to “the truth of the Gospel” (Gal 2:5,14; Col 1:5). Furthermore, the effective witness of the truth – referred to as shining as lights (Matt 5:14; Phil 2:15), being the salt of the earth (Matt 5:13), and being the epistles of Christ (2 Cor 3:2-3) – is only possible when the truth of the Gospel is lived out. That involves both the death and life of Christ being made known in our bodies (2 Cor 4:10-11).

This was effectively done through Paul, as the Divine nature was made known on Melita through what he did. Here is an example of a city set on a hill.

HONORED BY THE PEOPLE

“ 10 Who also honored us with many honors; and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary.”

When one considers this whole event without the Lord in mind, the possibilities for anything good taking place is almost nil.

- All of the people on board the had survived a fierce storm on the sea.
- No contention broke out among the passengers, even though there came a time when supplies were sparse, and the possibility of escaping by a small ship was set before them.
- Anarchy did not break out because they found themselves in a physically impossible situation because sound advise had not been honored.
- Everyone survived the wreck of their vessel.
- Everyone made it safely to shore.
- Barbarous people confronted them, and even though they did not know who they were, they treated them considerately.
- No one tried to exploit the stranded people.
- Only one person was bitten by a viper, and he survived without any harm.
- The islanders, and especially the chief of the island, did not leave them to find shelter for themselves.
- No attempt was made to have the stranded group work out the cost of their food and supplies. It was all given to them.

The idea is that the islanders placed a high value upon Paul and his fellows, and thus provided them with many things that were also assessed as having value.

The epitaph over the whole affair is stated in the words of Romans 8:28: “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.” This was the particular lot of Paul, Luke, and Aristarchus. The rest also partook of the benefits because they were with the right person – Paul.

It is not without cause that it is written, “So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me” (Heb 13:6; Psa 56:4). Even as the record of the wayward Israelites is written “for our admonition” (1 Cor 10:11), to learn what to avoid, so this record is written to assure us of the care of the Lord for His own (1 Pet 5:7).

HONORED WITH MANY HONORS

“Who also honored us with many honors . . .” Other versions read, “honored us in many ways,” NKJV “honored us with many marks of respect,” NASB “bestowed many honors on us,” NRSV “presented many gifts to us,” RSV “gave us great honor,” BBE “heaped honors on us,” CJB “showed respect for us in many ways,” GWN “showered us with gifts,” LIVING “loaded us with honors,” WEYMOUTH “They treated us royally,” MESSAGE and “showed us every respect and presented many gifts to us, honoring us with many honors.” AMPLIFIED

The word “honored” has the following lexical meaning: “honor which belongs or is shown to one: the honor of one who outranks others, pre-eminence . . . preciousness,” THAYER and “honor, reverence, respect; passive recognition . . . esteem.” FRIBERG

The word “honors” is translated from a word that means, “assigning value to something or to a person considered as property.” FRIBERG

The idea is that the islanders placed a high value upon Paul and his fellows, and thus provided them with many things that were also assessed as having value.

In his letter to Timothy, Paul spoke of bestowing “double honor” on those elders who “labored in the word and in the doctrine” (1 Tim 5:17). The Amplified Bible reads, “Let the elders who perform the duties of their office well be considered doubly worthy of honor [and of adequate financial support], especially those who labor faithfully in preaching and teaching.” Paul also wrote to the Thessalonians, “And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. And be at peace among yourselves” (1 Thess 5:12-13). In other words, those faithful leaders who excel in preaching and teaching are not only to be respected, but provided with honors that are valuable in the sight of the giver as well as the receiver.

Our text provides us with an excellent example of this actually being done by the beneficiaries of Paul’s ministry. The irony of it is that these people did not know the Lord, while some who did know Him failed to so honor Paul. As it is written, “Now ye Philippians know also, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only” (Phil 4:15). By comparison, here is what he wrote to the Corinthians concerning his presence with them. “I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service. And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself” (2 Cor 11:8-9).

While Paul did not insist in receiving such support, choosing rather to preach among them “without charge,” the miserable response that some churches yielded toward Paul places them in a rank that is lower than the response of the heathen from Melita.

While Paul did not insist in receiving such support, choosing rather to preach among them “without charge,” the miserable response that some churches yielded toward Paul places them in a rank that is lower than the response of the heathen from Melita.

AND WHEN WE DEPARTED

“ . . . and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary.” Other versions read, “they supplied us with all we needed,” NASB “they put on board all the provisions we needed,” NRSV “they made presents to us of what should minister to our wants,” DARBY “supplied us with everything we would need for the trip,” NLT and “they provided and put on [board our ship] everything we needed.” LIVING

There are at least two possibilities here.

- They provided what was required to sustain the group during the three months of winter.
- They provided what was required to complete the trip to Rome.

In my judgment both the needs for the three-month stay, and what was required to complete the trip to Rome are included. The fact that Luke adds, “when we departed,” confirms that the latter needs were met. Although he makes no mention of their needs being met during the winter months, it seems to me that this is also included in the manner in which the natives honored them.

NECESSARY USES

The Scriptures speak of daily needs as “necessary uses,” which refers to food, shelter, and clothing.

The Lord Jesus Speaks

Jesus told His disciples not to fret about these needs: “Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?” (Matt 6:25). And again, “Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?” (Matt 6:31). And again, “And he said unto his disciples, Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on. The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment” (Luke 12:22-23).

Jesus spoke against the backdrop of certain commitments God made to Israel. “And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase: then I will command My blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years” (Lev 25:21). He also confirmed this in the sending of daily manna for the people, and commanding water to flow from the flinty rock (Deut 8:3,16; Psa 114:8).

It was not that Israel did nothing, or was not industrious during their journey through their wilderness. They still had to care for their children and their livestock. They had take down the whole camp every time the cloud moved, and set it up when the cloud stopped. However, God taught them that what they gained really came from Him, not from their labors.

Sometimes God would let the Israelites work hard, then put their money into a bag with holes (Hag 1:6). Other times, after toiling in planting and cultivating their crops, their enemies either destroyed them, or took the harvest for themselves (Lev 26:16; Mal 3:11). Other times, when the Lord was displeased with Israel, their seed rotted in the ground, never producing fruit (Joel 1:17). There were even times when insects were sent to destroy their crops (Amos 4:9).

Apostolic Doctrine

The saints are reminded, “Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have : for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee” (Heb 13:5).

Paul wrote to Timothy, “But godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment let us be therewith content” (1 Tim 6:6-8).

As a personal testimony to the glorious effect of contentment, Paul wrote, “Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound: every where and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me” (Phil 4:11-13). Precious few people know “how to abound,” for an excessive amount of money and resources has destroyed many a soul. Others do not know how to “be abased,” when they do not appear to have enough, and resources are sparse.

The point is that provisions for the sustenance of life are not to be taken for granted, as though they were strictly owing to man’s productivity. In the text before us, two hundred and seventy-six people needed to be sustained for three months on the island of Melita, and for the duration of the trip to Rome. God brought them to a distant island, where He commanded the blessing upon them through a barbarous people.

Necessary Uses

Believers are reminded to be as industrious as is possible, without mitigating their fellowship with Christ. Paul wrote to Titus about this matter. “Our people must learn to devote themselves to doing what is good, in order that they may provide for daily necessities and not live unproductive lives” NIV (Titus 3:14).

Some people labor for luxuries, and in the process starve their souls. They plan for a lucrative career without giving due regard to their spiritual needs. I am careful to say that having more than enough is not of itself wrong. Nevertheless, those who are in such a case are exhorted to use their resources in a godly manner. “Instruct those who are rich in this present world not to be conceited or to fix their hope on the uncertainty of riches, but on God, who richly supplies us with all things to enjoy. Instruct them to do good, to be rich in good works, to be generous and ready to share, storing up for themselves the treasure of a good foundation for the future, so that they may take hold of that which is life indeed” NASB (1 Tim 6:17-19).

Every believer is to “lay hold on eternal life” (1 Tim 6:12). Those, however, who have an abundance, must extend themselves to do so, overcoming covetousness, and using their resources to “do good,” being “generous to share.” This is not a common word in our time.

We have a noble example of this kind of sharing in our text, both by the governor of the island, and its citizens. In this case, the sharing was done without an exhortation to do so.

AFTER THREE MONTHS THEY DEPARTED

” 11 And after three months we departed in a ship of Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, whose sign was Castor and Pollux.”

AFTER THREE MONTHS

“And after three months . . .” There are at least five other records of a three month period in Scripture.

- The ark of the covenant was kept in the house of Obededom for three months, during which the Lord blessed his house (2 Sam 6:11; 1 Chron 13:14).
- Mary, the mother of Jesus, spent three months with Elizabeth, until the time of the birth of John the Baptist (Lk 1:56).
- After Moses was born, he remained in his father’s house for three months (Ex 2:2; Acts 7:20; Heb 11:23).
- Paul reasoned in the synagogue of Ephesus for three months, then, because of the hardness of the Jews taking the disciples and removing to the school of Tyrannus (Acts 19:8-9).

- Paul spent three months in Greece after going over the region of Macedonia (Acts 20:3).

The three months of our text was the time of winter, when the ships did not go out to sea (Acts 27:12).

We are given no information of the activities taking place during This period of time. Some kind of communication with the people continued, for they loaded necessary supplies for the travelers in the ship of departure. Perhaps the sick and diseased were continually coming to Paul from various parts of the island. However, I find it difficult to believe that Paul was idle during this period of time. There is no record of him preaching on the island, although I do not find it difficult to think of him doing so.

We learn from this that there are details that do not need to be known. O, that there was more wisdom among professing Christians on the matter of knowing what to report and what not to report.

WE DEPARTED IN A SHIP OF ALEXANDRIA

Melita, then, was a kind of stopover for ships sailing to Italy. How many ships were there is not known. It ought to be noted that Julius was alert to the circumstances of the island, always seeking to carry out his responsibilities in a timely manner . Sometime during the three months they were on the island, Julius had learned of this ship, and made arrangements to transport the passengers for which he was responsible to Italy.

This must have been a sizeable ship to have taken on board two hundred and seventy-six additional passengers, in addition to the supplies that were loaded by the natives of the island.

WHOSE SIGN WAS CASTOR AND POLLUX

“ . . . whose sign was Castor and Pollux.” Other versions read, “Whose figurehead was The Twin Brothers,” NKJV “with the figurehead of the twin gods Castor and Pollux,” NIV “under the sign of the Dioscuri,” BBE “called "Twin Gods," CJB “with the Dioscuri for its ensign,” DARBY “whose badge was Castor and Pollux,” GENEVA “had the gods Castor and Pollux carved on its front,” GWN “It was three months after the shipwreck before we set sail again, and this time it was in The Twin Brothers of Alexandria,” LIVING “an Alexandrian vessel, called the "Twin Brothers,” WEYMOUTH “an Alexandrian ship named The Twin Brothers,” WILLIAMS “an Alexandrian marked by the ensign Dioscuri,” ABP “The ship was from Alexandria in Egypt and was known as "The Twin Gods,” CEV and “The ship had a carved Gemini for its figurehead: "the Heavenly Twins.” MESSAGE

I have taken the time to list the various translations of this verse in order to confirm the liberty translators have taken with the text. The plethora of Bible versions reflects the state of the modern church – divided, and not seeing the Scriptures alike. Of old time, it was easier for men to at least agree on what the Scriptures said. These days it is well nigh impossible for such agreement to be had. At least ancient scribes took care to relate what was said in the text, preserving the various expressions with which believers had become accustomed. But this is not at all philosophy of modern translators. Many of them have actually reshaped the text, even leaving out certain texts in the name of scholarship.

THE SHIP'S SIGN

Whose sign was The Twin Brothers (Di>oskouroi , Latin the constellation Gemini) . The twin sons of Jupiter and Leda, Castor and Pollux, brothers of Helena (“fratres Helenis, lucida sidera,” Horace, ‘Od.,’ 1:3, 2), were called by the Greeks Dioscuri, the sons of Jove. It was their special office to assist sailors in danger of shipwreck. Hence Horace, in the ode just quoted, prays that Castor and Pollux, in conjunction with other deities, would carry the ship in which Virgil sailed safe to Attica. And in Ode 12:27, etc., he describes the subsidence of the storm, and the calming of the waves, at the appearance of the twin stars, of Leda’s sons. It was, therefore, very natural to have the Dioscuri for the para>shmon , the sign of the ship. Every ancient ship had a para>shmon , “a painted or carved representation of the sign which furnished its name on the prow, and at the stern a similar one of their tutelary deity.”

This is not the place to engage in an apologetic for the nature of Scripture translation. However, suffice it to say, men have not been freed to manipulate the text of Scripture, or to in any way change what men have been accustomed to reading. It is the business of preachers and teachers to expound the Word, elaborating on the proper meaning of the text, integrating it with the rest of Scripture, and showing how it reveals the nature and purpose of God, and how it bears upon the testimony of Jesus. All of this requires a knowledge of the text itself that is common among believers.

The Philosophy of Scripture Translation

This reflects my own understanding of this matter. Yet, I feel compelled to share it, for I think there is far too much confusion on this issue. No translation of Scripture is to be an interpretation of the Scriptures themselves. The proper translation of Scripture is to project what is said, not what is intended by what is said. It is precisely at this point that many versions of the Bible fall to the ground. They attempt to project the meaning of the text rather than the affirmation of the text – and there is great difference between the two.

A proper translation of the Bible can only be done by those who have a wide scope of knowledge. Among the things that must be known are:

- The language of the original text.
- The best and most precise form of the language into which it is translated.
- A working knowledge of the Scriptures themselves.
- An understanding of God and His eternal purpose.
- The Divine intention of the Scriptures.

Where there are alternative meanings to words, the definition that best suites the rest of Scripture, the nature of God, and the revealed intention of Scripture must be chosen. In my judgment there was a greater awareness of matters of this sort in earlier years. Today there is a sort of pseudo-scholarship that appears to have dictated the compilation of many Bible versions. I do not believe such translations have been driven by either the awareness of God, and insight into the divinely appointed needs of the people of God.

The “sign,” or figurehead, that was on this ship was an image of Castor and Pollux, the mythical twin gods who were purported to be twin sons of Jupiter ad Leda. According to the times, these were special gods who were devoted to protecting sailors who were in danger of shipwreck. In some way, carvings of metallic castings had been made of these figures, and were on the forepart of the ship.

SOMETHING TO BE SEEN

Here was a ship that carried an idol as its ensign. How is it that Paul did not raise an objection to this circumstance? Elsewhere Paul addressed the matter of purchasing something that had been devoted to an idol. There was, for example, meat sold in the market that had actually been offered to idols. What should the believer do? Paul wrote, "Eat whatever is sold in the meat market, asking no questions for conscience' sake" NKJV (1 Cor 10:25). It is understood that if the person knew it was offered to idols, he would not eat it – not because it was strictly unlawful, but because it was not expedient (1 Cor 10:23). If the meat was of an excellent quality, and the price was right, yet it was known that it was offered to idols, Paul adds, "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth" (1 Cor 10:24). The believer is to consider how this will look to a weaker brother who still does not know there is only one God (1 Cor 8:1-7). This, of course, calls for spiritual sensitivity and alertness.

Paul then paints another scenario. In this one, a brother is invited to a feast where it is possible meat offered to idols would be served. Here is his counsel. "If any of them that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go; whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience sake. But if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice unto idols, eat not for his sake that showed it, and for conscience sake: for the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof: conscience, I say, not thine own, but of the other: for why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience?" (1 Cor 10:29).

In this text, Paul has already made known whom he serves – and it is not these idols (Acts 27:23). None of those traveling with him will conclude that he condones the idols of Castor and Pollux.

I have briefly dealt with this matter because there are believers who avoid conducting business where unacceptable things are done. While no person can make a law for another in such matters, every person in Christ is responsible for conducting their lives so people will not be led to wrong conclusions about them. This is part of working out your own salvation with fear and trembling. You must be guided by your own conscience on the matter, and a spiritual alertness concerning how your actions will be viewed by others. This requires both faith and love.

CONCLUSION

In fifty-five verses (Acts 27:1-44; Acts 28:1-11), about four months have been summarized ["The next day" (27:3); "The next day" (27:18); "Many days" (27:7); "many days" (27:20); "a day" (27:29); "fourteen days" (27:33); "three days" (28:7); "three months" (28:11)]. It should be noted that the Divine manner is to touch only briefly on incidentals, but elaborate upon this directly bearing upon His purpose. It is good for the people of God to learn to assess their lives in such a manner. By so doing, the working of the Lord becomes more evident. Those who major on incidentals, and allow their attention to be drawn to things that do not directly bear upon their eternal destiny, will find it most difficult to detect the hand of the Lord in their lives.

One of the great jeopardies of our time is the penchant for trivia, incidentals, and things that have little to do with seeking first the kingdom of God and His righteousness (Matt 6:33). Things that, technically speaking, are not wrong can rob the soul of fundamental realities – like eternal life, fellowship with Christ, and growing in the grace and knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. A person can become absorbed with making a living, getting an education, and obtaining conveniences. In the process, spiritual life bleeds away, affection for the things of God cools, and soon the individual hardly thinks of the Lord at all. It takes some kind of crisis to awaken the slumbering soul, and even then, the person may awaken with an improper attitude, perspective, and intention.

In this matter, spiritual focus is greatly to be sought and maintained. Like the record of Paul's journey to Rome, the things that pertain to being brought to glory must become our accent.

There really is no regimen or human discipline that can successfully maintain such a focus. Rather, it is living by faith, walking in the Spirit, and pressing toward the mark that keeps the soul awake. Continual exposure to the word of God and the fellowship of God's people are indispensable to the maintenance of a proper focus – one that will sustain the soul, keep the heart tender, and enable good spiritual sight and hearing.

When we stand before the judgment seat of Christ, I do not doubt that our lives will be reviewed in the manner revealed in the Scriptural records of godly men and women. Key things will be shown that explain why men were steadfast, or why they fell by the wayside. Those who fell from grace (Gal 5:4) did so because they were diverted by lesser things.

Lesson #106

PAUL ARRIVES IN ROME

“ 28:12 And landing at Syracuse, we tarried there three days. 13 And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium: and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli: 14 Where we found brethren, and were desired to tarry with them seven days: and so we went toward Rome. 15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii forum, and The three taverns: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage. 16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard: but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him. 17 And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans. 18 Who, when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me. 19 But when the Jews spake against it, I was constrained to appeal unto Caesar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of. 20 For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you: because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain. 21 And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judaea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came showed or spake any harm of thee. 22 But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against.” (Acts 28:12-22)

INTRODUCTION

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

On the way to Rome there were refreshing visits with brethren in Puteopli, Appii Forum, and The Three Taverns. The closeness of the saints of God during that time was very evident, and there was a certain reliance upon them for encouragement and refreshment. Believers were not only eager to be with those through whom grace was ministered, but were willing to inconvenience themselves for that benefit. Having arrived in Rome, special provisions were made for Paul to dwell alone – an extraordinary benefit for a prisoner. This was not like solitary confinement, but was a provision that allowed him to have visitors. Paul first called the chief of the Jews together to explain the reason for his presence. He sought to dispel any false rumors about his circumstance, acquainting the Jews with the truth of the matter. The Jews made clear that they had not received any bad reports about him, but were desirous to know more. They particularly wanted to know more about “this sect,” elsewhere called “the way.” Apparently, among the Jews, there was not much familiarity in

FELLOWSHIP WITH THE SAINTS

Here is a Kingdom benefit that has not been properly presented or lived out in our times. Much of what is being offered to professed believers conveniently ignores the people themselves, focusing on some popular speaker, or some form of religious entertainment. In the Christian media, the thrust is not the people being addressed, but to the various ministries that are doing the presentation. As a result, the modern church is much like a Ezekiel’s valley of dry bones, which were scattered and very dry.

However, this is not at all what salvation is calculated to do. One of the primary things we learn about the real “church” is that it is “the body of Christ.” That is, it is the means through which Christ expresses Himself. There the church, or His body, is referred to as “the fulness of Him which filleth all in all” (Eph 1:23).

- Our personal identity is tied to the church – Christ’s body. “Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular” (1 Cor 12:27). It is true that each member is “joined unto the Lord” (1 Cor 6:17), and is personally responsible for “holding the Head” (Col 2:19). The effectiveness of that personal union, however, is wrought out within the body of Christ. This is so because all the fulness of Christ is not given to a single member. Each member of the body has a “measure” of faith that is designed to benefit the other members (Rom 12:3).

- In the capacity of Head over all things, Christ has been given to the church – His body. “And hath put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be the Head over all things to the church, which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in al” (Eph 1:22-23). Jesus has not been made the Head over all things for the individual. The target of His ministry is the whole body – not necessarily simultaneously, but within the grand scope of fulfilling God’s eternal purpose.

- The various teaching ministries Jesus has given, have been given to the church – Christ’s body. “And He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ” (Eph 4:11-12). Spiritual growth and maturity are not intended to be realized independently of Christ’s body, the church. That is why believers are “added to the church” (Acts 2:47), and “set . . . in the body, as it hath pleased Him” (1 Cor 12:18).

- Nourishment is ministered to the church – Christ’s body. “For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church: for we are members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones” (Eph 5:30). There is a personal aspect to salvation. As Paul well stated, “I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me” (Gal 2:20). This, however, is from the viewpoint of output, not input. While Jesus does minister to the individual, it is the church as a whole that is His “body,” is presently betrothed to Him (2 Cor 11:2), and is destined to be His “wife” (Rev 19:7).

Because of the deficiency of, and corruption within, the modern church, an inappropriate attitude toward the collective people of God is being developed. More and more, because it is so difficult to find a gathering of devoted disciples of Jesus, serious people are withdrawing from the assembly of the godly. However, as will be demonstrated in our text, those in Christ Jesus must seek out kindred spirits in order that proper spiritual growth may be realized.

The number of disciples that come together is not the most important factor. Jesus pledged His presence wherever “two or three are gathered together in My name” (Matt 18:20).

There is no substitute for the assembly of the saints of God. This is indicated in the 133rd Psalm, which speaks of God commanding a blessing upon His people. “Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron’s beard: that went down to the skirts of his garments; as the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion: for there the LORD commanded the blessing, even life for evermore. (Psa 133:1-3).

Matters that needed to be resolved before the disciples were “endued with power” were addressed when continuing in “one accord,” the number of them being “about an hundred and twenty” (Acts 1:14). When the day of Pentecost arrived, and the prophecy of Joel was fulfilled, the disciples were “all with one accord in one place” (Acts 2:1). After the three thousand were baptized “all that believed were together” (Acts 2:44). When the disciples were empowered to preach the Word in the face of persecution, “they were assembled together” (Acts 4:31).

When Paul met with the brethren in Troaz, “they were gathered together” (Acts 20:8). Paul wrote to the brethren in Rome about being “comforted together with you by the mutual faith of both you and me” (Rom 1:12). This confirms there is participation in the assembly, as opposed to there being a kind of one-man show for the people. Paul twice spoke to the Corinthians about being “gathered together” “into one place” (1 Cor 11:20; 14:23). He also wrote to them of a kind of spiritual productivity that should take place when they came together: “How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying” (1 Cor 14:26). Everything that was spoken was to be understandable, even if it required an interpreter (1 Cor 14:27-28). All of this was known very well by Paul, and accounts for his constant recourse to the brethren. There is a certain consistency in this manner of life throughout the revealed history of Paul.

LANDING IN SYRACUSE

“ 28:12 And landing at Syracuse, we tarried there three days.” Other versions read, “We put in at Syracuse and stayed there three days,” NIV and “We landed at Syracuse and remained there three days.” AMPLIFIED

Having resumed their journey after the passing of winter, they sailed about one hundred miles to the capital city of Sicily, Syracuse.

LANDING IN SYRACUSE

Syracuse was the capital city of Sicily, which was an island of Italy, “the largest and one of the most densely populated in the Mediterranean Sea.” BRITANNICA Adam Clarke says of this city, “Syracuse is one of the most famous cities of antiquity: it is the capital of the island of Sicily, and was built about 730 years before the Christian era. It lies 72 miles S. by E. of Messina, and about 112 of Palermo . . . In its ancient state, it was about 22 English miles in circumference; and was highly celebrated for the martial spirit of its inhabitants. . . . This city was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake in 1693: its present population amounts to but about 18,000. Christianity, in some form or other, has existed here ever since St. Paul spent the three days in it, mentioned in the text. ”

Although this was a prominent city, you will note that there is no mention of the group sight-seeing, or casual meanderings about the city, which was twenty-two miles in circumference. I understand that Paul was a prisoner, yet we will find occasions when he was allowed to spend time with various brethren. This is a clear indication of his preferred company.

WE TARRIED THERE THREE DAYS

During this period, we do not know if Paul spoke the word of the Lord, or reasoned with some people concerning the things of God. I would not be surprised if he did so. The period apparently has no immediate relevance to the mission of Paul. The three day layover was probably related to unloading and loading cargo.

We learn from this that there are incidentals of life that do not require elaboration. In making reports of works being done for the Lord, it is important to confine ourselves to relevant matters so as not to arouse a kind of fleshly curiosity. In the Kingdom of God, mere incidentals are distracting, and tend to hide the realities that are required to sustain life. Frankly, some things are not worth talking about.

WE FOUND BRETHERN

“ 13 And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium: and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli: 14 Where we found brethren, and were desired to tarry with them seven days: and so we went toward Rome.”

WE FETCHED A COMPASS

“And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium . . .” Other versions read, “From there we circled round and reached Rhegium,” NKJV “we sailed around and arrived,” NASB “we set sail and arrived,” NIV “we weighed anchor and came,” NRSV “we made a circuit and arrived,” RSV “going about in a curve. We came,” BBE “we arrived at Rhegium by tacking,” CSB “going in a circuitous course, we arrived,” DARBY “compassing by the shore, we came,” DOUAY “we sailed round the coast and arrived,” NAB “we cast off and arrived,” NET “we set sail and arrived,” NIB “we followed the coast up to Rhegium,” NJB “we set a compass and came to,” TNT and “we made a circuit [following the coast] and reached.” AMPLIFIED

Here, the word “compass” does not refer to “a device for determining directions by means of a magnetic needle or group of needles turning freely on a pivot and pointing to the magnetic north.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER It is realized in the second definition of the noun: “: a curved or roundabout course; i.e. a compass of seven days' journey. MERRIAM- WEBSTER

As indicated in the graphic marked “To Rhegium,” apparently there was no safe direct course from Syracuse to Rhegium. Therefore they sailed close to Sicilia, following its shoreline until they arrived at Rhegium. The phrase “from thence we fetched a compass,” is translated from two Greek words, and is standard sea-faring terminology ([qen perielo,ntej]). The first word means “from which,” that is, from Syracuse. The second word means “made a circuit,” or moved from that location, circuiting, or following the shoreline to their next location.

It also appears from the text that this particular routing was dictated by the manner in which the wind was blowing, as indicated in the next clause. There was an apparent shift in the wind that made the last leg of the trip less difficult. After they had arrived in Rhegium, they were able to sail the more easily to Puteoli.

A Spiritual Application

In this brief account, there is a vivid depiction of the manner in which we are changed from glory to glory (2 Cor 3:18), pressing toward the mark (Phil 3:14), running the race set before us (Heb 12:1-2), and working out our own salvation with fear and trembling (Phil 2:12-13). While the Lord is directing us, leading us, and bringing us, we are not being pulled along by some irresistible force. We have been brought into the process. That involvement is so significant that sometimes it appears that we are in the total charge of it, even though that is not at all the case.

Just as it was necessary for the pilot of the ship on which Paul was sailing to navigate through the waters wisely, so it is essential that those in Christ know how to live wisely. It is imperative that they remain close to what they can see – like the ship following the path of the shoreline of Sicilia. Believers must be “wise unto that which is good” (Rom 16:12). They are to “walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise” (Eph 5:15). They are to “walk in wisdom toward them that are without” (Col 4:5), “abstain from all appearance of evil” (1 Thess 5:22), and “be not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is” (Eph 5:17).

Those who being brought to glory are required to “ follow after the things that make for peace” (Rom 14:19), “ follow after charity” (1 Cor 14:1), and “ever follow that which is good” (1 Thess 5:15). They are to “ follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, and meekness” (1 Tim 6:11). It is also required that they “ follow peace with all men, and holiness” (Heb 12:14). When it comes to the inevitability of suffering, the saints are to “follow” in the “steps” of Jesus (1 Pet 2:21).

All of this is akin to navigating a ship with discretion. Many a professing believer has, so to speak, steered their ship into dangerous waters, as when the managers of the voyage decided to ignore Paul’s advice, and attempt to sail to a more convenient location.

THE SOUTH WIND BLEW

“ , , , and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli . . .” Other versions read, “a south wind sprang up,” NASB “a south wind came up,” NIV “the wind having changed to south,” DARBY “the south wind blowing,” DOUAY “a south wind began to blow” GWN

With the aid of the south wind, they were able to sail to Puteoli in two days – a distance of about 375 miles. It had taken one day to sail from Syracuse to Rhegium, a distance of around 100 miles. Speaking from a general mathematical view, the trip from Syracuse to Rhegium found them traveling at around four miles an hour. From Rhegium to Puteoli, they traveled at around seven miles per hour – almost twice as fast. The difference – a favorable wind.

A Spiritual Application

The above circumstance perfectly fits the nature of spiritual progress, which is always toward a final destination.

PUTEOLI

Sometimes progress is slow, with contrary winds, and the necessity of carefully following what can be more clearly seen. Other times, there are “times of refreshing” (Acts 3:19), that are like south winds that move us toward “the mark” more quickly.

During such times, frequent docking is out of order. For example, as far as I can detect, there were fifteen places to stop between Rhegium and Puteoli. From the practical point of view, had they docked frequently for convenience, they may not have arrived at their destination at all. If they did arrive, it would not have been in a timely manner.

Suffice it to say, Satan will tempt those in Christ to stop their progress in the Lord for one reason or another. The reason may appear to be innocent and harmless. Yet, when the favorable wind of grace is blowing, it is not a time for distracting docking. Those who are serious about following the Lord have learned that the winds that carry us to Zion cannot be scheduled, nor is it wise to use the advantages they yield for only a brief time.

Take the assembly of the godly for an example – assemblies where two or more people “are gathered together” in the name of the Lord (Matt 18:20). They have gathered together “in one place,” and are with “one accord” (Acts 2:1). If the apostle Paul is in their midst, they will listen carefully with him “until midnight” (Acts 20:7). If it is a large body of people listening to the Son of God, they will go three days without eating for the privilege of hearing Him (Matt 15:32).

If, when the saints come together and are so described: “every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation,” and all things are being “done unto edifying” (1 Cor 14:26), the wind is blowing! If, by the grace of God, this is happening frequently, is it really proper to allow for brief spiritual excursions and frequent cessations of periods of progress? Of, is it wiser to continue the trip while the wind is blowing, and make as much progress as possible?

I realize that care must be taken when speaking about things like this, for there may very well be a lack of kindred perception. But notwithstanding the possibility of disagreement, the thrust of apostolic doctrine is in favor of capitalizing upon spiritual advantage. Each person must arrive at their own conclusion. However, in arriving at it, it seems to me that there is a solemn obligation to consider both the nature and purpose of spiritual life and holy gatherings. No person can afford to overlook the fact that life is really like a voyage on the sea, and how we sail it is a critical factor.

WE FOUND BRETHREN

“ . . . Where we found brethren . . .” Other versions read, “we found some brothers,” NIV “we found believers,” NRSV “came across some of the brothers,” BBE “discovered some believers,” GWN “found some [Christian] brethren,” AMPLIFIED “found some of the Lord's followers,” CEV and “found Christian friends.” MESSAGE

PAUL'S CONTACT WITH BRETHREN

- Disciples in Iconium filled with joy (Acts 13:52).
- When stoned at Lystra, the disciples stood around Paul (Acts 14:20).
- Confirmed souls of the disciples (Acts 14:20).
- Confirmed the souls of the disciples in Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch (Acts 14:22).
- Abode a long time with the disciples in Antioch (Acts 14:28).
- Caused great joy among the brethren Phenice and Samaria (Acts 15:3).
- Determined to visit the brethren in every where they had preached (Acts 15:36).
- Confirmed the churches in Syria and Celicia (Acts 15:41).
- Established the churches as they went through the cities (Acts 16:5).
- Comforted the brethren in the house of Lydia (Acts 16:40).
- The brethren in Thessalonica protected Paul and Silas (Acts 17:10).
- Brethren in Berea protected Paul (Acts 17:14).
- Spent a year and six months with brethren in Corinth (Acts 18:11).
- Continued with the brethren in Corinth for as good while (Acts 18:18).
- Spent sometime with the brethren in Antioch (Acts 18:23a).
- Went over the regions of Galatia and Phrygia strengthening the disciples (Acts 18:23b).
- Spent two years in Ephesus at the school of Tyrannus with the disciples (Acts 19:9).

- Disciples in Ephesus protected Paul (Acts 19:30).
- In Ephesus, Paul called the disciples and embraced them (Acts 20:1).
- Abode seven days with the disciples in Troas (Acts 20:6-7).
- From Miletus called the elders from Ephesus and admonished them (Acts 20:17-32).
- Found disciples in Tyre, and tarried seven days with them (Acts 21:4).
- Spent a day with the disciples in Ptolemais (Acts 21:7).
- Disciples from Caesarea joined Paul in his trip to Jerusalem (Acts 21:16).
- Received by the brethren in Jerusalem (Acts 21:17).
- Found brethren in Puteoli, and spent seven days with them (Acts 28:14).
- Brethren from Rome came to meet Paul as far as Apii Forum and the Three Taverns (Acts 28:15).

These words captured my attention: “Where we found brethren!” This involved some kind of quest or search, as the various versions suggest : “came across some of the brothers,” BBE and “discovered some believers.” GWN The Greek word translated “found” is eu`ro,ntej , which, as it is used here, has the following lexical meaning: “to find . . . to come upon, hit upon, to meet with; after searching, to find a thing sought,” THAYER “to find after searching discover, come on,” FRIBERG and “to learn the whereabouts of something, to find, to discover.” LOUW-NIDA

Keeping in mind that Paul was a prisoner, and probably was not allowed to roam about at will, the value of Luke and Aristarchus being with him is now seen even more clearly. Not only were they good companions to him, fellowshipping in the Lord, and speaking of things that made for edification. They were also key factors in finding kindred brethren in Italy, hundreds of miles from their own homeland. Paul was from Judea. Aristarchus was a “Macedonian from Thessalonica” (Acts 27:2), which was in Asia, at least 750 miles from Puteoli, as the crow flies, and probably well over 1,000 miles by ship. There is no evidence that any of this group had ever been in Italy.

Brethren in Puteoli

How is it that “brethren” were found in Italy? The truth of the matter is that we do not know. There is absolutely no record of anyone carrying the Gospel this far. When the believers were “scattered abroad” by persecution in Jerusalem, they “went every where preaching the Word” (Acts 8:4). Philip “went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them” (Acts 8:5). Others, we are told, “traveled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only” (Acts 11:19). There was also a period of two years in which “all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks” (Acts 19:10). However, all of those places were a great distance from Italy.

It is precisely at this point that the nature of spiritual life is once again confirmed. Jesus affirmed, “A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid” (Matt 5:14). Paul declared to the faithful brethren at Philippi that they were shining “as lights in the world” (Phil 2:15). He wrote to the brethren at Rome affirming that their faith their faith was “spoken of throughout the whole world” (Rom 1:8). He wrote to the Thessalonians, “For from you sounded out the word of the Lord not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing” (1 Thess 1:8).

Newness of life cannot be hidden! Wherever God is genuinely at work, the word will get out, and kingdom initiatives will be carried out without human organization and programs. The book of Acts is a sterling example of this truth. The God who leads the work will see to it that proper reports of it are made known.

I cannot help but note the difficulty with which the modern church spreads. There is a need for all manner of programs and the development of techniques. The religious air is filled with constant pleas for money to do the Lord's work. Great sections of the world, according to modern claims, have still not heard the Gospel. This condition has stretched over sixty years of which I have personal knowledge. Yet, 30-35 years after Pentecost Paul wrote to the Colossians, "If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven ; whereof I Paul am made a minister" (Col 1:23). Men may choose to mitigate this by saying the "then known world" was meant. But that does not diminish the power of the statement one whit. The truth of the matter is that by the middle of the first century the Gospel had proliferated more extensively than it has in the nearly two thousand years that followed.

Why was this so? It was because the people had real spiritual life – newness of life. They were not in the grip of human organization, but were being led by the Holy Spirit. They really were "the light of the world" and "the salt of the earth" (Matt 5:13-14). The disciples that they made (Matt 28:19) were the kind that left all to follow Jesus. The Gospel they preached was "power of God unto salvation."

The truth of the matter is that when the emphasis was switched to recruitment instead of edifying the body of Christ, the rapid spread of the Gospel was halted. I do not know of any pattern of sound thought that can successfully negate that proposition. If this is not the case, then the blessing God somehow has been diminished, and the power of the Gospel dissipated.

The brethren in Puteoli, and others who will surface from Rome are powerful confirmations of the nature of spiritual life and the power of the Gospel.

Paul's Contact with Brethren

The details of Paul's contact with "brethren" are numerous throughout Luke's record of his travels. His most lengthy periods of time were spent among brethren. Often he would extend his stay in a place to be with the brethren, as when he was among the disciples in Antioch (Acts 14:28), Ephesus (Acts 19:10; 20:31), Corinth (Acts 18:11), Troas (Acts 20:7), Tyre (Acts 21:4), and now in the city of Puteoli (Acts 28:14). He spent time visiting the churches in large regions (Acts 15:3,41; 16:5; 18:5,23).

The Priority of Brethren

Somehow, with the popularity of religious recruitment and the quest for numerical church growth, the priority of the people of God has been overlooked – and that is a very charitable statement of the situation. When we refer to "brethren," we are speaking of those who are in Christ Jesus. They are primarily HIS brethren (Heb 2:11). Ponder what He said about this unique body of people.

- When told that His mother and brethren wanted to speak with him, He replied, "Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren!" (Mat 12:48-49).

- "But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren" (Mat 23:8).

- "And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me" (Mat 25:40).

- "My mother and My brethren are these which hear the word of God, and do it" (Luke 8:21).

One of the signs that we have “passed from death unto life: is that “we love the brethren” (1 John 3:14).

When writing to the churches, Paul referred to believers as “brethren” over one hundred times . As a cluster of people those in Christ are referred to as “the brethren” forty-six times from Acts through Third John. By way of comparison, no inspired man ever addressed those in Christ as “Christians.” They are called “followers of God” (Eph 5:1), “the body of Christ” (1 Cor 12:27; Eph 4:12), and those who “are sanctified” (Acts 20:32; 26:18; 1 Cor 1:2; 6:11; Heb 2:11; 10:10,14; Jude 1:1). Twenty-five times they are identified as “disciples.” Thirty-nine times they are referred to as “the saints,” and twenty-one times as simply “saints.”

The Manner of Closeness

The manner of closeness between brethren in Christ Jesus transcends all other relationships. It is deeper than the bond realized in marriage and family associations. There are social and political causes that knit men together, but they are vastly inferior to brethren in Christ, whose hearts are “knit together in love” (Col 2:2). By demonstration, Jesus confirmed that He was closer to those who did the will of His Father than He was to His own mother and half-brothers (Matt 12:50). Stretching forth His hand toward His disciples He said, “Behold my mother and my brethren!” (Mat 12:49).

Speaking of the superior relationship believers have with one another, apostolic doctrine affirms, “So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another” (Rom 12:5). And again, “ we are members one of another ” (Eph 4:25).

This body of people is not distinguished by their attitude toward men in general, or the kindness they may express toward sinners – although they are noted for such things. Their real mark of distinction is that they “love the brethren”

These are the people who enjoy “the unity of the Spirit” (Eph 4:3), and “the unity of the faith” (Eph 4:13). Together, they are described as “the household of faith” (Gal 6:10), “the household of God” (Eph 2:19), and Christ’s own “house” (Heb 3:6). As a group of people, they are “the body of Christ” (1 Cor 12:27), “the temple of God” (1 Cor 3:16-17), and “the whole family in heaven and earth” (Eph 3:15). They are “the people of God” (1 Pet 2:10), “ the children of God” (Rom 8:16), “the children of Abraham” (Gal 3:7), “the children of promise” (Gal 4:28), and “the children of light” (Eph 5:8; 1 Thess 5:5).

This body of people is not distinguished by their attitude toward men in general, or the kindness they may express toward sinners – although they are noted for such things. Their real mark of distinction is that they “love the brethren” (1 John 3:14). Jesus said the mark of distinction among them that would identify them as His disciples was “if ye have love one for another” (John 13:35). As careful as they are to be about honoring God in their conduct toward sinners, the acid test of whether or not they are the children of God is whether or not he “loves his brother” (1 John 4:20). John summarized the commandment that we have received from God: “And this commandment have we from Him, That he who loveth God love his brother also” (1 John 4:21).

The eternal destiny of all men will, in part, be determined by how they viewed the brethren of Jesus – those who were begotten of God (Matt 25:40,45).

There is such a unanimity of proclamation on this matter that it is astounding so little is made of it in our time. It is commonly taught that our affiliation with God is confirmed by our response to the poor of this world, how friendly we are with the ungodly, and how we blend in with humanitarian causes. That there is a place for such expressions we cannot deny. That they are where the test is applied concerning the validity of identity with God is emphatically denied. In his first epistle the apostle John refers to the necessity of loving one’s brother in Christ (2:9-11; 3:10,12,14,15,17; 4:20,21,21; 5:16).

Let no man come short in the duty of “doing good unto all men.” But let them do so remembering that good is to be done “ especially unto them that are of the household of faith” (Gal 6:10).

It is Paul’s perception of these priorities that led him and those with him to seek out the company of those who were reconciled to God, and members of the household of faith. This is an unvarying trait of the Kingdom of God.

DESIRED TO TARRY WITH THEM

“ . . . and were desired to tarry with them seven days . . .” Other versions read, “were invited to stay,” NKJV “invited us to spend a week,” NIV “were entreated to tarry,” ASV “who kept us with them,” BBE “begged us to stay,” DARBY “urged us to stay,” NAB “had the great encouragement of staying,” NJB “were called upon to remain with them,” YLT “asked us to stay,” IE and “we were appealed upon by them.” ABP

This was no doubt the first time these particular brethren had met Paul. Prior to this, his global fame was realized in both Asia and Greece, but not, so far as we know, in Italy. Yet here, as well as everywhere else Paul went, the love of the brethren was clearly possessed. They had doubtless heard of Paul, and now they had the advantage of being with him for a brief period of time. They made a strong appeal to him to remain with them for seven days, apparently the period of time in which their ship would be docked at that port.

This kind of brotherly love was often exhibited during the journeys of Paul.

- Sergius Paulus called for Barnabas and Saul, desiring to hear the word of the Lord (Acts 13:7).
- Lydia asked Paul and Silas to abide in her house (Acts 16:15).
- Brethren in Ephesus desired that he remain with them (Acts 18:20).
- He tarried with disciples at Tyre (Acts 21:4).
- Paul and company remained at the house of Philip for “many days” (Acts 21:10).
- The brethren in Puteoli begged them to remain for one week (Acts 28:14).

This is not to mention converted Jews from throughout the world who chose to remain in Jerusalem with the brethren after their conversion (Acts 2:44; 4:32). After ministering to many people at the house of Cornelius, the people asked Peter to remain with them for “certain days” (Acts 10:48). There were also the extended stays of Paul with the brethren in Antioch, Corinth, Ephesus, and Troas.

Wherever there is a record of an increase of believers, there is the expression of brotherly love – a demonstrable preference for the people of God. This sort of thing is becoming more and more rare in the Christian world of our day. There is considerable pressure placed on some of God’s people to meet with less frequency and in more brief gatherings. In my judgment, there is no way to reconcile this kind of circumstance with the reports of genuine conversions that are record in Scripture.

AND SO

“ . . . and so . . .” Other versions read, “and thus,” NASB “,” CJB “then ,” MRD and “in this way,” NET/WILLIAMS

The words “and so” are not a mere English filler. They are translated from the Greek word ou[twj , which has the following lexical meaning: “in this manner, thus,” GINGRICH “in the manner spoken of; in the way described; in the way it was done; in this manner; in such a manner; thus, so,” THAYER

“in the same way, like this,” UBS and “so, in this way (referring to what precedes).” LEH

“From Puteoli they would go twelve miles eastward to intersect the great Appian Way at Capua, (see map,) the luxurious city which melted away the hardihood of Hannibal’s veteran army. The Appian Way was titled in ancient times the “Queen of Great Thoroughfares.” It was built by Appius Claudius four hundred and eleven years after the founding of the city. It stretched from Rome, the length of southern Italy, until, as seen on the map, it reached Brundisium at the extremity of the heel of the boot-like shape of Italy.” DANIEL WHEDON

Some understand that the group journeyed by foot from Puteoli to Three Taverns, and from there took a ship to Rome. Others are of the persuasion that they journeyed all the way to Rome by foot, or on the land, taking the great Appian Way.

“Three Taverns was a place in the Appian way, thirty miles from Rome.” TSK I gather, therefore, that “so” indicates the following. They continued their travels on the ground, AND with various encouragements from the brethren who accompanied them.

This is also a confirmation of the Lord moving the heart of Julius the centurion. How is it that he was so gracious toward Paul, permitting him and his brethren to remain a whole week in Puteoli? That would require care of the other prisoners, of which no mention is made. The walk on the road would also appear to introduce the danger of prisoners escaping. If the soldiers were concerned about them escaping from a ship during a vicious storm, what about them escaping while walking on the open road? These are all matters that were governed by the Lord in the interest of His servant, Paul, getting to Rome. The steps of a good man are, of a truth, “ordered by the Lord” (Psa 37:23).

WE WENT TOWARD ROME

“ . . . we went toward Rome.” Other versions read, “we came,” NASB/NIV “we went on toward,” CJB “we proceeded towards,” MRD “we came,” NET and “we finally reached.” WILLIAMS

This verse does not say that they actually arrived in Rome at that time, something that is declared in several versions (NET, WILLIAMS, ASV, NASB, NIV, NRSV, RSV, CSB, ERV, ESV, NAB, NAU, NIB, NJB, NLT, TNT, YLT, IE, WEYMOUTH, ISV, MONTGOMERY, AMPLIFIED). The word translated “toward” can also be translated “into,” or “to.” STRONG’S Here, however, the meaning of “unto” or “towards” is the proper rendering. The idea is first that they resumed their journey to Rome, and secondarily that their journey was marked by contact with the brethren.

The particular point to be seen here is that as the journey drew to a close, Paul was being encouraged and strengthened by the brethren. This was in order that when he arrived he would be in a sound state of mind, and ready to engage in the work of the Lord immediately. He was aware that the real purpose for going to Rome was to “bear witness” of the Lord Jesus Christ (Acts 23:11). This would be the ultimate reason for him appearing “before Caesar” (Acts 27:24).

I do not doubt that from the beginning of his arrest until this last leg of the journey, Satan buffeted Paul with all manner of tempting thoughts. However, his efforts were all neutralized by Paul’s timely contact with Christ’s brethren. It must have been similar to his experience when he came into Macedonia. At that time, Paul wrote, “For, when we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but we were troubled on every side; without were fightings, within were fears. Nevertheless God, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by the coming of Titus ; and not by his coming only, but by the consolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; so that I rejoiced the more” (2 Cor 7:5-7).

You see the effects of timely contact with the saints of the Lord. Not only is their personal presence and words of encouragement comforting, but their reports of the working of the Lord added strength and joy to the apostle. It readied him to enter into the work to which he had been called.

All of this activity was directed by the Lord, and is indicative of the manner in which he leads His people. Those who are reconciled to God and walking in the Spirit have an incalculable effect upon Kingdom laborers – and designedly so. This is precisely why the Spirit makes much of the love of, and fellowship with, the people of God. They are nothing less than the extension of Jesus Himself – His body.

THEY CAME TO MEET US

“ 15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii forum, and The three taverns: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage.”

On the last leg of the journey brethren will come to Paul, instead of Paul finding them as he has done throughout the journey. It is important that he arrive in Rome in a proper frame of mind, and the fellowship of the saints and the expression of their mutual faith is a powerful means of accomplishing this.

FROM THENCE

“And from thence . . .” Other versions read, “and from there,” NKJV “Believers in Rome,” GWN “The brothers and sisters in Rome,” NLT and “the brothers in Rome.” LIVING

The words “from thence” refer to the “Rome” of the previous verse: “. . . and so we went toward Rome ” (Acts 28:14). Here again, brethren were found, even though, to this point, there is no Scriptural record of anyone preaching the Gospel there. This circumstance again confirms the relative rapidity with which the Word of God spread during the first 25-30 years of church history.

On the day of Pentecost, “Rome” is one of the places from which people had come to Jerusalem for the Passover and Pentecost feasts: “Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome , Jews and proselytes ” (Acts 2:10). The fact that they are called “strangers” suggests they were proselytes. Church tradition says that Peter founded the church, but the claim cannot be substantiated. If this were the case, Paul would certainly have mentioned him in his letter to the Romans.

In his letter to Rome, Paul mentions a couple there who were in Christ before him: “Salute Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen, and my fellowprisoners, who are of note among the apostles, who also were in Christ before me” (Rom 16:7). Priscilla and Aquila were also there, who were Paul’s “helpers in Christ Jesus” (Rom 16:3).

Thus we are left with no sure word concerning those involved in the formation of this notable church, whose faith was reported throughout the world (Rom 1:8). In the church in Rome we have an example of the gravitation of believers to one another, just as occurred on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:44,46; 4:31; 5:12). Neither Jesus nor His apostles instructed men in a methodology to be used in establishing a church. Men have imagined, however, that there is a need for such strategy, and have therefore introduced various approaches to the matter, even marketing them.

But here we are faced with a church that sprang up, becoming prominent in the Christian world, and having numerous laborers among them (Rom 16:3-15). No apostles were involved in its beginning, and it is even possible that some proselytes were involved in its start. That is the effect of newness of life! It exposes the profound inferiority of the professed church of our time.

WHEN THE BRETHREN HEARD OF US

“ . . . when the brethren heard of us . . .” Other versions read, “heard about us,” NKJV “heard that we were coming,” NIV “had news of us,” BBE “heard the news about us,” CSB “ hearing [of our approach],” MRD “having heard the things concerning us,” YLT “hearing of our movements,”

WEYMOUTH “having had news of us,” AMPLIFIED “heard about our circumstances,” EMTV and “heard we were on the way.” MESSAGE

Behold the love of the brethren made known in their communications concerning the circumstances of their brethren. It is exceeding difficult to imagine this happening in our time, even though there are advanced means of communication. However, a great falling away has occurred in which professed believers are divided, and thus their interest in the whole body has been mitigated, if not altogether eradicated.

Ponder how much is said about the saints sharing knowledge about key people, whether friend or foe, and issues that needed to be known among the saints.

- The suicide of Judas was known throughout Jerusalem (Acts 1:19).
- The events that took place on the day of Pentecost were “noised abroad” (Acts 2:6).
- When Peter and John were released from prison, they went to “their own” and “reported all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them” (Acts 4:23).
- The sudden death of Ananias and Sapphira was heard throughout Jerusalem (Acts 5:5,11).
- Word concerning the conversion of the city of Samaria was heard in Jerusalem (Acts 8:14).
- The disciples in Damascus had heard about the threat of Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9:13).
- The disciples in Joppa heard that Peter was in Lydda (Acts 38).
- It was known throughout Joppa that many had believed in the Lord (Acts 9:42).
- The brethren in Judea heard about the conversion of those who met at the house of Cornelius to hear Peter (Acts 11:1).
- When certain from Jerusalem troubled the Gentile believers, they determined to do something about it (Acts 15:24).
- Timothy was well reported of by the brethren in Lystra and Iconium (Acts 16:2).
- All in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus (Acts 19:10).
- The event in which a demon possessed man overcame the seven sons of Sceva was known throughout the region (Acts 19:17).
- The faith of the church at Rome was spoken of throughout the world (Rom 1:8).
- Paul said there were some who had slanderously reported that he was saying we ought to do evil that good may come, adding that their damnation was just (Rom 3:8).
- It was reported that a fornicator was in the Corinthian church, and was guilty of a sin so reprehensible that even the Gentiles avoided such an involvement (1 Cor 5:1).
- Paul heard about the divisions at Corinth (1 Cor 11:18).
- Paul heard that some in Corinth were saying there is no resurrection of the dead (1 Cor 15:17).

There should be no hesitancy to report matters that bring glory to God, things tend to clarify the truth, and things that bring a certain jeopardy to the saints. People who build up the saints are to be recommended, and those who spread spiritual poison are to be exposed.

Brethren had heard of Paul’s past (Gal 1:13,23)

- Paul had heard of the Ephesians faith and love (Eph 1:15).

- Brethren had heard of the dispensation of grace that had been given to Paul (Eph 3:2).
- The brethren at Philippi had heard that Epaphroditus was sick (Phil 2:26).
- Paul had heard of the faith and love of the Colossian brethren (Col 1:4).
- Paul reported that Hymenaeus and Alexander had made shipwreck of the faith (1 Tim 1:20).
- Paul identified the false doctrine being taught by Hymenaeus and Philetus (2 Tim 2:17).
- Paul reported the evil Alexander did to him (2 Tim 4:14).
- John reports that Diotrephes loved to have the preeminence among the brethren (3 John 1:9).

Among those early saints, newness of life was prominent, and people and matters that touched upon the Lord and His people were reported without shame or fear. Their life centered in Christ, and their love for one another compelled them to report the working of the Lord, as well as special initiatives of the wicked one.

In our times, many of the things that I have listed would be considered nothing more than gossip, or prying into matters that were none of their business. Notwithstanding these foolish charges, the record of such reports have been written, and are to be duly noted.

When a person or people are living unto the Lord, there is no difficulty with these matters. However, when such buy into the world's system of values, and the psychological jargon of the times, a certain disdain will be held for those reporting such things. There should be no hesitancy to report matters that bring glory to God, things tend to clarify the truth, and things that bring a certain jeopardy to the saints. People who build up the saints are to be recommended, and those who spread spiritual poison are to be exposed.

Word Got Out Paul was Coming

We do not know exactly how word got out that Paul and those with him were coming. It certainly was not because of a daily newspaper, electronic media, the Internet, telephone, or some other electronic media. Rather, it was because the people were not only doctrinally members one of another (Rom 12:5; 1 Cor 12:25), but were experientially that as well. They had "the same care one for another" (1 Cor 12:25). They placed a high value on laborers such as Paul. Of course, that is what believers are admonished to do. As it is written, "And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake" (1 Thess 5:13).

All of this postulates that the people are not neglecting "so great salvation" (Heb 2:3), are fighting "the good fight of faith" (1 Tim 6:12), and pressing "toward the mark" (Phil 3:14).

A Spiritual Network Among Believers

There is a kind of spiritual network that links the sons of God together. You have no doubt noted that as soon as you are certain an individual is "born of God," you obtain a keen interest in them, are glad to hear of their well being, and concerned when they are "in any trouble" (2 Cor 1:4). There is also a complementary desire to see these people "face to face," and to enjoy their immediate fellowship. Thus John desired to speak with the "elect lady" "face to face" (2 John 1:12). He wrote to Gaius of the time when he would "speak face to face" with him (3 John 1:14). The elders at Ephesus lamented when they heard they would see Paul's face "no more" (Acts 20:36). Paul declared he “endeavored the more abundantly to see” the face of the Thessalonians “with great desire” (1 Thess 2:17). “Night and day,” he wrote, he and his co-laborers were “praying exceedingly that we might see your face” (1 Thess 3:10). Paul wrote to the brethren in Rome, “I long to see you” (Rom 1:11). To the Philippians he wrote, “I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ” (Phil 1:8).

Paul wrote to the saints in Rome of his desire to be “comforted together with you by the mutual faith both of you and me” (Rom 1:13). He also mentioned his anticipation of being “refreshed” when with them (Rom 15:32). Even the recalcitrant Corinthians were told that Paul could possibly spend the “winter” with them (1 Cor 16:6), and “tarry a while” with them (1 Cor 16:7). Seeking to more firmly establish them in the faith, Paul wrote to the backsliding Galatians, “I desire to be present with you now” (Gal 4:20).

And what shall we say of those who complain about the times they are with fellow believers, or that cast aspersions upon them as though they were seeking their own interests? What of those who are quick to believe the evil reports that are raised by evil people who have defected from the faith? It may be said of such people that they are a breed of Christians that are Whatever moves a person to look with suspicion upon those who are obviously devoted to the Lord, have left the course of the world, and prefer the people of God, cannot be good. Nor, indeed, can it be successfully defended.

nowhere mentioned in Scripture. If they have a penchant for spending time with the ungodly, they may do their best to defend their action. However, that kind of attitude clashes with the Divine mandate to “Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another” (Rom 12:10). Such benighted souls may chide the people of God for not treating the ungodly with a certain preference, as though blasphemers who once honored the name of Jesus, and those who depart from the faith were innocent victims. God, however, will publically rebuke them for their despicable attitude toward His people. When they take the side of the ungodly, they at once are classed as enemies of God, and will be duly requited by Him.

If this seems rather strong, consider that it is something that needs to be said in this day of ungodly toleration. Whatever moves a person to look with suspicion upon those who are obviously devoted to the Lord, have left the course of the world, and prefer the people of God, cannot be good. Nor, indeed, can it be successfully defended.

Tertullian was a noted Christian leader during the second century, being born around 160 A.D. In one of his writings, he made reference how Christians were regarded in his adult life. “See how they love one another”; these are the words Tertullian noted (Apology [39.6]) in the Third Century, as spoken by some of the Pagans of the time regarding Christian communities.” REGIA ECCLESIA

Septimius Florens Tertullianus anglicised as Tertullian (160 – ca. 220 A.D.) He was a prolific early Christian author from Carthage in the Roman province of Africa. He is the first Christian author to produce an extensive corpus of Christian literature. He also was a notable early Christian apologist and a polemicist against heresy. Tertullian has been called "the father of Latin Christianity. WIKIPEDIA

Lest anyone consider this to be a flawed view of those who are in Christ Jesus, the King Himself has spoken on the subject. “By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another ” (John 13:35). The distinguishing mark of God’s people is not their love for the ungodly, but their love for one another. It is not their concern for the poor, or their quest for the young, or their respect for life itself. None of those things are wrong, but they are not what distinguishes the disciples of Jesus.

John writes that any person lacking this love lies if he says he loves God (1 John 4:20). He further states that the saints have received a commandment from God. “And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also” (1 John 4:21). He goes so far as to say that the love of the brethren is the proof that we have “passed from death unto life” (1 John 3:14).

The Responsibility of Believers

It is vital that those professing to be followers of Jesus leave the proper testimony with the people around them. The pillars that support that testimony are summarized in a single commandment. “And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight. And this is His commandment , That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as He gave us commandment” (1 John 3:22-23).

THEY CAME TO MEET US

“ . . . they came to meet us as far as Appii forum, and The three taverns . . .”

“Appi Forum” was at least 43 miles from Rome. Some estimate it being farther. “Three Taverns,” or “Three Inns,” NKJV/NASB was at least 33 miles from Rome. “Three Taverns” was “the name of a halting place on the Appian way between Rome and the Market of Appius; it was 10 miles (16 km) from the latter place and 33 miles (50 km) from Rome.” STRONG’S

Some feel there were two different groups that came – one as far as Three Taverns, and the other as far as Appii Forum. It seems more probable that one group came, stopping at Three Taverns, and meeting Paul at Appii Forum. Keep in mind that this was a journey on a road, and was probably by foot. I am sure their love for the Lord, and for His servant, caused them to see this as a relatively short trip.

Behind the scenes, the Lord was moving these saints to meet his servant face to face encouraging his heart. To me, any approach to living for the Lord that relegates the saints to the back seat of life cannot possibly be on target. A love for one another is what distinguishes people as Christ’s disciples (John 13:35).

Even kindness is focused upon the people of God, although they are not to be the exclusive recipients of it. Even God is “kind unto the unthankful and the evil” (Lk 6:35b), although that kindness is made known in things common to man. We are to love our enemies, “and do good and lend, hoping for nothing again” (Lk 6:35a). However, throughout these normal kindnesses and civility, there is to be no neglect of the people of God. Kindness is commanded toward them in a higher and more thorough way. Thus it is written:

- “Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love ; in honor preferring one another” (Rom 12:10).
- “And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another , even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you” (Eph 4:32).
- “Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness , humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another , if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye” (Col 3:13).
- “And to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity” (2 Pet 1:7).

We do not apologize for this Divine emphasis, nor will we allow other tests of affiliation with Christ to be superimposed upon this requirement concerning our associations with the people of God. Let it be clear that we are speaking of emphasis, preference, and superior expressions – not exclusive ones.

This is what we see being made known in the brethren from Rome, who inconvenienced themselves to meet Paul well before he arrived in their city. It is as though they could not wait to see him.

PAUL THANKED GOD AND TOOK COURAGE

“ . . . whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage.”

Paul Saw

Other versions read, “at the sight of these men,.” NIV “on seeing them,.” NRSV “having seen,.” YLT and “as soon as Paul caught sight of them.” WILLIAMS

Just the sight of these brethren brought refreshment to Paul – even though he had not been to Rome previously. Perhaps some that he knew were in the number – like “Priscilla and Aquila” who had labored with him; Epaphroditus “the firstfruits of Achaia;” “Mary, who bestowed much labor” on him, or “Herodion,” a relative of his. He greeted all of these brethren in his letter to Rome, written from Corinth about three years earlier (58 A.D.). At any rate, whether he knew some of them or they clearly identified themselves, Paul saw them, and it had an immediate impact upon him.

Have you not experienced the same thing – seeing someone you knew was a child of God, and the insight itself cheering your heart? A favorable impact would certainly not be realized by Paul if he had seen Hymenaeus, Philetus, Hermogenes, or Alexander the coppersmith. This was not his reaction to seeing a company of Jews who had determined to kill him.

This is the kind of effect that is wrought in the hearts of the people of God. When they see kindred spirits who are running the race and fighting the fight, they are refreshed by the sight of them.

Paul Thanked God

Other versions read, “gave praise to God,.” BBE “having given thanks to God,.” YLT “gave thanks to God,.” EMTV and “led us in prayers of thanksgiving.” MESSAGE

In his letter to the brethren in Rome, written three years earlier, he had said, “ I make mention of you in my prayers. . . Making request, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey by the will of God to come unto you . For I long to see you , that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established. That is, that I may be comforted together with you by the mutual faith both of you and me” (Rom 1:9-12). Now, an initial answer to those prayers is being realized, as he beholds with his eyes fellow-heirs from Rome approaching unto him. It is no wonder than he gives thanks! If Paul could give thanks at the “remembrance” of holy brethren (Phil 1:3), how much more will he do so when he actually sees them face to face.

It is to be understood that we give thanks to God for what He does. It is inappropriate to give thanks to God for what men of themselves do. To provide a view of the scope of thanksgiving, here are some things for which the apostle Paul gave thanks.

- For the brethren at Rome (Rom 1:8).
- For the prospect of being delivered from the body of this death (Rom 7:24-25).
- For Priscilla and Aquila , his “helpers in Christ Jesus” (Rom 16:4).
- For the grace given to the Corinthians (1 Cor 1:4).
- For the victory God gives us through our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor 15:57).
- For God causing us to triumph in Christ (2 Cor 2:14).
- For those in whose hearts God had placed an earnest care like that of Paul (2 Cor 8:16).

- For God's "unspeakable gift" (2 Cor 9:15).
- For the Ephesian brethren (Eph 1:16).
- For the remembrance of the Philippians (Phil 1:3).

While Paul did know he was going to bear witness of Jesus in Rome, there was little else that had been revealed to him. Speaking as a man, there were a lot of uncertainties, and uncertainty is a field in which Satan can sow seeds of doubt and fear.

For the Colossian brethren (Col 1:3).

- For the Thessalonian brethren (1 Thess 1:2; 2 Thess 2:13).
- For the enablement of God (1 Tim 1:12).
- For the remembrance of Timothy (2 Tim 1:3).
- For the recollection of Philemon (Phile 1:4).

Notice the prominence of the brethren in Paul's thanksgiving. It was through them that God strengthened and edified Paul, enabling him to fulfill his ministry with joy.

I have noticed over the years that, with very few exceptions, there is not a lot of thanksgiving for the saints of God among professed believers. Judging from the expression of many, it appears as though there is frequently more thanksgiving for rain and flowers than for the saints of the living God. This, however, was not the case with Paul. This was owing to his understanding and spiritual insight, as well as a dominating love for the Head of the church.

Paul Took Courage

Other versions read, "was encouraged," NIV "took heart," BBE "waxed bold," GENEVA "felt encouraged," GWN "felt better," IE "received new courage," AMPLIFIED "was greatly encouraged," GNB "brimming over with praise," MESSAGE and "got courage." INTERLINEAR

Translated from the Greek word εἰλαβην, and, as used here, the word "took" means "to take . . . to lay hold of . . . anything, to use it," THAYER "take for oneself, take into possession," FRIBERG and "to get, obtain," UBS "seize." LIDDELL-SCOTT

And what is it that Paul took hold of, or seized, when he saw the brethren from Rome? It was "courage," or "confidence," THAYER "to become confident or courageous in the face of real or possible danger," LOUW-NIDA and "boldness," LIDDELL-SCOTT

While Paul did know he was going to bear witness of Jesus in Rome, there was little else that had been revealed to him. Speaking as a man, there were a lot of uncertainties, and uncertainty is a field in which Satan can sow seeds of doubt and fear. Paul knew what it was like to be beaten mercilessly (Acts 16:37; 2 Cor 11:23-25), be stoned (Acts 14:19), be put into circumstances where he despaired of life (2 Cor 1:8), and even to fight with beasts after the manner of men (1 Cor 15:32). He did not know if he would face such things in Rome while witnessing of the Lord Jesus.

I see Satan as attempting to cast the mantel of fear upon Paul. But his efforts are overthrown – not by a great display of overt power, but by the coming of some saints from Jerusalem! Who but God can do such a thing?

The principle of living by faith applies here, for faith alone enables the believer to take hold of courage – confident courage! What mere work of man can accomplish this? What routine or human disciple can so strength the person that they can become courageous when about to enter Rome as a prisoner – and do so when Nero is the emperor? He was emperor of Rome from 54-64 A.D., the period covered in this text. His official title was Nero Claudius Augustus Germanicus.

Another example of the role of the saints in ministering comfort and confidence to other believers is found in Paul’s reference to Titus. Paul had been concerned about the state of the Corinthian church, so much so that he had determined not to go anywhere else until he had realized some satisfaction concerning the deteriorating Corinthians. Of that occasion he wrote, “For, when we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but we were troubled on every side; without were fightings, within were fears. Nevertheless God, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by the coming of Titus” (2 Cor 7:6).

We must not allow ourselves to be robbed of the elixir of comfort and encourage by those who would chide the saints for not paying enough attention to the ungodly. Those who insinuate that devotion to the Lord, and the edifying of the body of Christ jeopardizes the chances of sinners receiving a good witness have only exposed their ignorance. Pay them no heed!

PAUL PERMITTED TO DWELL BY HIMSELF

“ 16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard: but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him.”

THE TRIP FROM CAESAREA TO ROME

“A day” in Sidon Acts 27:3

“Many days” Acts 27:7

“Many days” Acts 27:20

“Fourteen nights” Acts 27:35

“Three days” Acts 28:7

“Three months” Acts 28:11

“Three days” Acts 28:12

“One day” Acts 28:13

“Seven days” Acts 28:14

Four months are accounted for, with two periods of “many days.” A trip of that length (about 2,000 miles), under ideal conditions, would require approximately half a year.

At last Paul arrived at Rome –something that was promised three years earlier , when he was arrested in Jerusalem (Acts 23:11). How patient he had been, spending two of those years chained in prison by an unthoughtful and prideful governor. Yet, he was steadfast, refusing to have his faith overthrown, or to despair of hope. He waited patiently for the Lord (Psa 37:7), enduring verbal opposition, physical abuse, incarceration, a fourteen day storm, shipwreck, and a venomous snakebite. The trip had taken at least half a year, and possibly more, which covered nearly 2,000 miles by sea. At the last, it probably involved a walk of at least sixty-five miles.

AND WHEN WE CAME TO ROME

“And when we came to Rome . . .”

Nearly four years earlier Paul had said as he passed through Macedonia and Achaia to go to Jerusalem, “After I have been there, I must also see Rome” (Acts 19:21). Prior to the trip to Rome, the Lord stood by Paul and said, “Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome” (Acts 23:11). On the way to Rome, during a fierce storm, the “angel of God” stood by him and said, “Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Caesar” (Acts 27:24).

Now the desire of Paul, the promise of Jesus, and the word of the angel has been answered, and Paul is in Rome. Praise the Lord! His desire was in perfect accord with Christ’s determination, and the angel’s elaboration.

This is a noteworthy example of a promise written by John the beloved. “And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us: and if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him” (1 John 5:14-15). I do not believe it is a stretch of the imagination to assume that Paul prayed about the desire he expressed. He found that it was in perfect accord with the will of the Lord.

I do not know how extensive Paul’s prayers were about the matter of going to Rome. However, the text before us suggests that God especially blessed that time in ways beyond expectation. Here again is a confirmation of the statement, “Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us” (Eph 3:20).

Faith lays hold of the promise, and does not demand to have the specification of details. For example, Abraham believed God about having multitudinous offspring before any of the details were made known (Gen 15:6; Rom 4:3,19; Gal 3:6; James 2:23). Again, when God commanded Abraham to offer up Isaac, he set out to do precisely that, even though he did not know the details involved. Yet, he believed God’s promise concerning Isaac being the child of promise through whom the promised Seed would come (Heb 11:17-19). The outcome in both instances exceeded the understanding of Abraham. That is, there was no way Abraham could have thought upon the promise and concluded what finally came to pass.

It is important to note this, because God works in such a manner as to remove any doubt about why His work was done. It was not merely in answer to a request, for His answers invariably exceed the request raised to Him in faith. That is why it is wrong to teach people to think of asking as establishing the boundaries within which God will work. In the very best view, our requests only touch the border of Divine capability. Once this is seen, there is a certain liberty of spirit that allows for a more God-honoring expectation than Him merely fulfilling our godly desires.

THE PRISONERS DELIVERED TO THE CAPTAIN OF THE GUARD

“ . . . the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard . . .” Other versions read, “the centurion delivered up the prisoners to the praetorian prefect,” DARBY “the Centurion delivered the prisoners to the general Captain,” GENEVA “ye under captain delivered the prisoners to the chief captain of the host,” PNT/TNT “the centurion delivered up the prisoners to the captain of the barrack,” YLT “the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard,” AMPLIFIED “the centurion delivered up the prisoners to the commander of the camp,” ABP “the centurion handed over the prisoners to the captain of the guard,” EMTV “the centurion delivered the prisoners to the camp commander,” LITV and “the hundred-chief beside-gives the bound-ones to the war-foot chief.” INTERLINEAR

This clause is omitted by the following versions: ASV, NASB, NIV, NRSV, RSV, BBE, CJB, CSB, DOUAY, ESV, ERV, GWN, MRD, NAB, NAS, NAU, NET, NIB, NJB, NLT, LIVING, IE, WEYMOUTH, ISV, WILLIAMS, MONTGOMERY, CEV, GNB, and MESSAGE.

Although this may appear to be an unwarranted diversion, I have a purpose for citing the observations of several notable commentators on this verse.

• JOHN GILL. Although he does not concur with these omissions, John Gill explains their absence by saying, “this clause is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin and Syriac versions.”

• JOHN CALVIN. In his commentary on Acts, John Calvin says of this verses, “Luke doth signify that Paul had more liberty granted him than the rest; for his condition and estate was peculiar. For he was suffered to dwell in an house by himself, having one keeper with him, whereas the rest were shut up in the common prison. For the general captain knew by Festus’ report that Paul was guiltless; and the centurion, as it is likely, did faithfully rehearse such things as might serve to bring him into favor.”

• DANIEL WHEDON. Daniel Whedon observes, “ The guard — Every absolute monarch usually finds it necessary to secure a competent body of troops upon whose fidelity to his own person he can rely in case of rebellion. Such for the emperor of Rome were the pretorian troops. The Pretorian Camp, situated outside of the northwest wall of the city, was a large square lined with military barracks, the lodgings of the soldiery, and strongly fortified on all sides. Its commander, captain of the guard , at this time was the celebrated Burrhus, who, in connection with Seneca, endeavoured to support the fortunes of the empire under the reign of the mad and bloody Nero. But in fact the whole clause — the centurion... but — is omitted from so many manuscripts that Tischendorf and other high authorities reject it as spurious.”

• ALBERT BARNES. Albert Barnes writes, “The commander of the Praetorian cohort, or guard. The custom was, that those who were sent from the provinces to Rome for trial were delivered to the custody of this guard. The name of the prefect or captain of the guard at this time was Burrhus Afranius (Tacitus, History, 12,42,1).”

• ADAM CLARKE. Adam Clarke writes, “This word properly means the commander of a camp; but it signifies the prefect, or commander of the pretorian cohorts, or emperor’s guards. Tacitus (Annal. lib. iv. cap. 2) informs us that, in the reign of Tiberius, Sejanus, who was then prefect of these troops, did, in order to accomplish his ambitious designs, cause them to be assembled from their quarters in the city, and stationed in a fortified camp near it; so that their commander is with peculiar propriety styled by St. Luke stratopedarchv , the commander of the camp. For the arrival of St. Paul at Rome was in the seventh year of Nero; and it is certain, from Suetonius, (in Tiber. cap. 37.) that the custom of keeping the pretorian soldiers in a camp, near the city, was retained by the emperors succeeding Tiberius; for the historian observes that Claudius, at his accession to the empire, was received into the camp, in castra delatus est, namely, of the pretorian cohorts; and so Tacitus says of Nero, An. lib. xii. cap. 69, that on the same occasions illatus castris, he was brought into the camp. Dr. Doddridge observes that it was customary for prisoners who were brought to Rome to be delivered to this officer, who had the charge of the state prisoners, as appears from the instance of Agrippa, who was taken into custody by Macro, the pretorian prefect, who succeeded Sejanus; (Joseph. Ant. lib. xviii. cap. 7. sec. 6;) and from Trajan’s order to Pliny, when two were in commission, Plin. lib. x. ep. 65. Vincetus mitti ad praefectos praetorii mei debet: he should be sent bound to the prefects of my guards. The person who now had that office was the noted Afranius Burrhus; but both before and after him it was held by two: Tacit. An. lib. xii. sec. 42; lib. xiv. sec. 51.”

Let it be clear that these quotations add no weight to the text, and that is not my reason for giving them. They do confirm, however, that there is by no means unanimity among insightful handlers of Scripture concerning the omission of this phrase.

MATTHEW HENRY. Matthew Henry writes, “He is still a prisoner. He had longed to see Rome, but, when he comes there, he is delivered, with other prisoners, to the captain of the guard, and can see no more of Rome than he will permit him. How many great men had made their entry into Rome, crowned and in triumph, who really were the plagues of their generation! But here a good man makes his entry into Rome, chained and triumphed over as a poor captive, who was really the greatest blessing to his generation. This thought is enough to put one for ever out of conceit with this world.”

• JAMIESON, FAUSSET, AND BROWN. Jamieson, Fausset, and Brown says of this verse, “the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard — the Praetorian Prefect, to whose custody, as commander of the Praetorian guard, the highest military authority in the city, were committed all who were to come before the emperor for trial. Ordinarily there were two such prefects; but from A.D. 51 to 62, one distinguished general — Burrus Aframus, who had been Nero’s tutor — held that office; and as our historian speaks of “the captain,” as if there were but one, it is thought that this fixes the apostle’s arrival at Rome to be not later than the year 62 [WIES]. But even though there had been two when Paul arrived, he would be committed only to one of them, who would be “the captain’ who got charge of him. (At most, therefore, this can furnish no more than confirmation to the chronological evidence otherwise obtained).

• W.B. GODBEY. W.B. Godbey writes, “This continues two years daily, and was then discontinued by the untimely death of Marius, the commander-in-chief of the praetorian army, which guarded the royal palace and the emperor’s person. Of course, the emperor was too great a man to give personal attention to a prisoner. Hence Marius received Paul, and gave him perfect liberty as long as he lived. This was owing to the excellent and even wonderful report given him by Julius, the centurion, who told about the storm and thrice miraculous deliverance through this paradoxical man, and the letter of Festus, simply stating that there was nothing against him criminal in Roman law, but simply complicated matters connected with the Jews’ religion.”

• JOSEPH BENSON. Joseph Benson observes, “And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard — Or prefect of the pretorian band, according to his commission. It was customary for prisoners who were brought to Rome, to be delivered to this officer, who had the charge of the state prisoners. The person who now held this office was the noted Afranius Burrhus.”

• JOSEPH SUTCLIFFE. Joseph Sutcliffe writes, “When we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard; the captain of the praetorian cohort. The guard was a fortified camp in the suburbs of Rome. A wise and regular government will not leave the lives and property of a metropolis to the mercy of an infuriated and drunken mob, which a spark may kindle to vengeance in a moment. Robbers and murderers must be afraid of the sword, which supports the magistrate in the severer exercises of duty.”

The Reason for These Citations

Let it be clear that these quotations add no weight to the text, and that is not my reason for giving them. They do confirm, however, that there is by no means unanimity among insightful handlers of Scripture concerning the omission of this phrase. Yet, the Bibles that omit this passage leave their readers completely oblivious of the message it contains – or that anything more was written by Luke than is represented by this text.

Additionally, there is a certain flow of logic that is reflected in these words. Paul receives special treatment, which you would never conclude reading the versions that omit the explanation provided in this verse. The fact that it is omitted in several manuscripts that were written a considerable time after the original writing of the text, is, in my own judgment, not sufficient reason to exclude it from our English Bible. Its inclusion adds sense to the text, and takes nothing from the facts. It also highlights the discretionary judgment of the “captain of the guard,” who gave a special privilege to Paul. All of this, of course, was the working of the Lord, who was protecting His servant in order that he might bear witness to Him in Rome, just as He had promised.

It seems to me that there is a certain obligation laid upon translators to provide a text that best gives honor to God, and more precisely states the case. I do not know what form of reasoning would insist that a variant manuscript, written at a later date, necessarily implies a scribal interpolation. Why could not the later variation be owing to a scribal omission, thinking the text was redundant, or lacked any value?

At any rate, I choose to accept the text as it stands in the Authorized Version, and ascribe wisdom and insight to those who so translated it. There really can be no successful refutation of that stance.

PAUL PERMITTED TO DWELL BY HIMSELF

“ . . . but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him.” Other versions read, “BUT Paul was permitted to dwell by himself,” NKJV “Paul was allowed to stay by himself,” NASB “allowed to live by himself,” NRSV and “but Paul was allowed to remain by himself.” DARBY

This is a most remarkable circumstance. It indicates that Julius delivered a good report of Paul. He could attest to his wisdom in warning of the dangers of sailing from Crete. There was also his wise council about staying on the ship, and bringing encouragement to all who were on board the ship. He may very well have shared the incident of Paul being bitten by an extremely venomous snake, and the healing the father of Publius, as well as the healing of many of the diseased of the island of Melita. Then, there was the fact that none of the charges against Paul could be substantiated, and had he not appealed to Caesar, he would have been released by the king Agrippa. There was also the letter of Lysias to Felix the governor. If this also was made known to the captain of the guard, it is not difficult to understand why he allowed Paul to dwell in his own quarters with a special soldier being assigned to him.

The Hand of the Lord Was With Him

Thus, it is obvious that the hand of the Lord was with Paul. Now he could bear witness to Christ without hostile Jews being present. Accommodations were also provided so he would not have to speak within the framework of a jail cell. Remember, he had been confined to a prison for two years in Caesarea, and there is no record of him being able to bear special witness concerning the savior at that time – unless it be when he was called by Felix in hopes of receiving a bribe from him to be loosed (Acts 24:26). Now, although a prisoner, he had liberty.

PAUL CALLED THE CHIEF OF THE JEWS TOGETHER

In the Jewish economy, the “chief” men were the ones most learned in “the Jew’s religion.” These were not political figures, or mere men of wealth. Rather, they were the ones who had the leadership because of their Scriptural understanding, and leading roles in religious places and affairs. In this way, as well as in other facets of life, the Jews were distinguished from the rest of the peoples.

“ 17 And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans. 18 Who, when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me. 19 But when the Jews spake against it, I was constrained to appeal unto Caesar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of.”

The wisdom of the priorities of Paul are evident in this passage. He moved about with godly intentions, not intending to give a cause for reproach to Christ, and not seeking to make it more difficult for the Jews. He did not seek to merely vindicate himself, but to reduce the amount of friction that could occur when he began witnessing of the Christ. He did all of this without compromising the truth.

HE CALLED THE CHIEF OF THE JEWS TOGETHER

“And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together . . .” Other versions read, “called the leaders of the Jews,” NKJV “those who were the leading men,” NASB “the local leaders of the Jews,” NRSV “the most influential Jews,” GWN “the principle Jews,” MRD “the most important Jewish leaders,” IE “the ones being of the Jews foremost,” ABP and “those who were prominent among the Jews.” EMTV

In the Jewish economy, the “chief” men were the ones most learned in “the Jew’s religion” (Gal 1:13,4). These were not political figures, or mere men of wealth. Rather, they were the ones who had the leadership because of their Scriptural understanding, and leading roles in religious places and affairs. In this way, as well as in other facets of life, the Jews were distinguished from the rest of the peoples. Their lives revolved around the Temple in Jerusalem, and the synagogues where they were located. They were not noted for having coliseums, or other places of non-religious gatherings. Their feasts were religious in nature. In this way they established that God intended for the people identified with Himself to be distinguished for that identity. They were not noted for their involvement in the civil and social affairs of the world.

Before going any further, I want to draw attention to the fact that the Jews maintained their unique identity while in Rome, Italy – a long way from Jerusalem. As in every nation in which they were found, they were never absorbed, so to speak, by the culture, thereby losing their identity. This continues to this very day. Although apparently taking advantage of the benefits of any heathen society, there was a sense in which they remained separate from it.

God has not departed from this standard in the church. While unlearned men are often eager to get Christians to be a part of the society in which they find themselves, this has not yet been established as a Divine strategy.

These days it is not unusual to hear professed Christ leaders challenge Christians to become light and salt in the world by being involved in political and social causes. This entire approach is questionable, to say the least. The influence God intends for His people to have in the world is the result of making clear by their manner of life that they have a primary association with God. It is “unto Him” that they live (2 Cor 5:15), presenting their bodies a living sacrifice to Him (Rom 12:1-2).

A second consideration here is the fact that Paul knew the Gospel, was God’s power unto salvation “to the Jew first” (Rom 1:16). Therefore, most generally, wherever he found himself, his first contacts were made with the Jews.

A third factor in this matter is the fact that Jesus had called him to testify to the Jews, and not only to the Gentiles. Jesus had revealed to Ananias, “he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel” (Acts 9:15).

The social climate had apparently changed in Rome. Earlier in this book, our attention was drawn to the presence of Aquila and Priscilla in Corinth. Formerly having made their home in Italy, they were among those Jews whom Claudius had commanded “to depart from Rome” (Acts 18:2). That expulsion took place in 52-53 A.D., about nine years prior to this event. They had now returned to Rome. The particulars of that allowance are not provided to us.

PAUL'S EXPLANATION #1

I HAVE COMMITTED NOTHING AGAINST THE PEOPLE

“ . . . and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers . . .”

At this point, Paul does not know if the Jews in Rome had heard of his arrest and the charges brought against him. However, he did want to make sure they knew the truth of the matter, lest he be put at an unnecessary disadvantage.

Even though the Jews had vigorously opposed and harmed Paul, yet he did not seek vengeance against them. He lived out what the doctrine taught: “Recompense to no man evil for evil” (Rom 12:17). And again, “See that none render evil for evil unto any man” (1 Thess 5:15). Peter also taught, “Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing” (1 Pet 3:9).

Paul makes clear that he was not engaged in some kind of retaliation or revenge. He was not delivering formal charges against Israel, although they had sought his life without a just cause. He would leave the matter of vengeance with the Lord, for it belonged to Him. He only sought to confirm that he had been charged falsely, and that any unbiased person was able to see that clearly.

Notwithstanding, he would not let their lies against him go unchallenged, though he did not do evil to them. He saw this as a necessary means of neutralizing damaging influences. Paul boldly said to Felix, “Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me . . . Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult. Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had ought against me. Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council” (Acts 24:13,18-20).

PAUL'S EXPLANATION #2

I WAS DELIVERED A PRISONER

“ . . . yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans. Who, when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me . . .”

Again, Paul makes clear that the charges brought against him could not be proved. Even the governmental authorities of the meticulous manner of Roman law, after both hearing and weighing the charges brought against him had acknowledged they were without any genuine basis. He had done nothing worthy of death.

PAUL'S EXPLANATION #3

CONSTRAINED TO APPEAL UNTO CAESAR

“But when the Jews spake against it, I was constrained to appeal unto Caesar . . .” Other versions read, “when the Jews objected, I was forced to appeal to Caesar,” NASB “when the Jews made protest against it, I had to put my cause into Caesar's hands,” BBE “the Jews contradicting it, I was constrained to appeal unto Caesar,” DOUAY and “when the Jewish leaders protested the decision, I felt it necessary to appeal to Caesar.” NLT

Even though Felix, Festus, and Agrippa had rendered the verdict of “not guilty,” the Jew continued to press the issue, even asking Agrippa to bring Paul to Jerusalem to be tried. They plotted to kill him along the way. From a practical point of view, this left Paul no recourse except to Caesar. Of course, there was more to it than that. Jesus had promised he would bear witness to Him in Rome, and an angel confirmed that he would stand before Caesar. However, those were pearls he would not cast before everyone.

PAUL’S EXPLANATION #4

CONSTRAINED TO APPEAL UNTO CAESAR

“ . . . not that I had ought to accuse my nation of.” Other versions read, “not that I had any accusation against my nation,” NASB “not that I had any charge to bring against my own people,” NIV “even though I had no desire to press charges against my own people,” NLT and “though it was not because I had any charge to make against my nation.” AMPLIFIED

Paul makes clear that he was not engaged in some kind of retaliation or revenge. He was not delivering formal charges against Israel, although they had sought his life without a just cause. He would leave the matter of vengeance with the Lord, for it belonged to Him (Rom 12:19; Heb 10:30; Rev 2:23). He only sought to confirm that he had been charged falsely, and that any unbiased person was able to see that clearly.

The Protection of His Witness and Character

Some people are overly naive at this point. They feel as though no person should ever defend themselves against erroneous charges. However, this view is too simplistic. When Paul’s doctrine was attacked, or the reality of his apostleship questioned, he addressed the matter.

- When he was charged with teaching that by doing evil good would come (Rom 3:8).
- When some in Corinth questioned the validity of his claim to apostleship (1 Cor 9:1-27; 2 Cor 12:12).
- When the Gospel that he preached was questioned by some in Galatia (Gal 1:11-12; 2:7).

Paul would not allow anything false being said against him that would possibly impede the progress of the Gospel. He even went so far as to silence a woman with a spirit of divination who publically said he was a servant of God, and was showing her people the way of salvation. Such a confession could not be allowed from such a person, lest the Gospel be associated with Satan’s empire of darkness (Acts 16:16-18). Had Paul let that matter go, it would have appeared as though he was working for that woman’s masters.

Along these same lines, Jesus did not permit the demons to confess Him publically (Mk 1:24-25; Lk 4:34,41). God’s people need to learn to conduct themselves wisely in this area. There are people who seek to tarnish our reputation, and we must not ignore it.

FOR THE HOPE OF ISRAEL I AM BOUND

“ 20 For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you: because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain.”

The Jewish leaders came to meet Paul – which is quite a testimony of itself. I seriously doubt that anyone calling for a meeting of Christian leaders in our relatively small city would meet with much success. Several of us have been involved in an effort to bring only preachers of a particular sect together, and have not done well in their sincere efforts. That is because the religious culture of our day does not promote that kind of closeness. However, it did exist in Israel, who was cultured by God to be interdependent.

FOR THIS CAUSE I HAVE CALLED FOR YOU

“For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you . . .” Other versions read, “this reason,” NKJV and “this is why” CJB

Note, it was a “cause” that drove this meeting, not mere friendship. There was a purpose behind this gathering, and it did not center in Paul himself. It rather related to the commission that Jesus had given him in the beginning. “I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me” (Acts 26:16-18). Were it not for the carrying out of that commission, Paul would never have been arrested, or even opposed by the Jews.

First, he explains why he was there under these particular circumstances, for it did not look as though he had come to minister. In fact, it did not appear he came of his own will, but was rather forced to come to Rome, bound by chains.

FOR THE HOPE OF ISRAEL

“ . . . because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain.” Other versions read, “I am wearing this chain for the sake of the hope of Israel,” NASB “for on account of the hope of Israel I have this chain about me,” DARBY “I’m wearing these chains because of what Israel hopes for,” GWN and “I am bound with this chain because I believe that the hope of Israel – the Messiah -- has already come.” NLT

This is the third time in this episode that Paul has referred to hope, always relating it to the Abraham and the Jews.

- BEFORE THE JEWISH COUNCIL IN JERUSALEM. “Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question” (Acts 23:6).

- BEFORE AGRIPPA IN CAESAREA. “And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews” (Acts 26:6-7).

- BEFORE THE JEWISH LEADERS IN ROME. “ . . . because that for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain” (Acts 28:20).

This is a view of Judaism from the perspective of Divine intent . It is not meant to suggest that every Jew lived with the hope of reference – but every Jew of honest and good heart did so.

For Abraham and those with the “faith of Abraham” (Rom 4:16), everything hinged on the coming of the Messiah. So far as the culmination of human experience was concerned, it was encapsulated in the resurrection of the dead, as it was confirmed in the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

The difference between Paul and the unbelieving Jews was not in the hope itself, but in the One who fulfilled the hope – Jesus Christ. The fact that Paul embraced Jesus, “who is our hope” (1 Tim 1:1), shaped everything he did, and directed the manner in which he thought. The Jews were looking for the Messiah, but Paul had found Him. The Jews rejected Jesus as the Messiah, but Paul received

Him in that capacity.

Under the Old Covenant, the Law confirmed the absolute need for a Savior and Liberator. Those who took it seriously soon found that they were morally and spiritually impotent to perfectly fulfill the law, as was demanded of them. That circumstance made the coming Messiah relevant – as compared with looking for someone to give man an earthly advantage and answer all of their carnal desires. Therefore, the Law did its work by convincing of sin, and that is what opened the door for hope, for men who do not think they are sinners have no mind for a Savior.

The language Paul uses is very wise, for he appeals to something honest Jews longed for. Now they face a man who was willing to suffer, be incarcerated, and bound with a chain because of the hope that he possessed.

This is a sterling example of what is meant by the phrase, “We are saved by hope” (Rom 8:24). The individuals who possess that hope, abounding in it by the power of the Holy Spirit (Rom 15:13), will shape their lives around it. There is no inhibition they will not abandon (Rom 13:12), no weight they will not throw off (Heb 12:2) no defilement from which they will not cleanse themselves (2 Cor 7:1). There is no sacrifice too great, and no effort that is considered too difficult. Hope is a driving force in the believer, and is an anchor for the soul, both steadfast and sure (Heb 6:19). It keeps the one possessing it do avoid drifting into forbidden waters.

THEY WANTED TO HEAR

“ 21 And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judaea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came showed or spake any harm of thee. 22 But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against.”

By Divine providence, the Jewish hostility that was found in Jerusalem was apparently not found in Rome, Italy. The stage is being set for a proclamation of the truth. The response of these men to the truth will reveal where they stand.

THEY HAD NOT HEARD ANYTHING BAD ABOUT PAUL

“And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judaea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came showed or spake any harm of thee . . .” Other versions read, “reported or spoken any evil of you,” NKJV “reported or spoken anything bad about you,” NASB “to give an account or say any evil about you,” BBE “any report or story of anything to your discredit,” NJB “We have heard nothing against you!,” LIVING “reported or stated anything to your disadvantage,” WEYMOUTH and “Nobody wrote warning us about you. And no one has shown up saying anything bad about you.” MESSAGE

Considering the aggressive opposition that Paul experienced from the Jews, this is a most remarkable statement.

No Jew from Judea sent them letters warning them of Paul. Furthermore, no Jew came to Rome reporting something evil against Paul, or trying in any way to discredit him. How could this be? It was because God did not allow it to happen. Those who were Paul’s enemies did not think about writing to their fellow Jews in Rome, warning them about Paul.

No Jew from Judea sent them letters warning them of Paul. Furthermore, no Jew came to Rome reporting something evil against Paul, or trying in any way to discredit him. How could this be? It was because God did not allow it to happen. Those who were Paul’s enemies did not think about writing to their fellow Jews in Rome, warning them about Paul. No traveling Jew came to Rome spouting off about Paul, and the purported damage he had done among the Jews. God had, so to speaking, broken their teeth, so they could not speak against His servant (Psa 58:6). He had clouded their minds so they could not think up ways to discredit Paul. Just as God kept the Israelite women and children safe when all of the men went to certain appointed feasts (Ex 34:24), so God kept Paul's enemies from fomenting trouble against Paul in Rome.

In this way, Paul would be able to witness in Rome without facing the kind of opposition he did elsewhere.

Paul admonished Titus to so conduct his life so that no one would have anything evil to say about him. "In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works: in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech, that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you" (Titus 2:7-8). Paul wrote to the Philippians about being "blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world" (Phil 2:15).

The work of God is important enough that everyone involved in it must be clean, lest the name of Christ be blasphemed (Rom 2:24; 1 Tim 6:1).

THEY WANTED TO KNOW WHAT PAUL THOUGHT

These men were not asking for Paul's views on the Roman government, Nero's rule, taxation, or other social issues. They were not asking for his views on marriage or immorality, as the Roman citizens were in a state of moral decline. They had no mind to ask Paul what he thought about Jerusalem being under the control of Rome, and the citizens having to pay taxes to Caesar.

"... But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest..." Other versions read, "we desire to hear from you what your views are," NASB "we would like to hear from you what you think," NRSV "we consider it suitable to hear from you what you think," CSB "we beg to hear of thee what thou thinkest," DARBY and "we think it fitting and are eager to hear from you what it is that you have in mind and believe and what your opinion is." AMPLIFIED

They had no mind to ask Paul what he thought about Jerusalem being under the control of Rome, and the citizens having to pay taxes to Caesar.

As they will clarify, they particularly wanted to hear about the disciples of Jesus – people of the way. What kind of reasoning supported their views, and Paul's in particular? What comprised his theological thinking?

A Local Application

We have had our share of evil reports and false charges. But most, if not all, of us have yet to have a local person ask us to explain what we think about life in Christ Jesus, and why we do so.

THEY WANTED TO KNOW OF THIS SECT

"... for as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against." Other versions read, "for concerning this sect, it is known to us that it is spoken against everywhere," NASB "for we know that people everywhere are talking against this sect," NIV "for as to this form of religion, we have knowledge that in all places it is attacked," BBE "the only thing we know about this movement is that it is denounced everywhere," NLT and "The only thing we know about this Christian sect is that nobody seems to have anything good to say about it." MESSAGE

Everyone was not speaking against those who were disciples of Jesus. It was the Jews that were doing so. The natives on the island of Melita certainly were not speaking against this group of people. There were thousands, perhaps millions, who were speaking favorably of the faith and love of certain brethren in Rome itself (Rom 1:8). The same was reported of the believers in Thessalonica (1 Thess 1:8-9).

The Jews, however, had been fairly consistent in their opposition to believers, and their hostility toward the Gospel. Now, these Jews were more noble than those critics, and wanted to know more about this body of people – people of “the way” (Acts 24:14). What did they believe, and why did they believe it? What made them what they were, and what kind of power had they experienced? They wanted to know.

It is refreshing when someone – anyone – asks why we believe the things we have embraced? Why do we speak the way we do? What is the reason for our hope? Peter writes, “But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear: having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ” (1 Pet 3:16).

Paul was ready to give an answer for the hope that was in him, and to do it confidently and with power. He had sanctified the Lord God in his heart.

CONCLUSION

We learn of the ways of God from this entire account. When He directs people along a certain path, the destination is the primary thing, but it is not the only thing. There are blessings and opportunities all along the way – things that bring glory to the Lord and encouragement to the traveler. Ponder some of the opportunities that were granted to Paul from his arrest to his arrival in Rome – a period that stretched over three years.

- In Jerusalem he was given license to speak to the Jews about his life (Acts 21:1-5).
- In Jerusalem he testified to the Jews concerning his conversion (Acts 21:6-13).
- In Jerusalem he testified to the Jews of the commission given to him by Jesus (Acts 21:24-16).
- In Jerusalem he testified to the Jews of his baptism into Christ (Acts 21:16).
- In Jerusalem he testified to the Jews of Jesus’ appearance to him in the Temple (Acts 21:17-21).
- In Jerusalem he testified to the Jewish council (Acts 23:1-10).
- In Caesarea he testified before Felix (Acts 24:10-21).
- In Caesarea he reasoned with Felix and Druscilla concerning righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come (Acts 24:24-25).
- In Caesarea he testified of his innocence to Festus (Acts 25:10-11).
- In Caesarea he gave an extensive testimony to Agrippa of his life and conversion (Acts 26:1-15).
- In Caesarea he gave an extensive testimony to Agrippa of Jesus’ commission to him (Acts 26:16-18).
- In Caesarea he gave testimony to Agrippa of the message he preached (Acts 26:21-23).

- In Caesarea he reminded Agrippa of the testimony of the prophets (Acts 26:27).
- While sailing to Italy, Paul warned them of the danger of sailing at that time, and that much harm would be caused by doing so (Acts 27:10).
- In the midst of a fierce storm, Paul testified of the appearance of the angel of God to him, assuring that only the ship would be lost, and that they would be shipwrecked on a certain island (Acts 27:21-26).
- Before a frightened group of people, Paul assured them they would all be saved from the storm. He then took bread, prayed before them all, and encouraged them to eat (Acts 27:33-35).
- On the island of Melita, before several hundred people, Paul showed great faith when he was bitten of a venomous snake (Acts 28:3-6).
- On Melita, Paul healed the father of Publius, showing the superior power of Christ (Acts 28:8).
- On Melita, Paul healed many of the islanders who were sick (Acts 28:9).
- En route to Rome, Paul and company found brethren in Puteoli, and remained with them for seven days (Acts 28:14).
- En route to Rome Paul was refreshed by the coming of several brethren from Rome, who met them in The Three Taverns, and Appii Forum (Acts 28:15).
- In Rome he was given private quarters where he was able to call for the chief of the local Jews and give witness to them (Acts 28:17-20).

Thus we have a brief summation of a three-year trek to Rome, laden with various kinds of opportunities to bring glory to God and help to the people.

A path that has no opportunities to witness for the Lord is probably not a Divinely ordered one. The people of God should be careful not to be caught up with goals and ambitions that are not attended by open doors! In the Kingdom of God, waiting and inactivity are an admixture. Those who are waiting for a special blessing may very well miss a special opportunity to be a blessing.

Lesson #107

PAUL PREACHES IN ROME

“ 28:23 And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening. 24 And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not. 25 And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers, 26 Saying, Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive: 27 For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them. 28 Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it. 29 And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves. 30 And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, 31 Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.” (Acts 28:23-31)

INTRODUCTION

SUMMARY OF HOLY ACTIVITY

The book of Acts is summation of the activity of the church for the first thirty-five years of its existence (29-64 A.D.). During that time the mandate of the King was being carried out in the manner He desires, with repeated accounts of His direction (1:7-8; 2:4; 4:8,31; 8:26,29; 9:5-17; 10:4,19; 11:28; 12:8, 17; 13:2,9; 16:9; 22:10,14,21; 23:11; 26:15, 16;7:23). Precisely what kind of activities were the object of our Lord's direction? What kind of people were the focus of attention? Where did the apostles spend most of their time?

It is not unusual to hear men present the book of Acts as though reaching the lost was nearly the only thing that was done? That this is was done cannot be denied – but was that the thrust of recorded efforts of the early church? Where was the quality time spent, and who was generally the focus of attention?

The following two pages records the majority of contacts recorded in the book of Acts. They speak for themselves. I provide them here with full knowledge that I may have inadvertently missed some. However, they will be representative of the kind of thrust, or emphasis, that occupied the early church that filled the earth with the Gospel by the middle of the first century.

Testified of Kingdom for two years

A BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE TEXT

In a grand display of the Sovereign direction of the Lord, Paul is granted a single day to speak particularly to the Jews. He seizes the opportunity, and many come to his lodging on that day. During the day he expounded and testified of the Kingdom of God, persuading them of Jesus out of Moses and the Prophets. He continued to do this from morning until evening. Because some believed and some did not, Paul delivers a word of solemn warning, which was followed by the departure of the Jews. They reasoned among themselves concerning what they had heard that memorable day. Paul is then said to have continued for two consecutive years in his own hired house, receiving everyone that came to him. This method of disseminating the Word had also been employed in Ephesus, as compared with a formalized outreach program so common in our time. The substance of Paul's preaching and teaching is identified, together with a special notation that he did this with confidence, with no man forbidding him.

SPIRITUAL CONSISTENCY

There is a certain spiritual consistency that is seen throughout the book of Acts. The substance of preaching is invariably Christ and/or the Kingdom of God. This could be called theo-centricity, or God-centeredness. The focus of attention is never placed upon human duty. Whenever the requirements for men are addressed, it is always within the context of the Gospel and man's accountability to God.

The church itself is never at the heart of the proclamation. There is no report of an effort to increase her numbers, or to plant new churches, or to restore the one that was first found in Jerusalem. There is no emphasis placed upon the family, the government, social equity, or the state of society in general. Political issues were never emphasized, nor was the social inequities of the day – like slavery.

There was no stress placed on personal problems, domestic issues, or the general state of young people, or men, or women. Worldly authorities were not consulted or used to buttress what was being preached and taught. Higher education was not accentuated among the people of God. There was no plea for funds having to do with outreach, or the maintenance of an institutional agenda. The only special offering that was gathered from the churches was for the support of the "poor saints" which were at Jerusalem. There was no promotion of Christian music, or teaching concerning "praise and worship." There was no call for the general support of the poor nations of the world, or for the socially deprived.

The record of the activities of the early church and its leaders is available to every literate person in the world. There is no need for surmising and speculation on matters that have so captured the attention of modern Christians.

This observation is not to be construed as an expression of opposition to philanthropic works that target the poor and oppressed of this world. God forbid that such a conclusion should be drawn. It is meant to affirm that such works are not primary ones, nor are the people of God to be judged in regard to their response to such promotions. They are not to be foisted upon the church as though heaven had placed such an obligation upon the saints of the living God. It is enough to say that we are to "do good unto all men," but it is also necessary to add, as does the Spirit, "especially to them that are of the household of faith" (Gal 6:10).

All of these things are lived out in the book of Acts. The main people are obviously the people of God, and the main message pertains to the Gospel of Christ. If those emphases are not reflected in the modern church, it is walking outside of the will of God, and is competing with the God-revealed emphasis for His people. These observations are plain enough to be seen and received by all who are of humble spirit.

THEY APPOINTED HIM A DAY

“And when they had appointed him a day . . .” Other versions read, “set a day for him,” NASB “arranged to meet Paul on a certain day,” NIV “when a day had been fixed,” BBE “they arranged a day with him,” CJB “on a designated day,” GWN “So a time was set,” NLT “Paul and the Jewish leaders set a day for a meeting,” LIVING “They agreed on a time to meet with Paul,” CEV “So they set a date with Paul,” GNB and “They agreed on a time.” MESSAGE

This was a formal arrangement – a special day, a special time, and a special place. Who did the appointing? The Roman authorities? The guard assigned to him? Paul himself? The Jews? Or was it something jointly done between Paul and the Jews. All of the versions, and all of the commentators I reviewed assume the time was set by Paul and the Jews. I am not sure this is the case. When they came to Rome, it is written that the authorities “permitted him to dwell by himself with a soldier who guarded him” (Acts 28:18). If this is the same house he rented, which is mentioned in verse 30, it is probable that Paul had been allowed to set times when he could be visited. It is also possible that this was cleared by the Roman authorities, which, to me, seems more reasonable. However a person looks at this text, there did have to be an agreement between the Jews and Paul.

There was doubtless some sense in which both parties had to be prepared for the meeting, for everything was to be done in a day. The fact that this could happen seems to me to require Divine intervention. The willingness on the part of the Jews is itself most remarkable. The fact that no one interfered with this meeting suggests that Satan was restrained at this time. He was not able to foment agitation as he did in the Temple, on the stairs of the barracks, in the judgment hall of Felix, and before Festus. But at this time, when Paul, by the direction of Jesus Himself, was to bear witness of Him to Rome, Satan is shackled, and able to “do nothing against the truth” (2 Cor 13:8).

Satan, then, although “as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pet 5:8), is still restrained. He cannot venture one millimeter beyond the boundary of Divine permission. That is a precious piece of knowledge to stow away in our hearts as we journey through this world. You are not the only one with limitations! Your adversary has them also. They have been imposed upon him by the same Lord whose heel he bruised.

But from the higher perspective, they were gathered together by the Lord to be exposed to the Gospel. This was the same kind of circumstance that existed on that memorable day of Pentecost. There were “Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven” gathered in Jerusalem.

Satan has never been able to operate without Divine limitation, as confirmed in the case of Job (Job 1:6-12; 2:1-7). That circumstance has not been solidified even more. Not only is he strictly subject to the will of the Lord, but the children of God can successfully “resist” Him (1 Pet 5:7-8; James 4:4). They have been given “the whole armor of God,” and weapons of “warfare” that are capable or repulsing his vicious attacks (Eph 6:10-18; 2 Cor 10:3-4).

Yet, in the employment of this weaponry, we are wholly dependent upon the Lord. This does not mean that we can live trouble-free lives. Paul had all of these weapons available to him, in this three-year episode, yet he endured beating, incarceration, being shackled with a chain, enduring an unprecedented storm, and being bitten by an extremely venomous snake. Yet, even “in all these things,” he continued “more than a conqueror through Him that loved” him (Rom 8:37). His survival, and also this appointment to meet with the Jews proved that it is precisely the truth: “greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world” (1 John 4:4).

THERE CAME MANY INTO HIS LODGING

“ . . . there came many to him into his lodging . . . ” Other versions read, “they came to him at his lodging in large numbers,” NASB “came in even larger numbers,” NIV “came to him at his lodgings in great numbers,” NRSV “a larger number of influential Jews than expected,” GWN and “they came back to his home with a number of their friends.” MESSAGE

When the Jews came to Paul, they were larger in number than when he first met them. These were not mere children or casual Jews (if there be such a thing), but chief men of the Jews. I gather than those who came were devoted to the Law, and were expert in the contents of Scripture. Their motivation for coming was to hear what Paul thought, and to learn more of this sect that was everywhere spoken against. But from the higher perspective, they were gathered together by the Lord to be exposed to the Gospel. This was the same kind of circumstance that existed on that memorable day of Pentecost. There were “Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven” gathered in Jerusalem. They thought they were there to observe the feasts of the Passover and Pentecost. However, they had really been drawn together by the Lord to hear the inaugural address of the day of salvation. The disciples had not brought them together. It was the work of the Lord.

Similarly, Paul had agreed to meet with a certain group of Jews, but more came than he at first expected. This was the Lord’s doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes (Psa 118:23).

A Spiritual Application

The same Lord and the same power that brought this large number of leading Jews to Paul is still at work. However, to enjoy the benefits of such power, men must be within the circumference where it is made known.

Those who live by faith can expect the Lord to do more than they can “ask or think” (Eph 3:20). Babylon the Great has taught men to rejoice when their own plans appear to have been brought to fruition. But there is a rejoicing that transcends such meager pursuits. It happens when in a moment of time, and entirely apart from human plans, the number of disciples explodes from 120 to 3,120, and a few days later 5,000 men are added to the number (Acts 2:41; 4:4). It is the kind of rejoicing that results from a deacon going down to the city of Samaria when the disciples are scattered owing to persecution. When he preaches Christ there, the entire city “with one accord” give heed to his message (Acts 8:5-8).

I understand that this does not happen all of the time. But it is possible where there are people who are living by faith and walking in the Spirit. Take, for example, our own fellowship here in Joplin: The Word of Truth Fellowship. There are thousands of people who have believed and been baptized because of the message that has sounded from this place. In Pakistan alone the number is in the hundreds of thousands. While there is one “Word of Truth Fellowship” in Joplin, there are about 567 in Pakistan. The message has also reaped large numbers in Burkina Faso, West Africa. The message God has given us to see and declare has reaped far greater results in Kenya Africa than it has in Joplin, Missouri.

And why is this so? It is certainly not traceable to any expertise we have had. It is not because we developed strategies to reach these people. Christian leaders from these areas came to us, and men from other regions continue to come to us (i.e. Philippines, Ghana, and Myanmar).

The same Lord and the same power that brought this large number of leading Jews to Paul is still at work. However, to enjoy the benefits of such power, men must be within the circumference where it is made known. This involves:

- Living by faith (Heb 10:38).
- Walking in the Spirit (Gal 5:16,25).
- Abiding in the Son (John 15:4,7; 1 John 2:24).
- Through the Spirit mortifying the deeds of the body (Rom 8:13).
- Presenting your body a living sacrifice unto God (Rom 12:1-2).
- Maintaining fellowship with the Son (1 Cor 1:9).
- Keeping the Gospel in memory (1 Cor 15:2).
- Standing fast in the Lord (1 Thess 3:8).
- Walking in the light as He is in the light (1 John 1:7).
- Setting our affection on things above and not on things on the earth (Col 1:1-2).
- Continuing in the faith, grounded and settled (Col 1:23).
- Fighting the good fight of faith (1 Tim 6:12).
- Running the race with patience that has been set before us, while looking unto Jesus (Heb 12:1-2).
- Holding fast the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end (Heb 3:6).
- Holding the beginning of our confidence steadfast to the end (Heb 3:14).

These are things to which Paul had devoted himself. They, and other things related to them, are what keeps one within the circle of usability.

This is also why Paul sought brethren wherever he went, preferring them and spending extended periods with them wherever possible. Such fellowship is one of the means of maintaining the perspective reflected in the above listing. It is why the exhortation is given, “Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord” (1 Cor 15:58). Let every soul meditate on that!

HE EXPOUNDED AND TESTIFIED

“ . . . to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.”

Remember, the Jews said they wanted to know what Paul thought, and more concerning the sect that “everywhere is spoken against” (Acts 28:22). It is worthy of extended consideration to note how Paul responded to this request. He does not commence by telling them what he thought about this or that. Neither, indeed, does he launch into a discourse about the group with which he had been identified. He was so wholly devoted to the Lord that he could speak about the what was contained in Scripture, and by doing so would precisely answer both of these requests. He will not draw their attention to himself or to the body of believers – even though he was fully devoted to the Lord, together with all those who called upon the name of the Lord. This clearly confirms that he was not engaged in promoting a certain group – even the one truthfully referred to as “the body of Christ.” His thinking was in strict concert with the Scriptures, and thus it could best be explained by drawing their attention to those Scriptures.

It ought to be noted that the Scriptures are not designed to promote a sect. Those who endeavor to use them in such a manner, attempting to confirm their superiority, have not conducted themselves wisely. If the Scriptures do not define what the people see in us, then we are living in error and hardness of heart. If we say Christ is “over all” (Rom 9:5), yet we live without due regard to that circumstance, we will not be able to use the Scriptures to define what we think and who we are. In such a case, the Scriptures, at the very best, will be appealed to as an “ought to” manual of conduct.

HE EXPOUNDED AND TESTIFIED

“ . . . to whom he expounded and testified . . .” Other versions read, “explained and solemnly testified,” NKJV “explaining to them and solemnly testifying,” NASB “explained and declared,” NIV “testifying to,” NRSV “gave them teaching, giving witness,” BBE “explained . . . giving a thorough witness,” CJB “testifying of,” DARBY “expounded his position,” NAB “expounding, testifying fully,” YLT and “He explained to them the truth .” IE

He Expounded

The word “expounded” has the following lexical meaning: “to place or set out, expose . . . set forth, declare,” THAYER “to set up in public, exhibit publicly,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “to make manifest; to publish,” LEH and “to explain, set forth.”

He Testified

As used here, the word “testified” means “to testify, I. e. earnestly, religiously to charge . . . to attest, testify to, solemnly affirm . . . to confirm a thing by (the interposition of) testimony, to testify, cause it to be believed,” THAYER “to make a serious declaration on the basis of presumed personal knowledge - ‘to declare, to assert, to testify,” LOUW-NIDA and “charge, warn, adjure . . . testify to, hear witness (to) solemnly.” GINGRICH

This was not a mere academic lecture, word study, or lectureship. This was the passionate testimony of a spiritual man who had understanding of the subject.

Even more than this, the truth of God had so permeated the heart and mind of Paul that his words accurately revealed how he thought. The Jewish leaders had said, “we desire to hear from you what you think” NKJV (Acts 28:22). Therefore, he spoke out of the abundance of his heart, telling him how he thought about the matter of “the Kingdom of God.” He was not among those sophists who tell us what the Bible says, then add that its words were not the way they would have said it, but they made themselves believe it, so to speak, because God had said it – i.e. it really did not make sense to them, but their deep humility caused them to publically to acquiesce with the truth of God. Such men are miserable representatives of the Lord of glory!

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

And what was the theme of Paul's expounding and testifying? It was "the Kingdom of God." Other versions read, "about the Kingdom of God," NASB "the reign of God," YLT and "the truth about the kingdom of God." IE

The expression "the Kingdom of God" is unique to the New Covenant writings. There are indirect references to this kingdom in the Prophets. There are references to "His Kingdom" (2 Sam 5:12; Psa 103:19; 145:12; Isa 9:7; Dan 4:3,34; 6:26; 7:14,27). A Kingdom was revealed to Daniel that would "never be destroyed," would "break in pieces and consume" all the kingdoms of the world, and "stand forever" (Dan 2:44). This was the same Kingdom of which our text speaks, though not revealed to the extent it is now made known.

- The Gospels refer to the "kingdom of God" fifty-five times.
- The Gospels refer to the "the Kingdom of heaven" thirty-four times.
- Jesus referred to "My Kingdom" three times (Mk 6:23; Lk 22:30; John 18:36).
- Jesus referred to "the Kingdom" fourteen times (Matt 4:23; 6:13; 8:12; 9:35; 13:19; 13:38,43; 19:12-24:14; 25:34; Mk 11:10; Lk 12:32; 18:29; 19:16).
- He spoke of the saints and "the Kingdom of their Father" (Matt 13:43).
- Relating it to the Father, He referred to "Thy Kingdom" (Lk 11:2).
- Referencing the Father, Jesus referred to "His Kingdom" (Matt 13:41).
- Connecting it with the Son, He referred to "His Kingdom" (Matt 16:28; Lk 11:18).
- The insightful proclamation of this Kingdom began it John the Baptist (Matt 3:1; Mk 1:14-15)
 - This continued throughout Jesus' prodigious ministry (Lk 4:43).
 - The book of Acts refers to "the Kingdom of God" seven times (Acts 1:3; 8:12; 14:22; 19:6; 20:25; 28:23,31).
 - The epistles refer to it eight times (Rom 14:17; 6:9,10; 15:50; Gal 5:21; Col 4:11; 2 Thess 1:5).
 - There is also reference to "the Kingdom of Christ and of God" (Eph 5:5).
 - It is referred to as "the Kingdom of His dear Son" (Col 1:13).
 - There is also "the Kingdom which He hath promised" (James 2:5).
 - Add "the Kingdom of our God" (Rev 12:10).
 - There is also "His Kingdom" (1 Thess 2:12; 2 Tim 4:1).
 - Included is "His heavenly Kingdom" (2 Tim 4:18).
 - There is "Thy Kingdom" (Heb 1:8).
 - There is also "a Kingdom which cannot be moved" (Heb 12:28).
 - Who can forget "the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet 1:11).
 - There is also "the Kingdom and patience of Jesus" (Rev 1:9).

All of these are speaking of the same Kingdom. When referring to the heavenly government, Kingdom never appears in the plural.

Ponder what is said of this Kingdom that Paul preached.

- This Kingdom belongs to the poor in spirit (Matt 5:3).
- This Kingdom belongs to those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake (Matt5:10).
- Men are to seek this Kingdom “first” (Matt 6:33).
- He that is least in this Kingdom is greater than John the Baptist (Matt 11:11).
- It is given to some to know the mysteries of this Kingdom (Matt 13:11).

With so much being said through the Holy Spirit concerning the Kingdom of God, one wonders why do very little is being said about it in the modern church. An unbelievable number of Bible College and Seminary graduates appear to have little interest in the subject, and have little understanding of it.

We can be instructed concerning this Kingdom (Matt 13:62).

- It is difficult for a rich man to enter this Kingdom (Matt 19:23-24).
- There are “things concerning the Kingdom” (Acts 8:12; 9:8).
- There is entering the Kingdom “through much tribulation” (Acts 14:22).
- This is a Kingdom that is “in righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit” (Rom 14:17).
- It is not merely in word, but in power (1 Cor 4:20).
- It is a Kingdom that is inherited (1 Cor 6:9,10; Gal 5:21; Eph 5:5).
- Flesh and blood cannot inherit this Kingdom (1 Cor 15:50).
- Men are translated into this Kingdom (Col 1:13).
- There are those who work for this Kingdom (Col 4:11).
- We are called unto this Kingdom (1 Thess 2:12).
- Suffering for righteousness sake qualifies for this Kingdom (2 Thess 1:5).
- This Kingdom will appear when Jesus appears (2 Tim 4:1).
- We are preserved unto this heavenly Kingdom (2 Tim 4:18).
- We have received this Kingdom (Heb 12:28).
- We are heirs of this Kingdom (James 2:5).
- An abundant entrance into this Kingdom will be ministered to us (2 Pet 1:11).

Why???

With so much being said through the Holy Spirit concerning the Kingdom of God, one wonders why do very little is being said about it in the modern church. An unbelievable number of Bible College and Seminary graduates appear to have little interest in the subject, and have little understanding of it. There is some talk about Christ’s “soon coming Kingdom,” a Kingdom that will dominate for one thousand years, and a Savior that is “coming to reign.” However, there is a suspiciously small amount of teaching about the Kingdom of Christ, into which all believers have already been translated (Col 1:13). Something is seriously wrong with an approach to Christianity that leaves out such a glaringly inspired subject.

What Is the Kingdom of God?

Because more will be said on this matter in the commentary on verse 31, I will here make only a few introductory statements.

- This is the Kingdom that Isaiah prophesied would be placed upon Christ's shoulder. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his Kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the LORD of hosts will perform this. (Isa 9:7). The angel Gabriel revealed to Mary that this would be fulfilled in Jesus, the Son to whom she would give birth (Lk 1:31-33).

- It is the Kingdom Daniel prophesied would be set up during the times of the Kingdoms of Babylon, Medes-Persians, Greece, and Rome. "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever" (Dan 2:44). Paul taught that commensurate with Christ's enthronement in heaven, this dominion was set in place (Eph 1:20-22).

- It is the Kingdom that was given to Jesus when He returned to heaven in the clouds. "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed" (Dan 7:13-14).

- It is described by David as the Messiah ruling in the midst of His enemies. "LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. The LORD shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies" (Psa 110:1-2). Peter said this was fulfilled following the resurrection of Christ (Acts 2:34-36).

- This is the Kingdom of which David spoke, declaring the righteousness would be its scepter. "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: the scepter of thy kingdom is a right scepter" (Psa 45:6). The writer of Hebrews affirms this prophecy has been fulfilled in Christ (Heb 1:8).

From these few texts, we may conclude the following concerning "the Kingdom of God."

- It relates specifically to Christ's redemptive role, being associated with His birth and ascension into glory.
- This is a Kingdom noted for sure increase, judgment, and stability.
- It is a government of peace.
- It will eventually, in the process of time, decimate all other kingdoms.
- It is a universal dominion, over all people, nations, and languages. None of them can operate independently of the government of Jesus.
- Having been exalted to the right hand of God, Jesus is presently ruling in the midst of His enemies, bringing His purposes to culmination in spite of seeming opposition.
- The sign of the rule of Jesus is not an overt show of power, but righteousness – a righteous that is found in those who were previously the enemies of God, alienated from Him through their ignorance.

This Kingdom belongs to God, and He has given it to Christ, laying its government upon His shoulder. For this reason, it is referred to as "the Kingdom of Christ and of God" (Eph 5:5).

This is the Kingdom Paul expounded, and to which he testified. He showed the Jews that the Kingdom of which the prophets prophesied had been placed in the hands of Jesus.

PERSUADING THEM CONCERNING JESUS

“ . . . persuading them concerning Jesus . . .” Other versions read, “trying to persuade them concerning Jesus,” NASB “tried to convince them about Jesus,” NIV “having discussions with them about Jesus,” BBE “He persuaded them concerning Jesus,” CSB “persuading them those things that concern Jesus,” GENEVA “persuading them also of the things concerning Jesus,” YLT “taught them about Jesus,” LIVING “endeavoring from morning till evening to convince them about Jesus,” WEYMOUTH “try to win them over to Jesus,” CEV and “trying to persuade them all about Jesus.” MESSAGE

One of the acid tests of genuine rule is the ability to rule over the god of this world and the powers of darkness. While in a humbled state, Jesus did precisely that. For the first time in history, Satan confronted a Man who did not yield to his finely crafted temptations

As used here, the word “persuading” means, “persuasive power, persuasion,” THAYER “convince,” FRIBERG “win over,” UBS and “convince someone to believe something and to act on the basis of what is recommended.” LOUW-NIDA

I gather that Paul particularly related Jesus to the prophecies of God’s Kingdom, and generally to all of the prophecies concerning the Messiah. I will comment on the latter when we touch upon verse thirty-one.

When Pilate asked Jesus if He was a King (and a king has a kingdom), Jesus answered, “Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born , and for this cause came I into the world , that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice” (John 18:37). Prior to this statement Jesus affirmed, “My Kingdom is not of this world . . . but now is My Kingdom not from hence” (John 18:36).

Behold how Jesus associated His kingship with His birth, and entrance into the world. He did not say He would come again to be king, as some teachers and songs affirm. He did not say that he would come the second time to reign, but that He was born for this purpose, entering the world in order to obtain the Kingdom over which He presently presides.

In other words, the Kingdom of God is presently being administered by “the Man Christ Jesus” (1 Tim 2:5) – and that is precisely why Jesus was “born,” to become a man! He certainly did not become a Man in order to be dominant over all, for He fully occupied such a position before coming into the world. Further, His Kingdom was not of this world, but was to be an administration of righteousness, not overt power. That as a Man Jesus was, in fact, superior to all other men was fully demonstrated during His earthly life. There was not situation over which He did not preside – the single exception being found in His death, to which He acquiesced in order that might “destroy him that had the power of death” (Heb 2:14).

Jesus Ruled Over Nature

Nature itself was subordinate to the Man Christ Jesus. He stilled storms (Mk 4:39), walked on a raging sea (Matt 14:25), effectively cursed a fig tree (Matt 21:19), multiplied bread (Matt 14:17; 15:36), commanded catches of fish (Lk 5:4; John 21:6), and commanded a fish to deliver a coin to Peter (Matt 17:27). He also turned water into wine (John 2:8-9).

Jesus Ruled Over Domain of Satan

One of the acid tests of genuine rule is the ability to rule over the god of this world and the powers of darkness. While in a humbled state, Jesus did precisely that. For the first time in history, Satan confronted a Man who did not yield to his finely crafted temptations (Matt 4:1-14). With his finger, Jesus cast out demons, commanding them to leave those they were controlling (Lk 11:20). Demons acknowledged His superiority over them (Matt 8:29; Mk 1:24). Spirits that caused people to be unclean, blind, deaf, dumb, epileptic, and wild, left people at Jesus' command (Mk 1:6; 5:8; 9:25; Lk 4:35; 8:29; 9:42,55). And finally, in His death, when He was at His weakest state, He "spoiled principalities and powers" (Col 2:15), and "destroyed" the devil (Heb 2:14).

He Healed All Manner of Disease

There was no disease that stymied Jesus. He healed all kinds of sickness and disease (Matt 4:23): deafness (Matt 11:5; Mk 7:32-25), blindness (Matt 9:27-29; 11:5; 20:30; 21:14; Mk 8:22-23; 10:46-51; John 9:1-7), dumbness (Matt 15:31; Mk 7:32-35), impotence (John 5:7-8), flowing blood (Mk 5:25-29), fever (Matt 8:14-15), a withered hand (Mk 3:1-5), the maimed (Matt 15:30), the lame (Matt 21:14), and plagues (Lk 7:21).

He Raised the Dead

Jesus was noted for raising the dead (Matt 11:5). Three specific people are mentioned whom Jesus raised from the dead: Jairus' daughter (Lk 8:52-55), the only son of a widow of Nain (Lk 7:11-15), and Lazarus (John 11:37-44).

He Forgave Sins

Again, in His humble state, prior to His exaltation, Jesus forgave sins. He forgave a man sick of the palsy (Matt 9:2), a sinful woman who anointed His feet (Lk 7:47-50), and a woman taken in the act of adultery (John 8:11).

He Was Impervious to Aggressive Opposition

While in this world, Jesus faced aggressive opposition and evil intentions, yet His enemies were totally and completely frustrated in all of their attempts, until God gave them an hour to do their worst (Lk 22:53). They sought to kill Him, but could not do so (John 5:16-18; 7:1). They sought to lay hands on Him, but could not do so (Matt 21:46; Mk 12:12; John 7:30; 10:39). Once they sought to cast him off the brow of a hill, but Jesus simply walked through them and went His way (Lk 4:29-30).

He Knew the Thoughts of Men

Unlike any other man who had ever lived, Jesus knew the thoughts of men, and what was inside of them (Lk 6:8; John 2:24-25; 13:11).

Summation

Peter summarized Jesus' earthly ministry with these words: "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power : who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with Him" (Acts 10:38). This was done in spite of the devil's opposition, and the seeming dominancy of the powers of darkness.

Let me again emphasize, that all of these manifestations took place when Jesus was in a humbled state. He had come "in the likeness of sinful flesh" (Rom 8:3), humbled Himself by laying aside His equality with God (Phil 2:6-7), taking upon Himself the form of a servant (Phil 2:7), submitting to the experience of temptation (Heb 2:18; 4:15), and becoming "obedient unto death" (Phil 2:6).

But Jesus is no longer in a humbled state. Who is the person who imagines that He is waiting to exert His power, when He was able to do so in a humbled state, and with not a single case of failure. Now He has been exalted, and it is not possible for Him to be glorified any more than He is at this present time. It is not possible for Him to be Lord in any more fully than He is at this very hour. It only remains for it to be made known, or unveiled. Apostolic doctrine confirms that God is going to make known what Jesus is at this present time. "Which in His times He shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see: to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen" (1 Tim 6:15-16).

Paul's words "concerning Jesus" had to do with what and who He IS, not what is was going to be. They were affirmations, not suppositions, declarations, not a philosophical analysis. They were not a representation of what the people were seeking, but the avowal of whom the Father had given, and why He had done so.

OUT OF THE LAW AND OUT OF THE PROPHETS

" . . . both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets . . ." Other versions read, "both from the law of Moses and from the prophets," NKJV making use of both the Torah of Moshe and the Prophets," CJB "from Moses' Teachings and the Prophets," GWN "Using the law of Moses and the books of the prophets," NLT "from the five books of Moses and the books of prophecy," LIVING "quoting from the Law of Moses and the writings of the prophet," GNB and "what Moses and the prophets had written about him." MESSAGE

There are several references to Moses and the Prophets.

- ABRAHAM SPEAKING TO THE RICH MAN IN HELL. "Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets ; let them hear them . . . And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead" (Luke 16:-31).

- JESUS TO THE TWO ON THE ROAD TO EMMAUS, "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets , he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself" (Luke 24:27).

- JESUS TO HIS DISCIPLES. "And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms , concerning me" (Luke 24:44).

- PHILIP TO NATHANIEL. "Philip findeth NATHANIEL, and saith unto him, We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets , did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph" (John 1:45).

- PAUL TO AGRIPPA. "Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come" (Acts 26:22).

- PAUL TO THE JEWISH LEADERS IN ROME. "And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening" (Acts 28:23).

It is said of the Lord God, "Surely the Lord GOD will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants the prophets" (Amos 3:7). This is particularly true in regards to the coming of Christ into the world, His vicarious death, His resurrection, His ascension, and His enthronement in glory. So far as His entrance into the world is concerned, there were numerous prophecies that were detailed enough to enable the faithful to recognize Him. A Jesus who does not precisely match the words of Moses and the Prophets concerning Him is “another Jesus” (2 Cor 11:4). Those who lack familiarity with Moses and the Prophets have yet to establish that they have, in fact embraced the real Jesus. They may very well have done so, but they will not know it for sure until they obtain some understanding in this area.

Those who lack familiarity with Moses and the Prophets have yet to establish that they have, in fact embraced the real Jesus. They may very well have done so, but they will not know it for sure until they obtain some understanding in this area.

Some of the Scriptural proofs that Jesus of Nazareth was the promised Messiah include the following.

- His precise fleshly lineage could be traced through the woman (Gen 3:15; Gal 4:4).
- He was born of a virgin (Isa 7:14; Matt 1:23).
- He was born in Bethlehem (Micah 5:2; Matt 2:1,5).
- He was called out of Egypt (Hos 11:1; Matt 2:15).
- He was reared in Nazareth, which was spiritually “dry ground” (Isa 53:1-2; Matt 2:23; John 1:46).
- His ministry was in Galilee (Isa 9:1-2; Matt 4:13-15).
- He healed the sick (Isa 53:4; Matt 8:17).
- He spoke in parables and uttered things that had not been known since the foundation of the world (Psa 49:4; Matt 13:34-35).
- He rode into Jerusalem on a colt during a high time (Zech 9:9; Matt 21:2-10).
- In the hour of trial, His disciples forsook Him (Zech 13:7; Matt 26:56).
- They parted His vesture when He was crucified (Psa 22:18; Matt 27:35; John 19:24).
- Even though He had done many miracles, the people did not believe on Him (Isa 29:10; 53:1; John 12:37-41).
- The choosing of Judas, and His betrayal of Jesus (Psa 41:9; John 13:18; 17:12).
- The people hated Jesus without a cause (Psa 7:4; 35:19; 69:4; 109:3; John 15:25).
- The safe-keeping of the disciples even during the tumultuous time of Christ’s arrest and death (Psa 109:6-19; John 17:12; 18:8-9).
- The kind of death Jesus died (Deut 21:23; Psa 22:16; John 18:31-32).
- Jesus being thirsty on the cross (Psa 22:15; 69:21; John 19:28).
- None of Jesus’ bones being broken when He died, even those who were crucified with him had their bones broken (Ex 12:46; Num 9:12; Psa 34:20; John 19:33-36).

Outward Manifestations Any Person Could Examine and Ponder

All of these things were outward manifestations. There are a host of other proofs that are confirmed by the experience of faith. Those will be covered in verse 31).

Reasoning out of Moses and the Prophets involved a correlation of what they foretold of the Messiah and Jesus of Nazareth. Although few considered Jesus to be that Messiah, He was, in fact, the very One God had promised.

- He was the “Prophet” of Moses (Deut 18:15,18).

- He was Isaiah's "Man" (Isa 32:2), "Servant" (Isa 42:1), "Sanctuary" (Isa 8:14), "Nail in a sure place" (Isa 22:23-25), and "Redeemer" (Isa 59:20).

- He was the "Righteous Branch" (Jer 23:5), "The Lord our Righteousness" (Jer 23:6), and "David" (Jer 30:9) of Jeremiah.

- He was the "Plant of Renown" of Ezekiel (Ezek 34:29).

- He was Daniel's "the Son of Man" (Dan 7:14) and "Messiah" (Dan 9:24-25).

- He was "David their King" (Hos 3:5), and God's "Son" of Hosea (Heb 11:1).

- He was Micah's "Ruler of Israel" (Mic 5:2).

- He was "the Desire of all nations" of Haggai (Hag 2:7).

- He was Zechariah's "Branch" (Zech 3:8), "Shepherd" (Zech 13:7), and "King over all the earth" (Zech 14:9).

- He is "the Messenger of the Covenant" (Mal 3:1), and "the Sun of Righteousness" (Mal 4:2) of Malachi.

FROM MORNING UNTIL EVENING

" . . . from morning till evening." Other versions read, "from dawn to dusk," CSB "from early morning unto evening," DARBY "from morning to night," GENEVA "He began lecturing in the morning and went on into the evening!," LIVING "all day long," IE and "all day, from morning to evening." MESSAGE

As ordinarily perceived, this would have been twelve hours. Jesus asked, "Are there not twelve hours in a day?" (John 11:9). I gather, therefore, that this discussion filled the entire day.

Other Extended Gatherings

While this is not intended to set a precedent for all generations, there have been occasions when the people of God spent extended times in holy activities, including being taught and discussing the Word of God. This was driven more by interest than by law, and were required by appetite rather than requisite.

- In Nehemiah's day, when they had kept a seven-day feast, "the seed of Israel separated themselves from all strangers, and stood and confessed their sins, and the iniquities of their fathers" (Neh 9:2). During that time, they stood up and heard the Law read "one fourth part of the day" (6 hours). This was followed by another "fourth part of the day" (6 hours), when they "confessed, and worshiped the Lord their God" (Neh 9:3).

- The multitudes spent three days with Jesus prior to being miraculously fed by Him (Mk 8:2).

- After having Jesus joined them early in the day, the two on the road to Emmaus spent the rest of the day with Him, extending into the night. Immediately following the departure of Jesus, the two returned to Jerusalem where they "found the eleven gathered together, and them with them." During that time, and after confirming He was really risen from the dead, Jesus appeared to them, and "opened their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures" (Lk 24:13-49)m.

- Paul spent the first day of the week with the brethren at Troas, and "continued his speech until midnight" (Acts 20:7).

Sharing his thinking, and speaking of "the way" were matters that could be expounded at length. In all of these cases, and more, the gatherings were tailored for the concerned and interested, not the unconcerned and disinterested.

If this kind of approach was adopted by the churches of our time, the impact would no doubt be startling. I do not question that many facilities would have to be sold for lack of use, and church staff numbers would be significantly reduced, if not altogether dissolved. If these assessments are true, the churches at Sardis and Laodicea have been successfully restored – characterized by lifelessness and lukewarmness.

SOME BELIEVED, AND SOME BELIEVED NOT

“ 24 And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not.”

The results of this single day are recorded. They were not produced by a growth program. Paul did not speak with a mind to increase the number of disciples, although he was certainly not averse to obtaining such results. His objective was first to give as faithful witness of Jesus Christ, that is what Jesus said he would do: “Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of Me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome” (Acts 23:11).

The interest of the people was strictly secondary. That is because the power is in the Gospel of Christ (Rom 1:16), the Convicting One is the Holy Spirit (John 16:8-11), and the Lord Jesus is “the Author and Finisher” of faith (Heb 12:2). Jesus is the One who gives repentance (Acts 5:31), and sheds forth the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:33). God is the One who opens the heart (Acts 16:14), and who gives men “in the behalf of Christ . . . To believe” (Phil 1:29). The results, therefore, essentially confirm what God did and did not do. This perfectly synchronizes with the purpose of God, and how He perceived the people themselves.

The responses of men reflect two things which are synchronized by the manner in which the Gospel is received. The first preeminent and driving factor is the will of God – what He determines. There is a sense in which this determination is made independent of human response. Thus we read, “Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began” (2 Tim 1:9). If it were not for the inclusion of “called us with a holy calling,” men might be able to conclude the whole of Divine determination is driven by human response. Those words, however, indicate that more is involved in our calling than mere human aptitude.

Jude also speaks of us being “kept for Jesus Christ” NASB before we were called (Jude 1:1). In the epistle to the Romans, Paul speaks of being “called” according to God’s “purpose,” not according to human achievement or desire (Rom 8:28). Additionally, Paul also speaks of this in language of great loftiness. “According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of His will” (Eph 1:4-5).

In his letter to the Thessalonians, he further affirms that the power of the Gospel toward them, their reception of that Gospel, were evidence of God’s election, and not the cause of it.; “Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God. For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake. And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost” (1 Thess 1:3-6). And again, “But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth: Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Thess 2:14).

For many, this is a difficult thing to receive, and yet there is very plain teaching on the subject that is to be believed.

SOME BELIEVED

What is it that distinguished those who believed, and why did they believe. From the lower point of view, it was because the message appealed to them, and resonated most favorably upon their hearts. From the high viewpoint, it was the same as with those Gentiles in Antioch: “And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed” (Acts 13:48). Other versions read, “all who were appointed for eternal life,” NIV “as many as had been destined for eternal life,” NRSV “marked out for eternal life,” BBE “had been prepared for,” GWN “pre-destined to the life of the Ages,” WEYMOUTH “being arranged for,” ABP “destined (appointed and ordained) to eternal life,” AMPLIFIED and “having been set into.” INTERLINEAR Unable to accept the meaning clearly suggested by the text, the Living Bible reads, “as many as wanted eternal life believed” – which is a gross distortion.

When Paul traveled to Thessalonica, he “reasoned with them out of the Scriptures” for three Sabbaths. Although he was forced out of that area, yet it is written that “some of them believed, and consorted,” or joined with, Paul and Silas (Acts 17:4).

This description of the legitimate response to the Gospel – “believed” – is repeatedly reported in the book of Acts.

- In the beginning “all that believed were together” (Acts 2:44).
- Later, five thousand were among “them which heard the Word and believed” (Acts 4:4).
- The city of Samaria “believed Philip preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ,” and “were baptized, both men and women” (Acts 8:12).
- When Peter raised Dorcas from the dead, people in that region heard it “and many believed in the Lord” (Acts 9:42).
- When reporting what took place at the house of Cornelius, Peter said the gift of the Spirit was given to those “who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ” (Acts 11:17).
- When the Word was preached in Antioch, “the hand of the Lord was with them, and a great number believed and turned to the Lord” (Acts 11:21).
- On the Island of Cyprus, when the governor heard what Paul preached, and witnessed the judgment of Elymas, he “believed” (Acts 13:12).
- In Antioch, the Gentiles who were ordained unto eternal life “believed” (Acts 13:48).

Believing does involve the intellect, yet it is not primarily intellectual. It is not mere intellectual assent. It is not simply accepting what was said, and not engaging in disputation.

In Iconium “a great multitude both of Jews and also of Greeks believed” (Acts 14:1).

- In Berea, upon hearing the Gospel, “many of them believed” (Acts 17:12).
- In Athens “certain men clave unto” Paul, and believed: “among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them” (Acts 17:34).
- In Corinth Cripus and his household, and “many of the Corinthians hearing believed and were baptized” (Acts 18:8).
- In Ephesus “many that believed came, and confessed, and showed their deeds” (Acts 19:18).

And how is it that these people “believed?” It was because God gave them, “in the behalf of Christ,” to “believe” (Phil 1:29). From the high vantage point, the proper message was preached, and the proper people heard it. In that context, God gave them to believe. Elsewhere it is said of those who believed that they “had through grace” (Acts 18:27).

What Does It Mean to Believe?

Believing does involve the intellect, yet it is not primarily intellectual. It is not mere intellectual assent. It is not simply accepting what was said, and not engaging in disputation.

Here, the word translated “believed” (evpei,qonto) means “to persuade, I. e. to induce one by words to believe: absolutely to cause belief in a thing,” THAYER “convince,” FRIBERG “satisfy,” UBS “to convince someone to believe something and to act on the basis of what is recommended – 'to persuade, to convince,” LOUW-NIDA “to prevail upon, win over, persuade,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “be convinced, be sure, certain.” GINGRICH

This particular word is used fifty-eight times in Scripture. It is translated in different ways (KJV).

- “Persuaded” (Matt 27:20; 28:14; Lk 16:31; Lk 20:6; Acts 13:43; 14:19; 18:4; 19:8,26; 21:14; 26:26,28; 28:23,24; Rom 8:38; 14:14; 15:14; 2 Cor 5:11; Gal 1:10; 2 Tim 3:5; 2 Tim 1:12; Heb 6:9; 11:13
- “Trusted” (Matt 27:43; Mk 10:24; k 11:22; 18:9; 2 Cor 1:9; 2 Cor 10:7; Phil 2:24; 3:4; Heb 2:13; 13:18
- “Obeyed” (Acts 5:36,37; Rom 2:4; Gal 3:1; 5:7; Heb 13:17; James 3:3
- “Agreed” (Acts 5:40
- “With one accord . . . made” (Acts 12:20
- “Believed” (Acts 17:4; 27:11
- “Yield” (Acts 23:21
- “Confident” (Rom 2:19; 2 Cor 2:3; Gal 5:10; Phil 1:6,14,25; Phil 3:3; 2 Thess 3:4; Phile 1:21
- “Assure” (1 John 3:19).

This is not the same word used for believing on the Lord Jesus Christ, or the believing through which eternal life is obtained. It is the persuasion of the mind, as compared with the heart. Some of the ways in which it is used confirms this to be the case. The same original word is used in the following texts is the same used in our text.

- Chief priests “persuaded” the multitude to release Barabbas (Matt 27:20).
- Chief priests said they would “persuade” Pilate the Jews stole the body of Jesus (Matt 28:14).
- Jesus spoke of men who would “trust in riches” (Mk 10:24).
- Jesus spoke of a man who “trusted” in his armor (Lk 11:22).
- There were people who “trusted in themselves” (Lk 18:9).
- The enemies of Jesus spoke of those who might “trust” John the Baptist was a prophet (Lk 20:6).
- They were people who “obeyed” the false prophet Theudas (Acts 5:36-37).
- The Jewish leaders “agreed” to the counsel of Gamaliel, beat the apostles, and let them go (Acts 5:40).

- Certain Jews from Antioch “persuaded” the people to stone Paul (Acts 14:19).
- Julius “believed” the pilot of the ship and its owner above Paul (Acts 27:11).
- Certain “obeyed unrighteousness” (Rom 2:8).
- Some were “persuaded” they were godly guides, yet were blind (Rom 2:19).
- Paul was not among those who “trusted in themselves” (2 Cor 1:9).
- Paul warned about the man who “trusted in himself” (2 Cor 10:7).
- Horses “obey” (James 3:3).

The kind of believing that took place in this text was intellectual persuasion. It was not the kind of believing of which it is written, “with the heart man believeth unto righteousness” (Rom 10:10). When Abraham is said to have been “fully persuaded” that God was able to do what He had promised, yet another Greek word was used (plhroforhqeij). The lexical meaning of this word is, “to make one certain, to persuade, convince . . . fully convinced or assured.” THAYER There “fully persuaded” was the prelude to acting upon what was promised, not doubting it, and framing his life around it.

This is more than a mere academic diversion. It is my persuasion that many professed believers in Christ have only believed at the intellectual level – apparently like some to whom James wrote (James 2:19). They appear to not yet have believed with their heart, for they have not acted upon the truth.

Here again we witness the inferiority of the English language. There are words and word-distinctions that are in the Greek and Hebrew language, but are not reflected in the English language. “Love” in another work like this. This is the reason one must be familiar with the doctrine of Scripture, which will spell out the difference – i.e. demons believing, versus believing on the Lord Jesus Christ.

Some of the hearers of our text were intellectually convinced that what Paul said was the truth. Yet, they did not cry out, “What shall we do?” (Acts 2:37), or “What must I do to be saved?” (Acts 16:30).

You may recall that Luke compares the response of the Berean Jews with those of the Thessalonians. The passage has, in my judgment, not been seen properly. The Jews believed (same word as used in our text), and joined themselves to Paul and Silas. Others “believed not,” and set the city in an uproar, finally forcing Paul and Silas to leave (Acts 17:1-9). Going to a Berean synagogue, the Jews did not react in such a manner. Rather than opposing Paul, they searched the Scriptures to see if what Paul was saying was true (Acts 17:11). They did not assume he was wrong like the majority of the Jews at Thessalonica.

When writing to those who had believed in Thessalonica, Paul described their response without regard to the objecting Jews. “For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe . For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judaea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews” (1 Thess 2:14). The Bereans were not “more noble” than those who are so described. In fact, on the surface, they appear to have come behind them. The Thessalonians who believed received Paul’s word as it was spoken, while the Bereans had to verify it. The comparison is with the Thessalonian Jews who did not believe, and opposed Paul.

How people respond to the Word of God, particularly the Gospel, is a critical matter. Giving intellectual assent to it is necessary and good, but the response must go further than that. To cause the individual to be accepted, believing must be “from the heart” (Rom 10:10).

SOME BELIEVED NOT

Other versions read, “disbelieved,” NKJV “would not believe,” NASB “refused to believe.” NRSV

Some of the Jewish leaders, having heard Paul, did not agree with what he said. They did not intellectually assent to his words. They did not see them as being the truth of God, and thus would make no further inquiry into them – at least not for that time.

The Law specified that God was to be loved “with the mind” (Matt 22:37). The text in Deuteronomy says “with all thy soul” (Deut 6:5; 10:12; 30:6). That speaks of natural aptitude, particularly as it relates to thinking and emotion. The men of our text who “believed not” did not acquiesce with the truth in their minds. Paul’s testimony conflicted with their way of thinking, and thus they rejected what he had to say. This kind of rejection is extant in our day as well, and it is at staggering levels.

If more of the Word of God was declared, men would find that as astounding level of unbelief exists in most churches. The mere mention of some pivotal statement of truth will verify that this is the case.

THEY AGREED NOT AMONG THEMSELVES

“ 25a And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed . . . ”

Here the same thing happened that took place when the Sanhedrin heard Paul. Owing to Paul’s wisdom in identifying that they were fundamentally disagreed among themselves, he spoke so they would turn upon each other rather than himself (Acts 23:6-8). In that case, the contention was over the resurrection of the dead. In this text it was over Jesus being identified with the prophecies of Moses and the Prophets.

THEY AGREED NOT AMONG THEMSELVES

“And when they agreed not among themselves . . . ” Other versions read , “they disagreed among themselves,” NIV “there was a division among them,” BBE “unable to agree among themselves,” GWN and “after they had argued back and forth.” NLT

Here is confirmation that light and darkness cannot be joined. Ignorance and understanding cannot journey together. One thing that Babylon the great has accomplished is the blurring of the line between truth and the lie, illumination and deception, and righteousness and unrighteousness. Actually, it has introduced a kind of church in which demons can easily sit with men, perpetrating their doctrines. The professed followers of Jesus are encouraged to make friends with the carnally minded, and there is no thought about such an effort producing contamination and variance that cannot be resolved in the flesh.

The Jewish leaders evidently talked among themselves about what Paul had declared, seeking some common ground. But they were unable to find it, for the ones who had been persuaded of the truth of what Paul said refused to compromise that persuasion. Those who were not convinced refused to accept the notion that they had embraced something wrong, or that it was remotely possibly that their view of Jesus of Nazareth was incorrect. It even appears as though their dialog began while Paul was speaking, as the remainder of this verse will confirm.

THEY DEPARTED

“ . . . they departed . . . ” Other versions read, “began leaving,” NASB “as they were leaving,” NRSV “they went away,” BBE “they left,” CJB “went out from him,” MRD “were ready to leave,”

IE “they at last left him,” WEYMOUTH and “they started to leave.” WILLIAMS

They had spent a full day with Paul, and had heard much. But at the end of the day, they were no closer to Paul than at the moment they entered where he was staying. The Word of God, as we will see, finally drove them from the one who cared for them.

THE CATALYST FOR DEPARTURE

“ 25b . . . after that Paul had spoken one word, Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers, 26 Saying, Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive: 27 For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them. 28 Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it.”

Now we will be exposed to how an inspired man of God addresses a mixed audience – one where what he says is intellectually acknowledged as true, while others in the audience refuse to do so. Paul’s response will not fit into man-made methodologies that have been invented by religious bigots, or others who attempt to pass along their worldly way of thinking to professed believers.

AFTER PAUL HAD SPOKEN ONE WORD

“ . . . after that Paul had spoken one word . . .” Other versions read, “began leaving after Paul had spoken one parting word,” NASB “after Paul had made this final statement,” NIV “as they were leaving, Paul made one further statement,” NRSV “after Paul made one statement,” RSV “after Paul had said this one thing,” BBE “left after Paul had quoted this particular passage to them,” GWN and “Paul had one last thing to say to them.” NJB

Keep in mind that we are talking about a single day, obviously chocked full of weighty considerations. Paul had not taught them of family relationships, the way to realize your personal dreams, how to manage your finances, the various nuances required for a happy marriage, or how to raise your children. Make no mistake about this – this is what a significant number of contemporary Christian leaders would have addressed. If there was some political issue, they might have spoke to it, or some matter related to poverty, disease, social disorder, or moral trends. Rather than running down some such convenient path of thought, Paul had spoken to the people, expounding and testifying the kingdom of God, and persuading them concerning Jesus. With a theme like that, there is less tolerance for unbelief!

One of the chief difficulties with the current agendas of the modern church is that what they talk about is of little or no consequence. It simply does not fit into the environment of eternity. If it was not for the news, social issues, and a variety of worldly problems, such men would have nothing to say. By way of comparison, Paul preached a message that was relevant in good or bad times, to the rich and the poor, to male and female, in good governments of despotic ones. His message transcended the affairs of this world – all of them. In view of that, he will, have zero tolerance for the despising of his message, just as he did in other places.

- Antioch (Acts 13:43 – one message).
- Athens (Acts 17:33 – one message)
- Corinthian synagogue (Acts 18:5-6 – unknown number of Sabbaths).
- Ephesian synagogue (Acts 19:9 – (after three months)).

It is apparent that Paul spoke as long as there was some level of genuine interest. Further, he made no effort to stir up interest by carnal means. There is also no evidence that he ever attempted to form friendships prior to preaching the Gospel.

WELL SPAKE THE HOLY GHOST

“Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers . . .” Other versions read, “The Holy Spirit spoke rightly,” NKJV “The Holy Spirit spoke the truth,” NIV “The Holy Spirit was right in saying,” NRSV “The Holy Spirit correctly spoke,” CSB and “The Holy Spirit beautifully expressed.” WEYMOUTH

Note that in quoting from the book of Isaiah, Paul said “the Holy Spirit spoke.”

This reflects the same perspective declared by Peter: “for prophecy never came by the will of man, but holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit” NKJV (2 Pet 1:21). This was said of a text that was written prior to the Babylonian captivity – well over 750 years prior to event Luke is reporting. The text had probably been copied numerous times, and even translated into Greek in the Septuagint version, which was written and completed prior to 132 B.C. Yet, there was no question about the integrity of the text, which had been in use for over 175 years, and probably copied numerous times as well. O, that there was such trust in the integrity of Scripture in our time, when re-translation (not copying) has become so popular!

By saying Isaiah prophesied “well,” “rightly,” or “correctly,” Paul is saying that what he said was still taking place – and it is today as well.

Remember, this is a Divine assessment. There is no chance that it is not precise in every detail, whether men can see it or agree with it or not.

HEARING YE SHALL HEAR AND NOT UNDERSTAND

“ . . . Saying, Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand . . .” Other versions read, “You will keep on hearing, but will not understand,” NASB “you will be ever hearing but never understanding,” NIV “you will indeed listen, but never understand,” NRSV “Though you give ear, you will not get knowledge; and seeing,” BBE and “You will hear clearly but never understand.” GWN

Those who advocate tolerance of the religious ungodly, and gentle and forbearing speech with those who refuse what is provided in Christ Jesus need to pay particular attention to what is said in this text.

In other words, Isaiah was to tell the people they would not comprehend what he was saying – but he was to say it anyway. Isaiah’s commission was much like that delivered to Ezekiel: “For they are impudent children and stiffhearted. I do send thee unto them; and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD. And they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) yet shall know that there hath been a prophet among them. And thou, son of man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briers and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house. And thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear: for they are most rebellious” (Ezek 2:4-7).

Those who advocate tolerance of the religious ungodly, and gentle and forbearing speech with those who refuse what is provided in Christ Jesus need to pay particular attention to what is said in this text. This was spoken by an Apostle of Christ to those who had heard, so far as this record is concerned, one proclamation of the Savior as prophesied by Moses and the Prophets. Further, these people were Jews who had been cultured by Moses and the Prophets to receive the Lord’s Christ.

Isaiah spoke to a people who had been locked into their condition. They were in a position where they could hear truth in its purity, addressed to understanding, and yet they would not understand.

Spiritual Understanding

Spiritual understanding requires being submitted to the Scriptures, but that will not enable a person to understand. The Jews who were with Paul had been subjected to the Scriptures, hearing them read every Sabbath (Acts 13:27; 15:21), and personally searching them, for their entire lives. Add to of that, they had been exposed to a proper exposition of those Scriptures, and still they did not understand. In fact, the more they heard, the more they were repulsed by the truth. Like the Hebrew\ believers who received the Epistle to the Hebrews, they were “dull of hearing” (Heb 5:11). They just could not take hold of the truth, even though they heard a lot of it. What does Paul say to a people like this?

SEEING YE SHALL SEE AND NOT PERCEIVE

“ . . . and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive . . .” Other versions read, “you will keep on seeing, but will not perceive,” NASB “You will be ever seeing, but never perceiving,” NIV “?you will indeed look, but will never perceive,” NRSV “see but not understand,” LIVING “You will certainly see, but you won't understand!” IE “will look and look, and by no means see,” WEYMOUTH and “you will indeed look and look with your eyes but will not see [not perceive, have knowledge of or become acquainted with what you look at, at all].” AMPLIFIED

It would make no difference how deeply they looked into the words of the prophet, or how diligently they considered them, they would not be able to discern their meaning. Words set before them diligently and with frequency would not change their condition.

THEIR HEARTS ARE WAXED GROSS

“ , , , For the heart of this people is waxed gross . . .” Other versions read, “have grown dull,” NKJV “has become calloused,” NIV “has become fat,” BBE “has grown thick,” CJB “waxed fat,” GENEVA “is stupefied,” MRD “are hardened,” NLT “is grown obtuse,” MONTGOMERY and “has grown dull (stupid, hardened, and calloused).” AMPLIFIED

A gross, or fat, heart is an uncircumcised one. It has been covered over with the fat of sin and transgression, and is impervious to the prods of truth. There was no goad available to men that could pierce through the layer of fat that had enclosed their hearts. They were spiritually stupid, having been deprived of all wisdom and understanding.

The irony of the whole situation is that their religion had made them this way. As they mechanically went through the ordinances and ceremonies of the Law, it only anesthetized them, making it more and more difficult to understand.

THEIR EARS ARE DULL OF HEARING

“ . . . and their ears are dull of hearing . . .” Other versions read, “hard of hearing,” NKJV “they scarcely hear,” NASB “Hardly hear,” NIV “heavy of hearing,” RSV “slow in hearing,” BBE “they barely hear,” CJB “hear heavily with their ears,” DARBY “Cannot hear,” NLT and “thick of hearing.” TNT

Dull ears are also “uncircumcised ears” (Acts 7:51; Jer 6:10). When the trumpet of warning was sounded, they could not hear it. When the shout of exhortation was lifted up, they were impervious to the sound of it.

Dull ears are also “uncircumcised ears.” When the trumpet of warning was sounded, they could not hear it. When the shout of exhortation was lifted up, they were impervious to the sound of it.

What is more, the more they heard, the more they were repulsed by what they heard. They were completely incapable of hearing a word that could save them, a promise that could retrieve them, and a power that could deliver them. And how does the free will of man fit into that scenario?

THEIR EYES THEY HAVE CLOSED

“ . . . and their eyes have they closed . . .” Other versions read, “shut their eyes,” NRSV “their eyes are shut,” BBE “you have closed your eyes against understanding,” LIVING and “shut tight their eyes.” WILLIAMS

Isaiah’s prophecy states that God closed their eyes. “For the LORD hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath He covered. And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed: And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned. Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near Me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor Me, but have removed their heart far from Me, and their fear toward Me is taught by the precept of men: Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid” (Isa 29:10-14).

Referring to this very passage, Paul told the obstinate Jews in Antioch, “Beware therefore, lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in the prophets; Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you” (Acts 13:40-41).

How is it that Isaiah said God closed their eyes, and Paul quotes the text as saying the Jews closed them? This is the same kind of thing that took place in Pharaoh. God told Moses HE would harden Pharaoh’s heart (Ex 4:21; 7:3; 14:4,17). God, then, is said to have “hardened Pharaoh’s heart” (Ex 7:13-14,22; 9:12; 10:1; 10:20,27; 11:10; 13:8).

Pharaoh’s heart is said to have been hardened, just as the Lord said (Ex 8:19; 9:7).

Pharaoh is also said to have hardened his heart (Ex 8:15,32; 9:34,35).

Some view this as Pharaoh hardening his heart, and after doing this several times, God ratified his action, making it irreversible. However, in God’s words to Moses, He never did say Pharaoh would harden his heart, but rather that He (God) would harden Pharaoh’s heart (Ex 4:21; 7:3; 14:4,17). Pharaoh hardening his heart was the result of Divine judgment, not the cause of it.

An Overview

The condition of which Isaiah spoke, and to which Paul referred is most arresting. It is vividly described as hearing but not understanding, and seeing but not perceiving, The condition is described as hearts being gross, or overgrown with fat, the people having closed their eyes, and being dull, or incapable, of hearing.

All of this is a description of Divine judgment. That is, the people closed their eyes because they had been given up to their own desires, as in Romans. “What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded (According as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear;) unto this day” (Rom 11:7-8). From this higher perspective Isaiah said, “For the LORD hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes : the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered” (Isa 29:10).

LEST THEY SHOULD

“ . . . lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them . . .” Other versions read, “Otherwise they might,” NIV “so that they might not,” NRSV “for fear that they might,” BBE “otherwise they might,” CSB “lest perhaps,” DOUAY “so that they might not,” NAB “to avoid using,” NJB “For you don’t want to,” LIVING “to prevent their ever,” WEYMOUTH and “so that they may never.” ISV

The condition described is one not only one of Divine judgment, but of human preference as well. The absolute willingness of the people to close their eyes, ignore the words they heard, and stumble on in darkness confirms that God’s judgment was righteous. They did not close their eyes because they had to, but because they wanted to – and that is because God, in judgment, gave them over to their own reprobate desires. Whereas they could have received grace to resist such unholy inclinations, now such grace is put truth beyond their reach.

The word “lest” is translated from a word (mh,pote) meaning, “a prohibitory conjunction; lest ever, lest at any time, lest haply,” THAYER and “in order that not (at all), lest.” FRIBERG

From the human point of view, the people closed their eyes so they would not yield to the powerful constraints of the Gospel. From the Divine point of view, God caused this condition in order to put the truth beyond their access.

This is most difficult for some to comprehend, seeing it is revealed that God would have “all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth” (1 Tim 2:4). The idea here is that all races, nations, and peoples have been included in the provision of salvation. That is why the Gospel is to be preached “to every creature” (Mk 16:15). All of this is not as simplistic as it appears on the surface. There are “vessels of wrath PREPARED for destruction ” NIV (Rom 9:22). They are “vessels . . . unto dishonor” (Rom 9:21; 2 Tim 2:20). There are people who do not receive the “love of the truth,” to whom God sends “strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness” (2 Thess 2:11-12).

Isaiah was sent to people with a legitimate message, yet it would prove to be the means by which their obstinance would be revealed. God gave him this commission, “Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes ; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed. (Isa 6:9-10).

Here, then, are three most arresting perspectives of the hardness of men’s hearts.

- First, the condition is depicted as Divine judgment – the appointment to a state from which man is totally incapable of recovering himself. Isaiah said it was God pouring out the spirit of deep sleep upon the people, closing the eyes of the people, their prophets, and their rulers. He also covered the “seers” so they were unable to see the truth (Isa 29:10).

- The means by which this determination was implemented was the preaching, or declaration of the truth. It was through his words that Isaiah made the heart of the people “fat,” shutting their eyes so they could not see, hear, understand, convert, and be healed (Isa 6:9). Paul and Barnabas told the rejecters at Antioch that “it was necessary” that the Word of God should first have been preached to them (Acts 13:46). This was not merely a “Jew first” technicality, but was also the means of discovering their real condition.

- The revelation of the appointment is seen in the response of the people to the preaching of the Word..

In this way the righteousness of God was made known. His judgment was precise. The people demonstrated their disinterest in His provisions. Further, His great salvation remained available to “whosoever will” (Rev 22:17).

BE IT KNOWN UNTO YOU

“ . . . Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it.”

God did not “send” the Gospel to the Gentiles until the Jews, as a whole, had rejected it. In this way He would also fulfill the word He delivered through Moses: “They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God; they have provoked me to anger with their vanities: and I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation” (Deu 32:21). Paul confirmed that this is precisely why the Gospel was preached to the Gentiles. “But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you. But Esaias is very bold, and saith, I was found of them that sought Me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after Me. But to Israel he saith, All day long I have stretched forth My hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people” (Rom 10:19-21).

Thus the emphasis was changed from Israel to the Gentiles. This by no means indicates that God had abandoned Israel altogether. He did not totally cast away His people, nor has He voided His promise to them (Rom 11:1-11). He did, however, deliver a generation – the non-remnant – to reprobation, while reserving the remnant who exist because of “the election of grace” (Rom 11:5).

THE THEOLOGICAL DILEMMA

This entire circumstance has created a theological dilemma for many Bible students and professed believers. The difficulty comes because of the teaching of men concerning “free will.” This teaching exists even though there is not a syllable of Scripture that affirms the will of men, or another part of the nature make-up of man, is free. In the Authorized Version, in all but a single verse, the word “freewill” applies to offerings given over above the tithe (Lev 22:18,21,23,38; Num 15:3; ; 29:39; Deut 12:6,17; 16:10; 23:23; 2 Chron 31:14; Ezra 1:4,3:5; 7:16; 8:28; Psa 119:108). The exception is Ezra 7:13, where the Israelites from the Babylonian captivity were told by Cyrus, “of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem.”

The words “free will” occur four times in the NKJV (Lev 1:3; 19:5; 22:19, 29) – all referring to offerings.

“Free will” occurs a single time in the NASB version, referring to Philemon consenting to receive Onesimus back (Phile 1:14).

The NIV and NRSV versions do not contain the words “free will.”

The RSV versions uses “free will” two times (2 Cor 8:3; Phile 1:14). The first has to do with taking a special offering, and the second to Philemon receiving Onesimus.

There is no doctrine concerning the will of man in all of the Bible. Moses, the Prophets, the Psalmists, John the Baptist, Jesus, the Apostles, nor Luke, Mark, James, or Jude delivered any teaching on this subject.

Yet, uninspired and sectarian men have developed a doctrine of their own on this theme. On the basis of this spurious doctrine, they reject the Scriptural teaching and concept of predestination, election, and Divine foreknowledge. However, after they have presented all of the human reasoning, the Word of God still speaks of people being “chosen . . . to salvation” (2 Thess 2:13), an “election of grace” (Rom 11:5), being “predestinated unto adoption” (Eph 1:5), and having “obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will” (Eph 1:11). We still read of people being “appointed” to “obtain salvation” (1 Thess 5:9), and being “ordained to eternal life” (Acts 13:48). We refuse to pretend these texts are not in the Scriptures, nor will we gloss them to make people feel comfortable with the doctrines and traditions of men. If hearing the Word of God is the juncture in time when the hearts of men are made manifest, and the appointments of God are carried out, then how is it possible to ignore those who balk at texts such as the ones we have mentioned?

The Line Upon Line Principle

Religious sophists tell us that men are slow learners, and for that reason there is frequent representation, going over the truth again and again, until it finally sinks in. Some speak of this as teaching “line upon line, and precept upon precept.”

The words “line upon line” are found two times in Scripture. The phrases “precept upon precept” and “here a little and there a little” are included in both references. What do they mean? Here are the texts. Both are found in the twenty-eighth chapter of Isaiah, which was the general context of the passage from which Paul quoted in our text.

“Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts. For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little : For with stammering lips and another tongue will he speak to this people. To whom he said, This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear. But the word of the LORD was unto them precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little ; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken” (Isa 28:9-13).

The parallel in our time is staggering. There is such froth coming from the pulpits and literature of the land that it boggles the mind. Endless repetitions of what is required to be saved, have a successful marriage, the elemental details of holiness, etc. are pouring forth like an uncontrollable deluge – and that is the best teaching. The people are being taught as though they really had no capacity to learn.

The first mentioning of the phrase follows the question, “Whom, shall He teach knowledge? And whom, shall He make to understand doctrine?” (Verse 9). The Amplified Bible reads, “To whom will He teach knowledge? [Ask the drunkards.] And whom will He make to understand the message? Those who are babies, just weaned from the milk and taken from the breasts? [Is that what He thinks we are?]

That is, this is the response of the Israelites to Isaiah and the Prophets. It is like saying, “They are addressing us as though we were unlearned and ignorant, teaching over and over with simplistic teaching.”

However, as the next verse reads, “No, but [the Lord will teach the rebels in a more humiliating way] by men with stammering lips and another tongue will He speak to this people [says Isaiah, and teach them His lessons]. To these [complaining Jews the Lord] had said, This is the true rest [the way to true comfort and happiness] that you shall give to the weary, and, This is the [true] refreshing—yet they would not listen [to His teaching]” AMPLIFIED (verses 11-12). This was a prophecy of the Babylonian captivity, in which they would become vassals to those whose speech they did not understand. This was a Divine judgment upon them.

It is then that the Lord uses this statement to Israel, confirming that it is the means by which He drove them deep into the darkness which they preferred. “Therefore the word of the Lord will be to them [merely monotonous repetitions of]: precept upon precept, precept upon precept, rule upon rule, rule upon rule; here a little, there a little—that they may go and fall backward, and be broken and snared and taken” AMPLIFIED (verse 13).

By using this way, God closed their eyes by means of repeated elemental teaching. Yet, they also closed their eyes themselves, for the truth declared to them was nothing more than monotonous repetition to them. If they had good hearts, they would have asked for more

THE PARALLEL IN OUR TIME

The parallel in our time is staggering. There is such froth coming from the pulpits and literature of the land that it boggles the mind. Endless repetitions of what is required to be saved, have a successful marriage, the elemental details of holiness, etc. are pouring forth like an uncontrollable deluge – and that is the best teaching. The people are being taught as though they really had no capacity to learn.

The result of it all is that the modern church, just like Israel, has closed its eyes. Further, it is being done with religion in which there are some rudimentary principles being taught. Such elemental teaching is referred to as “the weak and beggarly elements of the world” (Gal 4:9). These were religious teachings –specifically from the Law, centering in circumcision, the observance of days, etc (Col 2:16-20).

Not A Time to Teach As Moses Did

This is “the day of salvation” (2 Cor 6:2a), when the message of the Gospel is to be preached and expounded – a message that is not only transcendent to the Law of Moses, but yields results that glorify God. It is a message that is tailored for those who will, and do, believe. It is not a message addressed to unbelief or the flesh. This is “the acceptable year” (2 Cor 6:2b). This is not the time to teach after the manner of Moses and the Prophets. They were sent to a “stiffnecked people” (Ex 32:9; Deut 9:13), and those who were “impudent and hardhearted” (Ezek 3:7).

From one point of view, the Lord closed the eyes of the their Prophets and rulers. From the practical point of view, those same prophets lisped to the people in baby talk, teaching elemental things over and over. That was the Divinely appointed means of driving them back, until finally they were “broken, and snared, and taken.”

Paul’s warning to the Jews who came to him in Rome, was to take care that this did not happen to them. Should they reject his message, God would see to it that, at the very best, they would be shut up to a monotonous and repetitious religion that would finally drive them into spiritual oblivion. O, what dangerous times are those in which we are living! It is tragic that so many are not cognizant of the situation.

THEY HAD GREAT REASONING AMONG THEMSELVES

“ 29 And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves.”

The following versions omit this verse: NIV, NRSV, RSV, BBE, CJB, ESV, ERV, GWN, NAB, NET, NJB, NLT, LIVING, IE, WEYMOUTH, WILLIAMS, MONTGOMERY, CEV, GNB, MESSAGE. They are included in the following versions: KJV, NKJV, ASV, NASB, CSB, DARBY, DOUAY, GENEVA, MRD, NAS, NIB, PNT, RWB, TNT, WEB, YLT, ISV, AMPLIFIED, EMTV, LITV. It is not possible that this chasm of difference could exist if it were certain from the truly best manuscripts that it should be omitted.

WHEN HE HAD SAID THESE WORDS

“And when he had said these words.” When Paul quoted the words from the prophet Isaiah, a change in the setting took place. It is then that he said, “Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it” (Acts 28:28). These were the specific words that precipitated the breakup of the meeting. It seems to me that it was apparent to Paul that some of the listeners had misgivings about what he had said. His words were not at all clear to them, even though, from an enlightened point of view, they were very plain and spiritually elemental.

THE JEWS DEPARTED

“ . . . the Jews departed . . .” Other versions read, “The Jews went away,” DARBY “the Jews went out from him.” DOUAY “the Jews retired,” MRD “the Jews left,” NIB “went forth the Jews” ABP

All of the versions that omit this verse include the departure of the Jews in verse twenty-five: after Paul said something – “And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers” (Acts 28:25).

The difference in the approaches is that the inclusion of verse twenty-nine has the Jews leaving after Paul said he was going to the Gentiles instead of after his quotation of Isaiah. The inclusion of verse twenty-nine is more in harmony with Paul’s experience when speaking to the Jews in Jerusalem (Acts 22:21-23), and at Antioch (Acts 13:46-50). In both of these instances, it was Paul’s reference to being sent to the Gentiles that aroused the Jews.

THEY HAD GREAT REASONINGS

“ . . . and had great reasoning among themselves.” Other versions read, “had a great dispute among themselves,” NKJV “having mich disputing among themselves,” ASV “engaging in a prolonged debate among themselves,” CSB “much reasoning among themselves,” DOUAY “great disputations among them,” MRD “arguing vigorously among themselves,” NIB “arguing intently among themselves,” ISV “arguing and disputing among themselves,” AMPLIFIED “having among themselves debating,” ABP and “having much discussion among themselves.” LITV

This is an elaboration of the statement made in verse twenty-five: “they agreed not among themselves.”

This was a disputation that centered in Scripture, and was the kind of discussion that was common among the Jews (Acts 6:9; 9:29; 15:2,7; 17:2,17; 18:4,19; 19:8,9; 24:12). Although they lapsed into human traditions, the Jews were a people who took their religion seriously.

This kind of discussion was also common when I was young, but has largely faded from the Christian scenes of our time. The truth of the matter is that growing numbers of people have no settled convictions about Scripture, and have very little interest in the affirmations made therein. It seems to me that this reveals a decadent religious environment.

TWO FULL YEARS IN HIS OWN HIRED HOUSE

“ 30 And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him . . .”

The last words of the book of Acts devote two sentences to a two year period of Paul’s activity. By way of experience sixty verses were devoted to ship voyage from Caesarea to Rome (Acts 27:1-28:16). Among other things, this confirms that Luke is not merely providing a chronology of events that took place after Jesus' ascension into heaven. He covers a period of at least thirty five years (Christ's ascension until the conclusion of this text). The events have more to do with Divine direction than historicity. The establishment of the church under the leadership of Peter, the inclusion of the Gentiles, and the spreading of the Gospel under Paul were major epochs. The consistency of what was preached from the beginning is seen, and the application of that Gospel to both Jew and Gentile.

Now, Luke concludes the book by leaving us thinking about Paul in Rome – how long he was here, and what he was consistently found doing.

HIS OWN HIRED HOUSE

“And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house . . .” Other versions read, “his own rented house,” NKJV “at his own expense,” NRSV “Paul was living in the house of which he had the use,” BBE “a place he rented for himself,” CJB “his own hired lodging,” DARBY “rented a place to live,” GWN and “ [at his own expense] in his own rented lodging.” AMPLIFIED

Here is a most marvelous thing. First, that the government would allow one of its prisoners to dwell in his own house. Second, that Paul was supplied the resources to rent his own house – apparently large enough to host more than small numbers.

It is generally considered that Philippians, Colossians, Ephesians, and Philemon were written during this two year period. Paul refers to his imprisonment in Ephesians, Philippians, and Philemon (Eph 3:1; 4:1; Phil 4:22; Phile 1:1,9). Both Luke and Aristarchus are mentioned in the letters to Philemon and the Colossians (Col 4:10,14; Phile 1:23,24). They are not mentioned in Ephesians and Philippians, which suggest they had left prior Paul's letters to them from Rome. It appears that these were very productive years for the apostle Paul.

In his epistles to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon, he never pleads for funds, citing the great work that he is doing. He acknowledged that the Philippians had supported him (Phil 4:1-18). Yet, the Lord who had said he would “testify” of Him in Rome, saw to it that he was provided with the needed resources.

With the rise and prominence of financial advisors and fund raisers, it seems to me that this manner of the Kingdom has been largely forgotten – if it ever was believed. Financial campaigns have become so common that some view them as part and parcel of the Christian economy. But they are purely a human invention. Their use is at least to be questioned, and it is imperative that the fruit coming from them be carefully examined.

HE RECEIVED ALL THAT CAME UNTO HIM

“ . . . and received all that came in unto him . . .” Other versions read, “welcoming all who came to him,” NASB “ had talk with all those who went in to see him,” BBE “continued receiving all who came to see him.” CJB

This is the same amount of time Paul spent in the school of Tyrannus in Ephesus. The people also came to him there, and the outcome was that “all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks” (Acts 19:10). One man, one place, and “all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord.” It was not because Paul went to Asia, but people from there, or who were going there, came to Paul, heard what he said, and published it abroad.

When Paul was shipwrecked on the island of Melita, the people brought their sick to Paul (Acts 28:9).

Now, there is a fresh and God-honoring approach to missions! It suggests that when a person really has some God-honoring message and perspective, the Lord will bring the people to him – even if he is under house arrest!

This is not unusual. The people came to John the Baptist, even traveling significant distances to get to him (Matt 3:5-6; 11:8-10; Mk 1:5; Lk 3:7; John 3:23). The same was true of the Lord Jesus. The people came to him (Matt 4:24-25; 5:1; 8:1,16; 9:2,32; 12:15; 13:2; 15:30; 19:2; Mk 1:32; 6:33; 9:20,25; 10:13; Lk 4:42; 5:1,15; 6:17; 9:37; 14:25; 18:15; 21:38; John 6:24; 8:2; 12:9).

People came where Peter was on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:6). They brought the sick to where Peter was (Acts 5:15-16). I understand that this is not the only way contact was made with God's messengers. Philip went to Samaria and the eunuch. Paul and those with him went to Crete, Galatia, Phrygia, Ephesus, Troas, and other places. But there were key times when the people came to where the message was being delivered.

Not Coming to Paul

In our time, there are a number of professing Christians who have apparently never considered coming to Paul – specifically to the inspired writings that have come from his hand to the church. Here are three rather broad categories covered by Paul.

- CONCERNING THE LORD'S SUPPER – 1 Corinthians 11:23-32.
- CONCERNING THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE MYSTERY OF CHRIST – Ephesians 3:4-7.
- CONCERNING THE UNSEARCHABLE RICHES OF CHRIST – Ephesians 3:7.

I have compiled a partial listing of teachings that are, for the most part, unique to Paul. I list them here in order to emphasize the extensive revelation that was vouchsafed to Paul.

PAUL'S UNIQUE TEACHING

THINGS GIVEN FOR ALL MEN TO HEAR

1. That the church is the body of Christ (Rom 12:4-5; 1 Cor 12:12-27; Eph 1:23; 2:16; 3:6; 4:4,12-16; 5:23,30; Col 1:16; 2:19; 3:15).
2. Jesus Christ as the Head of the body (Eph 5:23; Col 1:18; 1:2:19).
3. The merging of Jew and Gentile in Christ (Eph 2:15-16,19).
4. The exposition of justification by faith (Rom 3:20-5:18; Gal 2:16-17; 3:8-24).
5. The distinction between the Old and New Covenants (2 Cor 3:6-14; 7:22; 8:8-13; 10:16-17; Gal 3:15-17; 4:22-28; Heb 9:15-20).
6. The reality of "the old man" and "the new man" (Rom 6:6; Eph 5:22-24; Col 3:9-10).
7. The inner warfare experienced by those who live by faith (Rom 7:15-25; Gal 5:17).
8. The spiritual logic that declares the coming conversion of the Jews (Romans chapters 9-11).
9. The High Priesthood of Christ (Heb 3:1; 4:14-15; 5:5,10; 6:20; 7:26; 8:1; 9:11; 10:21).
10. The relation of Abraham to those who believe (Rom 4:1-16; Gal 3:6-18).
11. The significance of Melchizedec (Heb 5:6,10; 6:20; 7:1, 10-21).

12. The eternal purpose of God (Rom 8:28; Eph 1:11; 3:11; 2 Tim 1:9).
13. What took place behind the scenes when Jesus died (Col 1:20; 2:14-15; Heb 2:14; 9:26).
14. The whole armor of God (Rom 13:12; 2 Cor 6:7; Eph 6:10-18).
15. Spiritual weaponry (2 Cor 10:4-5; Eph 6:17).
16. Believers battling with principalities and powers (Eph 6:12).
17. The fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22-23; Eph 5:9).
18. The works of the flesh (Gal 5:19-21).
19. The office of a Bishop (1 Tim 3:1-7; Tit 1:7-11).
20. The office of a deacon (1 Tim 3:10-13).
21. The exposition of spiritual gifts, and how they are administered (Rom 12:3-8; 1 Cor 12:1-31; 14:1-12; Eph 4:11-16).
22. Why men cannot be justified by works (Rom 3:26; 4:2; Gal 2:16; 3:2-5).
23. The imputation of righteousness upon the basis of faith (Rom 1:7; 3:22-25; 4:5-25; 10:6-10; Phil 3:9).
24. Extensive teaching concerning baptism into Christ (Rom 6:1-23; Gal 3:27; Eph 4:5; Col 2:11-15).
25. The comparison of Adam and Christ (Rom 5:14-21; 1 Cor 15:22,45).
26. Extensive teaching on the resurrection of the dead (1 Cor 15:15-57).
27. The ministry of the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:11-14, 26-27; 2 Cor 3:3-18; Gal 4:6, 29; 5:5,16-18,22-24; 6:8; Eph 2:22; Eph 5:9).
28. The intercession and mediation of Christ Jesus (Heb 7:25; 1 Tim 2:5; Heb 8:6; 9:15; 12:24).
29. The intercession of the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:26-27).
30. Predestination and election (Rom 8:29-33; 9:11; 11:5-7,28; Eph 1:5,11; Col 3:12; 1 Thess 1:4; 2 Tim 2:10; Tit 1:1).
31. The body being for the Lord (Rom 12:1-2; 1 Cor 6:-13-20).
32. God's objective for believers (Rom 8:29-30; Eph 3:15-30; 4:12-16; Col 1:9-11).
33. The resurrection body (2 Cor 5:1-5).
34. The accomplishments of the cross (Eph 2:16; Phil 2:8; Col 1:20; 2:14-15).
35. Extensive teaching concerning the Lord's Table (1 Cor 10:21; 11:23-29).
36. Types and shadows (Gal 4:24; Col 2:17; Heb 8:5; 9:24; 10:1).
37. Extensive teaching of the grace of God (Rom 3:24; 4:4,16; 5:2, 15-17, 20-21; 6:14-15; ; 11:5-6; 12:3-6; 1 Cor 15:10; 2 Cor 8:9; Gal 1:15; Eph 2:5-8; 2 Thess 2:16; 1 Tim 1:14; 2 Tim 1:9; Tit 2:11-12; Tit 3:7; Heb 2:9; 4:16; 12:28).
38. Heavenly hosts being tutored concerning God's wisdom through the church (Eph 3:10).
39. Angels being present in the assembly of the saints (1 Cor 11:10; Heb 12:22).
40. How the church is to respond to immoral people among them (1 Cor 5:1-9).
41. With the exceptions of six references to the "Gospel" in the book of Acts, and five references in the epistles and Revelation, every mention of that word from in Romans through Revelation (seventy-five) is found in Paul's writings.

42. The ascension of Jesus and its bearing on the gifts given to the church (Eph 1:20; 4:8-11; 1 Tim 3:16; Heb 1:3; 4:14; 9:14).

43. The use of the word "heavenly" (1 Cor 15:48,49; Eph 1:3,20; 2:6; 3:10; 2 Tim 4:18; Heb 3:1; 6:4; 8:5).

44. The degeneracy of the Gentile world without Christ (Rom 1:19-32).

45. With the exception of two references in First Peter, and one in Third John, the remaining teaching concerning Gentiles is given by Paul (48 references).

46. The fact that some of the Jewish branches were broken off, and some Gentiles were grafted into the Jewish olive tree (Rom 11:11-24).

47. The "man of sin" and the "son of perdition" (2 Thess 2:3).

48. The destruction of the man of sin at the coming of the Lord (2 Thess 2:3-10).

49. Receiving the love of the truth, and the consequences of not doing so (2 Thess 2:10-12).

50. What was involved in the condescension of Christ coming into the world (Phil 2:5-8).

51. What we are "come to" in Christ Jesus (Heb 12:22-24).

52. In showing the folly of seeking to be justified by Law, the allegory of Hagar and Sarah in explaining the distinction of the New Covenant (Gal 4:21-31).

53. The circumcision of Christ and of the heart (Rom 2:29; Col 2:11-12).

54. Newness of life and newness of spirit (Rom 6:4; 7:6).

55. The church is the Temple of God (1 Cor 3:16-17).

56. The church is built together for a habitation of God through the Spirit (Eph 2:22).

57. A warning to take heed how one builds upon the foundation of Christ (1 Cor 3:10-11).

58. Products of preaching referred to as wood, hay, stubble, gold, silver, and precious stones – some to be ultimately rejected, some to be received (1 Cor 3:12-16).

59. Whoever defiles the temple of God with inferior converts will be destroyed (1 Cor 3:17).

60. Delivering a professing Christian to Satan for the destruction of the flesh (1 Cor 5:5).

61. The means of supporting the proclaimer of Word as being typified under the Law (1 Cor 9:11-14).

62. The faithful receiving praise from God (1 Cor 4:5).

63. The purpose for civil government (Rom 13:1-7).

64. That the grace of God teaches the saved to reject ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world (Tit 2:11-12).

65. That "the flesh," or the "old man" is to be crucified (Rom 6:6; Gal 2:20; 5:24; 6:14).

66. That we can walk in the Spirit (Gal 5:16,25).

67. That is we walk in the Spirit, we will not fulfill the lust of the flesh (Gal 5:16,25).

68. That there is “no condemnation” to them which are in Christ Jesus (Rom 8:1).

69. That we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ (Rom 5:1).

70. All of the teaching on reconciliation to God (Rom 5:10; 11:15; 2 Cor 5:18-20; Eph 2:16; Col 1:20-21; Heb 2:17).

71. With the exception of two brief references by Peter (1 Pet 1:2; 3:15), and one by Jude (Jude 1:1), all of the doctrine concerning sanctification comes from Paul (Rom 15:16; 1 Cor 1:2,30; 6:11; Eph 5:26; 1 Thess 4:3-4; 5:23; 2 Thess 2:13; 2 Tim 2:21; Heb 2:11; 10:10,14,29; 13:12).

72. A comparison of the glory of the Old Covenant as compared with the glory of the New Covenant (2 Cor 3:7-11).

73. That those who indulge the flesh will have no part in the inheritance reserved for those in Christ Jesus (1 Cor 6:9-10; Gal 5:19-21; Eph 5:5-7).

74. On the subject of reprobacy (Rom 1:18; 2 Cor 13:5-6; 2 Tim 3:8; Tit 1:6).

The fact that the vast majority of Christendom is abysmally ignorant of nearly all of these subjects confirms that the ministry of Paul has been largely rejected in our day. These revelations were given to him to make them known, particularly to the church. Jesus did what He said He was going to do – show Paul many things. Paul did what he was supposed to do – make them known. Now it is the solemn responsibility of every believer to not be ignorant in these areas. To remain in a state of ignorance after such a phenomenal outpouring of Divine wisdom and insight is inexcusable!

May a new day come to the professed church in which they will seek the wisdom that was given to Paul, and avail themselves of the rich resources given to him.

PREACHING AND TEACHING

31 Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.”

Now, we come to the subject matter provided in the teaching of Paul. It is summarized under two grand headings: “the Kingdom of God,” and “those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ.” This summation is a fitting way to close the book of Acts.

PREACHING THE KINGDOM OF GOD

“Preaching the kingdom of God . . .” Other versions read, “the message about God’s Kingdom,” GWN “the reign of God” YLT All other versions that I have in my possession read “Kingdom of God.”

The word “Kingdom” is lexically defined as, “royal power, kingship, dominion, rule . . . the territory subject to the rule of a king . . . the rule of God.” THAYER

I find this definition hardly acceptable, because it is so rudimentary. In fact, there is a certain poverty concerning this subject in Christian literature. This is largely owing to the dominance of false doctrine concerning the end times. I have chosen to here include an excerpt from my book, “God’s Everlasting Kingdom,” from the chapter, “Defining the Kingdom of God.”

“The kingdom of God, in its simplest implication, means the reign of the Almighty, the exercise of His authority. This is a rule maintained with specific objectives in mind. It is an intelligent reign, being characterized by perceptible reason. God does nothing “without a cause” (Ezek. 14:23). He always works with “purpose” in mind (Eph. 1:11). When the power or authority of God is devoted to a specific objective, it is a revelation of His Kingdom!

The kingdom of God functions by divine objective, and objective is implemented by work—effectual work. Work speaks of productivity but in this case of even more—of purposeful productivity—work with a purpose, an objective, and an aim. Work denotes divine initiative—the thrust of God’s influence and His power. The divine kingdom is technically “over all” (Ps. 47:2). The inhabitants of the earth and the armies of heaven together are governed by God—but with objective in mind. “And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and He doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?” (Dan. 4:35).

The kingdom of God is not houses and lands, meat and drink, or military exploits. It is the fulfillment of divine objective, accomplished in a moral arena in an intelligent manner.” CHAPTER ONE

So far as the extent of God’s Kingdom is concerned, there is no place, people, or domain which is not under His control. The Psalmist exclaimed, “His Kingdom ruleth over all” (Psa 103:19). There is a majesty about it that must be proclaimed. “To make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom. Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations” (Psa 145:13). God revealed to Nebuchadnezzar the nature of His Kingdom, and Nebuchadnezzar published it to the entire world: “His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and His dominion is from generation to generation” (Dan 4:3). And again, “whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and His kingdom is from generation to generation” (Dan 4:34). King Darius also made a global decree announcing the nature of God’s Kingdom. “His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed, and His dominion shall be even unto the end” (Dan 6:26).

However, that is not the substance of what Paul preached. Rather his message identified the purpose God was executing – which purpose cannot possibly fail of fulfillment. All of the hosts of heaven, of earth, and under the earth are employed in the fulfillment of this objective – some willingly, and some who are completely oblivious of what is happening. The purpose being executed in this Kingdom pertains to the salvation of God, and it is being administered by the exalted Christ.

That salvation is the overall theme of all revelation, all inspired preaching, and all writing accomplished by men who were moved by the Holy Spirit of God. The fulness of this revelation has been realized following the death, resurrection, ascension, and enthronement of Jesus Christ.

- Philip preached “the things concerning the Kingdom of God” (Acts 8:12).
- Barnabas taught the believers that “we must through much tribulation enter into the Kingdom of God” (Acts 14:22).;
- Paul spoke for three months in the Ephesian synagogue “the things concerning the Kingdom of God” (Acts 19:8).
- Paul reminded the elders from Ephesus that he had going among them “preaching the Kingdom of God” (Acts 20:25).
- Previous to our text, Paul had spent an entire day testifying “the Kingdom of God ” (Acts 28:23).
- Paul taught that the Kingdom of God consisted of “righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit” (Rom 14:17).
- He reminded the Corinthians that “the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power” (1 Cor 4:20).

These texts all related to what God is doing through Jesus Christ. They have to do with His “eternal purpose” (Eph 3:11), and how it is being carried out within the framework of His great salvation.

- From one standpoint, He is showing His manifold wisdom to heavenly principalities and powers (Eph 3:10).
- From another perspective, He is preparing a bride for His Son (Rev 21:2,9).
- From yet another view, He is bringing many sons to glory through Jesus (Heb 2:10).
- He is carrying out His determined purpose in the domain of the enemy, calling those He predestinated, justifying them, and readying them for glorification (Rom 8:29).
- He is working everything together for the good of those who love Him, and have been called according to His purpose (Rom 8:28).
- He is redeeming a people “from all iniquity, and purifying unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works” (Titus 2:14).

The message that is to be preached and taught pertains chiefly to what God is doing, not what man should do! The power is in the message of God’s accomplishments, not the message of man’s obligations (Rom 1:16).

The vast majority of the preaching of our day has to do with the kingdoms of men – what they should be doing, and how God can help them do it. While there is room for speaking concerning such matters, they are not to be the thrust of what is declared. Preaching the Kingdom of God is not affirming what ought to be, but what IS!

TEACHING THOSE THINGS WHICH CONCERN THE LORD JESUS CHRIST

“ . . . and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ . . .” Other versions read, “about the Lord Jesus Christ.” NIV

What does it mean to teach “those things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ,” or “about the Lord Jesus Christ?” Is there really a person of sound mind who does not readily know what this means? This is not teaching about men, but teaching about Christ. It is not teaching about health and wealth, but teaching about the Lord Jesus Christ. It is not teaching about the church, the home, the family, the government, or anything else centering in men. It is teaching that finds its center and substance in the Lord Jesus Christ.

That means that the thrust of teaching is concerning who Jesus is, not what men can be. It is about what Jesus has accomplished, not what man should achieve.

When teaching majors on men and minors on the Lord Jesus Christ, it is wrong, no matter how Biblical it may appear to be. No preaching should center in Proverbs. Further, any use of the Proverbs of Solomon should be within the context of the Lord Jesus Christ. The subject of teaching is not to be the end of the world, the reign of an antichrist, or the danger of a global government. It is to be the Lord Jesus Christ.

There is a mentality present in the professing church that perceives the preaching of Christ to be very limited in scope. Unless Jesus Himself is limited, this is a very foolish and dangerous assumption.

CONSIDER WHAT THE LORD JESUS HAS ALREADY ACCOMPLISHED

- He has made the appointed offering to God that has satisfied Him (Isa 53:11).
- He has perfected forever them that are sanctified (Heb 10:14).

- He has put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself (Heb 9:26).
- He has opened up a new and living way to God (Heb 10:20).
- He has destroyed the devil through His death (Heb 2:14).
- He has made the first covenant “Old” (Heb 8:13).
- He has reconciled men to God (Col 1:20-21).
- He has spoiled principalities and powers, triumphing over them in His cross (Col 2:15).
- He has ended the Law as a means to righteousness (Rom 10:4).
- He was tempted in all points like as we are, and remained without sin (Heb 4:15).
- He has conquered death, taking back His life, after He offered it to God in death (John 10:17-18).
- He has redeemed us from the curse of the law (Gal 3:13).
- He has delivered us from this present evil world (Gal 1:4).
- He has made us free (Gal 5:1; John 8:36).
- He destroyed the works of the devil (1 John 3:8).
- He brought in everlasting righteousness (Dan 9:24).
- He brought life and immortality to light (2 Tim 1:10).

PONDER WHAT CHRIST IS CURRENTLY DOING

- He is bringing us to God
(1 Pet 3:18).
- He is bringing many sons to glory (Heb 2:10).
- He is making intercession for those who are coming to God through Him (Heb 7:25).
- He is mediating the New Covenant (Heb 9:15; 12:24).
- He is giving repentance (Acts 5:31).
- He is pouring forth His Spirit (Acts 2:33; Tit 3:6).
- He is functioning as the Head of the church (Col 1:18).
- He is nourishing and cherishing the church (Eph 5:29).
- He is authoring and finishing faith (Heb 12:2).
- He is administering the Kingdom into which we have been translated (Col 1:13).
- He is the King of kings, and Lord of lords (1 Tim 6:15).
- He is the Great High Priest (Heb 4:14).
- He is the One Mediator between God and man (1 Tim 2: 5).
- He is giving us an understanding, that we might know Him who is true (1 John 5:20).
- He is teaching His people (Eph 4:20-21).
- He is sending grace, mercy, and peace (2 John 1:3).
- He is dwelling in our hearts by faith (Eph 3:17).

- He is manifesting Himself to those who love Him (John 14:21).

CONSIDER WHO JESUS IS

- The Son of God (Acts 8:37; 1 John 5:10).
- The Christ (Matt 16:16; 1 John 2:22).
- The Lord of all (Acts 10:36).
- The Good Shepherd (John 10:11,14).
- The Great Shepherd of the Sheep (Heb 13:20).
- The Shepherd and Bishop of our souls (1 Pet 2:25).
- The Chief Shepherd (1 Pet 5:4).
- The One Mediator (1 Tim 2:5).
- The Only Potentate (1 Tim 6:15).
- The Son of Man (Acts 7:56).
- The Last Adam (1 Cor 15:45).
- The Second Man (1 Cor 15:47).
- The First and the Last (Rev 1:11).
- The Beginning and the End (Rev 21:6).
- The Alpha and the Omega (Rev 1:8).
- The Word of God (Rev 19:13).
- The King of kings and Lord of Lords (1 Tim 6:15).
- The Way, the Truth, and the Life (John 14:6).
- The True Vine (John 15:1).
- The True Bread (John 6:32).
- The Living Bread (John 6:51).
- The Light of the world (John 8:12).
- The Door of the sheep (John 10:7).
- The Resurrection and the Life (John 11:25).
- The Root and Offspring of David (Rev 22:16).
- The Bright and Morning Star (Rev 21:16).

These few examples reveal something of what is involved in teaching “those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ.” One of the great tragedies of our times is that so many other things are the subjects of preaching and teaching – things that really have little to do with the Lord Jesus Christ.

Other valid considerations only make sense within the context of the Lord Jesus Christ. Remove Him as the center and emphasis of preaching and teaching, and men are pushed into the domain of spiritual confusion and diversion.

WITH ALL CONFIDENCE

“ . . . with all confidence . . .” Other versions read, “with all openness,” NASB “boldly,” NIV “without fear,” BBE “with full boldness,” CSB “all freedom,” DARBY “very boldly,” GWN “with complete assurance,” NAB “complete boldness,” NET “complete fearlessness,” NJB “perfect boldness,” ISV and “with boldness and quite openly.” AMPLIFIED

Lexically, the word confidence means, “1) Freedom in speaking, unreservedness in speech a) openly, frankly, i.e without concealment b) without ambiguity or circumlocution c) without the use of figures and comparisons 2) free and fearless confidence, cheerful courage, boldness, assurance 3) the deportment by which one becomes conspicuous or secures publicity.” THAYER

“With all confidence” is a weighty expression, indeed. This is something that cannot be taught by procedure. No man can make another man possess this kind of confidence. It is an authoritative confidence that comes from knowing the truth, and how to handle the word of God “aright” (2 Tim 2:15). Those who so speak are intellectually familiar with the panorama of Scripture, and have been illuminated from above. They have the overall picture of things so they can summarize and conclude at the right points and with the proper emphasis. This caliber of preachers and teachers have never been plentiful, but in our time they are exceedingly rare.

If a person has received the love of the truth, they will be able to recognize those who speak “with all confidence” – the chief of which was the Lord Jesus Himself. The people were “astonished” at His doctrine (Matt 7:28; 22:33; Mk 1:22; 11:18; Lk 4:32). They observed that He taught them “as one having authority, and not as the scribes” (Matt 7:29; Mk 1:22). This is because He knew what He was talking about, and the honest people sensed it.

Paul had “the mind of Christ” in his preaching and teaching (1 Cor 2:16). Not only did he have a grasp of the text itself, but he knew how to correlate various Scriptural expressions, associating them with the purpose of God, the Lord Jesus Christ, and God’s “great salvation.” If he spoke or wrote of anything, he knew how to frame it, like a jeweler knows how to set precious stones.

NO MAN FORBIDDING HIM

“ . . . no man forbidding him.” Other versions read, “unhindered,” NASB “without hindrance,” NIV “no orders were given that he was not to do so,” BBE “without prohibition,” DOUAY “no one stopped him,” GWN “without restriction,” NET “no one tried to stop him,” NLT “quite unmolested,” MONTGOMERY and “without being molested or hindered.” AMPLIFIED

Herein is a marvelous thing – no hindrance in preaching the Kingdom of God, and teaching the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ! Paul was hindered in:

- Jerusalem (Acts 9:29; 21:27)
- Paphos (Acts 13:8)
- Antioch (Acts 13:45,50)
- Iconium (Acts 14:2)
- Lystra (Acts 14:19)
- Philippi (Acts 16:22)
- Ephesus (Acts 19:8-9)
- Thessalonica (Acts 17:5)
- Berea (Acts 17:13)
- Athens (Acts 17:32)
- Corinth (Acts 18:6,12).

Yet in Rome, for a period of two years, no person forbade him to speak of the Kingdom and Jesus, nor is there any recorded opposition against him during that time. Although Jews were present in Rome, according to the record, they did not launch any initiative against him.

Because his ways pleased the Lord, He made “even his enemies to be at peace with him” (Prov 16:7). While this may be owing, in part, to the protection of Rome, the underlying cause of Paul’s freedom and safety was the working of the Lord. God was, so to speak, “for” him (Rom 8:31). Consequently, none could be against him.

CONCLUSION

Thus, we have completed a most insightful excursion through the book of Acts. We have seen the church instituted and growing in the power of the Lord. We have seen “the newness of life” fleshed out in human experience. A number of Kingdom realities have been lived out in this book. In closing, I will make mention of some them, as I am able to recall them. A profitable reading of this precious book will be realized when these things are perceived. I have listed 169 confirmations. There are many more, but time forbids a further development of this closing word. Suffice it to say, it illustrates the abundance of things made known in this marvelous record.
