There is no way to dignify thinking that contradicts the mind of the Lord. It cannot be excused or overlooked as though it did not exist. Woe to the people who invent a theology that allows for human opinion in matters on which God has spoken. In so doing they actually make a way for men to excuse being at variance with God, dignifying the absurd position by affirming men have a right to have their own opinion. That is the initial evidence that “the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be” (Rom 8:7). It is the condition creates enmity, and that requires reconciliation. When God allows for men to entertain contradicting views on matters concerning Him – like being persuaded they can or cannot eat meat – it is not that they have a right to think differently. It is rather that He is longsuffering, and is allowing time for them to mature in their perceptions. I do not think you could establish that men have a right to be at variance in their thinking.

As a whole, the matter of it being wrong to disagree with God is glossed in our time. Even though men are “alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them” (Eph 4:18), many continue to view men as having the right to opinions in matters pertaining to life and godliness. In our text, Stephen will make no such allowance, but will hold the Jews responsible for their rejection of both Moses and Christ.

GOD WORKED ANYWAY, FULFILLING HIS OWN WILL

There should have been no question in the mind of the people concerning the Divine placement of Moses. Yet, ignoring all of the indisputable evidence, they murmured against Moses, and challenged his leadership.

Notwithstanding his former rejection by the people, Stephen categorically states that Moses “brought them out.” This confirms that the will of the Lord ultimately prevails. Moses had been chosen for the task, yet Israel at first refused to receive him in the capacity of a deliverer – even in a matter involving only two people, to say nothing of the rescue of a nation. Yet, in due time, and according to the Divine appointment, Moses returned in the full capacity for which he was chosen. This time he did not appear as the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, or a member of the Egyptian dynasty. In fact, those who had formerly rejected him may very well have died off, like those who would later fall in the wilderness because of their unbelief (1 Cor 10:5; Heb 3:17; Jude 1:5).

A CONSIDERATION OF THE END

In the final analysis, men will have no choice about submitting to the will of the Lord. When Jesus comes, those who have lived by faith, availing themselves of the reconciliation wrought by Christ will not be required to make a choice. Having submitted themselves “to the righteousness of God” while in the body (Rom 10:3), they will enter into life, fully receiving that for which they have longed, and for which they have been adapted. Those who have refused to receive the love of the truth (2 Thess 2:10), the atonement (Rom 5:11), and the remission of sins (Acts 10:43), will be cast out of the presence of the Lord, having absolutely no choice in the matter. Condemnation will be imposed upon them, and their destiny will be sealed and irreversible.

IN THE TEXT

In this text, Stephen draws attention to Moses showing signs in Egypt, in the Red Sea, and in the wilderness for forty years. This confirmed that he was, in fact, sent by God, for God Himself worked through Moses. God confirmed Moses was sent when he first arrived in Egypt, and set the stage for the deliverance of Israel. He again confirmed His choice of Moses when they confronted the great dividing line – the Red Sea. Once again, He confirmed His choice throughout the wilderness wandering by working through Moses in most extraordinary ways. There should have been no question in the mind of the people concerning the Divine placement of Moses. Yet, ignoring all of the indisputable evidence, they murmured against Moses, and challenged his leadership.

Men must be brought to the point where they comprehend that sin is always wrong, regardless of the feeble explanations that are offered for it. The declaration of man’s natural state is not intended to provide a convenient explanation for sin, but to confirm that all men must, in fact, be born again.

Surface thinkers may reply that this is just the way people are, and therefore we should not be surprised at the conduct of Israel, and even overlook it. These days there are a battery of professionals in human conduct who teach men to be tolerant of things for which God condemns them. Where God requires repentance and faith, these men require only outward reform and a minimal effort. However, the response of the Lord to man’s rebellion, particularly as demonstrated in His dealings with wayward Israel, confirms that it was not as simplistic as some imagine.

The fact that mankind has fallen in Adam accounts for their waywardness, but it does not excuse it. God will not receive the excuse that sin could not be avoided because of man’s wayward nature. In assessing his own sin, David acknowledged that he had a sinful nature from the very beginning. Here are his words: “Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me” (Psa 51:5). Other version read, “Indeed, I was born guilty, a sinner when my mother conceived me,” NRSV and “Behold, I was brought forth in [a state of] iniquity; my mother was sinful who conceived me [and I too am sinful].” AMPLIFIED Yet, David did not offer this as an alibi for his sin – and the fact that the Spirit inspired it to be written confirms that it was an acknowledgment of the truth. In fact, David preceded this statement by saying, “Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in Thy sight: that Thou mightest be justified when Thou speakest, and be clear when Thou judgest” (Psa 51:4).

THE NECESSITY OF SEEING THIS

When men – particularly professed Christian leaders – lead men to believe that they sinned because of some generational curse, genetic deficiency, chemical imbalance, or environmental limitations, they have contradicted God. Further, their teaching is like a stone, blocking the entrance to the Kingdom of God. Men must be brought to the point where they comprehend that sin is always wrong, regardless of the feeble explanations that are offered for it. The declaration of man’s natural state is not intended to provide a convenient explanation for sin, but to confirm that all men must, in fact, be born again. God will not accept men as they are, all humanly devised theology notwithstanding. That is precisely why Peter demanded repentance and conversion before sins could be remitted (Acts 3:19).

All of this will be confirmed in Stephen’s approach to the recalcitrant manners of the Jews – in their reaction to Moses, and also to Jesus Christ.

A WISE STRATEGY

Knowing the people before him professed to hold Moses in high regard, Stephen points to Moses’ prophecy concerning a coming Messiah. He affirmed that Christ would be a Prophet, whom the people would hear. Moses was also the one through whom the Law was given, which Stephen referred to as “living oracles.” The circumstances surrounding the giving of the Law confirmed that God Himself had given it. Yet, the Jewish fathers would not obey it, but during that very time Israel thrust both God and Moses from themselves, and in their hearts turned back to Egypt.

Thus, with a wisdom that comes from above, Stephen paints a picture of the corruption of the human nature, and the absolute need for a Savior who would not only deliver, but transform as well. He will also speak in perfect harmony with the Scriptures, providing some insightful summations of clear and precise revelation. Notwithstanding, in confirmation of the truth of his insightful diagnosis, his hearers will summarily reject his word, finally murdering him.

GOD SENT THE ONE THEY HAD REFUSED

“ 7:35a This Moses whom they refused, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge? . . . ”

Some of the people to whom Stephen was speaking may very well have been among those who said who said to a man healed of blindness, “We are Moses’ disciples” (John 9:28). Jesus told the Jewish leaders, “Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust ” (John 5:45). Now Stephen fastens on Moses, leading the people to ponder him. He does this because he is going to point out that Moses had foretold the coming of Christ, yet they had missed what he said – just as surely as the people of Moses’ day failed to recognize him.

THIS MOSES

:This Moses . . .” Other versions read, “the same Moses,” NIV “it was this Moses,” NRSV “That very Moses,” WILLIAMS and “It was this very Moses.” AMPLIFIED

Moses is a key figure in Scripture, being mentioned no less than 848 times. He is the prominent figure in Exodus through Deuteronomy, being mentioned 648 times. By way of comparison, Aaron is mentioned 272 times. In the Gospels, Moses is mentioned by name 38 times, 18 times in Acts, and 22 times in the Epistles. To my knowledge, the only man begotten by a man that is mentioned more times than Moses is David, who is mentioned 1,085 times in Scripture. It ought to be noted that there are 1,208 references to “Jesus” or “Christ” in Scripture. That is not to mention other terms by which He is known: i.e. Savior, Lord, Son of God, and His various titles and appellations.

If men will subject themselves to the Word of the Lord, becoming acquainted with the Scriptures as Timothy (2 Tim 3:15), they will be drawn to certain key men – the greatest of which is the Lord Jesus Christ. After Jesus, one of those men is Moses. He was held in high regard by the Jews in a formal or creedal sense. The saved of all ages old him in honor because of the abundance of revelation and wisdom that was vouchsafed to him. The Law came to men through Moses (John 1:17). The pattern of the Tabernacle was given to him in very precise detail (Ex 25:9; Num 8:4). All of the ceremonial laws were given to him – procedures regarding sacrifice, cleansing, sanctification, feasts, etc (Lev 10:11; Lev 23:37-44; Num 29:39). He was also given extraordinary wisdom to judge the people, hearing and settling all of their disputes, and meeting out justice. Even though there were people in the millions, he did this alone for some time (Ex 18:15-23). Moses also foretold the acceptance of the Gentiles, and how that acceptance would provoke the Jews to jealousy (Deut 32:21; Rom 10:19). The Lord also made a point of saying that Moses was “faithful” in taking care of all His house, which was His people (Num 12:7; Heb 3:2).

God Himself declared the uniqueness of Moses, saying there was no other prophet like him “My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all mine house. With him will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches; and the similitude of the LORD shall he behold: wherefore then were ye not afraid to speak against my servant Moses?” (Num 12:7-8). And again, “And the LORD spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend” (Ex 33:11).

Confirming the singularity of this man, he is the only man to whom the coming Savior was likened (Deut 18:15,18; Acts 3:22; 7:37). Jesus is declared to be a High Priest “after the order of Melchisedec” (Psa 110:4; Heb 5:6,10; 6:20; 7:11,17,21). He is declared to be seated on “the throne of David” (Isa 9:7; Acts 2:30). He was “called of God, as was Aaron” (Heb 5:4). But when it comes to the function of Jesus as a Prophet, He was “like unto,” or “like” NKJV Moses. Surely, then, Moses can be trusted to speak the truth.

Stephen will affirm that the Jews thought nothing of despising Moses when he did not conform with their own way of thinking. This was owing to the fact that the distinction of Moses was not apparent to them in the flesh.

“This Moses” is the one single man through whom the history of the Jews was altered. Stephen refers to him nine times in this defense (7:20,22,29,31, 32,35,,37,40,44). He was born at the appointed time, called by God, and sent by God to deliver the people. It is not possible for any mortal to obtain more significance than that. Yet, note what Stephen says of the response of the people.

Stephen will affirm that the Jews thought nothing of despising Moses when he did not conform with their own way of thinking. This was owing to the fact that the distinction of Moses was not apparent to them in the flesh. However, that was no excuse. His parents recognized his distinction when he was born (Heb 11:23). Pharaoh’s daughter saw him when he was three months old, and was drawn to him. The house of Pharaoh saw enough potential in him to ensure that he was “learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians” (Acts 7:22). What possible excuse can be given for the people to whom he was sent failing to recognize he was no ordinary man?

REFUSED

“ . . . whom they refused, . . .” Other versions read, “ rejected ,” NKJV “ disowned ,” NASB “ would not have ,” BBE “ Forsook ,” GENEVA and “denied (disowned and rejected).” AMPLIFIED

The word “refused” is especially strong. Its lexical meaning is, “renounce,” FRIBERG “to deny” being “in any way related to,” LOUW-NIDA , “deny, disown . . . refuse,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “forsake,” LEH

God Sent Moses to Egypt to deliver His people from Egypt. There was enough evidence in even Moses' appearance to have provoked serious thought about him, as confirmed in his parents, Pharaoh's daughter, the house of Pharaoh. However, because they preferred their own views, the Jews refused to receive him. Both the word "refused," and the teaching concerning it indicates that this involved stubbornness and obstinance.

WHO MADE THEE

" . . . saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge? . . ." Other versions read, "prince and judge," GENEVA "leader and judge," NJB "magistrate and judge," WEYMOUTH "ruler and referee ," WILLIAMS and "ruler (referee) and judge." AMPLIFIED

This refers to the occasion when Moses attempted to reconcile two Jews who were in a dispute, with one of them striking the other. This was the second appearance of Moses to his brethren after he was forty years old, and took place the day after he delivered one of them from an oppressing Egyptian. At that time, the offending party said to Moses, "Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? intendest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian" (Ex 2:14). Although only one man said this one time, Stephen affirms that all of the people were responsible, citing it as evidence that they rejected Moses.

Some might object, saying all of the people were not guilty of this sin. However, the one who knows the hearts of men (Acts 15:8), declares " they refused" Moses. They did not come to the defense of Moses, or rebuke the man for speaking in such a manner. When the matter was told of Moses slaying the Egyptian, there is no record that any gave thanks for the deliverance, or honored Moses for risking his own life to save just one of them. They did not ponder the occasion with a mind to understand it, nor did they associate it at all with the God of their fathers.

Although men may not be able to perceive it, it is not strange for a group of people to bear the responsibility of a single transgressor. The entire human race bore the results of Adam's sin (Rom 5:12-19). All of Israel suffered because of the sin of Achan. It is said of that occasion, "But the children of Israel committed a trespass in the accursed thing: for Achan, the son of Carmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, took of the accursed thing: and the anger of the LORD was kindled against the children of Israel" (Josh 7:1). The entire church in Corinth was judged because of a single fornicator who was among them (1 Cor 5:1-5).

The absolute righteousness of this judgment justifies God, and can be seen from at least three perspectives. It is necessary that we see these things.

- First, the Divine assessment cannot possibly be wrong, for it is made by the One who beholds all things, and knows the thoughts and intents of the heart.
- Second, as regarding man's natural state before God, they are all the same.
- Third, none of the Jews sided with Moses, or rebuked the one who spoke against him.

SOMETHING TO PONDER

The contaminating effects of sin cannot be underestimated, nor can transgression be addressed with the human intellect alone. Nor, indeed, can such an activity be driven only by mercy. As Jude states, mercy must be mixed with a holy fear because of the dangerous spiritual terrain on which the worker is treading.

This incident underscores the seriousness of willing sin within the church. Now that psychiatrists, and other worldly-wise men, have gained a prominent place among professing believers, there is a tolerance of sin that is wholly unjustified. The imagined reclamation of transgressors has actually upstaged the purity of the body of Christ. After all of the arguments have been presented, the sobriety of the work of restoration is seen in the wise counsel of both Paul and Jude.

- Even though restoration is a noble and needful work, Paul says that only those who are “spiritual” should attempt such a work. “Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted” (Gal 6:1). The Amplified Bible reads, “you who are spiritual [who are responsive to and controlled by the Spirit] . . . keeping an attentive eye on yourself, lest you should be tempted also.”

- Jude says much the same thing, accenting the attitude that one must have when engaging in such a work. “And of some have compassion, making a difference: and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh” (Jude 1:22-23). Jude does not say to “have mercy” on all who fall, but “on some.” NASB There are others who must be approached with a mind to the possibility of being defiled by them. Some are to be saved quickly and forthrightly, “pulling them out of the fire,” NKJV “hating even the clothing stained by corrupted flesh.” NIV This is to be done by showing “mercy mixed with fear” NIV – that is, “fear” on the part of the one that is pulling the person out of the fire, lest they themselves be burned in the process. The Amplified Bible reads, “on others take pity [but] with fear, loathing even the garment spotted by the flesh and polluted by their sensuality.”

While I personally laud those who engage in recovery ministries, it also is quite clear that the percentage of actual successes is very low – and that is generally freely acknowledged to be the case. This does not suggest that the work itself is not noble. It does confirm that it must be done with great wisdom and fear. The contaminating effects of sin cannot be underestimated, nor can transgression be addressed with the human intellect alone. Nor, indeed, can such an activity be driven only by mercy. As Jude states, mercy must be mixed with a holy fear because of the dangerous spiritual terrain on which the worker is treading.

The account before us confirms the wisdom of the words of both Paul and James. It also accounts for the lack of emphasis on recovering fallen Christians. Such a work is reserved for those who are sober, wise, and cognizant of the seriousness of sin, together with its defiling effects. The body of Christ must not be thoughtless in this area.

MOSES SENT TO BE A RULER AND A DELIVERER

“ 35b . . . the same did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer . . . ”

The same Moses the Jews “refused” was the very one the Lord sent. This confirms that the heavens do not rule according to the fickle will of men. It also substantiates that there is a time and place where God performs His will whether the people initially consent to it or not. Additionally, we see in this text that rulers and deliverers are set up by God – whether they are Pharaoh (Ex 9:16) or Moses (Acts 7:35), or David (2 Sam 23:1) or Nebuchadnezzar (Jer 27:6).

TO BE A RULER

“ . . . the same did God send to be a ruler . . . ” Other versions read, “the one God sent to be a ruler ,” NKJV “He was sent to be their ruler . . . by God Himself,” NIV “whom God now sent as . . . ruler,” NRSV “him God sent to be prince ,” DARBY “God sent to . . . rule them ,” GWN “God . . . send to them to be their captain ,” MRD “God sent to be . . . leader ,” NJB and “God sending as a magistrate .” WEYMOUTH

When one ponders the magnitude of the deliverance to be accomplished, the appointment of a single man through whom it would be carried out is most arresting. Of course, He will not be without heavenly empowerment and assistance, for God does not send anyone to do a work without providing everything that is necessary to accomplish it.

Those accustomed to a democratic approach to things find it difficult to even think in terms of a “ruler.” A ruler is a “commander and leader,” THAYER “one exercising authority” and “invested with power and dignity,” FRIBERG “a judge,” UBS and one who “governs.” LOUW-NIDA Speaking with wisdom concerning things “under the son,” Solomon said, “in the multitude of counselors there is safety” (Prov 11:14). But when it comes to the things of God, or the handling of the people of God, this is emphatically not the case. There came a time when seventy judges assisted Moses in judging the people (Num 11:25). But Moses never held a session with these men to determine what ought to be done. He was the one who was sent to be the “ruler,” and the spirit that was given to those seventy men was a portion of the spirit that had been given to Moses himself. The people, speaking through a single man, had challenged Moses, saying, “who made thee a ruler or a judge over us.” Now, Stephen answers the question. God had done this.

This was not a token appointment – in name only, or without accompanying authority. God also gave Moses the power and wisdom that was required to be a “ruler.” As with all God-ordained offices, the confirmation of a person being sent by God in any given capacity is his possession of the gifts and abilities required for the execution of that office. This perception will revolutionize the consideration of preachers, teachers, elders, deacons, and the likes.

TO BE A DELIVERER

“ . . . and a deliverer . . .” Other versions read, “liberator,” NRSV “savior,” BBE “redeemer,” CSB “to free them,” GWN “deliverer and redeemer,” AMPLIFIED “to rescue the people,” CEV and “God sent . . . to set them free .” GNB

A “deliverer” is “a redeemer . . . liberator,” THAYER “one who frees slaves,” FRIBERG “a person who releases others,” LOUW-NIDA and “a ransom” LIDDELL-SCOTT Interestingly, the Greek lexicographer Thayer observes that this word is “not found in secular authors.” It is a word uniquely associated with God’s dealings with men.

When one ponders the magnitude of the deliverance to be accomplished, the appointment of a single man through whom it would be carried out is most arresting. Of course, He will not be without heavenly empowerment and assistance, for God does not send anyone to do a work without providing everything that is necessary to accomplish it.

Remember, this is a deliverance that involves a nation that has been in bondage for four hundred years. There had been numerous generations of Israelites that had never experienced liberty, and had only known bondage. If time can erase the promises of God, surely that is sufficient time for it to have happened – particularly in a strange land. However, even if the people that are to be delivered are wayward and stubborn, God knows how to prepare them so they will be ready and anxious to leave the land at the appointed time.

WHAT STEPHEN IS DOING

With spiritual skill Stephen is showing the people that they are really no different than their predecessors. God called and commissioned Moses to effect a deliverance – the very men whom those he was sent to deliver had despised and rejected. Now, the people before Stephen had done precisely the same thing with Jesus, a greater Deliverer sent to accomplish a greater deliverance. It ought to be apparent that such a marvelous liberation is more than a mere accomplishment of men. It is rather the carrying out of a purpose that was conceived by God alone. He implement it through a man of His choosing.

BY THE HAND OF THE ANGEL

“ 35c . . . by the hand of the angel which appeared to him in the bush.” Other versions read “ with the help of the angel who appeared to him in the thorn bush,” NKJV “ by means of the angel that appeared to him in the thorn bush,” CJB “with the help of an angel. This was the angel that Moses saw in the bush.” IE and “with the [protecting and helping] hand of the Angel that appeared to him in the bramblebush.” AMPLIFIED

Here is a most arresting consideration! The deliverance of Israel is frequently said to have been accomplished by Moses himself.

MOSES BROUGHT THEM OUT

- God to Moses: “Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt” (Ex 3:10).
- “And Samuel said unto the people, It is the LORD that advanced Moses and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt ” (1 Sam 12:6).
- “Thou leddest thy people like a flock by the hand of Moses and Aaron ” (Psa 77:20).
- “That led them by the right hand of Moses with his glorious arm, dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting name” (Isa 63:12).
- “And by a prophet the LORD brought Israel out of Egypt , and by a prophet was he preserved” (Hosea 12:13).

GOD BROUGHT THEM OUT

Yet, the very same deliverance is said to have been accomplished by God Himself.

- “And Moses said unto the people, Remember this day, in which ye came out from Egypt, out of the house of bondage; for by strength of hand the LORD brought you out from this place : there shall no leavened bread be eaten” (Ex 13:3).

“And Moses and Aaron said unto all the children of Israel, At even, then ye shall know that the LORD hath brought you out from the land of Egypt ” (Ex 16:6).

- “Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have: I am the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt ” (Lev 19:36; 22:33; Num 15:41).
- “But because the LORD loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath the LORD brought you out with a mighty hand , and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt” (Deut 7:8).
- “I sent Moses also and Aaron, and I plagued Egypt, according to that which I did among them: and afterward I brought you out ” (Josh 24:5).

BY AN ANGEL

Additionally, here the deliverance is said to be “by the hand” of an angel – a specific angel, even the one who appeared to him in the bush at Sinai. You see what holy involvement are wrought by the hand of the Lord. In the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, God, who determined and accomplished the deliverance, brought a holy angel and the man Moses into the work.

There is frequent reference to this angel, particularly in regard to the deliverance of Israel from Egypt.

• AT THE RED SEA. “And the angel of God, which went before the camp of Israel, removed and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them: and it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and it was a cloud and darkness to them, but it gave light by night to these: so that the one came not near the other all the night” (Ex 14:19-20).

• IN LEADING THEM THROUGH THE WILDERNESS. “Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared . Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions: for my name is in him. But if thou shalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I speak; then I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and an adversary unto thine adversaries. For mine Angel shall go before thee, and bring thee in unto the Amorites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites: and I will cut them off” (Ex 23:20-23).

• IN MOSES LEADING THE PEOPLE. “Therefore now go, lead the people unto the place of which I have spoken unto thee: behold, Mine Angel shall go before thee : nevertheless in the day when I visit I will visit their sin upon them” (Ex 32:34).

• PREPARING CANAAN FOR THEIR OCCUPATION. “And I will send an angel before thee ; and I will drive out the Canaanite, the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite” (Ex 33:2).

• LEADING THEM OUT OF EGYPT. “And when we cried unto the LORD, he heard our voice, and sent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt : and, behold, we are in Kadesh, a city in the uttermost of thy border” (Num 20:16).

• ISAIAH’S REVELATION. “In all their affliction He was afflicted, and the angel of His presence saved them : in his love and in his pity He redeemed them; and He bare them, and carried them all the days of old” (Isa 63:9).

Now, speaking through the Holy Spirit, Stephen states that God sent Moses to be a ruler and deliver “by the hand of the angel which appeared to him in the bush.”

THE DIVINE MANNER

In this we behold the manner of God’s workings. Because of the sinfulness of man, God Himself does not have immediate, or direct dealings with them. In the text before us, there was an angel and a man of faith between the people and God. It was the presence of these personalities that enabled God to work with the people without destroying them in the process. Even though God “set” His love upon this people, choosing them and preferring them above all other people (Deut 7:7), yet His nature did not allow Him to directly confront the people. This is why the vast hosts of angels are so active, “sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation” (Heb 1:14). It is the reason for the presences of Moses, Aaron, the priests, and the prophets. Without these intermediaries God could not draw near to the people without His glory consuming them – for glory cannot dwell with corruption.

There is a tendency in our society that greatly concerns me – a disposition that has been produced by spiritual ignorance and a lack of familiarity with God and His great salvation. God is being presented in a manner that actually conflicts with His nature.

Even in this day of salvation, when Jesus has put away sin, men have been reconciled to God, and peace has been made and preached, someone must be between God and man, else they will be consumed. This is the reason for “the Man Christ Jesus,” who mediates between God and man (1 Tim 2:5). It is why whatever comes to us from God comes “through Christ” and “by Christ” (Rom

6:11,23; Gal 3:14; Eph 2:7; Phil 4:7; 4:19; Tit 3:6; Heb 13:21). It is why what we give to God must come to Him through Christ (Rom 7:25; 16:27; 2 Cor 3:4; Eph 3:21; 1 Pet 2:5; 4:11). This is also why there are apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastors and teachers who deliver the Word of God to men – as opposed to the Lord speaking directly with them.

No man is so close to God that Jesus is no longer required – or the ministers whom He has “given to every man” (1 Cor 3:5). It is not possible to have a profitable association with God without a Intercessor in heaven (Heb 7:25), an Intercessor within (Rom 8:26-27), and informed messengers (Eph 4:11).

There is a tendency in our society that greatly concerns me – a disposition that has been produced by spiritual ignorance and a lack of familiarity with God and His great salvation. God is being presented in a manner that actually conflicts with His nature. As good as it may sound to consider God as a close friend and companion who understands the difficulties we experience, that is not a fair representation of God at all. There have been, and presently are, people whose miserable condition has actually been brought on by the Lord whom they have offended. Additionally, there is a moral and spiritual condition in which sins are said to “have withholden good things from you” (Jer 5:25). There is also the fact that the Lord is addressed as “a God that hidest Thysself” (Isa 45:15). We are also told of times when the Lord looks for someone to stand in the gap for men (Ezek 22:30), and searches for an intercessor (Isa 59:16). Even then, when His “own arm” brought salvation, it was through a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ. There are people who are not invited into the presence of the Lord, and He challenges them when they attempt to enter into His courts (Isa 1:12).

These manners do not reflect a heartless God, but a holy one, whose nature is truthfully described in this way: “A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about” (Psa 97:3). It is in consideration of this, coupled with a desire for “all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth” (1 Tim 2:4), that God works among men through appointed means, and not directly .

When preaching and teaching leave people thinking of God as a kind of tender and sympathetic man, the people are put in a position of jeopardy. Lest men fall asleep, we are reminded that His wrath will be revealed “against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold [back] the truth in unrighteousness” (Rom 1:18). There are people who will be raised from the dead to be damned (John 5:29). There are people who will be cast into the lake of fire (Rev 20:15). This will take place because they are incompatible with God, and thus cannot dwell in His presence.

The purpose of salvation is to address and resolve this condition, so that men will not be condemned, and will be able to dwell in the house of the Lord forever. This is why there is a new birth (John 3:3,7; 1 Pet 1:23), transformation (Rom 12:2), and a moral and spiritual change (2 Cor 3:18). It is why men receive a new heart and a new spirit (Ezek 36:26). It is why spiritual growth is required (Eph 4:15; 2 Pet 3:18). This is the reason for “the new man” (Eph 4:24; Col 3:9), a new creation (2 Cor 5:17; Eph 2:10), and deliverance from the power of darkness and translation into the Kingdom of God’s dear Son (Col 1:13).

All of this is precisely because God not simply a companion of troubled people, and One deeply concerned about the welfare of men in this world. It is why He is not presented as a mere problem solver, and a solution to difficulties that are common to all men. Even His love for us is “ in Christ Jesus our Lord” (Rom 8:37).

WHY SAY THESE THINGS?

It is necessary to say these things because of the nature of Scriptural history. When recounting historical events, the Spirit is doing more than simply relating what took place. Particular with regards to Israel, we are told that what “happened” to them was “for our ensamples,” or examples (1 Cor 10:11). That is, these were events that were Divinely orchestrated in order to teach us of critical matters. In those events we are not only apprised of the human nature, but of the Divine nature as well. Lest we become presumptuous in our approach to the Lord, it is important to recognize that, by His nature, He has specific response to both good and evil, righteousness and unrighteousness, holiness and iniquity.

There is a sense in which Scriptural history is the doctrine of God lived out. The affirmation is that the Lord tries, or tests, the righteous, and hates “the wicked and him that loveth violence” (Psa 11:5). That statement is confirmed in the historical accounts of Scripture. The doctrine is that God will visit iniquity with the rod, or chastens those who insist on sinning (Psa 89:32). Divine history confirms that statement. The doctrine is that God is “nigh unto all them that call upon Him, to all that call upon Him in truth” (Psa 145:18). Scriptural accounts confirm this to be true. The doctrine is that God devises means so that His banished will not be expelled from Him (2 Sam 14:14; Ex 21:13; Isa 50:2). The Scriptural records of the Lord’s dealing with people are the proof of these. In conformity with the Divine manner, they are established in the mouth of at least two witnesses.

HE BROUGHT THEM OUT AFTER HE HAD SHOWED WONDERS AND SIGNS

“ 36 He brought them out, after that he had showed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, and in the Red sea, and in the wilderness forty years.”

HE BROUGHT THEM OUT

“He brought them out . . .” Other versions read, “ This man led them out,” NASB “He led them out of Egypt,” NIV “This man led them forth,” ASV “This man took them out,” BBE “This is the man who led our ancestors out of Egypt,” GWN “ He it was that brought them out,” MRD “ So , Moses led the people out,” IE and “Moses rescued the people.” CEV

The “he” of the text is Moses, whom God sent to be a ruler and deliverer. He brought them out, not by means of warfare, but by leading the people to obey God, who then cleared the way for their exodus. From the standpoint of SOURCE, it was the Lord who brought them out. That is stated in Exodus 12:42: “It is a night to be much observed unto the LORD for bringing them out from the land of Egypt: this is that night of the LORD to be observed of all the children of Israel in their generations.” From the standpoint of MEANS, the Lord used Moses to bring them out, as He Himself declared: “And the LORD said unto Moses, Depart, and go up hence, thou and the people which thou hast brought up out of the land of Egypt , unto the land which I sware unto Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, saying, Unto thy seed will I give it” (Ex 33:1).

The people of God must learn to speak in a precise and correct manner. There was a sense in which God alone brought Israel out of Egypt. Therefore God said, “ I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt.” Yet there was a sense in which Moses himself brought them out. Therefore God said to Moses, “Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt ” (Ex 3:10,12). From yet another point of view, they were thrust out of Egypt. As it is written, “And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened; because they were thrust out of Egypt , and could not tarry, neither had they prepared for themselves any victual” (Ex 12:39). That is, the Egyptians urged them to leave, sending them out of the land. From yet another view, the children of Israel “went out from the land of Egypt” (Ex 12:41). From still another point of view , their deliverance was “by the hand of the angel” (Acts 7:35).

Here again we see the nature of God’s working. Effective works that regard men are accomplished by means of heaven and earth working together. In the flood, it was the Lord and Noah. In the generation of Isaac, it was the Lord, angels, Abraham, and Sarah. In the expansion of Israel in Egypt, it was the Lord, Joseph, Jacob, and his progeny. Now, in the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, it is the Lord, an angel, Moses, and the people themselves, and even the Egyptians who urged them to go.

Even in redemption, it was :”the Man Christ Jesus:” whop carried out the will of God while being supported by God.

If you were to have assessed this deliverance while fastening your eyes on the people, it looked as though they merely walked out, being urged on their way by the Egyptians. If you had been carefully watching Moses, it would have appeared as though he was the driving force behind it all. If you could see behind the scenes, you would see that God determined the whole matter, and an angel facilitated His will. But actually, there was a marvelous harmony in the work, with heaven and earth working together. This was made possible because the Lord can turn hearts, raise the spirits of the people, and give them courage to move out. Working effectively, He can make the people want to come out, and cause the Egyptians to want them to leave.

In Salvation

In salvation, we have a similar situation – except it is on a much larger scale. God, the Lord Jesus, and the Holy Spirit are all engaged in the work. The opening of the hearts of men, conviction, willingness, repentance and faith, and much more, are all traced to them. An enumerable company of Holy angels are also involved in the work. Working behind the scenes, they impact upon circumstance, are instrumental in leading, and a host of other ministries. There are special people like apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers, who are charged with implementing the purpose of God, informing, and leading the people. These teach, expound, exhort, instruct, clarifying the truth to the people. Then, there are the people themselves, who are made willing in the day of His power, and willingly forsake the world, and love and embrace the truth. It is all marvelous when perceived, exhilarating the soul, and bringing joy and confidence to the heart.

WONDERS AND SIGNS IN EGYPT

“ . . . after that he had showed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt . . .” Other versions read, “ performing wonders and signs,” “ did wonders and miraculous signs,” NIV “ having wrought wonders and signs,” ASV doing wonders and signs,” DOUAY “ Did amazing things and worked miracles,” GWN “ by means of many wonders and miraculous signs,” NLT “by means of many remarkable miracles,” LIVING “He did powerful things and miracles,” IE and “performing marvels and signs.” WEYMOUTH

Before Israel left Egypt, Moses worked signs and wonders, confirming that he was sent from God. Initially, he was given four signs to perform.

- Throwing his rod down, and it becoming a serpent (Ex 4:3; 7:10).
- Picking up the serpent by the tail, and it became a rod (Ex 4:4).
- Putting his hand into his bosom, withdrawing it, and it was leprous (Ex 4:6).
- Putting his hand again into his bosom, withdrawing it, and turned back again as his other flesh (Ex 4:7).

Following this, he worked ten miracles of staggering proportions – the ten plagues of Egypt.

- Water turned to blood (Ex 7:14-25).
- The plague of the frogs (Ex 8:1-15).
- The plague of the lice (Ex 8:16-19).
- The plague of the flies (Ex 8:20-24).
- The plague on the cattle (Ex 9:1-7).
- The plague of boils and blains, or running sores (Ex 9:8-12).

- The plague of hail, with fire running along the ground (Ex 9:15-34).
- The plague of locusts (Ex 10:1-20).
- The plague of thick darkness (Ex 10:21-23).
- The plague of the death of all the firstborn in Egypt (Ex 11:4-7; 12:29-30).

In these miracles, Moses used his rod, now referred to as “the rod of God” (Ex 4:17; 8:5,16,17; 9:23; 10:13).

WONDERS AND SIGNS IN THE RED SEA

“ . . . and in the Red sea . . .” Other versions read, “ at the Red Sea,” NRSV and “ through the Red Sea.” NLT

Having left Egypt, Israel first came to the Red Sea, which was impassable. It was there that Moses, using his rod, also worked signs and wonders.

- He stretched forth his rod and divided the sea, and Israel walked across no dry ground (Ex 14:16).
- Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the waters returned to the natural state, drowning all of Egyptian army in the process (Ex 14:26-27).

WONDERS AND SIGNS IN THE WILDERNESS

“ . . . and in the wilderness forty years.” Other versions read, “and for forty years in the desert,” NIV “and in the waste land for forty years,” BBE “and through the wilderness for forty years,” NLT and “ during the forty years in the wilderness (desert).” AMPLIFIED

During the sojourn through the wilderness, several miracles were wrought by the hand of Moses – sometimes with the involvement of Aaron.

The listing I am providing of miracles done by Moses does not include the following, even though I have no doubt Stephen had them in mind as well.

- The pillar of cloud and fiery pillar that led Israel (Ex 13:21)
- The miraculous supply of daily manna (Ex 16:4).
- The miraculous supply of quail (Ex 16:13).
- The revelation of God at Mount Sinai (Ex 19:16-20; 24:10–17).
- The fire of God that fell upon the murmuring Israelites (Num 11:1-3).
- The judgment of Miriam’s leprosy (Num 12:10-15).
- The ground opening up and swallowing Korah and his cohorts (Num 16:31-35).
- The budding of Aaron’s rod (Num 17:1-9).
- The fiery (poisonous) serpents (Num 21:6-9).
- The destruction of Nadab and Abihu (Lev 10:1-2).

The following are the signs and wonders that involved Moses more directly.

- Sweetening of the waters of Marah by means of casting a tree into them (Ex 15:25).
- Miraculous defeat of the army of Amalek while Moses hands were held up (Ex 17:9-13).

- The face of Moses glows when he came forth from being with God (Ex 34:29-35).
- Brings water out of the rock by striking it with his rod (Ex 17:5-7).
- Prays for Miriam and she is healed of leprosy (Num 12:10-15).
- Prayed to God and a fire sent to consume the people was stopped (Num 11:1-3).
- Brings water again from a rock (Num 20:8-11)
- Prays for the people among whom God had sent poisonous snakes, and was directed to construct a brazen serpent which, when looked upon, brought healing to those who looked (Num 21:6-8).

THE POINT TO BE SEEN

The point to be seen is that the unbelief of the people could in no way be said to have resulted from them not seeing the works of God. It was not owing to any lack of ratification that Moses was, indeed, selected, sent, and empowered by God. As you might expect, Stephen will show that the same reasoning pertains to the Jew's rejection of Jesus Christ. He was also "a Man approved of God . . . by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of" the Jews (Acts 2:22).

THE PRINCIPLE OF HOLY REFERENCE

Throughout Scripture, there is the employment of, what I will call, holy reference. By this I mean that the account of Divine workings were first chronicled, or reported. Then, those events were recalled in total by the wise selection of just a few words. Thus a base of knowledge became a virtual well of thought from which profitable recollections could be gathered. Of course, where there is an ignorance of the occurrences of reference, no significant profit can be gained when hearing a summation of them. However, if there is a knowledge of the factual details of Divine history, a brief reference to an entire period of time will produce a plethora of refreshing and profitable thought. Let me give you a few examples of the kind of summary statements to which I refer.

If the individual hearing these statements does not have a working knowledge of the details to which they refer, the statements themselves will exert minimal influence upon both heart and mind. They all presume an acquaintance with the details.

THE MINISTRY OF JESUS. "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with Him" (Acts 10:38).

- THE BEGINNING OF THE GOSPEL. "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?" (Heb 2:3-4).

- THE MINISTRY OF THE HIGH PRIEST UNDER THE OLD COVENANT. "Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God" (Heb 9:6).

If the individual hearing these statements does not have a working knowledge of the details to which they refer, the statements themselves will exert minimal influence upon both heart and mind. They all presume an acquaintance with the details.

Where this Kingdom manner is not known, very foolish decisions can be made concerning the Scriptures. For example, because one reads that the Old Covenant and its attending ordinances are no longer in force, an erroneous conclusion may be reached. The person may see the Old Covenant Scriptures as entirely unnecessary, and therefore neglect them. Such a person may even choose to ignore them altogether, carrying about what men refer to as “A New Testament.” There are, in fact, a number of people with whom I am personally acquainted, who have adopted and promote this view. They conveniently overlook that these are the Scriptures to which Paul referred when he wrote to Timothy, “And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness : that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works” (2 Tim 3:15-17).

In Our Text

Previously, I listed twenty-four miracles that were wrought by the hand of Moses, as well as several that were related to his ministry. All of the events that I listed were brought to mind with this sentence: “He brought them out, after that he had showed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, and in the Red sea, and in the wilderness forty years” (Acts 7:36). This statement of Stephen would mean very little to someone who had no knowledge of those details. That condition would cause his words to be profitless to the hearers.

Without lingering on this particular consideration, this explains why much of the modern church is not able to get much out of solid Scriptural preaching and teaching. Such communication, to them, concerns a book with which they are not familiar. Until they gain the needed familiarity, it is not likely that they will grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Such growth presumes one has a knowledge of the Scriptures. That is precisely why Peter wrote, “As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby ” (1 Pet 2:2). Professing believers cannot ignore this admonition without suffering disastrous results. Where “spiritual understanding” is not found, falling away from the faith is imminent. Men cannot remain ignorant, and yet remain safe and “kept by the power of God” (1 Pet 1:5). There appears to be a prevailing lack of consciousness of this altogether unacceptable circumstance. If men are to be saved, deliverance from this state must be experienced. Salvation is realized in the context of understanding.

THIS IS THE MOSES WHO PROPHESED OF CHRIST

“ 37 This is that Moses, which said unto the children of Israel, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; Him shall ye hear.”

Stephen’s reference to Moses no doubt stirred the hearts of the people – particularly their leaders, who freely declared, “we are Moses’ disciples” (John 9:26). Boldly they said, “We know that God spake unto Moses,” while saying of Jesus, “as for this fellow, we know not from whence He is” (John 9:29). Now Stephen elaborates, aiming at the exaltation of the Lord Jesus Christ whom he is serving.

THIS IS THAT MOSES

“This is that Moses, which said unto the children of Israel . . .” To these people, there was no question about what Moses had done. It was part of their history, and they tended to glory in it. They had handily forgotten how Moses was treated by their predecessors, but Stephen has clearly stated how Moses was received in his day, even though the generation of Stephen’s time held him in high regard. They referred to his writings as binding upon the people (Matt 19:7; 22:24; John 8:5).

Now Stephen prepares for his proclamation of Jesus by drawing attention to what Moses said – the man they held in veneration. His words be like a penetrating sword that will search out the thoughts and intents of their hearts.

A PROPHET TO BE RAISED UP

“ . . . A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me . . .”

These words were spoken by Moses at the end of his life – after he had led the people through a terrible wilderness, and they were on the borders of the promised land. At this time, the unbelieving generation had died off, and Moses reminded them of the forty years they had spent wandering in the wilderness (Deut 2:7; 8:2,4; 29:5). What a circuitous journey it had been! Deuteronomy 1:1-2 affirms that at this time they were only eleven days from Horeb, where they had received the Law. It is generally considered that a days journey was approximately fifteen miles. If this is so, they were about 165 miles from where they started – and it took forty years to get there! Now, at the time of the Deuteronomy discourse given by Moses, they were on the banks of the Jordan River, with Canaan on the other side (Josh 1:1-2).

The people listening to Stephen were no doubt fully aware of the last words of the book of Deuteronomy. They were a tribute to Moses, the servant of God. “And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the LORD knew face to face, in all the signs and the wonders, which the LORD sent him to do in the land of Egypt to Pharaoh, and to all his servants, and to all his land, and in all that mighty hand, and in all the great terror which Moses showed in the sight of all Israel” (Deut 34:10-12). This being true, as it surely is, the words of Moses should be held in the highest regard, for they were nothing less than the words of God.

Another Prophet

Thus, during this valedictory address, Moses foretold the coming of a greater prophet. “The LORD thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken” (Deut 18:15). Not only had God raised up Moses, He was going to raise another Prophet – one that would prove to be even greater than Moses. The people would listen to this prophet, giving heed to His words.

By Way of Contrast

These words were spoken by Moses at the end of his life – after he had led the people through a terrible wilderness, and they were on the borders of the promised land. At this time, the unbelieving generation had died off, and Moses reminded them of the forty years they had spent wandering in the wilderness

By way of contrast, Moses reminded the people that they had requested that God no longer speak directly to them. “According to all that thou desiredst of the LORD thy God in Horeb in the day of the assembly, saying, Let me not hear again the voice of the LORD my God, neither let me see this great fire any more, that I die not. And the LORD said unto me, They have well spoken that which they have spoken” (Deut 18:16-17). This was done shortly after their deliverance, when they received the Law at Mount Sinai (Ex 20:19). In response to their request, Moses related what God has personally told Moses: “And the LORD said unto me, They have well spoken that which they have spoken” (Deut 18:17). That is, their decision was a wise one, for if God had come close to them or spoken to them, they would have indeed died, for their hearts were corrupt, and they were a stubborn and stiffnecked people.

It Would Not Always Be This Way

Then Moses reaffirmed that God was going to raise up another Prophet from that nation. That Prophet would speak to the people in words that were given to Him by God Himself. It is in this sense that He would be a Prophet like Moses. His message would be superior, but the Source of it, and the means through which it was given to him, would be the same. “I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put My words in His mouth; and He shall speak unto them all that I shall command Him” (Deut 18:18).

Failing to Hear Him Would Be Fatal

Moses then told the people that their continuance would hinge on whether or not they received what this Prophet said. “And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto My words which He shall speak in My name, I will require it of him” (Deut 18:19). On the day of Pentecost, some time before the period covered in our text, Peter also referred to this word. Through the Holy Spirit he made the strength of this saying quite clear. “And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people ” (Acts 3:23). Even as it was with the council before whom Stephen was standing, it seems to me that this truth is scarcely known in the contemporary church. There is altogether too much casualness concerning the words of Christ, not to mention the gross ignorance of them, and prevailing lack of interest in, or a quest for, them.

Men do well to carefully weigh the liberties men take upon themselves to alter the text of Scripture in such a way as to put it at a variance with godly scholars, other texts of Scripture, and the words of God Himself.

HIM YE SHALL HEAR

“ . . . Him shall ye hear.” Stephen accents this promise – for it is a promise, and not a mere commandment. Later versions of Scripture eliminate this phrase (NASB, NIV, NRSV, RSV, NLT, etc). Nearly all older versions of Scripture (prior to 1900), contain the words (DARBY, DOUAY, GENEVA, MRD, PNT, RWB, TNT, WEB, YLT, LITV). Some later translations also include the words, including Phillips Translation of the New Testament. Whatever technical justification may be offered for this exclusion, it is wholly unacceptable. It actually deprives the text of strength. It also overlooks the presence of the words in the Deuteronomy text, and the affirmation given by God Himself when Jesus was transfigured (“hear ye Him” – Matt 17:5). There are also sufficient language scholars and students of ancient manuscripts that include it, thus confirming that the case against their inclusion is by no means beyond all question. Men do well to carefully weigh the liberties men take upon themselves to alter the text of Scripture in such a way as to put it at a variance with godly scholars, other texts of Scripture, and the words of God Himself. Both then Head and the body must be considered.

The Significance of These Words

The significance of these words is found in the fact that God makes absolutely no provision for not hearkening to the words of Jesus. There is not the slightest Divine tolerance or longsuffering with those who ignore or reject the words of Jesus. As I have said, this view contradicts the burden of contemporary Christianity, as well as a considerable measure of historical Christendom.

Stephen’s inclusion of Moses’ prophecy is designed to place the weight of conviction upon the conscience of his hearers. He will force them to deal with what they have ignored, even though it will result in his own martyrdom.

One of the great needs of our time is for godly men who have a grasp of the truth to powerfully bring it to bear upon the hearts and consciences of men – particularly religious men. There is far too much indifference and ignorance in the professed church to allow for any other posture. Part of this condition has been caused by a lack of genuine leaders.

MOSES DID IT WITH THE ANGEL

“ 38 This is he, that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spake to him in the mount Sinai, and with our fathers: who received the lively oracles to give unto us.”

Having drawn the attention of his listeners to Moses’ prophecy of Israel, Stephen continues to elaborate on Moses himself – a man chosen, sent, and empowered by God, yet rejected by the people.

THE CHURCH IN THE WILDERNESS

“ This is he, that was in the church in the wilderness . . .” Other versions read, “ congregation in the wilderness,” NKJV “ assembly in the desert,” NIV “church in the wasteland,” BBE “the assembly of God’s people in the wilderness,” NLT “congregation in the desert,” WEYMOUTH and “assembly in the wilderness (desert).” AMPLIFIED

What an intriguing way to describe the children of Israel in the wilderness: “the church in the wilderness.” This word “church” is translated from the regular Greek word to which that term is applied – evkklhsi,a (Eck-la-see-a). For many years, a considerable amount of needless controversy has raged around the English word “church.” It is often stated that it is an improper translation, and does not reflect the proper meaning of the word. In confirmation of the controversy that has raged over this word, THE COMPACT EDITION OF THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY (which I have in my possession), contains over seven full pages of information under the heading “church.” The usage of the word ranges from applying it to a building, the purported clergy, and specific denominations, to the entire body of Christians. Most of this accents usage, which highlights the existing confusion.

As used in Scripture, the word “church” (evkklhsi,a) is both general and specific.

- IT’S BUILDER. Jesus said He would build His “church” (Matt 16:18).
- AN AUDIENCE TO WHICH THINGS ARE TOLD. Jesus said that after personal offenses had been addressed personally, and before two or three witnesses, and yet remained unresolved, they were to be told “to the church” (Matt 18:17).
- GOD ADDS TO. God is said to have added people “to the church” (Acts 2:47).
- FEAR CAME ON. Following the deaths of Ananas and Sapphira, “great fear came upon all the church” (Acts 5:11).
- ISRAEL IN THE WILDERNESS. Stephen referred to the nomadic Israelites as “the church in the wilderness” (Acts 7:38).
- PERSECUTED. Early in the history of the church, a persecution was leveled “against the church” (Acts 8:1,3).
- HAD A PERIOD OF REST. Following the cessation of the persecution, “the churches” had rest throughout Judea and Galilee and Samaria” (acts 9:31).
- HEARD OF GENTILE CONVERSIONS. The conversion of the Gentiles “as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, came into the ears of the church in Jerusalem” (Acts 11:22).
- PEOPLE ASSEMBLED WITH IT. Barnabas brought Saul to Antioch, where for “a whole year they assembled themselves with the church” (Acts 11:26).
- WAS VEXED. Herod “stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church” (Acts 12:1).
- MADE PRAYERS. When the target was Peter, “the church” made prayer for him without ceasing (Acts 12:5).
- BY LOCATION. The church was identified with locations – Antioch, Cenchrea, Corinth, Galatia, Laodicea, Thessalonica., Babylon, Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, Asia (Acts 13:1; Rom 16:1; 2 Cor 1:1, Gal 1:2; Col 4:16; 1 Thess 1:1; 1 Pet 5:13; Rev 2:1; 2:8,12,18; 3:1,7; 1 Cor 16:19).
- PRIVATE HOMES. There are churches in houses, or private homes (Rom 16:5; 1 Cor 16:19; Col 4:15; Phile 1:2).

• KNOWN BY THIS OWNER. The word “church ” is used with reference to its Owner or Founder – “church of God,” and “church of the living God,” “church of the Firstborn” (Acts 20:28; 1 Tim 3:15; Heb 12:23).

• CHRIST’S BODY. There are texts that specifically define the church – Christ’s “body,” “the fulness of Him that filleth all in all,” “the house of God,” and “the pillar and ground of the truth,” (Eph 1:22-23; 5:23; Col 1:18,24; 1 Tim 3:15).

• AN ASSEMBLY. In Acts 19:32,30, and 41, a mob of irate Ephesians who were opposed to Paul were called an “assembly” – translated from the word evkkllhsi,a .

• PLACE WHERE GIFTS PLACED. Spiritual gifts are said to have been placed by God “in the church” (1 Cor 12:28).

• MEANS THROUGH WHICH GOD’S WISDOM IS BEING MADE KNOWN. The “church” is the means through which God is displaying His manifold wisdom to heavenly principalities and powers (Eph 3:10).

• GLORY BROUGHT TO GOD THROUGH. Glory is said to be brought to God through the church “throughout all ages” (Eph 3:21).

• JESUS WILL PRESENT IT TO HIMSELF. Jesus will present to Himself “a glorious church, . . . Not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing” (Eph 5:27).

• JESUS SINGS PRAISE IN. The Psalmist foretold a Messiah who would “sing praise” in the midst of “the church” (Psa 22:22,25; Heb 2:12).

• NAMES WRITTEN IN HEAVEN. The names of those in “the church of the Firstborn” are “written in heaven” (Heb 12:23).

What is there that all of these uses have in common? It is obvious that the word does not refer to lifeless edifice or structure. It is equally clear that it speaks of people – functioning people. Often, the word emphasizes the people being assembled, or gathered together – although sometimes it refers to them while in state of dispersion.

Stephen Sheds Light on the Subject

Right here, in Stephen’s defense, he sheds light on the real meaning of this word – particularly as it applies to the body of Christ. He refers to “the church in the wilderness.” There are at least two things that distinguished these desert nomads. First, they had been delivered – called out of Egypt. Second, they were pilgrims and strangers in the wilderness, in quest of the land that God had promised to them.

“The church in the wilderness” had been called out of one country, and were in the process of journeying to another country. They were called together for a purpose – an objective. There was a particular purpose for this body of people, one into which they had been called.

It is not by coincidence that the root meaning of the Greek word evkkllhsi,a,l perfectly coincides with the picture presented by Stephen. “Called out or forth . . . properly a gathering of citizens called out from their homes into some public place; an assembly,” THAYER “a gathering of citizens,” FRIBERG “an assembly of citizens regularly summoned,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “assembly of people.” LEH

“The church in the wilderness” was not merely a congregation. It was not a group of people who simply got together. This was a body of people who were in a foreign and hostile land. God had determined a better place for them, and therefore orchestrated circumstances so they would not feel at home in that land. In due time He called them out of that land, in order that they might occupy a better land – one of their own. He delivered them, led them, and sustained them along the way, doing so through a leader – Moses.

All the way to the promised land they experienced trials and challenges. Some of them who refused to believe dropped off along the way. In fact one of the reasons for their forty year journey was in order that the unacceptable ones would expire in the wilderness.

The parallel with the church is obvious, and does not require extensive explanation. The similarities between Israel and the church are not coincidental or incidental; they are deliberate, planned and orchestrated by God. This is the teaching of the first twelve verses of the tenth chapter of First Corinthians. Our leader and sustained is the Lord Jesus Christ. However, He only fulfills this role for those who have been called out of the world, have come out of it in their hearts, and are journeying as strangers and pilgrims in this world to better country.

Any perception of the church that has them settling down in this world cannot possible be true. God has called them out of the world. This is such a critical matter that “whoever therefore wants to be a friend of the world makes himself an enemy of God.” How this needs to be known!

Any perception of the church that has them settling down in this world cannot possible be true. God has called them out of the world. This is such a critical matter that “whoever therefore wants to be a friend of the world makes himself an enemy of God” NKJV (James 4:4). How this needs to be known!

WITH THE ANGEL

“ . . . with the angel which spake to him in the mount Sinai, and with our fathers . . .” Other versions read, “ accompanied by the angel,” CJB “together with the angel,” CSB “with the messenger,” YLT “went between the angel,” WILLIAMS “was the go-between for the Angel,” AMPLIFIED and “was the mediator between the angel who used to talk with him on Mount Sinai and our father.” PHILLIPS

The angel who spoke with Moses in Mount Sinai was the one at the bush, not one of the angels that delivered the Law. The angel to which Stephen referred appeared to Moses “in the wilderness of Mount Sinai” (Acts 7:30). The very angel that was sent to deliver the call to Moses was the same one who accompanied him in his work. This was the angel to which Isaiah referred when he wrote, “In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them : in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old” (Isa 63:9).

In my judgment, this was none other than Michael, “one of the chief princes” in the angelic order (Dan 10:13). Once, when another angel had been dispatched to answer Daniel’s prayer, he encountered “the prince of Persia,” some great and hostile spiritual power. This “prince” proved too formidable for the angel, but Michael came to “help” him (Dan 10:13). While speaking with Daniel, this angel referred to Michael as “Michael your prince” (Dan 10:21). Later, in the twelfth chapter of Daniel, that same angel (delivering a message that covered Daniel 10:19-12-4), spoke of a time of great adversity for the children of Israel. However, he opened the door of hope when he said, “And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people . . .” (Dan 12:1). While I will not be contentious about it, it appears to me that this was the angel that assisted Moses.

That same angel was apparently instrumental in the giving of the law as well, for Stephen adds that he also spoke “with our fathers.” This being the case, Michael would have been joined by his angels. We know that he was in charge of some angels, for they were instrumental in the overthrow of Satan. It is written, “And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels” (Rev 12:7).

The view of Michael and his angels being involved with Moses further explains Paul’s allusion in his letter to the Galatians. “Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator” (Gal 3:19).

The point to be seen here is that Moses did not do the work himself. There is an extensive word given about this angel in the twenty-third chapter of Exodus. It is a most intriguing word. “Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions: for My name is in him. But if thou shalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I speak; then I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and an adversary unto thine adversaries. For mine Angel shall go before thee, and bring thee in unto the Amorites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites: and I will cut them off” (Ex 23:20-23). Observe the extensive work of this angel, and the promises and warnings issued concerning him.

- Hew would keep the people in the way, ensuring they did not get lost.
- He would bring them to the place God prepared for them. I take this to ultimately be the promised land, and immediately to Mount Sinai where they received the Law.
- The people were to beware of him.
- The people were to obey him.
- The people were not to, provoke him to anger, for he would not pardon their transgressions.
- God’s name was in him.
- If the people would obey the voice of the angel, and do everything he said, God would be an enemy to their enemies.
- He would bring the people to the nations then occupying Canaan, and would drive out those nations from the land.

A Type of the Holy Spirit

In his association with Moses, this angel was a type of the Holy Spirit. It is “through the Spirit” that we also are successful in our journey to the world to come. Ponder what is said of this.

- “And hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us” (Rom 5:5).
- “For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live” (Rom 8:13).
- “For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God” Rom 8:14).
- “For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost ” (Rom 14:17).
- “And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God” (1 Cor 6:11).
- “But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord” (2 Cor 3:18).
- “For we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith” (Gal 5:5).
- “In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit ” (Eph 2:22).
- “That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us” (2 Tim 1:14).

• “Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently” (1 Pet 1:22).

We are also warned against provoking this heavenly Companion. “And grieve not the holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption” (Eph 4:30). And again, “Quench not the Spirit” (1 Thess 5:19).

HE RECEIVED THE LIVELY ORACLES

The idea here is that “the living oracles,” or the Law, was not a form of reasoning, with extensive explanatory sentences. While much of the ceremonial was of this nature, the Law itself was not. It was a kind of summation of moral goodness – the kind that reflects the nature of God Himself. It was concise and to the point.

“ . . .who received the lively oracles to give unto us.” Other versions read, “living oracles,” NKJV “living words,” NIV “living words of God,” BBE “words of life,” DOUAY “life-giving messages,” GWN “living utterances,” NAB “life-giving words,” NLT “the living Word,” LIVING “commands that still live,” IE “ever-living utterances,” WEYMOUTH “living truths,” ISV “utterances that still live,” WILLIAMS and “living oracles (words that still live).” AMPLIFIED

Lively

This refers to the giving of the Law, and parallels John’s words, “the Law was given by Moses” (John 1:17). The word “lively” means these words were associated with life, and by their very nature could not die . A living God cannot speak dead words. These were words that could prick the conscience, provoke inquiry, and reveal aspects of God. It is because they were “lively” that over fifteen hundred years after they were given Paul confessed, “For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died” (Rom 7:9). Again, in defining the ordained impact of the law upon sinners, Paul said of his life prior to regeneration, “Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful” (Rom 7:13). It was the lively quality of the law that wrought these results.

Inherent in the word “lively” is the idea of longevity, or living on. Today, more than 3,500 years after the law was given, it still defines sin (Rom 3:20), and sounds the guilty verdict over sinners (Rom 3:19). We are not justified by it, to be sure, but we are certainly convicted by it. While the Law cannot confer life, it remains very much alive in its ministry. Wherever sin has not been washed away, the finger of the Law finds it and points it out with telling accuracy.

Oracles

The word “oracles” means a “brief utterance.” Translated from the Greek word logion (log-ion), which has the following lexical meaning: “a little word, brief utterance,” THAYER “sayings originating from God,” FRIBERG “convincing speech,” LOUA-NIDA “an announcement.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

The idea here is that “the living oracles,” or the Law, was not a form of reasoning, with extensive explanatory sentences. While much of the ceremonial was of this nature, the Law itself was not. It was a kind of summation of moral goodness – the kind that reflects the nature of God Himself. It was concise and to the point.

In the English language, the King James Version, the Ten Commandments contain 297 words (Ex 20:3-17). In the New International Version they contain 300 words. The Amplified Bible, with all of its embellishments, only contains 333 words. By way of comparison, the Declaration of Independence has 4,543 words, and the United States Constitution has about 7,000 words. The code of Hammurabi, written when the Babylonian empire was at its peak, contains 297 different laws (originally it was 282), with each of them containing considerable text because they were the record of several legal cases – law stated largely by example.

The Law given to Israel was a superior Law. Moses reminded the people that it was unique among the nations. “And what nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day?” (Deut 4:8). Yet, it was so brief by way of comparison – “oracles.” Each commandment was like a container filled with an abundance. Each was conducive to extensive thought, meditation, and contemplation. The Law was “lively” like a small concentrated and potent dose of vaccine, or even of poison. It did its work, small though it was in volume. The ceremonial laws pertaining to sacrifices, cleansing, feasts, social conduct, and other forms of behavior were an elaboration of the “lively oracles.”

As one spends time in Scripture it will be increasingly apparent that this is the manner which God speaks with men. His Word is the “Seed” of the Kingdom (Lk 8:11). Those who have a penchant for pre-digested religion will find themselves reading after men. However, in that approach, they will miss the very essence of spiritual life, which is Divine fellowship

As one spends time in Scripture it will be increasingly apparent that this is the manner which God speaks with men. His Word is the “Seed” of the Kingdom (Lk 8:11). Those who have a penchant for pre-digested religion will find themselves reading after men. However, in that approach, they will miss the very essence of spiritual life, which is Divine fellowship (John 17:3; 1 Cor 1:9). This also accounts for the popularity of Christian fiction. It is still true that men are to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling (Phil 2:12). That is one reason why God gave “oracles” – sayings, as compared to oratory, rhetoric, and elaborate forms of human logic. This is something that few souls perceive. However, those who do, find a spiritual joy in understanding that is beyond the reach of the flesh.

THEY WENT BACK IN THEIR HEARTS

“ 39 To whom our fathers would not obey, but thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt.”

Stephen is preaching powerfully, uncovering the gross inconsistency of the flesh, and its nature to withdraw from God. Israel was given every conceivable advantage. They were delivered in a most extraordinary way. A powerful angel from heaven was dispatched to lead them on their way. They were given a good law, accompanied by appropriate promises and curses. God supplied their food. He supplied their water. Their clothing and shoes did not wear out, and their feet did not swell, even though they journeyed without interruption for forty years in a desert. They had a leader who possessed a heart for them. He interceded for them, and the wrath of God was turned from them – more than once. If treating people well, providing their needs, and faithfully representing them will change them, or make them thankful, surely this is what will happen to Israel. But behold what happened!

OUR FATHERS WOULD NOT OBEY

“To whom our fathers would not obey . . .” Other versions read, “ unwilling to be obedient to him,” NASB “ refused to obey him,” NIV “unwilling to obey him,” NRSV “ would not be obedient,” ASV “by whom our fathers would not be controlled ,” BBE “would not be subject ,” DARBY “would not hearken to him,” MRD “refused to listen to,” NJB “ did not wish to become obedient,” YLT “ rejected Moses,” LIVING “ would not submit to him,” WEYMOUTH “ determined not to be subject to him [refusing to listen to or obey him],” AMPLIFIED and “this was the man to whom our forefathers turned a deaf ear !” PHILLIPS

Someone might say that Israel was really rejecting God. And, indeed, that is the truth. Yet, here they are accounted as refusing to obey Moses – the man to whom God gave His Word, in order that He might give it to them. The reason God did this is so Israel would not die when He spoke to them. They even knew that would happen when they dealt directly with God (Ex 20:19).

In Nehemiah's day, the refusal of Israel to obey was confessed by insightful souls. Here is what they prayed. "But they and our fathers dealt proudly, and hardened their necks, and hearkened not to thy commandments, and refused to obey, neither were mindful of thy wonders that thou didst among them" (Neh 9:17).

Stephen boldly declares that the Jewish fathers "would not obey him." This reaction first took place when Moses was in the mount with God. It is written, "And when the people saw that Moses delayed to come down out of the mount, the people gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him, Up, make us gods, which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him" (Ex 32:1). And that was only the beginning.

It is inexcusable for those living in "the day of salvation" and "the accepted time" (2 Cor 6:2-3) to react to the apostles like Israel reacted to Moses! There is no satisfactory excuse for it, and those who attempt to explain it greatly err. Solemnly believers are told, "Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than he?"

Five times it is written that "the people murmured against Moses." They murmured when they had no water (Ex 15:24). They murmured when they had no bread (Ex 16:2). They murmured the second time they could find no water (Ex 17:3). They murmured when they spied out the promised land and found giants living there (Num 14:2). They murmured when the ground opened up and swallowed Korah and his rebels (Num 16:41). Another time when they could not find water that gathered together against Moses and Aaron (Num 20:2). It is written that they "spake against God and Moses" (Num 21:5). Stephen summarizes their conduct against Moses: "To whom our fathers would not obey." Keep in mind that God sent Moses to be "a ruler" over them (Acts 7:35). It is the manner of God to take it personally when the people reject the one He sends. This was preeminently true of Jesus, and of those whom He sent as well. Therefore Jesus said, "He that heareth you heareth Me; and he that despiseth you despiseth Me; and he that despiseth Me despiseth Him that sent Me" (Lk 10:16).

If you imagine that this is not an issue in our day, ponder how many apostolic words are not being heeded today by those who profess to be Christians. Here are a few to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance.

- "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment" (1 Cor 1:10).
- "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you" (2 Cor 6:17).
- "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (2 Cor 7:1).
- "But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation" (1 Pet 1:15).
- "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us" (Heb 12:1).
- "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him” (1 John 2:15).

It is inexcusable for those living in “the day of salvation” and “the accepted time” (2 Cor 6:2-3) to react to the apostles like Israel reacted to Moses! There is no satisfactory excuse for it, and those who attempt to explain it greatly err. Solemnly believers are told, “Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than he?” (1 Cor 10:22). What would lead anyone to imagine that it is all right for men to ignore the ones God has sent to us, while it was wrong for Israel to do so?

THEY THRUST HIM FROM THEM

“ . . . but thrust him from them . . .” Other versions read, “ rejected ,” NKJV “ repudiated him,” NASB “ pushed him aside ,” NRSV “thrust him aside ,” RSV “put him on one side,” BBE “ forsook him,” MRD “ cast it from them,” TNT “ spurned his authority,” WEYMOUTH “thrusting him aside they rejected him,” AMPLIFIED and “ disregarded him.” PHILLIPS

The rejection of Moses was neither polite nor casual. They repudiated him openly, murmuring against him, and refusing to obey him or be led by him. They never really associated him with the Living God, but only thought of him as one of their peers – one they could criticize and against whom they could murmur. And, that was after he had worked wonders in signs in Egypt, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderness!

The people did not capture Moses and excommunicate him. Nor, indeed, did they persecute him or stone him. Oh, they would have done these things if they could, but he was working with an angel, and the angel would not allow Moses to be hurt by these wayward people. They “thrust” Moses away in their hearts and minds. They chose to ignore his words and not attach any real significance to his presence and leadership. He simply was not the kind of leader they would have chosen – and that is why God did not allow them to do so. God talked with Moses “face to face,” or directly (Ex 33:11; Deut 34:10). How could one possibly ignore such a man with impunity.

An Application for Our Time

In this great day of salvation, how does God react to those who reject His messengers? It is written that every person who has believed on Christ did so because a minister had been given to him. Here is how Paul stated it. “Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man ?” (1 Cor 3:5). No person should have to speak at length on the reaction of God to those who spurn the messengers or ministers that are sent to them. It is one thing to read, “How shall they preach except they be sent” (Rom 10:15). It is quite another for them to be sent, and then rejected.

IN THEIR HEARTS THEY TURNED BACK

“ . . . and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt.” Other versions read, “went back to Egypt in their thoughts .” NJB “ wanted to return to Egypt,” NLT “they hankered after Egypt,” WILLIAMS and “ yearned for and turned back to Egypt.” AMPLIFIED

This inclination started at the Red Sea – the first obstacle they faced after being delivered from Egypt by the mighty hand of God. Standing on the banks of that sea, after beheld the decimation of the Egyptians by ten plagues, hearing their enemies plead with them to leave, and having the Egyptians give their goods to them, this is what they said, “Because there were no graves in Egypt, hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness? wherefore hast thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt? Is not this the word that we did tell thee in Egypt, saying, Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians? For it had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than that we should die in the wilderness” (Exodus 14:11-12).

Wherever there is spiritual retrogression or backsliding, the person has gone back to the world in their heart! Though God strictly forbids it, a love for the world was again awakened in their hearts. Perhaps it was owing to some hardship or difficulty. It may well have been the renewing of some worldly acquaintance, visiting some place filled with unholy memories.

Hardly any time had passed until they spouted off about Egypt again – and they were not yet at Mount Sinai. When it seemed like there was no food, here is what they said, “Would to God we had died by the hand of the LORD in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh pots, and when we did eat bread to the full ; for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger” (Ex 16:3).

And then there was the time when the people began lusting, and in their hearts went back to Egypt. They lamented, “We remember the fish, which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic: but now our soul is dried away: there is nothing at all, beside this manna, before our eyes” (Num 11:5-6).

Later they again recalled Egypt, thinking they had it better when they were there. “And wherefore hath the LORD brought us unto this land, to fall by the sword, that our wives and our children should be a prey? were it not better for us to return into Egypt ?” (Num 14:3). At that time, things got so bad the people determined, “Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt” (Num 14:4). In Nehemiah’s day, this was also recalled in their confession to God, and it was stated with the characteristic precision of faith. “. . . but hardened their necks, and in their rebellion appointed a captain to return to their bondage : but thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and forsookest them not” (Neh 9:17b).

Application

Wherever there is spiritual retrogression or backsliding, the person has gone back to the world in their heart! Though God strictly forbids it, a love for the world was again awakened in their hearts. Perhaps it was owing to some hardship or difficulty. It may well have been the renewing of some worldly acquaintance, visiting some place filled with unholy memories. You may be sure of this, that Satan cannot lure a person back into the world without them thinking about it, and wanting to return.

The solution to this temptation is to “deny ungodliness and worldly lusts” – refuse them a place in your thoughts. Pull down imaginations and every high thought that exalts itself against the knowledge of God (2 Cor 10:3-5). Let the people of God learn from Israel not to make a place for the devil (Eph 4:27). For he will always seize it for his advantage.

THE PROPENSITY TO IDOLATRY – MAKE US GODS!

“ 40 Saying unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us: for as for this Moses, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.”

Unbelief is not content to merely malign the servant of God, and even God Himself. It will aggressively pursue someone else to serve. That is the nature of the flesh, or human nature.

MAKE US GODS

“Saying unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us . . .” Other versions read, “Make us gods who will lead the way for us,” NRSV “Make us gods who will be our leaders,” NAB “Make us a god to go at our head,” NJB “Make us some gods who can lead us,” NLT “Make idols for us, so that we will have gods to lead us back,” LIVING “Make gods for us, to march in front of us,” WEYMOUTH and “Make us gods who shall [be our leaders and] go before us.” AMPLIFIED

I have already alluded to historical record of this occasion. The words of the people are most arresting. They demanded of Aaron, Moses' own brother, "Up, Make us gods to go before us!" (Ex 32:1). When they were groaning under the harshness of the Egyptian taskmasters, this is not what they said! At that time they rather "cried, and their cry came up unto God by reason of the bondage" (Ex 2:23). They groaned, and God "heard their groaning." Now, at the base of Mount Sinai, and in less than three short months, all of this has been forgotten (Ex 19:1). They have determined to head back to Egypt, and they want gods made for them to lead them back. They were not requesting god's to lead them to Canaan, for their hearts had returned to Egypt. Even though the children of Israel had lived for five hundreds years with the promise of Canaan in their hearts, the trial of the desert had washed it all away.

There is no record of Israel having any inclination to idolatry in Egypt, but they certainly had one in the desert of Sinai, even though it was totally irrational for them to do so! Sin is not reasonable, even though it parades itself as being so.

There is no record of Israel having any inclination to idolatry in Egypt, but they certainly had one in the desert of Sinai, even though it was totally irrational for them to do so! Sin is not reasonable, even though it parades itself as being so. Think what Israel had experienced from the night of the Passover to this day – in less than three months.

- The Egyptians, their former taskmasters, had urged them to leave the land with great haste (Ex 12:32).
- God gave Israel favor in the eyes of the Egyptians, so that they "lent unto them such things as they required" – and that included "jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment" (Ex 12:35-36).
- In a single night, the entire nation of Israel exited Egypt, with not one animal hoof was left behind, and not one Egyptian dog barking at them (Ex 10:26; 11:7; 12:51).
- The Lord led them miraculously with a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night, never taking them away (Ex 14:21-22).
- Every single Israelite – as high as several million – crossed the Red Sea on dry ground, with not a single person failing to do so, and none of their possessions being lost (Ex 14:22,29).
- When Pharaoh and his armies pursued them, the sea closed upon them, and all of Israel saw their carcasses "dead upon the sea shore" (Ex 14:30).
- Israel saw what the Lord had done, "feared the Lord, and believed the Lord, and His servant Moses" (Ex 14:31).
- They witnessed the healing of bitter waters at Marah (Ex 15:23-24).
- They found an oasis in the desert with twelve wells of water and seventy palm trees (Ex 16:27).
- They were given manna at a certain rate every day, and it supplied the complete need of every person in Israel, young and old (Ex 16:4-12).
- They saw a miraculous supply of quail to be eaten in the evening, while manna was eaten in the morning (Ex 16:12-13).
- They were given miraculous water through Moses striking a rock with his rod. The Psalmist says that rivers of water gushed from the rock (Ex 17:5-6; Psa 78:15).
- They miraculously defeated the armies of Amalek while Moses hands were upheld by Aaron and Hur (Ex 17:10-13).
- The people saw Sinai when God came down on it. ". . . there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp trembled.” The mountain was “altogether on a smoke , and the whole mountain “quaked greatly” (Ex 19:16).

- At Sinai, the people “saw the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the noise of the trumpet, and the mountain smoking: and when the people saw it, they removed, and stood afar off. And they said unto Moses, Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die” (Ex 20:18-19).

- Moses had told the people all of the judgments of the Lord, and the people had responded, “All the words which the Lord hath said, we will do” (Ex 24:3).

- Moses read the book of the covenant to the people, and sprinkled both the book and the people with sanctifying blood (Ex 24:7-8).

- The nobles of Israel “saw God” (Ex 24:11).

- They saw a cloud of Divine glory upon Mount Sinai, that was “like devouring fire,” witnessing the event for seven days (Ex 25:16-17).

Within less than twelve weeks, Israel had seen all of these things, and possibly more. Yet all of this has been forgotten, they have determined to return to Egypt, and now they demand that gods be made that can be carried before them.

Application

Do you wonder at the capacity of the flesh to forget, blaspheme, and love and cling to the world? Woe to that person who remains naive about the human capacity to sin after reading the account of Israel! How must it sound to heavenly hosts when men banter back and forth about human freedom, volitional capacities, and the likes. It is as though men have never read the record of what “happened” to the Israelites for examples, and has been written for our admonition (12 Cor 10:11).

AS FOR THIS MOSES

“ . . . for as for this Moses, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.” Other versions read, “ we do not know what has become of him ,” NKJV “we do not know what happened to him ,” NASB “we have no idea what has become of him,” BBE and “we have no knowledge of what has happened to him,” AMPLIFIED

Moses had been absent from them for forty days (Ex 24:18). During that time he had received all of the details for the construction of the tabernacle and all of its furnishings (Ex 25:1-27:21). He had received all of the detailed instructions concerning the high priest, priests, their garments, how to make them, who was going to make them, how they were to be set apart, and what they would do (Ex 28:1-29:46). Instructions concerning making the remaining furniture, anointing oil, oil for the lamp, and incense were given (Ex 30:1-38). The Lord told Moses He had endowed Bezaleel and Aholiab with special wisdom required for the construction of the tabernacle, together with the various oils and incense associated with the tabernacle service (Ex 31:1-17). At the conclusion of the forty days and forty nights, the Lord gave Moses two tables of stone on which were written the words of the covenant – and they were written “with the finger of God” (Ex 31:18).

Before Moses went up into the mountain, he had told the elders what he was going to do, instructing them to wait for him. He added, “and, behold, Aaron and Hur are with you: if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them” (Ex 24:14). However, now the people say they do not know what has become of Moses. He has been gone for over a month, it is true. However, the events that attended their arrival at Sinai were sufficient to have caused them to be sober, and to wait in patience. But they did not do so, for they did not have a heart for waiting for a word from the Lord.

Application

Here is another occasion that confirms that each person “must be born again” (John 3:7). There should be no doubt in the mind of anyone concerning the necessity of a new heart and a new spirit. I doubt that it is possible for any people to endure more sensual exposure to the presence of the Lord. Daniel fainted and lost all of his strength upon receiving a word from an angel (Dan 8:27). It was not attended by a mountain on fire, the quaking of the earth, lightning, thundering, and the likes. No storm or tempest was present as at Sinai.

If it were possible to frighten people into a state of prolonged sobriety, surely Israel’s experience would have confirmed its possibility. If men can be brought to a sound mind by heaping benefits – miraculous benefits – upon them, surely it will be true with Israel. There have never before nor since been miracles of the magnitude of those wrought by the hand of Moses, and experienced at Sinai. Yet, they had no power to alter the thoughts of the people, and were not intended to do so.

Stephen will show this to be the case with great spiritual power and wisdom. He himself will become an oracle of God, with precise and concise sayings flowing out from his mouth. They will also accomplish something

THEY MADE A CALF, SACRIFICED TO IT, AND REJOICED IN IT

“ 41 And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands.”

We come now to one of the most sorrowful passages in Scripture. It seems to me that, because of the number of the people involved, and complete irrationality of their conduct, this is only eclipsed by the death of the Lord Jesus Christ. There is such foolishness associated with this entire event that it the consideration of it staggers the mind. It confirms what can happen when unbelief and stubbornness are married, and a hard heart rules the human personality.

THEY MADE A CALF

“And they made a calf in those days . . .” Other versions read, “ At that time they made a calf,” NASB “That was the time they made an idol in the form of a calf,” NIV “ they made the image of a young ox in those day,” BBE “they made the statue of a calf,” NJB and “In those days they even made a calf.” ISV

The record of this horrendous event is found in Exodus 32:2-8. Stephen has pointed out that the people made this request of Aaron, which Exodus 32:1 records. Aaron responded in a peculiar way to their request. “And Aaron said unto them, Break off the golden earrings, which are in the ears of your wives, of your sons, and of your daughters, and bring them unto me” (Ex 32:2). It has been suggested that Aaron did not desire to go along with their request, and therefore told them to give up something they might be hesitant to do. In deference to Aaron, I am inclined to agree with this, even though it by no means excuses what he did. The reason it seems right to take this view is that Stephen, speaking while filled with the Holy Spirit, affirms that the people made the calf, thereby imputing the case to them, and not to Aaron. The Psalmist makes the same observation in Psalm 106:19-20. Nehemiah also affirmed this view of things in Nehemiah 9:18, thus confirming that this is heaven’s view of the situation. It is similar to the time Moses struck the rock instead of speaking to it, because he became incensed with the people, and therefore acted in unbelief. It is said of that occasion, “They angered him also at the waters of strife, so that it went ill with Moses for their sakes ” (Psa 106:32).

Whereas Stephen says the people made the calf, the Exodus record, written by Moses, says that Aaron made it. After the people broke off their earrings and gave them to Aaron, “he received them at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf :” (Ex 32:4). After fashioning it, Aaron further “built an altar before it; and Aaron made proclamation, and said, To morrow is a feast to the LORD” (Ex 32:5). The desire belonged to Israel, the work was done by Aaron. He never would have made the calf, except for the people, who apparently pressured him to do it. However, as will be confirmed, he was wrong in doing it, even though the people originated the idea.

The Scriptures provide us with a holy assessment of this occasion.

- God said of the event: They “have corrupted themselves . . . they have turned aside quickly out of the way . . . I have seen this people, and behold, it is a stiffnecked people ” (Ex 32:8-9; Deut 9:12-13).
- Moses said to Israel, “I looked, and, behold, ye had sinned against the Lord ” (Deut 9:16).
- Nehemiah said, “they had made them a molten calf . . . and had wrought great provocations ” (Neh 9:18).
- The Psalmist said, “Thus they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass. They forgot God their Savior , which had done great things in Egypt” (Psa 106:20-21).

Application

The parallel to this event that is being experienced in our day was declared by Paul. It is a greater sin, because it is being committed in a greater light. “For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears ” (2 Tim 4:3). That is a precise equivalent to Israel saying to Aaron, “Up, make us gods!”

Additional Observation

You may recall that, while Moses was in the mount, God told him precisely what the people had done (Ex 32:7-8). Upon going down the mountain, Moses “saw the calf, and the dancing,” and his anger “waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hand, and brake them beneath the mount.” He then “took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it into powder, and strowed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink it.” Then, turning his attention to his older brother Aaron he said, “What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought so great a sin upon them?” (Ex 32:21). Aaron replied, pointing out that Moses well knew the kind of people they were, “prone to evil.” NASB He then recounted how the people had asked him to make them gods, for they did not know what had happened to Moses. After telling Moses that he made them break off their gold and give it to him, he added, “So they gave it me: then I cast it into the fire, and there came out this calf ” (Ex 32:22-24).

It appears from the text in Exodus 32, that Moses turned his attention away from Aaron. It was not until forty years later that Moses brought this incident up to another generation. He revealed something that was only hinted at before. In Exodus 32:35 we read, “And the LORD plagued the people, because they made the calf, which Aaron made ” (Ex 32:35). It appears clear, then, that Aaron was associated with the sin in the mind of God. Now, at one hundred and twenty years of age, Moses makes known something that apparently was not known before, for it occurred in a time of privacy between the Lord and Moses. “And the LORD was very angry with Aaron to have destroyed him: and I prayed for Aaron also the same time ” (Deu 9:20). Thus, God was justified in all of His sayings!

THEY OFFERED SACRIFICED UNTO THE IDOL

“ . . . and offered sacrifice unto the idol . . .” Other versions read, “offered sacrifices to the idol ,” NKJV “brought a sacrifice to the idol,” NASB “made an offering to it,” BBE and “offered a sacrifice to that false god.” GWN

Actually, a lot of this kind of thing takes place today, with men celebrating their own achievements with special gatherings and feasts. While such things are not necessarily wrong, they represent an area of human indulgence that is slanted toward the pride of life.

What a lamentable text to read! Sin does have the tendency of getting worse and worse. That is the nature of iniquity. The record in Exodus reads, “And they rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt offerings, and brought peace offerings” (Ex 32:6). In order to do this, the Psalmist said they had to “change THEIR glory into the similitude of an ox,” and forget “God their Savior, which had done great things in Egypt” (Psa 106:20). What a day of infamy it was!

THEY REJOICED IN THE WORK OF THEIR HANDS

“ . . . and rejoiced in the works of their own hands.” Other versions read, “held a celebration in honor of what their hands had made,” NIV “reveled in the works of their hands,” NRSV “had joy in the work of their hands,” BBE “were celebrating what their hands had made,” CSB “delighted in what they had made,” GWN “and were voluptuous with the work of their hands,” MRD “They were perfectly happy with something they had made for themselves,” NJB “celebrated over this thing they had made,” NLT “kept rejoicing in the gods which their own hands had made,” WEYMOUTH and “made merry and exulted in the work of their [own] hands.” AMPLIFIED

The Exodus record says the people “sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play ” (Ex 32:6). Paul also refers to this in First Corinthians: “Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them; as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play ” (1 Cor 10:7).

The word “play” is an especially reprehensible one. It does not refer to playing games, as ordinarily perceived. It refers to the kind of raucous laughter that is associated with drunkenness and sensuality. It is generally understood to have been associated with idolatrous feasts in which the lusts of the people were especially indulged. At the time this took place, Moses had observed that the people were “naked, for Aaron had made them naked unto their shame among their enemies” (Ex 32:25). The word naked here refers to a display in which they cast off all restraint, engaging in revelry and debauchery.

Here Stephen accounts for their indulgent manner by saying they were rejoicing in the work of their own hands. This is his summation of what Exodus refers to as the worship of the golden calf (Ex 32:8), when they brought burnt offerings and peace offerings to the calf , and then rose up to play (Ex 32:6). This was certainly a far cry from the shouts of rejoicing that had taken place a few weeks earlier on the banks of the Red Sea.

In scripture, rejoicing in the works of ones hands is associated with idolatry. Isaiah wrote, “Their land also is full of idols; they worship the work of their own hands, that which their own fingers have made” (Isa 2:8). Actually, a lot of this kind of thing takes place today, with men celebrating their own achievements with special gatherings and feasts. While such things are not necessarily wrong, they represent an area of human indulgence that is slanted toward the pride of life. They also tend to promote vanity. Should a person choose to indulge in such things, it ought to be done with sobriety, wisdom, and in a state of unusual spiritual alertness.

A Similar Thing Today

In my judgment, something similar to making other gods is occurring in our day. Some within the professing church have hewed them out intellectual gods that will do what they desire. They have then heaped to themselves teachers who will speak of these gods – gods of health, wealth, worldly success, etc. They are gods that allow them to maintain their perverse desires, and to be at home in this present evil world, even though it is passing away. Because of the superiority of the New Covenant, the abundance of truth that has been revealed, together with the reality of regeneration and reconciliation, this tendency is even more reprehensible than the sin of Israel.

GOD GAVE THEM UP TO WORSHIP THE HOST OF HEAVEN

“42 Then God turned, and gave them up to worship the host of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets, O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness?”

Stephen becomes more strong in his statements, underscoring the gravity of anyone experiencing the work of God going backward. Here is an aspect of the Divine nature that is not being presented with much clarity in our time. We do well to give due heed to it.

GOD TURNED

“Then God turned . . .” Other versions read, “God turned away,” NASB “God was turned from them,” BBE “God turned away from them,” CSB “God turned Himself away,” GENEVA and “God turned against them.” IE

Here it is important to remember that we are considering a special people.

- They were a people upon whom God had set His love (Deut 7:7a).
- They were a chosen people (Deut 7:6a).
- They were a special people unto God above all people that were upon the face of the earth (Deut 7:6b; 14:2).
- They were a covenanted people (Ex 6:4).
- They were a delivered people (Ex 18:8).
- They were a saved people (Deut 33:29).

Yet, Stephen declares that God “turned” – that is turned away from them, and against them. His posture toward them was changed, and it was not for the better. Instead of being for them, He was now opposed to them. The word “turned” has a lexical meaning of, “turn the back to one, used of one who no longer cares for another,” THAYER It is similar to God repenting that He had made man (Gen 6:6). For some, this is too difficult to consider, but this should not be the case. It is the very nature of God that compels Him to react in this manner. He loves righteousness and hates iniquity. Because of this, He can no more ignore an ungodly person than He can a godly one. God is not indifferent to the state in which men remain. When they choose to abandon Him, change His glory, and give to another what rightfully belongs to Him, He cannot look favorably upon the person. To be sure, He is longsuffering, yet his Spirit will not always strive with man (Gen 6:3), and our text is a case in point.

GOD GAVE THEM UP TO WORSHIP THE HOST OF HEAVEN

“ . . . and gave them up to worship the host of heaven . . .” Other versions read, “delivered them up to serve the host of heaven,” NASB “gave them over to the worship of heavenly bodies,” NIV “handed them over to worship the host of heaven,” NRSV “and let them give worship to the stars of heaven,” BBE “let them worship the sun, moon, and stars,” GWN “gave them over to the worship of the heavenly bodies,” NIB “abandoned them to the worship of the army of heaven,” NJB “abandoned them to serve the stars of heaven as their gods !,” NLT “gave them up that they should worship the stars of the sky,” TNT “He stopped trying to change their hearts. They were worshipping the sun, the moon, and the stars,” IE “gave them over to worship the starry host,” WILLIAMS and “delivered them up to worship and serve the host (stars) of heaven.” AMPLIFIED

It seems to me that when certain doctrines are frequently found to be at variance with straightforward proclamations of the works of God, they ought to be zealously and instantly cast from us.

Here Stephen briefly expounds what is involved in God turning away from someone. Whatever preservation and protection that is associated with longsuffering and mercy are withdrawn from the person from whom God turns away. Such a person or people are then made the vassals of the devil in the fullest sense of the word. It ought to be evident that this does not fit into the common notion of the freedom of the will, and the unrestrained volitional capacities of men. It seems to me that when certain doctrines are frequently found to be at variance with straightforward proclamations of the works of God, they ought to be zealously and instantly cast from us. If we read that the Lord will never leave us or forsake us (Heb 13:5), the text is obviously not speaking of people like Israel as they were in our text. That saying does not apply to everyone, and the church ought not present it as though it did.

There is some question concerning the identity of “the host of heaven.” Is it referring to the heavenly, or celestial, bodies, or to spiritual powers in the domain of darkness. The expression is used both ways in the Word of God. It is used of the heavenly bodies (Deut 4:19; 17:3; Isa 34:4; Jer 8:2), and of personalities (1 Kgs 22:19; 2 Chron 18:18; Neh 9:6; Dan 8:10; Lk 2:13). It does appear as though the heavenly bodies are the point here. That kind of worship repeatedly cropped up in Israel’s history.

- Israel worshiped them (2 Kgs 17:16; 2 Kgs 23:4-5; Jer 19:13; Zeph 1:5).
- Manasseh instituted the worship of them (2 Kgs 21:3,5).

The Word of God refers to God giving people up – a most arresting consideration! This perspective conflicts sharply with much of the contemporary Christian view of the Lord.

• ISRAEL. “But My people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of Me. So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels” (Psa 81:11-12)

• ALL NATIONS. “Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways” (Acts 14:16).

• GENTILE WORLD. “Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies between themselves” (Rom 1:24).

• GENTILE WORLD. “For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections: for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature: And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompense of their error which was meet” (Rom 1:26-27).

• THOSE WHO DO NOT RECEIVE THE LOVE OF THE TRUTH. “Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness” (2 Thess 2:9-12).

The idea here is that the sacrifices that were offered “by the space of forty years in the wilderness” were not really offered to God! The Lord considered them to have been offered to other gods. The Jews did keep up the form of their religion in the wilderness, but were more noted for their departures and murmuring than for any earnest commitment to the Lord.

There is no question, therefore, about these two facts.

- There are people God has not given up, abandoned, or forsaken.
- There are people whom God has given up, forsaken, and from whom He has withdrawn.

AS IT IS WRITTEN IN THE BOOK OF THE PROPHETS

“ . . . as it is written in the book of the prophets, O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness?” Other versions read, “Did you offer Me,” NKJV “It was not to Me,” NASB “Did you bring Me,” NIV “Did ye . . . present to Me,” MRD “Was it to Me,” NLT “these sacrifices were not for Me,” IE “you didn’t offer Me,” ISV and “Did you [really] offer to Me.” AMPLIFIED

What an arresting statement! The idea here is that the sacrifices that were offered “by the space of forty years in the wilderness” were not really offered to God! The Lord considered them to have been offered to other gods. The Jews did keep up the form of their religion in the wilderness, but were more noted for their departures and murmuring than for any earnest commitment to the Lord.

Moses also referred to this time in the wilderness, and with words that were very pointed and convicting. “He made him ride on the high places of the earth, that he might eat the increase of the fields; and he made him to suck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock; butter of kine, and milk of sheep, with fat of lambs, and rams of the breed of Bashan, and goats, with the fat of kidneys of wheat; and thou didst drink the pure blood of the grape. But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked: thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatness; then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation. They provoked Him to jealousy with strange gods, with abominations provoked they him to anger. They sacrificed unto devils, not to God; to gods whom they knew not, to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not ” (Deut 32:13-17).

Stephen quotes from Amos 5:25: “Have ye offered unto me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel?” (Amos 5:25). The idea is that God did not receive their sacrifices, for their hearts were in the wrong place.

Amos further testifies to this: “ I hate, I despise your feast days, and I will not smell in your solemn assemblies . Though ye offer me burnt offerings and your meat offerings, I will not accept them: neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts . Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs; for I will not hear the melody of thy viols ” (Amos 5:21-23). And again, “The Lord GOD hath sworn by himself, saith the LORD the God of hosts, I abhor the excellency of Jacob, and hate his palaces : therefore will I deliver up the city with all that is therein” (Amos 6:8). In other words, in the days of Amos, hundreds of years after Israel’s wandering in the wilderness, the people had restored the dreadful spirit that Israel had in the wilderness – even after all of the holy prophets had ministered regularly to them.

Isaiah also chides the people for their sins, telling them they were not welcome in the courts of the Lord. “To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto Me? saith the LORD: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats. When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations ; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting” (Isa 1:11-13).

Jeremiah joins in the diatribe against a people whose hearts were defiled. “To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country? your burnt offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto Me ” (Jer 6:20).

Hosea also joins in the rebuke of such people. “They sacrifice flesh for the sacrifices of Mine offerings, and eat it; but the LORD accepteth them not ; now will He remember their iniquity, and visit their sins: they shall return to Egypt” (Hosea 8:13).

Well, it is to be admitted that this is largely a strange God to this present generation – probably just as strange as He was to the Jewish council before whom Stephen is speaking. However, this is the true God, and we are to be acquainted with Him. It is His mind to which we are being exposed. Should a people – any people – chose to ignore God, he will react to that rejection.

CONCLUSION

Stephen has spoken with keen insight, and with power as well. God, by means of the Holy Spirit, is speaking through Stephen, delivering a scathing message to those who not only rejected and crucified His Son, but have also opposed His Apostles, and now another messenger who is filled with the Spirit, faith, and wisdom. In this passage we see that discerning messages address the condition of the people, for that is one of the fundamental objectives of preaching. I am careful to distinguish preaching in view of the condition of the people as compared with preaching to meet the needs of the people. The latter objective is to be questioned. It smacks more of philosophy and human diagnosis than of a very real spiritual condition. The salvation of God is so ordered that those who participate in it are enabled to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling. The notion of someone else working out your salvation is really foreign to the objectives God has revealed.

A modern preacher might very well have stood before that Jewish council and talked about things that had nothing to do with their hard and calloused heart. Speaking to such a crowd is not a work for which every person is suited, to be sure. Yet, it is one that has to be addressed – even if it is at the expense of personal jeopardy. And why is this so? Simply because it is God that is working all in all, and that working is always by means of the truth, and in strict accord with His eternal purpose.

Stephen will continue his defense, increasing the intensity and pointedness of his message. What he is doing is expounding the reason for the Jew’s rejection of the Gospel – particularly among their leaders. It is because they have rejected the Christ of the Gospel. Their rejection is compounded by the fact that Jesus was sent specifically to them. It is made more complex by the fact that Moses and the Prophets testified of the Jesus that Stephen has been preaching.

STEPHEN'S DEFENSE, #6

“ 7:43 Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worship them: and I will carry you away beyond Babylon. 44 Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he had appointed, speaking unto Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen. 45 Which also our fathers that came after brought in with Jesus into the possession of the Gentiles, whom God drave out before the face of our fathers, unto the days of David; 46 Who found favor before God, and desired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob. 47 But Solomon built him an house. 48 Howbeit the most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet, 49 Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool: what house will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest? 50 Hath not my hand made all these things? 51 Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye. 52 Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? and they have slain them which showed before of the coming of the Just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers: 53 Who have received the law by the disposition of angels, and have not kept it. ” (Acts 7:43-53)

INTRODUCTION

Stephen escalates his charges against the Jews, pointing out that they continued their idolatrous practices following their calf-worshipping debacle at Sinai – one in which three thousand were slain by the Lord (Ex 32:28). That compares with the three thousand that were quickened – made alive from death in trespasses and sins – on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:41). That was a most vivid enactment of the nature of the Old Covenant, which is termed as “the ministration of death” (2 Cor 3:7). Elsewhere, Paul affirmed that sin was awakened by the Law, driving inherent lusts to the surface where they are expressed. How insightfully he states the case, doing so from the illuminated side of the cross: “For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. And the commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me” (Rom 7:9-11). Thus it was proved to be true, “the strength of sin is the Law” (1 Cor 15:56). That is, the holy Law of God gives strength to sin because of man’s very real corruption. There is such a variance between God and the natural man, that the good, just, holy, and spiritual Law of God awakens sin (Rom 7:12,14). It forces the contradiction of the human nature into the open by demanding that human conduct conform to the nature of God. This is the manner in which it “brings” (not beckons) us to Christ, that we might be “justified by faith” (Gal 3:24-25).

THERE IS NO EXCUSE FOR SIN

Accounting for sin is not offering an excuse for it. The reason the Law points out sin is not to provide men with a handy alibi for its presence. Rather, the law is showing that God is just in condemning sin, and thrusting the sinner from His presence. It also provides insight into why He provided a Redeemer – something that humanity was not able to do. Well did the Lord speak through the prophet Isaiah: “And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore Mine own arm brought salvation unto Me; and my fury, it upheld Me” (Isa 63:5). Note, God’s arm did not bring salvation to men, but to Himself. That is, He provided a means through which His own righteous character could be satisfied, and thus mercy be extended to fallen humanity.

Notwithstanding this ministry of the Law, and the gracious provision of redemption, no excuse for sin is acceptable with God – i.e., like men saying the devil made them sin, or they could not help it. Flesh will rationalize in this way, citing all of the imagined reasons why sin cannot be helped. Some of them include the following.

- The devil is too strong.
- The flesh is too weak.
- I was born this way.
- Unless the Lord helps me, I cannot stop sinning.
- A generational curse is upon me.

Notwithstanding this ministry of the Law, and the gracious provision of redemption, no excuse for sin is acceptable with God – i.e., like men saying the devil made them sin, or they could not help it.

To confirm the unacceptable nature of these alibis, consider how David spoke when he was convicted of sin. He sighted reasons, but they were not excuses. Rather, they shed light on his dreadful condition, and why he needed mercy from the Lord. His confession is found in Psalm 51:5. “Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me” (Psa 51:5). This was a confession, not an excuse.

“I Was Shapen in Iniquity”

That is, from his very birth, he had a propensity to sin, and now he saw it. Other versions read as follows.

- “I was brought forth in iniquity.” NKJV

It is quite obvious that David’s statement is marked with such clarity that even the translators could not avoid what he was saying.

“In Sin Did My Mother Conceive Me”

That is, my mother was a sinner, and therefore, by nature, so am I, for “Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one” (Job 14:4). Other versions read as follows.

I have taken the time to provide these various translations to confirm their consistency. While this is not of itself proof of the meaning of the text, there is something it does confirm. The intellectual message of the text is quite clear, and no textual analyst has even questioned its meaning.

The truth of the matter is that sin is integral to the basic human nature. The capacity to sin is in every person who is in Adam's lineage. – and that is what constitutes them “sinners.” This is expressly stated in apostolic doctrine. “by one man's disobedience many were made sinners ” (Rom 5:19). From the perspective of the fifty-first Psalm, and from Romans 5:19, men are not sinners because they commit sin, but they commit sin because they are sinners. That is precisely what David confessed.

This circumstance does not make sin any less repulsive or more tolerable to God. It does not lessen guilt, as both the tone and the words of the 51ST Psalm confirm. Admittedly, this is a spiritual technicality – but so is salvation. In fact, that is the point made in the fifth chapter of Romans. If the reason for the presence of sin somehow reduces its nature, then the reason for salvation correspondingly reduces its magnitude.

The fact of the matter is that both sin and righteousness are traced to one man – one source.

Through a single act – the eating of a piece of forbidden fruit – sin and death entered the world, and death was passed upon all men. Judgment was passed unto condemnation, and all men were made sinners. That is the revealed situation.

These things were known among early believers because they were proclaimed and expounded. The flawed doctrines of professing Christian men had not yet been developed, although they would begin to surface early. However, during the time of our text, the condition of men and their absolute need for salvation was generally known among believers.

Prior to the Giving of the Law

Even prior to the giving of the Law, the basic sinfulness of man was generally known among those who worshiped God. Following the flood, God Himself observed, “the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth ” (Gen 8:21). Although they did not know how to handle such knowledge, Job's friends also knew of man's inherent corruption. “Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one . . . How much more abominable and filthy is man, which drinketh iniquity like water ?” (Job 14:4; 15:16). The fact that these texts are contained in Scripture without any disclaimer confirms their validity.

After the Giving of the Law

Following the giving of the Law, Solomon observed, “there is no man which sinneth not” (2 Chron 6:36). David knew this also: “They are all gone aside, they are all together become filthy: there is none that doeth good, no, not one” (Psa 14:3). Jeremiah testified to the unchangeable nature of men. “Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil” (Jer 13:23). And again he said, “The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?” (Jer 17:9). Hosea traced the transgression of the covenanted people to the fact that they were men – the progeny of Adam. “But they like men have transgressed the covenant: there have they dealt treacherously against me” (Hosea 6:7). The prophet Micah observed, “The good man is perished out of the earth: and there is none upright among men” (Micah 7:2). These will suffice to confirm that the fact of man's natural inclination to sin was not questioned by early believers.

THE POINT OF THIS

The point of this is to see that Stephen was preaching with a grasp of the situation. Yet, he makes clear that this did not relieve men of the responsibility of their sin. None of them claim, as some sinners do today, “I was born this way.” David said he was born with a corrupt nature also, yet he did not use that circumstance to excuse what he had done. Instead, in the fifty-first Psalm, he made certain requests of God that indicated he was not content with his situation.

- “Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean” (7a).
- “Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow” (7b).
- “Make me to hear joy and gladness” (8)
- “Hide Thy face from my sins” (9a).
- “Blot out mine iniquities” (9b).
- “Create in my a clean heart, O God” (10a).
- “Renew a right spirit with me ” (10b).
- “Cast me not away from Thy presence” (11a).
- “Take not Thy Holy Spirit from me” 11b).
- “ Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation” (12a).
- “Uphold me with Thy free Spirit” (12b).

Stephen knows all of this, and is preaching with that in mind. He will confirm to them that there was no essential difference between them and their fathers who fell in the wilderness. He will not present this as excusing what they are doing. He will rather point out that their obstinance has compounded their situation.

All of this was before Jesus took away the sin of the world. It was before He crushed the serpent’s head, spoiled principalities and powers, and led captivity captive. It was before men could be born again, or could be raised up and made to sit together with Christ in the heavenly places. And what can said of those who continue in sin today? How much weight can be assigned to any claim of being unable to stop, or incapable of resisting powerful temptations? What of those who trace their sin to their fleshly lineage, or to some chemical imbalance, or some hereditary disease? Do you not see that once sin is recognized to be what it is, men should at least come up to the level of David, who was among those who “were not made perfect without us, God having provided some better thing for us” (Heb 11:40). God did not ignore the pleas of David, nor will He stop His ears to the cries of those who long to be pure in His sight. That is just Theology 101!

THE SITUATION BEFORE STEPHEN

However, the people before whom Stephen is standing have not delivered any evidence of even being serious. They have not correlated their actions with the statement made by God after the flood. They have not associated it with the observations concerning men contained in the book of Job. They have seen no relationship of their miserable condition with that of David, crushed with the weight of guilt.

Stephen knows all of this, and is preaching with that in mind. He will confirm to them that there was no essential difference between them and their fathers who fell in the wilderness. He will not present this as excusing what they are doing. He will rather point out that their obstinance has compounded their situation. They have absolutely no excuse for their condition.

Now Stephen will show that even though God had provided in the Tabernacle a visible means of identity with Himself, yet they fashioned idols, and even worshiped heavenly bodies. They sought for other visible associations with Deity. Being moved by the Spirit, Stephen is speaking in strict accord with the heavenly assessment of the people. He is also addressing them in view of their own hearts and wicked propensities. Judging from the manner in which Stephen concludes, the countenance of his audience must have been in perfect accord with their hearts. Their condition was absolutely inexcusable. They had been privy to the ministry of John the Baptist, the Lord Jesus Himself, the Apostles, and now Stephen. Yet they remained in the grip of unbelief. This confirms the nature of unbelief, and the influence it exerts upon both heart and mind. It cannot be dignified by assigning intellectual and philosophical terms to it. There is no extent to which unbelief will not go to suppress the truth and justify self. It is the essence of all sin, as is confirmed in the rejection of Christ.

THEY TOOK UP THE TABERNACLE OF MOLOCH AND THE STAR OF REMPHAN

“ 7:43 Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worship them: and I will carry you away beyond Babylon.”

Stephen continues to quote from the book of Amos, confirming the idolatrous tendencies of Israel, even though God had gone to great length to give them visible means that could be associated with His Presence. Not only did they have a seeable pillar of cloud by day, and a perceptible pillar of fire by night, they also had the Tabernacle, erected in the middle of their camp, and upon which the glory of God rested.

THEY TOOK UP

“Yea, ye took up . . .” Other versions read, “ took along,” NASB “ lifted up,” NIV “ carried ,” BBE “ took unto you,” DARBY “ carried along ,” GWN “ also took along,” NAB “carried,” NJB “your real interest was in,” LIVING “you even took along,” ISV “you offered Me ,” WILLIAMS and “No! You took.” AMPLIFIED

God had clearly demonstrated that He was among the Israelites, leaving no question about it. It was confirmed with all manner of evidence.

- They came out of $Egypt by His mighty hand, which deliverance was attended by ten unparalleled signs, and the favor of all the Egyptians.
- On the first leg of their journey, en route to Sinai, “ the LORD went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light; to go by day and night” (Ex 3:21). He faithfully kept those visible signs of leadership never taking them away (Ex 3:22).
- He brought them through the Red Sea on dry ground – all of them, their children, their flocks, and their possessions (Ex 14:22).
- He fought for them, overthrowing the Egyptians army in the Red Sea, then washing their carcasses up on the shore so Israel could see them (Ex 14:28,30-31).
- He provided manna for them – miraculous bread that was “light” and adapted for their journey (Ex 16:15-18).
- He provided them quails for meat in the evening (Ex 16:13; Psa 105:40).
- The Lord gave them water from a rock, that gushed out like a river (Ex 17:6; Psa 78:15-16).
- Although they were not fighting men, He enabled Israel to miraculously overcome the army of Amalek (Ex 13:17; 17:8-13).

Yet, this was not enough for them. They carried among with them things related to other god’s, ignoring all of the evidence of Divine sufficiency that had been given to them.

THE TABERNACLE OF MOLOCH

“ . . . the tabernacle of Moloch . . .” Other versions read, “the shrine of Molech,” NIV “the tent of Molech,” NRSV “ Moloch’s tent ,” WEYMOUTH and “the tent (the portable temple) of Moloch.” AMPLIFIED

Moloch, or Molech, is known as the fire god. This false god was referred to as “the abomination of the Ammonites”

(1 Kgs 11:7). This idol had the head of an ox and the body of a man. Molech was especially noted because the worshipers of it offered their children in sacrifice to it. Early in His dealings with Israel, God warned them not to have anyone among them who did this. “And thou shalt not let any of thy seed pass through the fire to Molech, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD” (Lev 18:21). This was mentioned four other times in the Levitical law (Lev 20:2,3,4,5). In his later years, because some of his wives worshiped this god, Solomon did “build an high place for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, in the hill that is before Jerusalem, and for Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon ” (1 Kgs 11:7). Manasseh offered his children to this god, causing them to pass through the fire (2 Chron 33:6). In Jeremiah’s day, the people built places for Molech, and offered their children to that false god (Jer 32:36; 7:31; 19:5-10). The Psalmist also mentions this practice, declaring that the people “sacrificed their sons and daughters to demons” NKJV (Psa 106:37). Isaiah alludes to the practice also (Isa 57:5). Ezekiel does the same (Ezek 16:20-21; 23:37).

In this text, Stephen traces these dreadful tendencies to their origin, which took place in Israel when they were in the wilderness. They carried the tabernacle of Molech with them, choosing to give that Ammonite abomination honor while seeking to maintain an association with God.

It is not clear whether they had a separate tabernacle for Molech, as well as one for God, or if they gave their hearts to Molech while maintaining the tabernacle services. I am personally inclined to the latter because of the nature of Amos’ prophecy. This is also underscored by the fact that Amos thunders to the people that God cannot bear their religious activities. “I hate, I despise your feast days, and I will not smell in your solemn assemblies. Though ye offer me burnt offerings and your meat offerings, I will not accept them: neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts. Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs; for I will not hear the melody of thy viols” (Amos 5:21-23). And again, “That chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of music, like David; that drink wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments: but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph” (Amos 6:5-6).

If it is correct that Amos is upbraiding the people for having hearts filled with idolatry, yet continuing to go through the mechanics of religion, then God is not only saying He will not receive their service. He is also declaring that what they were doing was, in fact, toward Molech, and thus was considered to be nothing more than idolatrous practices. All of this was much like the defection that took place at the base of Mount Sinai when they credited the golden calf with bringing them out of Egypt.

The Parallel of Our Time

There is a remarkable parallel to Israel’s idolatrous manners that is happening in our own time. Allow me to cite just one example. Today music has become an American idol. One can scarcely go for a single hour without hearing a sacrifice of corrupt music being offered to the god of music. The world’s music has even been brought into the church, just as Israel brought it into the Temple service during Amos’ time. There is a claim that it is being offered to God Himself, but God is not in all of their thoughts, and it is not likely that He Himself is the real Object of their professed praise. The fact that these people have little appetite for the things of God, are Scripturally illiterate, and are not at all noted for being in way godly, confirms that their worship is not real. For the most part, if not altogether, they have carried the tabernacle of Molech into the house of God. Like the idol Molech, this god is having the children sacrificed to it.

If this appears to be a bit strong, consider how the prophecy of Amos must have appeared in his day – or Stephen’s recounting of it in his day. The act of trying to adapt a purely man-made religion to some form of sanctioned worship or service is an exercise in vanity. Jesus made this crystal clear when He said, “But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men” (Matt 15:9).

God has never allowed such a practice, and He does not today. In the New Covenant men are not allowed to bring their old ways into the newness of life. This became apparent in the ministry of Jesus. He forced the issue of hypocrisy to the surface, not allowing it to remain in the background under the mantel of religious professionalism. Stephen, being filled with the Spirit of Christ, will not allow it either. He brings up Amos’ prophecy to confirm that reprehensible religious was still extant in the Jewish community.

THE STAR OF YOUR GOD REMPHAM

“ . . . and the star of your god Remphan . . .” Other versions read, “the star of the god Rompha,” NASB “the star of your god Rephan,” NIV “the star of your god Reifan,” CJB “the star of your god Rempham,” DOUAY “the star god Kaiway,” LIVING and “the star-symbol of the god Rempha.” MONTGOMERY

Of this star Amos said, “But ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun your images, the star of your god, which ye made to yourselves ” (Amos 5:26). Although I have researched this text extensively, I am not at all satisfied with the level of understanding I have obtained. I will therefore draw some general conclusions, and then give what I feel to be the crux of Stephen’s reference to the words of Amos.

In general, the names of the idols of reference purport to refer to Saturn, McCLINTOK-STRONG Stephen refers to Remphan EGYPTIAN (Acts 7:43), also called Rephan NIV (Acts 7:43), and Chiun HEBREW (Amos 5:26). It appears that this god was also related to Moloch. In addition, Scriptures relate this with Baal, who appears to have been a chief god, with which these others were associated (Jer 32:35). All of this refers to “the host of heaven” to which God had given Israel up – to worship and serve them (Acts 7:42).

The crux of the matter is that Israel’s wickedness is seen in the fact that even though God had provided them visible and sanctioned means assuring them of His presence, they deliberately chose to ignore them and adapt to the religion of the heathen.

IMAGES YOU MADE

“ . . . figures which ye made to worship them . . .” Other versions read, “images you made to worship,” NKJV “the idols you made to worship,” NIV “the forms which ye made to do homage to them,” DARBY “the statues you made for yourselves to worship,” GWN and “and in all the images you made.” LIVING

It appears these idols were not large and imposing figures, like the golden calf. Notwithstanding, the Israelites did honor them, and even made images of them, which they apparently brought out of Egypt with them. Joshua alludes to the gods the people served in Egypt. He called upon them to make a decision on who they were going to serve. “Now therefore fear the LORD, and serve him in sincerity and in truth: and put away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt ; and serve ye the LORD. And if it seem evil unto you to serve the LORD, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the LORD” (Josh 24:14-15).

Ezekiel also refers to this idolatry. “Then said I unto them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt: I am the LORD your God. But they rebelled against me, and would not hearken unto me: they did not every man cast away the abominations of their eyes, neither did they forsake the idols of Egypt : then I said, I will pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt” (Ezek 20:7-8).

There is also the possibility that the mixed multitude that came out of Egypt with Israel (Ex 12:38) promoted these gods. These were the people who started the murmuring over having only manna to eat. “And the mixed multitude that was among them fell a lusting : and the children of Israel also wept again, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat? We remember the fish, which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic: but now our soul is dried away: there is nothing at all, beside this manna, before our eyes” (Num 11:4-6).

If it is true that this mixed multitude in any way contributed to this idolatry, it shows the extreme danger of not completely coming out from defiling influences, and being separate. This, of course, is something that is required in Christ Jesus for God to even receive us (2 Cor 6:17-18).

THE POINT STEPHEN IS MAKING

The point Stephen is making is that the generation standing before him was no different than their fathers. They had maintained the formalities of their revealed religion, yet really were not honoring the Lord. While they had not made images, they had erected an intellectual facsimile of God that reflected their own perceptions, while ignoring the truth of God. As I have already mentioned, today the same circumstance exists in the Christian community. Ornate buildings, social programs, entertainment, music of the world, etc. are being carried about and given the honor that is due to God alone.

I WILL CARRY YOU AWAY BEYOND BABYLON

“ . . . and I will carry you away beyond Babylon.” Other versions read, “I also will remove you beyond Babylon,” NASB “Therefore, I will send you into exile beyond Babylon,” NIV “I will carry you away beyond Babylon,” ASV “ I will take you away , farther than Babylon,” BBE “So I will deport you beyond Babylon!” CSB “I will transport you beyond Babylon,” DARBY “I am about to drive you into captivity beyond Babylon,” NJB “I will remove your dwelling beyond Babylon,” YLT and “I will remove you [carrying you away into exile] beyond Babylon,” AMPLIFIED

Stephen is still quoting from Amos, where it is written, “Therefore will I cause you to go into captivity beyond Damascus, saith the LORD, whose name is The God of hosts” (Amos 5:27).

Amos prophesied before the Babylonian captivity, during the reign of Uzziah, king of Judah, and Jeroboam king of Israel (Amos 1:1). He prophesied that God would carry the people beyond Damascus, which had particular regard to the captivity and dispersion of Israel (2 Kgs 15:29; 17:6). Stephen refers to Babylon, which applied specifically to Judah, who was carried to the remote regions of the Chaldean empire.

The thought delivered by this prophecy was that the gods in whom they were trusting could not stop their captivity, even though the real God told them it was coming – challenging them to do try and stop it.

Here we see the righteous judgment of God, First, He gives them over to their own desires, so that they cannot help but do them. Then, He judges them for doing what He allowed them to do. He did the same with the Gentile world, and He will do the same with spiritual Babylon as well. Men do well give heed to the apostolic word: “Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than He?” (1 Cor 10:22). That is the extended exposition of the word delivered to Israel when they stood on the border of the promised land: “Ye shall not tempt the Lord your God” (Deut 6:16). This was a word that Jesus delivered to the devil when he sought to move Jesus to act rashly (Matt 4:7).

Now, as Stephen stands before this hard-hearted audience, he will remind them that although their history had been written with an iron pen, yet they had learned nothing from it. They were using the Temple to carry out their own will, like Israel used the tabernacle to carry out their corrupted wills. The words of John the Baptist, the Lord Jesus Himself, the apostles, and now Stephen, had made them ever more calloused. In Stephen the prophecy of Isaiah will again be fulfilled: “But the word of the LORD was unto them precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken ” (Isa 28:13). This is the Divine way of bringing a collapse to corrupt religion, and is most profitable to ponder. It is the unrelenting declaring of the truth of God.

THEY BROUGHT IT INTO THEIR POSSESSION

“ 45 Which also our fathers that came after brought in with Jesus into the possession of the Gentiles, whom God drove out before the face of our fathers.”

Stephen now addresses the period after the Israelites’ sojourn in the wilderness. This is after an entire generation had died off in the wilderness because of unbelief (Num 14:23; 26:65; 1 Cor 10:5; Heb 3:17-18).

OUR FATHERS BROUGHT IT IN

“Which also our fathers that came after brought in with Jesus into the possession of the Gentiles . . .” Other versions read, “which our fathers, having received it in turn, also brought with Joshua,” NKJV “Having received the tabernacle, our fathers under Joshua brought it in with them,” NIV “in their turn, took with them when, with Joshua, they came into the heritage,” BBE “this same tabernacle, our fathers, with Joshua, actually brought into the land which God gave to them,” MRD “Years later, when Joshua led the battles against the Gentile nations, this Tabernacle was taken with them into their new territory,” LIVING “That Tent was bequeathed to the next generation of our forefathers . Under Joshua they brought it with them when they were taking possession of the land,” WEYMOUTH “Our forefathers in turn brought it [this tent of witness] in [with them into the land] with Joshua when they dispossessed the nations,” AMPLIFIED and “This Tabernacle was handed down to our forefathers, and they brought it here when the Gentiles were defeated under Joshua.” PHILLIPS

When they entered into Canaan, Israel carried the chief article of furniture – the ark of the covenant – before them (Josh 3:11-14).

The record of setting up the Tabernacle is provided, having taken place in Shiloh, when the people were gathered together. “And the whole congregation of the children of Israel assembled together at Shiloh, and set up the tabernacle of the congregation there. And the land was subdued before them” (Josh 18:1).

WITH JESUS

This is a reference to Joshua, which is “Jesus” in the Hebrew form. In the King James Bible, there are two references to Joshua in which he is called “Jesus” (Acts 7:45; Heb 4:8). Although the other versions use “Joshua,” the term “Jesus” is technically correct, being translated from the Greek word Vihsou/ (ie-sous), which is the identical word used for our Lord “Jesus.” The name means “Jehovah is salvation,” “Savior,” and “deliverer” – and Joshua is a type of Jesus as a Deliverer, or Savior.

GOD DROVE THE GENTILES OUT

“ . . .whom God drove out before the face of our fathers . . .” Other versions read, “God drove out before ancestors,” NRSV “God thrust out ,” RSV “God was driving out ,” BBE “God forced out ,” GWN and “which were driven out by God .” NJB

The Scriptures associate the driving out of the heathen with the placement of the tabernacle. “And the whole congregation of the children of Israel assembled together at Shiloh, and set up the tabernacle of the congregation there. And the land was subdued before them ” (Josh 18:1). When Israel overthrew Jericho, they first compassed the city several times. Each time the priests went before them, carrying the ark of the covenant, which belonged to the Tabernacle (Josh 6:4).

After their entrance into Canaan, when the covenant was read anew to the people, their elders, officers, and judges stood on either side of the ark of the covenant as the reading took place. Joshua then read the entirety of the covenant to the people, with all of its blessings and curses (Josh 8:33-35).

All of this is involved in the people bringing the Tabernacle into the land of promise, together with everything that was associated with it. Once they arrived in Canaan, they did not dispense with the Tabernacle as though it was only intended to accompany them in their wilderness wanderings.

UNTIL THE DAYS OF DAVID

“ 46 . . . unto the days of David, 46 Who found favor before God, and desired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob.”

UNTIL THE DAYS OF DAVID

“ . . . unto the days of David. . .” Other versions read, “until the days of David,” NKJV “until the time of David,” NASB “up to the time of David,” NAB “until the time of King David,” LIVING and “till David’s time.” WEYMOUTH

It seems to me that the history of the world has often been turned on the pivot of a spiritual giant. Such were men of tender heart who saw more than the others because they wanted more. They were more devoted, and more earnest in their quest for the living God.

The Tabernacle remained as it was for around four hundred years – “ until the days of David.” During that interim, after being set up in Shiloh, there are a number of references to it. During the time of the Judges it was referred to as “the house of God” (Judges 18:31; 20:18,26,27). This is where Eli ministered, and where Hannah went each year (1 Sam 1:9; 2:14,22). It is where God first revealed Himself to young Samuel (1 Sam 3:3). In times of trouble, the people would get the ark from the Tabernacle in Shiloh in hopes of obtaining victory (1 Sam 4:3-4). This is also where David came when he ate the showbread (1 Sam 21:1-6).

In a sense, it is quite remarkable that the Tabernacle and the ark of the Covenant were maintained for so many years – particularly in view of the waywardness of the hearts of Israel. Yet, behind all of this, the Sovereign God was waiting for a man who would be precious in His sight – a man who would make a more permanent arrangement for the ark of the covenant.

A Line of Demarcation

Here, then, is a spiritual line of demarcation – a time when the things of God would be made more clear – “the days of David.” His tenderness toward the Lord, His many Psalms, as well as his exploits, would testify to a living God. It seems to me that the history of the world has often been turned on the pivot of a spiritual giant. Such were men of tender heart who saw more than the others because they wanted more. They were more devoted, and more earnest in their quest for the living God.

These are the kind of men who cannot be trained or produced by an institution. They cannot be cloned or mass produced. We know that the eyes of the Lord are ranging throughout the whole world, looking for men of this caliber. Thus it is written, “For the eyes of the LORD run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him ” (2 Chron 16:9). Such men are not, nor have they ever been, in abundance. However, when they are found, they will be used. Ezekiel revealed that had sought for a man who “stand in the gap” before the Lord “for the land” (Ezek 22:30). God is even said to have been “appalled that there was no one to intervene” NIV (Isa 59:16). Again the Lord said, “ I looked and there was none to help , and I wondered that there was none to uphold” (Isa 63:1). Once the Lord challenged Jeremiah, “Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth ; and I will pardon it” (Jer 5:1).

Whatever you may think of these passages, they cannot be conveniently pushed away. They reveal an aspect of God that must be known. However, I fear this is another spiritual morsel that has been buried by the modern church. Yet, we live in the prospect that it will again be discovered by a person who is especially tender and precious in the eyes of the Lord.

DAVID FOUND FAVOR

“ Who found favor before God . . .” Other versions read, “who enjoyed God’s favor,” NIV “found favor in the sight of God,” RSV “was pleasing to God,” BBE “ won God’s favor,” GWN “God blessed David greatly,” LIVING “God was very pleased with David,” IE “ obtained favor with God,” WEYMOUTH “found grace (favor and spiritual blessing),” AMPLIFIED and “ won the approval of God.” PHILLIPS

I want to point out that this is the man whom modern preachers and teachers are often found deprecating. Ignorantly, men refer to him as a murderer and an adulterer – although God never refers to him in that manner, even though he did commit adultery, and did set Uriah up to be killed. Still others, attempting to promote their own ideas of family life, say that David was a bad father. They say this because his children went astray. Conveniently, they forget that God’s first created “offspring” did also – to say nothing of every single one of his progeny. When Stephen spoke of David, this is what he said: he “found favor before God.” When Paul referred to him, he said God “gave testimony, and said, I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will” (Acts 13:22).

Confirming that David did find favor in the eyes of the Lord, his name is mentioned in Scripture no less than 1,085 times. Jesus is referred to as “the son of David” sixteen times. I do not know how it will fare on the day of judgment with those who have maligned David, and referred to him in such a way as to bring him down to their level. Candidly, however, I would not want to be in their shoes at that time, considering how God has spoken of him.

Keep in mind that Stephen was well acquainted with the whole life of David – and this is how he chose to speak of him. The same may be said of Paul. It seems to me that in a day that is noted for immorality and promiscuity, it is completely out of order to be emphasizing an unfortunate event in David’s life for which he repented and was forgiven. This in no way minimizes what he did. It does accent that he was a man of tender heart, precisely as God had said.

HE DESIRED TO FIND A TABERNACLE

Notice that David did not take it upon himself to do this. He asked permission to do it, laying his desire before the Lord. That is what a tender hearted man would do. What is more, the Lord commended him for his desire.

“ . . . and desired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob.” Other versions read, “asked to find a dwelling place,” NKJV “asked that he might provide a dwelling place,” NIV “asked leave to find a habitation ,” RSV “had a desire to make a holy tent ,” BBE “asked that he might provide a permanent place ,” GWN “asked for the privilege of building a permanent Temple,” NLT “David asked God to allow him to build a house for Him ,” IE “asked to design a dwelling for the house of Jacob ,” ISV “ asked permission to find a dwelling-place,” MONTGOMERY and “prayed that he might be allowed to find a dwelling place.” AMPLIFIED

Notice that David did not take it upon himself to do this. He asked permission to do it, laying his desire before the Lord. That is what a tender hearted man would do. What is more, the Lord commended him for his desire. Solomon related what God has said to his father David. “And the LORD said unto David my father, Whereas it was in thine heart to build an house unto My name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart ” (1 Kgs 8:18; 2 Chron 6:8). The project, then, was right, even if it was not commanded. The circumstance is highly unsettling to a legalistic approach to life in Christ.

The record of this occasion is found in First Samuel. The setting was David’s experience of “rest round about from all his enemies.” He was sitting in his own house, which was rather elaborate. Hiram, king of Tyre, had sent expensive “cedar trees, and carpenters, and masons” to David, “and they built David an house” (2 Sam 5:2). In all of this, “David perceived that the LORD had confirmed him king over Israel, for his kingdom was lifted up on high, because of his people Israel” (2 Sam 5:12).

As he sat in his house, Nathan the prophet was with him. David said to him, “See now, I dwell in an house of cedar, but the ark of God dwelleth within curtains” (2 Sam 7:2). How unlike those Israelites of succeeding generations who had to be rebuked because they refurbished and enhanced their own houses while letting the house of God lie in ruins (Hag 1:4). Nathan responded, “Go, do all that is in thine heart, for the Lord is with thee.”

That night, the word of the Lord came to Nathan. His words are recorded in Second Samuel 7:5-13. “Go and tell My servant David , Thus says the Lord: Shall you build Me a house in which to dwell? For I have not dwelt in a house since I

God asks David if He had ever asked anyone, whom He had appointed, to build a house for Him? Yet, he does not rebuke David for asking to do such a thing. He even honored his request, although He would not allow David to build the house.

brought the Israelites out of Egypt to this day, but have moved about with a tent for My dwelling . In all the places where I have moved with all the Israelites, did I speak a word to any from the tribes of Israel whom I commanded to be shepherd of My people Israel, asking, Why do you not build Me a house of cedar? So now say this to My servant David, Thus says the Lord of hosts: I took you from the pasture, from following the sheep, to be prince over My people Israel. And I was with you wherever you went, and have cut off all your enemies from before you; and I will make you a great name, like [that] of the great men of the earth. And I will appoint a place for My people Israel and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own and be moved no more. And wicked men shall afflict them no more, as formerly and as from the time that I appointed judges over My people Israel; and I will cause you to rest from all your enemies. Also the Lord declares to you that He will make for you a house : And when your days are fulfilled and you sleep with your fathers, I will set up after you your offspring who shall be born to you, and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build a house for My Name [and My Presence], and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever.” AMPLIFIED

A Most Remarkable Word

This is a remarkable word that provides some insights into the Divine nature. God asks David if He had ever asked anyone, whom He had appointed, to build a house for Him? Yet, he does not rebuke David for asking to do such a thing. He even honored his request, although He would not allow David to build the house (which proved to be a Temple). David explained that God had told him why he could not build the house. “But God said unto me, Thou shalt not build an house for My name, because thou hast been a man of war, and hast shed blood” (1 Chron 28:3).

Here we see at least two things worthy of note. First, God honored a request He had not directed to be asked. Second, the person in charge of doing the work could not be known as a man of blood.

What Was David Asking?

Why did David make this request? Was it simply that he wanted to update the Tabernacle, or replace it with a more modern version – if that kind thinking even existed? Indeed, this was not the case. David realized that, according to appearance, he had a more comely place in which to dwell than the very ark of the covenant. To David, it did not seem right for him to have a better place in which to live than the place with which the presence of the Lord was associated. After all, God had said of the Tabernacle, “And let them make Me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them ” (Exo 25:8). David’s thoughts, then, were not wholly divorced from what God had revealed about Himself

David’s primary consideration was not to simply have a religious structure. It was specifically to provide a place in which the ark could be housed (2 Sam 7:2). He felt this could not be a housing that was inferior to his own dwelling place. And how does God regard David’s request? David found favor in the sight of the Lord! Those are words that are worthy of consideration, reflecting the nature of godly men and God himself.

SOLOMON BUILT THE HOUSE

“ 47 But Solomon built Him an house.” Other versions read, “But it was Solomon,” NASB “But Solomon was the builder,” BBE and “But it was Solomon who actually built it .” NLT God had revealed to David that his hands should not construct the house because he was a man of war, and had shed much blood. He designated that David’s son, Solomon, would build the house, being a man associated with peace (2 Sam 7:12-14).

The place for the building of the Temple was selected by David as the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite, where the Lord appeared unto David, confirming this was to be the place (1 Chron 21:28-2:1). This was located in Jerusalem on Mount Moriah, the place where God had commanded Abraham to offer Isaac. Therefore it is said of the commencement of the building of the Temple, “Then Solomon began to build the house of the LORD at Jerusalem in mount Moriah, where the Lord appeared unto David his father , in the place that David had prepared in the threshingfloor of Ornan the Jebusite” (2 Chron 3:1).

In keeping with the pattern which David apparently drew up, he gathered all of the materials that would be required. He did the following, as specified in 1 Chronicles 22:1-19. Behold the extensive nature of the preparation.

- Appointed masons to cut hewn stones.
- Prepared an abundance of iron for nails for the doors of the gates and for joining pieces together.
- Gathered an abundance of brass that could not be weighed.
- Procured cedar trees in abundance from Zidon and Tyre.
- Amassed one hundred thousand talents of gold (about 3,750 tons).

- Gathered one million talents of silver (37,500 tons).
- Brought together brass and iron too great to be weighed.
- Prepared and fashioned timber and stone.
- David added from his own personal treasury, over and above all that was prepared, three thousand talents of fine gold of Ophir (110 tons), and seven thousand talents of refined silver (260 tons) to overlay the walls (1 Chron 29:3-5).

The chief of the fathers and the princes of the tribes of Israel, and the captains and rulers of the king's work, also gave willingly to the project. Their gifts included five thousand talents and ten thousand drama of gold (190 tons and 185 pounds, ten thousand talents of silver (375 tons), nineteen thousand talents of brass (675 tons), one hundred thousand talents of iron (3,750 tons) (1 Chron 29:6-7)..

- Those who had precious stones also gave them to the work (1 Chron 29:8).

The Temple structure itself was ninety feet long, and forty-five feet high - equivalent to a 4 ½ story building, and as long as six Cadillacs placed end to end (ninety feet). This does not include the porch (1 Kgs 6:3), chambers (1 Kgs 6:5-6, 10), massive stones (1 Kgs 6:7), and winding staircase (1 Kgs 6:8).

Solomon forced 30,000 men of Israel to labor on the Temple, sending them to Lebanon in shifts of 10,000 a month. They would spend one month in Lebanon, and two months at home (1 Kgs 5:13-14). He also had 70,000 who carried burdens, and 80,000 stonecutters in the mountains (1 Kgs 5:15). He appointed 330 foremen, who supervised the workers – a crew of 180,000 men. That would mean each foremen supervised about 550 men.

The Temple took seven years to build (1 Kgs 6:38). By way of comparison, Scripture notes that it took Solomon thirteen years to build his own house (1 Kgs 7:1).

A Point to be Made

Once again, I want to draw attention to, what I have called, the principle of reference. The remarkable level of details associated with planning and building the Temple is staggering. Yet, Stephen does not mention a single one of them. He only says that David found favor in the sight of the Lord, desired to find a tabernacle for God, and that Solomon built the Temple itself.

Stephen's reference would have no significance whatsoever to anyone who lacked a knowledge of the facts in the case. It is the awareness and accurate knowledge of the facts that allows for the correct profitable and processing of Stephen's words. This remains true even though the Jewish council refused to profit from this knowledge. The fact of the matter is that right here the door was being opened for them to turn from their wicked ways. A due consideration of the thought and effort that went into the building of the Temple would have pointed them in the right direction.

An Observation

If this assessment is correct, the present level of ignorance that exists in the professing church concerning the details of Scripture, has far-reaching implications. It suggests that the better part of the modern church cannot profit from insightful preaching. For example, what possible meaning does Stephen's sermon have to such people? That is not to mention the preaching of Jesus and the apostles. I do not believe too much can be said about this circumstance. Until it is corrected to some measurable degree, it is doubtful that the contemporary church is even capable of doing the work of the Lord. In my judgement, the lack of productive Kingdom work is owing more to the cannot principle than the will not one.

The modern church sorely stands in need of a significant work to be done within itself. It is too carnal – too worldly. I am persuaded that these observations can be easily substantiated, and that opposing views can be cast down with very little effort. This is a matter that calls for God to raise up men of spiritual power and insight – men who, like David, find favor in His sight. Without such men, the church will remain spiritually sterile.

THE MOST HIGH DOES NOT DWELL IN TEMPLES MADE WITH HANDS

“48 Howbeit the most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet.” Other versions read, “does not dwell in houses made by human hands,” NASB “does not live in houses made by men,” NIV “has not His resting-place in houses made with hands,” BBE “does not dwell in sanctuaries made with hands,” CSB “doesn't live in a house built by humans,” GWN “does not dwell in buildings erected by men's hands,” WEYMOUTH and “does not live in man-made houses .” PHILLIPS

This is Stephen’s answer to the charges that he had spoken blasphemous words against the Temple. The Jews had set up false witnesses who said, “This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law: for we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs which Moses delivered us” (Acts 6:13-14).

Not only were these charges false, they were also to be considered in view of the fact that God does not dwell in houses constructed by men. When David inquired of Nathan concerning building the Temple, God instructed Nathan to say this to David: “Go and tell my servant David, Thus saith the LORD, Shalt thou build me an house for me to dwell in? Whereas I have not dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle. In all the places wherein I have walked with all the children of Israel spake I a word with any of the tribes of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people Israel, saying, Why build ye not Me an house of cedar?” (2 Sam 7:5-7).

Inspired to reason upon these words, and before building the Temple, Solomon said, “And the house which I build is great: for great is our God above all gods. But who is able to build Him an house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain him? who am I then, that I should build Him an house, save only to burn sacrifice before Him?” (2 Chron 2:6). After he had completed the building of the Temple he reasoned, “But will God indeed dwell on the earth? behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded?” (1 Kgs 8:27). Therefore, the Temple was constructed with an acute awareness of the fact that God does not live in a building – yet the work was fully sanctioned and directed by God.

Isaiah also refers to this fact in his prophecy. “Thus saith the LORD, The heaven is My throne, and the earth is My footstool: where is the house that ye build unto Me? and where is the place of My rest?” (Isa 66:1). Paul also referred to the Divine trait of not living in a building, in his address to the philosophers in Athens. “God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands” (Acts 17:24).

Jeremiah delivered the true sense of these words when he upbraided the people for trusting in the Temple instead of the God of the Temple. “Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place. Trust ye not in lying words, saying, The temple of the LORD, The temple of the LORD, The temple of the LORD, are these” (Jer 7:3-4).

Further, the Tabernacle and Temple were not to be considered holy in the sense of a shrine, as those which contained idols. It was rather because of the Divine communication that took place there. That was true of every place that was particularly hallowed – places where altars were built, pillars anointed, and special names given

Men may conclude from this that it is wrong to construct a house that is dedicated to the Lord. This is not, however, the manner in which David and Solomon thought. Nor, indeed, was it the way Jesus thought, who referred to the Temple as “My Father’s house” (John 2:16).

The Scriptures Are Particular

The Scriptures are very particular concerning the manner in which God was associated with the Tabernacle and Temple. Neither of them were areas to which God was confined. When the Lord said Israel made a “sanctuary” for Him (Ex 25:8), and that he “walked in a tent and in a Tabernacle” (2 Sam 7:6), He did not mean He lived there as a man lives in an abode. Rather, this was a place where He revealed Himself, communing with them. This was done over the ark of the covenant, and particularly from between the cherubim that adorned its cover. The Scriptures spoke of His dwelling in this manner: “the Lord of hosts, which dwelleth between the cherubims ” (1 Sam 4:4; 6:2), and “God the Lord that dwelleth between the cherubims ” (1 Chron 13:6). When Hezekiah prayed, he addressed the Lord as the “Lord God of Israel which dwellest between the cherubims ” (2 Kgs 19:15). In one of his psalms, Asaph addressed God as “Thou that dwellest between the cherubims ” (Psa 80:1). The ninety-ninth Psalm says that God “sitteth between the cherubims ” (Psa 99:1). Isaiah addressed the Lord as the One who “ dwellest between the cherubims ” (Isa 37:16).

The Basis of the Expression

All of this was based on the statement of God concerning how He would commune with Israel – a statement relating to the building of the Tabernacle. “And there I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy seat, from between the two cherubims which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel” (Ex 25:22).

This expression, then, was based upon God’s covenantal dealings with Israel. It was never designed to suggest that God was confined to the Tabernacle or Temple. Further, the Tabernacle and Temple were not to be considered holy in the sense of a shrine, as those which contained idols. It was rather because of the Divine communication that took place there. That was true of every place that was particularly hallowed – places where altars were built, pillars anointed, and special names given (Gen 12:7; 26:24-25; 28:16; 32:30; 35:3,15). It was because of the revelation of God in those places. This was also the reason Jesus resorted often to the garden – because of communication with God (John 18:2).

Having said all of this, there is no way the flesh can capitalize on this situation, causing ones name to become great, and gaining worldly advantage. The fact that the Tabernacle was among the Israelites did not reduce the magnitude of their transgression. Instead, the mechanics of their ceremonies were attributed to idols, even though they appeared outwardly to be serving the Lord.

HEAVEN IS HIS THRONE, AND THE EARTH IS HIS FOOTSTOOL

“ 49 Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool: what house will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest? 50 Hath not my hand made all these things?”

Stephen continues drawing the attention of the council to the words the Lord spoke to David.

HEAVEN IS MY THRONE

“Heaven is My throne . . .” Other versions read, “Heaven is the seat of My power .” BBE and “Heaven is My seat .” PNT

The throne of God was not within the Tabernacle, or upon the ark of the covenant. The government of God did not issue forth from a structure – even one that God had ordained and commanded to be built. The communications that took place there were “settled in the heaven”

The place of communication was “between the cherubims,” but that was not the seat of the power. The throne of God was not within the Tabernacle, or upon the ark of the covenant. The government of God did not issue forth from a structure – even one that God had ordained and commanded to be built. The communications that took place there were “settled in the heaven” (Psa 119:89).

The words “heaven is My throne” were not included in the words God spoke to David, as recorded in the seventh chapter of Second Samuel. The Psalmist did declare, “The Lord’s throne is in heaven” (Psa 11:4). Through Isaiah God also said, “The heaven is My throne” (Isa 66:1). Jesus said of heaven, “it is God’s throne” (Matt 5:34), and that those who swore by heaven “swaereth by the throne of God” (Matt 23:22). The expression “heaven is My throne” is therefore a revelation spoken at other times that Stephen wisely correlated with what God had said to David.

Inter-relational Words

In the Kingdom of God, truth is inter-relational. That is, words concerning fixed realities harmonize with each other, and blend together. Of course, it requires a person who is skillful in “the word of righteousness” to do this (Heb 5:13), and Stephen is well qualified.

What do these words mean: “heaven is My throne” ? It means that the origin of Divine rule is in heaven. That is where the seat of government is located. That is where the full glory of the King is displayed. That is where all decisions relating to the Kingdom are made. The court is held there, as confirmed in Job 1:6 and 2:1, Isaiah 6:1-1-8, and Second Kings 22:19-22. Those whose minds are fixed upon the earth cannot possibly be correct in their views of Divine judgment and will. As soon as one’s mind is fixed on this present evil world, all sense of right and wrong become distorted. This is because the throne is in heaven, and “the heavens do rule” (Dan 4:26).

THE EARTH IS MY FOOTSTOOL

“ . . . and earth is My footstool . . .” Other versions read, “footstool of My feet,” NASB “ a resting-place for My feet,” BBE :the footstool under My feet,” MRD and “ a place to rest My feet.” LIVING

Whatever one may choose to think about the earth, allowance must be made for this statement of God: “earth is My footstool!” In this text, Stephen again integrates Scripture. The statement concerning the earth being God’s footstool is found in Isaiah 66:1. Lamentations 2:1 also alludes to the earth being “His footstool.” Jesus also referred to this in Matthew 5:35.

David declared what he had on his mind. “Then David the king stood up upon his feet, and said, Hear me, my brethren, and my people: “As for me, I had it in mine heart to build an house of rest for the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and for the footstool of our God , and had made ready for the building” (1 Chron 28:2). The 99 th Psalm also refers to the Temple being the footstool of God. “Exalt ye the LORD our God, and worship at His footstool ; for he is holy” (Psa 99:5). The 132 nd Psalm does the same thing. “We will go into his tabernacles: we will worship at His footstool ” (Psa 132:7).

The idea here is that the earth, together with all of its inhabitants, are subject to the Lord, and are at His disposal to use as he sees fit. That is, God cannot be contained by anything He has made – much less what man has made. In a figure of speech, the earth is a place where God rests His feet. It is not a place where He dwells, or lives. In view of that, how would it be possible for a building to contain Him, if the earth itself cannot.

Something Else to Be Seen

But, there is something else to be seen in the earth being God’s “footstool.” In all of God’s vast creation, His present activity is focused upon the earth. This is confirmed in the 24 th Psalm where the Lord further defines the earth. “The earth is the LORD'S, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein ” (Psa 24:1). This is the arena in which the Lord is working, fulfilling a purpose that is designed to bring special glory to Him. As great as the sun is, it is not the focus of Divine attention. Nor, indeed is the moon, the stars, or the many galaxies that have been created in our solar system. The ONLY real significance of the earth is that God is fulfilling His purpose in it. Apart from that, it has no revealed utility. Now, with that in mind, God asks a further question.

WHAT HOUSE WILL YE BUILD ME?

“ . . . what house will ye build me? saith the Lord: or what is the place of my rest?” Other versions read, “what place is there for My repose,” NASB “ what kind of house,” NIV “what manner of house,” ASV “ What sort of house,” BBE “What kind of house could you build for Me,” CJB and “There is no place where I need to rest.” LIVING

This is a reference to the words of the Lord to David: “Shalt thou build Me an house for Me to dwell in?” (2 Sam 7:5). That is, Are you capable of constructing a place that can contain Me? At this point, it is interesting to observe that all sectarianism presumes that this can be done – that God can be contained. For them, God is contained in a creed or a dogma. Nevertheless, they have made an attempt to contain God, and it simply cannot be done!

There is something important to note here. Technically speaking, David did not say he wanted to build a house for God, but for “the ark of God” (2 Sam 7:2). When God said that David’s son would build the house, He referred to it as “an house for My name ” (2 Sam 7:13). Solomon said the house was to be built “ unto the name of the Lord his (David’s) God” (1 Kgs 5:3), and that he would build it “ unto the name of the Lord my God” (1 Kgs 5:5). Yet, when He started the project, it is written that he “began to build the house of the Lord ” (1 Kgs 6:1).

In this we note that things related to God, the name of the Lord, and the Lord Himself are all woven together, like a threefold chord.

This is precisely why Jesus declared the merchants and moneychangers had made the house of prayer “a den of thieves” (Matt 21:13). It is why those who either assist or neglect the people of God have done it unto Jesus Himself (Matt 25:40,45). Nothing that is associated with God, either by intention of by Divine mandate, can be disassociated from Him. If, for example, people go through the mechanics of praising the Lord, yet their hearts are not in it, they have actually blasphemed God , and will be held accountable for it. This is precisely the point the Lord made through Amos concerning the children of Israel (Isa 1:13; Amos 5:23).

An Application

When this truth registers upon tender hearts, our current religious scene becomes most alarming. We are living in a generation when the merchants of the world have become fat because of Christian fads. Industries that have been financially advantaged because of this include structural engineering, construction, sound systems, video presentation, overhead projection, music industry, book publishing, clothiers, jewelers, and many more. It parallels the vivid description given in the book of the Revelation concerning the false church. When the whole system is brought down by God, the merchants are depicted as lamenting. “And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more: the merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, and cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men” (Rev 18:11-13).

The lament continues, accenting that earthly lusts and appetites were impacted by the fall of false religion. “And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all. The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing, And saying, Alas, alas, that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls! For in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And every shipmaster, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off, And cried when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city!” (Rev 18:14-18).

Stephen is speaking to a group of people who have gained fleshly advantages from their involvement in religion – a revealed religion. One of the reasons these very people had opposed Jesus is because they viewed him as a threat to their prominent positions in religion. “If we let Him thus alone, all men will believe on him: and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation” (John 11:48). However, Stephen has no regard for their position, He is rather showing that they, like their predecessors, had consistently refused the men who had been placed in their position by God.

The Proper Use of Scripture

In this verse, Stephen also combines the thoughts expressed in the 132nd Psalm with His words to David. “For the LORD hath chosen Zion; He hath desired it for His habitation. This is My rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it” (Psa 132:13-14).

Behold the expertise with which Stephen handles Scripture. He correlates it with Divine purpose, always keeping in mind what the Lord was doing, and never attempting to justify a private view or an institutional emphasis. This is the kind of person to which Paul referred in his letter to Timothy: “Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth ” (2 Tim 2:15). “Rightly dividing” refers to the proper use of Scripture. Other versions render the phrase, “handling accurately,” NASB “correctly handles,” NIV “rightly explaining.” NRSV This is not referring to the proper scholastic handling of Scripture – although that is certainly included. It rather means using Scripture within the context of the revealed purpose of God, and with an understanding of the circumstance in which the truth is being spoken. Those who do not use Scripture in this manner have every reason to be ashamed, for they have corrupted the use of the word of God.

Think of it this way. When you read Stephen’s defense, do you get the idea he is trying to clear himself of all false charges? It is apparent that he is rather using the Scripture to make known the purpose and perspective of the Living God? His grasp of truth enabled him to reason in a profitable manner.

SOUND REASONING

In order for men to reason properly, certain things must be known or comprehended. First, a person is required to have a working knowledge of the text of Scripture itself. Scripture contains the expressive components of sound reasoning – the nomenclature through which foundational aspects of reasoning are expressed.

There must also be an understanding of the nature of God as it has been revealed. Everything God says and does is within the context of His nature. Things like His hatred of evil, love of good, inclination toward those tender heart, and intolerance of hypocrisy, must be seen to some measurable degree.

A grasp of the revealed purpose of God must also be possessed. What is He doing among the sons of men, and why is He doing it? This has to do with His “eternal purpose” (Eph 3:11).

Finally, the absolute centrality of Christ must be seen. That is, His centrality to the realization of the purpose of God. If a person reasons as though the individual is the main thing, or the family, or the church, or a nation – reasoning will be skewed in the wrong direction. It is inevitable that such reasoning will lead to the wrong conclusions, give birth to erroneous ideas, and actually obscure the truth of God.

We see all of this and more in the speech being given by Stephen. As you read and ponder it, you become acutely aware that he is thinking on a different level. He is extolling the Lord and His gracious works. All is leading to the conclusion that the most grievous sin of the people was the rejection, betrayal, and murdering of Jesus. This is so because Jesus is the premier Man, sent to do the premier work, and is related to the premier purpose. Stephen sees it, and delivers his insight with great power.

The widespread practice of sectarian reasoning has impacted Christendom in a way that is nearly impossible to assess. It is my persuasion that very few weighty conclusions are being reached, and very few noble causes are being embraced. Minuscule thinking always breeds purposes that are destined to fail.

HATH NOT MY HANDS MADE THESE THINGS?

“ 50 Hath not my hand made all these things?” Other versions read, “ Did not my hand make all these things,” NRSV “Didn't I myself make all these things?” CJB “when all these things were made by Me ?” NJB “ Didn't I make both heaven and earth?” LIVING “ Remember , I made all these things!” IE “It was my hand that made all these things, wasn't it ?” ISV and “Did not my hand make this universe ?” MONTGOMERY

“These things” refers to the heaven the earth – God’s throne and footstool. “ ALL these times” refers to everything that populates these two realms. In view of the vastness of God’s throne and footstool, what house could you make for Him? Would it not have to be large enough to contain at least His throne and footstool – to say nothing of Himself?

As noble as the desire of David was, it still reflected a very limited view of God. This is not said to demean David, but to accent how comparatively very little of God had actually been made known at that time.

Even though much has been revealed about the Lord since the time of Job, there is still a lot of truth to be seen in his words: “Lo, these are parts of His ways: but how little a portion is heard of Him? but the thunder of His power who can understand?” (Job 26:14).

David, who had been given to see more than Job, said of the Lord, “Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it” (Psa 139:6).

Isaiah, who was also given to see a larger measure of the Lord declared, “Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the LORD, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? there is no searching of His understanding ” (Isa 40:28).

Paul, who perhaps saw more than any person other than the Lord Jess Himself, confessed, “O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! ” (Rom 11:33).

The reasoning of this verse is as follows. After looking at what the hands of God has made, what could men possibly make that would be appropriate for Him?

It is because David “found favor” with the Lord that He was allowed to build a house for Him. It was not because God required one to be built. True religion does not necessitate such a house, although, especially under the Old Covenant, it was allowed and blessed because of the nature of the covenant. However, just as surely as God found no delight in the burnt offerings and sacrifices that He Himself ordained (Psa 51:16; Mic 6:7; Heb 10:6), so there was no delight in the Temple itself, even though it was called by Jesus “My Father’s house” and “a house of prayer for all nations” (John 2:16; Matt 21:16).

During the days of Jesus, the Temple was viewed by many as an end of itself – a beautiful and ornate structure – without regard to the activities that were to take place within it. Jesus said to some of these people, “Woe unto you, ye blind guides, which say, Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor!” (Matt 23:16).

In our own time, there is an inordinate accent on religious structures. While this is not an area in which laws are to be drawn up and imposed upon men, care must be taken not to allow the realm of the seen to dictate how, when, and the extent of our thoughts about the Lord.

This inordinate view of the Temple also surfaced once when Jesus had commended a poor widow for placing two mites in the Temple treasury. He had declared her gift was more than all of the others, among whom were gifts given by the rich. At that time “His disciples came to Him for to show Him the buildings of the temple” (Mat 24:1). Luke says that some had noted “how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts” (Luke 21:5). It was at that time that Jesus foretold the destruction of the Temple that would take place when Jerusalem would be judged for its rejection of Jesus (Lk 21:6).

The people were prone to think of the Temple in disassociation from God Himself. For some, it was a place of business, where animals used in sacrifice could be sold at a profit, being easily obtained by those who heartlessly met the requirements for sacrifice – or at least imagined that they did so. For others, the Temple was a place of employment – like the Temple guard (Acts 4:1; 5:24). For still others, it was a place of religious status – as with the chief priests, scribes, and Sadducees.

The Lord’s statement concerning the heaven being His throne and the earth His footstool, was designed to discourage this kind of thinking. They were to ponder the Lord within a larger context that things that can be seen, or things that had been fashioned by men.

In Our Time

In our own time, there is an inordinate accent on religious structures. While this is not an area in which laws are to be drawn up and imposed upon men, care must be taken not to allow the realm of the seen to dictate how, when, and the extent of our thoughts about the Lord. Throughout history, there have been godly men who saw this propensity and sounded a warning about it. One such man was W.B. Godbey, who lived from 1833 to 1920. He wrote the following on this subject. “An awful tide of idolatry is at the present day running in the line of church edifices. If the house should burn down and the preacher backslide a whole modern congregation would collapse spiritually in twenty-four hours and conclude they hadn’t a bit of religion . . . How will we ever get the heathen saved if we do not quit sacrificing the Lord’s money to that hellish goddess, Pride, in needless expenditure on church edifices, thus using God’s money ‘to sacrifice to devils’” W.B. GODBEY (1880-1920)

Suffice it to say, it is not my purpose to deliver a diatribe against structures devoted to the service of the Lord. However, such are acceptable only to the degree that those who plan, build, as use them are wholly devoted to the Lord – as David was. God accepted David’s plan because HE found favor with God, not merely because of the plan.

Buildings are also proper only when the activities within them are themselves pleasing to the Lord.

Men are to remember that God has no need for what men possess. If He was hungry, he said, He would not tell them (Psa 50:12). That does not mean that they are to give no gifts. It does mean that they are to give them for the right reasons, and in a manner that honors and pleases the Lord.

STIFFNECKED AND UNCIRCUMCISED IN HEART AND EARS

“ 51 Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye.”

It ought to be noted that those who teach that the church is just like Israel have said something of great magnitude. If what they say is true, then the church to which they refer is, at the very best, in a fallen state. Those who are in Christ Jesus are a new creation, and can in no wise be properly described as stiffnecked or rebellious.

It is apparent that as Stephen was speaking, he perceived the hardness of the people. He had spoken for some time, confining himself to a God-honoring assessment of the history of children of Israel. He had spoken in the language of Scripture, and had wisely correlated various texts with understanding and wisdom that ought to have been obvious. Now it has become evident that these people are not like those who believed on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:41), nor are they similar to the great multitude who believed in Solomon’s porch (Acts 4:4). These were members of the brood of vipers to which John the Baptist referred (Matt 3:7). They belonged to the order of “hypocrites” to which Jesus referred (Matt 23:13).

Stephen has been patient, however he knows that the Spirit of God “shall not always strive with men” (Gen 6:3). Therefore he will bring things to a head, and draw their venom out so that their wickedness will be known. This is the manner of the Lord. If men refuse to believe Him, He will draw that wickedness out, so that all may see it.

STIFFNECKED

“Ye stiffnecked . . .” Other versions read, “how stubborn can you be?” GWN “stiff of neck,” MRD “You stubborn people,” NLT “You stiffnecked heathen !” LIVING “You stubborn leaders !” IE “stubborn in will,” WILLIAMS “You stubborn and stiff-necked people ,” AMPLIFIED and “You obstinate people,” PHILLIPS

The word “stiffnecked” refers to an obstinate spirit – one in which the person refuses to turn toward the Lord. It comes from a word meaning “stubborn, headstrong, obstinate,” THAYER “resistance against changing ones behavior,” FRIBERG “hardened,” UBS and “completely unyielding.” LOUW-NIDA

This is the only place this word is used in the New Covenant Scriptures. It is used seven times in the writings of Moses, and once in the Chronicles.

- God said of Israel, “it is a stiffnecked people” (Ex 32:9).
- Moses said “thou art a stiffnecked people” (Ex 33:3)
- God told Moses to say to the people, “Thou art a stiffnecked people” (Ex 3:5).
- Moses said to God, “for it is a stiffnecked people” (Ex 34:9).
- At the close of his life, Moses said to Israel, “thou art a stiffnecked people” (Deut 9:6).
- At that time, Moses also repeated that God had said of them, “it is a stiffnecked people” (Deut 9:13).
- God commanded Israel, “Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart, and be no more stiffnecked ” (Deut 10:16).

• Hezekiah sent messengers throughout all Israel and Judah saying, “Now, be ye not stiffnecked as your fathers were” (2 Chron 30:8).

Stephen charges the Jewish council with being stubborn, unyielding, and unwilling to turn to the Lord. He uses the exact language that both God and Moses used when Israel refused to hear God, and instead chose to make their own gods. This was not an out-of-character occurrence, but was a display of who they really were – a “stiffnecked people.”

It appears from the text that there may very well have been angry outbursts and interruptions going on as Stephen spoke. If this is so, it would account for the change in tone that takes place in this verse. Suddenly Stephen leaps from the consideration of Israel of old to the people who were standing before him. They were, as he will strongly affirm, from the same generation of the wayward ones in the past – noted for being obstinate, disobedient, and rebellious. It ought to be noted that those who teach that the church is just like Israel have said something of great magnitude. If what they say is true, then the church to which they refer is, at the very best, in a fallen state. Those who are in Christ Jesus are a new creation, and can in no wise be properly described as stiffnecked or rebellious. They are new creatures in Christ Jesus, old things have passed away, and all things have become new (2 Cor 5:17). If they are stubborn, it is only because they are walking in the flesh.

Such a condition cannot be brushed aside by saying they are like Israel. If they continue to remain in such a state, they will also be like Israel in failing to enter the promised land. Therefore the church receives this solemn warning, “Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in their heart; and they have not known my ways. So I swear in my wrath, They shall not enter into my rest.) Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God ” (Heb 3:10-12). And again it is written, “ Let us therefore fear , lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it ” (Heb 4:1).

Some might object, saying that “seem” means the people addressed really do not fail to enter the rest. However, if that is the case, the sentence of nonsensical, having no meaning whatsoever. What purpose is there in fearing if the condition against which we are warned is not even real. Here, the word “seemed” accents judgment – to be thus judged as questionable, or not seen as a legitimate entrance into the rest. In other words, the door is left open to avoid the condition. However, it was against a legitimate, delivered, and on-their-way-to-Canaan people that God’s wrath welled up, and in it He swore they would not enter.

That is the ultimate end of being stiffnecked, obstinate, and stubborn. Therefore it is written, “He, that being often reprov’d hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy ” (Prov 29:1). Another version reads, “A man who remains stiff-necked after many rebukes will suddenly be destroyed--without remedy” (Prov 29:1). NIV

UNCIRCUMCISED IN HEART AND EARS

“ . . . and uncircumcised in heart and ears. . . ” Other versions read, “ with uncircumcised hearts and ears,” NIV “whose hearts and ears are shut to Me,” BBE “How can you be so heartless and disobedient ?” GWN “You are heathen 1 at heart and deaf to the truth,” NLT “Your hearts are not circumcised! You won't listen to God!” LIVING “ heathen ish in hearts and ears,” WILLIAMS “ still heathen and uncircumcised in heart and ears,” AMPLIFIED “ heathen in your thinking , heathen in the way you are listening to me now!” PHILLIPS “ hardhearted people,” CEV and “ How heathen your hearts, how deaf you are to God's message!” GNB

To be uncircumcised in heart and ears is to be insensitive, with no conscience, and incapable of hearing. The picture is of a growth that restricts both the heart and the ears – a growth of flesh. This inner growth inhibits the truth from getting through the ear and into the heart. Sin has rendered the person incapable of either hearing or responding to the Lord.

This is a picture of the unregenerate state, and of the necessity for the new birth. That is why Moses told the people their hearts had to be circumcised. “Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart, and be no more stiffnecked” (Deut 10:16). Centuries later, Jeremiah again challenged the people to circumcise their hearts. “Circumcise yourselves to the LORD, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem: lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings” (Jer 4:4). He declared, “all the house of Israel are uncircumcised of heart” (Jer 9:16). Jeremiah also traced the inability of the people to hear to their ear problem. “To whom shall I speak, and give warning, that they may hear? behold, their ear is uncircumcised, and they cannot hearken : behold, the word of the LORD is unto them a reproach; they have no delight in it” (Jer 6:10).

Ezekiel twice referred to strangers who were “uncircumcised in heart” (Ezek 44:7,9). The only remedy for the situation, was for the Lord to circumcise their hearts, which Moses promised He would do in the future. “And the LORD thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live” (Deut 30:6).

What an indictment to make after all of this had been said about the condition in which these people were found! Here were people who had received every advantage. It is said of them, “Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen” (Rom 9:4-5). How could any people receive more advantages in the flesh, or as men? Yet, to the very message that declared the fulfillment of the promises made to their fathers, their reaction was like the heathen – just as though they had never heard from God, never experienced His benefits, never had any promises, and were never given any prophet.

In Our Time

Much of the obstinance we see today – if not all of it – is directly traceable to this condition : uncircumcised hearts and ears. It is time for those who teach the people to call the condition what it is – like Stephen is doing in our text. It is not proper to allow those who are wise in the ways of the world, like psychologists and sociologists, to explain a condition that has already been defined by the living God.

RESISTING THE HOLY SPIRIT

“ . . . ye do always resist the Holy Ghost . . .” Other versions read, “You always resist the Holy Spirit,” NKJV “are always resisting the Holy Spirit,” NASB “you are forever opposing the Holy Spirit,” NRSV “you are ever working against the Holy Spirit,” BBE “you continally oppose ,” CJB “ye do always set yourselves against the Holy Spirit,” MRD “Must you forever resist the Holy Spirit?” NLT “you have always resisted the Holy Ghost,” TNT “You are always against what the Holy Spirit is trying to tell you,” IE “you also are continually at strife with the Holy Spirit,” WEYMOUTH “you are always actively resisting the Holy Spirit,” AMPLIFIED “It is always the same - you never fail to resist the Holy Spirit!” PHILLIPS “You are always fighting against the Holy Spirit,” CEV “ and “You always fell against the Holy Spirit.” LITV

The word “resist” comes from a Greek word with the following lexical meaning. “To be adverse, oppose, strive against,” THAYER “rush against,” FRIBERG “fight against,” UBS and “to resist by actively opposing pressure of power,” LOUW-NIDA

In this case, the Holy Spirit is exerting influence upon Stephen’s hearers – convincing of sin, righteousness, and judgment (John 16:8-11). Working through the words of Stephen, He was pricking their conscience, and goading them within. But they threw up a wall of resistance, refusing to yield to His tender influences.

An indication of what is involved in resisting the Holy Spirit is seen in the depiction of the Spirit's activity prior to the flood. Of that time the Lord declared, "And the LORD said, My spirit shall not always strive with man" (Gen 6:3). As Stephen uses the word "resist," the picture is not one of merely raising up a wall, and refusing to welcome the Holy Spirit. There is a note of hostility in the word, so that the one who bears the words being used by the Holy Spirit is actually attacked, either verbally or bodily. At this point, the attack of Stephen is in word, but it is picking up its intensity.

Notice how gentle Stephen started his discourse: "Men, brethren, and fathers" (Acts 7:2). He was mannerly and respectful, giving no cause in himself for the Word of God to be blasphemed. He carried out what Paul said to Timothy, "And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth" (2 Tim 2:24-25). However, those who are "in the flesh" cannot be appeased, and their anger cannot be assuaged. The more insightful words are spoken, the more the hostility increases, until it finally boils over in the harshest expressions.

By resisting the Holy Spirit these men confirmed they did not have a spiritual religion – for one cannot be spiritual while resisting the Holy Spirit.

By resisting the Holy Spirit these men confirmed they did not have a spiritual religion – for one cannot be spiritual while resisting the Holy Spirit.

AS YOUR FATHERS DID

" . . . as your fathers did, so do ye." Other versions read, "you are doing just as your fathers did," NASB "You are just like your fathers," NIV "just as your ancestors used to do," NRSV "You do the same things your fathers did!" CJB "Your ancestors did this, and you are just like them!" IE and "Just as your fathers did so are you doing now ." PHILLIPS

There Is A Generation

There is the generation of the ungodly. John the Baptist called them a " generation of vipers" (Matt 3:7). Jesus called them the same (Matt 12:34; 23:33). God referred to "the generation of them that hate Me" (Ex 20:5). Asaph referred to " a stubborn and rebellion generation " (Psa 78:8). Jesus spoke of an "adulterous and sinful generation " (Mk 8:38). Solomon said, "There is a generation that curseth their father, and doth not bless their mother. There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness. There is a generation , O how lofty are their eyes! and their eyelids are lifted up. There is a generation , whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men" (Prov 30:11-14). Such a generation is not always contiguous, but can spring up from time to time.

And what has been said about this generation – particularly the one Stephen identified as "your fathers" ? The sweet Psalmist of Israel testified, "How oft did they provoke Him in the wilderness, and grieve Him in the desert! Yea, they turned back and tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel " (Psa 78:40-41). In Nehemiah's day, this is what was said of them: "Yet many years didst Thou forbear them, and testifiedst against them by Thy Spirit in Thy prophets: yet would they not give ear : therefore gavest Thou them into the hand of the people of the lands" (Neh 9:30). Isaiah said this of them: "But they rebelled, and vexed His holy Spirit : therefore He was turned to be their enemy, and He fought against them" (Isa 63:10).

Therefore, rather than choosing to identify with father Abraham through faith, they chose to link themselves with those who resisted the Holy Spirit of God. In them was confirmed the saying of Paul,

“For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel” (Rom 9:6). Just so, all that are of the church, are not of the church.

THEY PERSECUTED AND KILLED THE PROPHETS, AND THE JUST ONE AS WELL

“ 52 Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? and they have slain them which showed before of the coming of the Just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers . . .”

Behold the change in the tone of Stephen’s words. He has now reached the point that Paul and Barnabas reached in the synagogue of Antioch Pisidia. After delivering a message much like Stephen is delivering to the Jewish council, it is written, “Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles” (Acts 13:46).

It is glaringly evident that this is the kind of circumstance Stephen now faces. Therefore, he will continue speaking with both candor and power, accelerating in his fervor and the charges that he levels against them.

PERSECUTING THE PROPHETS

“ Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? . . .” Other versions read, “ Was there ever a prophet your fathers did not persecute?” NIV “Which of the prophets was not cruelly attacked by your fathers ?” BBE “ Can you name a single prophet your ancestors never persecuted?” NJB “ Name one prophet your ancestors didn’t persecute!” LIVING and “Your ancestors persecuted every prophet who ever lived .” IE

Do not fail to notice who he identifies as their fathers. It was not Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob! He connects them with their proper ancestors, even as Jesus did when speaking to those who opposed Him. Our Lord said – perhaps to some of the very people standing before Stephen – “ye are the children of them which killed the prophets”

Do not fail to notice who he identifies as their fathers. It was not Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob! He connects them with their proper ancestors, even as Jesus did when speaking to those who opposed Him. Our Lord said – perhaps to some of the very people standing before Stephen – “ye are the children of them which killed the prophets” (Matt 23:31).

The prophets certainly received their share of persecution – and it came from their own people. Permit me to cite a few of them.

- Moses (Ex 17:4).
- David (Psa 31:13).
- Gideon (Judges 6:28-32).
- Elijah (1 Kgs 19:1-21).
- Micaiah (1 Kgs 22:26;27).
- Elisha (2 Kgs 6:31).
- Hanani (2 Chron 16:10).
- Jeremiah (Jer 15:10,15).

Jesus said the prophets were noted for being persecuted (Matt 5:12). And now Stephen says that generation of persecutors lives on. Such people may have been able to trace their lineage back to Abraham, but they were not of his lineage. They belonged to the generation that rejected Moses, tempted God and persecuted the prophets. In this text, we are beholding how God reckons guilt, and it is a fearful thing to consider.

KILLING THE PROPHETS THAT SHOWED THEM

“ . . . and they have slain them which showed before of the coming of the Just One . . .” Other versions read, “And they killed those who foretold the coming of the Just One,” NKJV “And they killed those who had previously announced the coming of the Righteous One ,” “They even killed those who predicted the coming of the Righteous One ,” NIV “and they put to death those who gave them the news of the coming of the Upright One ,” BBE “and they killed them which showed before of the coming of the Righteous One,” ERV and “They killed those who predicted that a man with God's approval would come .” GWN

There are several prophets whose martyrdom is recorded. Here are some of them.

- The prophets during the time of Jezebel (1 Kgs 18:4,13).
- Zechariah (2 Chron 24:21).
- Urijah (Jer 26:23).
- Jesus told the people their fathers killed the prophets (Lk 11:47; 13:34).
- Paul also referred to this, stating specifically that the prophets were slain by their own people, the Jews (1 Thess 2:15).
- There is also a well known Jewish tradition that says Isaiah is the prophet who was “sawn asunder” (Heb 11:37), having suffered martyrdom under Manasseh. As a point of interest, I provide the following. “Calmet, writing above a hundred years ago, says, ‘I am assured that the punishment of the saw is still in use among the Switzers, and that they put it in practice not many years ago upon one of their countrymen, guilty of a great crime, in the plain of Grenelles, near Paris. They put him into a kind of coffin, and sawed him lengthwise, beginning at the head, as a piece of wood is sawn; ‘Pict. Bib.’ It was not an unusual mode of punishment to cut a person asunder, and to suspend the different parts of the body to walls and towers, as a warning to the living; see 1Samuel 31:10, and Morier’s Second Journey to Persia, p. 96.” ALBERT BARNES

While the martyrdom of prophets who particularly chronicled the coming Messiah is not provided in detail, the Spirit does say that the foretelling of Christ was the heart and core of the message of the Prophets (Lk 24:25,27,44; John 1:45; Acts 3:18,24; 10:43; 26:22; 28:23; Rom 1:2; Eph 2:20; 1 Pet 1:10).

The link was so close between these people and the generation that slew the prophets, that Jesus said the blood of all of the holy prophets would be charged to the generation that was living then. “Therefore also said the wisdom of God, I will send them prophets and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute: that the blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation; from the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple : verily I say unto you, It shall be required of this generation ” (Luke 11:49-51).

This is the manner of Divine reckoning. When people set themselves against God, and even opposes those who He sends, and to whom He has given insight and power, the credit for sins committed by such men as Cain, and even the Jews that stoned Stephen, will be credited against them. This is because they were animated by the same spirit, partaking of the same attitude and demeanor. Truly, “It is a fearful things to fall into he hands of the living God” (Heb 10:31).

YOU BETRAYED AND MURDERED THE JUST ONE

“ . . . of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers . . .” Other versions read, “whose betrayers and murderers you have now become,” NASB “And now you have betrayed and murdered Him,” NIV “whom you have now given up and put to death,” BBE “You have now become the people who betrayed and murdered that Man,” GWN “the Messiah whom you betrayed and murdered,” LIVING “And now, you have turned against this righteous One and murdered Him,” IE and “now in our own day you have become betrayers and his murderers,” PHILLIPS

This very point has now been made in nearly every sermon preached thus far in the book of Acts.

• PENTECOST. “Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain” (Acts 2:23). “Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ” (Acts 2:36).

How foolish it must sound before heavenly intelligences, and the cloud of surrounding witnesses, to hear men arguing about whether or not the Jews killed Jesus!

SOLOMON’S PORCH. “And killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses” (Acts 3:15).

• PETER AND JOHN BEFORE THE SANHEDRIN. “Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole” (Acts 4:10).

• PETER TO THE COUNCIL AND THE HIGH PRIEST. “The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree” (Acts 5:30).

How foolish it must sound before heavenly intelligences, and the cloud of surrounding witnesses, to hear men arguing about whether or not the Jews killed Jesus!

The irony is that the hardness of these people occurred when the door of salvation had been opened, a highway raised up for travel to glory, and a time of Divine acceptance was available. They were living in the day of salvation and the acceptable year.

I do not know that it is possible to accurately describe the wickedness of a generation, living during the zenith of the Sun of righteousness, who insist on living for themselves, and rejecting those who herald the glad tidings of good things. What can be said of a generation that is lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, yet choose to wear the name of Jesus, and claim identity with His church? This is a day that cries out for godly and bold men like Stephen – men who will not hold their peace!

THEY RECEIVED THE LAW BY THE DISPOSITION OF ANGELS, YET DID NOT KEEP IT

“ 53 Who have received the law by the disposition of angels, and have not kept it.”

Stephen further identifies the wicked generation of which those standing before him are members. He is speaking in the power of the Spirit, and he is saying the kind of words the Lord speaks to such people. In fact, before this is over, Jesus will stand up in recognition of this faithful man of God. I am sure that in a generation that has an appetite for trivia, and is noted for glossing the truth, there really is no place for men like Stephen.

RECEIVED THE LAW BY THE DISPOSITION OF ANGELS

“Who have received the law by the disposition of angels . . .” Other versions read, “You have received the Law by the direction of angels,” NKJV “as ordained by angels,” NASB “that was put into effect through angels,” NIV “as delivered by angels ,” RSV “as it was ordered by angels ,” BBE “by the ordinance of angels ,” GENEVA “as transmitted by angels ,” NAB “by decrees given by angels ,” NET “by arrangement of messengers ,” YLT “received them by the hands of angels ,” LIVING “the commands God gave through angels ,” IE “as it was ordained and set in order and delivered by angels ,” AMPLIFIED and “miraculously, by the hand of angels .” PHILLIPS

The phrase “disposition of angels” means “by the ministration of angels.” That is, they delivered it and put it into effect. It was transmitted by them – carried from heaven to earth for the people. Elsewhere Paul refers to the Law as “the word spoken by angels ” (Heb 2:2). Moses said that God came from Sinai with ten thousands of saints, which we judge to have been angels. “And he said, The LORD came from Sinai , and rose up from Seir unto them; He shined forth from mount Paran, and He came with ten thousands of saints : from His right hand went a fiery law for them” (Deut 33:2). The Psalmist pictured the giving of the Law as taking place at Sinai, with God among thousands and thousands of angels: “The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels: the Lord is among them, as in Sinai , in the holy place” (Psa 68:17). The Psalmist also alluded to Sinai in the eighteenth Psalm, and to the violent disruptions that took place there. In his description he wrote, “And He rode upon a cherub , and did fly: yea, He did fly upon the wings of the wind” (Psa 18:10). Paul says of the Law, “it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator” (Gal 3:19).

We have, then, the following Scriptural statements regarding the giving of the Law and angels.

- God came to Sinai with ten thousands of his saints, or angels.
- At Sinai God rode upon a cherub, or cherubim.

No one had charged Stephen with not keeping the Law, or being a transgressor of the Law . . .
No moral infraction! No defilement of the Temple! No failure to keep the commandments

At Sinai God was among twenty thousand, even thousands of angels.

- The Law was given by the disposition of angels.
- The Law was ordained by angels.
- The Law was spoken by angels.

All of this indicates that the voice the people heard when the Law was delivered was actually that of an angel, speaking for God. Because what was spoken was, in fact, the mind of the Lord, it is viewed as having been directly from Him – even though it was by means of a messenger. This perfectly accords with the manner through which John received the Revelation. It was given by God, yet when it was delivered to John, it came by means of an angel (Rev 1:1).

Something To Be Seen

Right here, the importance of sound doctrine can be seen. Once men perceive the remarkable clash of the Divine nature with the human nature, it will be easy to see why angels spoke the Law. Men could not have survived a direct confrontation with God. When men have a demeaning and common view of God, it tends to distort everything in Scripture, putting it out of their reach, so that it cannot be properly understood. That is why Jesus said to His critics, “Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life” (John 5:39-40). It is also why He said to the Sadducees, “Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God” (Matt 22:29). Their view of God Himself was skewed, and this tended to blind them to the truth of Scripture.

Stephen’s Point

The point being made is that this group of men had charged Stephen with speaking against the Temple and against the Law (Acts 6:13). Yet, they were part of a generation that had received the Law by the hands of angels – not a man – and had not kept it. No one had charged Stephen with not keeping the Law, or being a transgressor of the Law. The best charge they could trump up against him was as follows: “This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law: for we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs which Moses delivered us” (Acts 6:14). No moral infraction! No defilement of the Temple! No failure to keep the commandments! No! Just as Paul pointed out later, the righteousness of the Law was being fulfilled in Stephen, just as it is in all who believe (Rom 8:4).

But what could be said of his accusers, and of the generation to which they belonged? None of them had ever charged an angel with unfaithfulness. In all of their history, there had never been a person bold enough to say that an angel told a lie, or was not faithful in the message he delivered. There was a general consent throughout their history that angels were, in fact, greatly to be feared. Yet, even though angels had delivered the Law, yet they had not kept it, disregarding their words as though it was nothing more than the prattling of a man.

AND HAVE NOT KEPT IT

“ . . . and have not kept it.” Other versions read, “have not obeyed it .;” NIV “ do not keep it ,” CJB “haven’t obeyed those teachings ,” GWN “did not observe it ,” NAB “ deliberately disobeyed ,” NLT “deliberately destroyed ,” LIVING and “you are the men who have disobeyed it !” PHILLIPS

I am alarmed that so many versions of Scripture misrepresent this text. The expression “kept it” and “obeyed it” are not at all synonymous. The Greek word for “obeyed” is u`phkou,sate (hoop-ak-oo-sa-te), and means “to hearken to a command, to obey, be obedient unto, submit to.” THAYER The Greek word translated “kept” is evfula,xate (e-foo-la-ska-te), and means “to guard, watch, have an eye upon, to protect, and care for.” THAYER

So far as Scripture is concerned, keeping the Word precedes obeying it. Therefore Moses told the people to “keep his commandments, and obey His voice” (Deut 13:4). Again it is written, “ye shall keep My statutes, and do them” (Lev 20:8). Again we read, “that ye may learn them, and keep, and do them” (Deut 5:1). Again, and with even more specificity, it is written, “to keep all the words of this law and these statutes, to do them,” or in order to do them (Deut 17:19).

When Stephen said they had received the Law by the disposition of angels and had not kept it, he meant precisely what the word means. They had not maintained that Law with care. Rather, they had mixed it with their own traditions, and diluted it with the doctrines of men. They had not done like David, who hid the Word in his heart, that he might not sin against God (Psa 119:11). It was not their meditation night and day. They did not live by every word of God. Unlike Jeremiah, What God said was not the “joy and rejoicing” of their hearts (Jer 15:16). That is precisely why they were disobedient.

We do well to learn from this text, as well as others, the extreme jeopardy of not maintaining a firm grasp on the word of the Lord. Our security in Jesus is directly proportionate to how we maintain a hold on the Word – particularly the Gospel. This is the very point that is being established in Hebrews 2:2; “For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard Him.”

Stephen was speaking to a people who were exposed to the Scriptures but did not have a heart-grasp of them. It was therefore easy for them to think in contradiction of the Law, all the while claiming to believe it.

A Similar Situation

I cannot help but observe that we are faced with a generation that is even inferior to the one to whom Stephen was speaking. We live in a time when, within the nominal church, the level of knowledge concerning the Word of God is appalling. This is in spite of the fact that we have a “more sure word of prophecy” – one that has been accomplished, declared, and expounded. Additionally, in the New Covenant, we have the administration of the Holy Spirit who strengthens, imparts, guides, and illuminates the Word in the hearts of God’s people. To be so ignorant in this day of salvation is a transgression of such magnitude, it causes my heart to tremble. There is no excuse for it, and God will not hold such a people guiltless.

CONCLUSION

The courage of Stephen is marvelous. Yet, we cannot stand in awe of it, or be moved to imagine that he was a kind of superman. His courage and insight were the products of his faith. Faith clarifies our vision and strengthens our heart, thereby producing a bold confidence. It also brings discernment, so that the person possessing faith comes to a point where he can distinguish between good and evil. He needs no list of rules to do so, but has a character that is repulsed by sin and drawn to righteousness. It seems to me that in our time, there is a crying need for people of great faith. Good and profitable leaders will come from such a pool of people, just as surely as Stephen surfaced from a group strong believers in his day.

As long as the professing church continues to attempt to produce spiritual leaders by means of academics and institutionalism, it will remain in an impoverished and emaciated state, for neither of those can produce what is required. Our churches must be the kind that bring people to faith, and then nourishes them in the faith, seeing to it that they grow up into Christ in all things. When this happens, men like Stephen will surface again, just as surely as he did in the early church, when the sense of truth was more acute and prevalent. May you be one of those who are noted for the love of the truth.

THE STONING OF STEPHEN

“ 7:54 When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth. 55 But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, 56 And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God. 57 Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord, 58 And cast him out of the city, and stoned him: and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul. 59 And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. 60 And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep.” (Acts 7:54-60)

INTRODUCTION

Having delivered an insightful summation of Israel's history, confirming they had always been obstinate, Stephen has forthrightly charged the Council with having the same spirit as their fathers. They belonged to a generation noted for its unbelief, yet who presented themselves as being righteous. This is the generation of Satan's seed, as Jesus said to certain of that day, “Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it” (John 8:44). As God said in the first prophecy of Scripture, “enmity” is prevalent between the “seed” of the woman, and the “seed” of the serpent (Gen 3:15). That enmity, or aggressive hostility is found between the “children of the wicked one” Matt 13:38), and those who are joined to Christ (1 Cor 6:17), as well as between Him and Satan.

Stephen has declared that their part in the generation of the wicked is confirmed by their uncircumcised hearts and ears. This also accounted for the fact that they were as he declared, continually resisting the Holy Spirit, stubbornly refusing to yield to His holy influences.

In his harsh denunciation Stephen is not speaking hastily or rashly. He was not a man “hasty in words,” whom Solomon said was a fool (Prov 29:20). He was a man whom James described as being “swift to hear, slow to speak,” and “slow to wrath” (James 1:19). Some, not having cultured their spirits with the word of the Lord, consider any words like those spoken by Stephen to be spoken swiftly and in sudden wrath. However, this is not at all the case. Stephen has been patient, holding back harsh words until the time was appropriate to speak them.

This is not an outburst of fleshly anger. Nor, indeed, is it driven by a kind of carnal disappointment. This is not only a discerning response to the hard-heartedness of the people before him, it is one that is being prompted and directed by the Holy Spirit. Here is an exhibit of “the mind of the Spirit” (Rom 8:27), as well as “the mind of Christ” (1 Cor 2:16). It is an expression of “the mind of the Lord” (Rom 11:34), and is the result of Stephen’s fellowship with Christ (1 Cor 1:9). It is a confirmation that He is partaking of the Divine nature (2 Pet 1:4. That is, he is experiencing and expressing oneness with the God of heaven, through Jesus Christ, and by the Spirit. Because of this, there can be no question about the absolute validity and appropriateness of his words.

WHAT STEPHEN HAS SAID

In order to confirm the hardness of the hearts of these people, a brief review of what Stephen has said will be in order. It should also be noted that all of his words were based solidly upon Scripture, and did not reflect a perspective that originated with him. His words are found in Acts 7:2-53.

- He addressed them as “Men, brethren, and fathers” (7:2a).
- He called upon them to “hearken,” listening carefully to what he said, and weighing it thoughtfully (7:2b).
- He reminded them that “the God of glory appeared to our father Abraham” (7:2c). The record of this appearance is found in Genesis 12:1. Nehemiah also referred to this record (Neh 9:7). Isaiah also referred to this as a calling (Isa 51:2).
- God appeared to Abraham when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Ur of the Chaldees (7:2d). The fact that God appeared to Abraham before he was in Ur of the Chaldees is confirmed in Genesis 11:31-12:1.
- God told Abraham to leave his country, and his kindred, and “come into the land” that He would show him (7:3). This record is found in Genesis 12:1.

This is not an outburst of fleshly anger. Nor, indeed, is it driven by a kind of carnal disappointment. This is not only a discerning response to the hard-heartedness of the people before him, it is one that is being prompted and directed by the Holy Spirit.

- Abraham did come out of the land of the Chaldeans, dwelling in Haran until his father Terah died. He then removed from Haran and headed for the land of promise (7:4). This record is found in Genesis 11:31-32 and 12:4.

- Stephen reminded the people that Abraham himself had no inheritance in Canaan, not so much as a place to put his foot (7:5a). This is confirmed by Abraham's testimony to the children of Heth, as recorded in Genesis 23:4).

- He also recalled that God told Abraham that He would give the land to him and his seed after him, even though at the time he had no child (7:5b). This is confirmed in Genesis 12:7; 13:15; 15:3,18; and 17:8.

- He reminded his audience that God had told Abraham his progeny would journey in a strange land, and that the people there would treat them evil for four hundred years (7:6). This is confirmed in Genesis 15:13,16, and Exodus 12:40-41, which recorded their deliverance.

- Stephen declared that God had promised Abraham He would judge the nation who oppressed his seed (7:7a). This is confirmed in Genesis 15:14 and Exodus 7:1-14:31.

- God also told Abraham He would deliver the people from the nation who oppressed them, and whom He would judge (7:7b). This is confirmed in Genesis 15:16; Exodus 12:36-14:31).

- God told Abraham the people would come forth to serve Him (7:7c). This was the revealed purpose of the deliverance as declared in Exodus 3:12.

- Stephen testified to the covenant of circumcision (7:8a). This is confirmed in Genesis 17:9-14).

- He reminded them that Isaac was circumcised on the eighth day (7:8b). This is confirmed in Genesis 17:12 and 21:1-4.

- Stephen also declared that Isaac begat Jacob, and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs (7:8c). This is confirmed in Genesis 25:21-26 and 29:31-35; 30:1-24; and 35:16,23-26.

- He rehearsed how the patriarchs were moved with envy, and sold Joseph into Egypt (7:9a). This is confirmed in Genesis 37:4-11.

- He then reminded them that God was with Joseph (7:9b). This is confirmed in Genesis 39:2,5, and 21-23).

- God delivered Joseph out of all his afflictions, and gave him favor in the eyes of Pharaoh (7:10a). This is confirmed in Genesis 41:12-46.

- Stephen testified that Joseph became the governor over all of Egypt (7:10b). This is confirmed in Genesis 41:6.

- He recalled how a dearth came over all of the land of Egypt and Canaan (7:11a). This is confirmed in Genesis 41:54-5; 43:1 and Psalm 105:16.

- During this time the Jewish fathers found no sustenance in their own land (7:11b). This is confirmed in 42:1-43:1 and Genesis 47:13

Stephen then pointed out that as the time of the promised deliverance drew near, the people began to multiply in Egypt (7:17). This is confirmed in Exodus 1:7-12,20, and Psalm 105:24-25.

He referred to the first time Jacob obtained corn from Egypt (7:12). This is confirmed in Genesis 42:1-24).

- He referred to the second time Jacob send the patriarchs to Egypt for food (7:13). This is confirmed in Genesis 43:2-3.

- Stephen recalled how Joseph made himself known to his brethren during the second time (7:13a). This is confirmed in Genesis 45:1-18.

- He told how Joseph's brethren were then made known to Pharaoh (7:13b). This is confirmed in Genesis 46:31-34 and 47:1-10.

- Stephen then related how Joseph called for Jacob and all his kindred to come to Egypt (7:14a). This is confirmed in Genesis 45:9-11 and Psalm 105:23.

- He mentioned that 75 souls were brought into Egypt (7:14b). This is confirmed in Genesis 46:26-27 and Deuteronomy 10:22. There only seventy souls are mentioned. Stephen's count includes the number of the sons of Ephraim and Manasseh, who were the sons born to Joseph in Egypt. They were the ones among whom the inheritance of Joseph was divided (Num 26:35; 27:1).

- Jacob went down into Egypt and died there (7:15a). This confirmed in Genesis 49:33).

- All of the twelve patriarchs also died in Egypt (7:15b). This is confirmed in Exodus 1:6.

- Jacob and his sons were buried in Shechem, on a piece of land that Abraham had bought (7:16a). This is confirmed in Genesis 49:29-32; Exodus 13:19; and Josh 24:32.

- He mentions that Abraham bought the parcel of land from the sons of Emmor, the father of Shechem (7:16b). This is confirmed in Genesis 23:16; 49:30; and 50:13.

- Stephen then pointed out that as the time of the promised deliverance drew near, the people began to multiply in Egypt (7:17). This is confirmed in Exodus 1:7-12,20, and Psalm 105:24-25.

- This growth continued until a king rose who did not know Joseph (7:18). This is confirmed in Exodus 1:18.

- This king dealt subtly with the Jews commanding that they not permit the male children to live (7:19). This is confirmed in Exodus 1:9-22 and Psalm 105:25.

- It was during this time of jeopardy that Moses was born, and found to be a most unusual child (7:20). This is confirmed in Exodus 2:2a.

- Moses was kept in his father's house, being nourished up for three months (7:20b). This is confirmed in Exodus 2:2b).

- When Moses was put outside of the house, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and raised him as her own son (7:21). The details of this are provided in Exodus 2:3-10.

- Stephen recalls that Moses was learned in all of the wisdom and ways of Egypt (7:22). This is a detail that is not provided in the Exodus record, but is concluded from the fact that Pharaoh's daughter raised him as her own son (Exodus 2:10).

- At forty years of age, Moses visited his brethren, during which time, he avenged one of his brethren that was being oppressed by an Egyptian. The whole matter was not understood by his brethren (7:23-25). This is confirmed in Exodus 2:11-12.

- Stephen recounts how Moses visited his brethren again the next day. Upon finding two of them fighting, he tried to make peace between them, only to be rejected (7:26-28). This is confirmed in Exodus 2:13-15.

- Moses then fled from Egypt because of that saying, and came into Midian, where he beget two sons (7:29). This is confirmed in Exodus 2:15-22 and 4:20; 18:3-4.

- After forty years had expired, God called Moses through an angel who spoke in a burning bush. When Moses saw the burning bush, he turned aside to consider it (7:30-31a).

The is confirmed in Exodus 3:1-3.

- The voice of the Lord then came to Moses, declaring all of the details of the coming deliverance that would be wrought by his hand (7:31b-34). This is confirmed in Exodus 3:4-4:19.

- Although Moses was sent by God, the people did not initially receive him (7:35a). This is confirmed in Exodus 2:14.

- God sent Moses to be a ruler and deliverer, providing an accompanying angel, even the one who had spoken to him in the bush (7:35b). This is confirmed in Exodus 14:19,24; 23:20-23; 32:34; 33:2, 12-15.

- Stephen reminds the people how God had brought the Israelites out of Egypt with all manner of signs and wonders, continuing to show them wonders throughout their forty years in the wilderness (7:36). This is confirmed in Exodus 12:41; 14:21-27; 33:1; Numbers 9:15-23; 11:1-35; 14:1-45; 16:1-17:13; Deuteronomy 4:33-37; 6:21,22; Nehemiah 9:10; Psalm 78:12-13; 105:27-36, etc.

- Stephen declared that Moses had foretold a coming Prophet, to whom the people would hearken (7:37). This is confirmed in Deuteronomy 18:15-19.

- It was through Moses that the law was given to Israel (7:38). This is confirmed in Exodus 19:3-17; 20:19-20.

- Stephen reminded the council how the people did not obey Moses, but turned back to Egypt in their hearts (7:39). This is confirmed in Exodus 14:11-12; 16:3; 17:3; Numbers 11:5; 14:3-4; 21:5; Psalm 106:16-,32,33; Nehemiah 9:16-17.

- He then told them of that shameful occasion when they made the golden calf at the foot of Mount Sinai (7:40-41). This is confirmed in Exodus 32:1-8, 17-20; Deuteronomy 9:12-18; Nehemiah 9:18; Psalm 106:19-21.

- God then gave them up to worship the host of heaven, giving them over to their own lusts (7:42). This is confirmed in Psalm 81:11-12 and Second Kings 17:16-17.

- Stephen declares how they took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and practiced idolatry (7:43). This is confirmed in Second Kings 17:16-18; 21:6; and Amos 5:25-27.

- God had given to them a visible testimony of His presence in the Tabernacle, which was made according to as revealed pattern (7:44). This is confirmed in Exodus 38:21; Numbers 1:50-53; Exodus 25:40; 26:30.

- The fathers brought the Tabernacle into the land of Canaan, and set it up (7:45a). This is confirmed in Joshua 18:1.

- Following the setting up of the Tabernacle, the land was subdued before the Israelites (7:45b). This is confirmed in Nehemiah 9:24; Psalm 44:2 and 78:55.

Now, it is important to note that holy men in the past have been driven to repentance when hearing of the sordid past of Israel. For some, it has been forgotten, but the reminder of the waywardness of their fathers had moved them to godly sorrow and repentance.

The Tabernacle remained for over four hundred years, until the time of David, who found favor with the Lord. He desired to build a house for the ark of the covenant (7:45c-46). This is confirmed in Second Samuel 7:1-5; First Kings 8:17-19; First Chronicles 17:1-4, etc.

- However, Solomon was the one commissioned to actually build the Temple that David conceived (7:47). This is confirmed in 2 Samuel 7:13; First Kings 5:1-18; Second Chronicles 2:1-4:22.

- Stephen finally affirmed that God does not dwell in temples made with hands, seeing he has made the heaven and the earth and all things in them (7:49-50). This is confirmed in First Kings 8:27; Second Chronicles 2:5-6; and 6:18.

I have taken the time to briefly outline the message of Stephen in order to emphasize several things.

- First, he started by identifying them as “brethren” and “fathers.”
- Second, up to this point he has not upbraided the council.
- Third, he has said nothing that any informed Israelite did not know.
- Fourth, he has made no personal assessment of the Israelites in the past, but has confined his remarks to what Moses and the Prophets have said. Every remark has been buttressed with the Word of God.

Now, it is important to note that holy men in the past have been driven to repentance when hearing of the sordid past of Israel. For some, it has been forgotten, but the reminder of the waywardness of their fathers had moved them to godly sorrow and repentance. Here are some examples.

• THE PSALMIST: “We have sinned with our fathers, we have committed iniquity, we have done wickedly. Our fathers understood not thy wonders in Egypt; they remembered not the multitude of thy mercies; but provoked Him at the sea, even at the Red sea” (Psa 106:6-7).

• JOSIAH: “Go ye, inquire of the LORD for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found: for great is the wrath of the LORD that is kindled against us, because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us” (2 Kgs 22:13).

• HEZEKIAH: “For our fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD our God, and have forsaken Him, and have turned away their faces from the habitation of the LORD, and turned their backs” (2 Chron 29:6).

He had further preached extensively in the synagogue, displaying a “wisdom and spirit” that those who disputed with him were not able to resist. There was no need to again deliver the message of Christ to these men. They had already received abundant testimony.

EZRA: “And said, O my God, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens. Since the days of our fathers have we been in a great trespass unto this day; and for our iniquities have we, our kings, and our priests, been delivered into the hand of the kings of the lands, to the sword, to captivity, and to a spoil, and to confusion of face, as it is this day” (Ezra 9:6-7).

• JEREMIAH: “We lie down in our shame, and our confusion covereth us: for we have sinned against the LORD our God, we and our fathers, from our youth even unto this day, and have not obeyed the voice of the LORD our God” (Jer 3:25). “We acknowledge, O LORD, our wickedness, and the iniquity of our fathers: for we have sinned against Thee” (Jer 14:20). “Our fathers have sinned, and are not; and we have borne their iniquities” (Lam 5:7).

• DANIEL: “O Lord, to us belongeth confusion of face, to our kings, to our princes, and to our fathers, because we have sinned against thee” (Dan 9:8).

STEPHEN’S REFERENCE TO CHRIST

Stephen’s solitary reference to Jesus Christ was this: “This is that Moses, which said unto the children of Israel, A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; Him shall ye hear” (Acts 7:37). That is it! Not one single word more. And why was this? Why did he not deliver more positive preaching about the Messiah?

The answer ought to be obvious. He had been arrested for preaching about Christ! Not only was he “full of faith and power,” he had done “great wonders and miracles among the people,” confirming that he was a man of God – just as Moses confirmed he was from God with various signs and wonders (6:8). He had further preached extensively in the synagogue, displaying a “wisdom and spirit” that those who disputed with him were not able to resist (6:9; 7:83). There was no need to again deliver the message of Christ to these men. They had already received abundant testimony.

- They had the Law, which was designed to prepare men for Christ (Gal 3:24-25).
- They knew of the promise God made to Abraham, which was sufficient to provoke hope, as it did in the progenitor of their nation (Gen 22:18).
- They had the Scriptures, which testified of Christ (John 5:39).
- They had been subjected to the preaching of John the Baptist, who specifically came to prepare the way of the Lord (Matt 3:3,7).
- They had been subjected to the ministry of the Christ Himself (Matt 16:1; 22:23).
- They had been directly subjected to the preaching of Peter and the Apostles (Acts 4:13-20).
- The chief priest and this very council had admitted that Jerusalem had been filled with the doctrine of Christ (Acts 5:27-29).

There was no excuse for the obstinance of these people, or for their pretentious request that Stephen defend himself. They knew very well what he had been preaching, for it had been done publicly, and even amidst much dispute.

Stephen had told them what the patriarch’s knew, and that was sufficient to have prepared them for the Christ, and draw them away from idolatry. That record was also sufficient to have induced earnest inquiry among the members of the council before whom Stephen stood.

STEPHEN’ WORDS WERE ENOUGH TO INDUCE REPENTANCE

I have given these examples to confirm that a recollection of the sins of the Israelites consistently moved those of honest and good hearts to a lamentation of the past, an association of that past with their present circumstances, and to repentance. The reports themselves moved sincere men to call upon the name of the Lord, and to revenge the disobedience that had cluttered their past.

The fact that this is not happening in the council being addressed by Stephen has verified they are still in the grips of sin, and that no repentance is found in them. They are nothing at all like the people who were moved to fear when they heard of Ananias and Sapphira being judged by God. It is in view of this circumstance that Stephen now speaks concerning the audience itself. There is no need to speak any longer about their past, and how such remarkable propensities to sin had been among them. Now, Stephen will force their iniquitous hearts to overflow. He will reflect the same intolerance for sin that Moses had when he came down the mount, and which Jesus had when He cleansed the Temple.

THEY WERE CUT TO THE HEART

“ 7:54 When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth.”

Here we will be subjected to the wickedness of the flesh, the sinful nature. Not only does it lash out against the Law of God, it also stubbornly rejects the promises of God and the Gospel of Christ. The more spiritual information that is heaped upon the flesh, the more hostile it becomes. The more the truth in any of its many facets is presented to it, the more it aggravates the whole situation. That is the nature of the carnal mind – “it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be” (Rom 8:7). It is not possible to educate “the natural man” into a state of submission to God, for he “receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned” (1 Cor 2:14). He cannot be trained, schooled, or cultured in the things of God. No amount of patience and longsuffering will knock the edge off of his hostility. Reducing the things of God to childish babble will not help the situation of the person denominated a “natural man,” or who is ruled by “the carnal mind.”

If we entertain any doubts about this, the text before us will confirm this is the case. There is no way to account for the response of this council other than the fact that they were at enmity with God – and God has been the subject of Stephen’s words. He has mentioned “God” not less than seventeen times in thirteen verses (7:2,6,7,9,17,25,32,35,37, 42,43,45,46). He mentioned “the Lord” five times (7:30,31,33,37,49). The word he has delivered concerned what God had said and done, and what He had promised and delivered. He has not yet referred to anything that the council has done. In fact, he has not referred to them personally a single time. Yet they will respond just as though he has spoken about them personally.

THEY WERE CUT TO THE HEART

The meaning is that the words of Stephen were like a saw, moving back and forth through the hearts of his audience, ripping them open so their inward thoughts would be exposed. The religious mantel they had thrown over themselves in a kind of feigned dignity would be exposed as nothing more than empty appearance.

“When they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, . . .” Other versions read, “they were cut to the quick,” NASB “they were furious,” NIV “they became enraged,” NRSV “they were moved with wrath,” BBE “they were enraged in their hearts,” CSB “their hearts burst with anger,” GENEVA “they became noticeably furious,” GWN “they were filled with rage in their souls,” MRD “they were infuriated,” NLT “their hearts clave asunder,” PNT “the Jewish leaders were stung with fury,” LIVING “they became very angry,” IE “they became more and more furious,” ISV “these words stung them with fury,” PHILLIPS and “they were cut through to their hearts.” ALT

The word “cut” is translated from an unusually strong word. It is a spiritual way of referring to a conviction that incenses instead of producing godly sorrow. Taken from the Greek word diepri,onto (dee-ep-rion-to), this word has the following lexical meaning: “to saw asunder, or in twain, to divide by a saw, to be sawn through mentally,” THAYER “to divide with a saw, hence cut to the quick, infuriate,” FRIBERG and “to saw quite through.” LIDDELL-SCOTT Robertson says of this word, “Here Stephen had sent a saw through the hearts of the Pharisees that rasped them to the bone.”

WORD STUDIES

The meaning is that the words of Stephen were like a saw, moving back and forth through the hearts of his audience, ripping them open so their inward thoughts would be exposed. The religious mantel they had thrown over themselves in a kind of feigned dignity would be exposed as nothing more than empty appearance. Their religion did not expose who they really were, but was more the mask of an actor, who pretends to be someone else.

Although I have alluded to this before, it is appropriate that I do so again. It is God’s manner to expose the hypocrisy of those who feign an association with Him. As it is written, “But the word of the LORD was unto them precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken ” (Isa 28:13).

This also is fulfilled in the words God told Isaiah to speak to a hard-hearted people: “And he said, Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not.

Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes ; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed” (Isa 6:9-10).

This is also what is involved in Jesus being a Stumblingstone. “And He shall be for a Sanctuary; but for a Stone of stumbling and for a Rock of offence to both the houses of Israel, for a Gin and for a Snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem” (Isa 8:14; 1 Pet 2:8).

Sound preaching produces effects in both the save and the lost – appropriate effects. Paul stated this in an usually strong manner in Second Corinthians 2:15-17. In this text he also confirms the seriousness of seeking to avoid this manner.

Now, observe the sharp contradiction that exists between this revealed manner of God and that of the modern church. Today we are faced with vast numbers of professing Christians who have little or no appetite for the things of God. In substance, they differ nothing from the audience to whom Stephen is preaching. And what course of action are the church leaders taking? They actually reduce the people’s exposure to the Word of God. They shorten their church gatherings. They invent all manner of novel activities. They reduce the frequency of the gatherings. They engage in activities that do not require a proclamation of the truth of the Gospel. They create other ministries that have to do with problem resolution or some form of entertainment.

In all of this, they are totally unlike Moses, the Prophets, John the Baptist, Jesus, the Apostles, and Stephen. They have created a compromising form of religion that cannot possibly be a stumbling stone. It cannot unveil what is really in the hearts of the people. It brings no honor to Jesus, and opens the door for the subtle working of the evil one.

These modern-day methods and techniques would never have produced the results Stephen’s words had on the council. Modern leadership-gurus would probably have made friends of the council, and heralded them as noble people who simply lacked an understanding of the deeper things. They would have chosen a course that would have lessened the opposition of wicked men, who are “destitute of the truth” (1 Tim 6:5). It is not possible to adequately state the reprehensible nature of this kind of approach. It not only reveals a state of spiritual ignorance, but also one that is at sharp variance with “the mind of the Lord.” It confirms the individual is not operating in accordance with the Divine agenda. That is the reason for the variant approach. I will further affirm that it is not possible for the blessing of God to be upon a method or technique that is at variance with his nature.

However, confirming that he had no part with such an approach, Stephen has spoken as the Spirit has directed him, and not as the carnal mind would have preferred.

In Them that are Saved, and In Them that are Perishing

Sound preaching produces effects in both the save and the lost – appropriate effects. Paul stated this in an usually strong manner in Second Corinthians 2:15-17. In this text he also confirms the seriousness of seeking to avoid this manner. “For we are to God the fragrance of Christ among those who are being saved and among those who are perishing. To the one we are the aroma of death leading to death, and to the other the aroma of life leading to life. And who is sufficient for these things? For we are not, as so many, peddling the word of God; but as of sincerity, but as from God, we speak in the sight of God in Christ.” NKJV This is precisely what Stephen has done, and it has brought out the perishing state of the men before him. He has sawn through their hearts with the their own Scriptures.

THEY GNASHED ON HIM

“ ground their teeth against him,” RSV “ shook their fists at him in rage,” NLT and “ground their teeth in rage .” LIVING

The language is most vivid, and takes hold of our attention. What does “gnashing” mean? Lexically, the word means “to grind,” THAYER “making sounds by striking the teeth together . . . grate, grind,” FRIBERG This is an extreme expression of anger that seems to be involuntary when either rage or pain dominates a person, and they are under the control of emotion, as opposed to the their rational capacities.

Many people have experienced extreme frustration of some sort that has caused them grit their teeth with all of their strength – almost to the point of breaking their teeth. There is even a medical disorder called bruxism in which people clench and grind their teeth in their sleep, often causing jaw disorders, headaches, and damaged teeth. MAYO CLINIC

However, in this text the grinding or gnashing of the teeth is a conscious response to a circumstance. Stephen has sawn through the hearts of the council, and in doing so has exposed what was in their hearts. Remember his charge?

- They were stiff-necked.
- They were uncircumcised in heart and ears.
- They always resisted the Holy Spirit, just as their fathers did.
- They were the betrayers and murderers of Jesus.

Until this point, Stephen had not said a solitary word about them personally. However, it had become apparent that they were thrusting his words from them – even though they were a precise rehearsal of Jewish history from the Scriptures. Their rejection of this word, and their refusal to associate it with themselves, made it necessary for Stephen to expose their gross hypocrisy.

This exposure was something with which their rationality could not contend. The uncovering has thrown them into a irrational rage. Now, under the total control of the wicked one, there is no extent to which they will not go to rid themselves of this preacher.

At this point, they speak no words. Their minds are no longer capable of either processing or expressing thought. Now the flesh, with all of its dreadful propensities was operating beyond any boundary of moral restraint. There was now little difference between this council and the wild man of Gadera.

Keep in mind that this condition has not been brought on by severe pain. It is rather the result of hearing a spiritual assessment of their condition. They could have received this assessment and repented – as those on the day of Pentecost and in Solomon’s porch. However, they resisted the word instead.

While those who preach and teach must take care to “not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those who oppose themselves,” there is a boundary to that manner. Such conduct is in hopes that God will “give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, and that they may recover themselves from the snare of the devil” (2 Tim 2:24-25). When, however, it is evident that the people continue to thrust the word from themselves, there comes a time when they must be exposed for what they really are. Jesus did this with the Scribes and Pharisees (Matt 23:13-33). Paul and Barnabas did this in the synagogue of Antioch of Pisida (Acts 13:46). Paul also did this in the synagogue of Corinth when he first went there (Acts 18:6).

Paul also instructed Timothy not to receive an accusation against an elder, except on the basis of two or three witnesses. However, should the charge against an elder be substantiated, he told the young evangelist, “Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear” (1 Tim 5:20).

The point to be seen here is that the wicked are thoroughly exposed by godly assessment and denunciation. Yet the servant of God must not shun to upbraid those who stubbornly continue in unbelief. We have godly Stephen as an example of this, as well as Jesus Himself and those He commissioned to preach.

BEING FULL OF THE SPIRIT

“ 55a But he, being full of the Holy Ghost . . .” Other versions read, “being full of the Holy Spirit,” NKJV “filled with the Holy Spirit,” NRSV “full of faith and of the Holy Spirit,” MRD “full of the Holy Spirit and controlled by Him,” AMPLIFIED and “filled through all his being with the Holy Spirit.” PHILLIPS

“BUT”

The word “but” is significant. It comes from the small Greek word de. (deh) which means “but, or moreover, and is used universally, by way of opposition and distinction; it is added to statements opposed to a preceding statement,” THAYER “used to emphasize contrast.” FRIBERG

Here Stephen is contrasted with the council – one man with a whole body of men. They are all in the same place at the same time. Their minds have been directed to the same subject – the rehearsal of the inspired history of the Jewish people. Yet, their responses are as different as day from night. Here we have a child of God and the children of the wicked one in juxtaposition, or opposite of one another. They have two different natures, so we should expect them to react differently to the unvarnished truth. In this case, the saying of Paul is fulfilled: “But all things that are reprov'd are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light” (Eph 5:13).

The light has illuminated the condition of both parties – Stephen, and the council. Jesus said this would be the effect of light, particularly as shining forth from His own person. “But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God” (John 3:21).

BEING FULL OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

The text does not say that at this time Stephen was filled with the Spirit, but that this was His condition – “being full.” There two words, “being full,” are a translation of two individual Greek words (Upa,rcwn – being, and plh,rhj – full, and pneu,matoj – Spirit). The word translated “being” has the following lexical meaning: “to be there, ready, at hand,” THAYER “exist, be present, be at hand,” FRIBERG “be at one’s disposal,” UBS “to be in a state,” LOUW-NIDA and “really exist, be present.” GINGRICH

Therefore, this text is not saying that as they began to gnash their teeth upon Stephen, he was suddenly filled with the Spirit, or experienced the Spirit coming upon him. This is an example of a state into which all believers are called: “And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit” (Eph 5:18). That is, this is not a mere experience, as some allege, but is a condition or state of being.

Full of the Spirit

And, what does it mean to be “full of the Spirit”? Technically it means to be filled up, with no room for anything else. It involves being “controlled by the Spirit,” and is so translated in the Amplified Bible. In representing a passage in Romans 8:6-8 that concerns being “spiritual minded,” the New International version uses the word “controlled” twice: “The mind of sinful man is death, but the mind controlled by the Spirit is life and peace” (Rom 8:6), and “Those controlled by the sinful nature cannot please God. You, however, are controlled not by the sinful nature but by the Spirit, if the Spirit of God lives in you. And if anyone does not have the Spirit of Christ, he does not belong to Christ” (Rom 8:8-9).

Men may choose to philosophize about the matter of being “controlled” by an influence outside of themselves. However, all such reasoning is nothing more than an exercise in vanity. It is written that there are people who are taken captive by Satan “at his will” (2 Tim 2:26). Jesus also told His disciples that there would be times that their speaking would actually be directed by the Holy Spirit: “For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you” (Matt 10:20).

There is also a condition that has been revealed as the Divine objective for the body of Christ: “And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God” (Eph 3:19). This is associated with salvation itself, and not with a particular office like that of an apostle or prophet. The ultimate objective of the salvation of God is to conform those who are justified to the image of His Son (Rom 8:29). That involves the transformation of the body, which is described the “purchased possession” (Eph 1:14). However, it is not limited to that “change,” which will take place at the appearing of Christ (Phil 3:20-21).

While we await the time when we will put on immortality, our spirits are being cultured to be compatible with the bodily “house” that is reserved for us in heaven (2 Cor 5:1-5). This transformation is fundamentally within our basic nature, which, in turn, brings about a change in our conduct. It therefore includes our heart, which is the seat of our affections, and the fountain from which all of our expression flows.

Our perception is also being refined, as well as our purpose for living, and our capacity for expression. This all occurs when the individual is “filled with the Spirit,” or “filled with all the fulness of God.” It is in this condition that one is said to be walking “in the Spirit” (Gal 5:16,25). This is the state in which “the deeds of the body” are “mortified” (Rom 8:13), and the individual has a mind that is “controlled by the Spirit” NIV (Rom 8:6).

All of this is done without any element of coercion. It is not necessary for the Holy Spirit to subdue men, or throw them down to the ground in order for this to be accomplished. Salvation makes men malleable in the hand of the Lord, and fillable, if I may coin a word.

Therefore, when Stephen is said to be “full of the Spirit,” a state is being described in which his mind – thoughts, affections, and expressions – are being controlled by the Spirit. This is not “control” in the sense of coercive domination. The Spirit is not acting as a conqueror of the human will, but as the Director and Leader of the one who has chosen to follow Jesus. Strictly speaking, although it is outside the realm of nature, being filled with the Spirit is not a miracle. It is rather the manner of the Kingdom in which one is consciously and cognitively walking in heavenly places. There is a keen awareness of what is going on, a glad participation in it, and the ability to correlate it with truth.

These days, a lot of what is represented as being “filled with the Spirit” is a kind of subduing of the recalcitrant will and ways of the people. It is something like God putting a halter on the people and making them do what they would not otherwise consent to do. But this is not at all the manner of the Kingdom. In Christ, as prophesied by the Psalmist, the people are “willing in the day of His power” (Psa 110:3). They are willing because of preference, not force. The laws of God has been put into their minds and written upon their hearts (Heb 10:16), and their fundamental inclination is to the Lord. That is the nature of regeneration. A person who has to be forced like Balaam to do the will of God has not been regenerated – or has departed from the living God through unbelief. That is a sign of unregeneracy.

HE SAW THE GLORY OF GOD

“ 55b . . . looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God.”

Stephen had been addressing the council and was therefore looking at them. Now, however, having finished the word he was given to say to them, he fixes his gaze upward – he “looked up.” The posture of looking up was also assumed by the Lord Jesus, confirming His constant awareness of the heavenly realm and the Father’s residence there. When He blessed the five loaves and two fishes, He “looked up to heaven” (Mk 6:41). When He healed a deaf man with an impediment of speech it is said of him, “and looking up to heaven, He sighed, and saith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, ‘Be opened’” (Mk 7:34). On the night in which He was betrayed, when He poured out His soul in a powerful intercessory prayer, it is written, “ These words spake Jesus, and lifted up His eyes to heaven” (John 17:1).

And what is the significance of this? It is simply this, Jesus and those who walk with Him are more conscious of heaven than of earth! Those who are walking in the light as Jesus is in the light (1 John 1:7) are keenly aware that “the heavens do rule” (Dan 4:26), and therefore they are not subject to happenstance. They resort to the Lord in their time of trouble – often even in their physical posture. They bring their bodies into subjection, governing them with a mind to the Kingdom of God rather than the circumstances of life.

HE LOOKED UP STEADFASTLY

“ . . . looked up steadfastly into heaven . . .” Other versions read, “ gazed into heaven,” NKJV “ gazed intently into heaven,” NASB “looked up to heaven,” NIV

The fact that Stephen looked into heaven accents the expectant nature of faith. He did not look with a questioning stare, but with a confident gaze. He was, in a very practical sense, being “saved by hope.” I can tell you that at this time, Stephen is not thinking about possessions, or houses, or lands. He is not pondering treasures laid up upon the earth, or a career, or his status within the church.

“having fixed his eyes on heaven,” DARBY “looked towards heaven,” MRD “ looked up intently to heaven,” NAB “gazed steadily upward into heaven,” LIVING “looked straight into heaven,” ISV “he looked right into heaven,” WILLIAMS and “ looked steadily up into Heaven.” PHILLIPS

His heart was “fixed,” and his eyes were riveted on the heavenly realm. The eagle eye of his faith pierced through the the domain of nature, reaching into the unseen realms. Like Moses, he was seeing Him who is invisible (Heb 11:27). He had a concentrated and extended gaze, focusing on the domain to which he was about to be carried by angelic hosts.

The fact that Stephen looked into heaven accents the expectant nature of faith. He did not look with a questioning stare, but with a confident gaze. He was, in a very practical sense, being “saved by hope.” I can tell you that at this time, Stephen is not thinking about possessions, or houses, or lands. He is not pondering treasures laid up upon the earth, or a career, or his status within the church. There comes a time when all such things are removed from the mind, and blessed is the person who prepares for it!

Here Stephen lives out in a visible manner that was happening in his heart. He was “looking unto Jesus,” and doing so at the completion of his race. He was able to do this because he had run the race in this posture, and therefore for him it was, so to speak, natural to gaze even more intently at this time. This is, after all, one of the great benefits of living by faith. This enables the individual to also die by faith, as he fights the last and greatest battle of life. The gaze that enabled Stephen to overcome in life, will also cause him to conquer in death.

Here Stephen fulfills a wonderful word delivered by Solomon: “The name of the LORD is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe” (Prov 18:10). Stephen is running into the tower, and will thus find safety during his closing hours. Oh, the stones will still pummel his body, finally crushing the life from it. However, I do not doubt that he was given such grace as made him superior to pain, if not altogether oblivious of it. There is great power in heavenly distraction from this world.

HE SAW THE GLORY

“ . . . and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God.” Other versions read, “He saw God’s glory, with Jesus standing at the right hand of God,” CSB “saw God’s glory, and Jesus in the position of authority that God gives,” GWN “saw the glory (the splendor and majesty) of God, and Jesus standing at God’s right hand,” AMPLIFIED and “he saw our glorious God and Jesus standing at his right side.” CEV

From these, and other texts, it is apparent that the glory of God is a central consideration. It therefore behooves us to obtain some intelligent concept of what it is.

What a marvelous statement! After leaving Egypt, Israel saw “the glory of the Lord” as it appeared in a cloud (Ex 16:10). They also saw “the glory of the Lord . . . like a devouring fire on the top of the mount” (Ex 24:17). When the Temple was dedicated, Israel saw “the glory of God” (2 Chron 7:3). Three different times Ezekiel said he “saw . . . the appearance of the likeness of the glory of God” (Ezek 1:28; 3:23; 9:4). Isaiah saw “the glory” of the Lord (Isa 6:1-3; John 12:41).

What Is The Glory of God?

The phrase “the glory of God” occurs fourteen times in Scripture (Psa 19:1; Prov 25:2; John 11:4,40; Acts 7:55; Rom 3:23; 5:2; 15:7; 1 Cor 10:31; 2 Cor 1:20; 2 Cor 4:6,15; Phil 2:11; Rev 15:8; 21:11,23). Referring to the Lord, “His glory” is mentioned thirty-four times (i.g. Deut 5:24; 1 Chron 16:24; Psa 78:61; Isa 60:2; Hab 3:3; Heb 1:3). There are several intriguing phrases used in connection with the glory of God. They provide a sense of its marvelous scope.

- “ . . . everyone shall speak of His glory” (Psa 29:9).
- “ . . . the eyes of His glory” (Isa 3:6).
- “ . . . the throne of His glory” (Matt 19:28).
- “ . . . the riches of His glory” (Rom 9:23; Eph 3:16).
- “ . . . the praise of His glory” (Eph 1:12,14).
- “ . . . the brightness of His glory” (Heb 1:3).
- “ . . . the presence of His glory” (Jude 1:24).

From these, and other texts, it is apparent that the glory of God is a central consideration. It therefore behooves us to obtain some intelligent concept of what it is.

There is no Scriptural definition of the glory of God – like there is of faith (Heb 11:1), hope (Rom 8:24-25), love (1 Cor 13), and God’s longsuffering (2 Pet 3:15). Most of the references to the glory of God have to do with manifestations or expressions of the Lord – something that could be seen, either by faith or, as at Sinai, a visible appearance of His glory.

These references indicate something of what is meant by the glory of God. His glory is what can be seen or discerned of Him – and that is always something that He Himself makes known, for the characteristics of God’s Person cannot be seen with the naked eye. Thus God’s glory has been made seen in a cloud (Ex 16:10), fire (Ex 24:17), and visions (Ezek 8:4), etc.

However the most precise and thorough manifestation of the glory of God is found in Jesus Christ,

His only begotten Son. This is experienced in regeneration, and the spiritual growth that results from it. As it is written, “For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ ” (2 Cor 4:6). This glory has transforming power, changing the spirit of man like the visible glory of God changed the skin of Moses face, causing it to glow as the sun (Ex 34:29-30). Therefore it is written, “But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord” (2 Cor 3:18).

The glory of God is what He is pleased to reveal about Himself. At its apex, this glory has to do with salvation, which is nothing less than the execution of the eternal purpose of God. Therefore, when Stephen saw the glory of God, it is most appropriate that he saw Jesus standing at the right hand of God – the place reserved for carrying the salvation of God to its completion.

By its very nature, the glory of God involves His expression of Himself, whether in the confirmation of His presence, words that make His mind known, or works that reveal some aspect of His Person or purpose. In regard to what Stephen saw, the glory of God consisted of a revelation of what is taking place in heaven regarding the salvation of men. For Stephen, this will prove to be a confirming sight, and will assist in preparing Him for his departure – kind of departure that requires much grace.

STEPHEN REPORTS WHAT HE SEES

“ 56 And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God.”

As anyone who has knowingly been exposed to the glory of God , Stephen will tell us what he saw. For those of tender heart, this is standard procedure. Isaiah “saw the Lord” in the year that king Uzziah died – and he testified about it (Isa 6:1). Ezekiel “saw visions of God,” and he told about it (Ezek 1:1-28; 3:23-24; 8:4-18; 10:15–22). This has been a consistent practice of holy men. When they saw or heard from God, they related the occasion to the people. Moses did this, together with all of the prophets. The pinnacle of this manner is found in the Lord Jesus Christ. The Savior said that He spoke what He had heard from the Father (John 8:26,40; 15:15). He declared that the works He was showing were “from” His Father (John 10:32). In fact, He referred to His works as “the works of My Father” (John 10:37). He told His disciples that both His words and His works were directly related to the Father (John 14:10).

This is a Kingdom manner that is sorely needed in our day – speaking that have been “seen and heard” (Acts 4:20). There is far too much second-hand religion in our day. Many who come in the name of the Lord rarely make known something that they have seen, perceived, or comprehended of the Kingdom of God. This is why there are so many professed experts in family life, raising children, governing finances, starting churches, and other interpersonal human relationships. You will search the Scriptures in vain to find ministries of this sort. They are all of human origin.

I SEE THE HEAVENS OPENED

“And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened . . .” Other versions read, “I see heaven open,” NIV “Look , I see the heavens opened,” LIVING “I can see Heaven wide open ,” WEYMOUTH and ““Look!” he exclaimed, " the heavens are opened .” PHILLIPS

Prior to Christ, the only person who ever said he saw the heavens opened was Ezekiel: “Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God ” (Ezek 1:1). The only other reference to either heaven or the heavens being perceived as being opened pertains to God sending rain (Gen 7:11; Psa 78:23; Isa 24:18. NIV Through Malachi, God told the people if they would bring all of the tithes into the storehouse he would “open” the “windows of heaven” to them, and pour out a blessing “that there would not be room enough to receive it” (Mal 3:10).

Aside from these references, there are no other texts that directly say that heaven, or the heavens, were seen as open. Isaiah said he saw “the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up” (Isa 6:1). Micaiah the prophet said, “I saw the Lord sitting on His throne” (1 Kgs 22:19). Amos said, “I saw the Lord standing upon the altar” (Amos 9:1).

The heavens being opened is the direct result of Jesus taking away the sins of the world. That is precisely why, when he died, “the veil of the Temple was rent in twain,” signifying that “the way into the holiest” had been opened for the

But with the advent of Jesus, we are given to understand that the heavens have been opened in a new and fresh way! When Jesus was baptized “the heavens opened” (Mk 1:10). When He first met Nathanael, Jesus told him, “Verily, verily, I say unto you, Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man” (John 1:51). In our text, Stephen said he saw “the heavens opened” (Acts 7:56). When Peter was on the rooftop of Simon the tanner’s house, he “saw heaven opened” (Acts 10:11). When John received the Revelation on the Isle of Patmos, he “looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven” (Rev 4:1). He also “saw heaven opened” (Rev 19:11).

The heavens being opened is the direct result of Jesus taking away the sins of the world. That is precisely why, when he died, “the veil of the Temple was rent in twain” (Matt 27:51), signifying that “the way into the holiest” had been opened for the sons of men to come to God (Heb 9:8).

Heaven has been “opened” because a reconciliation between God and man has been accomplished by Jesus Christ (Col 1:21). He had “made peace through the blood of His cross” (Col 1:20), and now men can draw near to God “with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water” (Heb 10:22). Now Jesus has consecrated “a new and living way,” by which we can come to God (Heb 10:20). Men are no longer held aloof from God, as they were under the Old Covenant. Now, through Jesus, they have “access” to God “with confidence” (Eph 3:12).

This is why Stephen could see the heavens opened – because a reconciliation had been effected by Christ, and he by faith had appropriated it. Now, as his life was being pounded out of his body, he is afforded a glimpse of the land toward which he was about to embark.

THE SON OF MAN STANDING

“ . . . and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God.” Other versions read, “and the Son of man at the right hand of God,” BBE “the Son of Man in the position of authority that God has given him!” GWN “ and “and I can see the Son of Man standing at God's right hand!” PHILLIPS

Every other reference to Jesus’ posture in the heavens say He is seated.

- “The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit Thou at My right hand, until I make Thine enemies Thy footstool” (Psa 110:1; Mk 12:35; Heb 1:13).
- “So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, He was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God” (Mark 16:19).
- “Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high” (Heb 1:3).

- “But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God” (Heb 10:12).

Stephen had this vision before they cast him out of the city. Having made his pronouncement of the depravity of this council, it is as though Jesus rose to give honor to Stephen, and to tell him it was now time for him to enter into the rest that remains for the people of God (Heb 4:9).

How did Stephen know it was Jesus, and not an angel, or cherubim, or seraphim? It is because Jesus cannot be seen as He is without instantly knowing Who He is! When He returns in all of His glory, and “every eye” sees Him, there will be no questions about who He is! God only has to “show” Him, as He has determined to do, and He will be at once recognized.

How did Stephen know it was Jesus, and not an angel, or cherubim, or seraphim? It is because Jesus cannot be seen as He is without instantly knowing Who He is! When He returns in all of His glory, and “every eye” sees Him (Rev 1:7), there will be no questions about who He is! God only has to “show” Him, as He has determined to do (1 Tim 6:15), and He will be at once recognized. For the damned, the horror and pain of that moment defies all description. They will at once see how foolish it was to neglect “the Man Christ Jesus,” choosing their own worldly interests over the Lord of glory.

But this is not how Stephen sees the glorified Christ! He does not shrink back in horror at the sight of the standing Jesus, as though he was going to be judged! Instead, this is his time of triumph!

A Word About Preaching Jesus

This is why pure Gospel preaching is so essential – preaching that clarifies the Person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. This is done throughout the Epistles, which contain the exposition of the Gospel. In fact, we would know very little about the nature and content of the Gospel if it was not for the Epistles – what was written to the body of Christ, which is the church. Ponder some of the aspects of the Gospel that are opened up in what the Spirit says to the churches.

- Christ is the end of the Law as a means to righteousness (Rom 10:4).
- The Gospel declares that God is just in justifying those who believe in Jesus (Rom 3:26).
- Jesus was delivered for our offences, and raised for our justification (Rom 4:25).
- When we were enemies, we were reconciled by the death of God’s Son (Rom 5:9).
- By the obedience of Jesus, many are made righteous (Rom 5:19).
- The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus frees us from the law of sin and death (Rom 8:2).
- God delivered Jesus up, and will much more freely give us all things through him (Rom 8:32).
- Jesus gave Himself for our sins to deliver us from this present evil world (Gal 1:4).
- We have been made accepted in the Beloved (Eph 1:6).
- In Christ Jesus we are made nigh unto God through His blood (Eph 2:13).
- Through Christ’s death believers will be presented holy and unblameable and unprovable in His sight (Col 1:21).
- In His death Jesus spoiled principalities and powers (Col 2:15).
- Jesus died that we might live together with Him (1 Thess 5:10).
- Jesus gave Himself to redeem to Himself peculiar people, zealous of good works

(Tit 2:14).

- Through His death Jesus destroyed the devil (Heb 2:14).
- Jesus was raised from the dead in order that our faith and hope might be in God (1 Pet 1:21).
- Jesus suffered once for our sins in order that He might bring us to God (1 Pet 3:18).
- Jesus was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil (1 John 3:8).

These are just a few examples of the Gospel found in the Epistles. Those who affirm that the Gospel is only preached to those outside of Christ could not possibly be more wrong. The vast majority of what we know about Jesus has been addressed exclusively to the church. No person can afford to be ignorant of this fact.

When Jesus is seen as He really is, it brings enabling power to the discerning soul. This is precisely why Stephen was able to conduct himself as he did. He knew the Christ of the Gospel, otherwise he never would have been given to see Him standing at God's right hand. In my judgment, much of the modern church has been robbed of this blessed benefit – knowing Christ. The impact this has had upon Christendom as a whole, is so significant that it cannot even be estimated.

THEIR VOICE, THEIR EARS, AND THE ACTION

“ 57 Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord,” Other versions read, “But they cried out with a loud voice, and covered their ears , and they rushed upon him with one impulse ,” NKJV “At this they covered their ears and, yelling at the top of their voices , they all rushed at him,” NIV “But they covered their ears, and with a loud shout all rushed together against him,” NRSV “But with loud cries, and stopping their ears, they made an attack on him all together,” BBE “At this, they began yelling at the top of their voices, so that they wouldn't have to hear him ; and with one accord, they rushed at him,” CJB “then they screamed at the top of their voices, stopped their ears, and rushed together against him,” CSB “But the council members shouted and refused to listen . Then they rushed at Stephen with one purpose in mind .” GWN “All the members of the council shouted out and stopped their ears with their hands; then they made a concerted rush at him ,” NJB “Then they mobbed him , putting their hands over their ears, and drowning out his voice with their shouts ,” LIVING “Upon this, with a loud outcry they stopped their ears, rushed upon Stephen in a body ,” WEYMOUTH “But they raised a loud shout, held their ears shut , and together they all rushed at him,” ISV “But they raised a great shout and put their hands over their ears and rushed together upon him,” AMPLIFIED and “At this they put their fingers in their ears . Yelling with fury, as one man they made a rush at him,” PHILLIPS

Do you wonder what unbelief can do to the hearts of men? Wherever the Word of God is not preached with discernment, no one will ever know what is in the hearts of men! It is the truth that exposes men for what they really are – whether they have honest and good hearts, or whether they have wicked hearts.

Paul was alluding to this when he spoke of the reputation he and his colleagues had gained through their preaching. “But IN all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings; by pureness, by knowledge, by longsuffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, By the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armour of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, by honour and dishonour , by evil report and good report: as deceivers , and yet true; as unknown , and yet well known; as dying , and, behold, we live; as chastened , and not killed; as sorrowful , yet always rejoicing; as poor , yet making many rich; as having nothing , and yet possessing all things” (2 Cor 6:4-10).

It is in the crucible of conflict that the real ministers of God are approved. There is where both life and death are made known – particularly when the conflict has been uncovered by the Word of God. The preaching of Stephen has drawn a line between himself and his audience. It has uncovered what they did not have, and what he did have.

Of course, when men compromise the truth, in the hopes of placating the people, they never really know whether they are dealing with wheat or tares, the children of the Kingdom or the children of the wicked one. When one caters to the whims of people with itching ears, he is always preaching in the dark, never knowing whether he is standing before goats of sheep, a generation of vipers or the generation of the godly.

In this text we have a sterling example of how our “members,” or capacities of expression, can be employed. The exhortation to those who are members of the household of faith is this: “Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God” (Rom 6:13).

Stephen yielded his members as instruments of righteousness unto God.

- He preached the truth.
- He assessed the situation correctly.
- He looked steadfastly into heaven.
- He told what he had seen.
- He prayed for his murderers.

The council yielded their members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin.

- They cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears.
- They ran upon Stephen.
- They dragged him out of the city.
- They stoned him.

In an outburst of rage, they screamed out, covering their ears so they could hear no other words from Stephen, and rushed upon him like a pack of mad dogs. That is the nature of the flesh. That is one reason for the rigid commandments under the Law against harming ones neighbor, or treating them unjustly. It was only under the threat of death that such outbursts could in any way be minimized.

Of course, when men compromise the truth, in the hopes of placating the people, they never really know whether they are dealing with wheat or tares, the children of the Kingdom or the children of the wicked one. When one caters to the whims of people with itching ears, he is always preaching in the dark, never knowing whether he is standing before goats of sheep, a generation of vipers or the generation of the godly.

However, when ones religion is used to justify their flesh to the fullest extent allowed by civil law, they attack the truth and those who speak it. But make no mistake about this, in order for outbursts like this to take place, the people must be uncircumcised in heart and ears, be stubborn and rebellious, and resist the Holy Spirit. Of course, that is precisely how Stephen described them. His description was marked by the precision of an inspired mind.

THEY CAST HIM OUT AND STONED HIM

“ 58a And cast him out of the city, and stoned him . . .” Other versions read, “And when they had driven him out of the city, they began stoning him,” NASB “dragged him out of the city and began to stone him ,” NIV “Driving him out of the town and stoning him ,” BBE “ threw him outside the city and began stoning him,” CJB “and after they had thrown him out of the city, they began to stone him to death ,” GWN “And they seized him , and hurried him out of the city , and stoned him,” MRD “ thrust him out of the city and stoned him,” NJB “and having cast him forth outside of the city, they were stoning him ,” YLT and “and hustled him out of the city and stoned him.” PHILLIPS

There was nothing gentle about their treatment of Stephen, and there were no laws in place to protect his “rights.” Here we are being exposed to raw religious flesh – which is the worst of all flesh. This very council, and probably many of the very same people, had opposed Jesus throughout His ministry, seeking ways to rid themselves of His influence (John 5:18; 7:1, 30; 11:6; Matt 21:46; 26:4; Mk 12:12; Lk 19:47; 20:19). They eagerly fulfilled the words of Jesus, “Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes; and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles: and they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him: and the third day he shall rise again” (Mark 10:33-34).

Now, after some time had passed, the hearts of these men have only grown more hard. At first, they were content to attempt a form of civil proceedings, asking Stephen to defend himself against the charges. However, as the mock trial had continued, they could conceal their hatred no longer. Now, it is too large to hide under the veneer of religion.

At first, they were content to attempt a form of civil proceedings, asking Stephen to defend himself against the charges. However, as the mock trial had continued, they could conceal their hatred no longer. Now, it is too large to hide under the veneer of religion.

The picture is of the men dragging Stephen out of the city, and stoning him as they went . They did not even wait for the pronouncement of a sentence. At least with Jesus, there was the pronouncement of the final decision: “And they condemned Him to be guilty of death” (Mk14:64). But no such condemnation is pronounced against Stephen. They just proceed to execute him. When flesh is backed into a corner, it will not repent, but push forward with every ounce of energy it has. That is the nature of flesh. It cannot learn, reason, or back away from its desires.

To this point, the Jewish leaders have been absolutely consistent in their response to the truth.

- JOHN THE BAPTIST. When John the Baptist appeared on the scene, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, these leaders did not submit to it. It is written, “But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him” (Luke 7:30). Yet, their opposition was somewhat subdued, because they feared the people, whom they knew took John to be a prophet (Mk 11:32).

- JESUS CHRIST. When Jesus came, the opposition of these men increased in its intensity. They repeatedly sought to trap Jesus in His words (Matt 16:1; 22:35; Mk 10:2; 12:13; John 8:3-6). From the first part of His ministry, they sought to kill Him (Matt 21:46; Mk 12:12; Lk 19:47; John 5:18; 7:1,25,30). Finally, they paid to have Him betrayed, hurried Him through a mock trial, and delivered Him to Pilate to be crucified (Matt 27:1-2; Mk 15:1).

- PETER AND JOHN. Early on, the Temple authorities opposed Peter and John as they taught in the Temple. They laid hold, of them, examined them, and told them not to preach in the name of Jesus (Acts 4:1-1-3,17-18,21). Later they arrested them again, and put them in prison (Acts 5:17-18). After the angel of the Lord had released them, they found the apostles in the Temple preaching, and arrested them again. This time they had them beaten before they released them, again commanding them to speak no more in the name of Jesus, even though they had intended to kill them (Acts 5:26-28,33,40).

• STEPHEN. Now they have confronted Stephen, and their animosity has increased even more. They do not have Stephen beaten, but drag him out of the city, stoning him as they went. This time they will carry out their evil intent. They will not ask the Roman government to do their work, as they did with Jesus, but will do it themselves. After all, it was not a high day at this time as it was when Jesus was delivered up. They were therefore free from the restraints of the formalities of their religion.

SOMETHING TO BE NOTED

It ought to be noted that when the church allows the flesh to enter the assembly, it has embarked on a course they will not be able to control. The only way to overcome the flesh is to mortify or crucify it. God has passed the death sentence upon “the flesh,” and those who wear His name must do so also. The reason for this is owing to at least two things. First, the flesh cannot be tamed, and therefore increases in its wretched manners. Second, God cannot bear the flesh, having permanently excluded it from His Kingdom. Therefore, it is incumbent upon the church to keep “the flesh,” the “carnal mind,” and “the natural man” out of its assemblies. There is to be a zero tolerance for all fleshly expressions and exhibitions, for the carnal mind is enmity against God.

A YOUNG MAN NAMED SAUL

We will behold here how the flesh can be meticulous in its ways, careful to fulfill some requirements, while it presses into forbidden areas with zeal. You may recall, they did not want to kill Jesus on “the feast day, lest there be an uproar among the people” (Matt 26:5). That is another one of the unreasonable manners of the flesh .

THE WITNESSES LAID DOWN THEIR CLOTHES

“ . . . and the witnesses laid down their clothes . . .” Other versions read, “the witnesses laid their robes,” NASB “laid their coats,” NRSV “laid down their garments,” RSV “laid down their cloaks,” NAB “laid aside their robes,” NAS “His accusers took off their coats and laid them,” NJB “The official witnesses – the executioners – took off their coats and laid them,” LIVING “The men, who told lies against Stephen, gave their robes,” IE “the witnesses throwing off their outer garments and giving them,” WEYMOUTH “Meanwhile , the witnesses laid their coats at the feet,” ISV “in the meantime , laid their clothes at the feet,” WILLIAMS “placed their garments at the feet,” AMPLIFIED and “The witnesses of the execution flung their clothes at the feet.” PHILLIPS

The Law had addressed certain sins worthy of capital punishment, and had outlined how the sentence was to be carried out. Here is what it said.

• SOMEONE GIVING THEIR CHILDREN TO MOLECH. “Again, thou shalt say to the children of Israel, Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth any of his seed unto Molech; he shall surely be put to death : the people of the land shall stone him with stones ” (Lev 20:2).

• A PERSON WITH A FAMILIAR SPIRIT, OR A WIZARD. “A man also or woman that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard , shall surely be put to death: they shall stone them with stones: their blood shall be upon them” (Lev 20:27).

• SOMEONE SAYING THEY SHOULD WORSHIP OTHER GODS. “If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers ; Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; Thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him: But thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people. And thou shalt stone him with stones, that he die; because he hath sought to thrust thee away from the LORD thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage” (Deut 13:6-10).

• A PERSON FOUND SERVING AND WORSHIPING OTHER GODS. “If there be found among you, within any of thy gates which the LORD thy God giveth thee, man or woman, that hath wrought wickedness in the sight of the LORD thy God, in transgressing his covenant, and hath gone and served other gods, and worshiped them, either the sun, or moon, or any of the host of heaven, which I have not commanded ; And it be told thee, and thou hast heard of it, and inquired diligently , and, behold, it be true, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought in Israel: Then shalt thou bring forth that man or that woman, which have committed that wicked thing, unto thy gates, even that man or that woman, and shalt stone them with stones, till they die . At the mouth of two witnesses, or three witnesses, shall he that is worthy of death be put to death ; but at the mouth of one witness he shall not be put to death. The hands of the witnesses shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterward the hands of all the people. So thou shalt put the evil away from among you” (Deut 17:2-7).

There are other capital offenses, but these represent the nature of them all. They involved either spiritual or moral corruption. I have mentioned them to point out that no such charges were even leveled against Stephen. The official charges were as follows: “And set up false witnesses, which said, This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law: for we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs which Moses delivered us” (Acts 6:13-14). There was no charge of idolatry, being a false prophet, and indulging in immorality or curious arts!

The Law required that a careful examination of charges against the person take place. The judges were to hear the charges, examine them carefully, and determined if they were true (Deut 17:9). None of this had been done in the case of Stephen. We ought to learn from this not to be surprised if those who walk in the flesh are not just in their assessments, or are unreasonable in their opposition. The children of God cannot afford to be naive about the nature of the flesh – especially religious flesh.

The witnesses to which our text refers were those men who raised a false report against Stephen. They took off their outer garments, because stoning was a vigorous activity, and would not allow them to do so while wearing their coats. So they removed them.

You may remember the time

Yet these people have grown worse, not better. As children of the Kingdom, we make it our aim to get more of the Word into our society, and to proclaim the Gospel with insight and power. But we are not juvenile in our view of this. This could make things worse, not better.

when the scribes and Pharisees brought a woman to Jesus who had been taken in the very act of adultery. Being sticklers for the letter of the law, and thinking that Jesus was not, they reminded the Lord concerning the requirements of the Law, then asked Him what He had to say about the matter. Jesus stooped down, “and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not” (John 8:6). When they continued asking Him what He had to say about the matter Jesus “lifted up Himself, and said unto them, He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her” (John 8:7). He did not say for the witnesses to cast the first stone, but for the one who was without sin. All of them were apparently witnesses, for they said the woman had been taken in the very act of adultery. After saying these words, Jesus stooped down and continued writing on the ground.

Perhaps He was writing a list of names. At any rate, the men who had brought the woman to Jesus “being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last: and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst” (John 8:9).

But this is not what happens here. The witnesses are more bold – even though they were false witnesses. They did not find Stephen in any unlawful activity. Yet, they were bold and brash, and conducted themselves just as though the false charges were the truth. This is how sin can harden people, so that men actually become worse than their predecessors.

There is something to be noted here. Some are of the opinion that if we could get prayer back in the schools, and better preaching in the churches, a recovery of the moral degradation of our country could be realized. That this is possible cannot be denied. That it is something the godly desire is certainly the truth. Yet, we cannot be overly simplistic in this matter. The people in our text lived in the time when John the Baptist prepared the people for the Messiah with powerful preaching. They had been exposed to the greatest Preacher of all, who had gone about their country doing good and healing all who were oppressed of the devil. They had often heard the powerful preaching of the Apostles, and witnessed their confirming miracles. Now they had heard the effective preaching of Stephen, who was himself a worker of signs of wonders.

Yet these people have grown worse, not better. As children of the Kingdom, we make it our aim to get more of the Word into our society, and to proclaim the Gospel with insight and power. But we are not juvenile in our view of this. This could make things worse, not better. Yet, just as surely as Stephen proceeded speaking insightfully, so must we. Our aim in all of this is to be men in understanding, and not children (1 Cor 14:20).

THE YOUNG MAN SAUL

“ . . . at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul.” Other versions read, “ a certain young man who was called Saul,” MRD “A young man called Saul,” YLT “a young man named Paul,” LIVING “giving them into the care of a young man called Saul,” WEYMOUTH and “a young man by the name of Saul.” PHILLIPS

In a public display, the false witnesses laid their garments at the feet of a young man whose name was Saul.

- A YOUNG MAN. It is not certain what age is reflected in this term, Lexically, some say this is a “youth; (1) used of a man in the prime of life, between twenty-four and forty years” old. FRIBERG Others say “a young man beyond the age of puberty, but normally before marriage-’young man” LOUW-NIDA We do not know of the age of this young man, only that he was not a man of any significant age.

- SAUL. The name of the young man is given, and from this point on, he will be a prominent figure in the book of Acts. It might appear that being a young man, Saul had been exposed to the preaching of Jesus. We know, however that this was not the case, for Paul categorically says he was “born out of due time” (1 Cor 15:8). He does not say he was born in the wrong place, but out of the time span in which the other apostles were born.

PAUL RECALLED THIS INCIDENT

Later, during his ministry, when he was in Jerusalem, Paul recalled this incident. During his defense before Jewish accusers, Paul recalled what he had said to the Lord Jesus Himself. When Christ commanded Paul, “get thee quickly out of Jerusalem.” he replied “And when the blood of Thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him” (Acts 22:20). This will prove to be a defining moment for Paul. He will never be able to forget what he saw and heard on this memorable day, when he kept the coats of those who lied against Stephen.

STEPHEN WAS CALLING UPON THE NAME OF THE LORD

“ 59 And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.”

Admittedly, this is one of the awful accounts of history, when the details of the murder of a man of God are recorded. There are not many detailed accounts of such deaths, but there are enough to establish the absolute hostility that exists between the flesh and the Spirit, unbelief and faith, and the children of God and the children of the wicked one. The detailed accounts of such murders are as follows.

- Cain killed Abel (Gen 4:3-6).
- Zechariah (2 Chron 24:21-22).
- John the Baptist (Mk 6:18-28).
- Stephen (Acts 7:58-60).
- Jesus Christ. The death spoken of the most in Scripture, and concerning which more details are provided, is that of the Lord Jesus Christ (Psa 22:1-18; 34:20; 69:21,25; 109:25; Isa 52:14; 53:7-12; Zech 13:6-7; Matt 27:1-53; Mk 15:1-38; Lk 22:64-23:46; John 18:28-19:37).

In these accounts the variance between man and God is brought out. With the single exception of Abel, all of them were carried out by a covenanted people – chosen and cultured by God. The death that was most driven by Divine purpose was that of Jesus, and it is the death which has accomplished the most. Furthermore, if it were not for the Person of Christ and His work, the other deaths would not have occurred.

It is good to maintain a profitable recollection of the details of these deaths – particularly that of our blessed Lord. It will serve to destroy any delusion that would lead us to imagine that the world is our friend, or that we can be friends of it without becoming the enemy of God (James 4:4).

THEY STONED STEPHEN

“And they stoned Stephen . . .” Other versions read, “ they went on stoning Stephen,” NASB “ While they were stoning Stephen,” NIV “ as they were stoning Stephen,” RSV “while he was being stoned,” BBE “While council members were executing Stephen,” GWN “They continued to stone Stephen,” NET and “And as the murderous stones came hurtling at him.” LIVING

In the stoning of Stephen they followed Scriptural procedures, but for the wrong reason. The people corrupted religion even further in what they had already done to justify their deeds. Sin, having slain the human race, has introduced this dreadful propensity to sin in the name of the Lord, attempting to justify what is done by asserting that the righteous have actually broken some law of God in fulfilling their ministry.

Here, by stoning Stephen, the people have put him in the class of the following people.

- One who has called for the people to worship false gods (Deut 13:6-10).
- One who has “gone and served other gods” (Deut 17:2-5).
- An adulteress (Deut 22:13-21).
- Achan, who coveted the forbidden things, and brought a curse upon Israel (Josh

7:19-26).

Thus we again see that corrupt human nature will go to any extent possible to justify one's own refusal to hear the Word of the Lord.

Stoning is not something that can take place accidentally. It requires the wholehearted involvement of those who do it. They must exert both their will and the body, and do so over an extended period of time. It is a work that men must be intent upon doing if they are to carry it to its intended conclusion. Oh, that men would be as intent upon knowing Christ and obtaining heaven as these men were upon Stephen dying!

CALLING UPON THE NAME OF THE LORD

“ . . . calling upon God . . .” Other versions read, “ as he was calling upon God,” NKJV “ as he called upon the Lord,” NASB “Stephen prayed,” NIV “ made prayer to God,” BBE “ as he called out ,” CSB “ invoking ,” DOUAY “said in invocation ,” NJB “he kept praying ,” ISV and “as he continued praying.” WILLIAMS

However, true spiritual life requires that the individual be ready to sincerely and zealously say these words. If people – any people – find themselves reluctant and unable to speak in this manner, they are in a condition that requires immediate attention

Some versions say Stephen called “upon God” (KJV, NKJV). Others say that he called “upon the Lord” (ASV, NASB). If you have a Bible that uses italicized print to indicate words that are not in the original Greek text, you will note that “God” or “Lord” are italicized. They have been supplied to give the sense of the text, but are not in the text itself. Here, the One to whom the call is directed is associated with the content of Stephen's petition. Strictly speaking, rather than the sentence emphasizing the act of calling, the stress is placed on what was said in it. Some of the literal; translations provide this perspective: “calling and saying,” YLT and “invoking and saying.” LITV This does not change the meaning of the text, but moves us away from a mere consideration of grammar.

Having seen the heavens opened, the glory of God, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God, Stephen calls upon the name of the Lord – framing a petition as his life was being pounded out of his body. What a marvelous dispensation of grace must have been dispensed to him at this time to enable such a thing. Under ordinary circumstances, an experience like stoning would prove too painfully distracting to allow for sound thought and precise expression. Yet, at this very time, Stephen's rational powers elevate to a peek, and he calls upon God.

What does it mean to call “upon God” ?The very expression is intriguing to me. The words “calling upon” are translated from a single Greek word evpikalou,menon (ep-ee-kal-eh-ooen-on). As used here, the lexical meaning of the word is “to invoke, to call upon for oneself, in one's behalf anyone as a helper . . . to appeal to one, make an appeal unto,” THAYER “appeal, call or summon as a witness.” FRIBERG Still, these academic definitions do not satisfy my own heart as to what was involved here. Stephen is not calling for help. He is not supplicating for deliverance. He appears to be reconciled to his death, realizing that his work has now been concluded. He does not call out for retribution, or for judgment to be executed against his offenders. Nor, indeed, is he simplistic or naive in his assessment of the situation. For him, calling “unto God” evidences his trust and his discernment, his reliance and his readiness.

Although Stephen was a great miracle worker, he does not seek to advantage himself by means of a supernatural work. He does not strike down his enemies, as did Elijah (2 Kgs 1:10-12). He does not call for plagues upon the people, as did Moses (Ex 9:14). Stephen knows in his spirit that death belongs to him (1 Cor 3:21-22), and that it cannot separate him from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus

Here is an example of someone keeping under their body in the most dire outward circumstance. He has the rule over his own soul, and has quieted it so he can consider the Lord and frame an intelligent petition to Him. From the human point of view, this is a most remarkable achievement.

Although Stephen was a great miracle worker, he does not seek to advantage himself by means of a supernatural work. He does not strike down his enemies, as did Elijah (2 Kgs 1:10-12). He does not call for plagues upon the people, as did Moses (Ex 9:14). Stephen knows in his spirit that death belongs to him (1 Cor 3:21-22), and that it cannot separate him from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus (Rom 8:38-39). It is one thing to know this intellectually, it is another thing to be persuaded of it. In Stephen we are beholding someone who has been “persuaded” of this reality.

The power of God is not devoted to the purely personal interests of the servants of God. Even the “signs of an Apostle” are not intended to keep Paul from being beaten, shipwrecked, in countless perils, and even stoned. Men should not be surprised if all of their earthly problems are not resolved by their godliness and commitment to Christ. They should not expect God to provide a smooth road for them in order that they might be more comfortable. Should this occur, and an angel supply a miraculous meal for weary Elijah (1 Kgs 19:5-8), that is good. But should the path to glory lead through the furnace and the flood, that is also good. There is more at stake in our spiritual lives than our earthly life and advantage. A religion of ease and convenience is lethal. It pushes a person further and further from the Lord, until they at last topple over the precipice of eternal ruin. Woe to that person who actually dares to promote such an approach to life in Christ Jesus.

And what ought men and women of God be able to do when they contend with experiences that are “footmen,” when Stephen so conducted himself when contending with “horsemen” (Jer 12:5)?

RECEIVE MY SPIRIT

“ . . . and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.” Other versions read, “Lord Jesus, take my spirit,” BBE “Lord Jesus, welcome my spirit,” GWN “Lord Jesus, receive and accept and welcome my spirit!,” AMPLIFIED “Jesus, Lord, receive my spirit!” PHILLIPS and “Lord Jesus, please welcome me!” CEV

Notice that Stephen calls upon the Lord Jesus Himself. This was not an ordinary approach to the Lord. In fact, this is the only occasion in the Bible where a prayer was addressed to Jesus Himself. On the night of His betrayal, Jesus told His disciples, “And in that day ye shall ask Me nothing. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name, He will give it you” (John 16:23). He also taught His disciples to address their prayers to the “Father” (Matt 6:9). That this is the ordinary posture of prayer cannot be denied. When Paul petitioned for the church to be strengthened with might, he said, “I bow my knees to the Father” (Eph 3:14). That is the ordinary manner.

Yet, this is not intended to be a lifeless and legalistic approach. All conditions are not normal. The situation before us is also made most unique by the fact that Stephen was seeing Jesus standing at the right hand of God. He therefore addresses his petition to Him, for it was apparent that Jesus was taking special notice of him in this difficult hour.

And what is Stephen’s petition to Jesus? He had the spirit of Jesus who, as He approached His final hour, said, “and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour” (John 12:27). Eventually, there will come a time when temporal deliverance must not be sought, and blessed is the person who knows when it arrives. There is that appointment when the person must say, “I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand ” (2 Tim 4:6). We have good reason to believe that when we live by faith, the Lord will alert us to the imminence of death. Peter said of his appointment, “knowing that the laying aside of my earthly dwelling is imminent, as also our Lord Jesus Christ has made clear to me” NASB (2 Pet 1:14). While there is a certain element of uncertainty associated with death, that appointment is not altogether uncertain. A focused awareness of that hour is really not necessary until it arrives. If you will live by faith and walk in the Spirit, you will be able to address death in a state of readiness and confidence – without fear.

Stephen does not ask for Jesus to receive his body, for he knows that will not take place until the resurrection. He also is aware that his spirit and body will be separated at death – which contradicts the soul-sleeping heresy. Neither, indeed, does he speak as one who is going to be unconscious when he departs from the body, for what possible purpose would be achieved by Jesus receiving an inactive and unconscious spirit?

Stephen, being full of the Holy Spirit, speaks almost identically as did Jesus when He died. Jesus cried out with a loud voice, “Father, into thy hands I commend My spirit ” (Luke 23:46). Christ’s words differed in that no man was taking His life from Him. He was laying down His life of His own self, for He had the power to do so (John 10:17-18). Stephen’s life was being taken from him, and he did not have the power to dismiss his own spirit. Therefore, He asked Jesus to receive it. In this, Stephen would fulfill a statement that would later be made by the young man who was caring for the garments of the false witnesses who were stoning him: “We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord” (2 Cor 5:8). Stephen was also “confident” and “willing,” and therefore framed this petition.

It ought to be noted that Stephen had committed himself to the Lord in his life, and that is why he could make this request in his death. He had taken advantage of the fellowship of Jesus, into which he had been called (1 Cor 1:9). He had walked in the light as Jesus is in the light (1 John 1:7), and could therefore look forward to joining Him in the ultimate light.

It really is not possible to look forward to being forever with the Lord if one is not walking with Him in this world. In my judgment, there is a level of awareness of this that is reflected in the posture of much of the religion of our time. The removal of many of the hymns concerning heaven appear to justify this view. The accent upon life in this world also confirms this to be the case. A spirit of at-home-ness in this present evil world will not allow a person to even say the words, “Lord, Jesus, receive my spirit.”

However, true spiritual life requires that the individual be ready to sincerely and zealously say these words. If people – any people – find themselves reluctant and unable to speak in this manner, they are in a condition that requires immediate attention. The person who is not ready to die, is not ready to live, and is actually in an unacceptable state. Nothing must be allowed to upstage a proper preparation for departure from the world!

STEPHEN’S LAST SUPPLICATION

“ 60a And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge.”

The fact that Stephen “kneeled down” suggests that he had remained on his feet as the stones were hurled at him, and began taking his life from him. The sight of Jesus standing at the right hand of God had strengthened him to stand up during his final trial. I do not question that angels had been dispatched to fortify this man of God, as they had strengthened his Lord before him (Lk 22:43). Those blessed ministering spirits who have been sent forth to minister to the heirs of salvation will surely not abandon them in their final hour. So now, in a display of remarkable composure and deliberateness, Stephen bows the knee to the Father, kneeling down, accepting his appointed hour of departure.

CRIED WITH A LOUD VOICE

“And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice. . .” Other versions read, “falling on his knees , he cried out with a loud voice,” NASB “he fell on his knees and cried out ,” NIV “he knelt down and shouted ,” GWN “he knelt down and said aloud ,” NJB “he fell to his knees shouting ,” NLT “Then, rising on his knees , he cried aloud,” WEYMOUTH “And falling on his knees, he cried out loudly ,” AMPLIFIED and “Then, on his knees, he cried in ringing tones .” PHILLIPS

As his life was ebbing from his body, Stephen musters the vestiges of his strength and focuses them on a single petition. He does not whisper it, but shouts it out so all could hear. He cries out in faith and hope. This is also the manner in which Jesus spoke when He died, crying out “with a loud voice” – so much so that even a centurion heard Him (Matt 27:50; Mk 15:37,39).

LORD, LAY NOT THIS SIN TO THEIR CHARGE

“Lord, lay not this sin to their charge.” Other versions read, “Lord, do not charge them with this sin,” NKJV “Lord, do not hold this sin against them ,” NASB “Lord, do not make them responsible for this sin,” BBE “O Lord, establish not this sin against them ,” MRD “Lord, don't blame them for this sin!,” IE “Lord, do not reckon this sin against them,” WEYMOUTH “Lord, do not charge this sin on the book against them!,” WILLIAMS “Lord, fix not this sin upon them [lay it not to their charge]!” AMPLIFIED “Lord, forgive them for this sin,” PHILLIPS “Lord! Do not remember this sin against them!” GNB and “Lord, do not make stand this sin to them.” LITV

Again, having the Spirit of Jesus, Stephen’s final words were much like those of Jesus when He died. The Savior prayed, “Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do” (Luke 23:34). Jesus’ prayer was answered fifty days later when three thousand souls received the remission of sin and the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:38).

Yet, Stephen’s words are not identical to those of Jesus. I do not believe that “lay not this sin to their charge” is synonymous with “forgive them.” The idea here is that of holding sin against the people, or shutting the door to recovery. The prophets referred to condition this as sin being marked against the people. “For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before Me , saith the Lord GOD” (Jer 2:22). And again, “The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron” (Jer 17:1). Because of this condition, God instructed Jeremiah, “Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to Me: for I will not hear thee” (Jer 7:16). Again He said to the prophet, “Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble” (Jer 11:14). And again He said, “Then said the LORD unto Me, Pray not for this people for their good” (Jer 14:11).

There is a condition in which God turns the people over to their own wickedness, removing all restraints and rendering them hopeless (2 Chron 30:7; Psa 81:12; Acts 7:42; Rom 1:24,25,28). There is a sin from which people cannot recover – like that committed by the Israelites who refused to possess the promised land. God consigned them to die in the wilderness, and there was no door opened for that sentence to be reversed. In fact it is written, “So I swear in my wrath, They shall not enter into My rest” (Heb 3:11) – and they did not!

This was not an emotional plea for God to forget about what was happening, and to overlook the fact that the council was stoning Stephen to death. Even on the other side, after that have finished their lives on earth, martyrs do not think in this manner. John saw a group of them “under the altar,” and in their purified state they asked the Lord, “How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?” (Rev 6:10). They were not rebuked, but were given white robes and told to wait for a season, until further blood would be shed (Rev 6:10-11). The modern church is being submitted to a lot of inaccurate and corrupt teaching on this subject. The forgiveness of offending parties is actually being approached from a psychological point view rather than a spiritual one.

Stephen did have a regard for the salvation of these people. He knew that Jesus had died for them, and that He had been sent to bless them in turning them away from their iniquities (Acts 3:26). What he was asking is that the Lord not consign them to a state of reprobacy, or swear in His wrath that they would be shut out of eternal rest. He was praying that they would be kept from “the great transgression” (Psa 19:13), which ushers men in a condition that cannot be remedied. He was pleading that this sin would not be the last one written in the record books, and that the door of salvation would be left open.

Jesus declared that there was a sin that “hath never forgiveness” (Mk 3:29). A person can commit a sin that “shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come” (Matt 12:32). Stephen is praying that this dreadful deed – one in which the people were resisting the Holy Spirit – would not be so considered.

While this may introduce some questions in the minds of some, all do well to take them to heart. There is an aspect to the Divine nature that is being concealed in our time by frothy preaching and teaching that has no substance. There is too much of the carnal mind in it, and it is far removed from reality. It disarms the soul, moving it into a state that will not hold up the individual in the hour of need. The mouths of those who deliver such a message must be stopped, and the imaginations fostered by their words must be thrown down. This is not a day for Christians to be simplistic in their views of God, sin, and salvation. After all, eternal life is knowing God!

HE FELL ASLEEP

“ 60b And when he had said this, he fell asleep.” Other versions read, “he died,” NRSV “he went to his rest,” BBE and “he fell asleep in the Lord,” DOUAY “he slept,” GENEVA “he fell asleep in death,” WILLIAMS and “he fell into the sleep of death.” PHILLIPS

This confirms that the words of Stephen were said at the very threshold of his departure, thus emphasizing his strong and confident faith. The same faith that sustains men in life, will also sustain them in death, and all of the circumstances that surround it.

Death is frequently associated with “sleep.”

- When God told Moses he was going to die, He said, “Behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers” (Deut 31:16).
- Job spoke of death as sleeping “in the dust” (Job 7:21). He said that in the resurrection men would be “raised out of their sleep” (Job 14:12).
- Daniel also was told of a time when “many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt” (Dan 12:2).
- When Lazarus died, and after waiting for two days, Jesus said to His disciples, “Our friend Lazarus sleepeth ; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep ” (John 11:11).

Thus, when Stephen fell sleep, he did so because Jesus had received his spirit, leaving the body lifeless. He died in hope of the resurrection, however, his purchased possession, like ours, will be redeemed – ransomed from “the power of the grave”

The record of David’s death states that he “ slept with his fathers” (1 Kgs 2:10). Paul also said that when David died he “fell asleep ” (Acts 13:35).

- Speaking concerning being clothed with immortality, Paul said, “We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed” (1 Cor 15:51).

- Believers that had passed from this life are referred to as them “which sleep in Jesus” (1 Thess 4:15).

Some take the position that the totality of the man sleeps in death – the seen and unseen parts, the inward and the outward man. They have the same view of death that Solomon had – before life and immortality were brought to light by the Gospel (2 Tim 1:10). Solomon said, “the dead know not anything” (Eccl 9:5). However, that was not the ultimate word concerning the dead. We know, for example, that Moses came back to earth and appeared with Jesus in glory – after he had died (Lk 9:31). Jesus delivered the account three men after they had died. Two of them, Abraham and a rich man, spoke to one another in an extended dialog. Abraham spoke of things of which he knew nothing when he lived on the earth. The rich man was capable of feeling and reasoning. Lazarus was being comforted, and was not located in the grave, but in Abraham’s bosom. Those who embrace the soul-sleeping heresy say that this was only a parable, and not a factual account. There is no evidence for this view. It is only an attempt to stuff the word of God into the bag of human reason. Further, even if we pretend as though there is possibility that this is true, the explanation provides no haven for them, for a parable is a likeness to a very real condition. In it, a point is made by comparing a known condition with an unknown condition. Of course, if the dead are not conscious, there could not be any teaching based upon the supposition that they were conscious.

The employment of “sleep” in relation to death accents the fact that death is temporary – like sleep. It also views death from the standpoint of the resurrection of the dead, not of the present condition of the personality who has left this world. When Jesus comes again, He will not only raise the dead. God Himself will also “bring with Him” those who “sleep in Jesus” (1 Thess 4:14). The angels will not only gather together the saints on earth, but will also gather them “from one end of heaven to the other” (Matt 24:31). Mark says they will gather the elect “from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven” (Mark 13:27). This captures the idea of the seen and unseen parts of men being joined together as the essential part of man will be “clothed upon with our house from heaven” – the resurrection body (2 Cor 5:2-4).

Thus, when Stephen fell sleep, he did so because Jesus had received his spirit, leaving the body lifeless. He died in hope of the resurrection, however, his purchased possession, like ours, will be redeemed – ransomed from “the power of the grave” (Hos 13:14).

Thus ends the life of Stephen, the first person martyred for Jesus. He was not a martyr for the church but was Jesus’ martyr (Acts 22:20), dying for the sake of his Lord and Savior, who had given His life for the sake of Stephen. He is surely a noble example for us all!

CONCLUSION

The account of Stephen provides some essential insight into the nature of life in Christ Jesus. Stephen is first introduced in Acts 6:5, where he was chosen as one of those appointed over the daily distribution of food. From that introduction, Stephen is the focus of Scripture through Acts 8:1 – seventy-two verses, or just under 1,800 words. Of those verses fifty-three of them are Stephen’s message, and four of them inform us of what he said while he was being stoned. The passage covering Stephen contain two verses that say something about Stephen himself. He was a man full of faith, the Holy Spirit, and power (Acts 6:5,8). At one time, his face was seen “as it had been the face of an angel” (Acts 6:15). We know several things that he did. He did great wonders and miracles among the people (Acts 6:8). He disputed with certain Jews in the synagogue of the Libertines (Acts 6:9). He delivered an insightful summation of Jewish history before the Jewish council (Acts 7:2-50). He sharply rebuked the hardhearted people to whom he spoke (Acts 7:51-54). He saw the heavens opened, the glory of God, and Jesus standing at His right hand (Acts 7:55-56). As he was being stoned,

He called upon Jesus to receive his spirit (Acts 7:59). He asked the Lord not to lay the sin of his murders against them (Acts 7:60). He was also stoned to death by his own countrymen (Acts 7:58-60).

While that may not appear to be very much, it is actually more than I personally know about a great many well known preachers and teachers. Also, everything we know about him pertains to his life in Christ Jesus. We do not know who his parents were, where he was raised, or if he had a former occupation. We do not know if he was married, or how old he was. We do not know of any education he may have received. We do not know where he lived, or how long he had been in Jerusalem. We know nothing of when he was converted, where he first heard the Gospel, or who it was that brought it to him. And keep in mind, that all of the information we do know about him came from the One who knew everything about him.

As impressive as this record of Stephen is, it would not be impressive if he was seeking entrance into a local Bible College. It would not qualify him to enter a contemporary seminary. He would forthrightly be rejected for any political office. Yet, he is written up by the Spirit as a special person in heaven's eyes. How does Stephen compare to modern preacher and teachers? How does he look next to the average church deacon? – because that is how he got his start. How does his manner of summarizing inspired history compare with a Bible College history course? What about the way he handled stubborn people? Or the manner in which he prayed as he was dying?

Oh, there is much profit, indeed, in perusing the record of Stephen, his preaching and his death. He was a man with a strong faith, and the impact of faith upon a person is seen in him!

Commentary

Lesson #35

PERSECUTION and SCATTERING

“ 8:1 And Saul was consenting unto his death. And at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judaea and Samaria, except the apostles. 2 And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. 3 As for Saul, he made havock of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison. 4 Therefore they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word. ” (Acts 8:1-4)

INTRODUCTION

With the stoning of Stephen the circumstance and environment of the early church were changed. In a sense, this was a kind of catalyst, designed by Satan to destroy the body of Christ, but used by God to promote an even more extensive preaching of the Gospel.

It is imperative that we remain aware of the fact that “the heavens do rule ” (Dan 4:26), “the Kingdom is the Lord’s,” and that God is “the Governor among the nations” (Psa 22:28). Jesus taught us to recognize this in all of our prayers: “For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen” (Matt 6:13). This is precisely why we not only ask for our daily bread, but also that we would not be led into temptation, and that we would be delivered from the evil one. If these things are not realized, Satanic initiatives like those of our text will throw us into confusion and cause our hearts to faint. It was Job’s understanding of God that sustained him during His trial, even though he did not comprehend the trial itself. I am becoming increasingly aware of the rarity of such an understanding in our time – even among the professed church. The utter irony of the situation is that this is the day when God has revealed the most about Himself through Jesus Christ. It is further declared that the hallmark of the New Covenant is that “they shall all know Me” (Jer 31:34; Heb 8:11). Notwithstanding this strong affirmation, we are faced with a professing church that has a remarkable ignorance of God – the very antithesis of promise of God. If it is true that God “cannot lie,” then we have a lying church on our hands. Its perpetual need for counseling and problem resolution, together with its abysmal ignorance of both the Person and the will of God, betrays its real condition. These things are not marks of the people of God. In the language of Scripture, “They have corrupted themselves, their spot is not the spot of His children : they are a perverse and crooked generation” (Deut 32:5).

The text before us confirms that godliness does not necessarily insulate us from the aggression of our enemies – even though God can make even our enemies to be at peace with us (Prov 16:7). Notwithstanding, we must not philosophize on the matter as though that was a promise. There are times when, in the mind of the Lord, it is not appropriate to cause our enemies to be at peace with us. While this ought to be so apparent that there is no need to say it, yet the church is being deluged with a soft and pliable theology that leads them away from such a conclusion.

The Lord has extended Himself to clarify the nature of the life of faith – that it often includes oppression from the ungodly. The case of Cain and Abel clarifies this to our hearts (Gen 4:8). Then there is Joseph and his brothers (Gen 37:4-5), Moses and the people he led (Ex 15:24; Num 26:9), David and Saul (1 Sam 23:25), the prophets and the people to whom they ministered (Matt 5:12), John the Baptist (Matt 14:10), the apostles (Acts 5:18; 1 Thess 2:14-15), and the Lord Jesus Himself (Matt 16:21). There is no reason for any informed believer to be confused by opposition, or by the aggressiveness and even seeming success of the enemies of the faith. There is altogether too much naivety in the church of our day on this matter.

In our text, the enemies of the faith, who sought to subdue the preaching of the Gospel, ended up causing it to be spread by even more proclaimers than those with whom they first contended. This was another evidence of the Lord’s management of the affairs of men. There is no possible way that our “adversary the devil” would consent to the spreading of the Word of God – particularly the Gospel of Jesus Christ, who had already bruised his head. In fact, his efforts were calculated to stop the Word from being preached. Yet, behold what his efforts so! They rather cause an extensive spread of the very word he was trying to subdue. I say the devil is the one who was ultimately frustrated, because he was the one animating the persecutors. Because they had rejected the Lord’s Christ, it is as though God handed them over to the devil to assist him in his diabolical work.

Yet, this body of people did not modify their message or change their spiritual stance. They made no special effort to please the people, and did not concoct a special message or methodology to reach more people.

The “great persecution” that was launched against the church managed to purge Jerusalem of multitudes of believers. Initially, that no doubt brought great relief to the Jewish council, for they were totally incapable of controlling those who had been preaching. They had commanded them to speak no longer in the name of Jesus. They had sequestered them, and even beaten them. They had exerted all of their ecclesiastical authority, but it was all to no avail. Now, they had even publically murdered one of the key proclaimers. Additionally a fierce and intrusive persecution will be unleashed against the church. Surely this will at last rid them of these aggressive proclaimers. And, indeed, if Jesus was not ruling from the right hand of God, this may very well have been the case. However, he had been exalted, was on the throne, and was governing the affairs of men. Therefore, what they do will ultimately contribute to his purpose, not theirs.

In the scattering of the believers, apparently those who had gathered there “out of every nation under heaven,” now returned to their homelands or regions. This time, however, they went back with a fire burning in their bones, as the Word of God was effectively working within them. As it is written of that Word, “as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe” (1 Th 2:13). Consequently, “they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word.”

Simultaneously, the young man Saul, who had kept the garments of the false witnesses as they stoned Stephen, “made havoc of the church, entering every house” and imprisoning the believers. However, he will not long remain in this posture.

SOMETHING THAT MUST BE SEEN

This is the real church in action – the body of Christ in whom He was living and active. These were people who had been reconciled to God, and who, as a group, were not being drawn aside by competing interests. They were really walking in “newness of life,” not just talking about it. At this point, divisive doctrines had not yet arisen, although they would come in due time.

How the Church Handled Popularity

We see it in see how it handles popularity – for in the beginning the church had “favor with all the people” (Acts 2:47), and “the people magnified them” (Acts 5:12). Yet, this body of people did not modify their message or change their spiritual stance. They made no special effort to please the people, and did not concoct a special message or methodology to reach more people. It was their pure devotion and faithfulness to the Lord that became the means of reaching the people – people who had known many of them, and had witnessed the obvious change in them. We are even told of the activities in which they were involved: “And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers” (Acts 2:42). Notice the total absence of the kinds of activities in which the nominal church involves itself.

This is a church that will not be turned from the Lord – not even by aggressive persecution. Quite to the contrary, it continues aggressive in its stance, earnestly in quest for a heavenly country, and a city whose Builder and Maker is God.

This is now the third glorious confirmation that the Gospel is basically compelling. If ever the true message is delivered by those who are themselves holy, there is something about it that tugs at the hearts of the people. John the Baptist experienced great popularity among the seeking and devout (Matt 3:5; Mk 1:5). The Lord Jesus attracted multitudes of people as well (Matt 4:25; 8:1,18; 9:36; 12:15; 13:2; 15:30; 19:2; 21:9). Now the Apostles and those who were continuing in their doctrine had done the same thing (Acts 4:21; 5:14-16).

The influence of that early church upon society had nothing whatsoever to do with a strategy developed by men. There is not so much as a single word recorded that indicates believers had been exhorted to be the salt of the earth, to seek to win others, or to reach out to the community. The reason for this glaring absence ought to be obvious. It is the nature of spiritual life to pervade the environment in which it is found (Matt 13:33). Wherever holy influences are not spreading, it is only because there is with no spiritual life at all, or it is being stifled by competitive influences.

The prominence of unbelief within the professing church is confirmed by its inveterate tendency to rely upon the wisdom of men. It is trying to duplicate the life the first church by rote, and that is something simply cannot be done.

The Response of the Church to Its Enemies

We also see it responding to its enemies as well as to its Lord. From the very beginning, when it was threatened, the church prayed, seeking boldness from the Lord – and it was granted (Acts 4:24-31). Opposition did not divide those early brethren. Instead, it is said of them during that time, “And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common” (Acts 4:32). When they were told not to preach, they preached anyway (Acts 4:20; 5:25,29,42). Their tenacious and faithful preaching will continue in our text – even though the most aggressive persecution they have ever experienced was launched against them.

This is a church that will not be turned from the Lord – not even by aggressive persecution. Quite to the contrary, it continues aggressive in its stance, earnestly in quest for a heavenly country, and a city whose Builder and Maker is God. There was no special program or series of meetings launched by the church to address these persecutions. This was not a church directed by such activities. It was connected to the Head, having been “joined to the Lord” (1 Cor 6:17), and was holding fast to its Head (Col 2:19).

There is every indication in the Scriptures that God will not bless a church that insists on living far from Jesus. That is precisely why spiritual deadness tends to spread – because Divine influences have been withdrawn. It is true that some have invented theologies that affirm that all alone God intended to bring an end any immediate workings within the church. Such men say that this kind of involvement was only intended to launch the church, not to maintain it. If this is the case, it was not announced by the Prophets. That would introduce a circumstance that contradicts express apostolic doctrine. “Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come” (Acts 26:22). Rather than declaring the coming of something temporal, the prophets foretold an era that eventually blend with eternity. In the book of Acts, we are witnessing the commencement of that kind of life. It was a life that was strictly managed by the exalted Christ by the Spirit, and through the faith of the members of the body of Christ.

While we are not to expect every detail of this grand book to be duplicated, we are to expect the kind of life that is reported to be among us today.

SAUL WAS CONSENTING TO HIS DEATH

“ 8:1a And Saul was consenting unto his death.” Other versions read, “in hearty agreement with putting him to death,” NASB “giving approval to his death,” NIV “approved of their killing him,” NRSV “gave his approval to his murder,” CJB “agreed with putting him to death,” CSB “approved of his execution,” ESV “consenting and participating in his death,” MRD “agreed completely with killing him,” NET “had pleasure in his death,” TNT “assenting to his death,” YLT “fully approved of his murder,” WEYMOUTH “[not only] consenting to [Stephen’s] death [he was pleased and entirely approving],” AMPLIFIED and “was agreeing with them in his murder” EMTV

When Stephen was being stoned, we are apprized, “the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul” (Acts 7:58). Now, the Spirit shines the spotlight upon this circumstance, shedding light upon it. This is an example of the light making a deed known, or manifest. As it is written, “But all things that are reprove are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light” (Eph 5:13).

There is no record of Saul lifting up his voice against Stephen, or casting a single stone at him. It may have appeared to those who were standing by that he was just in the wrong place at the wrong time. The text does not say that this young man volunteered to watch the garments of the witnesses as they stoned Stephen to death. Nor, indeed, do they say that he objected to do so.

More than twenty years later (about 58 A.D.), Paul himself – who was that young man Saul – confessed that this is an exact statement of what was taking place. In fact, he confessed it to the exalted Christ Himself. “And when the blood of Thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him” (Acts 22:20). His involvement was no doubt a cause for the goading of his conscience for some time after that. Jesus confronted him with the fact that it had been difficult for him to deal with the goading of his conscience (Acts 9:5).

WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO “CONSENT”?

What does it mean to “consent” to a thing? Certainly, it must be an important response, for a special note is made of it by the Holy Spirit. The lexical meaning of “consenting” is, “to be pleased together with, to approve together (with others): absolutely . . . agree to,” THAYER “strictly approve along with another . . . be willing to, agree to,” FRIBERG “to decide with someone else that something is preferable or good – to agree to, to consent to.” LOUW-NIDA

To “consent” means to agree with, concur, and approve of the action being witnessed. It means to have the same view of the circumstance as those who are carrying it out. In his “consent,” Saul was approving of the stoning of Stephen, affirming that it was the right thing to do. He did this by watching over the garments of the ones who initiated the stoning, doing so according, they thought, to the Law of Moses. Saul’s deed, therefore, was not an innocent gesture. It was not the response of a neutral person. He may not have personally participated in the stoning, but he became one with the individuals who did so. He was participant by consent, approval, and personal sanction.

But there is more to this than the academic view. This stoning was not the expression of, what might be conceived to be, bloodthirsty men. I do not question that these men were not noted for going about and killing people at random. They were not driven by a lust for blood. It was actually their religion that compelled them to stone Stephen, and it was Saul’s religious persuasion that moved him to consent to it.

When truth is not perceived, yet a claim is made to embrace it, the individual is actually compelled to act in stark contradiction of the truth. This is because the carnal mind is enmity against God, and can neither think nor act in harmony with the truth. Where a love of the truth – particularly the truth of the Gospel – has not been received, it impacts directly upon a person’s thinking and demeanor. Thus the counsels of the heart are unveiled by the illuminating effects of the law.

The men who stoned Stephen, and Paul who heartily consented to their action, were not acting as people who were personally offended by Stephen – although that condition did exist. In their own minds, they were acting as the guardians of their religion. They were ridding themselves an influence they conceived to be defiling and reprehensible. Their delusion actually became the means through which the devil worked, for he always works within the context of the lie, delusion, and spiritual darkness.

In this case, delusion consisted of an erroneous view of the Scriptures themselves. I do not doubt that those who stoned Stephen, and Saul, who consented to their action, were convinced they were fulfilling the mandate of the Law of Moses: “If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers; Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; Thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him; But thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people” (Deut 13:6-8).

How serious is it when religious men do not perceive the truth – even though it is within their reach? What can be said of those to whom Divine providence has brought the truth, yet they have declined to receive it? What of those who are familiar with the Scriptures, yet, after long periods of time have not comprehended either their nature or their true message? What is the effect of maintaining a religious posture, yet refusing to submit the soul to the truth of God, or bathe ones mind in the Word of God?

Those dominated by such a mind will oppose the truth, whether by personally throwing stones like the Jewish council, or consenting to the deed like the young man Saul who watched over their garments.

When such souls are exposed to the real Gospel, and the convicting power of the Holy Spirit, they will become hostile toward God, for that is the nature of “the carnal mind.” As it is written, “Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be” (Rom 8:7). Those dominated by such a mind will oppose the truth, whether by personally throwing stones like the Jewish council, or consenting to the deed like the young man Saul who watched over their garments.

One dare not compromise the truth to placate people who have had access to the it, yet have ignored it. That is a circumstance that has always been taken seriously by men of God – even though it is being glossed by many professing Christian leaders in this day. The surface treatment of this condition is the mother of religious compromise. It is what has birthed movements and efforts that have pretended as though not receiving the love of the truth is innocent.

Men are obligated by their very existence to seek after the Lord. As it is written, “And He made from one [common origin, one source, one blood] all nations of men to settle on the face of the earth, having definitely determined [their] allotted periods of time and the fixed boundaries of their habitation (their settlements, lands, and abodes), So that they should seek God, in the hope that they might feel after Him and find Him, although He is not far from each one of us” AMPLIFIED (Acts 17:26). Keep in mind that this is the determined pre-gospel posture of men, and it is by Divine intention. To fail to seek God after one has been exposed to the Gospel compounds the situation.

YOUNG SAUL IS AN EXAMPLE

Paul himself is a case in point. We are not left to conjecture concerning this matter. Paul testifies to his life prior to being justified by faith. Let us allow him to testify to us of his condition during the time of our text.

- He was an Israelite by blood: “of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin” (Rom 11:1).
- He was raised in a devout family, being circumcised on the eighth day according to the law (Phil 3:5).
- Although born in Tarsus, a city of Cilicia, he was brought up in Jerusalem “at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught after the perfect manner of the Law” (Acts 22:3).
- The devoted manner of his life was known to all Jews from the time of his youth (Acts 26:4).
- At some point, Paul testified, “sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence” (Rom 7:7).
- Again he testified, “For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me” (Rom 7:11).
- We are not sure of the precise time when Paul became a Pharisee, but he said of that circumstance that he was “a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee” (Acts 23:6). It was no doubt in this capacity, or in anticipation of it, that he was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel.

- During his time as a Pharisee, living “after the most straitest sect of” the Jew’s religion (Acts 26:5), he “excelled above man” of his “equals,” “being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions” of the Jewish fathers (Gal 1:14).

Yet, in our text, this very man is said to be “consenting” unto the death of Stephen – all of his religious training notwithstanding. Keep in mind that he was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, who, we are told, had no mind for aggressive opposition to those who taught concerning Jesus (Acts 5:34-39).

WHY SAY THESE THINGS?

I have not said these things to in any way cast aspersions at the apostle Paul, for I have only the highest regard for him. Rather, this confirms to us the nature of the flesh and its hostility toward God. The fact that Saul could continue to live in “all good conscience” throughout his life (Acts 23:1), confirms the anesthetizing effects of an improper view of Scripture. It underscores what happens when there is a supposed blend of Scripture with human tradition.

Satan can gain the advantage among supposedly devout people when they are fundamentally ignorant of the revealed purpose of God? Both the Jewish council and young Saul are confirmations of this truth.

The fact that such violent opposition is not presently happening in our country does not negate these facts. Our present safety is only owing to “the earth” helping the woman (Rev 12:16). That is, the laws of the land will not allow the bloody attack of the body of Christ. However, the spirit of opposition exists, as “the mystery of iniquity doth now already work” (2 Thess 2:7). It is seen in the refusal of the professed church to demand that the word be preached to them. It is confirmed by the rise of frothy and fundamentally flawed views of key doctrines – like justification, the coming of the Lord, and the state of natural men. It is in the wake of religious pretension that a host of godly ministers have been opposed, fired, and even maligned. This is what has caused religious institutes to modify their curriculum to appeal to the passing fads of the day. It is why professed Christian men can be in the government, yet speak in the defense of transgressions like abortion and sodomy. It is why theological eyelids are lifted in skepticism at the report of any group of people who insist on going beyond the perimeter of the mediocre religion of the day.

Today, in our very country, the conditions of Isaiah’s time have surfaced again – only this time they many times worse because of the superiority of the truth that has been vouchsafed to us. Isaiah described the condition in this way: “Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey : and the LORD saw it, and it displeased Him that there was no judgment” (Isa 59:15). Truth is failing – not because it has lost any of its inherent power, but because it has been abandoned in preference for fables (1 Tim 1:4; 2 Tim 4:4). As a result, proper and sound judgment has slumped to the ground as ignoble causes and assessments have been embraced. This is why iniquity is abounding, and, as a consequence, the love of many is waxing cold (Matt 24:12). This is the circumstance that sets the stage for aggressive opposition to the saints of the most high God.

Oh, the seeds of opposition are beginning to grow in our own country. It is a condition that cannot be glossed, any more than the situation that exists in our text. This is nothing less than the flesh waging a relentless war against the Spirit. This not only occurs in individual believers, it also exists within the confines of the church. We do well to be aware of it, and devote ourselves to an aggressive spiritual stance. Opposition like that of our text confirms that we are, in fact, in a war, battling against principalities and powers (Eph 6:12). They are relentless when given leave.

A GREAT PERSECUTION AGAINST THE CHURCH

“ 1b . . . And at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem . . .”

Opposition continues to escalate. Satan is picking up the pace, becoming more and more aggressive. In other words, the nature of both truth and error are being made known. Truth has moved those who embrace it to be of “one accord” (Acts 2:42; 5:12). Those who have believed have been described as being “of one heart and of one soul” (Acts 4:32). It has moved them to a life of total selflessness, for none of them said “that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common” (Acts 4:32). There is the incarnation of a word that was later written by James: “But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy” (James 3:17).

However, in the midst of the outpouring of the Spirit, and the consistent proclamation of the truth, there was another kind of response. The powers of darkness are not only being shaken, they are reacting to that shaking. They are increasing in their hostility, and becoming more aggressive in their opposition. Those who have not received the love of the truth are no longer willing to merely talk about it. They are not satisfied with making threats. Now they issue a call to arms, and come out with an aggressive attack upon the church. They do not focus upon the apostles, as they had before, but on the church. They do not single out certain proclaimers of the truth, as they did with Stephen, but openly oppose the church.

This is Satan’s attempt to stamp out the church – and it is all under the government of Christ. From his viewpoint, it is an effort to draw the woman, carrying her away with a flood of persecution (Rev 12:15). However, from heaven’s point of view, this is nothing less than a confirmation of the malignity of the world from which God has delivered the believers.

How the Opposition Grew

Beginning with John the Baptist, things began to change in the land of the Jews. Until that time, and for a long time, the people had been sitting in great darkness. When Jesus arrived on the scene, it is said of the region Zebulun, Nephtholim, Jordan, and Galilee, “The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up” (Matt 4:16). At the first, there was very little opposition, and the novelty of the new life seemed to catch the powers of darkness off guard. However, little by little, the face of the old serpent began to show, slowly escalating until the time of our text. Allow me to track that progress from John the Baptist until the time of our text.

- The Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God through John, not being baptized by him (Luke 7:30).
- Some people said John had a demon (Matt 11:18).
- Said He was “the carpenter’s son,” and were “offended in Him” (Matt 13:55-56).
- When Jesus began preaching, His enemies first sought to snare Him by means of questions and words (Mark 12:13; Lk 11:54).
- Some charged Jesus with having a demon and being “mad” (John 10:20).

Now, the stoning of Stephen by the council awakened a spirit in others that had been, in a manner of speaking, asleep. That is what happens when iniquity is eagerly expressed, and those who have not received the love of the truth openly display their hostility against the ones who declare that truth.

After he preached in his home town, the people “thrust Him out of the city.” leading Him to the brow of a hill from which they intended to throw Him (Lk 4:29).

- Soon His enemies began to regularly plot how they might kill Jesus (John 5:18; 7:1).
- As the time of Jesus’ death drew near, His enemies became more aggressive in seeking a way to kill Him (Matt 26:4; Lk 22:2).
- Working with Judas, they finally arrested Jesus, tried Him, abuse him, and delivered Him to Pilate to be crucified, thus culminating their hatred of Him (Mk 15:1-22).
- Following Pentecost, the chief priests and Temple militia ordered Peter and John to stop preaching, threatening them with harm (Acts 4:21).
- The next time they arrested the apostles, they beat them before they let them go, again ordering them not to preach in Jesus’ name (Acts 5:40).
- Now, after feigning a trial, Stephen has been stoned in the ultimate act of hatred and rejection (Acts 7:58-60).

Thus the hostility of the flesh against the Spirit was beginning to grow. The enemies of God became more and more bold – increasing in their aggressiveness against those who proclaimed the truth. Their opposition will, in fact, explode in an enterprising and bold initiative against the church of the living God. From the standpoint of the enemy, it will look like they are gaining the advantage. They imagine that they had rid themselves of the Prophet from Nazareth, and now they think they have removed the influence of Stephen. They think that their seeming success confirms they are on the right track, so they will increase their efforts. Keep in mind that this is all being done in the name of the Lord, and a people who are supposedly protecting the truth.

AT THAT TIME

“. . . And at that time . . .” Other versions read, “on that day,” NASB “That day,” NRSV “starting with that day,” CJB “in that day,” MRD “began that day,” NLT “there came in that day,” YLT and “on this very day.” MONTGOMERY

As great a tragedy as the stoning of Stephen was, it was not the height of the opposition. Rather, it was the beginning. Now, in fulfillment of the word of Isaiah the prophet, “the enemy shall come in like a flood” (Isa 59:19). What was once done behind closed doors is now brought into the public arena. The leading Jews who once feared the people (Acts 5:26), now fear them no longer. The people who once magnified the disciples following the death of Ananias and Sapphira are not as bold in their support as they once were. Gamaliel does not rise in defense of the proclaimers as he once did. The whole environment of Jerusalem is changed from that in which the Gospel was being spread, to one in which the believers are fiercely opposed.

The words “at that time” mean the described action took place on that very day, when Stephen was stoned to death. The deed wrought against Stephen, though unspeakably cruel and heartless, became the catalyst for an outbreak of violent opposition to the church.

There are wicked deeds that do not stand by themselves, but give birth to wickedness that is more profound and extensive. There is a spirit to iniquity as well as personalities that commit it. Paul called referred to this nature as “the mystery of iniquity,” or “the secret power of lawlessness” NIV (2 Thess

2:7). The Basic Bible English version refers to this as “the secret of evil.” Sin and transgression are an expression of principle of iniquity, or “the law of sin” (Rom 7:23,25), or “the law of sin and death” (Rom 8:2). While this “law” is resident in “the flesh,” its source is the wicked one. When one or more people allow “the flesh” to express itself, it has a kind of domino affect upon all who are dominated by the flesh, or sinful nature. When, for example, the chief priests and rulers of the people launched an initiative against the Lord Jesus, “all the people” eventually became involved. When challenged by Pilate concerning the legitimacy of the trial of Jesus, “all the people . . . said, His blood be on us, and on our children” (Mat 27:25). When Pilate asked if the people would have him release Jesus to them, “the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather release Barabbas unto them” (Mark 15:11).

Now, the stoning of Stephen by the council awakened a spirit in others that had been, in a manner of speaking, asleep. That is what happens when iniquity is eagerly expressed, and those who have not received the love of the truth openly display their hostility against the ones who declare that truth. Their sinful expression are like a trumpet call to those who are dominated by sin, summoning them into a wicked initiative against truth.

It is this principle that gives birth to wicked fads and trends. Such things do not rise of their own accord. Some evil person opens the floodgates of iniquity, whether by a word or deed. Their personal objective may be to only satisfy their own lusts, but sin will not remain at that level. There is an evil synergy in sin that causes it to spread, with evil men and seducers waxing “worse and worse” (2 Tim 3:13). Just as surely as the truth spreads, causing a multiplication of believers (Acts 2:47; 5:14; 6:1,7), so iniquity spreads and increases, sending a wake of evil influence upon those whose hearts are hard and calloused.

If men are not sensitive to this nature of things, they will treat intrusions of sin as though were innocent, and will not deal with them properly. This is why Ananias and Sapphira were purged from the church, even though their transgression might not have appeared to be that serious. It is also why Paul commanded the Corinthian church to purge a certain fornicator from their assembly – and to do so immediately. He did not tell them to counsel that man or to attempt to restore him. The man who was living with his father’s wife was like a staph infection that had to be cut out of the assembly, lest the whole of it be further defiled. In order for that assembly to be restored to wholeness, the expulsion of the fornicator had to take place. That is precisely why Paul wrote, “Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us” (1 Cor 5:7).

The principle of the spreading of is also seen in another word of warning to the church . “Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled” (Heb 12:15). In confirmation of this, Paul warned the Corinthians, “Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners” (1 Cor 15:33).

The people of God cannot afford to be naive about such things. The aggressive nature of iniquity will not lie dormant while simplistic people address dangerous situations. In view of this circumstance, it is imperative that the professing church have the mind of Christ concerning both righteousness and iniquity.

It is also seen in the wicked king Jeroboam, “who did sin, and who made Israel to sin” (1 Kgs 14:16). On one occasion, an expression of the flesh broke out among the brethren, as Peter separated himself from certain Gentile believers because he feared the criticism certain Jews. It is written of that occasion, “And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him ; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation” (Gal 2:13). Paul also warned Timothy of certain corrupt teachings saying, “But shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness ” (2 Tim 2:16). Peter also spoke of false prophets who would privately bring damnable heresies within the church. “But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of” (2 Pet 2:1-2). He also warned of those who “speak great swelling words of vanity,” and through them “allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error” (2 Pet 2:18).

There is a current mentality extant within the professed church that places an inordinate emphasis upon the individual. At the same time, there is an almost total absence of a concern for the body of Christ itself. All manner of reasoning is presented to support this approach, but it has not yielded good results.

Every tenderhearted person is concerned for the recovery of those who have been “overtaken in a fault.” However, great care must be taken in such a work, which must only be done by those who are “spiritual,” or mature in Christ. Here is how Paul stated the case. “Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted” (Gal 6:1). And why is it that such care must be taken? Why must the person who endeavors to restore a transgressor do so with meekness, carefully considering himself? It is because of the spreading nature of iniquity! It is like an uncontrollable substance that creeps into every nook and cranny.

The people of God cannot afford to be naive about such things. The aggressive nature of iniquity will not lie dormant while simplistic people address dangerous situations. In view of this circumstance, it is imperative that the professing church have the mind of Christ concerning both righteousness and iniquity. It is said of the Savior of the body, “Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows” (Heb 1:9). There you have the mind of Christ delineated, and the response of the God of heaven to it. This is a matter that has been revealed, and it must not be ignored. Furthermore, this is something that has been known for centuries. The Psalmist expressed it well hundreds of years before Jesus entered the world. “Ye that love the LORD, hate evil” (Psa 97:10). Again he exhorted, “Depart from evil” (Psa 34:14). The Psalmist himself resolved, “I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes: I hate the work of them that turn aside; it shall not cleave to me” (Psa 101:3). Again he said, “I hate every false way” (Psa 119:104). And again, “I hate and abhor lying” (Psa 119:163). Solomon said, “The fear of the Lord is to hate evil” (Prov 8:13). Amos admonished the people, “Hate the evil” (Amos 5:15). Paul confessed that he hated unwanted thoughts that were hurled at him like fiery darts from the devil (Rom 7:15,24). He admonished believers, “abhor that which is evil” (Rom 12:9).

It is because of the absence of the hatred of evil that Stephen was stoned. If the mindset of David had been owned by them, they would never have carried out their dastardly deed!

Our Time

Because of the spiritual state of the Jewish people at large, the death of Stephen was like an earthquake that produced a giant tsunami wave of persecution – violent and extensive oppression. It did not come from the political section, but from the religious segment of society!

I will tell you that the modern church does not hate iniquity as it should, else it would not be allowing the monumental intrusions of it that are taking place in our time. In fact, there does not appear to be a hatred of evil at any acceptable level. It has caused the nominal church to be gullible, so that he drinks in all kinds of false doctrine. It has caused it to be tolerant of those whom Jesus will not allow in his body, which is the church. There are churches without number who have active members whose names are not written in heaven, and who, by virtue of their friendship with the world, are actually the enemies of God (James 4:4).

What Does All of This Mean?

And what does all of this mean? It simply means that conditions are in place for the professing church to launch a persecution of those who have received the love of the truth. Institutionalism has birthed a church that is more like council who stoned Stephen than the church that endured persecution. It does not require an astute thinker to discern this. Already there are countless believers throughout the land who are sorrowful because they are not being fed, encouraged, nurtured, or strengthened during the church gatherings they attend. There are older and faithful ministers who are being placed on the inactive list, while unlearned novices are being exalted to places of organizational prominence. Stephen would have no more success in many of the churches of our land than he did before the council that stoned him.

Unless this situation is addressed and resolved, there is no hope for the American church. If it does not rid itself of those who insist on maintaining a worldly mindset further and extensive defilement cannot be avoided.

A GREAT PERSECUTION

“. . . there was a great persecution . . .” Other versions read, “a severe persecution,” NRSV “a violent attack,” BBE “i ntense persecution,” CJB “ widespread persecution,” GWN “ bitter persecution,” NJB “a great wave of persecution,” NLT “a great and severe persecution,” AMPLIFIED “the church . . . suffered terribly ,” CEV and “ cruel persecution.” GNB

Because of the spiritual state of the Jewish people at large, the death of Stephen was like an earthquake that produced a giant tsunami wave of persecution – violent and extensive oppression. It did not come from the political section, but from the religious segment of society!

This was actually the initiative of Satan, seeking to cause the church to be “carried away” in a floodtide of persecution (Rev 12:15). As “the kings of the earth and the rulers” were formerly “gathered together against the Lord, and against His Christ” (Acts 4:26), now the Jewish rulers and people joined forces against the church. Like Pilate and Herod who, though formerly foes, were joined in their opposition to Christ (Lk 23:12), now the Pharisees and Sadducees who were theologically at variance (Acts 23:8), joined together to oppress the church.

POLITICAL OPPRESSION VERSUS PERSECUTION

What we are reading of is a “a great persecution against the church.” This was not a political initiative, as when the Roman ruler Claudius “commanded all Jews to depart from Rome” (Acts 18:2). This was not an issue of political rights, as when Paul appealed to his rights as a Roman citizen (Acts 22:25-28).

When there is political oppression, either a good law is not being honored, or a change in the law is required. That is why men call for equal rights and just treatment of the citizenry. However, this is not how persecution is handled, and we ought not allow unlearned leaders to direct our thinking as though that was the case.

Throughout our world, there are great numbers of believers who are being persecuted. The latest report of Voice of the Martyrs (8/2007) lists initiatives against believers in India, Egypt, Azerbaijan, Turkey, Malaysia, Burma, Indonesia, Nigeria, Ethiopia, Pakistan, Iraq, North Korea, China, etc. There is also the beginnings of persecution in our own country, as prayer and witnessing is being outlawed in public places. Iniquity is spreading!

A Complicating Factor

As if the persecutions that are being unleashed were not bad enough, the churches of our country are in a weakened and even emaciated state. That is why they are admonishing people to contact their congressmen and senators, seeking for equal rights for Christians. They have no power with God, and are this seeking help from Egypt. Now, when strong believers are needed to stem the tide of iniquity, we have a church on our hands that has “denied the power,” and thus has no basis for a powerful appeal to the Living God. In the early church, when threats broke out against the proclaimers, the body of Christ went to the Lord, pleading for boldness to preach the Word (Acts 4:24-30). They had an understanding of the situation, and therefore prayed with insight. Their prayer was answered, and the truth continued to spread.

However, when the church is like the world, it cannot be rallied to call upon the name of the Lord. We cannot depend upon flighty novices and entertainers to have power with both God and men. During the last few years we have had a number of professing Christian leaders who have called for boycotts, contacting political representatives, and all-out initiative to elect Christian politicians. It is as though the whole matter of the social conditions about us have been divorced from the Living God. The effects of all of these efforts have by no means stemmed the tide of iniquity, which continues to increase exponentially, both in and out of the church.

One of the effects of spiritual Babylon is the withering of the ability to properly assess opposition. In our text, the aggression against believers is described as “a great persecution against the church.” However, who is referring to the current initiatives against God’s people in such a manner? It is all being described in political language, with rights and political freedom at the forefront of the thought. We should not expect assessments like this to produce in form of spiritual power, whether expressed in Gospel initiatives, proper responses, or wise reactions.

AGAINST THE CHURCH

“ . . . against the church which was at Jerusalem . . .” Other versions read, “against the Messianic Community,” CJB “against the assembly,” DARBY “the church which was at Jerusalem,” PNT and “the congregation .” TNT

In order to better appreciate precisely what our text is saying, let us consider some synonyms for “the church.” These are the ones against whom this persecution was unleashed.

Note, the persecution was not leveled at A church, but “THE church which was at Jerusalem.” Spiritually speaking, this is very precise. Speaking in the flesh, it is very general. If, for example, our local newspaper said there was a persecution raised against the church in Joplin, which one would it be? Or, would it be all of them? When we speak about Jerusalem, there is no trouble in understanding what was intended, for at that time the believers were of “one accord” (2:46), and of “one heart and of one soul” (Acts 4:32).

These are only a sampling of the various statements concerning the identity of the people of God – the church, which is the body of Christ. There is no such thing as an acceptable person or group of persons that is not so characterized.

The fact that there is a kind of strange sound to these inspired descriptions is a commentary on the state of the modern church. However, we must not allow ourselves to be confused on this matter. When the Spirit says a “great persecution” was launched against the church, He is not speaking of opposition to Bible reading, providing a thorough review of State history, or taxing religious institutions. This was an initiative launched against people – people who were living by faith and walking in contradiction of this present evil world. These people were shining “as lights in the world,” and it was convicting to those who had settled down in the theological muck of the times.

On the very Stephen was stoned, the persecution was launched, applying pressure to the believers. It was all designed to purge Jerusalem of their influence, and to overthrow the obvious intentions of the disciples. Already they had been charged with filling Jerusalem with their teaching, or doctrine (Acts 5:26).

Now, we want to take care to observe the way in which the church responds to this persecution. This will be a revelation of what they really possess.

THEY WERE ALL SCATTERED

“ 1c . . . and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judaea and Samaria . . . ” Other versions read, “ went away ,” BBE “ dispersed ,” DOUAY “” forced to scatter ,” NET and “ fled .” LIVING

This time, the disciples do not pray as they did when they were first threatened (Acts 4:24ff). There seemed to be an awareness among them that this was a different circumstance than they had first encountered. We know this was not a rash or thoughtless response because of what they did.

Owing to them living by faith and walking in the Spirit, it appears clear to me that they were able to correlate their experience with the words of the Lord Jesus. Those who had not personally heard them were no doubt apprised of them by those who knew them by experience. Here is what Jesus had told them. “But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem , and in all Judaea , and in Samaria , and unto the uttermost part of the earth” (Acts 1:8). Already they had “filled” Jerusalem with their doctrine, declaring what the Jews had done, what God the Father had done, and what Jesus had accomplished. He had also told them that “repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name beginning at Jerusalem” (Lk 24:47).

Some are of the opinion that the disciples had not one right in remaining in Jerusalem, and this were forced out of the city to do what Jesus had commanded them to do. This, however, is nothing more than institutional folklore imagined to support the view of some concerning the recruitment of souls for the institution. This will become increasingly apparent as we proceed through this text.

WHERE THE DISCIPLES DISPERSED

It is interesting to note where the disciples were scattered or dispersed: “throughout the regions of Judaea and Samaria.” This precisely coincides with the word given to them by the Lord before He ascended into heaven: “ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samara.”

The land of Canaan was divided into three sections. The upper region was Galilee. The middle region was Samaria. The lower region was Judea, in which Jerusalem was located. Ultimately, there were churches in all three regions. Thus it is written in Acts 9:31, “Then had the churches rest throughout all Judaea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied” (Acts 9:31). However, in Christ’s word to his disciples, He omitted Galilee. Also, when the disciples were dispersed, Galilee is not included in the regions into which they were dispersed.

There is a reason for this, and it is worthy of notation. During His earthly ministry, Jesus spent most His time in Galilee, with occasional visits to Samaria and Judaea. The Gospel tells us that as soon as John the Baptist was martyred, Jesus went into Galilee. At that time He left Nazareth (also in Galilee), where He was raised, and went into Galilee proper. Matthew records it in these words, “Now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee; And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim” (Mat 4:12-13). This was done, we are told, “That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles; (Mat 4:15)

The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up” (Matt 4:14-16).

However, Jesus was not well received in this region, thus confirming that it had been a kind of citadel of the powers of darkness. Although most of His mighty works were done in that region, yet He upbraided them because of the rampant unbelief in those parts. “Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not: Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee” (Mat 11:20-24).

You may also recall the unbelief that was found in Nazareth, where He was brought up, and where He regularly attended the local synagogue. That is the place where they gave a miserable response to Jesus, and where He could do no mighty works. “And when He was come into His own country, He taught them in their synagogue, insomuch that they were astonished, and said, Whence hath this man this wisdom, and these mighty works? Is not this the carpenter's son? is not His mother called Mary? and His brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas? And His sisters, are they not all with us? Whence then hath this man all these things? And they were offended in Him. But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honor, save in His own country, and in His own house. And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief ” (Matt 13:58; Mk 6:1-5). In Luke’s account of this time, he informs us of the reaction of the synagogue crowd to His words: “And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath, and rose up, and thrust Him out of the city, and led Him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down headlong, But he passing through the midst of them went his way” (Luke 4:28-30).

Now, coincidentally, all of these cities were in Galilee: Bethsaida, Chorazin, Capernaum, and Nazareth. They had all been visited with light, and yet they spurned it, offering up such a wave of unbelief that Jesus rebuked them. Then, as though underscoring that they had been the first to be subjected to the Gospel of the Kingdom, He leaves them out of the commission to preach in the land of the Jews. Later they would hear the Word, but in them the saying would be fulfilled, “So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called, but few chosen” (Matt 20:16).

God was in this whole matter, working out His will in a most precise manner. Jesus had told the disciples to begin preaching in Jerusalem – and that is precisely what they did. Because this was the “mother church,” as men would put it, it was essential that it be grounded and settled. Time was therefore allowed for this to happen – a time during which some powerful proclaimers of the Word would be raised up to carry the apostles doctrine elsewhere.

The Jerusalem church, like those that would spring up where Paul and his co-laborers ministered, would not be abandoned in the fledgling youth. That is something that is quite common in our time, but it is not the way the Holy Spirit leads the true servants of God. The Jerusalem church had been duly tutored in the ways of the Lord.

- They had learned by experience the value of ministering to and waiting upon the Lord (Acts 1:13-14).
- They had learned how to reason upon the basis of Scripture, particularly in the choosing of Matthias (Acts 1:15-26).
- They had experienced the illumination and empowerment of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:1-4).
- They knew how to handle sudden and significant increases in the number of disciples (Acts 2:41; 4:4; 5:14; 6:7).
- They knew the joy of the unity of the faith and the unity of the Spirit (Acts 1:14; 2:1,44,46; 4:24,32; 5:12).
- They had known the chaffing effects of opposition (Acts 4:1,18-21; 5:17-40; 7:58-60).
- They had learned the power of prayer (Acts 4:24-31).
- They proved faithful in serving the Lord, even when it involved imprisonment and beating (Acts 4:19-20; 5:20-29).
- They had witnessed the pruning of unproductive branches from the church (Acts 5:1-10).
- They were able to choose godly men to fulfill needed ministries (Acts 6:1-6).
- They knew the reality and effects of martyrdom among their number (Acts 7:58-60).

These people were well able to penetrate society with the Word of God, They had been walking in the light, experiencing Divine fellowship, and perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord.

was directing a church that was walking in the newness of life. The fact that He did not direct them in the manner that is commonly taught among professed Christians is a matter worth pondering. I am afraid that the modern church has been inundated with the traditions men, just as the Jew of old.

They Go Into Familiar Territory

Now, the scattered disciples go into areas where extensive preaching had already been done. John the Baptist had preached in Judaea (Matt 2:1). people from Judaea had heard Jesus Himself (Matt 4:25). Jesus had gone into Judaea and preached to multitudes (Matt 19:1). Jesus had also preached in Samaria, and whole multitudes had believed on Him from there (Luke 17:11; John 4:4-42).

These disciplines were not being recalcitrant about fulfilling what men refer to as “the great commission,.” Jesus never did say that preaching to the lost took the precedence over nourishing believers. In fact He thrice told Peter to “feed” His people: “feed My lambs . . . feed My sheep . . . feed My sheep ” (John 21:15-17). Once, when He told Peter that Satan had desired him to sift Him as wheat, and after telling him He had prayed for him that his faith fail not, He added, “and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren ” (Luke 22:32).

The point to be seen here is that Jesus was directing a church that was walking in the newness of life. The fact that He did not direct them in the manner that is commonly taught among professed Christians is a matter worth pondering. I am afraid that the modern church has been inundated with the traditions men, just as the Jew of old.

EXCEPT THE APOSTLES

“ 1d . . . except the apostles.” Other versions read, “all but the apostles,” BBE and “only the apostles stayed there.” IE

Now is a circumstance that is worthy of contemplation. Since the apostles were the principle proclaimers of the Word, and the ones appointed over the work of the Lord, you might think the enemies would have driven them out of Jerusalem. They were the ones who had been charged with filling Jerusalem with their doctrine (Acts 5:28). However, they are not the ones who are scattered.

This confirms the aggression against the saints was being controlled from the heavens, for “the heavens do rule” (Dan 4:26). It certainly was not that the enemies of faith were unconcerned about the apostles. They had twice set out to rid themselves of the influence of these twelve men, and were unable to do so. God had set up His Kingdom during the times of competitive kingdoms, just as Daniel said (Dan 2:44). It would break all opposing authority in pieces, but it would not be broken. Neither, indeed, could the enemies of the faith remove the principle leaders from the scene, which they would gladly have done if they could. What is more, they were not at peace with the apostles – at least not willingly.

While the church was being more firmly established, God caused the enemies of the apostles to be at peace with them, even though, through great persecution, they scattered the church.

The Lord has ordained that the church be placed the foundation set in place by the apostles (Eph 2:20). He would not allow any person to interfere with that work. God has consistently worked in this manner. When He sent Moses, the work assigned to him was completed (Deut 34:4-7). When he raised up Joshua, the work given to him was brought to completion (Josh 23:1). The prophets all delivered the messages they were given to proclaim (1 Pet 1:10-12). Solomon completed the building of the first Temple (1 Kgs 6:9), and Zerubbabel finished the building of the second (Zech 4:9). Daniel completed his prodigious ministry in Babylon (Dan 12:13). Nehemiah completed the wall he was raised to build (Neh 6:15). John the Baptist brought his work to a satisfactory conclusion (John 3:30). The Lord Jesus completed the redemptive assignment given to him – to lay down His life and take it up again (John 19:30). Paul finished the course that had been laid out before him (2 Tim 4:7).

Those who engage in the work of the Lord do well to first determine what God has given them to do. Once that has been found, then they are to labor with all their might in full confidence that God will enable them to finish their work.

DEVOUT MEN BURY STEPHEN

“ 2 And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.”

All believers were not scattered from Jerusalem, for here we find some men taking the time to bury Stephen.

DEVOUT MEN

“And devout men . . .” Other versions read, “Godly men,” NIV “God-fearing men,” BBE “pious men,” DARBY and “believing men.” MRD

This is a day when we do well to consider devout men. This is word that is not common in our day, and devout men are themselves even less common than the word. The word “devout” is translated from the Greek word euvlabei/j (eula-beis). it has a very arresting lexical meaning: “taking hold well; carefully and surely, cautious . . . reverencing God, pious, religious,” THAYER “strictly taking hold of well, hence cautious, devout, pious, as a characteristic of one who carefully observes the law,” FRIBERG “reverent,” UBS “pertaining to being reverent toward God,” LOUW-NIDA “undertaking prudently, discreet, cautious, circumspect,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “keeping clean of, keeping from,” LEH “God-fearing.” GINGRICH

My purpose here is to confirm WHY burial is the historical practice of those who believe on Jesus. It is also to confirm the heathen origins and associations of cremation, which are of no small significance.

A devout person is a thinking person – and they are godly because of their thoughts. They are aggressive to take hold of, and carefully consider the truth of God, bringing their lives into conformity to it. By their very nature, they are selfless – that is why they are devoted to the Lord and to the due consideration of His truth.

Our day is not one that encouraged men to be devout. This is particularly true of the religious world. There is too much of self in the religion of our time. Men are prone to consider fleshly interests rather than spiritual ones. It is not likely that such people will be used by God – at least not for noble purposes.

The Scriptures speak of several “devout” men. Simeon, who was “just and devout,” and was called of God to bless the holy Jesus, together with Joseph and Mary (Lk 2:25). The Jews who were present on the day of Pentecost, and from among whom three thousand gladly received the word and were baptized (Acts 2:5). Cornelius, the first Gentile to officially hear the Gospel (Acts 10:2). A number of Greeks who joined Paul and Silas (Acts 17:4). A group of people with whom Paul met, proclaiming the Gospel (acts 17:17). Ananias, who was called of God to anoint Saul of Tarsus and set him aside for the apostleship (Acts 22:12).

Following Stephen;’s stoning, there was the matter of the disposal of his body. It was devout men who attended to this matter. These were men who took both life and death seriously, and sought to do the appropriate thing.

HIS BURIAL

“ . . . carried Stephen to his burial , . . .” Other versions read, “buried Stephen,” NASB “were careful together touching Stephen,” PNT “ dressed Stephen,” TNT and “helped to carry out and bury.” AMPLIFIED

Throughout Scripture, there is a consistent thread of burying people. There is absolutely no question about this being the manner of godly people. Yet, with all of these words there isn a growing number of people who prefer cremation to burial. It is with this in mind that I wish to say a few words in the defense of burial.

The Body, An Essential Part of Man

While the body is certainly not the totality of man, it is an essential part of the human makeup. Our text says devout man “carried Stephen to his burial” – not his body, but Stephen. When Jesus came to raise Lazarus from the dead, He asked his sisters, “Where have ye laid him ?” (John 11:34). When a holy angel met the women who came to anoint the body of Jesus, He said to them, “behold the place where they laid Him ” (Mk 16:6). When Paul accounted for the death of Christ, he said, “And when they had fulfilled all that was written of Him, they took Him down from the tree, and laid Him in a sepulcher” (Acts 13:29).

My purpose here is to confirm WHY burial is the historical practice of those who believe on Jesus. It is also to confirm the heathen origins and associations of cremation, which are of no small significance. This is NOT intended to be the cause of division in the body of Christ, or a means of enforcing something upon the consciences of those who fail to see this reasoning, even though it is the responsibility of every professing Christ to have and maintain a pure conscience (1 Tim 3:9; 2 Tim 1:3) . Rather, it is to show that there is sound logic for rejecting the practice of cremation, and unsound reasoning for accepting it.

Here is a matter where the Apostolic injunction applies: “Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind” (Rom 14:5). As in all other areas of life, faith, not doubt, must reign over our reasoning. Is it not written, “But those who have doubts are condemned if they eat, because they do not act from faith; for whatever does not proceed from faith is sin” NRSV (Rom 14:23). If anyone has doubts on this subject, it is their responsibility to settle doubts by means of their faith, knowledge of God, and fellowship with Christ. Those who practice cremation MUST do so because they are motivated by faith. That is how those in Christ live – “by faith” (Rom 1:17; Heb 10:38). I am challenging the notion that this is even possible – that is, that a person can practice cremation by faith.

The Burial of Jesus

The “burial” of Christ is part of the Gospel. That situation requires some elaboration on the matter of burial. Today, in the Western world, burial is being abandoned in favor of cremation – even among professed believers in Christ. Reasons for the preference of burning to burial are offered. Some of them include, “It makes no difference what we do with the body after the spirit has departed from it.” “It is more economical to cremate the body.” “Why should we make a big thing out of how we handle a dead body?” These are nothing more than the flesh blurting out its way of thinking.

All of these remarks melt in the light of God’s Word. They are wholly the product of fleshly reasoning, with not a spark of the life of the Spirit in them. When it comes to how we speak of the body, words defending cremation are not “words which the Holy Spirit teaches” (1 Cor 2:13) — and He has spoken about the body.

One of the things declared wherever the Gospel is preached, is the account of a woman who anointed Jesus, by His own word, for His “burial.” Believers should ponder the propriety of anointing a body for cremation, and how such a thought blends with the Gospel of Christ.

If we had no other Scriptural insight than the fact of Jesus being “buried,” that should settle the matter for us. Not only is His burial a vital part of the Gospel, it is something in which we participate when we are baptized into Christ — “buried with Him . . . ” (Rom 6:4; Col 2:12). Thus Christ’s burial has a twofold significance. If it is countered that Christ’s body was going to be raised from the dead, therefore necessitating His burial, it must be remembered that we too will be raised from the dead. But there is more.

One of the things declared wherever the Gospel is preached, is the account of a woman who anointed Jesus, by His own word, for His “burial” (Matt 26:12). Believers should ponder the propriety of anointing a body for cremation, and how such a thought blends with the Gospel of Christ.

The Case of Abraham

Abraham was called “the friend of God” (James 2:23). It is of interest to note how the Lord spoke to Abraham of his impending death. “And thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou shalt be BURIED in a good old age” (Gen 15:15). One might choose to believe the language is inconsequential. We will find, however, absolute consistency in Scripture in the matter of the death of the righteous.

Prior to his own death, Abraham’s wife Sarah died. Even though godless societies (from which he himself had been extricated) practiced cremation, Abraham buried Sarah’s body. “And after this, Abraham BURIED Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah before Mamre: the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan” (Gen 23:19).

In fulfillment of the Word of the Lord, Abraham was buried. “And his sons Isaac and Ishmael BURIED him in the cave of Machpelah, in the field of Ephron the son of Zohar the Hittite, which is before Mamre” (Gen 25:9).

God Buried Moses

How did the Lord handle the death of His faithful servant, Moses? He certainly had a variety of options open to Him. He had burned up the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen 19). He had also consumed the wayward sons of Aaron – Nadab and Abihu – with fire (Lev 10:1ff). However, these were judgments, not to be compared with the Lord’s disposition toward Moses. “And He [God] BURIED him in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Bethpeor: but no man knoweth of his sepulcher unto this day” (Deut 34:6). How will men account for the practice of cremation when they stand before God. Or do men imagine that a practice that contradicted what God Himself did is of no consequence?

Ruth

One of the telling things said by Ruth, when she chose to stay with Naomi and be identified with her God, was “Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried” (Ruth 1:17). How is it that she associated burial with God, but some professing Christian’s cannot do so today?

Saul and Jonathan

When the Philistines found Saul and Jonathan dead they stripped Saul, cut off his head and taking his armor. They “put his armor in the house of their gods, and fastened his head in the temple of Dagon” (2 Sam 21:8-10). They even “fastened his body to the wall of Bethshan” (1 Sam 31:10). Certain valiant men took the bodies of Saul and his son from the wall of Bethshan, “and burnt them there.” They then took their bones and “buried them under a tree in Jabesh” (1 Sam 31:12-13).

How could such an impressive number of references be made to something inconsequential? Is this God’s manner, to clutter the minds of men with accounts that have no relevance, minister no understanding, and through which we do not learn of Divine manners?

The advocates of cremation would reason that it made no difference what happened to those bodies, or to the bones that remained. After all, there was no spirit in them, so what difference did it make. There was, however, a man after God’s own heart who did not think in this manner. When David was made king, mention was made of the men that buried Saul. It is written that David sent a special message to those men. “And David sent messengers unto the men of Jabeshgilead, and said unto them, Blessed be ye of the LORD, that ye have showed this kindness unto your lord, even unto Saul, and have buried him” (2 Sam 2:4-5). Why did David think in this way, considering a burial to be showing kindness?

An Accented Point

The Spirit makes a point of mentioning the burial of God's people. I have already mentioned Abraham, Sarah, and Moses. The following is a small sampling of additional references. They include Deborah, Rebekah's nurse (Gen 35:8), Rachel (Gen 35:19), Isaac (Gen 35:29), Jacob (buried in Canaan, Gen 50:13-14), Miriam (Num 20:1), Aaron (Deut 10:6), Joshua (Josh 24:30), the bones of Joseph (Gen 24:32), Eleazar (son of Aaron, Josh 24:33), Gideon (Judges 8:32), Samson (Judges 16:31), Samuel (1 Sam 25:1), the bones of Saul and Jonathan (1 Sam 31:13), Abner (2 Sam 3:32), David (1 Kings 2:10; Acts 2:29), Solomon (1 Kings 11:43), Jehoshaphat (1 Kgs 22:50), John the Baptist (Matt 14:12), and Stephen (Acts 8:2). There are over thirty other Scriptural references to specific people who were "buried."

Before he died, Jacob told Joseph, "bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt" (Gen 47:29). Under the law, a criminal who was hanged was commanded to be "buried" (Deut 21:23). A special curse mentioned by David was that in the time of severe judgment, "there was none to bury them" (Psa 79:3). Solomon said it would be better for a man to have an "untimely birth" (miscarriage) than to "have no burial" (Eccl 6:3). It is expressly said that following Jesus' death Joseph of Arimathaea and Nicodemus "took they the body of Jesus, and wound it in linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury" (John 19:40).

How could such an impressive number of references be made to something inconsequential? Is this God's manner, to clutter the minds of men with accounts that have no relevance, minister no understanding, and through which we do not learn of Divine manners? The interment of the body was so important to Joseph, that he instructed the children of Israel not to leave his bones in Egypt, but to carry them out with them when they left the land of bondage (Gen 50:25). No person favoring cremation would have made such a request. However, many years later, when Israel came out of Egypt, "Moses took the bones of Joseph with him" (Ex 13:19). Furthermore, when Israel arrived in Canaan forty years later, "the bones of Joseph, which the children of Israel brought up out of Egypt, buried they in Shechem, in a parcel of ground which Jacob bought of the sons of Hamor the father of Shechem for an hundred pieces of silver: and it became the inheritance of the children of Joseph" (Josh 24:32).

Those supposing that the manner in which we handle the bodies of those who have passed on is inconsequential, need to consider what God Himself did with Moses' body – something that has been revealed in Holy Scripture. In fact, the devil disputed with Michael the archangel about the BODY of Moses – something he apparently did not do concerning Nadab and Abihu, whom God cremated. Also ponder that a critical aspect of the Gospel itself is the BURIAL of Jesus. I hardly see how something could be unimportant that is directly related to Jesus, the Gospel, and our own identify with Him.

For some, this is a sensitive subject – particularly because of current trends favoring cremation. While it is not my intention to cause offense, or to impose rules upon people God has not imposed, it IS my intention to declare what has been said on this subject. Your view of the matter is your own responsibility. I am endeavoring to provide a Scriptural context in which personal decisions on the subject can be reached. However, the decision you embrace is your business, not mine. I am not sitting in judgment, but declaring what is written.

Examples of Cremation

Achan and his family (Josh 7:25). They were stoned and "cremated." This is certainly not a suitable precedent for believers to follow! Achan was judged for breaking the commandment of the Lord.

Saul and his sons (1 Sam 31:12-13). Technically, this was not a cremation. The bones were preserved (something not always done in cremation) and buried in keeping with the manner of the people of God.

The Priests of the high places (2 Kgs 23:20). Again, this cannot be adduced as a precedent for those who have embraced the Lord by faith. This action was related to cursing, not blessing. It also was completely dissociated from hope.

The burning of the bones of the king of Edom (Amos 2:1). The Lord denounced Moab because they burned the bones of the king of Edom. “Thus saith the LORD; For three transgressions of Moab, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because he burned the bones of the king of Edom into lime ” (Amos 2:1). Something of the Divine mind is certainly revealed in this word. It ought not be ignored. Not a single person favoring cremation would have viewed the action of the Moabites as God did.

A Great Burning for Asa

When Asa died, Scripture says “a very great burning” was made for him. However, this was not a cremation, but a burning of spices, for Asa’s body was “buried in his own sepulcher” (2 Chron 16:14).

Paul’s Allusion to Burning the Body

As to Paul speaking of giving his body to be burned (1 Cor 13:3), he was referring to submitting to martyrdom, not to consenting to the burning of his tabernacle after he was absent from it.

A Consistent Manner

Throughout Scripture, burial is always the norm – and there are no exceptions. Historically, wherever the Gospel has been received, the people chose to bury their dead rather than cremate them. During the first century, under the powerful influence of the Gospel of Christ, Rome abandoned cremation in favor of burial. The same thing happened in Scandinavia during the eleventh century. In cultures where God is not known, cremation is common. In our own country, the practice arose only when the knowledge of God became sparse and fragmented. That is because the truth of the resurrection is not adequately known among the people. Like the Athenians and Stoics, the “resurrection of the dead” is counted as a strange thing among them (Acts 17:32).

Suffice it to say, no person, however astute can defend the act of cremation from the Word of God. Any and every person seeking to defend this practice resorts to human reasoning. Such logic is wholly inappropriate for the believer! Such wisdom is earthly, and causes dissension and confusion (James 3:15-16). In my judgment, a person cannot request cremation in the name of the Lord, giving thanks to God for it (Col 3:17).

Under no circumstances may our bodies be used as though they did not belong to God, or were in consequential. Our bodies do not belong to us — they have been purchased by God

While the manner in which the disposition of the body is handled is not the determining factor in obtaining eternal life, it does reveal a type of thinking totally unknown in Scripture. No patriarch, Moses, nor any prophet – not Jesus, nor any Apostle – every provided the slightest hint that cremation was, or ever would be, practiced among those embracing the hope of the resurrection. This is an observation that simply cannot be contested.

Scriptures represent burial as an act of faith. It is done in hope of the resurrection. “So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body” (1 Cor 15:42-44). Just as Christ’s mission was not completed until He rose from the dead, so our salvation is not complete until we too rise from the dead. As it is written, “Not only so, but we ourselves, who have the firstfruits of the Spirit, groan inwardly as we wait eagerly for our adoption as sons, the redemption of our bodies”

We are composed of “spirit, soul, and body” (1 Thess 5:23). Salvation addresses us in our totality – spirit, soul, and body. The experience of salvation is not complete until we are raised from the dead. Until that time, we have “the firstfruits of the Spirit.” In that condition, we yearn for the completion of our adoption. The burial of the body blends with this stance. Cremation does not.

At the time of its origin, cremation was an act of hopelessness, not hope. Believers throughout the ages, however, have “planted” the bodies of their generation in hope of the resurrection. It makes as much sense to burn seed corn in hopes of a harvest as to burn a body in hope of the resurrection!

Your thoughts, which are between you and your Lord, should be as much in harmony with the Word of God as possible. Even in your death, you should seek a view that is compatible with the ancients, who enjoyed Divine visitations and looked forward to the resurrection. Whatever reasons may be offered for cremation, not a single one of them comes from the Word of God. They are, without exception, founded upon human reason. There is not a syllable in the entirety of Scripture that will in any way support them – not a word that would lead one to embrace them.

All of the arguments about the insignificance of the body fall to the ground in the blaze of the Word of God. The Scriptures are clear on this subject. “Do you not know that your bodies are members of Christ? Shall I then take away the members of Christ and make them members of a harlot? May it never be! (God forbid, KJV)” - 1 Cor 6:15. Under no circumstances may our bodies be used as though they did not belong to God, or were in consequential. Our bodies do not belong to us — they have been purchased by God (1 Cor 6:19). While they are by no means the primary part of our constitution, they have been purchased by Christ, and will yet be redeemed by Him in the resurrection.

The death of Stephen, while the gateway through which he passed into the presence of the Lord, was a great loss to the church. A man who is filled with faith, the Holy Spirit, and wisdom, is no small deprivation when taken from the portion

The resurrection of Jesus confirmed His Sonship (Rom 1:4). It also confirms the resurrection of believers when He returns. In the above text, Paul argues this point forcefully. “Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats: but God shall destroy both it and them. Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body. And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power” (1 Cor 6:13-14). Again, it is written, “Knowing that He which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you” (2 Cor 4:14). If our bodies are “the members of Christ,” and if God is going to raise them “up,” we have no right to disregard the Lord in the disposition of them. While this is not to become a point of contention among believers, it is to be laid upon the conscience of us all.

As insignificant as it may appear, burial stands in stark contrast to cremation in Scripture. Apart from the clear teaching of the Word of God on this subject, the burial of the body of Jesus sanctifies the thought for His disciples. If that were all we knew about the interment of the body, it should be enough to constrain us to view it with the utmost respect. God saw fit to record the intentions of holy women of old who had regard for the buried body of Jesus, themselves not realizing He was to rise from the dead (Luke 24:1). We are even told that Jesus was buried “as the manner of the Jews is to bury” (John 19:40). Rest assured, the Holy Spirit is not commenting on social customs, or fading practices. No word of God is void of power or without profit.

For those having difficulty with this rather elementary subject, the question is not whether God is able to raise a body from the sea, the grave, or a pile of ashes. The question is whether God’s people can justify the deliberate choice of a practice that does not blend with the manner of God’s people through the ages, nor harmonize with the hope of the resurrection. The very subject of cremation has the taint of the world upon it. The fragrance of the heathen penetrates every aspect of it. Only the wisdom of the world can make an attempt to justify it. There is neither honor nor hope in it. Faith cannot justify it, and a “pure conscience” will question it. Yet today, it is becoming increasingly popular within the church.

MADE GREAT LAMENTATION

“ . . . and made great lamentation over him.” Other versions read, “loud lamentation,” NASB “mourned deeply ,” NIV “made great weeping ,” BBE “made great mourning over him,” DOUAY “lamented over him greatly,” MRD “with great sorrow ,” LIVING “made loud wailing ,” ALT and “mourning for him with loud cries .” GNB

The death of Stephen, while the gateway through which he passed into the presence of the Lord, was a great loss to the church. A man who is filled with faith, the Holy Spirit, and wisdom, is no small deprivation when taken from the portion of God’s family that is upon the earth. That is why the people lamented.

Throughout history, people have mourned the passing of great men.

- When Sarah died, Abraham wept for her (Gen 23:2).
- When Jacob died, the Egyptians mourned for him for seventy days (Gen 50:3).
- When Jacob was buried in Canaan, they mourned with a great and very sore lamentation (Gen 50:10).
- When Aaron died, Israel mourned for thirty days (Num 20:29).
- When Moses died, Israel wept for thirty days (Deut 34:6).
- When Samuel died, Israel lamented over him (1 Sam 28:3).
- When Saul and Jonathan were slain, David lamented over them (2 Sam 1:19-27).
- David mourned over the death of Abner (2 Sam 3:31).
- When Hezekiah died, Israel honored him in his death (2 Chron 32:33).
- When king Josiah died, Jeremiah lamented for him (2 Chron 35:25).

Particularly when great and godly men pass from this world, it leaves a gaping hole in the wall of Kingdom labors. There have been whole generations, and lengthy periods of time when there was not a single man of the caliber of Stephen. He was a rare spiritual giant who achieved much for the Lord in a relatively short period of time.

Also, in those days there was a closeness within the body of Christ that is scarcely known in our day. There are churches without number in which a godly conversation can scarcely be heard, and few put their hands to the work of the Lord. But it was not so in the days of Stephen. At that time the people were of one accord, one soul, one heart, and one mind. They were frequently together, continuing steadfastly in the apostles doctrine, in fellowship, in the breaking of bread, and in prayers (Acts 2:42). That is why they lamented the death of Stephen. It was not because of mere friendship in the flesh.

I have lived long enough to become acutely aware and sensitive of the passing of godly men. I have also seen

A new generation of Christian leaders is rising to prominence in which the virtues of assurance, faith, and hope are, at the very best, in the background. Were Stephen to have lived in our fair city, and died here, I fear that the reaction of the Christian community would be far different than that of the brethren in our text.

a shift in the nature of funerals with miserable messages, the introduction of humor, and a near-total absence of the proclamation of the hope of glory. Something is happening in our time that is not good. They is a diminishment of sensitivity and tenderness, and a waning sense of spiritual values. Men have become fond of referring to funeral services as celebrations, but it is really nothing more than a fad, for you rarely hear anyone celebrating hope, the completion of the good fight of faith, or finishing the course set before them. I believe I know what people are trying to say when they use language like this, but it has the foam of carnality upon it. Then again, in all of Scripture there really is no representation of that kind of public reaction to the death of godly people. It is all very troubling to me. In fact, the only death I know of that is really celebrated is the death of Jesus. A new generation of Christian leaders is rising to prominence in which the virtues of assurance, faith, and hope are, at the very best, in the background. Were Stephen to have lived in our fair city, and died here, I fear that the reaction of the Christian community would be far different than that of the brethren in our text.

Spiritual Robbery

There is a reason for these conditions, as difficult as it is to speak about them. Spiritual Babylon, by making the institution central, has robbed the people of a deep affiliation with one another. Interpersonal associations are too shallow, and do not go deep enough into the heart. Too man are living on the surface of life's sea.

Being workers together with God is not common, and godly discussions and fellowship are become more rare. In such a setting, death cannot possibly be treated as it is in this text.

AS FOR SAUL . . .

“ 3 As for Saul, he made havock of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison.”

From this point on, the thrust of the book of Acts changes. We now are introduced more fully to a man who will dominate this book from chapter thirteen to the conclusion of the book. Our introduction to him is vastly different than what we know about any other kingdom laborer. I do not recall any other man being called to serve the Lord who came from a background of oppressing the people of God.

AS FOR SAUL

“As for Saul . . .” Other versions read, “ But Saul,” NASB “Saul, however ,” CSB “Saul, meanwhile ,” NAB “Saul then ,” NJB and “Paul was like a wild man .” LIVING

Here we have an index to the venomous hatred of Saul of Tarsus for the disciples of Jesus. The stoning of Stephen. Which occasioned great lamentation within the church, had somehow ignited the wrath of Saul. Although a young man, he appeared determined to stamp out what he considered to be a blasphemous movement.

We are not sure of the precise time period covered in this text. Traditional views put it around two years after Pentecost, although some are of the opinion that is the longest possible period of time. The early life of Saul is also a bit sketchy regarding periods of time. We know he was a Pharisee, and that he was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel. However, precisely when this took place, we do not know. It does appear that he was not in Jerusalem when Jesus was there, but arrived in the area after He had been crucified. He was from “Tarsus, a city in Cilicia” (Acts 21:39), that was approximately 400-500 miles from Jerusalem. Paul himself described the city as “no ordinary city,” NIV or “an important city.” NRSV

Although described as a “young man,” he was very aggressive, and now launches a personal campaign against the followers of Christ

MADE HAVOC OF THE CHURCH

“ . . . he made havock of the church . . .” Other versions read, “began ravaging the church,” NASB :”began to destroy the church,” NIV “was ravaging the church,” NRSV “ laid waste the church,” ASV “ burning with hate against the church,” BBE “ tried to destroy the church,” GWN “ persecuted the church,” MRD “began doing great harm to the church,” NJB “going everywhere to destroy the church,” NLT “going everywhere to devastate the believers,” LIVING “ cruelly harassed the church,” WEYMOUTH “kept trying to destroy the church,” ISV “ continued to harass the church,” WILLIAMS “ laid waste the church continuously [with cruelty and violence],” AMPLIFIED “ making a lot of trouble for the church,” CEV and “was doing injury to the church.” EMTV

The word “havoc” speaks of a wicked initiative with the determination to get rid of what is being opposed. The meaning of the word from which it is derived is, “irrational and relentless persecution; devastate, destroy, do harm, severely injure,” FRIBERG and “to affix a stigma to, to dishonor, spot, defile, to treat shamefully or with injury, to ravage, devastate, ruin.” STRONG’S

Saul’s aim was apparently twofold. First, to inflict pain upon the church, causing its members to suffer. Second, to make such an example of the believers that people would not be prone to join their number, and the movement would cease its rapid growth. He was, of course, convinced that they were wrong in their doctrine, and thus treated them like Canaanites to be driven out of the land.

It ought to be noted that just as there are mighty individual godly warriors, so there are mighty individual ungodly aggressors. At this Point, Paul was in the latter group. It will not be long until he will be an aggressor for the Lord Jesus, launching initiatives against the powers of darkness.

ENTERING EVERY HOUSE

“ . . . entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison.” Other versions read, “ dragging off men and women, committing them to prison,” NKJV “ drew out both men and women and put them in prison,” GENEVA “ arresting both men and women and sending them to prison,” NJB and “ hauling men and woman committed them to prison.” WEB “ and “ dragging out men and women alike and jailing them,” LIVING

Saul even waged a house-to-house campaign in an effort to stamp out the church. He did this without any respect of persons, dragging both men and women into prison.

The word “haling” comes from a word meaning, “to draw, to drag on before the judge, to prison, or to punishment,” THAYER “moving some along by force,” FRIBERG “drag away,” UBS and “to pull or drag because of the inertia of the object being dragged.” LOUW-NIDA Saul’s action, then, was a violent one in which he forced the people against their will, dragging them out of their homes to a place of judgment, punishment, and sometimes even death.

Thus, in a relatively short time, the new church went from having favor with all the people and the people magnifying them , to being hounded by a fierce persecutor. He entered into their houses, found them in their synagogues, and pursued them into foreign countries. All of this was not punishment for wrong doing on the part of the body of Christ, for they had been faithful.

Years after he was converted, Paul confessed what he had done during the time of our text. “And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women. As also the high priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders: from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished” (Acts 22:4-5). Later, he testified again before king Agrippa. “Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them. And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities” (Acts 26:10-11).

Ponder the aggressiveness of Saul’s campaign against believers.

- He went from house to house, dragging off men and women (8:3).
- He committed men and women to prison (8:3; 22:4).
- He persecuted them unto the death, binding and delivering them into prison (22:4).
- He shut many of the saints in Jerusalem in prison (26:10).
- He obtained letters from the high priest authorizing him to go into Damascus, and bring believers bound to Jerusalem to be punished (22:5; 26:10).
- When the believers were put to death, he gave his voice against them (26:10).
- He punished believers often in every synagogue (26:11).
- He compelled some of them to blaspheme (26:11).
- He even went into “strange,” or foreign cities – cities outside the perimeter of Canaan (26:11).

Thus, in a relatively short time, the new church went from having favor with all the people (Acts 2:47) and the people magnifying them (Acts 5:13), to being hounded by a fierce persecutor. He entered into their houses, found them in their synagogues, and pursued them into foreign countries. All of this was not punishment for wrong doing on the part of the body of Christ, for they had been faithful.

This opposition can be seen from two perspectives, and both of them are valid.

- The faith of the young church was being tested. In the test, their hearts would be confirmed as to the reality of what they possessed.
- Angelic hosts would witness the magnitude of the work that had been done in the people, beholding the manifold wisdom of God confirmed in them (Eph 3:10).

Those who are quick to define the main purpose of the church rarely take into consideration its role in the tutelage of angelic hosts. It is an objective that is expressly stated in Scripture, so there is no justified reason for remaining ignorant of it. “And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God” (Eph 3:9-10). That very purpose is being lived out in our text.

THEY WENT EVERYWHERE PREACHING THE WORD

“ 4 Therefore they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word. ”

THEREFORE

“Therefore . . .” Other versions read, “Now,” NRSV “But,” BBE “However,” CJB “So,” CSB “and,” MRD and “then, indeed.” YLT

The persecution was calculated to stop the spreading of the Gospel . . . However, their tactic did not work. Instead, the Land was filled all the more with the Gospel.

Grammatically, this word means that what follows was the result of the preceding condition, which was a great persecution launched against the church. Spiritually it provides insight into how newness of life responds to opposition.

THEY THAT WERE SCATTERED

“ . . . they that were scattered abroad . . .” Other versions read, “those who has been scattered,” NASB “those who had gone in flight,” BBE “they . . . that were dispersed,” DOUAY and “the believers who had fled Jerusalem.” IE

Notice the inferior translations: i.e. “Fled” versus “scattered.” You can get God into “scattered” and “dispersed,” but it is more difficult to get Him into “fled.” The fact that these people were productive following their scattering signifies they were not fleeing for fear. These were noble souls, filled with faith, and living in the hope of glory.

WENT EVERYWHERE PREACHING

“ . . . went every where preaching the word.” Other versions read, “proclaiming the word,” NRSV “announced the good news,” CJB “proclaiming the message of good news,” CSB “announcing the glad tidings of the word,” DARBY “spread the word,” GWN “preached the good news about Jesus ,” NLT “preaching the word of God ,” PNT “proclaiming the good news – the word,” YLT “They told the people the good news,” IE “spreading the good news of God’s message,” WEYMOUTH and “went about [through the land from place to place] preaching the glad tidings, the Word [the doctrine concerning the attainment through Christ of salvation in the kingdom of God],” AMPLIFIED

The persecution was calculated to stop the spreading of the Gospel. From the very first opposition raised against the believers, that was the aim. “What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it. But that it spread no further among the people , let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name” (Acts 4:16-17).

However, their tactic did not work. Instead, the Land was filled all the more with the Gospel. At first they were only dealing with two witnesses – Peter and John (Acts 4:13). Then, after the opposition of the religious leaders, all of the apostles became more public and prominent (Acts 5:12-14). Now, they still have all of the apostles in Jerusalem, and allo who were scattered throughout Judaea and Samaria also preaching the Word! Now, instead of Jerusalem being filled with the apostles’ doctrine (Acts 5:28), the whole land was being filled with it! You can see that the devil is fighting a losing battle. He cannot win, and Jesus cannot lose!

Persecution assumes that the ones being persecuted are basically self-centered. Just as Satan did with Job, it presumes “Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life” (Job 2:4). The flesh cannot conceive of a person being willing to live for someone else – not loving their own lives, even unto the death. But that is precisely the kind of people that are produced by regeneration. They receive a new heart and a new spirit (Ezek 36:26). They become a new creation in Christ Jesus, with old things passing away and all things becoming new (2 Cor 5:17). They Are actually “zealous of good works,” persecuted or not (Tit 2:14). The law of God is written upon their hearts and put into their minds (Heb 8:10:16). God has shined into their hearts with the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, and they have been regenerated and refreshed by it (2 Cor 4:6). When you turn these people loose, they go everywhere preaching the word, proclaiming the good things they have heard and experienced.

WHAT IF THIS HAPPENED TODAY?

Keep in mind that the people in our text had heard the truth as it is in Jesus. Corrupt doctrine had not yet crept into the church, even though would not be long until it would. When it says they went everywhere “preaching the word,” it means they were speaking “the truth of the Gospel” (Gal 2:5,14; Col 1:5).

If the modern church was scattered today and went every preaching, I can hardly imagine what they would be saying. If the media ministries are an index to what is being preached – and it appears that this is generally true – all manner of distortions would be proclaimed. One group would be going everywhere preaching about the centrality of the home and marriage. Others would set up workshops to assist the people in dealing with various domestic and social problems. Still others would declare the Gospel of health and wealth for everyone. There would be those who declared the power of positive thinking, and how you can frame your future your own words. There would be a cluster of people declaring a Gospel of the Spirit, providing people with an easy routine that would guarantee the reception of the Spirit with attending signs. There would also be the church planters, praise and worship advocates, and those who marketed higher Christian education. Soul winning experts would be out there, together with financial advisers, and experts in child rearing and how reach various people groups. I am sure it would be much like the scattering of the people at Babel with no one understanding what the others were saying.

See, in this text we are witnessing the outworking of the real life of God. This is not simulated life, but is the real thing. This is how the life of Christ reacts in persecution. It has taught people to live for Christ, not for self. Thus, persecution does not have the power over them that it does to those whose conscience is defiled, and who are lacking in spiritual understanding.

However, this whole scenario breaks down, because it is nothing more than an imagination. The truth of the matter is that persecution dries up such emphases, because they are totally lacking of Divine power. That is why men have to have routines, procedures, and rules to carry them out. There is no life in them. Such people have to be told to spread their doctrine. The people in our text did not have to be told. The true Word burns in the hearts of men, the doctrines of men do not.

See, in this text we are witnessing the outworking of the real life of God. This is not simulated life, but is the real thing. This is how the life of Christ reacts in persecution. It has taught people to live for Christ, not for self. Thus, persecution does not have the power over them that it does to those whose conscience is defiled, and who are lacking in spiritual understanding.

What we have here is a parallel to Israel’s experience in Egypt. When persecution was experienced, the people started to multiply (Ex 1:7,12,20; Acts 7:17). Rest assured that what we receive in Christ Jesus is far superior to the best that Israel experienced. The covenant under which they operated was an inferior one. Its glory was a lesser and fading glory (2 Cor 3:7-10).

CONCLUSION

Much, if not the majority, of the need for fleshly discipline and organization is refreshingly and effectively resolved when men live by faith and walk in the Spirit. Newness of life, and the hope it spawns, is actually a better disciplinarian than the accumulated wisdom of men.

The book of Acts is precisely that – a book of ACTS, activity, and action. It is a book in which the government of Jesus is seen, as He sits upon the throne of David, orchestrating the affairs of the world with the intent of bringing many sons to glory. It is a book in which the working of the Holy Spirit is seen, convicting, leading, directing, illuminating, inspiring, and comforting. In it we behold how newness of life reacts in both peaceful and troubled environs, when the people are received, and when they are persecuted. We witness the impact of Christ's intercession in heaven (Rom 8:34; Heb 7:25), and the intercession of the Holy Spirit from within the believers (Rom 8:26-27). Wherever there is legitimate spiritual life, there will be similarities to what we are beholding in this book. If no such similarities are witnessed, we have good reason to question the presence of genuine spiritual life. In such a case, there must be a hearty and thorough examination of self to see if Christ is in us or not (2 Cor 13:5).

PHILIP PREACHES IN SAMARIA

“ 8:5 Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. 6 And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. 7 For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed. 8 And there was great joy in that city. 9 But there was a certain man, called Simon, which beforetime in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one: 10 To whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God. 11 And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries. 12 But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. 13 Then Simon himself believed also: and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done.” (Acts 8:5-13)

INTRODUCTION

The church in Jerusalem has been scattered because of a fierce persecution unleashed against it. The increased preaching of the Gospel had served to further define the hostility that existed between formalized religion and true spirituality. Lifeless religious leaders had gone largely undetected for years – perhaps centuries. However, when the light was introduced into the region in the Person of Jesus (Matt 4:16), and confirmed by the powerful preaching of those who heard Him (Heb 2:3), it shed light on the condition of Judaism, which at the time was nothing more than lifeless tradition. In Jesus we find the ultimate fulfillment of One who is “the savor of death unto death; and to the other the savor of life unto life” (2 Cor 2:15-16). He drew out those who had honest and good hearts, and who come to the light in order that their deeds might be made manifest. He also exposed those who refused to come to the light, “lest their deeds should be reprov’d” (John 3:19-21).

Now, because Jesus is dwelling in the early church, and they are insightfully proclaiming the truth concerning Him and His salvation, the same things are happening as did in the ministry of Jesus. The believers are being opposed by the same people who rejected

Jesus, and they are drawing the same people whose hearts were drawn toward the Savior – people who were being drawn to Jesus by God the Father, according to Christ’s own word. “No man can come to Me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day” (John 6:44).

SOMETHING TO BE LEARNED

There is surely something to be learned in all of this. Wherever there is an environment in which the Gospel is not being insightfully preached and expounded, it is not possible to know who has an honest and good heart, and those who do not. It also is not possible to attract anyone to the Person of Christ or to induce faith, for that comes by means of the Gospel. It is not possible for people to make an association of any person or group of persons with a Christ of whom they know nothing. A church, for example, that immerses itself in doing good deeds, yet does not proclaim the good news of Christ, has left no telling witness in the community. People do not default to associating goodness with God and the Lord Jesus whom He has sent. To hear people talk about seeing sermons, and providing their explanation of letting your light shine, you might be tempted to think that this kind of association could be made. However, if it is true that faith comes by hearing, not seeing, then such a thought is nothing more than an imagination that needs to be cast down.

Believers should be suspicious of any approach to reaching the lost that minimizes the proclamation of the Gospel. We have no record in Scripture of anyone being converted who was not exposed to the Gospel – who did not have a word delivered to them at some time.

Someone might cite Peter’s comment about the unbelieving husband being won “without the word.” His statement is found in 1 Peter 3:1: “Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives” (1 Pet 3:1). However, that is speaking of a man who has been subjected to the word, for one who “obeys not the word” is one that has, in fact heard the word. The picture is of a couple being exposed to the Gospel: the wife believing it, and the husband not doing so. The point Peter is making is that the conversion of the husband does not require that his wife also proclaim the word. Rather, as she lives out the Gospel to which her husband had already been exposed, he could be won over to the truth.

Believers should be suspicious of any approach to reaching the lost that minimizes the proclamation of the Gospel. We have no record in Scripture of anyone being converted who was not exposed to the Gospel – who did not have a word delivered to them at some time. Even if we did not know this, the Scriptures make clear that it is not possible to believe without hearing, and it is not possible to hear “without a preacher” (Rom 10:14). These proclaimers are the means through which men believe, and everyone who has believed has been exposed to one or more of them. As it is written, “Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man ?” (1 Cor 3:5).

The church to which we are being exposed in the book of Acts is one that preached the Gospel. That preaching not only was the means through which faith came to those inclined to it, but was also the means of exposing those who were the enemies of God, even though they were disguised as being devoted to Him. While it may have a bit of a negative overtone to some, what appears to be the majority of the evangelistic and missionary strategies that are being used these days are nothing more than the inventions of institutional devotees. I am aware that this is not true of everyone. However, those who do not subscribe to such stratagems are surely the exception, and have separated from the rank and file of the professing church. If there is an honest soul who has a burden to reach people with the Gospel, he should first become thoroughly acquainted with the book of Acts in which the genuine outworking of Divine life is recorded. Then, it is essential to saturate the mind with the epistles, which are the expression of Jesus to the saved, teaching them of Divine priorities and objectives.

SCATTERED BELIEVERS ARE PREACHING EVERYWHERE

Dispersed throughout the regions of Judaea and Samaria, scattered believers are preaching the Word everywhere. Ordinarily, the sure way to diffuse a movement is to divide the people within it. This, of course, is what the Lord did in “a plain in the land of Shinar” where a totally united people had determined to build themselves “a city and a tower.” The Lord, seeing their prideful ambition, imposed a diversity of language upon the people so they could not understand one another. As soon as that happened, “they left off to build the city” (Gen 11:2-6). In this case, the people were divided among themselves – that is, the division was internal, not merely external. This is the kind of division of which Jesus spoke when He said, “Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand” (Matt 12:25).

The Scattering Was Not Division

Although the scattering of the believers divided them one from another, it was not the division of which Jesus spoke. The brethren were not divided within – against themselves – like the people in the land of Shinar. This is the kind of division Satan sought to induce, but he was not able to do it. Those who were scattered maintained “the unity of the Spirit” and “the unity of the faith” (Eph 4:3,13). That is precisely why the work of the Lord continued with the blessing of the Lord upon it.

Theologically speaking, the work related to the New Covenant that came to an end was the work Jesus accomplished while upon earth. In summation, it was His death, burial, and resurrection.

In our time, the professing church is divided against itself, like the builders of Shinar. The Christian community has factions, or heresies, within it, and cannot properly be called “the body of Christ.” Yet, even though God does not work in such an environment, many of the people work at being united, while maintaining their theological differences. All, of this is being done in spite of the fact that the Head of the church has delivered a clear message through a chosen ambassador: “Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment” (1 Cor 1:10). That is not a goal, but a mandate. Yet, the professing church has chosen to ignore it, maintaining different mind-sets and judgments. They imagine that the blessing of the Lord will be found among their personally preferred divisions, which the Lord forbids, and with people not speaking the same thing, which He commands.

Some resolve this dilemma by saying that those who profess allegiance to Christ, yet violate His Word, are really not a church at all. For them, that solves the difficulty. But this does not mesh with the mind of Christ who spoke to churches who were living in violation of the truth. Among them were the following.

- Ephesus, which had left its first love (Rev 2:4).
- Pergamos, which had some who held to the doctrine of Balaam, and some who embraced the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which doctrine Jesus Himself hated (Rev 2:14-15).
- Thyatira, which tolerated a false prophetess in their presence who taught Jesus' servants to "commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols" (Rev 2:20).
- Sardis, which Jesus described as having a name that they were alive, but they were really "dead." They had virtues that needed to be strengthened, which were "ready to die." Jesus said their works were not "perfect before God," and that only a few among them had "not defiled their garments" (Rev 3:1-4).
- Laodicea, which was lukewarm, and described by Jesus as "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." He was ready to spew them out of His mouth, disowning them altogether. In fact, He was standing on the outside of that church, seeking admittance into it (Rev 3:15-17,20).

Jesus depicted Himself as standing in the middle of these churches, and having their ministers in His hand (Rev 1:12-16, 20). Although those churches were on the verge of ruin, He called them to repentance. There is no reason to doubt that He is doing the same today – that is, if the churches have not passed beyond the opportunity to the point where Jesus has already removed them from His presence (Rev 2:5), is now fighting against them (Rev 2:16), killing them with death (Rev 2:23), and spewing them out of His mouth (Rev 3:16).

I do not wish to spend more time on this, for I feel it would not be profitable. However, it is necessary to speak briefly about our circumstances so we can better understand the staggering zeal and growth of the early church. It was uncontaminated, and it's messengers and message were pure. This is the kind of thing that takes place when people are vessels "unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work" (2 Tim 2:21).

I know of no clear word in Scripture that will lead us to the conclusion that there was a point in time when the kind of power and growth declared in the book of Acts was, by Divine intention, brought to a conclusion. I know there are those who take this position, but, at the very best, they must distort Scripture to justify that view. Neither the prophets, Jesus, nor the Apostles spoke of any aspect of New Covenant life that would, after a period of time, be rendered obsolete and unnecessary. It is not possible for the covenant of a greater and increasing glory (2 Cor 3:9,10) to contain things that diminish, or are confined to a certain period of time.

Theologically speaking, the work related to the New Covenant that came to an end was the work Jesus accomplished while upon earth. In summation, it was His death, burial, and resurrection. In detail, it was the putting away of sin (Heb 9:26), the destroying of the devil (Heb 2:14), the plundering of principalities and powers (Col 2:15), making peace (Col 1:20), and ending the Law as a means to righteousness (Rom 10:4). Now that He is seated at the right hand of "the Majesty on high" (Heb 1:3), the work that He is doing is depicted as an ongoing one. That work will not conclude until He leaves heaven to bring an end to the temporal order, gather His own, and punish the wicked.

As we go through the book of Acts, it is wise to keep these considerations in our mind. If we fail to do this, we will develop a lifeless view of this book, and end up making an attempt to stuff it into the old wineskin of Law.

OUR ATTENTION IS NOW SHIFTED

Now the Spirit focuses our attention upon a single individual – Philip, one of the seven deacons chosen in chapter six, and second in prominence among them. Nearly the entire eighth chapter is devoted to a record of this man’s activities. In a grand display of what the Lord can do through a devoted person, Philip goes down to Samaria and preaches the Gospel. Although he had apparently been driven out of Jerusalem through the persecution mentioned in verse one, this city received him gladly, giving heed to his word. This was a remarkable contrast with the holy city, where God had been pleased to place His name. There Philip had been expelled, and here, where the name of the Lord had not been placed, he was received. This remarkable circumstance can only be accounted for by seeing it as another one of “the wonderful works of God,” attesting to the reign of the Lord Jesus and the power of the Gospel.

PHILIP PREACHES IN THE CITY OF SAMARIA

PHILIP

“Then Philip . . .” This is not the apostle Philip, who was the fifth apostle by rank, whom Jesus also chose in that order (Matt 10:3; Lk 6:14; Acts 1:13). Philip the apostle was from the city of Bethsaida, and was called by Jesus the day after Peter was brought to the Lord, who renamed him Cephas (John 1:43-44). We know the Philip of our text was not the apostle Philip because the apostles remained in Jerusalem while the other believers were dispersed (Acts 8:1).

This is Philip the deacon – one of the seven who were chosen to administrate the food distribution (Acts 6:5). He was chosen because he met the requirement of being “full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom” (Acts 6:3). This was a description of him before he was set aside to the distribution work through the laying on of the hands of the apostles (Acts 6:6).

We do not know how long the daily distribution continued in Jerusalem, but it appears to have terminated with the persecution or before. It is generally agreed among Bible scholars that the dispersion of Acts eight took place five to six years after Pentecost. If this is so – and there is no apparent reason to doubt it – the text of Scripture leaps over the period of time from the stoning of Stephen and the consequent scattering of the church, to the time when Philip went down to Samaria.

I have made a diligent effort to show that the manner in which inspired history is recorded differs from the way men assess and report history. The only reason for Biblical history is seen in at least five points.

- It reveals the working out of Divine purpose.
- It reveals certain aspects of the Divine nature.
- It manifests the true nature of fallen man, his spiritual obtuseness, and his fundamental tendency downward.
- It confirms that Satan’s head has indeed been bruised.
- It makes known the effects of faith in those who possess it.

The record we will now review will provide us with insights in all of these areas. For that reason alone, we ought to pay careful attention to it.

DOWN TO THE CITY OF SAMARIA

“ . . . went down to the city of Samaria . . . ”

Although the city of Samaria was North of Jerusalem, in the region of Samaria, our text says Philip went “down” to it.

Reasoning From Jerusalem

There is a reason for speaking in this manner rather than in strict accord with geographical location. Jerusalem was the heart of Canaan, and stood for the sanctification of the whole land. Similarly, that small country gave God a reason to be longsuffering with the rest of the world. In my own judgment, were it not for sanctified places and environments in which the Lord worked, the earth would not have been able to stand under the burden of mortality.

The phrase “up to Jerusalem” occurs twenty-five times in Scripture (1 Kgs 12:28; 2 Kgs 12:17; 16:5; 2 Chron 2:16; Ezra 1:3; 7:13; Matt 20:17,18; Mk 10:32,33; Lk 2:42; 18:31; 19:28; John 2:13; 5:1; 11:55; Acts 11:2; 15:2; 21:4,12,15; 24:11; 25:9; Gal 1:17,18). Most of these references involve a Southward direction, yet the journey was said to be “up.” When, for example, Jesus journeyed from northern Galilee to Jerusalem, which was in southern Judea, it is written that He went “ up to Jerusalem” (Matt 20:17,18; Mk 10:32-33). When Jesus was twelve years old, He went with His parents from Nazareth, in northern Galilee, to Jerusalem, which was in southern Judah. Yet, it is written that they went “ up to Jerusalem” (Lk 2:42). In John 2:13, Jesus is said to go from Capernaum, far North of Jerusalem in Galilee, “ up to Jerusalem.” Later, when again in Galilee, He journeyed southward “ up to Jerusalem” (John 5:1). The same language is used for another trip from Galilee in John 11:55. Again, in Acts 15:2, Paul and Barnabas were sent from Antioch, which was in Syria, North of the promised land, to “go up to Jerusalem.” Another time, when Paul was in Tyre, which is also in Syria, he was told by certain disciples not to “go up to Jerusalem” because of certain dangers he would face there (Acts 21:4). When Paul confronted Jesus on the road to Damascus, he was far North of Jerusalem. Yet, of that occasion Paul said he did not go from there “ up to Jerusalem” (Gal 1:17). He did “ go up to Jerusalem” from Damascus three years later (Gal 1:18).

In distinction to an economy of law, spiritual life functions with the context of priorities, preferences, and lofty considerations. Wherever men make an attempt to serve God by routine, rules, procedures, and the likes, they have gone down from Jerusalem into the lower regions.

We read the phrase “ down from Jerusalem” four times (Mk 3:22; Lk 10:30; Acts 8:26; 25:7). Jesus spoke of a certain man who went “ down from Jerusalem to Jericho,” which was actually North of Jerusalem (Lk 10:30). Later in this chapter Philip will be sent “ down from Jerusalem unto Gaza,” which was South of Jerusalem (Acts 8:26). In Acts 25:7, it is said that certain Jews came “ down from Jerusalem” to Caesarea, which was Northwest of Jerusalem in Samaria.

From an outward point of view, Jerusalem was located in the high places. The Mountain of Moriah on which the Temple was built, was in Jerusalem, indicating that it was situated in lofty places (2 Chron 3:1). This is supposed to be the very place on which Abraham was commanded to offer Isaac as a burnt offering to God (Gen 22:1). Mount Zion was on the North side of the city (Psa 48:2; Isa 10:12; 24:23; Joel 2:32). The place in which the Temple was situated is referred to as “the mountain of the Lord’s house” (Isa 2:3). Jerusalem itself is referred to as “My holy mountain Jerusalem” (Isa 66:20), “Jerusalem, Thy holy mountain” (Dan 9:16), “the mountain of the Lord” (Micah 4:2), and “the hill of Jerusalem” (Isa 10:32). It was in a high place, so that to go to Jerusalem you had to go up, and to leave Jerusalem, you had to go down. Jerusalem was literally a “city set on a hill” that could not be hid (Matt 5:14).

Thus, Jerusalem, because of the Temple, was the CENTER of attention in “the land of the Jews” (Acts 10:39). Also, because of its location it defaulted to a place of preeminence.

Developing A Kingdom Perspective

In all of this the Lord was developing a Kingdom manner – a particular way of thinking and a perspective of life. Seeking first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness (Matt 6:33), could well be likened to going up to Jerusalem. Setting our affection on things above, and not on things on the earth (Col 3:1-2) is also like going “up to Jerusalem.”

In distinction to an economy of law, spiritual life functions with the context of priorities, preferences, and lofty considerations. Wherever men make an attempt to serve God by routine, rules, procedures, and the likes, they have gone down from Jerusalem into the lower regions. Just as surely as there were valleys around Jerusalem in which vulnerability existed, so there are spiritual valleys – low places – where men become conquerable. In order for a person to yield to temptation, or fall into sin, they must leave the high places and traffic in the low places. They have to cease being “spiritually minded” (Rom 8:6). They must stop seeking those things that are above, “where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God” (Col 3:2).

What Does This Have to do with

Our Text?

It might appear as though all of this has nothing to do with our text – but it does. The conduct of the early church confirms where its affection had been placed, and what it was seeking. It was not a church directed by a kind of written code. To be sure, it did not ignore the Scriptures nor the apostles’ doctrine in which the matter of human conduct was addressed. However, the driving force of these people was their faith – and faith has a center point, or a focal point. Faith does not bring us to the plain, but to the mountain.

If men desire the power of the early church, they must own its focus and have its power. They must get out of the domain of mere talk, and into the realm of power, “For the kingdom of God is not a matter of talk but of power” NIV (1 Cor 4:20). I find myself experiencing a growing discontent with, and disdain for, lifeless religion. It is the antithesis of life, and that is why nothing similar to our text ever occurs within it.

PREACHED CHRIST UNTO THEM

“ . . . and preached Christ unto them.” Other versions read, “began “ proclaiming Christ unto them,” NASB “proclaimed the Christ there,” NIV “proclaimed the Messiah to them,” NRSV “ teaching them about Christ,” BBE and “ told the people there about the Messiah.” NLT

The word “preached” is a unique word, and very focused in its definition. It comes from the Greek word evkh,russen (e-ka-rus-sen). From the standpoint of grammar, it is a verb indicative imperfect active 3rd person singular. As a verb , it describes an action, or something that is done. The indicative mood indicates it was focused speaking, as compared to random talking. The imperfect mood highlights that this speaking was continuous – a subject being developed, as compared to reading a brief announcement. The active mood emphasizes that the actual act of preaching was being accomplished, as compared with merely thinking about a matter. The linguistic form 3 rd person singular describes an emphasis that is neither placed on the speaker (Philip) nor the one who is writing about the speaking (Luke). The point is what was preached, not who preached it, or who wrote about it.

The act of preaching itself is to proclaim as a herald, or someone who is making an announcement, or giving a report. Preaching is not telling people what they should do. It is not the relating of a procedure. By its very nature, it is the proclamation of something that IS, or has already been accomplished – not something to be done, or that ought to be accomplished. It is not the relating of a law, or even a set of commandments, for that is something to be done, not something that has been done. The difference between preaching and providing a course of action is the difference between reading a newspaper and a book of rules or list of procedures. It is the difference between giving a report of what has happened, and telling people what ought to happen.

I am becoming more and more impressed with how very little many preachers actually have to say. Many of them are like messengers without a message, or reporters without a report. In order to come up with something to say, they must first put their ear to the ground to pick up on the issues of the day, or the problems that the people are facing. Once they get that knowledge, then they will set out to say something they judge to be pertinent to the situation. All of this nonsense is being done under the banner of relevancy, and is billed as being concerned for the people and desirous of helping them in all of their difficulties. But that is nothing more than marketing talk.

At some point sincere people must come to understand that the salvation of God DOES address all legitimate need. It is in no way insufficient. It stands in need of no additive, social update, or human fortification. If people see no need for it, it is because they are blind, and there is no nice way to describe their situation.

Imagine Philip going down to Samaria and inquiring what particular problems they were experiencing at that time. Perhaps family life stood in need of improvement, or they were having trouble with the youth, or the senior citizens were being neglected. It is no doubt true that such things did exist, but they were certainly not a suitable subject for preaching – and neither are they today! At some point sincere people must come to understand that the salvation of God DOES address all legitimate need. It is in no way insufficient. It stands in need of no additive, social update, or human fortification. If people see no need for it, it is because they are blind, and there is no nice way to describe their situation. True preaching, however, will promote a proper focus, introspection, and the whetting of godly desire.

The region of Samaria had been exposed to the preaching of Jesus – even an extended exposure. Early in His ministry, Jesus had passed through this region. At the time, He knew how the Pharisees had “heard that He made and baptized more disciples than John.” Because the time had not yet come for His enemies to raise focused opposition against Him, He left Judaea and headed for Galilee. In the process, He had to pass through Samaria, which was the region between Judaea and Samaria. It was there that He came a parcel of ground that Jacob had given to Joseph – a place where Jacob himself had dug a well many years earlier. As Jesus sat there, he encountered a certain woman out of the city, and spoke most remarkable words to her concerning the nature of true worship, and the water of life that He Himself would dispense to those who desired it. As a result of that occasion, the woman went into the city and testified, “Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?” (John 4:29). They of the city then went out to see Jesus, and heard Him for themselves. As the massive crowd made their way to Jesus, He told His disciples, “Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest. And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together” (John 4:35-36).

That very day “many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him for the saying of the woman, which testified, He told me all that ever I did” (John 4:39). After others had heard Jesus for themselves, and asked Him to stay with them for two more days (which He did), “many more believed because of His own word.” There testimony is one of insight: “Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world” (John 4:42).

It is further inconceivable that the word of Christ’s teaching there did not spread throughout those regions of Samaria, just as surely as His reputation quickly spread wherever He went (Matt 4:24; 9:26,31; 14:1; Lk 4:14,37; 5:15). If it is true that “a city set on a hill cannot be hid” (Matt 5:14), how much less than the Light of the world Himself be hidden.

The “believing” that took place in Samaria when they heard Jesus, was much like the believing that took place during Jesus’ ministry (John 2:11,23; 7:48; 8:30-31; 10:42; 11:45; 12:11; 12:42). This was not believing “unto the saving of the soul” (Heb 10:39), but was a kind of elemental or preparatory believing that saw Jesus as being sent from God, but did not see clearly perceive Him in His redemptive role. Thus we read of some who believed on Him, “And many of the people believed on Him, and said, When Christ cometh, will He do more miracles than these which this man hath done?” (John 7:31). This was a legitimate believing, yet was not sufficient to in duct one into the Kingdom of God. This was not the kind of faith that causes people to become the children of God (Gal 3:26).

I have often pondered the possibility of much of the believing of our day being of that introductory order – not sufficient to bring about the new birth and justification, but being nothing more than acknowledging the legitimacy of Christ and His doctrine.

I say these things because Philip now goes down into this very region, and something will take place that was new, and more in keeping with the New Covenant and the work of the glorified Christ. Now, more had been given, and therefore men were expected to receive more. It is not comely in this great day of salvation for people to be believing like those who saw Jesus’ miracles and heard His introductory teaching about what was going to come following His exaltation. I do not wish to spend more time here, but I am of the settled persuasion that the preponderance of the Christianity of our day bears more of a likeness to Old Covenant religion and the results of Christ’s introductory ministry than to the economy of the New Covenant, which excels in glory.

He Preached Christ

The subject of Philip’s proclamation is specified: Christ! The content of his report is declared: Christ! Christ was both the sum and the substance of what Philip had to say. He was a member of the real church, but the church is not what he preached. He was a man full of the Spirit, but the Spirit is not what he proclaimed. He was also full of wisdom, but his message did not focus on having wisdom. Philip had been, and perhaps still was, a deacon, but he did not proclaim a message about offices in the body of Christ. He knew what it was like to provide food for widows, but he did not set up a work shop on meeting the needs of widows. He had been chosen to be a deacon according to apostolic directive, but he did not tell the people how to go about choosing deacons. He “preached Christ unto them.”

And, what does it mean to preach Christ? First, Jesus Christ is the subject of the preaching. He is not a means to get to the message of preaching, but is Himself the message. Preaching Christ involves acquainting people with Him, raising their awareness of Him, and informing them of what He has accomplished and is presently doing. Preaching Christ assumes His priority. He is to preaching what the headlines and to news are to a newspaper.

His Identity

Preaching Christ declares His identity – who Jesus is. That involves at least two things. First, His Person, including His character or nature. Fundamentally He IS “the Son of God” (John 1:34; John 4:15). That is, He is came forth from God, represents Him, and is the primary focus of God. When addressing the matter of His Person, it is written, “For such an high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens” (Heb 7:26). In His exalted capacity He has been seated at God’s “ own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and hath put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be the Head over all things to the church” (Eph 1:20-22).

Functionally, He is “the Christ” (Matt 16:16; John 20:31; 1 John 5:1). This regards the purpose for which He was sent into the world. He came to do God’s will – a will that had to be done if men were going to be saved. The primary context in which Jesus is to be considered is the will of God, not the need of men. Jesus did not come primarily to meet man’s need, but to do the will of His Father. The purpose of God is expressed in these words: “ For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil” (1 John 3:8). Again John wrote, “And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world” (1 John 4:14). Jesus said it this was, “Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice” (John 18:37).

The Necessity of Christ-Centeredness

It is not possible to have a proper view of Christ if who He IS has been clouded or obscured by some earthly consideration or emphasis. The real Christ cannot be seen in the darkness. He can only be seen in the light – and the preaching of Christ produces an environment of light. It is wrong – thoroughly wrong – for any individual to be a professing Christian for years, yet have very little understanding about the identity of Jesus Christ. Such a person may have been the victim of a distorted emphasis and paltry preaching – but that does not reduce the wrongness of the condition. I personally know both the immediate and the lingering effects of a system of religious thought that does not have Christ Jesus at its center. I was part of a city that was not set on the hill of Zion, but was rather in the “plain of Ono” (Neh 6:2-3). I cannot begin to tell you what was involved in being freed from the grip this system had upon my soul. I was not a casual disciple, else I would not have had such difficulty. Unwittingly, I had embraced a system of law, and the emphasis was consequently placed upon what men did. It all sounded reasonable enough, and the Scriptures were dutifully used to buttress everything that was said. But in the end, who Jesus really was and why He really came were not seen with sufficient clarity. Further, that lack of clarity was not viewed as a serious circumstance.

His Accomplished Works

Salvation is of such a nature that it could not be realized if Jesus was not presently doing something – something essential to salvation itself. This is an aspect of Jesus that has been remarkably neglected in post apostolic times.

The works of Christ include what He has done and what He is doing. What He has already accomplished has to do with establishing a basis for salvation, and a foundation for God to deal graciously with men. In other words, it was not enough that men SHOULD be saved, there had to be a just means through which that salvation could be accomplished. That foundation involved the following.

- Bearing our sins in His body on the tree (1 Pet 2:24).
- Being made sin for us (2 Cor 5:21).
- Being made a curse for us (Gal 3:13).
- Putting away sin (Heb 9:26).
- Destroying the devil (Heb 2:14).
- Spoiling, or plundering principalities and powers (Col 2:15).
- Making peace (Col 1:20).
- Making his soul an offering for sin, and thereby satisfying God (Isa 53:11).
- Reconciling the world (2 Cor 5:18).
- Ending the Law as a means of becoming righteous (Rom 10:4).

- Consecrating a new and living way to God (Heb 10:20).
- Raising from the dead, thereby becoming the firstfruits of them that slept (1 Cor 15:20).
- Being exalted above all, and given all power in heaven and earth (Eph 4:10; 1 Pet 3:22).

Until these things were accomplished to the satisfaction of God, no person could be born again. No sin could be remitted as God desired, and no one could be perfected. All of these accomplishments are of such a nature that they are powerless when viewed as mere history. They must be seen within the framework of Divine purpose, and preaching plays a significant role in this being realized.

His Present Working

Salvation is of such a nature that it could not be realized if Jesus was not presently doing something – something essential to salvation itself. This is an aspect of Jesus that has been remarkably neglected in post apostolic times. A failure to see this properly gave rise to an inordinate emphasis upon men, and the development of an institutional emphasis. Neither of these make any sense at all when men discern an active and reigning Christ. If He was the center of attention in a humbled state, how much more is He now that He has been glorified, magnified, and exalted above all. A sampling of what He is doing now is provided below. This is intended to emphasize how critical Christ is to the entirety of salvation.

- He is making intercession for those who are coming to God through Him (Heb 7:25).
- He is mediating the New Covenant, fulfilling the Divine commitments that are made therein (Heb 9:15; 12:24).
- He is bringing many sons to glory (Heb 2:10).
- He is loving and nourishing the church (Eph 5:29).
- He is speaking from heaven (Heb 12:25).
- He is authoring the finishing our faith (Heb 12:2).
- He is shepherding the sheep (Heb 13:21).
- He is fellowshiping with the children of God (1 Cor 1:9).
- He is preparing a place for us (John 14:2-3).
- He is causing the consolation of His people to abound (2 Cor 1:5).
- He is causing grace to reign through righteousness unto eternal life (Rom 5:21).
- He is producing fruits of righteous in the saints (Phil 1:11).
- He is making our spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God (1 Pet 2:5).
- He is strengthening His people to do all things (Phil 4:13).
- He is teaching the people of God (Eph 4:20-21; 1 John 5:20).
- He is giving eternal life to those the Father has given to Him (John 17:3).

Let no person imagine for a moment that “eternal salvation” (Heb 5:9) is possible without these activities – all of them!

When Philip went down to Samaria, he preached Christ to them. His perception of Christ was large enough to fill his preaching. I do not know that he articulated all of the things that I have mentioned – but he could have, and much more as well.

Preaching Christ is not stating what men call “the plan of salvation.” It is not telling people what they must do to be saved. Rather, it is declaring to them what Jesus has and is doing in order that they might be saved “to the uttermost” (Heb 7:25). Following the belief of that message, there are certainly precise words given that instruct people on how to be saved (Acts 2:38; 3:19; 8:37; 16:31; 22:16). But you will not find such words incorporated in the preaching itself. Neither, in deed, is it in order to go about always telling people what they must do to be saved only to offset the false teaching of men on the subject. So far as the record is concerned, the precise delineation of how to be saved is always reserved for those who have made known their desire to be saved (Acts 2:37; 8:36; 16:30).

Something to Remember

It is also important to remember that being “saved” is not limited to entering into the Kingdom (John 3:5), being added to the church (Acts 2:47), or being baptized into Christ (Gal 3:27). That is the start, not the finish. There is a very real sense in which the person is not saved until he stands faultless before the presence of Christ’s glory. Until that time, salvation is a work-in-progress. It is a time during which a predetermined conformity to the image of Christ is taking place (Rom 8:29). It is a time of change, from glory unto glory (2 Cor 3:18). It is the time of growing up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:15). Those processes all require the continual preaching of Christ. The truth of this is confirmed throughout the epistles, all of which are addressed to those whose who have already been justified by faith.

WITH ONE ACCORD, THE PEOPLE GIVE HEED

“ 6 And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did.”

Up to this time, the powerful effects of preaching and teaching have been confirmed.

- Sinners have been converted through this means (Acts 2:41,47; 4:4; 5:14).
- Enemies have been exposed through this means (Acts 4:1-2; 5:40; 6:12-15' 8:1).
- Disciples have been nurtured by this means (Acts 2:42,46; 431-33).
- God has been glorified by this means (Acts 4:21).

There were no soup kitchen programs, poor-assistance strategies, youth programs, senior outings, counseling services, marriage seminars, and such like. The success of the early church was not owing to its involvement in community affairs, or penetration into various social and political activities. It was rather the straightforward preaching and teaching of the Word of God, supported by godly demeanor, that caused their remarkable effectiveness. As simple as that may seem, it is something that cannot be institutionalized, or encapsulated in a educational strategy. The reason for such effectiveness is the embrace of the truth itself by those who are of an honest and good heart. So far as the social strata of life is concerned, or the values of this world, none of these people could be said to have been impressive or noteworthy.

This is remarkably demonstrated in Philip. Enough is not known of him to prepare even an acceptable resume. Imagine a local church receiving the resume of Philip in response to their request for a new minister.

There were no soup kitchen programs, poor-assistance strategies, youth programs, senior outings, counseling services, marriage seminars, and such like. The success of the early church was not owing to its involvement in community affairs, or penetration into various social and political activities.

- One of several men who were full of faith and the Holy Spirit (Acts 6:5).

- One of seven men who were in charge of a food distribution program (Acts 6:3,6).

At the time Philip went down to the city of Samaria, this is all the record has said about him. But this will be sufficient for the Samaritans, who probably did not even know those two things about him. They will do with Philip as certain people from their region did with Jesus: they will judge him by what he says!

Something to Note

I have observed over the years how little emphasis is put on what preachers and teachers actually say. Some of them are evaluated upon the basis of their credentials. Others upon the basis of what they have themselves reported to have accomplished. Many are evaluated by the institutional growth they have caused. But precious few of them are held in high regard for what they actually say. I personally know of a great number of ministers concerning whom I do not have the remotest idea concerning their preaching and teaching. When I am with them, they never speak of their insights, and they are not disposed to hold conversations concerning the Word of God, or to share their perceptions of Scriptural statements.

Philip was not giving heed to the people, but the people were giving heed to him! He was bringing what they needed to them! He had not taken a poll first to get the pulse of the community.

But here, in our text, what Philip says is the heart of the matter. What He does supports what He says. He does not come in the name of an institution – not even as an official representative of the mother church in Jerusalem. It is essential that we pick up on this circumstance. There are people who tell us they must have this professional training or certain credentials in order to be effective. Men like Stephen and Philip stand as a living contradiction to this view – and that is not to mention the Lord Jesus Himself, and all of His apostles. I am of the growing opinion that a church that demands credentials that, in their minds, have a greater weight than the ability to proclaim and expound the Gospel, is unworthy of having a man of God in their pulpit. Further, I cannot conceive of the reigning Christ sending one of His servants to such an organization.

THEY GAVE HEED WITH ONE ACCORD

“And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake . . .” Other versions read, “with one accord heeded,” NKJV “with one accord were giving attention,” “they all paid close attention,” NIV “with one accord listened eagerly,” NRSV “the people gave attention,” BBE “paid attention with one mind,” CSB “they gave ear to him and acquiesced in all that he said,” MRD “unanimously welcomed the message,” NJB “with a single purpose, they listened very carefully,” IE and “they became interested in what was said.” WILLIAMS

There are at least two philosophies to preaching. First, know the people and what is important to them, then speak on those things. Second, know the Lord and what is important to Him, and speak those things. Modern preaching is driven by the former – meeting people where they are. That is why we now have Bibles that are tailored for particular people, and in which certain texts are highlighted for certain kinds of people. The preaching is being adapted to the people, and we are told this is a good and noble thing.

However, notice the difference in what is reported as taking place in Samaria. Philip was not giving heed to the people, but the people were giving heed to him! He was bringing what they needed to them! He had not taken a poll first to get the pulse of the community. No survey had been taken to determine if any of the people remembered when Jesus was in the region., There had not been a lengthy period preceding his presence there that was allotted to gain an acquaintance of the region and the circumstances that existed there. He did not engage in an effort to gain knowledge of the prevailing religious persuasions, or the degree of interest in a new church that was present in the community. See, those are tactics that men use today for their own programs. But this is not the nature of the reports in the book of Acts.

With One Accord

What does “with one accord” mean? This expression comes from a single Greek word, ὁμοθυμαδον (hom-oth-oo-made-on). Its lexical meaning is, “with one mind,” THAYER “agreed on unanimously . . . with one purpose,” FRIBERG “common consent,” UBS “together,” LEH and “with one mind or purpose of impulse.” GINGRICH The idea of the word is that of a body of people, not of individuals here and there.

Among other things, this reveals that Philip was speaking to groups – just as John the Baptist and Jesus did. Individual discussions were the exception, not the rule. Philip was not going from house to house, or making friends with individuals, but was himself the focus of attention. Those who are averse to being in crowds would have simply missed the ministry of John the Baptist, and would have been zealous like Nicodemus to obtain an advantage to hear Jesus.

What Philip was saying was the focus. It did not need to be supported by video presentations, lighting effects, and the likes. It was his message that was the point, not various ploys to get the attention of the people. The response of the people was united – “with one accord.” Among other things, that means the message was not adapted to various people groups: i.e. young, old, singles, married, etc. One man, one message, and those who received gave one response.

Gave Heed

The words “gave heed” also come from a single Greek word: προσεικο (pros-sei-khov). In the construction of the Greek sentence, this is the first word: i.e. “Heeded yet the throngs to the things being said by Philip.” Greek Interlinear, Scripture4All The construction of the sentence actually provides a proper intellectual perspective. In order of importance, this is what we see.

- The things being said.
- The person who was saying them.
- The manner in which they were heard.
- The people who were hearing them.

This order contradicts the whole concept of religious entertainment, accommodating to the people, and trying to meet them where they are. The postulate of sound preaching is that God has provided us with a message that is, by its very nature, relevant, meeting people where they are. It really does not have to be adapted to the people, because it is a living word. As it is written, “For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe ” (1 Thess 2:13). If this truth were to be apprehended by the preachers and teachers of our day, it would revolutionize what is being said in the churches. It would also expose the fatal flaw that is found in homiletics (the art of preaching) and hermeneutics (the study of methodological principles of Biblical interpretation) – neither of which take into consideration the working of the Holy Spirit.

If modern preaching differs conceptually and in content from the preaching of men like Philip, it should not come as surprise that it does not produce the same kind of results.

The response of the people in Samaria was not one that was orchestrated by Philip. It was not a response that he made a concerted effort to produce. This was the result of the working of the Lord, and the means through it was accomplished were the words and works of Philip. As simplistic as all of that may appear, it is not possible for the mind of the flesh to take hold it. To such a mind it makes no sense that a man of Philip's background could go down to Samaria alone, and preach with such power and effectiveness. However, to the mind that is "controlled by the Spirit" NIV (Rom 8:6), it is very reasonable, and refreshing to the soul as well.

HEARING AND SEEING

" . . . hearing and seeing the miracles which he did." Other versions read, "they heard and saw the miracles he was performing," NASB " heard Philip and saw the miraculous signs he did," NIV "hearing and seeing the signs that he did," NRSV " because they had heard of the miracles he worked and because they saw them for themselves," NJB " continued to see his wonder-works which he was performing," WILLIAMS and "as they heard him and watched the miracles and wonders which he kept performing [from time to time]." AMPLIFIED

As you can see, some of the versions place the emphasis on the people hearing about the miracles (New Jerusalem Bible, Basic Bible English). The actual construction of the sentence requires that the word "hearing" be applied to the words that Philip was speaking: the words "being said by Philip" – not the report of miracles that had been, and were being, done by him. We ought to know this, for faith comes by hearing the Gospel, not by hearing a report of miracles (Rom 10:14,17). These words are accounting for why the people were listening intently to what Philip was saying.

Seeing the Miracles

The miracles that were being wrought by Philip coincided with the message that he was preaching. Those mighty works were not a foundation for faith, but an evidence of Philip's legitimacy – particularly in view of the presence of Simon, who will be introduced to us in the succeeding verses. The response of the Samaritans confirmed those mighty works substantiated what he was saying, which was the reason for their presence. It was not enough that they were supernatural, or wrought outside the boundaries of natural aptitude or the ordinary workings of nature. They specifically supported what Philip was saying, and he was preaching Christ unto them.

The Theology of Miracles

I have never been satisfied with the explanation for miracles to which I have been subjected within an institutional framework.

View #1. On the one hand, there were those who said God always works miracles, and we should expect Him to do so. That view, however, does not match up with Divine history which recorded long periods of time in which there was no miracle among His own people – as in the time of Gideon (Judges 6:13). There was also the time when many widows existed in Israel, yet none of them were miraculously sustained as was the widow from Zaraphath (Lk 4:25; 1 Kgs 17:9-24). There were also many lepers in Israel, yet they were not healed as was the Syrian Naaman (Lk 4:27; 1 Kgs 19:-21).

View #2. Then, there was the view embraced by those with whom I was most familiar. It stated that miracles were only intended to confirm the word of the apostles in the beginning. That was based upon Hebrews (Heb 2:3). It was also stated that when the fulness of Scripture was accomplished, the need for miracles passed away, because the word had already been confirmed. This, they alleged, is what was meant by the Pauline expression, "But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away" (1 Cor 13:10). There were difficulties with this also, because the Scriptures do not clearly declare that position. It is a derived position, not a revealed one, and the purpose for which it is embraced is opened to question – which is to negate untenable doctrines concerning the miraculous.

We also have miracle workers that were not apostles – like Stephen and Philip. Although the apostles did lay hands upon them to set them apart for the work, nothing suggests that miraculous powers were passed on to them by this means. I do not know of an incident where miraculous powers were conferred upon others by the apostles. We do know that Timothy received a spiritual gift “with the laying on hands of the presbytery,” or elders (1 Tim 4:14). At any rate, the doctrine to which I was subjected was too weak in its foundation, produced too many questions, and failed to provide clear answers. Nor, indeed, was it supported by a noble cause.

A Better Explanation

We have in our text a better and more satisfactory explanation for the miracles wrought by Philip. Here is a case where the people believed because of what they heard and saw. These were two independent witnesses, yet they bore testimony to the same thing. The words of Philip made Jesus known, and so did the miracles he wrought. That means they provided men with a sight that perfectly harmonized with the message. If this was not the case, the text would not say they believed “hearing and seeing.”

This was not a matter of Philip being able to do something supernatural. The point of attraction was the doctrine that he preached, and the works he wrought were actually a display of the doctrine. Permit me to illustrate this point by drawing your attention to some things prophesied of Christ Jesus and the day of salvation.

In order for miracles to confirm what is being said, they must be more than a mere demonstration of supernatural power. They must be harmonious with the doctrine itself, else their effects will not last. In such a case, they would only astound, entertain, or provide some satisfaction to curious souls.

Seeing and Hearing. “Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped” (Isa 35:5). Those with understanding know that this had to do with more than the reclamation of the health of the body. Of old time, God opened the eyes of Elisha’s servant so he could see the angelic hosts that surrounded the enemies that were threatening them (2 Kgs 6:17). Jesus, however, came to open the spiritual eyes of the people, and give them ears to hear. He Himself wrought miracles of healing that externalized those inward conditions, curing men of blindness and deafness (Matt 9:27-31; Mk 7:31-37; 8:22-26; John 9:9-41). Those miracles confirmed what He said about Himself: “I am come into the world, that they which see not might see” (John 9:39). He came to give men “ears to hear” (Mk 7:16).

• Walking and Speaking. “Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert” (Isa 35:6). Sin had debilitated men, making them spiritually crippled so they could not navigate in heavenly realms. Jesus to bring spiritual dexterity, so men could walk by faith (2 Cor 5:7), run the race set before them (Heb 12:1), and leap for joy (Lk 6:23). When He healed the lame and the dumb, those objectives were lived out before the people, confirming the truth of His Person and message (Matt 9:1-8; Mk 7:31-37).

• Giving Life from the Dead. “Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David” (Isa 55:3). Sin had left men dead – “dead in trespasses and sins” (Eph 2:1). Jesus came to give them life, quickening them, and raising the from the state of spiritual death (John 5:25; 10:10). In His miracles Jesus confirmed the truth of this aspect of His ministry by raising the dead (Matt 11:5; Lk 7:11-16; Matt 9:18-26; John 11:1-46).

• Curing the Malignancy of Sin. “A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh” (Ezek 36:26). Sin is a moral corruption that eats away at the vitals of the soul, spreading and consuming with no mercy. Apart from Jesus, men not only sin because of their preference for it, but because of their nature, which is been corrupted by sin from the mother's womb. In Jesus miracles, He healed some from leprosy, which has a remarkable resemblance to the nature of sin (Matt 8:1-4; Lk 17:11-19). These also confirmed the reality of His ministry.

Much more could be said on this matter, showing the exacting parallel between the miracles of our Lord and the reason for His Saviorhood. Let me name just a few more to establish this point.

- Turning the ordinary into the extraordinary , as confirmed by turning water into wine (John 2:1-11).
- Giving men the ability to obtain many blessings , as confirmed in the miraculous catches of fish (Lk 5:1-11).
- Freeing men from bondage to sin and the devil , as confirmed in the casting out of demons (Mk 1:23-26).
- Raising men from a state of weakness, as confirmed in healing Peter's mother-in-law of a debilitating fever (Mk 8:14-17).
- Enabling men to take hold of the truth, as confirmed by healing the man with the withered hand (Matt 12:9-13).
- Freeing men from the threat of circumstance, as confirmed by the stilling of the tempest (Matt 8:23-27).
- Freeing men from ongoing infirmities that sap their strength, as confirmed in the healing of the woman with an issue of blood (Mk 5:25-34).
- Providing nourishment when no one else is able to do so, as confirmed in the feeding of the five thousand (Matt 13:15-21).

In order for miracles to confirm what is being said, they must be more than a mere demonstration of supernatural power. They must be harmonious with the doctrine itself, else their effects will not last. In such a case, they would only astound, entertain, or provide some satisfaction to curious souls. However, if an association can be made between them and the Lord Jesus, it will encourage faith and awaken hope.

This, in my judgment, is what occurred in the city of Samaria. The miracles that were wrought by Philip confirmed the truth of what he was preaching. This will be clarified in the verses that follow.

It is not wise for men to engage in speculation concerning what the Lord does or does not do. There has never been an age in which men could perfectly identify on their own what Divine work could or could not be done, and it is certain that we are not living in such a time now. Arguments concerning miracles and spiritual gifts are nothing more than sectarian skirmishes, and they all take place in the lowlands of Ono.

It seems to me that it is far wiser to be diligent to proclaim a message that can be confirmed if God sees fit to do so. We are living in a time when there is such a diversity of things being said in the name of the Lord, that it is well-nigh impossible to establish the reality of truth by pedantries alone. If it is true that the kingdom of God "depends not on talk but on power" NRSV (1 Cor 4:20), then we ought not seek to establish the truth by such things as logic, the original language, sentence structure, context, and the likes. Whatever may be found in such approaches, it certainly does not justify resting your soul upon them. All of them have more of men in them than they do of God. Furthermore, Scriptures leaves us without a solitary example of an person establishing the truth in such a manner. Perhaps if there were more men like Stephen and Philip – men filled with the Holy Spirit and wisdom – heaven would demonstrate more of an interest in what they said.

It seems to me that it is far wiser to be diligent to proclaim a message that can be confirmed if God sees fit to do so. We are living in a time when there is such a diversity of things being said in the name of the Lord, that it is well-nigh impossible to establish the reality of truth by pedantries alone.

I certainly do not wish to awaken an inordinate desire for the miraculous – not when the Lord has been so gracious to reveal such an abundance to us. I must, however, confess my growing intolerance of powerless and lifeless religion. It chafes upon my soul and agitates my spirit. It is so completely out of harmony with the Gospel that it makes perfect sense to withdraw from those who insist on perpetrating it. That is why we read admonitions like the following.

- “Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself” (1 Tim 6:5).
- “Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away” (2 Tim 3:5).
- “But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honor, and some to dishonor. If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work” (2 Tim 2:20-21).
- “Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you” (2 Cor 6:17).
- “And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues” (Rev 18:4).

I do not know how any person can justify ignoring these admonitions. People of honest and good hearts are obligated to consider them and see to it that they are fulfilled in their lives. No person can make the decision for them, or impose their own perceptions upon them. However, they must be duly considered, wisdom sought, and their demand heeded. It is entirely possible that the predominate absence of men like Philip in the Christian world is one of the reasons for its obvious impotence.

THE POWERS OF DARKNESS ARE SHAKEN

“7 For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.”

Powerful and insightful preaching has a threefold impact. It has effects on earth, in heaven, and in the kingdom of darkness.

In Heaven

In heaven, preaching is part of the “sweet savor of Christ” that is found in those laboring with Him (2 Cor 2:15). Holy angels, who “desire to look into” the things that are being preached (1 Pet 1:12) no doubt are intrigued by the proclamation of the record God has given of His Son. The “preaching” is the means by which those who believe are saved (1 Cor 1:21), and if God’s word is “manifested . . . through preaching” (Tit 1:3), then heaven is active in the process itself.

In Earth

In earth, preaching is the appointed means through which faith, which comes by hearing, is eventually dispensed (Rom 10:14-17). This is the means through which the saints are established. As it is written, “Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began” (Rom 16:25). The “preaching of the cross” is, to them that believe, “the power of God” (1 Cor 1:18).

Among Satan’s Hosts

Preaching also has an impact on the powers of darkness. As the truth goes out and spiritual light is dispersed, the powers of darkness are shaken. Truth confronts the lie, and light pervades the darkness. Because Christ and Satan and antithetical anything coming from either of them are in active conflict. This is not a conflict involving those of equal strength. While Satan is strong, Christ is more strong. It is Satan that, not Jesus, that has received the mortal bruise! It is Jesus, not Satan, that has been triumphant, and has been given all power and all dominion. For this reason, what comes from Satan cannot survive a confrontation of that which comes from Christ. This is evident in our text.

UNCLEAN SPIRITS CAME OUT

Who Are Unclean Spirits?

Unclean spirits are wicked personalities that cause defilement. There are various effects that have been traced to their influence.

- The man from Gadara in whom a legion of demons dwelt is said to have had an “unclean spirit” (Mk 5:2; Lk 8:29). When, with Jesus’ approval, the demons went into the swine, Mark says “the unclean spirits went out” (Mark 5:13).
- The daughter of the Syrophenician woman, who was “grievously vexed with a demon” (Matt 15:22), is said to have had “an unclean spirit” (Mk 7:25).
- The young boy who had a demon that caused him to wallow on the ground and foam at the mouth, even casting him into fire and into water in an attempt to destroy him (Mk 9:20-22), is said to have had an “unclean spirit” (Lk 9:42).

Jesus Confronted Unclean Spirits

When Jesus went about doing good and healing all who were oppressed of the devil, His power over “unclean spirits” was especially noted. People noted, “with authority commandeth He even the unclean spirits, and they obey Him” (Mk 1:27). It is written that “unclean spirits, when they saw Him, fell down before Him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God” (Mark 3:11).

Jesus had such power over this body of personalities that He could give His disciples power over them (Matt 10:1; Mk 6:7).

A Category of Demons

Unclean spirits are a category of demons, and sometimes the terms are used interchangeably by the Gospel writers (Mk 1:26/Lk 9:42; Mk 3:30/John 10:20; Mk 5:2/Lk 8:27; Mk 7:25/Matt 15:22).

The Nature of These Spirits

These are particularly dangerous because of their nature. Intelligence and will is ascribed to them (Mk 1:24; Lk 4:34; James 2:19; 3:14-15). They have great power (Matt 8:28-32; Mk 9:26; Eph 6:12).

They are capable of seducing men, so that they leave following Christ and tumble into sin (1 Tim 4:1). They even formulate and perpetrate false doctrines that lead men to perdition (1 Tim 4:1). Paul wrote that, in some cunning way, they prepare a table at which men can sit, imbibing their wickedness, and thus excluding them from participation with Christ (1 Cor 10:21).

They Are Behind Idolatry

There is some way in these spirits move men to worship them, for, we are told, all idolatry is actually the worship of demons (Lev 17:7; Deut 21:17; 2 Chron 11:15; 1 Cor 10:20; Rev 9:20).

This vast spiritual underworld would no doubt stagger us completely were we made fully aware of it. Various doctrines have been contrived by men that suggest these personalities either no longer exist, or that they are no longer active. Such teachings are dangerous beyond description, for believers of all ages are expressly told that they are grappling with spiritual powers and authorities (Eph 6:12). To go about life as though the problems and challenges of humanity were the only things we face is a posture of life that will mandate falling, stumbling, and vulnerability. One of the descriptions of Babylon the Great, the simulated church of Satan, is that she has become the “habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird” (Rev 18:2). It is quite possible that the outbreak of immorality within the churches, together with the flood of false teaching, is nothing less than confirmation that they have become the dwelling place of unclean spirits and demons. In fact, Paul suggested that some of the unacceptable conduct found among the Corinthians was owing to them eating and drinking at the table of demons (1 Cor 10:21).

This is a unique kind of rejoicing. It is rooted in insight, not emotion. It proceeds from a genuine experience, not some form of entertainment. It is not the result of distraction, but of attraction to the Lord. It goes deeper than the pleasure of which nature is capable.

While Jesus did, indeed, deliver a crushing blow to the power of darkness, spoiling principalities and powers and triumphing over them in His cross (Col 2:15), He did not exterminate them. Their continued activity is much like that of the devil, who was also “destroyed” by means of Christ’s death (Heb 2:14). These powers continue to operate, but are vulnerable to truth and the power of the Holy Spirit within the saints. However, those who are not in Christ do not have an ounce of power against these forces.

Philip’s Ministry

Now, Philip comes into the city of Samaria – a place in which these spirits had apparently operated for some time with little, if any, restraint. The time is roughly two to three years after Christ’s exaltation, and demons are still active in the region. Now, however their domain is invaded by a man who has both the Holy Spirit and wisdom. He comes with a message that throws a profound ray of light into a region dominated by darkness. That light has a staggering impact upon the powers of darkness. With shrieks and cries of utter frustration unclean spirits “came out of many that were possessed with them,” being no longer able to maintain their hold upon those poor souls. This man was an apostle, nor is there any evidence that he was one of the seventy. Nothing in Scripture clearly states that he had this gift imparted to him. He was, however, “full of the Holy Spirit” – even before the apostles laid their hands upon him (Acts 6:3). These were not “the signs of an apostle,” which were unique (1 Cor 12:12).

Of course, it is a mistake to labor at explaining why these things happened. It is enough to note that they did happen, that they were done by a man who was not an apostle, and that they accompanied the preaching of Christ. As to the why of such things, it is enough to note that they were done under the administration of the Head of the church.

MANY PALSIED AND LAME WERE HEALED

“ . . . and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.” Other versions read, “paralyzed and lame,” NKJV “paralytics and crippled,” NIV “ill and broken in body,” BBE and “many taken with palsies, and many that halted.” PNT

The language is intriguing: “taken with palsies . . .” That phrase is translated a single Greek word paralelume,noi (para-llelu-me-noi). It is in the perfect passive tense that means something that happened at a fixed point in time, as compared to a condition of gradual deterioration. A literal translation would be, “having been made paralyzed.” In other words, these were victims. The fact that there were many of these people suggests this condition was not owing to an accident or some debilitating disease. This kind of language is not the same as used in the expression “and that were lame.” The technical aspect of language is simply pointing out that this lameness was their present condition. However, with the cluster of people who were palsied, or paralyzed, the linguistic stress is placed on the fact that they were made that way at some fixed point in time. We have, therefore, a diversity of diseases that were healed – some ordinary, some extraordinary; some with a sudden cause, and some with a gradual one.

From a medical viewpoint, some of these may have appeared to be a more profound disorder. However, in the blazing light of the truth of Christ, and in the presence of Divine power, no such distinctions existed. There is a certain leveling of all difficulty in the presence of the King.

THERE WAS GREAT JOY IN THAT CITY

“ 8 And there was great joy in that city.” Other versions read, “much rejoicing,” NASB “ much joy,” RSV “ extremely happy,” GWN “v ery happy,” IE and “great rejoicing .” AMPLIFIED

This is a unique kind of rejoicing. It is rooted in insight, not emotion. It proceeds from a genuine experience, not some form of entertainment. It is not the result of distraction, but of attraction to the Lord. It goes deeper than the pleasure of which nature is capable.

The word “joy” means “gladness,” or having a cheerful disposition in which no rational powers are diminished or placed to the side. By way of contrast, there are the “pleasures of sin” that wane because they are rooted in sensuality and fleshly emotion, both of which exclude rationality, reasonableness, and tenability (Heb 11:25). That is why such pleasures quickly dissipate, because they are part and parcel of the flesh, which is in a dying state. There is, however, a higher order of pleasure that is not subject to the erosion of time. David speaks of this order when he refers to “pleasures for evermore,” which are at the right hand of God (Psa 16:11). That kind of pleasure results from perception, not mere feeling.

This is the kind of joy that was experienced in the city of Samaria. It was the kind of joy that resulted from making an association with what was happening among them, and the Christ whom Philip was preaching. They were witnessing and experiencing the effects of the Christ who was being preached.

There is only three accounts of Jesus going through the area of Samaria during His ministry.

- The first was when He was en route to Jerusalem, during which He confronted the woman at the well (John 4:4-40). During that occasion, He remained for two days, teaching the people (John 4:40,43).
- The second was when He had again set His face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem. At that time He sent out messengers into a village of the Samaritans “to make ready for Him.” However, the Samaritans refused to receive Him at that time, because they discerned He was headed for Jerusalem, and would not stay among them. This was a response that angered the disciples, and was the occasion when James and John asked Jesus if He wanted them to call down fire on the city “and consume them as Elijah did” (Luke 9:52-56).

- The third time Jesus went through the region was also when He was headed for Jerusalem. No details are provided of that event – simply that “He passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee” (Lk 17:11). This was the occasion where Jesus met ten lepers, healing them all, with only one leper, “a Samaritan,” returning to give Him thanks (17:12-19). We are not sure if the city where this occurred was in Galilee or Samaria. In my opinion, it was probably in Galilee, as the verse suggests. It states that Jesus, in going to Jerusalem, passed through “Samaria and Galilee.” However, the geographical area covered would have Galilee as first area, and Samaria as the second, which was in between Galilee and Judaea, in which Jerusalem was located. The way in which the trip is expressed suggests the city was in Galilee.

There is no record of any miraculous works ever being done in the region of Samaria prior to our text! When Jesus spent two days there, it was lone of the very few times when Jesus did no miracle among them.

- During His ministry, Jesus sent His Apostles out to preach. During that time, they were told, “Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give” (Matt 10:8). However, they were forbidden to do into any city of the Samaritans. “Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not” (Matt 10:5).

My point in bringing up these things is simply this: there is no record of any miraculous works ever being done in the region of Samaria prior to our text! When Jesus spent two days there, it was lone of the very few times when Jesus did no miracle among them. Those who believed on Him did so “because of His own word,” and confessed “Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard Him ourselves , and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world” (John 4:42).

During Christ’s ministry, there is no record of any Samaritans every coming to hear Him. People came from “cities and villages” (Matt 9:35), but there is no mention of any that were in Samaria. The only Samaritans that are mentioned in connection with the ministry of Jesus are the woman at the well (John 4:9), the group that came out of the city to hear Jesus at the well (John 4:39-40), and one of the ten lepers that were healed (Lk 17:16).

The point here is that this was apparently the first time such mighty works had been seen by these people. I do not doubt they had heard of Jesus, for He had been in their region for two days. Further, because the Jews had “no dealings with the Samaritans” (John 4:9), it is not likely that those exposed to the ministry of Jesus had testified to them.

Philip, in a sense, blazed the Gospel trail in this city, exposing them to things with which they had no familiarity. Yet, God worked powerfully through Him, and the whole city believed. Now, the city is filled with gladness because of the “wonderful works of God” that were wrought within it (Acts 2:11). There had been no revealed preparation made for the arrival of Philip. He had not established a presence there, first becoming familiar with the people, and then gradually exposing them to the Gospel, so as not to offend them. He had not led them in some preparatory Bible course, designed to acquaint them with what would be required of them. He simply “went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ into them.” It was the Lord’s good pleasure to work with them as He did also with the apostles: “the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following” (Mark 16:20). I must admit that I do not want any part of a theology that makes it difficult to receive this words concerning a former deacon of the church, who was not accompanied by an apostle, or sent forth by them.

SIMON THE SORCERER

“ 9 But there was a certain man, called Simon, which beforetime in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one: 10 To whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God.”

It should not surprise us that one of Satan’s servants now surfaces – now that the kingdom of darkness has been jarred from its confident hold on the region! One of the characteristics of the Gospel is that it reveals a power that is superior to that of the devil. Here we are presented with a sterling example of that fact.

A CERTAIN MAN

“ 9a But there was a certain man, called Simon . . . ”

Just as surely as there are primary people in the Kingdom of God, so there are significant individuals in the kingdom of darkness. Early in human history there was Nimrod. The Philistines had Goliath. Now we are introduced to a “certain man” who was especially used by the devil.

THE PEOPLE WERE BEWITCHED

“ 9b . . . which beforetime in the same city used sorcery and bewitched the people of Samaria . . . ” Other versions read, “practiced sorcery in the city and astonished the people,” NKJV “ practicing magic in the city and astonishing the people,” NASB “practiced sorcery in the city and amazed all the people,” NIV “been a wonder-worker and a cause of surprise,” BBE “had been a magician in that city, seducing the people,” DOUAY “ used witchcraft , and bewitched the people,” GENEVA “ seduced the people by his sorceries,” MRD and “ practiced magic arts in the city to the utter amazement of the Samaritan nation.” AMPLIFIED

This is the first of two sorcerers to whom we are introduced in the book of Acts. The other is Elymas, who confronted the Apostle Paul (Acts 13:6-8). By definition, a sorcerer is “one who practices magical arts,” THAYER and “one who practices sorcery, magic, or uses witchcraft” FRIBERG This work falls under the general classification of divination, and is soundly condemned throughout Scripture. The Law addressed such sins in this manner: “There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer” (Deut 18:10-11). The Amplified Bible uses the words “divination, or is a soothsayer, or an augur, or a sorcerer, or a charmer, or a medium, or a wizard, or a necromancer.” At one time, when Israel left the ways of the Lord, they “used divination and enchantments” (2 Kgs 17:17). It came to the point where their prophets even used “divination” (Jer 14:14). This was particularly reprehensible because it was the result of abandoning the Lord and relying on other sources for power and information. The fact that these arts were not merely slight of hand or human deception is suggested by the fact that God frustrated diviners (Mich 3:6-7,11).

One of the classic examples of one of these practitioners of curious arts is the witch of Endor to which king Saul resorted after the Lord had departed from him. The account is quite challenging, and filled with things that are difficult for some to receive. Saul asked this woman to bring Samuel up from the dead. The woman proceeded to do this and “saw Samuel.” When she did she cried with a loud voice shouted that Saul had deceived her, and now she knew who he was, even though he had disguised himself. After Saul told her not be afraid, and tell him what she had seen, she said, “I saw gods ascending out of the earth.” Saul asked her what the form of the one looked like. She replied, “An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantel.” The text states that Saul “perceived it was Samuel, and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself.” It was at that point that the Scriptures say Samuel talked to Saul asking him why he disquieted him to bring him up. After Saul replied that God had departed from him, and would not speak to him through prophets or by dreams, Samuel said the following words to Saul. “Wherefore then dost thou ask of me, seeing the LORD is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy? And the LORD hath done to him, as he spake by me: for the LORD hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to thy neighbor, even to David: Because thou obeyedst not the voice of the LORD, nor executedst his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore hath the LORD done this thing unto thee this day. Moreover the LORD will also deliver Israel with thee into the hand of the Philistines: and to morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me: the LORD also shall deliver the host of Israel into the hand of the Philistines” (1 Sam 28:6-19).

Notice what Samuel is declared to have said.

- The Lord had departed from him.
- The Lord had become his enemy.
- The Lord had done what Samuel had previously told Saul, wresting the kingdom from his hand. The record of this word is found in First Samuel 13:13.
- He said the Lord had given the kingdom to Saul’s neighbor David. The record of this word is found in First Samuel 13:14.
- He told Saul this was specifically because he had failed to obey the voice of the Lord by not executing his wrath upon Amalek. The record of this word is recorded in First Samuel 15:18-23).
- He said the Lord would deliver the host of Israel, and Saul as well, into the hands of the Philistines the next day. The record of the fulfillment of those words is found in First Samuel 31:1-3.
- He said that Saul and his sons would be with him the next day. The record of the fulfillment of that word is found in First Samuel 31:4-6.

I have taken the time to ;provide this account because there is a view that says the witch of Endor did not really bring up Samuel. – that is was actually a demon or an evil spirit impersonating Samuel. If that is so, we are face with a number of very difficult things. Not the least of these is the remarkable accuracy of the words delivered by the personality that was brought up.

- There was an accurate testimony of the past.

Unless Satan and his hosts are nothing more than men, it is out of order to treat their works as though they were in the class of human activity, chance, and time.

A precise accounting why God had forsaken Saul, and the precise event that occasioned it.

- The successor of Saul was precisely identified as David,
- The dominance of the Philistines over Israel was foretold.
- The death of Saul and his sons was announced, together with the precise time when it would occur.

For me, it is exceedingly difficult to accept those things as being said by the a demon or evil spirit. The witch of Endor herself thought it was Samuel. Saul said he knew it was Samuel. Additionally, the Word of God says it was Samuel, and provides not one syllable of suggestion that it was not. Some may counter that a woman with a spirit of divination precisely described Paul and those with him as “the servants of the most high God, which show unto us the way of salvation” (Acts 16:17).

This is, indeed, what that woman said. However, we are also told that she was possessed of a spirit of divination, and that it was unlawful for that spirit to so speak – even though what he said was technically true. Paul commanded that spirit to come out of the woman (Acts 16:17-18).

When, therefore, we read that Simon “used sorcery,” there is nothing inherent in the text that requires we dismiss what he was doing as nothing more than pretension – like a magician making a coin disappear, or a bird come out of a handkerchief. Unless Satan and his hosts are nothing more than men, it is out of order to treat their works as though they were in the class of human activity, chance, and time.

GIVING OUT THAT HIMSELF WAS SOME GREAT ONE

“ . . . giving out that himself was some great one . . .” Other versions read, “ a great man ,” BBE saying, I am a great person ,” MRD “someone momentous ,” NJB “a man who could do great things ,” PNT “pretending that he was more than human ,” WEYMOUTH and “an extraordinary and distinguished person.” AMPLIFIED

Stephen was like a many of the religious merchants of our time. He talked a lot about himself. He was a person who no doubt had a lot of, what psychiatrists call, self esteem . He presented himself as though he was the Messiah, and had the answer the ails of the community.

TO WHOM THEY ALL GAVE HEED

“ 10 To whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God.” Other versions read, “is the Divine power known as the Great power,” NIV “the power of God that is called Great ,” NRSV “ the mighty power of God ,” MRD “the Great One – the power of God,” NLT and “an extraordinary and distinguished person.” AMPLIFIED

Here as a mortal that was receiving the glory that properly belong to Jesus. The people of the city – they all – acquiesced to his claims and were in some way subject to him. The city of Samaria was like his own kingdom, and the citizens like Israel when they gladly received the false prophets “ loved to have it so” (Jer 5:31). How Simon must have basked in all of this glory – until Philip came to town! Now, with the arrival of a man of God, full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom, Simon’s rule is interrupted.

A CITY UNDER THE SPELL OF SIMON

“ 11 And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries.”

Those who have no regard for the supernatural, or for things and influences that operate outside the confines of the laws of nature, must account for a whole city being under the spell of a man. A person of such influence has not been common in any age. They have always been extraordinary. I do not know how any person could establish the possibility of rising above the norm by self-strength alone. I realize that the claim that such a thing is possible is regularly made. However, I have never heard a convincing argument that confirms it. It seems to me that extraordinary persons are most generally traced to the one to whom they have submitted themselves, whether intentionally or unintentionally. They are not “great” of themselves. At any rate, I am saying that this text reveals a clash of spiritual kingdoms, and that the greater one will prevail.

TO HIM THEY HAD REGARD

“And to him they had regard . . .” Other versions read, “they heeded him ,” NKJV “they were giving him attention ,” NASB “they followed him ,” NIV “they listened eagerly to him,” NRSV “were attentive to him,” CSB “ acquiesced in him,” MRD “set much by,” PNT “ paid careful attention to him,” ISV “kept running after him ,” WILLIAMS and “were attentive to him and made much of him.”

AMPLIFIED

Here was a man that was not only well known, but well liked as well. The people held him in very high regard, giving credence to his claims.

Simon was serving the wicked master – the devil. Those who regarded him were indirectly honoring the devil. They were opening themselves to the working of the devil, and to the ruthless dominance he holds over the people.

There is a sense in which every man is following someone. Ultimately, they are either people in whom “the prince of the power of the air” works (Eph 2:2), or those in whom God works “both to will and to do of His own good pleasure” (Phil 2:13). There is no neutral ground, where “self” is everything. From the high vantage point, there are only two masters, and every mortal is serving one of them, while no one is serving both of them.

Simon was serving the wicked master – the devil. Those who regarded him were indirectly honoring the devil. They were opening themselves to the working of the devil, and to the ruthless dominance he holds over the people.

HE HAD BEWITCHED THEM

“ . . . because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries.” Other versions read, “he had astonished them,” NKJV “amazed them,” NIV “kept them under his control,” BBE “astounded them,” CSB “mocked them,” TNT “bewildered them,” ISV “thrilled them,” WILLIAMS and “amazed, and bewildered, and amazed them.” AMPLIFIED

The dominance of this man over the people had continued for a “long time.” If there was anything fake about him, the people were not able to perceive it. It does not say they were deceived by Simon, but that they were “BEWITCHED” by his sorceries. The word “bewitched” means to “throw out of position, throw one out of his mind, drive one out of his senses, and hence to amaze, astonish, and throw into wonderment,” THAYER “to remove something from a place, change, cause someone to be amazed beyond comprehension, confuse, astound,” FRIBERG and “cause someone to be so astounded as to be practically overwhelmed.” LOUW-NIDA

There is a slight technicality here that ought to be noted. Bewitching is the means, and astonishment is the result. Bewitching is a forceful activity, even though subtle means are employed. It is a form of spiritual captivity or bondage, as when Satan takes someone “captive at his will,” or when people are “held captive by him to do his will” NASB (2 Tim 2:26).

There are various forms of captivity. Demons captured and held captive that poor man from Gadara, driving him to run shrieking through the mountains, live among the tombs, cut himself with stones, and break chains and fetters (Mark 5:4-5; Luke 8:29). A demon captured a young boy, throwing him to the ground and will, and causing him to jump into both fire and water in an effort to kill him (Matt 17:15; Lk 9:39-40). Another evil spirit bound poor woman for eighteen years, so that she was bowed over, and could in no wise lift herself up (Lk 13:11,16).

Bewitching is bondage of another order – a bondage of the mind in which a person is thrown off course, and into the path in which lies dominate. That is the kind of activity that was in the city of Samaria. The people had been thrown into a state of mind in which they could not properly assess things. They were enslaved, although I do not doubt that they were totally unaware of that fact.

This is the work of “the rulers of the darkness of this world,” against whom we are called to wrestle (Eph 6:12). These are forces that maintain carnal consternation, erroneous emphases, and distracting curiosity. I do not doubt that they are the perpetrators of fads and fashion that grip the hearts and minds of men, turning them from the truth.

The only remedy for such a condition is to receive the love of the truth (2 Thess 2:10). Apart from this, the only other alternative is “strong delusion.” By “strong delusion,” the Spirit means a delusion that can neither be detected nor overcome outside the perimeter of the truth of God.

A MAN OF GOD ARRIVES ON THE SCENE

Now, amidst all of this delusion and the powers of darkness, a man of God arrives. He is filled with the Holy Spirit and wisdom, and has a grasp of the truth. He begins preaching Christ among the people, and doing signs and wonders that confirm what he is saying is the truth. He has not been there as long as Simon. Will he be able to turn the people from devotion to that sorcerer? Luke will provide us with the answer?

THE PEOPLE BELIEVED AND WERE BAPTIZED

“ 12 But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.”

The Kingdom is coming to the city of Samaria! It is a superior kingdom with a powerful message, and is fully supported by the One who rules over all. We should expect something to happen in this clash of kingdoms. When Stephen preached in Jerusalem, he was stoned to death. What will happen when Philip preaches in Samaria? Jerusalem had been filled with the apostles doctrine, and they rejected one of Philip’s co-laborers. Samaria has never been subjected to the apostles’ doctrine. What will they do when they hear the same message from a close ally of the martyr Stephen?

BUT WHEN THEY BELIEVED

“ But when they believed Philip . . .” Other versions read, “had faith in the good news given by Philip,” BBE “came to believe Philip,” CJB “gave credence to Philip,” MRD “began to believe,” NAB “came to accept,” NJB and “they embraced the faith.” WEYMOUTH

How long does it take a person to believe? If we are speaking about a mythical academic believing, it may require a lengthy period of time. There may be a need to present proofs that the Gospel is really true. Of course, that is exceedingly difficult when all of the evidence has been withdraw, leaving only witnesses and participants. Some may also perceive a need for some scientific proofs of God, and various forms of, what they consider to be, logical proofs. However, Philip not only sees no need for this, none of these things are available to him. Not long ago, he was a beginner himself. He has not been a believer long enough to have graduated from one of the rabbinical schools, or to acquire a lot of extraneous facts concerning the origin of the Scriptures, their integrity. Of course, the Holy Spirit works with none of those things in the first place. He uses the Word of God, which is His sword, and Philip has a working knowledge of that, and a strong faith as well. So, when Philip starts preaching Christ, the Spirit goes to work convincing the people of sin, righteousness and judgment: “Of sin, because they believe not on me; of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged” (John 16:9-11).

And what happens? The people “believed Philip!” Like the Thessalonians, they received the Word preached by Philip, “not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe” (1 Thess 2:13). Like the Philippians, it was “given” to them “to believe” (Phil 1:29). As with Lydia, the Lord “opened” their hearts (Acts 16:14). Like other Gentiles they “believed through grace” (Acts 18:27), and were “granted repentance unto life” (Acts 11:18). The “door of faith” was opened to them, as it would be later among other Gentiles (Acts 14:27). A preacher was sent. He brought glad tidings of good things. They heard. They came. They believed. They obeyed (Rom 10:14-17). There you have the doctrine lived out in exacting detail.

PREACHING THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD

With over one hundred and twenty references to the Kingdom in letters addressed to the churches, one wonders why more of the Kingdom is not being said these days. Could it be that Christ is really not being preached?

“ . . . preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God . . .” Other versions read, “ good news about the kingdom of God,” NASB “ good tidings concerning the kingdom of God,” ASV “preaching of the kingdom of God,” DOUAY and “proclaiming the good news, the things concerning the reign of God .” YLT

Now here is a most interesting thing. Verse five states that Philip “went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them.” However, in this text it states that Philip preaching “the things concerning the Kingdom of God.” Of course there is no contradiction here. Preaching Christ involves declaring matters concerning God’s kingdom. The Kingdom of God speaks of the administration of the Sovereignty of God. It relates to the outworking of His eternal purpose. Strictly speaking, the Kingdom of God is the fulfillment of a purpose conceived by God, initiated by Him, and carried forward to its completion. At this time the chief exhibition of Divine power and wisdom is the salvation that is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory (2 Tim 2:10). Three of the primary areas in which this Kingdom is being revealed are calling, justification, and glorification (Rom 8:30). The aim of the project is to confirm those who were foreknown by God to the image of His Son, that He might be “the firstborn among many brethren” (Rom 8:30).

“The Kingdom of God” is mentioned fifty-four times in the Gospels. Matthew refers to the same kingdom as “the Kingdom of heaven,” making mention of it thirty-two times. “The Kingdom” is mentioned in the Gospels fourteen times. This, the record of the ministry of Jesus on earth included one hundred references to the Kingdom. The book of Acts contains seven references to “the Kingdom of God,” and one reference to “the Kingdom.” The epistles contain eight references to “the Kingdom of God,” one to “the Kingdom of Christ and of God,” one to “the Kingdom of His dear Son,” one to “His heavenly kingdom,” one to “the Kingdom of our God,” one to “the Kingdom and patience of Jesus,” one to “the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ,” one to “the Kingdom which He hath promised to them that love Him” once to “a Kingdom which cannot be moved,” once God spoke to the Son about “Thy Kingdom,” once to “the Kingdom,” and twice to “His Kingdom.”

With over one hundred and twenty references to the Kingdom in letters addressed to the churches, one wonders why more of the Kingdom is not being said these days. Could it be that Christ is really not being preached? The fact of the matter is that the people in Samaria believed what Philip was saying about “the Kingdom of God,” and that this was involved in preaching Christ.

We are obliged to consider the preaching Christ within the context of the Kingdom of God, versus preaching Him within the context of the needs of humanity. I fear that the latter method is being employed in our time, and there is no possible way to justify it.

AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST

“ . . . and the name of Jesus Christ . . .” Other versions read, “and the One named Jesus Christ,” GWN “message that Jesus was the Messiah,” LIVING “the authority of Jesus the Messiah,” IE “and the name of Jesus Christ [the Messiah],” AMPLIFIED and “and about Jesus Christ.” GNB

The name of Jesus has to do with His Person and work. It is who He is, and the manner in which God has revealed Him. It is how God desires Him to be known. The real point of Jesus is not how He relates to the desires of men, but how He relates to the will and purpose of God. Preaching in the name of Jesus is, in fact, the same as preaching Christ. In this verse it is more particularly related to the Kingdom of God, or the carrying out of the purpose of God. You might say that preaching the Kingdom of God is declaring what God has purposed to do, and how He is thoroughly capable of carrying that purpose out to its fullest extent. Preaching the name of Jesus is declaring the means through which that purpose is being accomplished, which is encapsulated in the Person of Jesus.

THEY WERE BAPTIZED

“ . . . they were baptized, both men and women.” Other versions read, “they were being baptized , men and women alike.” NASB “a number of men and women had baptism ,” BBE “they were immersed , both men and women,” CJB “ men and women alike were baptized,” NAB “they began to be baptized , both men and women,” NET “many men and women were baptized,” LIVING “men and women believed Philip and were immersed ,” IE “both men and women were constantly baptized ,” WILLIAMS and “they were all baptized.” CEV

Everyone who believed what Philip preached were baptized – both men and women. This is the same thing that happened on the day of Pentecost, being done at the direction of Peter following the inquiry of those who heard him

Everyone who believed what Philip preached were baptized – both men and women. This is the same thing that happened on the day of Pentecost, being done at the direction of Peter following the inquiry of those who heard him (Acts 2:38-41). There is no reason to question that the same procedure took place here. Preaching, believing, inquiry, and direction be baptized.

This fulfilled the word delivered by Jesus to His disciples – a word that was obviously passed along. “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned” (Mark 16:16). This is baptism in water that is performed by a fellow believer. No person was ever commanded to be baptized in or with the Holy Spirit. Further, the words “were baptized” are never used to describe those baptized by Jesus with the Holy Spirit.

The words of our text have to do with baptism in water – being “ . . . saved by water,” and fulfilling the words of Peter, “ . . . while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us . . .” (1 Pet 3:20-21). This is the baptism referred to in Hebrews 10:22 where the Spirit speaks of our bodies being “washed with pure water.”

No person of Scriptural record ever refused to be, or questioned the requirement of being, baptized into Christ. No one represented God ever presented baptism as an option, or gave the people any reason to believe their response to the God was satisfactory if it came short of being baptized. All of the arguments that have been raised about baptism have had their genesis in the minds of men. None of these questions were ever raised in Scripture, and none of them should be raised now.

I will not leave this rather elementary subject without pointing out the associations that the Holy Spirit has made with baptism. I do not believe it is possible to embrace these statements and then question that baptism is, in fact, related to salvation.

THINGS ASSOCIATED WITH BAPTISM

- Repentance (Acts 2:38).
- The remission of sins (Acts 2:38).
- The gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:38).
- Believing (Mark 16:16; Acts 8:12; 18:8).
- Salvation, or being "saved" (Mark 16:16; 1 Peter 3:21).
- Being buried with Christ (Rom 6:4; Col 2:12).

- In baptism we were raised with Christ (Rom 6:4; Col 2:12).
- Being identified with Christ's death (Rom 6:3).
- Becoming dead to sin (Rom 6:2-3).
- Becoming alive to God (Rom 6:3-11).
- The circumcision of Christ, in which the whole body of sin is cut away (Col 2:11-12).
- Faith in the operation, or working, of God (Col 2:12).
- Coming into Christ (Gal 3:27).
- Putting on Christ (Gal 3:27).
- A commandment (Acts 10:48).
- The confession of Christ (Acts 8:36-37).
- Gladly receiving the Word of God (Acts 2:41).
- Washing away our sins (Acts 22:16).
- Coming into one body through the Spirit (1 Cor 12:13).
- Something that is done "in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit" (Matt 28:19).

SIMON HIMSELF BELIEVES AND IS BAPTIZED

“ 13 Then Simon himself believed also: and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done.”

If the Holy Spirit moved Luke to say Simon believed and was baptized, without adding any explanatory note, how can anyone be justifying in adding their own note to the text? Let us take it for what it says and work through the text with an honest and good heart.

Apparently, for the first time Simon confronts a man he knows has more power than himself. When the Kingdom of God and the kingdom of darkness collide, there is never a question about which one is superior. Ultimately, the truth of this will be confirmed at the appearing of Jesus, which His Kingdom shall appear as well. Paul wrote Timothy, admonishing Him labor faithfully with this in mind. “I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom” (2 Tim 4:1).

SIMON HIMSELF BELIEVED ALSO

“Then Simon himself believed also: and when he was baptized . . .” Other versions read, “Simon himself had faith and, having had baptism,” BBE “Simon himself came to believe ; and after being immersed,” CJB “ Even Simon believed , and after he was baptized,” GWN “even Simon himself became a believer . After his baptism Simon,” NJB and “Even Simon himself believed [he adhered to, trusted in, and relied on the teaching of Philip], and after being baptized.” AMPLIFIED

This is significant because of the claims that Simon had been making – “giving out himself to be some great one” (v 9). However, in the presence of Philip, and within the sound of his powerful preaching, Simon no longer appeared to be any great one. The powerful effects of Philip’s preaching was perceived as eclipsing his own. Furthermore, all of was accomplished within a relatively short period of time, even though Simon had dominated that area for a long time.

Some have doubted the sincerity of Simon, declaring him to be nothing but a pretender. Nothing in these verses will lead us to that conclusion, It seems to me that such statements reflect an inordinate affection for the doctrines of men. If the Holy Spirit moved Luke to say Simon believed and was baptized, without adding any explanatory note, how can anyone be justifying in adding their own note to the text? Let us take it for what it says and work through the text with an honest and good heart.

HE CONTINUED WITH PHILIP

“ . . . he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done.” Other versions read, “he continued with Philip and was amazed,” NKJV “he was constantly amazed,” NASB “he followed Philip everywhere, astonished,” NIV “he was full of surprise,” BBE and “he was astounded.” CSB

Once Simon believed and was baptized, he continued with Philip, not leaving his side. The text confirms that Philip continued to do many miracles and signs, working without restraint in the name of the Lord Jesus. These were not a display for the sake of Simon, but were mighty works that confirmed what Philip was saying. As I have already suggested, it is my persuasion that these miracles and signs were not merely a validation of Philip himself, but were confirmatory of the word he was delivering. If this is true, it means that there was some obvious correlation between those works and what Philip was preaching.

Here is a most interesting thing! Precisely the same word is used for Simon wondering at the miracles of Philip as was employed in describing him bewitching the people of Samaria with his sorcery. The Greek word is evxistw/n . As I have already indicated in commenting on verse nine, the word is a forceful one that means “to throw out of position or displace; to throw one out of his mind, drive one out of his senses.” THAYER It is to be faced with something that cannot be explained. Regarding the Samaritans, Simon had been doing things that could not be explained. They were things that transcended their own experience and knowledge. Now, Simon himself is confounded, forced out of his normal train of thought. He has seen something he cannot explain, and it is superior to any of his own experience or knowledge.

If the Gospel is truly a superior message, then there must be some way in which that superiority can be confirmed. This is not limited to signs and wonders, but also includes adorning the doctrine with godly works (Tit 2:10). That is, what the doctrine states is lived out before men. That is letting your light shine, when what the doctrine declares takes place in men becomes visible in those who embrace the doctrine.

This is an area of especial weakness in the modern church, and is a great deterrent to the work of the Lord. There is no way to estimate the damage that has been caused by professing Christians whose lives contradict the doctrine of Christ.

No effort should be expended to explain the situation, for there is no satisfactory explanation. The church will not effectively do the work of the Lord until this uncomely circumstance is removed from it.

CONCLUSION

Thus we have been exposed to a relatively unknown man upending the long-time influence of a man given to curious arts. In a single visit, he has invaded a city that sat in darkness, shining the light of the Gospel within it, and causing many to awake from the slumber that had been induced by a certain sorcerer.

This record confirms that the true power is not in human aptitude, but in the faith, understanding and purity of the laborer. It is not possible to come up with a method of training men to duplicate Philip’s achievements, He is an example of a person holding to the Head of the body, who, in turn, works effectively through that member. This is a heritage of all of the people of God. It only takes a person who is willing to forsake all, take up his cross, and follow Christ, and the door of Kingdom opportunity swings open!

The Acts of the Apostles

Commentary

By: Given, O. Blakely

Lesson #37

THE SAMARITANS RECEIVE THE SPIRIT

“ 8:14 Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: 15 Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: 16 (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) 17 Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. ”
(Acts 8:14-17)

INTRODUCTION

There are Scriptural passages that confirm the inherent weakness of man-made patterned theological thought, otherwise known as systematic or systematized theology. This represents the attempt of men to gather together various teachings of Scripture in a more organized manner. It is supposed that this is more conducive to learning. Of course, the primary objective in such an approach to Scripture is to promote a particular view of scripture, and not the knowledge and understanding of the Scriptures themselves.

WHY THE SCRIPTURES WERE GIVEN TO US

It is essential to know why the Scriptures have been inspired and given to men. We are categorically told that they are written for our profit or benefit. This is stated in differing ways.

- TO MAKE US WISE UNTO SALVATION . “And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus” (2 Tim 3:15).

- TO MAKE THE GODLY PERFECT, THOROUGHLY FURNISHED UNTO ALL GOOD WORKS. “All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works” (2 Tim 3:16-17).

- THAT WE MIGHT HAVE HOPE. “For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our CONTENTS

WHEN THE APOSTLES HEARD (8:14a)

THEY SENT UNTO THEM PETER AND JOHN (8:14b)

THEY PRAYED FOR THEM (8:15)

HE WAS FALLEN UPON NONE OF THEM (8:16a)

THEY WERE ONLY BAPTIZED IN THE NAME OF THE LORD JESUS (8:16b)

THEY LAID THEIR HANDS ON THEM AND THEY RECEIVED (8:17)

learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope” (Rom 15:4).

• FOR OUR ADMONITION, LEST WE BECOME PRESUMPTUOUS. “Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come” (1 Cor 10:11).

• THE RECORD OF JESUS’ LIFE IS WRITTEN THAT WE MIGHT BELIEVE. “But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name” (John 20:31).

In view of these revealed objectives, it is disastrous to approach the Scriptures as a mere compilation historical facts, or a manual of conduct. Further, there is no place for these texts in a an opinionated view of Scripture, for man’s opinion will inevitably dictate that they either be ignored altogether, or at least minimized.

THE TENDENCY TO CODIFY

Throughout history the tendency to develop and rely on humanly-codified religious thought has been apparent. This is so prominent that major divisions exist in the professed Christian community that rely solely upon the human perspective (as compared with the “hearing of faith” – Gal 3:2,5) of the doctrine of Scripture. Terms are developed that allow for a ready classification of people, as well as the understanding of Scripture – i.e., Protestant, Catholic, Calvinistic, Armenian, Reformation, Restoration, Full Gospel, various Millennial views (Pre-millennial, Post-Millennial, Amillennial, Preterist), etc.

Each of these have boundaries of thought that have been created by men. Those constricted views are then equated with Scripture itself, and considered to justify hard and fast divisions among believers. This practice is so common, men have come to think little of it. Thus they compare one pattern of thought with another, rather than with both the content and thrust of Scripture. They assemble Biblical texts rather than embracing truth itself, reading the Scripture with a mind to support their view rather than to discern the mind of the Lord.

As one might suppose, the receiving of the Holy Spirit is a matter that has been especially subject to such codification. When the Spirit is received, how He is conferred, and what occurs when He comes to dwell within the believer, are all areas in which there are sharp divisions within the professed church.

As one might suppose, the receiving of the Holy Spirit is a matter that has been especially subject to such codification. When the Spirit is received, how He is conferred, and what occurs when He comes to dwell within the believer, are all areas in which there are sharp divisions within the professed church. Each of these divisions are very dogmatic in their view. However, when all is said and done, the views consist largely of talk – which is precisely why there can be no fair assessment of their content. The Kingdom of God is not a matter of talk, but of power (1 Cor 4:20).

Rarely are these divisions ever perpetrated or addressed with honesty and integrity. Those who adhere to them assume they are true, largely because of the arguments men use to support them. Owing to the handy theological systems that have been developed by men, these are superimposed on the Scriptures like a template that sifts out texts that contradict the particular view. There is no moral or spiritual pressure on the individual to “try the spirits whether they are of God” (1 John 4:1), for all of the testing has supposedly been done by those who codified the teaching.

Like all Scripture, the text before us is not intended to be stuffed into a theological container that is theoretically designed to simplify our understanding of Divine involvements with men. Those acquainted with Scripture soon find out that the works of God are not marked by discernible outward patterns and circumstances. They reflect the character and purpose of God, not the conclusions of men. This is why, for example, Christ’s healings were not characterized by a pattern, or stereotyped approach.

THE DOCTRINE IS LIVED OUT IN THE BOOK OF ACTS

Men have this propensity to build and support a religious institution. The Word of God, however, will not give aid to such an enterprise. If men, because they are “unlearned” in the ways of the Lord, do not accept the Divinely appointed reason for the Scriptures, they will inevitably wrest them “unto their own destruction” (2 Pet 3:16). It is necessary to say these things because men tend to approach books like Luke’s account of the activities of the apostles and the early church (the book of Acts), with more liberty than is appropriate. This is owing to the lack of a doctrinal emphasis in his record. In his writing, Luke is not establishing a particular teaching, as Paul, Peter, and John do in their epistles. He is giving a record of what happened. Following are some examples of the writing of “apostles’ doctrine.”

- Romans – Justification by Faith.
- First Corinthians – Spiritual gifts, Love, and The Resurrection of the Dead.
- Second Corinthians – The New Covenant and the Resurrection Body.
- Galatians – Justification by Faith, as opposed to by the works of the Law.
- Ephesians – The Eternal Purpose of God, and the Divine objective for the Church.
- Philippians – The Involvements of the Incarnation, and the Mind-set of the Kingdom.
- Colossians – The Completeness that Is Realized in Christ, and the Unreasonableness of a Religion of mere Procedure.
- First and Second Thessalonians – The Second Coming of Christ and its Various Associations.
- Hebrews – The High Priesthood of Jesus and the Superiority of the New Covenant.
- James – The true Nature of Faith.
- First Peter – The Role of Suffering in the Divine Economy.
- Second Peter – The Coming of the Lord and its Impact upon our Manner of Life.
- First John – The Association of all Human Conduct with one of Two Sources: Jesus of the Wicked One.
- The Revelation – The Inevitabilities of Satan’s Demise, the Fall of False Religion, and the Public and Unquestionable Triumph of Jesus.

DOCTRINE IS STATED, BUT NOT DEVELOPED

You will not find the doctrinal development in the book of Acts. That is because this is not the purpose of the book. It is a record of the impact of the doctrine upon the lives of those who embrace it. That record places before the doctrine lived out.

There are doctrinal statements made in this book, but they are not developed in words. Rather, they are explicated in the record of the lives of believers. Permit me to point out some of the doctrinal statements that are made in Acts, yet which are not developed as they are in the Epistles.

- “Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost ” (Acts 2:38).

There are doctrinal statements made in this book, but they are not developed in words. Rather, they are explicated in the record of the lives of believers.

“For the promise is unto you , and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call ” (Acts 2:39).

- “And He commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is He which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead ” (Acts 10:42).
- “To Him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins ” (Acts 10:43).
- “And by Him all that believe are justified from all things , from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses” (Acts 13:39).
- “But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved , even as they” (Acts 15:11).
- “Because He hath appointed a day, in the which He will judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom He hath ordained; whereof He hath given assurance unto all men, in that He hath raised Him from the dead ” (Acts 17:31).

These few samples contain statements that expose our minds to doctrines that are developed elsewhere. But they are not developed in the record Luke wrote. It appears clear that at the time it was assumed that those who read this book were familiar with the doctrine, else I hardly see how the optimum benefit could be realized from the record. For example, Luke wrote this book to Theophilus as a kind of follow-up to the Gospel of Luke, which was also written to him (Luke 1:3; Acts 1:1). The book of Acts was written around 63 A.D., about thirty years after Pentecost. It was not written to introduce men to “the doctrine of Christ,” but to report its effectiveness in them that believe. Neither, indeed was it intended to provide an explanation for the working of the Lord in specific periods of time, or establish certain unique Divine activities that were unique. I understand that there are record like this in the book of Acts, but they are not the reason for its presence.

As difficult as it may be for some to receive it, this book was not written to codify the plan of salvation (which is a man-made expression). It does not provide us with doctrinal formulae that are to be repeated each time we preach. This ought to be clear by the various replies and instructions that are given to those being told how to be saved.

- “And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved” (Acts 2:21).
- “Repent and be baptized” (Acts 2:38).
- “And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation” (Acts 2:40).

- “Repent and be converted” (Acts 3:19).
- “If thou believest, thou mayest” (be baptized) (Acts 8:37).
- “Who can forbid water that these should be baptized . . . and he commanded them to be baptized” (Acts 10:47-48).
- “But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they” (Acts 15:11).
- “Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ” (Acts 16:31).
- “. . . believe on Him which should come . . . on Jesus Christ” – Acts 19:4

These seemingly differing statements by no means suggest different ways to be saved. Furthermore, they are not given to be compiled into a convenient plan. They are not intended to be doctrinal statements of how to be saved. That is why each one is not as thorough as some would prefer. These are reports that are perfectly consistent with the doctrine. However, they themselves are not the doctrine, and must not be approached as though they were.

This does not give men license to ignore any of these statements as though they were nothing more than history, or to develop a plan of salvation that omits any of them.

THE RELATION OF THIS EXPLANATION TO OUR TEXT

In this text it will be affirmed that the Holy Spirit had not yet “fallen” on those who had believed and been baptized. The language itself is peculiar, but it must not be brushed aside as though the expression is identical with other accounts of men receiving the Holy Spirit. This is an inspired record, and it is precise, being in strict harmony with the Divine nature and Scripture. If approach it as though the book of Acts was a book of doctrine, or the exact record of the apostles’ doctrine, we will find it to be somewhat confusing. Certain sectarians will rejoice to read this passage because it will appear to justify their doctrinal stance. Others will see it as a threat to their doctrinal position, and will therefore set out to show it is not relevant to us today. It is that intellectual confusion that constrains men to either make what is recorded a pattern to be followed, or to assign a meaning to it that has no significance for our time. These extreme reactions must be avoided, for they are not right. It is not possible that God would inspire Scripture with a mind to support doctrines invented by men. Neither, indeed, is it possible that He would provide Scripture that has no relevance to any generation that is exposed to it. God has His own agenda, and operates according to His own purpose – always working “all things after the counsel of His own will” (Eph 1:9).

Men must come up in their thinking, seeking to know the mind of the Lord rather than to justify the view they have embraced. If they do, in fact, receive the love of the truth, they will find this to be a very satisfying pursuit. However, if they have not received the love of the truth, but choose to be followers of men than of the Lord, they will not be able to escape distorting the Word of the Lord, and seeking to conform it to their own way of thinking.

If men are to profit from the Word of God, at some point, rationality must be governed by faith. They must “live by every Word of God” (Lk 4:4), recognizing that life can be sustained in no other way. If they allow the process of thinking to be regulated by the traditions of men, their religion will be tedious and tasteless. They will find themselves growing cold and calloused, and more susceptible to the adversary of their souls.

It is the nature of human wisdom draw a veil over the truth of God so that it cannot be seen. Correspondingly, it is the nature of the truth to show the futility and jeopardy of man’s wisdom.

WHEN THE APOSTLES HEARD

“ 8:14a Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the Word of God...”

Because this is a record of the working of the Lord and the administration of the Christ of God, no account stands on its own. This is the body of Christ in action, and not the mere activities of individuals. There is a harmony in the works that impacts upon the whole church, and the members as God has placed them in the body. If, for example, God has “set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased Him” (1 Cor 12:18), and if “God hath set some in the church, first the apostles” (1 Cor 12:28), then we should expect an event of the magnitude of the whole city of Samaria believing, to be brought to their attention. If the church is “built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets” (Eph 2:20), and is intended to continue steadfastly “in the apostles doctrine” (Acts 2:42), then they will surely become involved in this marvelous working of the Lord. You may be sure that Jesus will not ignore the ones appointed to put down the foundation, ensuring that disciples grow up into Christ in all things.

THE APOSTLES WHICH WERE AT JERUSALEM

“Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem . . .” Other versions read, “the apostles in Jerusalem,” NASB “the apostles in Jerusalem,” GWN “the apostles back in Jerusalem,” LIVING “apostles were still in Jerusalem,” IE and “ yet in Jerusalem.” INTERLINEAR

The Word of God never suggests that the Apostles were in any way slothful in carrying out the word of the Lord. That idea had its genesis in the minds of men, and, for that reason alone, it is to be summarily rejected.

You may recall that Jesus had told the disciples to go into “all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature” (Mk 16:15). Now, somewhere between two to six years after Pentecost, they are still in Jerusalem. Some have considered them to be recalcitrant in this matter, not doing what they were commanded to do. These people choose this view because the continued presence Apostles in Jerusalem does not mesh with perception of Jesus’ words. The Word of God never suggests that the Apostles were in any way slothful in carrying out the word of the Lord. That idea had its genesis in the minds of men, and, for that reason alone, it is to be summarily rejected.

Jerusalem remained the hub of Kingdom activity throughout the book of Acts, being mentioned no less than sixty times in the book. This reflected the fulfillment of many prophecies of old.

- For the first seven chapters, this was the area of all Christian activity.
- Much of the persecution that Saul unleashed was against saints there (9:13,21).
- Even following the conversion of Saul, the apostles were described as “coming in and going out of Jerusalem” (9:27).
- Major gatherings were held there in which key matters pertaining to the Kingdom were discussed (11:2; 15:2).
- When a number of people believed in Antioch, the church in Jerusalem dispatched Barnabas to review the matter (11:22).
- Prophets came from Jerusalem to new believers in Antioch, resulting in the disciples determining to send relief to the brethren in Judaea that were impacted by a famine (11:27).
- Upon completing a mission, Barnabas and Saul returned to Jerusalem (12:25).
- Decrees for Gentile converts that were made by the apostles, were sent out of Jerusalem, resulting in the churches being established in the faith (16:4-5).
- Paul had a deep respect for Jerusalem, associating it with holy beginnings (19:21; 20:16,22; 21:13; 24:11).

- James, the brother of our Lord, and the elders remained in Jerusalem where they told Paul “many thousands” of Jews believed (21:17).

The apostles did travel out from Jerusalem, as this very text will confirm. However, it appears that some of them did remain there, together with other spiritually stable souls like James, the elders, and certain prophets. This provided early believers with an immediate means of obtaining the teaching required for spiritual maturity.

Something to be Seen

There is something of particular interest to be seen here. A high priority was placed on the establishment of early believers, particularly when there were clusters of them, or churches. The thinking at that time provoked the disciples to make sure people grew up into Christ, and were not left to flounder in the polls of spiritual juvenility.

- When, for example, the number of disciples began to spread into Gentile territories, “they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch” (Acts 11:22). When he came, Barnabas assessed the situation. Seeing the grace of God evident in the people, he “was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord” (Acts 11:23).

- There came a time when Paul said to Barnabas, which whom he had been laboring, “Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do” (Acts 15:36).

- Later, because Barnabas determined to go in another direction (to Cyprus, taking John Mark), Paul and Silas went throughout Syria and Cilicia “confirming the churches” (Acts 15:41).

- Paul spend a year and “a year and six months” in Corinth, building up the brethren (Acts 18:11).

- During his labors, and while he was in prison, Paul wrote seven epistles to specific churches, grounding them more solidly in the Lord (Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians). He also wrote four personal letters of instruction (First and Second Timothy, Titus, and Philemon). There was also the book of Hebrews which contained extensive teaching concerning High Priest of Christ and the New Covenant. Note: Although many say that Paul did not write the book of Hebrews, we do not have a solid example of any other person speaking or writing so extensively concerning the nature of the New Covenant – not so much as a syllable. It is inconceivable that a non-apostle had such wisdom,

- Peter also wrote two epistles to believers, grounding them in the faith.

- James, the brother of our Lord wrote an epistle to believers, correcting them concerning the inconsistency of their claims with their lives.

- John wrote three epistles and the book of the Revelation – all addressed to believers, and with the intention aiding them in their growth and understanding.

These circumstances stand in stark contrast to the gross neglect of the church that is common in our time. I personally know of no prominent Christian preacher or teacher that is noted for having a burden for the maturity of the churches. The Christian educational institutions do not have such a burden, regularly producing workers who have little concept of the nature of the New Covenant and the necessity of spiritual growth. The situation is so deplorable that it is tantamount to a miracle to find a single person who in whom the prayer of Paul is being fulfilled: i.e. “The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power” (Eph 1:18-19). While such people do, indeed, exist, they are rarely found in clusters of any significant size.

This condition is the direct result of the general lack of interest in among religious leaders in the matter of feeding and nourishing the flock of God – even though God commands them to do so (1 Pet 5:2). However, this condition did not exist at the time of our text. Instead, there was an immediate interest in those who had believed and been baptized. The apostles, who were really spiritual leaders, took action to ensure the believers in Samaria were properly equipped.

HEARD THAT SAMARIA HAD RECEIVED THE WORD

“ . . . heard that Samaria had received the Word of God . . .” Other versions read, “ accepted the Word of God,” NIV “taken the Word of God into their hearts ,” BBE “ welcomed God’s message,” CSB “ accepted and welcomed the Word of God,” AMPLIFIED and “has-received the saying of God .” INTERLINEAR

Here we are introduced to the versatility of the vocabulary of the Spirit – “combining and interpreting spiritual truths with spiritual language” AMPLIFIED (1 Cor 2:13). The response of the Samaritans to the preaching of Philip is stated in a number of ways.

- GAVE HEED. They “gave heed to those things which Philip spoke” (Acts 8:6).
- BELIEVED THE PREACHING. They “believed Philip preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus” (Acts 8:12a).
- WERE BAPTIZED. They “were baptized, both men and woman” (Acts 8:12b).
- RECEIVED THE WORD. The report was that they “had received the Word of God” (Acts 8:14).

Those four things do not stand independently from one another. They are all involved in believing the Gospel, and are all associated with being saved. Who would venture to say that any of these responses had nothing to do with salvation, or that one could be saved without any of them? Where is the person presumptuous enough to say the Samaritans were saved prior to any of these responses?

- Giving heed involves attentiveness, interest, and focusing both heart and mind on the message of the Gospel. This is certainly not something optional, nor is salvation ever depicted as being accomplished in those who do not give heed to the preaching of the Gospel.

- Believing involves acquiesce with the nature and content of the message, and a hearty embrace of the same. Those who believe are persuaded of the truth of the Gospel, are willing to act upon their embrace of it, doing whatever the Lord requires of them.

- Being baptized is the appointed means of identifying with Christ’s death, from which God raises men to walk in the newness of life. Here is the initial experience of bringing the body into subjection to the Word of the Lord (1 Cor 9:27). Baptism is associated with the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), and washing away sin (Acts 22:16). What would move any person to say that, under ordinary conditions, you could be saved without being baptized?

- Receiving the Word of God involves taking hold of it and refusing to let it go. There is determination in receiving Word, and the putting down of any and all inhibiting thoughts and declination toward the world. There is a very real sense in which the person who receives the Word has, in fact, overcome the devil, for he seeks to blind the minds of men to the truth of the Gospel (2 Cor 4:4).

More Than A Routine

This differs vastly from merely submitting to a routine, imagining that salvation is experienced by rote, without the involvement of the whole person. God forbid that anyone would ever embrace a view of salvation that caused any of the statements of our text to sound strange, incomplete, or even unacceptable. It ought to be obvious that there is a certain purity in the expressions of this text that provides a frame work for sound theological thought.

The words that men employ, and the doctrines that are built by them, shape the way people think about Scriptural themes or subjects. If a person embraces a doctrine that has been constructed with special words that reflect human understanding, they will not be able to reason in a sound manner concerning Scriptural matters. For example, if a person accepts the validity of expressions like “eternal security,” “unconditional love,” “limited atonement,” “irresistible grace,” or “the miraculous gift of the Holy Spirit,” it will impact directly upon their understanding of Scripture. Sectarianism relies on a distorted spiritual vocabulary, for “wholesome words” (1 Tim 6:3) and “sound doctrine” (Tit 2:1) will not support misconceptions. In order to embrace a false doctrine, the Divine vocabulary in some way be distorted. Explanatory phrases or modifying words have to be added in order to develop an erroneous doctrine of concept, and that is not an acceptable activity.

At the point of our text, and in strict speaking with the manner in which the Holy Spirit teaches (1 Cor 2:13), a pure vocabulary is being used – one that precisely reflects the nature of what is being reported. That is why it is imperative that we strictly abstain from any temptation modify what is being said, or make an attempt to blend texts so that they more readily support a sectarian stance.

Appropriate Words

This text also puts into words what takes place when men who are “dead in trespasses and sins” do not obey the Gospel. Some may tell us that a failure to respond to the Gospel means the person was just not ready at the time. Others might say they needed time to think, of what they wanted to be sure they were doing the right thing. All of that is nothing more than the flesh trying to justify itself. When people do not obey the Gospel, it is because they have not “received the Word of God.” They have, as Paul said it, “put” KJV the word of God from themselves, rejecting it, NKJV “repudiating it,” NASB and thrusting it RSV from themselves (Acts 13:46). If that condition persists, it will be clear, as Paul also said, that they have judged themselves “unworthy of everlasting life” (Acts 13:46b). Paul’s word was spoken on the Sabbath day in a synagogue in Antioch of Pisidia (Acts 13:14). That day, when the Jews “left the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath day” (Acts 13:42). The next Sabbath day “came almost the whole city together to hear the Word of God.” Seeing this large group of people, the Jews “were filled with envy, and spake against the things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming,” (Acts 13:45). It was at that time, after those Jews had heard Paul preach two times, that he said the words to which I have referred.

I do not say these things to encourage harsh judgment and a lack of godly forbearance. However, having said that, it appears to me that a spirit of ungodly toleration exists in our day – one that is fostered by inappropriate value being assigned to the wisdom of men, particularly as it pertains to the human psyche, proper motivation, and the exercise of influence. It is unspeakably serious to reject what God has said, and fail to respond appropriately to it. It is equally true that nothing can be allowed to diminish the essentiality of receiving the truth and heartily embracing it.

The Apostles saw the significance and value of what had taken place in Samaria. They knew that God, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit had been at work there. It was therefore necessary to nurture the new life that had sprung up out of the dry ground of that region, and the apostles knew it. These people must have a thorough beginning.

THEY SENT UNTO THEM PETER AND JOHN

“ 14b . . . they sent unto them Peter and John . . .” Other versions read, “sent to them Peter and John,” DOUAY “they sent down Peter and John,” LIVING “sent Peter and John to the people in Samaria,” IE “sent Peter and John to visit them,” WEYMOUTH “sent Peter and John there ,” WILLIAMS and “ commissioned toward them Peter and John.” INTERLINEAR

The “they” of reference is the apostles – the “apostles of the Lamb” (Rev 21:14), or “the apostles of Christ” (2 Pet 3:2), “the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ” (Jude 1:17), or “the twelve apostles” (Rev 21:14). They are also referred to as “the twelve” (Acts 6:2; 1 Cor 15:5), and “the apostles” (Acts 1:2; 2:37,42,43; 4:33,35,36,37; 5:2,12,18,34,40; 6:6; 8:1,14,18; 9:27; 11:1; 14:4; 15:2,4,6, 22,23,33; 16:4). These were specifically the twelve men Jesus chose and “named apostles” (Lk 6:13). These did not include other apostles who were sent out by the church, and at the direction of the Holy Spirit (Acts 13:2) – like Barnabas, who was also called an “apostle” (Acts 14:4,14). These are the premier men in the body of Christ, being “first” in rank, as well as in actual participation (1 Cor 12:28).

In some religious bodies, there are some who refer to themselves as “apostles.” None of these men represent themselves as being sent forth by the church, as Barnabas was. They always arrogate to themselves the office of one who was sent forth as an apostle by Christ Himself. They base their claim on Ephesians 4:11, which declares that Jesus gave “gifts” to the church, among whom were “apostles.” However, there is no teaching in Scripture that supports that supposition.

This text is clearly referring to the twelve men who shaped the doctrinal content and stance of the church (Acts 2:42; 2 Pet 3:2). No other men of record were ever given revelations that were equal to the ones vouchsafed to the apostles. Paul himself, though not numbered with the twelve, was personally called and appointed to the office of “apostle” by Jesus Christ (Rom 1:1) – particularly “the apostle of the Gentiles” (Rom 11:13).

ONLY ONE LORD

Here we have the “apostles” sending out Peter and John. That means that while Peter had been given the keys of the Kingdom (Matt 16:19), and was generally the spokesman for them, he was not the head of them, or the chief administrator. This, of course, flies right in the face of the principle of Roman Catholicism which teaches that Peter was, in fact, the head over them, and over the church as well. Nothing could be further from the truth.

When Jesus was with His disciples in the flesh, He told them t church would not operate on the principle of lordship. “And Jesus called them to Him and said, You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great men hold them in subjection [tyrannizing over them]. Not so shall it be among you; but whoever wishes to be great among you must be your servant, and whoever desires to be first among you must be your slave” AMPLIFIED (Matt 20:25-26). Here were the men placed “first” in the church (1 Cor 12:28), but they were not put there to govern it like those who know not God govern men. The church does not have bosses like the business world, and kings or presidents like governments do. That is not the manner of the Kingdom, and those who attempt to govern the church as though it was are not only in error, they have revealed their ignorance of God. The church already has a Head, and only those who are sent forth by Him are proper leaders of His people. Even then, they lead by their teaching and example, and not by dictums and mandates.

The church does not have bosses like the business world, and kings or presidents like governments do. That is not the manner of the Kingdom, and those who attempt to govern the church as though it was are not only in error, they have revealed their ignorance of God.

Thus, Peter and John, both of them from the original inner circle of disciples, are sent forth to Samaria by the other apostles. They gladly acquiesce to the decision, knowing that this is the way the Lord works among His people. The fact that the others sent them confirms they had recognized the advanced insight that they possessed, for from the beginning, they had been key spokesmen and workers.

KNOWING THE APOSTLE'S ROLE

It is important to know the pivotal ministry of the apostles of Christ – the twelve plus Paul. There are other New Covenant writers who were not apostles. Mark, Luke, James, and Jude. It is generally understood that Mark wrote his Gospel under the direction of Peter. Luke, while possessing “a perfect understanding” (Lk 1:3) of the facts of the Gospel, did not set forth so much as a syllable of doctrine that was given uniquely to him. The same is true of both James and Jude, who wrote corrective epistles. Neither of them declared or expounded any point that had not already been made by Jesus or the apostles. However, this was not the case with the apostles. They declared matters that were never before proclaimed – such as Peter’s exposition of Joel, the promise of God to David, and certain prophetic statements made by David (Acts 2:14-36). Paul expounded justification, the nature of spiritual life, the New Covenant, and the high priesthood of Christ in ways never before heard. This kind of proclamation was characteristic of the apostolic office. It makes perfect sense, therefore, that they become involved in the conversion of the Samaritans.

To this point in the book of Acts, the twelve apostles have been mentioned seventeen times (1:2,26; 2:37,42,43; 4:33, 35,36,37; 5:2,12,18,29,34,40; 6:6; 8:1). This confirms the critical role they played in the formation and development of the church, which is the body of Christ.

The necessity of the apostles’ involvement includes at least two things.

- First, to bind non-Jewish believers together with the church in Jerusalem, for this is the first example of a group of believers outside of Jerusalem. Doctrinally Paul develops the joining of the Jews and Gentiles into “one body” (Eph 2:12-22). Without apostolic involvement in this matter, I do not doubt that a Samaritan branch of the church might very well have developed. Care is thus taken to avoid this kind of division.

- Second, because they must be placed upon the foundation laid by the apostles, and continue in their doctrine. Philip was a relatively new believer himself, and the church could not be founded upon his foundation. Unlike Paul and the other apostles, he was not a “wise masterbuilder” who put down what other men build upon (1 Cor 3:10-12).

AN APOSTLE-LESS CHURCH

Today, when men go about to plant or start churches, they do well to build upon the foundation that has been set down by the apostles. When they take it upon themselves to develop new kinds of congregations upon media presentation, entertainment, community involvement, and the likes, they are departing from the ways of God. A church that is not built upon the foundation the apostles put down, and nourished up in their doctrine, is no church at all!

The absence of the knowledge of apostolic doctrine in the average American church is appalling. One can scarcely find a person who has an intelligent grasp of the Person and accomplishments of Jesus, the grace of God, and the ministry of the Holy Spirit. Subjects like justification, sanctification, redemption, holiness, the resurrection of the dead, and the world to come are altogether avoided. The necessity of holiness and the means through which it is realized are largely unknown. Rarely will you find anyone who has an intelligent grasp of the purpose of God, or what His objective is for the church.

All of these things are included in apostolic doctrine. These are matters they wrote about, delivering their message to the churches. Yet we have a church on our hand that has little or no idea what the apostles taught on subjects like a falling away, inner conflict, the danger of submitting to the commandments of men, and how to successfully resist the devil.

See, our text stands in stark contrast to the church methodologies of our day, and we do well to take note of it. This is the real church, and it is being directed by its Head. What you are beholding is Jesus building His church in great wisdom and effectiveness. He employs holy and enlightened men whom He has chosen to direct His people. Those who have no spiritual understanding and cannot be associated with Jesus by observing their conduct and hearing their message, have no legitimate role in church leadership. Men may adopt rules and by-laws that place men in leadership who lack these qualities, but heaven will not honor them, and neither should we. The church is not a democracy that is licensed to choose its own leaders and make its own rules. It is a body who are individually connected to and holding to its Head, Jesus Christ.

THEY PRAYED FOR THEM

“ 15 Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost”

Although Peter and John had been accustomed to operating in leading roles in Jerusalem (Acts 3:1-4; 4:14,19), they consented to being sent down to Samaria. They lived out the admonition that Peter would give several years later: “Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility” (1 Pet 5:5). They did not do this out mere human respect, although that was no doubt involved. Rather, they were aware of the nature of life in the body of Christ. They knew that Jesus is “the Head of the body” (Col 1:18), “from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God” (Col 2:19).

No one can minister to the body of Christ who is not first ministered to by Christ Himself. It is in holding to the Head, or maintaining “connection” NIV with Him that the individual is enabled to feed the flock of God. This is not a mere idea, or even a noble goal. This is the manner of the Kingdom, and the sheep cannot be fed, nourished, or profited in any other way. Jesus will not exclude Himself from the care of His own church, leaving the matter solely in the hands of men. He does, however work through the members that He has placed in His body, which is “the fulness of Him that filleth all in all” (Eph 1:23). That is, His body, the church, is vessel into which He pours or deposits Himself. Where there is a body of people who are not themselves holding to Christ, maintaining faith in Him, and living “unto Him” (2 Cor 5:15) we have a situation that will not long continue. Like the Laodiceans, such are on the verge of being spewed out of Christ’s mouth (Rev 3:16). By living at a distance from Him, and being unaware of Him, they have shut themselves off from all nourishment and direction.

If what I have said is true, then we have churches on our hand that cannot be nourished or directed by Christ because their spiritual nerve center has either been severed or seriously infected.

When one ponders the condition of the churches of our time, this is a staggering consideration, serious beyond measure. If what I have said is true, then we have churches on our hand that cannot be nourished or directed by Christ because their spiritual nerve center has either been severed or seriously infected.

By comparison, we have the church of our text that has maintained spiritual health, and is holding to the Head. In the case of the believers in Samaria, they know what to do. This is not owing to a vast reservoir of knowledge and church expertise, but to the fact that they are holding to the Head, and thus can be the more easily directed by Him.

WHEN THEY WERE COME DOWN

“Who, when they were come down . . .” Other versions read, “when they arrived,” NIV “when they came there,” BBE “having come down,” DOUAY “these two went down,” NET “as soon as they arrived,” NLT “when Peter and John arrived.” IE

They came “down” to Samaria from the higher region of Jerusalem. It is by the direction of the Head through the through the apostles that Peter and John go down to Samaria. They go from the highest place to the lowest place, from the mountain to the valley, from the sanctuary to the work.

This also is the manner of the Kingdom. Those who would minister to the people of God must go to them from the presence of the Lord. Today, it is fashionable for men first to acquaint themselves with the region in which they plan to do a work for the Lord, and become acquainted with the people, forming some amiable associations with them. Then, within the context of their friendship, they plan to introduce Christ, or minister to the people. That whole concept is flawed to the core. That is not the way true ministry is accomplished, and men must not allow themselves to be duped into believing that it is.

The text before us is ample proof of this. Philip went down to Samaria and preached Christ. When the Apostles heard of the response of the people, they went down to Samaria to minister. They did not do it within the framework of friendship or worldly acquaintance, because these men had not trafficked in Samaria. Aside from the two-day stay of Jesus there, they had not even been allowed to go into that region (Matt 10:5). On the single occasion when they were sent to a “village of the Samaritans” to prepare the way as Jesus passed through there en route to Jerusalem, the Samaritans “did not receive Him” (Luke 9:52). Yet, neither Philip nor Peter and John spent any known period of time getting acquainted with the people, or forming lasting friendships. That simple is not the manner of the Kingdom.

PRAYED FOR THEM

“ . . . prayed for them . . .” Other versions read, “made prayer for them,” BBE “prayed over them,” MRD “prayed for these new believers,” NLT “did pray concerning them,” YLT “began praying for these new Christians,” LIVING and “prayed for the Samaritan believers.” IE

The first thing Peter and John did was pray for the new believers in Samaria. They called upon the name of the Lord, to Whom these believers belonged. Whatever we see here must include a care for the flock of God. Notice the sequence of things that have taken place in the city of Samaria.

- Philip “preached Christ” unto them.
- With one accord, the people gave heed to him, hearing and seeing the miracles that he did.
- Satan’s kingdom was disrupted, and consequently unclean spirits came out of many that were possessed by them.
- Many that had been taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.
- There was great joy in the city.
- The people believed Philip preaching the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ.
- Those who believed were baptized, both men and women.
- Simon, a sorcerer who had bewitched the people for a long time with his sorceries, also believed and was baptized.

Now, there is a state that would have been heralded in all of the brotherhood journals as a notable achievement! What more could possibly be done. The devil’s hold on people had been loosed, the long time bewitchment of a local sorcerer overthrown, and people believed and were baptized, including Simon the sorcerer. What more could possibly be required? – at least, that is the way in which modern churchmen would think.

But remember, this is the real church of which we are reading, and the Lord Jesus building His own church. The apostles, place “first” in the church, and particularly directed by the Holy Spirit, hear of the events, and send Peter and John there. Upon their arrival, they do not hold a celebration for the successful launching of the first church in Samaria. Rather, they pray for those who had believed and been baptized.

At once it becomes apparent that spiritual life involves more than some have been led to believe! The apostles knew that something was missing in Samaria, and our text will precisely define that missing element. Their response was a manifestation the direction of the Holy Spirit, as well as spiritual discernment and wisdom.

THAT THEY MIGHT RECEIVE THE SPIRIT

“ . . . that they might receive the Holy Ghost.” Other versions read, “receive the Holy Spirit,” NKJV “that the Holy Spirit might be given to them,” BBE “ would be given the Holy Spirit,” CEV and “may be getting the Spirit Holy .” INTERLINEAR

The Apostles knew the necessity of receiving the Holy Spirit. They were keenly aware of the fact that spiritual life cannot be lived without Him. Men may debate about the Holy Spirit, but these men knew the absolute necessity of Him being received by the people of God.

Much of the contention over the presence and ministry of the Holy Spirit has not been preceded by a due consideration of the essentiality of His presence in the believer. I come from a background in which the indispensability of the Spirit was rarely mentioned. The subject was nearly always approached with a mind to disprove those who had false conceptions of the Spirit and His ministry.

Ponder what the Spirit does in the children of God. This will confirm the requisiteness of His Presence.

- The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts “by the Holy Spirit” (Rom 5:5).
- Through Him “the deeds of the body” are mortified (Rom 8:13).
- The saints are “led by the Spirit” (Rom 8:14).
- We are “washed,” “sanctified,” and “justified” “by the Spirit of our God” (1 Cor 6:11).
- We are changed from one increasing stage of glory to another “by the Spirit of the Lord” (2 Cor 3:18).

The Apostles were acting within a full awareness of the absolute necessity of believers having the Holy Spirit, and knowing that they did. Their aim was not for the believing Samaritans to merely have an exhilarating experience, or for the events that took place on the day of Pentecost to be duplicated in Samaria. Such are reflections of a sectarian posture, and did not exist at the time of our text.

We are waiting for the hope of righteousness “through the Spirit” (Gal 5:5).

- The people of are “builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit” (Eph 2:22).
- We keep what has been given to us by God “by the Holy Spirit who dwells in us” NKJV (2 Tim 1:14).

- We have obeyed the truth “through the Spirit” (1 Pet 1:22).
- We know that Christ abides in us “by the Spirit which He hath given us” (1 John 3:24).

An approach to life in Christ Jesus that leaves the people fundamentally unaware of these things cannot possibly be of God. Whatever a person may think about the Holy Spirit and His role in salvation, it is certain that no person who lacks the Holy Spirit can live acceptably before God, or make the claim of belong to Christ. One of the telling marks of false prophets is that they are “having not the Spirit” (Jude 1:19). There is a statement concerning this dreadful condition in the eighth chapter of Romans. There, the Holy Spirit is referred in three different expressions: “But ye are not in the flesh, but in 1 the Spirit , if so be that 2 the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not 3 the Spirit of Christ , he is none of His” (Rom 8:9).

The Apostles were acting within a full awareness of the absolute necessity of believers having the Holy Spirit, and knowing that they did. Their aim was not for the believing Samaritans to merely have an exhilarating experience, or for the events that took place on the day of Pentecost to be duplicated in Samaria. Such are reflections of a sectarian posture, and did not exist at the time of our text.

Needful Considerations

In approaching this subject our aim must not be to establish hard and fast rules about the Spirit and His role in salvation. Our beginning point must be the persuasion that He is essential to spiritual life. That thought will dictate how we approach the subject, and leave us more open to the word of the Lord.

I understand that as soon as we speak in this way some will consider is to be leaning in the wrong direction. However, that supposition is the direct result of embracing the doctrines of men, and we will not subject ourselves to such opinions. Such inclinations would not allow us to approach this text with integrity. The way people reason, particular concerning things pertaining to life and godliness, is determined by their perception. In turn, that perception has been shaped by the religious environment to which they have been subjected. If they have been taught in words that the Holy Spirit teaches – sound doctrine expressed in wholesome words – they will reason with God and His purpose in mind. However, if the surroundings in which they have been brought to consider Scripture has been one in which false doctrine was perpetrated in vain words, their thinking and reasoning will be skewed toward earth and sectarian positions. Such people will perceive this text as either confirming their preconceived notion, or else being opposed to it. If the latter is true, they must think of some way to neutralize the text. This may be done in a variety of ways. Considering the extremities of these approaches, they will range from saying the text is corrupt, being inserted by some thoughtless scribe, to saying it belonged to a period of time, or dispensation, that has been defined by men.

Further, the very fact of inspiration postulates the use of particular words and expressions, for the objective of inspiration is the intelligent communication of reality. My aim will not be to integrate this text with a theological persuasion of system that has had its genesis with men.

The Approach I Will Take

I will approach this text in the awareness that the apprehension of the truth must begin with a firm persuasion that truth is best stated in “words that Holy Spirit teaches.” Further, the very fact of inspiration postulates the use of particular words and expressions, for the objective of inspiration is the intelligent communication of reality. My aim will not be to integrate this text with a theological persuasion of system that has had its genesis with men. The aim will be to see how the Spirit expresses what took place in this text. I will then integrate this text with other texts that affirm the same experience occurring elsewhere. I will also examine how godly people referred to this event, and to others that are declared to have been of the same order. We will then make an effort to harmonize all of this with the revealed objectives of God Himself. If I am unable to harmonize the text to my own satisfaction, I will let it go for the time being. Note the type of harmony that I seek. It is not making an attempt harmonizing the text with other texts that appear to be contradictory. Such an effort is nothing more than a ploy of the devil to throw us off course. Every statement of Scripture is already in harmony, for they were given by the same Spirit.

The harmony must be seen with the “eternal purpose” of God. Once that is seen, it alters the way we approach the text, providing a broader peripheral view of things.

HE WAS FALLEN UPON NONE OF THEM

“ 16a For as yet He was fallen upon none of them . . . ”

Here is a text that will not fit into a view of God and the truth as it is in Christ that has been formed by men. Whatever man forms is subject to the limitations that are imposed upon men. It is therefore vain to make any attempt to stuff truth into an intellectual mold that has been formed by man. This being true, we are obliged to take these words precisely as they are stated, and seek to understand them as they are intended to be understood. Remember that heaven has no interest in buttressing human concepts. It is the purpose of God and His will to be known that is primary,

FOR AS YET

“For as yet . . .” Other versions read, “ not yet,” NIV “ up to that time ,” BBE “ until then,” CJB and “ before this.” GWN

First, speaking through the Holy Spirit, and with “perfect understanding,” Luke identifies the period time during which the desired effect had not yet taken place. Permit me to once again establish that had taken place during that time.

- Philip had “preached Christ” in the city of Samaria (8:5).
- The people “with one accord gave heed” to the things that Philip spoke, hearing his words, and seeing the miracles that he did (8:6).
- A disruption of Satan’s dominion took place, with unclean spirits coming out of man, and many palsied and lame people being healed (8:7).
- There was “great joy in the city” (8:8).
- Those who believed what Philip preached concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus, “were baptized, both men and women” (8:12).
- Simon, who had bewitched the Samaritans for a long time with his sorceries, also believed “and was baptized” (8:13).
- The report came to the apostles that Samaria had “received the Word of God” (8:14).

Things Related to Salvation

Things related to being saved had taken place among the Samaritans.

- THEY HAD BELIEVED. Jesus said, “He that believeth on Him is not condemned” (John 3:18). Peter said, “whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins” (Acts 10:43). Paul said, “For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth” (Rom 10:4). John said, “He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself” (1 John 5:10).

• THEY HAD BEEN BAPTIZED. Jesus said, “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved” (Mark 16:16). Peter said, “Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins” (Acts 2:38). Paul said, “For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ” (Gal 3:27).

Yet, the apostles come down to Samaria and pray that those who had believed and been baptized “might receive the Holy Spirit.” They do not pray that they will receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit, but that they might “receive the Holy Spirit.” On the day of Pentecost, Peter told those who were believing his word to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins, and they would “receive the gift of the Holy Spirit” (Acts 2:38). The Samaritans had believed and been baptized, and now AFTER their obedience, Peter himself, together with John, are praying that they might “receive the Holy Spirit.” These are just the facts in the case.

HE WAS FALLEN UPON

NONE OF THEM

“ . . . He was fallen upon none of them . . .” Other versions read, “come upon,” NIV “come down on,” CSB “not been given,” CEV and “not yet having on fallen.” INTERLINEAR

Now the reason for the prayer of the apostles is given: the Spirit, we yet, “was fallen upon NONE of them” – not so much as one. And the whole city had believed! Let me remind you of the precision of the language employed here. The apostles prayed that these people might “RECEIVE” the Holy Spirit, because, as yet, He had not “FALLEN” upon any of them. They did not pray the Spirit would fall on them, but that they would receive Him. It is therefore clear that whatever “fallen” on them means, it is synonymous with receiving the Spirit, for that was the what the apostles sought for the Samaritans.

The word “fallen” is correctly translated from the Greek word evpipeptwko,j (epi-pep-tokos). The lexical meaning of the word is, “to fall upon, to rush or press upon,” THAYER “come down upon,” FRIBERG “to press against,” LOUA-NIDA and “come upon.” GINGRICH

This same word is used in the account of the household of Cornelius receiving the Holy Spirit. Luke gives the account in these words: “While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word” (Acts 10:44). When Peter recounted that occurrence in Jerusalem, he said thus: “And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them , as on us at the beginning” (Acts 11:15). He also added that this is what happened on the day of Pentecost – “as on us at the beginning.” Peter further explained what had happened at the house of Cornelius in these words: “Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as He did unto us , who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God?” (Acts 11:17). The experience to which Peter referred is recorded in these words: “they were all filled with the Holy Spirit” (Acts 2:4). Upon hearing these words, those who heard Peter “glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life” (Acts 11:18). Some time later, Peter again reported this event saying, “And God, which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost , even as He did unto us” (Acts 15:8). Upon hearing this testimony, James, a pillar in the church at Jerusalem concluded, “Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for His name” (Acts 15:14). He also concluded that this was confirmation that the Lord had accepted the Gentiles, in confirmation of the words of the prophets (Acts 15:17).

Speaking of this experience, Jesus had told His disciples, “But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you ” (Acts 1:8).

Statements Concerning the Experience

Now, in order to further develop our perspective of this circumstance, let me remind you of how this kind of experience has been described, and of the conclusions that were drawn concerning it by those with understanding.

- The Holy Spirit fell on them.
- The apostles therefore prayed that they would receive the Spirit.
- God gave them the gift of the Spirit.
- The people were filled with the Spirit.
- God granted them repentance .
- God gave them the Holy Spirit.
- God took out a people for His name.
- The people had been accepted .
- The Spirit came upon the people.

Thus God has spoken of the same experience from a variety of different perspectives. As compared to acquiring the Spirit by means human effort, He came upon the people. From the standpoint of faith, He was received . Viewed from the vantage of the grace of God, He was a given as a Gift . Seen from the view the effect, the people were filled . Concerning impact, the people were given repentance . Considering what was received, it was the Spirit Himself , and not a mere ability. Seen as what God was actually doing, He was taking out a people for Himself. The confirmation was that the people had been accepted . Viewed from the standpoint of the Spirit Himself, He came upon the people.

God does not have a particle of interest in fortifying thoughts that have not originated with Him. When it comes to the thoughts of men that have not been directed by Him, it is written, “The LORD knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity”

If we think of the Holy Spirit as being “sent forth” by God into our hearts (Gal 4:6), or being “sent down from heaven” (1 Pet 1:12), or being “shed on us abundantly” (Tit 3:5), to say that He has “fallen upon” people makes perfect sense. Of course, this is precisely the manner in which the gift of the Holy Spirit is spoken of elsewhere. However, if we read this text with the teaching of those who bring a Gospel of the Spirit instead of the Gospel of Christ, we will see the text in a quite different way.

All of these texts to which referred (under the heading “Statements Concerning the Experience”) are speaking of the Spirit falling on the people. I will tell you that within the Christian community, those who are bold enough to speak of the Spirit falling on people do not make these insightful associations. They rather speak of such things as the people falling under the power of the Spirit, whereas the text speaks of the Spirit falling. Others say that the Spirit only fell upon the apostles, while the Scriptures expressly associate the falling of the Spirit with the disciples, the Samaritans, and the household of Cornelius.

In view of these things, we do well to proceed with this text with a determination to confine ourselves to what is actually said, and to reason within the framework of revelation, not sectarian dogma. We have nothing to fear by taking such an approach, for revealed words will never lead us to an erroneous conclusion. It cannot be wrong to reason concerning statements that have been inspired by God. However, the soul who dares to do so only with a mind to establish that what he has already embraced is the whole of the matter is treading on dangerous ground. God does not have a particle of interest in fortifying thoughts that have not originated with Him. When it comes to the thoughts of men that have not been directed by Him, it is written, “The LORD knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity” (Psa 94:11). As simplistic as it may appear, believers must reason within the framework of revelation, not allowing their thinking to drift into the realm from which God has delivered them. This is one of the great curse of spiritual Babylon, Satan’s fabrication of the church that Jesus alone can build. It teaches men to think wrongly, within the wrong context which drives them to a wrong conclusion. There is no such thing as a wrong road that leads to the truth, or a skewed thought that will hit the target of a godly conclusion.

A WORD ABOUT PHILIP’S HUMILITY

It is certainly appropriate here to draw attention to the humility of Philip. He is the one who went down to Samaria, preached to them, worked among them, and reaped a great harvest, with the whole city being filled with joy. One might imagine that he might object to Peter and John coming down to reap where they had bestowed no labor. However, this is not the case. Not only had the apostles been placed first in the church, Philip recognized that fact and gladly acquiesced to it. When the members of the body hold fast the Head, and conduct themselves as a part of the whole, a grand harmony is found that brings glory to God. These men did not duplicate one another’s efforts, but did what they had been appointed by Jesus to do. Philip was an evangelist (Acts 21:8), not an apostle, who ranked ahead of him (Eph 4:11).

Because they were placed in their respective position by the Head of the church, and knew that to be the case, they could work harmoniously. This they fulfilled the 133rd Psalm in their labors, confirming that it is “good and pleasant for brethren to dwell together in unity.” In that environment, God commands a blessing (Psa 133:3).

THEY WERE ONLY BAPTIZED IN THE NAME OF THE LORD JESUS

“ 16b . . . only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.” Other versions read, “ had only been,” NKJV “had simply been,” NASB “they were only,” DOUAY “they had . . . merely,” WILLIAMS and “They were living simply as men and women who had been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.” PHILLIPS

Here is an expression that, if taken seriously, forces men to think outside the confines of tradition religion. This statement is in the Scripture – in every translation. Although it is of no consequence, the higher critics could not find any reason to question its authenticity. We should have no trouble receiving it either.

Here is an inspired explanation for why the Holy Spirit had not fallen upon these believer. It certainly was not because they lacked any faith: they had “believed Philip preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ.” It was not because they had failed to be obedient: they were all “baptized , both men and women” – or, as this text states, “baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.” The explanation this gives is arresting: “ONLY they were baptized . . .” The word “only” is translated from the Greek word monon, (moh-non), which has the following lexical meaning: “alone, only, merely,” THAYER “without accompaniment, alone.” FRIBERG

First, let me say that if we approach this text as though it was written establish a precedent that was to be followed, or that it revealed the proper sequence of events in being saved or obtaining the Holy Spirit, we will only fall upon the rocks of confusion.

Here is an instance where people were baptized in the name of Jesus, yet had not received the Holy Spirit. We know this is the case because Peter and John prayed “that they might receive the Holy Spirit” NKJV (8:15). They did not pray that these believers would receive various gifts conferred by the Holy Spirit, but that they would receive the Holy Spirit. That is what the text says. They did not pray that they would receive special miraculous outpouring of the Holy Spirit, but they might receive the Holy Spirit Himself. The text does not say they did this because the Scriptures had not yet been written, and they needed special gifts to support them until the Scriptures were written. That is what some men have said, but that it not what the text says. John Gill of the eighteenth century wrote that this text , “they were baptized believers, and no more; as yet, none of them had gifts qualifying them for the ministry; and still less could any of them speak with tongues, or prophecy, or work miracles; the Holy Ghost had not yet descended on them for such purposes.” JOHN GILL ON ACTS John W. McGarvey refers to the objective of this prayer as “the miraculous gift of the Spirit,” stating that it was “bestowed by no human hands except those of the apostles.” In presenting the reasoning supposed to support this view, brother Garvey spoke

However, neither the prophets nor the apostles ever represented the giving of the Holy Spirit to be in any sense reserved for part of the part of Christ and not the whole of it. The Spirit is represented as dispensing various abilities, but they are not to a choice few.

for a number of commentators. Here is what he said, “We notice, then, first, That the Samaritans had believed the gospel, and been immersed. They were, then, according to the commission, and according to Peter's answer on Pentecost, pardoned, and in possession of that ‘gift of the Holy Spirit,’ which was promised on condition of repentance and immersion. Second, After they had been in possession of this gift, for a period sufficient for the news to reach Jerusalem, the whole body of the apostles united in sending to them Peter and John. Third, Previous to the arrival of Peter and John, none of them had received the miraculous gift of the Spirit. Fourth, Upon the imposition of hands by the two apostles, accompanied with prayers, the Holy Spirit fell upon them, conferring miraculous gifts.” McGARVEY’S COMMENTARY ON ACTS

As I have said, this same position is taken by a number of historically prominent teachers. The only difficulty with the position is that this not what the text says. The following are my own observations.

- Peter’s words, “and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit” (Acts 2:38) do not necessarily mean He would be received immediately – although it is generally held that this is the case.
- The above commentator says the Samaritans had “been in possession” of the gift of the Spirit for a “period sufficient for the news to reach Jerusalem.” Yet the text states that Peter and John prayed that “they” – the ones who had “received the Word of God” – might “receive the Holy Spirit” (8:15).
- Brother McGarvey says “none of them had received the miraculous gift of the Spirit.” The phrase “the miraculous gift of the Spirit” does not occur in Scripture. Yet, our good brother proceeds to reason just as though those were words given by the Spirit Himself. How are we to tell whether or not that is not the gift of which Peter spoke on the day of Pentecost? At that time, the people who heard Peter speak had only been exposed to what they saw and heard on that day?
- Then, brother McGarvey boldly says that upon the imposition of the hands of the apostles, together with their prayers, “ the Holy Spirit fell upon them, conferring miraculous gifts .” The text does not say this, nor give the slightest hint that any miraculous gifts were expressed at that time through the Samaritans.

I have taken the time to relate this explanation because of my own familiarity with it. I was tutored in this position, with all of its attending arguments and proofs.

The summation of this argument is that the gift of the Spirit here was discretionary – not for all of the Samaritans, but only for some of them. However, neither the prophets nor the apostles ever represented the giving of the Holy Spirit to be in any sense reserved for part of the part of Christ and not the whole of it. The Spirit is represented as dispensing various abilities, but they are not to a choice few. Concerning the various edifying aptitudes dispensed by the Spirit it is written, “But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as He will” (1 Cor 12:11). The same chapter declares that “the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal” (12:7). In commenting on these various aptitudes it also says, “But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him” (1 Cor 12:18). There are no pointless members, which is the precise point Paul is expounding in His delineation of the various spiritual gifts. He does not say that some of them are miraculous and some are ordinary. In the first place, if the Spirit gives and administers them, how can many of them be ordinary? Gifts like “helps,” “governments” (1 Cor 12:28), not to mention “ministering,” teaching,” exhorting,” “giving,” and “showing mercy” – all given in Paul’s catalog of gifts to the church in Rome (Rom 12:7-8).

This is an excellent example of, what I call, template theology . A view is developed that is the result of human conclusion rather than Divine affirmation of statement. The view is based upon a compilation of various texts that are thought to support it. Then, the view is laid like a pattern on the Word of God – superimposed, as it were, upon the text of Scripture. Convinced of the truth of the view, they can simply trim away thorny texts of Scripture by shaping the text to their pattern. However, in the process, there is a significant loss – not to mention Divine indignation, for God has summarily cursed anyone who adds to or take from, His Word (Duet 4:2; 12:32; Prov 30:6; Rev 22:18-19).

It is clear that there was no evidence that the Holy Spirit had come upon these people – even though they had been baptized in the name of Jesus.

WHO WERE THE SAMARITANS?

In addressing this subject, it is important to establish the identity and origin of the Samaritans. They were in the land of promise, but they were not Jews, who had “no dealings with the Samaritans” (John 4:9). The origin of these people is traced back to the captivity of Israel by the Assyrians. As retribution for her sins, in the ninth year of Hoshea, “the king of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes” (2 Kgs 17:6). In doing this, the word of the Lord was fulfilled, and Israel was carried out of His sight. Thus the onslaught of Samaria continued “Until the LORD removed Israel out of his sight, as he had said by all his servants the prophets. So was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria unto this day” (2 Kgs 17:23). The king of Assyria then “brought men from Babylon, and from Cuthah, and from Ava, and from Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria instead of the children of Israel: and they possessed Samaria, and dwelt in the cities thereof” (2 Kgs 17:24).

Some of these people probably intermarried with the Jews, although a point is not made of this in Scripture. At any rate, these were not the chosen people. Jesus said of them , “Ye worship ye know not what” (John 4:22). Apart from the two-day teaching of Jesus (John 4:40), and the apparently short-term preaching of Philip, they had not been exposed to the kind of Scriptural knowledge that was extant among the Jews. Even when Jesus had sent out the twelve about mid-way through His ministry, He strictly charged them, “Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not” (Matt 10:5). Their exposure to the Word of God, then, had been very limited. This is fortified by the suggestion that the priests had been removed from the land when Israel was taken captive. The Scriptures apprise us that the king of Assyria sent “one of the priests” that had been taken captive from the land to teach the transplanted people in Samaria “the manner of the God of the land” (2 Kgs 17:27). This confirms that, at the very least, there was not any extensive knowledge of God in the land.

All of this means that these people were not to be compared to those who were familiar with the prophecies of Joel, who spoke of the pouring forth of the Spirit of God upon all flesh. Further, we do not know how much had been communicated Philip on this subject. To assume that they had an understanding of spiritual gifts and were prepared for inspired direction from among their peers seems to me to be a wholly unwarranted assumption. I rather see these people as those who had limited understanding. They had not been told to tarry until they were endued with power from on high as Jesus' disciples. It further does not appear that they had been given the promise of receiving the Spirit as those on the day of Pentecost.

Because of the role of the Apostles, and the inferior background of the Samaritans, it was imperative that they become involved with the Samaritans. The fact that they had not yet received the Holy Spirit was a determination that was made in heaven. While men assume that immediately upon our baptism we receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, nothing in the Word of God actually makes such a statement. I must acknowledge that I am inclined in that direction. This is based upon my perception of Galatians 4:6: "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." However, if pressed on the matter, I do not know how I could substantiate the notion that the Spirit is automatically conferred instantly upon our baptism.

The language of the text also suggests the conferment of the Holy Spirit was not an automatic process: "for AS YET He had fallen on NONE of them." I have already shown that whatever significance men may choose to attach to the word "fallen," the apostles prayed that the Samaritans might "RECEIVE" the Holy Spirit – not that they might receive the gifts of the Holy Spirit, but that they might receive the Spirit Himself. Also, later, when Simon observed what had taken place, it is said that he saw that "through the laying on of the apostles' hands, the Holy Spirit was given. He then sought power so that

I suggest that the case of the Samaritans is not far removed from the situation of many believers in our time – those who have believed and been baptized in Jesus name, yet who give no evidence of ever having received the Holy Spirit. Who has not been troubled by this well known circumstance?

on whomsoever he laid his hands, they might "receive the Holy Spirit" (8:18-19). That is not the kind of language that is used for the conferment of miraculous powers. In fact, I cannot find a single text where it is stated that miraculous powers were ever specifically conferred by the laying on of hands – particularly spiritual gifts required for the sustaining of the body of Christ.

I will proceed with the exposition of this text viewing the receiving of the Holy Spirit to refer to the gift of the Spirit that is intended for all of the children of God. The following represent the words of Jesus and the Apostles concerning receiving the Holy Spirit.

- "But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive : for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified" (John 7:39).
- "Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive , because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (John 14:17).
- "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2:38).
- "That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith" (Gal 3:14).
- "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father" (Rom 8:15).
- "Now we have received , not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God" (1 Cor 2:12).
- "For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received , or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him” (2 Cor 11:4).

• “This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?” (Gal 3:2).

The essentiality of the Holy Spirit is consistently related to the “common salvation” (Rom 5:5; 8:13,14; 15:16; 1 Cor 6:11; 2 Cor 3:18; Gal 5:5; 2 Tim 1:14; 1 Pet 1:22).

IS IT POSSIBLE?

Is it possible that in our time there are people like the Samaritans who have believed and been baptized, but have not yet received the Holy Spirit. Many of us know by experience that we knew little of the Holy Spirit of His pivotal role in salvation for a considerable period of time. If it is alleged that the Lord gives the Holy Spirit to people independently of their knowledge of Him, then we are cast upon the horns of a dilemma. Our participation in the good things of God is specially said to be “through the knowledge of Him” (2 Pet 1:3). We do know that certain disciples in Ephesus had to be re-baptized in Jesus’ name because of a deficiency in their knowledge, for they only knew of the baptism of John the Baptist (Acts 19:3-5). Their case differed from that of the Samaritans because they were unaware of Jesus Christ, who was the Object of John the Baptist’s preaching. The inadequacy of their knowledge proved to be a barrier to their experience.

I suggest that the case of the Samaritans is not far removed from the situation of many believers in our time – those who have believed and been baptized in Jesus name, yet who give no evidence of ever having received the Holy Spirit. Who has not been troubled by this well known circumstance? Yet, we dare not attempt to resolve the problem by leaping beyond the boundaries of revelation, or going about to develop an explanation of the situation that has not been spelled out in Scripture.

It seems to me that we have violated no revealed doctrine or circumstance by taking this text for what it says, refusing to attach a meaning to it that cannot be justified.

THEY LAID THEIR HANDS ON THEM, AND THEY RECEIVED

“ 17 Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. ”

This must not be taken to be the report of a mere procedure or ritual. The fact that they prayed shows that this was not the employment of a power that had been conferred upon them. Peter and John did not merely speak to these people as they did to the lame man at the gate Beautiful (Acts 3)

THEY LAID THEIR HANDS ON THEM

“Then laid they their hands on them . . .” Other versions read, “began laying,” NASB “placed their hands,” NIV “put their hands,” BBE and “laid their hands on them one by one.” AMPLIFIED

I do not know what rule of interpretation allows a person to equate receiving the Holy Spirit with the conferment of miraculous gifts designed for the establishment of the church. That doctrine is not taught in Scripture, but is the result of human reasoning

This is something that was not recorded as having taken place on the day of Pentecost. It also is not said to have taken place at the house of Cornelius. This cannot, therefore, be a pattern. The laying on of the apostles hands stands between their prayer that these people would “receive the Holy Spirit,” and the affirmation that they “received the Holy Spirit.”

I do not know what rule of interpretation allows a person to equate receiving the Holy Spirit with the conferment of miraculous gifts designed for the establishment of the church. That doctrine is not taught in Scripture, but is the result of human reasoning. It seems to me that we are obligated to simply take the text as it stands, without attempting to fit it into a doctrinal mold of human origin.

There are several instances of the laying on of hands in Acts and the Epistles, although there are not many.

- There are several instances of miracles being done “by the hands” of the apostles and (on one occasion) Barnabas (Acts 5:12; 11:30; 14:3; 19:11; 28:8). There is no instance of the impartation of miraculous ministries by this means.

- The apostles laid their hands on the seven who were chosen to administer the distribution of food. “Whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them” (Acts 6:6). There no statement about the impartation of special powers through this means.

- Our text, where the apostles laid hands on the Samaritans and they received the Holy Spirit. “Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost” (Acts 8:17). There is no record of any extraordinary that occurred at this time. Of this occasion it is later stated that by this means “the Holy Spirit was given” (Acts 8:18).

- When Ananias laid his hands on Saul of Tarsus, telling him he had been sent that Saul might receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Spirit. “And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost” (Acts 9:17). Jesus sent a man that was not an Apostle to Saul that he might be filled with the Spirit. We are given no details about what occurred at that time.

- Certain prophets in Antioch, upon being directed by the Holy Spirit, laid their hands on Barnabas and Saul, sending them away to the work given them by the Spirit. “And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away” (Acts 13:3). There is no record of any spiritual aptitudes that were given at this time.

- Paul laid his hands on the disciples from Ephesus following their baptism into in the name of Jesus, and the Holy Spirit came on them. “And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied” (Acts 19:6). There is no hint that this was a gift that continued after this occasion.

- Timothy was given a gift by the laying on hands of the presbytery, or elders. “Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery” (1 Tim 4:14). There is no record of the identity of this gift, unless it be that of an evangelist, which 2 Timothy 4:5 suggests. Paul also said Timothy had received a gift by the disposition of his hands. “Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands” (2 Tim 1:6).

- Paul told Timothy not to lay hands suddenly on any man. “Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins: keep thyself pure” (1 Tim 5:22). It is assumed this had to do with the ordination of elders (Tit 1:5), although that is not expressly stated.

- The “laying of hands” is listed as one of the principles of “the doctrine of Christ” (Heb 6:2).

The extraordinary nature of this incident, and the uniqueness of the people involved seems to me to forbid viewing it as a standard approach. This was an epoch of a sort, with people being converted for the first time who were not in Jerusalem. They were also fundamentally uninformed people in a group of considerable number. It was necessary that they be put on the foundation laid down by the apostles, and a tie be formed with them – particularly in view of their recent deception by Simon the sorcerer. Thjis was not the time for division among the brethren.

AND THEY RECEIVED THE HOLY SPIRIT

“ . . . and they received the Holy Ghost.” Other versions read, “they were receiving ,” NASB “ came on them,” BBE “ one by one they received,” WILLIAMS “they were given ,” CEV and “they obtained .” INTERLINEAR

The text does not say they received various gifts, but that they received the Holy Spirit. The word “received” is translated from the Greek word evla,mbanon (e-lam-ban-on). The lexical meaning of the word emphasizes the receiving itself, and not the effect of the receiving or what accompanied the reception of the Holy Spirit. The lexical meaning of the word is as follows: “to take . . . take hold of . . . to take to one’s self,” THAYER and “take for oneself, take into possession . . . receive, accept.” FRIBERG

I have already cited the various passages that affirm those in Christ have received the Holy Spirit. If we will permit the words of the Spirit to shape our understanding, I do not see how receiving the Spirit can be perceived as obtaining miraculous gifts through the imposition of apostolic hands.

In my judgment, it was necessary for the Samaritans to have an association with the apostles. This was necessary because of their background, which involved a corruption of Judaism. It also was required because they had been bewitched by the sorceries of Simon. Additionally, there is no evidence that they had any teaching concerning the Holy Spirit.

This is not something we should be contentious about, but if we are going to speak about what took place in Samaria, we are obliged to speak of it in the words used by the Holy Spirit to describe the events. If they do not fit into the way we have been thinking, then we simply must at least abandon sectarian jargon in favor of Scriptural expression.

CONCLUSION

We have been exposed to Jesus building His church as He said He would. The apostles were working at His direction, and Philip was at well. What took place in Samaria must be seen as the will of God, and not as a pattern. It is not possible that what took place there departed from the prophecy of Joel or what took place on the day of Pentecost. If we can see that with any degree of clarity, we will be satisfied with Luke’s report just as it stands.

Lesson #38

SIMON THE SORCERER

“ 8:18 And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, 19 Saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost. 20 But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. 21 Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the sight of God. 22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee. 23 For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity. 24 Then answered Simon, and said, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me. 25 And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans. ”

INTRODUCTION

In the inspired record of the advancement of the truth and the growth of the body of Christ, we are also given a glimpse of “the flesh,” and the activity of the wicked one. From the Garden of Eden until this very day, wherever God has worked upon the earth, the “old serpent” has injected his presence, working to the fullest extent that has been allowed by the God of heaven. Whether it was keeping the Garden, a nation journeying through the wilderness to Canaan, or a specially chosen king standing in the privacy of his palace, the devil has been there. He was there when the “King of the Jews” was born, making every effort to slay the young child. He reared his ugly head during Jesus’ ministry, a moving his children to attempt lay traps and snares for the Master. When a man was chosen to be an Apostle, and even given the keys to the Kingdom, Satan asked God for permission to sift him as wheat. Now, we are seeing evidence of his working during the infancy of the church. He raised up opponents to the truth from among the Jewish leaders. He put it into the hearts of Ananias and Sapphira to tempt God by lying. He fomented murmuring among the early disciples over the distribution being made to the widows of the assembly. He raised up the Jewish council and moved them to oppose, and finally stone Stephen.

SOMETHING TO BE SEEN

This confirms that salvation is being worked out in an arena of conflict and competition. It is not accomplished in a spiritual vacuum where there are no opposing forces. That is why it is so foolish to embrace the notion that once a person has believed and obeyed the Gospel there is no further jeopardy or danger of falling away. In fact, the very passage we are going to receive violently throws that misconception down to the ground where it belongs. The embrace of this bit of theological nonsense is the direct result of an academic understanding of the Gospel, as compared with “spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9). The purpose of God, and the nature of His salvation, have, in such a case, not been comprehended.

The salvation of God is intended to be initiated and brought to maturity in a volatile arena – where forces are at work that are transcendent to human wisdom and strength. It is in this kind of environment that the necessity of faith can be most clearly seen – for from beginning to end, salvation is “by grace through faith” (Eph 2:8). Because faith is the substance of things “not seen,” and the evidence of things that are not present – “things hoped for” – it must get past the seen in order to take hold of the unseen. Herein is the jeopardy of our situation. If faith is “little” or “weak,” the unseen realities so sorely needed for survival become less and less apparent, until they finally fade from view. When this happens, all stability goes away, for we “stand by faith,” and are “kept by the power of God by faith” (2 Cor 1:24; 1 Pet 1:5). Religion without faith is nothing more than idolatry.

It is essential to comprehend that as long as men are in this world, “the flesh” is the Achilles heel of all believers. This is because they are “in the body,” (Heb 13:3) – which is appropriately referred to as “the body of this death.” This is why insightful souls long for deliverance from the body (Rom 7:24-25). It is also why the prospect of a glorified body is so precious to them (Phil 3:20-21; 2 Cor 5:2). Until our appointed deliverance from our present bodies, we must bring them under subjection, for they, and the life that is connected with them, are fundamentally recalcitrant (1 Cor 9:27). They remain a part of the world, which has been cursed, and therefore, as it is written, “flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God” (1 Cor 15:50). In such a case, to boast some form of automatic security nothing more than folly. The very idea of such an existence puts faith to sleep, for faith moves about with the full awareness of danger, pitfalls, snares, and delusion.

This will be our first exposure to the sin of emulation, which is covetousness in a different garb. The sin will be precisely defined and assessed by Peter.

This circumstance confirms the foolishness of living as though there was no jeopardy while we remain in the world. That imagine is disarming, which causes the danger to be all the greater, for Satan and his hosts always capitalize on the presence of unbelief or waning faith.

Already these things have been revealed in the surfacing of Ananias and Sapphira. Having made a place for Satan, he put something into their hearts, and they gave expression to it. When the judgment of God came upon Ananias and Sapphira, the working of the wicked one was dealt a devastating blow, and “great fear came upon all the church” (Acts 5:11). Now, however, another hub of kingdom activity has developed elsewhere, and a mighty move of God is being made known. As though privy to this circumstance, the head of the old serpent raises up in Samaria – this time with a corruption even greater than the one of Ananias and Sapphira. This time there is a graduation in the seriousness of the incident. There is also a different kind of judgment administered. This confirms the living nature of Divine dealings, as opposed to the cold and lifeless working of a mere system.

THE ABSENCE OF A PATTERN

In all of this, we behold the nature of Divine workings among men. Sin is not always judged in the same way, for men attempt to capitalize on fixed patterns. Therefore Solomon said of Divine judgments, “Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil” (Eccl 8:11).

Our text also confirms there are different nuances, motives, and appearances of sin, making it imperative that those who confront it have a strong faith and a spiritually cultured wisdom. This will be our first exposure to the sin of emulation, which is covetousness in a different garb. The sin will be precisely defined and assessed by Peter. As we would expect from a discerning man, the proper response to the sin will be expressed, as well as the only acceptable action of the transgressor.

Peter will deal with the matter without having to wade through a cesspool of doctrinal corruption. We do well to pay careful attention to what he says, for we are being exposed to the straightforward confrontation of sin.

More of the manner of Christ’s rule is made known in this text. We will find that the recovery of the sinner is not the primary thing. In fact, in this case, the possibility of recovery is not guaranteed, although there is a slight glimmer of hope. We will find that the God of heaven does not respond to all sin in the same manner. As revealed in Jesus, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily, the transgression of the scribes and Pharisees was not approached in the same manner as the sin of a woman caught in the act of adultery, or a palsied man who had unforgiven sins. This is a hard lesson for some to learn, but it is a needful one, lest men become complacent in their attitude toward sin. Jesus said there was such a thing a sinner who “hath never forgiveness” (Mk 3:29). Whether or not men understand all of the implications of that text, it ought to be crystal clear that all sin is not alike. John also spoke of a sin that was “unto death,” as well as a sin that was “not unto death” (1 John 5:16). David spoke of “presumptuous sins” that led to “the great transgression” (Psa 19:13) Jesus spoke of those who committed “the greater sin” (John 19:11). Paul wrote of “the sin which doth so easily beset us” (Heb 12:1). Thus, there has been enough said on this subject to justify removing from our vocabulary any expressions that leads people to believe there all sin is alike.

Of course, at the time of our text, much of the confusion that exists in our day concerning sin had not yet been brought into the church. Peter will deal with the matter without having to wade through a cesspool of doctrinal corruption. We do well to pay careful attention to what he says, for we are being exposed to the straightforward confrontation of sin. There are no explanations for why this or that is or is not said. There is no explanation of what this does not mean, or how it does not conflict with some other statement of truth. Such explanations have become necessary because of doctrinal error. If, therefore, what Peter has to say is difficult to receive, it is certainly not because of any ambiguity or confusion in his words. Luke, the writer of Acts had no difficulty with the words. Philip asked no question about them. Even the transgressor clearly understood them.

WHAT SIMON SAW

“ 8:18a And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given . . .”

Simon, having believed and been baptized, has been following Philip, wondering, and “beholding the miracles and signs which were done.” These were apparently out of the domain in which he had been operating, with the many sorcerers with which he had deceived the people. It is my judgment that he should have been occupying himself with the message that Philip was preaching, more than with the works he was doing – although the works were legitimate, giving witness to the truth of what Philip was p-reaching. Here, however, for the first time in the book of Acts, we are confronted with a man who put the teaching after the works, and was enamored of the works more than the doctrine. Keep in mind, this is a man that believed and was baptized. However you wish to classify those who believe and are baptized, here was a man who, by the Holy Spirit, was thus classified. If it is true that such people are insulated against error, that will surely be fulfilled in Simon – for “Simon himself also believed” and “was baptized” (Acts 8:13). If such a person cannot fall away, then Simon will not do so. If he cannot lose what is possessed in Christ, then He will lose nothing. If forgiveness is guaranteed, then he will be guaranteed forgiveness.

In this case, as with all Scriptural accounts, the doctrines of men are put to the fire-test. If they are true, inspired accounts will support them. If they are not true, those accounts will contradict them and expose them.

SIMON SAW

“And when Simon saw . . .” Other versions read, “But Simon having seen,” DARBY “Simon, having beheld,” YLT and “when Simon perceived.” MONTGOMERY

We do not know how long it took the word of the Samaritans receiving the Word of God to get to Jerusalem. But, however long it took, Simon was still following along with Philip, for when Peter and John had arrived, and through them the Holy Spirit was given, Simon saw it.

What men see reveals who they are, and does make a difference. This will be confirmed in Simon. What Simon saw was the events related to the preceding verse. It is said of Peter and John, “Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost” (Acts 8:17). This action was prompted by the fact that the Samaritans, although they had believed and were baptized, had not yet received the Holy Spirit. Peter and John discerned this, and had “prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Spirit” NKJV (v 15). Because the apostles were the ones appointed to lay the foundation for the church (Eph 2:20), it was apparently necessary for this gift to be associated with them. This, in my judgment, was required because of the limited exposure of the Samaritans to the ministry of John the Baptist or Jesus, and the fact that when Jesus sent out the twelve, they were not permitted to enter into any Samaritan cities (Matt 10:5). This was, then, a kind of spiritual epoch – the establishment of the Kingdom of God in new territory. Care was therefore taken to avoid the forming of an church that was independent from the apostles, for it was their doctrine in which the believers were to continue (John 17:20; Acts 2:42).

THE HOLY SPIRIT WAS GIVEN

“ . . . that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given . . .” Other versions read, “was bestowed,” NASB “was conferred,” NAB “was imparted,” AMPLIFIED and “is being given.” INTERLINEAR

Whether or not Simon received the Holy Spirit is not stated. Some have surmised that he did not, but I do not know how that supposition can be established. It seems to me that if this was the case, he would have asked to receive the Spirit. Notwithstanding, it is not profitable to delve into this matter, for God has not provided an answer concerning it. Some say the gift was conferred upon selective Samaritans – but the text does not say that, and we must confine ourselves to the text.

Note what Simon “saw” – “that the Holy Spirit was given.” NKJV And how did Simon know this? There was obviously some outward indication that the people had received the Holy Spirit. Some commentators have the answer for us. John Gill says, “he saw, that upon this men began to prophesy, and to speak with divers tongues they had never learned, and to work miracles, cure men of their diseases, and the like: and when he observed this.” COMMENTARY ON ACTS Albert Barnes says, “he witnessed the extraordinary effects, the power of speaking in a miraculous manner, etc.” NOTES ON THE BIBLE Adam Clarke says, “By hearing these speak with different tongues and work miracles.” ACTS OF THE APOSTLES Matthew Henry says, “that the gift of the Holy Ghost was conferred upon them; for, upon the use of this sign, they received the Holy Ghost, and spoke with tongues.” COMMENTARY ON THE WHOLE BIBLE However, after all us said and done, this is not what the text says. That something was surely seen by Simon cannot be denied, but that such a sight is the point of the text, I emphatically deny. If that was intended to be the case, the Spirit would have spoken precisely, as he did of Paul’s experience with the Ephesians disciples (Acts 19:6).

The fact of the matter is that there are two records – and only two – of the giving of the Holy Spirit being associated with the laying on of hands. In both cases, the hands were those of an apostle or apostles. Ananias did put his hands on Saul, saying, “Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost” (Acts 9:17). However, no details are given about Saul receiving the Holy Spirit.

In this text, the point being drawn out is the corruption that was in the heart of Simon, and how the Lord responds to carnal assessments. The way in which heaven responds to an incorrect analysis of Divine working, is reason enough for us to zealously avoid falling into such a trap.

THE POINT OF THIS TEXT

The point of this text is not to establish that a certain procedure was followed by the apostles for the conferment of the Holy Spirit. That is error that Simon made, and it is certainly not fitting for us to make the same error. While the giving of the Spirit is a common experience for all believers, it is not always reported in the same manner. Nowhere is the receiving of the Holy Spirit confined to the reception of miraculous powers – nowhere. Nowhere is it taught that the apostles had power to transmit miraculous abilities and gifts by the laying on of hands. In His commission to His disciples, Jesus told them they would “lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover” (Mk 16:18). He never told them they would confer either the Holy Spirit or spiritual powers by this means. My point in saying this is to draw attention to the manner in which Jesus shaped the thoughts of the apostles, and how the Holy Spirit shapes our thoughts in the various reports of Scripture.

In this text, the point being drawn out is the corruption that was in the heart of Simon, and how the Lord responds to carnal assessments. The way in which heaven responds to an incorrect analysis of Divine working, is reason enough for us to zealously avoid falling into such a trap. No religious doctrine of tradition is valuable enough to risk the reproach, and possible rejection of the Almighty.

Suffice it to say, when God actually works within an individual, there will be some outward indication of that work. The form that the indication takes is determined by heaven, not men. That it is not always the same is confirmed in the reports of the various conversions in the book of Acts. Scarcely any two of them are identically the same.

- The day of Pentecost, when the people “gladly received the Word”, and “were baptized.” 3,000 souls “were added” to the disciples. There is no record of them receiving the Spirit (Acts 2:37-42).

- At Solomon’s porch, when the number of men who believed “was about five thousand.” There is no record of them receiving the Spirit (Acts 3:19; 4:4).

- After Ananias and Sapphira were judged, when “believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women.” There is no record of them receiving the Spirit (Acts 5:14).

- At Samaria, where the people “believed Philip preaching,” and “were baptized, both men and women.” In this case they are said to have received the Spirit after they were baptized (Acts 8:5-17).

- The Ethiopian eunuch, believed, confessed Jesus was “the Son of God,” and was baptized. There is no record of him receiving the Spirit (Acts 8:27-39).

- Saul of Tarsus, who arose, and was baptized, washing away his sins, and calling upon the name of the Lord. No account is given of him receiving the Spirit (Acts 9:16-18; 22:16).

- The household of Cornelius, who received the Holy Spirit, and was commanded to be baptized with water. Here they received the Spirit, before they were baptized (Acts 10:44-48).

The only thing consistent in them all is the preaching of the Word of God, the believing of the recipients, and their willingness to do what was required of them, including being baptized.

When Peter reported the conversion of the household of Cornelius, he said that God “gave them the like gift as He did unto us, “who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ” (Acts 11:17). The people hearing the report concluded that “God also hath granted to the Gentiles repentance unto life” (Acts 11:18).

- Results of the preaching of Barnabas, and “much people was added unto the Lord.” There is no mention of them being baptized or receiving the Spirit (Acts 11:24).

- The deputy of the Isle of Pathos, who “believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.” There is no mention of him being baptized or receiving the Holy Spirit (Acts 13:6-12).

- Those who believed in Iconium, where “a great multitude of Jews and also of the Greeks believed.” There is no mention of them receiving the Holy Spirit (Acts 14:1-3).

- In Antioch of Pisidia, after hearing the preaching of Paul, it is written that “when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.” There is no record of them being baptized or receiving the Spirit (Acts 13:48).

- The household of Lydia, “whose heart the Lord opened,” resulting in her attending to the word of Paul and being baptized, There is no mention of her and her household receiving the Holy Spirit (Acts 16:14-15).

- The Philippi an jailor, who was told to “believe on the name of the Lord Jesus Christ,” heard the word of the Lord preached, and “was baptized the same hour of the night.” There is no mention of him receiving the Holy Spirit (Acts 16:30-34).

- In a synagogue of Thessalonica, “some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas, including a “great multitude” of “devout Greeks,” and “of the chief women not a few.” There is no record of them believing or being baptized (Acts 17:4).

- In a Berean synagogue, the people were “more noble than those of Thessalonica,” receiving the word “with all readiness of mind,” and searching the Scriptures “daily, whether those things were so.” Many of them “believed; also of honorable women which were Greeks, and of men, nor a few.” There is no record of them being baptized or receiving the Spirit (Acts 17:11-12).

- In Athens, after hearing Paul, “certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.” There is no record of them being baptized or receiving the Spirit (Acts 17:34)

- In Corinth, “Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized.” There is no record of them receiving the Spirit (Acts 18:8).

- The disciples at Ephesus, who were told they were to believe on Christ Jesus, , and were “baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.” Paul then laid his hands on them, the Holy Spirit came upon them, and they “spoke with tongues and prophesied” (Acts 19:1-7).

- The book of Acts concludes by reporting that Paul, while a prisoner, was appointed a day when many came to his lodging. He “expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening. And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not.” There is no record of them being baptized or receiving the Spirit (Acts 28:23-24).

If the purpose of the inspired record is to provide a crystallized view of the working of the Lord, these accounts would all have been similar. The only thing consistent in them all is the preaching of the Word of God, the believing of the recipients, and their willingness to do what was required of them, including being baptized.

However, if you were to take these reports and seek to develop a doctrine concerning receiving the Holy Spirit, you would have a great deal of difficulty. The reason for this circumstance is that they were not written for that purpose. If you want to know the doctrine concerning receiving the Spirit, you must turn to the apostolic doctrine. There, with remarkable consistency, HOW to receive the Spirit is not the point. The teaching is that those in Christ HAVE the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:9,15,23; 1 Cor 2:12; 6:19; Gal 3:14; Heb 6:4), and that they have Him because He was “given” to them (2 Cor 1:22; 5:5; 1 Thess 4:8; 1 John 3:24; 4:13). The emphasis is then placed on His function within the individual believer, and the body of Christ as well (Rom 8:13-14, 26-27; 1 Cor 6:11; 12:7; 2 Cor 3:18; Gal 5:5,18,22; 6:8; Eph 2:22; 4:3; 5:9;

Sometimes, when it serves His purpose, that cause is expounded. Other times, we are not provided such details. Precisely why the apostles prayed that these believers might receive the Holy Spirit simply narrows down to the fact that they had not yet received the Spirit.

6:17; 2 Thess 2:13; 1 Pet 1:2,22).

SOMETHING WE MUST LEARN

It is imperative that the people of God learn to put their faith in God, who works all things after the counsel of His will (Eph 1:11). We know from revelation that the Lord does nothing without a cause (Ezek 14:23). Sometimes, when it serves His purpose, that cause is expounded. Other times, we are not provided such details. Precisely why the apostles prayed that these believers might receive the Holy Spirit simply narrows down to the fact that they had not yet received the Spirit. We are not told why this circumstance existed, and for that reason we must walk softly through the text, gleaning what it is obvious is intended for us to learn.

If you can be content with this kind of approach, you will gain much from the text. If you are not content with it, you will come away with a lot of questions.

HE OFFERED THEM MONEY

“ 18b . . . he offered them money, 19 Saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.”

We are now introduced to a new Satanic initiative. In this, not only is the corruption of an individual seen, but there is also an attempt of the wicked one to corrupt the apostles themselves. He will hold before Peter and John the opportunity to gain wealth, which we already know they did not possess. It was at the Gate Beautiful that Peter plainly said to a man who was seeking alms, “Silver and gold have I none” (Acts 3:6). Now, some time has passed, and Peter and John are away from Jerusalem. We do not know what resources they had, or if they had any at all. Here, however, is a bold initiative by the wicked one to set the opportunity for wealth before them. The response will reveal who they are, as well as who Simon was.

“ 18b . . . he offered them money . . .” Other versions read , “made them an offering of money,” BBE “he offered them money to buy the power,” NLT “ brought before them money,” YLT “he brought money and offered it to them,” AMPLIFIED and “he brought money .” CEV

Now Simon turns his attention from Philip, whom he had been following, to Peter and John. All three of these men – Peter, John, and Philip – represented and preached the same Christ. Simon, however, does not have Christ on his mind at this time. He has seen something that he wants, and he is willing to pay for it. He has also incorrectly assessed both the character and the motives of Peter and John.

The wording of the text indicates that he had money with him, and set it before Peter and John, strongly appealing to the lust he surmised they had. The word “offered” is translated from the Greek word prosh,negken (prosa-neg-ken), which lexically means, “to bring to,” THAYER “hand something to someone,” FRIBERG and “to bring something into the presence of someone.” LOUW-NIDA Simon did not simply say, “I will give you” this or that. Rather, he held the gift out before the faces of Peter and John, appealing to the covetousness he assumed they had.

This was the kind of offer Gehazi, the servant of Elijah could not resist. When Elijah refused a gift from Naaman the Syrian, Gehazi ran eagerly after it (2 Kgs 5:22-24). Likewise, Balaam chose to prophesy for wages, being eager to gain money for his services (Num 22:5-7; 2 Pet 2:15). Judas also “covenanted” with the enemies of Jesus to betray Him into their hands for “thirty pieces of silver” (Matt 26:15) – an agreement which he lived to sorely regret.

During the latter part of his life, Peter himself solemnly admonished elders to fulfill their ministry “not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind,” or with eagerness (1 Pet 5:2).

But Simon assumes that Peter and John are much like himself, and he approaches them as though that was true. In this, his own ignorance of the ways of God are made known, for he who employs improper means does because of an improper understanding.

GIVE ME THIS POWER

“ 19 Saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.” Other versions read, “ Give this authority to me as well, so that everyone on whom I lay my hands may receive the Holy Spirit,” NASB “give me also this ability,” NIV “so that anyone ,” NRSV “when I put my hands on anyone he may get the Holy Spirit ,” BBE “whoever I place my hands on,” CJB and “so that when I lay my hands on people, they will receive the Holy Spirit .” LIVING

Here is the first revelation of the sin of emulation, which is one of “the works of the flesh” (Gal 5:22). By definition, “emulation” is “an envious or contentious rivalry, jealousy,” THAYER “set one’s heart on” – in this case, what is possessed by someone else, FRIBERG “have or show a great interest in . . . covet,” UBS and “eager rivalry, zealous imitation.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

We are not to associate the Holy Spirit only with particular aptitudes, but with the One who gives Him, and the basic reason for Him dwelling within us. When we allow our minds to be diverted from these fundamental considerations, we become more liable to error and distraction.

It is interesting to note that Simon does not ask the apostles to lay their hands on him, that he might receive the Holy Spirit. Thus, the holy and Divinely directed deeds of the apostles brought out the avarice, or covetousness, that was in Simon. What was a blessing to others, proved to be the means of discovering the corruption that was in this man.

Note also, that what is sought is to obtain the power to cause men to receive the Holy Spirit, not for men receive gifts conferred by the Holy Spirit. I do understand that men assume that is what Simon meant, but that is not what he is reported to have said – and we must confine the basis of our reasoning to the text itself.

Let me remind you once again, that this is the only account in all of Scripture where any of the twelve apostles prayed that men might receive the Holy Spirit, laying their hands on them to that end. The only other instance of the Holy Spirit being given to any persons in any sense is when Paul laid his hands on the Ephesians disciples, and they received the Holy Spirit (Acts 19:1-6). That is hardly enough Scriptural substance to formulate an elaborate doctrine concerning the conferment of miraculous gifts. We are categorically told that the Spirit confers gifts according to His own will (1 Cor 12:6-11). These gifts are not always the same. Those dispensed in the church in Rome were not identical with those dispensed in Corinth (Rom 12:1-6 and 1 Cor 12 and 14). The ones mentioned in Ephesus were not the same as those mentioned in Rome (Rom 12:1-6 and Eph 4:8-11). The ones in Galatia were not the same as the ones in Ephesus (Eph 4:8-11 and Gal 3:1-3). Peter’s approach to such gifts stands in a category by itself (1 Pet 4:10-11). These observations should free men from the tendency to codify the working of the Lord.

Suffice it to say, the Lord is the Head of the church, and the Holy Spirit is the Administrator of the gifts Jesus determines for it. We are not to associate the Holy Spirit only with particular aptitudes, but with the One who gives Him, and the basic reason for Him dwelling within us. When we allow our minds to be diverted from these fundamental considerations, we become more liable to error and distraction.

The manner in which Peter responds to the offer of Simon should contribute significantly to how we think about this subject. It should be obvious that speculation and human opinion concerning the working of the Holy Spirit is extremely dangerous ground.

The room of supposition is a place where men can be excluded from the benefits of the Lord. Care must be taken not to occupy such a place. This will be clearly confirmed in Peter’s inspired and instant response to Simon.

A DISCERNMENT OF THE MANNER OF THE KINGDOM

“ 20 But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money.”

Some things are wrong simply because they conflict with the manner of the Kingdom. There does not need to be any other reason. If anything is not according to the ways of the Lord, that makes the thing wrong. Thus God pronounced judgment upon Israel simply because their thoughts and ways were not like His (Isa 55:8-9). In our day, this way of thinking is foreign within the professed church. Ordinarily, wrong thinking is associated with the violation of a specific word or commandment from the Lord. There is, however, a manner, or approach, that is unlike that of God, and for that reason alone, the manner is wrong. This is why we are admonished to be “followers of God as dear children” (Eph 5:2). This involves more than being obedient to commandments. It also involves the putting on of “the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him” (Col 3:10), as well as putting off “the old man,” which is thoroughly corrupt.

This also includes loving righteousness and hating iniquity, as well as keeping and obeying the commandments and fulfilling the righteousness of the Law.

THY MONEY PERISH WITH THEE!

“But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee . . .” Other versions read, “May your silver perish with you,” NASB “May your money come to destruction with you ,” BBE “Your silver go to ruin – and you with it,” CJB “Keep thy money to thyself, to perish with thee,” DOUAY “Thy money go with thee to perdition ,” MRD “May your silver be lost forever , and you with it,” NJB “Thy silver with thee – may it be to destruction ,” YLT “You and your money should both be destroyed ,” IE “Your money go to perdition with you,” WILLIAMS “Destruction overtake your money and you,” AMPLIFIED “ To hell with you and your money ! PHILLIPS “May your silver be with you in perdition ,” ALT “You and your money will both end up in hell ,” CEV and “May you and your money both go to hell .” GNB

This is one of the strong responses of the Spirit to people with ignoble motives. Peter’s response is instant, straight to the point, and without any ambiguity. He does not separate the sin from the sinner, or the material from the immaterial, but consigns both the man and his money to perish – or to perdition. The word “perish” is translated from a word meaning “utter destruction,” THAYER “utter ruin, complete loss,” FRIBERG “hell,” UBS “annihilation,” LEH and “eternal destruction.” GINGRICH It employed several times in Scripture.

- Matthew 7:13 – The “broad” way that leads “to destruction .”
- Romans 9:22 – Vessels of wrath “fitted to destruction .”
- 1 Timothy 6:9 – The rich who fall into many “foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in perdition .”
- Hebrews 10:39 – Drawing back to “ perdition .”
- 2 Peter 2:1 – False prophets who deny the Lord, bringing upon themselves “swift destruction .”
- 2 Peter 3:16 – Those who are unstable, wresting the Scriptures “unto their own destruction .”
- Revelation 17:8,11 – A foe of the Christ described as “the beast,” who is destined to “go into perdition .”

There can be no doubt that Peter’s words are referring to a state of condemnation, not merely one of temporal judgment or chastisement. Knowing nothing of the imagination that sin is separated from the sinner, Peter joins Simon's vice with his person. Both his silver and his person would be consigned to destruction, unless he repented of his wickedness. Being filled with the Spirit, Peter responds instantly and without any question about the transgression that Simon has committed. His aim at this point was not to recover Simon, but to soundly rebuke him. If he was to be recovered, his sin cannot be addressed incorrectly, but with words that can be employed by the Holy Spirit.

Such sins are not innocent, and must not be treated as though they were nothing more than a hasty word or thoughtless deed. They represent the flesh in an aggressive stance, and reveal that the individual is in the grip of the wicked one.

There are some sins that are so serious they cannot be addressed gently. Not only do they reveal the depths into which the transgressor has sunk, they are also especially contaminating. There can be no doubt concerning their seriousness. In them the truth has been maligned, and God Himself has been reproached. Such sins are not innocent, and must not be treated as though they were nothing more than a hasty word or thoughtless deed. They represent the flesh in an aggressive stance, and reveal that the individual is in the grip of the wicked one. Furthermore, those who deal with such transgressions must have spiritual insight. They cannot come against such Satanic initiatives with some form of procedures or lifeless methodology.

Other Examples

This is not the only place where such harsh denunciations have been recorded. There are several of them in Scripture, Perhaps recalling a few of them will confirm the Divine nature toward those who are driven by base motives. This is something that has been greatly obscured by the preoccupation of the modern church with lesser things.

- JESUS TO THE SCRIBES AND PHARISEES. "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" (Matt 23:33).

- PAUL, CONCERNING THOSE WHO MISRPRESENTED HIM. "And not rather, (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) Let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just" (Rom 3:8).

- CONCERNING THOSE WHO FORSOOK CHRIST FOR PERSONAL GRATIFICATION. "Having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith" (1 Tim 5:12).

- RELIGIOUS CHARLATANS. "And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not" (2 Pet 2:3).

- TO THOSE WHO REJECTED AND BLASPHEMED AGAINST THE GOSPEL. "Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles" (Acts 13:46).

- TO PROFESSING BELIEVERS WHO WERE IN LOVE WITH THE WORLD. "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God" (James 4:4).

From the text with which we are dealing (Acts 8:20), together with the other texts I have cited, several things are confirmed.

- It is serious beyond description to be driven by the flesh.
- Sin in any form has the potential of damning the soul.

The thought process of men must be sanctified with the truth, else they will tend in the wrong direction.

Within the body of Christ, there is to be zero-tolerance of sin.

- Transgression must always be approached in a state of utmost sobriety.
- When dealing with sinners who have made a profession of faith, the approach must be accompanied by an absolute hatred of sin – “hating even the garment spotted by the flesh” (Jude 1:23).
- There is no satisfactory explanation for sin, and therefore no accounting for it is to be sought.

How Sin Has Been Dealt With Thusfar

Thus far in the book of Acts, a certain approach to sin has been made known. It reflects a Kingdom manner than is worthy of note. Notice how specifically sin has been identified.

- Judas: “Guide to them that took Jesus” (1:16); “by transgression fell that he might go to his own place” (1:25).
- Crucifixion of Jesus: “ye have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain” (2:23); “this same Jesus whom ye have crucified” (2:36); “His Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go” (3:13); “But ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you; and killed the prince of life” (Acts 3:14-15); “Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified” (4:10); “ye slew and hanged on a tree” (5:30).
- The rejection of Jesus by the leaders of the people: “This is the Stone which was set at nought of you builders” (4:11); “For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together” (4:27).
- The Sin of Ananias and Sapphira: “Satan filled thy heart to lie to the Holy Ghost” (5:3); “thou hast not lied unto men but unto God” (5:4); “How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord?” (5:9).
- The Jewish Council for Rejecting the Gospel: “Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost” (7:51).

Now, Peter will again speak with unquestionable specificity concerning the sin of Simon.

BECAUSE

“ . . . because thou hast thought . . .” Other versions read, “you thought,” NIV “you had the idea,” BBE “for thinking,” CJB “hast supposed,” MRD “you have imagined,” WEYMOUTH and “for even dreaming.” WILLIAMS

Sin is not committed out of a mere impulse – something that is irrational and independent of thought. Before a sin can be committed, some thought must be devoted to what is to be done. The thought is not necessarily an extended one, but what is done is first, in some way, brought to mind. This is done to justify the deed before it is committed – whether it is Eve considering the forbidden fruit (Gen 3:6), or Uzzah putting forth his hand to stop the ark of the covenant from falling to the ground (2 Sam 6:6).

Therefore, Peter goes to the root of the sin of Simon. It was not what he said that is first rebuked, but what he thought.

THE ROLE OF THOUGHTS

The thought process of men must be sanctified with the truth, else they will tend in the wrong direction. Thoughts accounted for the condition of humanity during the days of Noah, when God determined to destroy all flesh, except for Noah and those who were with him. “And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually” (Gen 6:5). David also traced the unacceptability of the wicked to their thoughts: “The wicked, through the pride of his countenance, will not seek after God: God is not in all his thoughts ” (Psa 10:4). When God denounced Israel for their waywardness, he brought up the matter of their thoughts. “For my thoughts are not your thoughts , neither are your ways my ways, saith the LORD” (Isa 55:8).

This is involved in the Solomonic expression, “Commit thy works unto the LORD, and thy thoughts shall be established ” (Prov 16:3). This is why David prayed, “Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O LORD, my Strength, and my Redeemer” (Psa 19:14).

When the professing church “turns away their ears from the truth” (2 Tim 4:4), there is no way to avoid corrupt and degenerate thinking. This is precisely what has given rise to the groundswell of iniquity within the Christian community. We do not need a battery of counselors, motivators, and psychological diagnosticians to correct this condition. In fact, such an approach will only exacerbate the situation. The truth must be made to shine upon the situation. In so doing, it will be properly defined, and a godly manner of thinking will be promoted. That is what we are seeing lived out in this text.

THE GIFT OF GOD MAY BE PURCHASED

“ . . . that the gift of God may be purchased with money .” Other versions read, “could obtain ,” NASB “could buy ,” NIV “got for a price ,” BBE “can be bought ,” CJB “could acquire ,” NET “to possess ,” YLT and “to get .” LITV

Here “the gift of God” is the Spirit Himself, and not the ability to bring down the Spirit upon an individual by means of the laying on of hands. Peter was rebuking the thinking of Simon in two ways. First, the Spirit came upon the Samaritans because the apostles laid their hands upon them. The Spirit came from God, not from their hands. They were, in a sense, intermediaries in the matter, but the cause could not be traced to them, and Peter knew it. Simon had sought to purchase the power that would cause anyone on whom he laid his hands would receive the Holy Spirit. I do not think this is even the kind of power the apostles themselves had – that anyone on whom they placed their hands would receive the Holy Spirit. The authority given to them did not extend that far. Jesus was the Head, not them. Their will was subject to His will.

Nowhere is the cause for the gift of the Spirit traced to the apostles. The household of Cornelius received the Holy

When once it is recognized that the gift itself came from God, the means through which it was given becomes incidental. In this case, Peter and John were simply in accord with the Divine agenda and manner of working.

Spirit without the imposition of apostolic hands. That case alone confirms what I have said. It was not received from apostolic hands, but from God. The Spirit is categorically said to be “from God” (1 Cor 2:12). He is the One who “sent” the Spirit into our hearts (Gal 4:6). He is the One who has “given unto us His Holy Spirit” (1 Thess 4:8). The Spirit is described as He whom God “hath given us” (1 John 3:24; 4:13; Acts 5:32; 2 Cor 5:5).

Even if we direct our thinking to the matter of spiritual gifts (which is not the subject of our text), their source is Deity, not humanity – not even empowered humanity (1 Cor 12:4-11,18,28).

In their zeal to establish that the uniqueness of what took place in Samaria, and in Aphasis (Acts 19), some have introduced a foreign mode of reasoning. By tracing the source of the of these unusual occurrences to the hands of the apostles, they have actually led men into a wrong way of thinking. Whatever they may conceive to have been conferred on the Samaritans, they have exalted the means above the Source and cause. When once it is recognized that the gift itself came from God, the means through which it was given becomes incidental. In this case, Peter and John were simply in accord with the Divine agenda and manner of working. They did not decide to do this on their own. It was rather the result of where Jesus had placed them in the body, and what He was doing in Samaria. Although it may be difficult for some to let the matter rest there, it seems to me that we are obliged to do so for the sake of God's glory.

Now, Simon has attempted to wedge “the flesh” into the working of the Lord. Peter knew this was altogether wrong, and was actually nothing more than an expression of wickedness. It was not simply an error in judgment, but was rather the result of being at variance with the Lord.

Here is a classic example of someone whose thoughts and ways were not those of the Lord (Isa 55:8-9). This accounts for the unusual strength with which Peter now speaks.

THE EXCLUSION OF SIMON

“ 21a Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter”

Remember, these words are being said to a person who has believed and been baptized. Nothing thus far has suggested that Simon was not sincere at the time. If it is true that the report of Simon obeying the Gospel was genuine, then Peter will address him as someone who has fallen, rather than one who never was identified with Christ. The fact that Peter has told Simon to pray to God concerning what he has done confirms that this is, in fact, the case. There is no record of anyone outside of Christ being counseled to pray for forgiveness.

HAVING NO PART NOR LOT

“Thou hast neither part nor lot. . .” Other versions read, “ no part,” NASB and “ any share .” GWN

This is the language of Divine distribution – as when Canaan was divided “b y lot.” Each of the twelve tribes were given a portion of the land. As it is written, “Notwithstanding the land shall be divided by lot: according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they shall inherit” (Num 26:55). This corresponds with the kind of spiritual allotments that take place within the body of Christ. Concerning the various roles that are found in the church, the allotment is described in these words: “But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased Him” (1 Cor 12:18). Viewed from the standpoint of HOW this ministry is carried out, it is described in these words: “God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office” (Rom 12:3-4). If we consider this distribution from the standpoint of responsibility, the members are said to be “stewards of the manifold grace of God” (1 Pet 4:10).

What Peter is saying is that Simon is asking for something that does not belong to him. Christ, the Head of the body, has made no provision for him to function in the capacity it imagines he can purchase with money.

What Peter is saying is that Simon is asking for something that does not belong to him. Christ, the Head of the body, has made no provision for him to function in the capacity it imagines he can purchase with money. Simon has done the very thing Paul warned against: “not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think ; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith” (Rom 12:3).

Simon has sought to occupy a place in the body of Christ for which he is not qualified. His thinking has extended into an area not intended for him. Heaven has made no provision for him to even think in this manner. Various ministries or offices within the body of Christ are not available to all people, and they are not to be approached as though they were. When asked to position some of His disciples at His right and left hand, Jesus Himself once told His disciples, “to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father” (Matt 20:23).

THIS MATTER

“ . . . in this matter” Other versions read, “this ministry ,” NIV “in this,” NRSV “this business ,” BBE “this faith ,” MRD “this thing ,” YLT “in this work ,” IE and “in this word .” EMTV

In the “matter” of being used as an intermediary for the conference of the Holy Spirit, no place had been made for Simon. One might ask how it was that Simon did not know this. We know from Simon’s request that it was not driven by an honest quest to be used by God. He was driven by the unlawful spirit of emulation, and was seeking to intrude into an area from which he had been excluded. His request would be on the same par as asking for authority to be an apostle – number thirteen, so to speak. This simply could not be, for such positions could only be occupied by those who were chosen and ordained by Jesus for those offices.

Professional Religion

Since the dawn of “The Age of Enlightenment” (1793), and with the consequent inordinate exaltation of human reason, the church itself was inundated with a flood of carnal reasoning. Textual Criticism was dignified in this new environment, and approaches to various ministries were modified. They were now linked more with education than with Divine placement, and with training as opposed to being a steward of the manifold grace of God. Commensurate with this religious shift, the knowledge of Scripture itself began to wane, being displaced by a form of thinking that was in consonance with worldly patterns of thought. As one might expect, it was not long until the idea of religious careers gained a foothold in the professing church. All manner of ministries were developed that conformed to this new way of thinking. Instead of considering these professional activities within the context of the revealed purpose of God, they were placed within the setting of man-made agendas. Now, in distinction to ministering to the “body” of Christ, specialized ministries became prominent. In our time, men have become accustomed to hearing about “Youth Ministers,” “Singles’ Ministry,” “Senior’s Minister,” “Family Life Minister,” “Worship Minister,” and a host of others. Thus men have developed ministries that are not “for the profit of all,” as ALL of the ministries that Jesus has placed in His church (1 Cor 12:7). Most, if not all, of these functions are not intended to perfect the saints “for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ” (Eph 4:12).

The sin of Simon has been duplicated in our day – people are pressing to do a work for which no Divine allotment has been made.

Is this a serious matter, or has provision been made in the Divine economy for men to conceive and develop positions and activities within the body of Christ for which there are no revealed provision? While this is not something worthy of much contention, it seems to me that the fruit that has been produced by this initiative is reason enough to suspect it is antithetical to what the Lord is revealed to be doing in His church. I do not know that any person, however astute their powers of reason, can justify an activity that consistently tends downward, leaving in its wake an ignorance of both the Lord and His purpose. The condition of the modern church certainly justifies some serious

“And yet there are many who seek to ‘purchase’ the favor of God. Some do it by alms and prayers; some by penance and fasting; some by attempting to make their own hearts better, and by self-righteousness; and some by penitence and tears. All these will not ‘purchase’ his favor.” ALBERT BARNES: NOTES ON THE BIBLE thought on these matters. To be it very mildly, things are not ideal.

If it is countered that conditions have never been ideal, then the question must be asked if there is anything at all about salvation that tends downward, or allows for perpetual deficiency in those who are walking by faith. Is there anything about the redemption that is in Christ Jesus that tends downward, or is not fundamentally toward?

Is it possible that a departure from the faith has, in fact, occurred, and that men are really giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons (1 Tim 4:1)? Has a form of godliness replaced godliness itself? I mean, have such things taken place in those who once embraced the faith, only to later depart from it? The nature of spiritual life demand that we consider such possibilities.

Peter gets straight to the heart of the matter, so to speak. Simon’s request has revealed a fundamental flaw – one that was at the very core of his being. He was not right in the very area where regeneration does its primary work – in the heart. Moses foresaw that this was the area where God would especially work: “And the LORD thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live” (Deut 30:6). Ezekiel was given to see the heart as a place where significant change would take place. “A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh” (Ezek 36:26). Simon had been baptized, and baptism involves the heart. “But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you” (Rom 6:17). Simon had also believed, and believing involves the heart: “For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness” (Rom 10:10).

If the statement made concerning Simon’s response to the preaching of Christ is to be taken as it stands – “Simon himself believed also and he was baptized” – then what is said of such people must also be true of him. “Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently” (1 Pet 1:22). If what is said of Simon is intended to only refer to an outward and simulated response, then it casts a shadow of doubt on the statements concerning others believing and being baptized. This includes the rest of the Samaritans who are said to have believed and been baptized (8:12). These are also the two responses that will be found in the Ethiopian eunuch (8:37-38). These are the two responses attributed to the Philippian jailer (16:31-34). The same things are said of the Corinthians (18:8). Additionally, it would also mean that the words of Jesus Himself mean something other than what they affirm: “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved” (Mk 16:16).

It seems to me, therefore, that to say Luke’s report concerning Simon believing and being baptized meant nothing more than what he did was pretentious, cannot be supported. It would mean that Simon was said to believe when he really did not believe.

It seems to me, therefore, that to say Luke’s report concerning Simon believing and being baptized meant nothing more than what he did was pretentious, cannot be supported. It would mean that Simon was said to believe when he really did not believe.

Because I am not able to receive such an assessment, I will proceed under the assumption that Simon really did believe, and that his baptism was valid.

Something to be Seen

Considering that the report of Simon exactly represents his response to Philip's preaching, the seriousness of the charge leveled at Simon is accentuated. This would mean that he quenched the Spirit, hardened his heart, and did not resist the devil. He yielded to temptation after making a place for the devil to work. He did what Romans six commands the believers not to do. "Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin : but yield yourselves unto God , as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God . . . I speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness " (Rom 6:13,19).

Notice the detailed admonition to those who have been baptized into Christ.

- Do not yield your capacities as instruments of unrighteousness.
- Yield yourself unto God.
- Yield your capacities to righteousness.

In Simon we have a sterling example of someone who failed in these areas. This is important to note, because Peter is providing us an assessment of the condition. It is not necessary to say that such a person was never converted in the first place. Peter did not say that, but rather judged the circumstance at hand. He accounted for the sin by pointing out Simon's present condition. This is precisely how sin is to be assessed – in view of what took place. I will tell that such an approach would significantly alter how sin is being addressed in our time.

WHEN THE HEART IS NOT RIGHT

" . . . for thy heart is not right . . ." Other versions read, "your heart is crooked." CJB "heart is not upright ," DARBY " twisted in your thinking," GWN "your heart is warped ," NJB "your heart is not sincere ," WILLIAMS "your heart is all wrong . . . [it is not straightforward or right or true," AMPLIFIED and "your heart is not honest ." PHILLIPS

Solomon wisely said, "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life" (Prov 4:23). In Simon we have an example of someone who failed to do this. As a result, there was a decline in Simon's character. Because life is not lived in a vacuum, and there are opposing forces at work all around us, no one can afford to neglect keep their heart – keeping it in focus, and strengthening it with the good word of the Lord and prayer. The best of men need Divine assistance in this regard. David said it well when he prayed, "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts" (Psa 139:23).

The Complexity of Spiritual Life

At this point, come of the complexities of spiritual life surface. One might reason that because we receive a new heart, and the stony heart is removed, that the condition here described can only be said of someone who is not born again. However, the matter is not that simple. Consider the following, that was addressed to those who were in Christ.

- Some who were among the brethren in Rome were warned about having an unrepentant heart. "But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God” (Rom 2:5).

- Members of the body of Christ were admonished , “Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief , in departing from the living God” (Heb 3:12).

With an awareness of the danger of either over-simplifying or over- complicating the nature of spiritual life, I will endeavor to account for the possibility of falling away, as well as the necessity of keeping the faith.

A New Principle of Life

When we are born again, there is a very real newness of life that is introduced into our persons. This is a new principle of life , referred to as “the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus” (Rom 8:2). Considered from the standpoint of the human personality, it is “the new man, which was created according to God, in true righteousness and holiness” (Eph 4:24). This nature is incapable of sin (1 John 3:9, and the wicked one has no access to it (1 John 5:18). This is the part of the person that is “in Christ,” and in which Christ Himself is resident (2 Cor 5:18; Eph 3:17).

The New Creation

The “new creation” is a whole person in purpose, though while we are in this world, he is only partial. The fact that the body has not yet been redeemed is what makes the creation partial. When it is written that “old things have passed away” (2 Cor 5:17), it is evident that it does not mean that our bodies have passed away. It does mean that “the new man” places no value on the former things, nor does he desire them. It also means that the guilt for sins has passed away, and the conscience has been purged from dead works to serve the living God (Heb 9:14). The fact that believers are told the blood of Christ purged the conscience from dead works confirms that the conscience can still be polluted with the – even in those who have been born again. This pollution emits from “the old man,” who is very real, though not a part of the believer’s essential nature.

The Stony Heart

Similarly, when God is said to remove the “stony heart,” He does not mean there is no longer any liability of such a heart being found in us. Believers are solemnly warned, “But exhort one another daily, while it is called To day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin” (Heb 3:13). This liability is fostered by the presence of “the old man” which is very mucin active, even though he is crucified (Rom 6:6). Like the impenitent thief, he cries out from the cross, asking to be delivered from the restriction of the cross, which is intended to be the place where he dies (Lk 23:39). Simon let “the old man” off the cross, and he immediately went to work.

A Treasure In An Earthen Vessel

It is in this sense that we are said to have the “treasure” of the Divine nature in an “earthen vessel” (2 Cor 4:7). This is all by design, in order that to confirm that the “excellency of the power” is really of God.

We Remain in a Vile Body

The fact that we remain in a “vile body” (Phil 3:21), also referred to as “the body of this dead” (Rom 7:24), is what complicates our situation. There is also a mind and a heart that go with the body, and they are, in every sense, corrupt in the eyes of God. We are saddled with the presence of these degenerate parts of our makeup until we are liberated from the body. This circumstance is what produces the disconcerted inward war that is described in Romans 7:14-25.

Yield Your Members

The solemn commission given to every believer is to yield their “members,” or means of expression, to righteousness, and not to iniquity

The solemn commission given to every believer is to yield their “members,” or means of expression, to righteousness, and not to iniquity (Rom 6:13.16.19). In this case, both righteousness and iniquity have a voice that calls for our attention, and seeks the dominance. We can only yield to one of them at a time, and when we yield, they rule, compelling us to act in accordance with their nature.

An Evil Heart of Unbelief

It is precisely this condition that makes it possible for an “evil heart of unbelief” to enter into the a person who has believed and obeyed the Gospel (Heb 3:12). When the individual yields to the cries of “the law of sin and death” that is in his human constitution, an evil heart of unbelief is, as it were, loosed to enter and dominate the person so yielding.

The Solemn Exhortation

If the individual takes the warnings of the Spirit seriously, and does not quench or grieve that spirit, he will be able to resist these encroachments. This the admonition will be fulfilled, “Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour: whom resist steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world” (1 Pet 5:8-9).

In the case of Simon, he failed to yield his members to righteousness, quenched the Spirit, and therefore did not resist the devil. As a result, his heart was not right, but became corrupt because he gave heed to the wrong voice.

It was not even a matter of if he could fall or not. That is never really the issue, and men do greatly err in speaking as though it was. As long as we dwell in an unregenerate body, and possess within our human constitution the inveterate capacity to sin, it is insane to wonder whether or not we can fall. The very presence of an enemy or of an inimical nature confirms the possibility of such a thing. This is accented all the more when we perceive that faith is the only means by which we overcome the world, or are enabled to resist the devil (1 John 5:45; 1 Pet 2:9).

It should be so clear that no explanation is required, that the very presence of weakness removes any question about whether or not the believer is vulnerable. Admittedly, the vulnerability is not in “the new man,” or in the faith. However, it is in the part of our makeup that is united with our bodies – and that part remains with us as long as we are “in the body” (Heb 13:3).

An Absurdity to be Shunned

In view of this circumstance, it ought to be very clear to all of us how absurd it is to embrace a religion that places the emphasis upon the body – which is the very point of our vulnerability. When health, wealth, feelings, and appearances become the fundamental things, we are standing in the enemy’s camp, surrounded with foes we cannot possible overcome. There simply is no weaponry available to us to do battle in such an arena.

IN THE SIGHT OF GOD

“ . . . in the sight of God.” Other versions read, “ before God,” NASB “in the eyes of God,” CJB “God can see,” GWN and “ with God.” NLT

The phrase “in the sight of God” is a synonym for the way things really are. This is not a way of comparing what men think versus what God thinks. Rather, this is the way of arriving at the truthful conclusion. A heart, therefore, that is not right “in the sight of God” is a heart that is not right – period. It is a heart that is wrong in every sense of the word, and there is no chance that it is proper or will escape the judgment of God.

Peter knows Simon’s heart is not right in the sight of God because He knows God and has the mind of Christ. Peter himself has yielded properly, and therefore he thinks properly.

IS FALLING AWAY NECESSARILY PRECEDED BY A LONG PERIOD OF TIME?

Perhaps without intended to do so, men have thought that falling away, or departing from the faith, is preceded by a lengthy period of time. However this is not necessarily the case. In His parable concerning the sower, Jesus spoke of some seed that immediately sprouted, and broke through the soil. Yet, it did not bring forth the intended fruit. There were two different descriptions of such seed. Here is how he described it. “And some fell upon a rock; and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture. And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprang up with it, and choked it” (Luke 8:6-7). Unlike the seed that fell on the wayside, this seed actually sprouted, with genuine life showing itself. However, it was short-lived, because the conditions required for growth were not present. In His explanation of this parable, Jesus accounted for what happened. “They on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy ; and these have no root, which for a while believe , and in time of temptation fall away . And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection” (Luke 8:14).

Unlike the tares, who had no capacity to bring forth fruit, these people had a genuine beginning. Yet, because of a lack of depth, and the presence of competitive desires to which they yielded, they were not brought to a state of maturity, in which fruit could be produced for God (Rom 7:4).

Simon was in this category of people – particularly those who “in the time of temptation fall away.” Both the parable of Jesus and the incident of Simon confirm that newborn babes are not guaranteed protection from the wicked one. They are expected to grow, gaining spiritual depth, and resisting the temptations that they encounter. Simon failed in this regard.

One of the reasons for Simon’s failure was the extent of his former involvements with the wicked one. He was a sorcerer, who engaged in what might be called “the depths of Satan” (Rev 2:14). Because of this, he should have given all the more attentiveness to advancing in the faith, and growing up into Christ in all things. This was owing to the depth of his former involvement in sin. Instead, he was taken up in a quest for the miraculous, and a desire to emulate those who had been given a higher place in the Kingdom. These propensities actually allowed “the old man” to be removed from the cross, so to speak. It loosed the part of him that we intended to be controlled.

Those in Christ are to yield themselves to the Lord in the same measure as they formerly yielded themselves to the wicked one. Here is how it is stated in Scripture. “I speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness ” (Rom 6:19). A person who came from a life of moral depravity cannot enter into Christ casually. One who gave himself wholeheartedly to sin cannot give himself halfheartedly to the Lord.

If one’s religion is less demanding than sin, there is no hope that a person can survive. That is why it is imperative that people live by faith, walking in the Spirit and in fellowship with Christ. If they allow the entrance of competitive desires, however noble they may appear, the devil will gain a foothold in their lives. This can take place early in the life of the believer, as it did with Simon. For him, however, it was not being involved in a weak religion. Rather, it was obtaining a carnal view of true religion.

WHAT TO DO WHEN WICKED SURFACES

“ 22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee.”

When unusual wickedness surfaces in a believer, how is it to be addressed? Paul says, “Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted ” (Gal 6:1). Jude gives a similar warning. “And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh” (Jude 1:23). The “fear” of reference is found in the one pulling the transgressor out of the fire. The point is that this is not a work for novices and the naive. There is a certain liability attached to the rescue of those who are especially deep in sin. This will be detected in the manner in which Peter speaks, as well as the words he employs. He will place the responsibility for recovery squarely upon the shoulders of the transgressor. There will be grace to do what is said, to be sure. However, a hearty effort will be required from those who did not think enough of Jesus to abide in him.

REPENTING OF WICKEDNESS

“Repent therefore of this thy wickedness . . .” Other versions read, “Let your heart be changed ,” BBE “Do penance,” DOUAY “ change your wicked thoughts,” GWN “reform,” YLT “ turn from this,” LIVING “ change your heart,” IE “Repent of this depravity and wickedness ,” AMPLIFIED and “ get rid of these evil thoughts.” CEV

The word “repent” is very strong. It speaks of something that must be achieved. Grace will be required to do it, but it must be done. Coming from the Greek word Metano,hsion (meta-no-a-son), the word has this meaning: “to change one’s mind for the better, heartily to amend with abhorrence of one’s past sins,” THAYER “change one’s mind, be converted,” FRIBERG “have a change of heart, turn from one’s sins, change one’s ways,” UBS “to change one’s way of life as the result of a complete change of thought and attitude with regard to sin and righteousness,” LOUA-NIDA and “to change one’s mind or purpose.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

Repentance is something that must be done. It is not an option that can be ignored with impunity. Two times Jesus said, “Except ye repent, ye shall all, likewise perish” (Luke 13:3,5).

There is no room for opinion here, and there is absolutely no leniency in the matter. This is the reason for the new birth, or new creation, or being made new. It is to remove one from the category of people for whom there is no hope.

Here is the situation. The unrighteous will not inherit the Kingdom of God. The people of God are to be made aware of this unalterable circumstance. As it is written, “Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God ? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God” (1 Cor 6:9-10). Lest there be any doubt about this, it is stated that those who continue to engage in such activities will, in fact, be finally excluded from the Kingdom of God. “Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry: for which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience ” (Col 3:5-6). There is no room for opinion here, and there is absolutely no leniency in the matter. This is the reason for the new birth, or new creation, or being made new. It is to remove one from the category of people for whom there is no hope. That is the first circumstance of which all men are to be made aware: the unrighteous are altogether excluded, whoever they are. They must be removed from that category so that they can no longer be described as such.

Secondly, holiness is an unalterable requirement. As it is written, “Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord ” (Heb 12:14). Holiness is a quality or trait that must permeate the whole of life. Again it is written, “But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation ; because it is written, Be ye holy ; for I am holy” (1 Pet 1:15-16). Again, this is not a suggestion, or a goal toward which we are to work. I do not believe this has registered upon the conscience of the modern church. This is largely owing to the absence of solid teaching on this subject. These days, sin is too easily excused, and a sort of carnal sympathy is being generated for those who have offended God, transgressed His Law, and chosen their own way over His.

By the grace of God, provision has been made for these requirements to be fully met by those who believe. The grace of God tutors us in both of these areas – no longer being unrighteous, and being holy. “For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works” (Titus 2:11-14).

There is a grand overview of God’s “so great salvation” (Heb 2:3).

- The grace of God brings salvation to us, putting it within the reach of faith.
- This salvation is made available to all men.
- Grace effectively teaches us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, so that we can avoid being unrighteous.
- Grace also effectively instructs us how to love in a state of spiritual alertness, being righteous in our manner of life, and godlike in our persons.
- All of this enables us to please God while we are in this present world.
- Grace also teaches us to maintain a posture of life in which we are constantly anticipating the coming of the Lord.
- The Lord for whom grace teaches us to look, is the One who redeemed us from all iniquity, purifying us for Himself, in order that He might have a people for Himself who are zealous to do good works. In other words, they are no longer unrighteous, but are holy.

These blessed provisions are what sin among the people of God so serious. In His loving mercy, the Lord has provided a way to “sin not” (1 John 2:1). After all of the explanations have been given for committing sin, a sense of remorse must grip the heart. This is because the individual has trampled over Jesus to sin, and despised the blood of the covenant. He has resisted the Holy Spirit who devoted to enabling us to mortify the deeds of the body as He leads us into holiness (Rom 8:13-14).

Peter will now address Simon in strict keeping with the nature of his sin, as well as the provisions that were made available to him when he believed and was baptized. He has called upon him to repent of his “wickedness” – to see it for what it is, and to have a sense of deep remorse and regret that he has ever made such a request. But that is just a beginning. He must then petition God for forgiveness.

PRAY TO GOD

“ . . . and pray God . . . ” Other versions read, “pray God,” NKJV “pray the Lord,” NASB “pray to the Lord ,” NIV “ make prayer to God,” BBE “ supplicate the Lord,” DARBY “pray God,” GENEVA “ ask the Lord,” GWN “ entreat of God,” MRD “ beseech God,” YLT “ pray earnestly to God,” PHILLIPS “ implore God,” ALT “ask God,” CEV and “ make petition to God.” EMTV

There are several different words from which the word “pray” is translated in Scripture.

- Colossians 1:9 (proseuco,menoi – pros-ux-omen-oi). The lexical meaning of this word is “to offer prayers,” THAYER , or “speak to God.” FRIBERG This is used for general petitions – like seeking benefits for others, of the giving of thanks.

- 2 Corinthians 13:7 (Euvco,mai – eux-o-mai). Its lexical meaning is to “desire” something from God that is strongly desired. THAYER/FRIBERG

- 1 John 5:16 (evrwth,sh l – ero-taa-saa). The lexical meaning of this word is to “request, entreat, beg, of beseech.” THAYER “ask, inquire, question.” FRIBERG

Here the word is different. The Greek word is deh,qhti (dea-tha-ti). Its lexical meaning is especially strong: “to want, or lack something that is strongly desired; to ask, bed,” THAYER “to ask urgently, seek . . . plead, ask in prayer,” FRIBERG “implore,” UBS “to ask with urgency, with the implication of presumed need.” LOUW-NIDA

As used in this text, “pray” means to earnestly seek for something that is not presently possessed, yet which the petitioner knows must be owned. In other words, sin has ruptured the individuals relationship to God, and they are fervently seeking to restore that relationship. This can only be accomplished if offended party, the Living God, remits the sin, and the offending party, Simon, is made conscious of that forgiveness.

An example of this kind of prayer is found in the fifty-first Psalm. This is David’s prayer following his sin with Bathsheba – a transgression that greatly displeased the Lord. As it is written, “But the thing that David had done displeased the Lord” (2 Sam 11:27). When David was made aware of his, his heart smote him, and he prayed the words contained in the fifty-first Psalm. They provide a sort of index into what is involved in seeking forgiveness from the Lord.

- A plea for the Lord to have mercy: “Have mercy upon me, O God, according to Thy lovingkindness” (51:1a).

- Remove the sin: “According to Thy tender mercies, blot out my transgressions” (51:1b).

- A complete cleaning: “Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin” (51:2).

- An acknowledgment of the offence: “For I acknowledge my transgressions: and my sin is ever before me” (Psa 51:3).

In other words, sin has ruptured the individuals relationship to God, and they are fervently seeking to restore that relationship.

An admission that the sin was against God Himself: “Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in Thy sight” (51:4a).

- A confession that God would, in fact, be vindicated: “that Thou mightest be justified when Thou speakest, and be clear when Thou judgest” (51:4b).

- An admission of a natural bent to sin: “Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me” (Psa 51:5).

- The confession that God desires truth to be found in the inner part of men: “Behold, Thou desirest truth in the inward parts: and in the hidden part Thou shalt make me to know wisdom” (51:6).

- Another petition to be made completely clean: “Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean: wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow” (51:7).

- A restoration to Divine favor: “Make me to hear joy and gladness; that the bones which Thou hast broken may rejoice” (51:8).

- A third petition for thorough cleansing: “Hide Thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities” (51:9).
- That God would create a clean heart, and renew a right spirit in him: “Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me” (51:10).
- That God would not cast him away: “Cast me not away from Thy presence; and take not Thy Holy Spirit from me” (51:11).
- That God would restore joy to him, and hold him up : “Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation; and uphold me with Thy free spirit” (51:12).
- A promise to teach transgressors when forgiveness is obtained: “Then will I teach transgressors Thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto Thee” (Psa 51:13).
- A fourth petition for cleansing: “Deliver me from bloodguiltiness, O God, Thou God of my salvation: and my tongue shall sing aloud of Thy righteousness” (51:14).
- A petition for God to open his mouth so he could praise Him: “O Lord, open Thou my lips; and my mouth shall show forth Thy praise” (Psa 51:15).
- A confession that God values a broken and contrite heart: “For Thou desirest not sacrifice; else would I give it: Thou delightest not in burnt offering. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise” (51:16-17).
- A petition for God to do good to His people: “Do good in Thy good pleasure unto Zion: build Thou the walls of Jerusalem” (51:18).

I have taken the time to detail the prayer of the patriarch David because it confirms the seriousness of sin. In our time a sense of the enormity of transgression is exceedingly rare. Even profoundly deep moral transgressions like that of David are treated as though they were only a mistake, or a case of wrong judgment, or the expression of some troublesome trait with which one has grappled for a long time. Such views are not only unwise, they are damaging to the soul, contributing to a seared conscience, and the development of hostility toward the Lord.

The reason for the presence of these loose views is the prominence of a professional approach to moral weakness – i.e. counseling and psychiatry. As ordinarily practiced, both of these approach sin with God in mind, and the offense that sin is against Him. They also consider acceptable behavior to be the goal rather than reconciliation to God.

Peter’s words will underscore the seriousness of Simon’s transgression. As difficult as it may seem for some to receive, he will not be able to guarantee God will forgive Simon. He is not speaking of Divine ability, but of Divine character, and of the immensity of the transgression Simon committed.

PERHAPS

“ . . . if perhaps . . .” Other versions read, “if possible,” NASB “if indeed,” DARBY “if He will,” GWN “in the hope,” WEYMOUTH “to see if,” WILLIAMS and “if consequently.” INTERLINEAR

Peter does not say, “God can forgive anyone at anytime.” Or, “If you can repent, forgiveness is guaranteed.” Whatever arguments may be presented in favor of such views, they were not delivered by Peter. This is a man full of the Holy Spirit and in possession of the keys of the Kingdom. We do well to give due heed to what he says.

The expression “if perhaps” is translated from two small Greek words: ei v a;ra (ei ara). The first word is a conditional particle meaning “if.” The second word is an inferential participle that describes a consequence; i.e. perhaps, it may be, or it may be possible. In other words, Peter is saying, “It is possible that, as a consequence of your prayer, you just might be forgiven.” He does not shut the door of hope, but he leaves only a crack there, in order that Simon's prayer might be all the more instant and fervent.

There are some transgressions that put forgiveness in the "perhaps," or "if" category. It is possible that Simon's sin was bordering on the blasphemy of the Spirit, which sin Jesus said "hath never forgiveness" (Mk 3:29). He said that sin "shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come" (Matt 12:32).

The matter of is to be taken seriously, as evidenced by Peter's response. That is not to mention the enormous price that was paid because of sin – transgressions that ranged from eating a piece of fruit and stopping the ark of the covenant from falling, to offering children to the idol Molech and crucifying the Lord of glory.

THE THOUGHT OF THINE HEART

"... the thought of thine heart..." Other versions read, "the intention of your heart," NASB "having such a thought in your heart," NIV "the intent of your heart," NRSV "for thinking like this," GWN "the guile of thy heart," MRD "this scheme of yours," NJB "your evil thoughts," NLT "the purpose of thy heart," YLT "this contriving thought and purpose of your heart," AMPLIFIED " evil intention of your heart," PHILLIPS and "the on-mind of-the-heart ." INTERLINEAR

Peter does not tell Simon to pray the Lord will forgive him for what he said, but for the "thought," or intention of his heart. An evil heart of unbelief had entered into Simon's thought processes, and he had welcomed it. Rather than casting down imaginations, he entertained them, and did what they suggested. His "thoughts" were not God's thoughts (Isa 55:8-9), but like the evil tongue were "set on fire of hell" (James 3:6). Men may glibly say, "You cannot go to hell for what you are thinking." But Peter plainly said Simon was on his way to hell if he did not repent. He had jumped off the strait way that leads to life, and willingly landed on the broad road that leads to destruction.

There Are Thoughts That Do Not Have to Be Forgiven

There are thoughts – evil thoughts – that do not have to be forgiven. They are thoughts that are not wanted – intrusions hurled by the devil like poisoned arrows into the mind. These may take the form of "worldly lusts," that, by the grace of God, are denied entrance into the heart (Tit 2:11). They are thoughts that are contrary to the thinking of those who are "strangers and pilgrims" in the world, and consequently they "abstain from fleshly lusts that war against the soul" (1 Pet 2:11). These are imaginations that are cast down with the spiritual weaponry God has given us, and thoughts that are taken captive to the obedience of Christ (2 Cor 10:4-5). When they come to the person who is living by faith, bidding entrance into their heart and mind, they are recognized as issuing from "the law of sin" that is in our members" (Rom 7:23). In Christ we have been liberated from "the law of sin and death," and are not debtors to it, to obey its lusts (Rom 8:2,12). This is the heritage of everyone who believes and is baptized!

My Own Experience

I well remember my own awakening to the warfare within, and the necessity of tracing thoughts to their source – then denying or embracing them. I was made painfully aware of how very little was being said about this within the professed church, and how I desired that I could have known it earlier. Every sincere believer has learned by bitter experience the impairing effects of flawed and incomplete teaching.

Simon's Deed Involved His Will

But Simon paid no heed to the Spirit lusting against the flesh, and to the cries of the new man, who loves righteousness and hates iniquity. Instead, he made a place for the devil, and the devil threw him down, causing him to speak and act foolishly. His will was influenced from the wrong source, and thus it compelled him to do the wrong thing. This same thing happens to everyone who falls into sin, refusing to deny worldly lusts and yield their members as instruments of righteousness.

Noting the Reaction of Peter

Notice that Peter does not take up Simon's case, and wrestle for him against the devil's devices. Here is a case where it would have been out of order to bear one another's burden. The Scriptures do say, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ" (Gal 6:2). But that is not all they say! Three verses later they also say, "For every man shall bear his own burden" (Gal 6:5). This was such a case.

There is a sense in which the person who sins against God must work out his own salvation with fear and trembling. He must pray, seeking forgiveness, and not attempt to have others do his work for him. I realize that this might sound cruel and heartless, but we are dealing with a text that lives out this truth. No person has a right to attempt to diminish the seriousness of sin, or the obligations that it places on those who commit it.

The possibility that Peter hold's out to Simon, is that the wicked thought and intention of his heart might be forgiven. Recovery was not the point, but forgiveness. Once a person is forgiven, recovery can take place, and appropriate amends made – but first things must be first!

MAY BE FORGIVEN

“ . . . may be forgiven thee. ” Other versions read, “will forgive you,” NIV “that you may have forgiveness,” BBE “will yet be forgiven,” CJB and “ may be removed and disregarded and forgiven you.” AMPLIFIED

Think of sin as being logged in the heavenly record books, with a corresponding debt to God incurred for robbing Him of His glory. Forgiveness is removing the sin from the record book, and liquidating the debt that it created. But that is not all. It also involves the purging of the conscience, so that the one who has sinned comes to know he is forgiven. Forgiveness really has no personal value if it is not known.

Peter does not promise that the thought of Simon's heart will be forgiven, but he holds out the possibility, and that should be enough to compel Simon to seek forgiveness with great fervor.

Notice that the forgiveness that is held out as a possibility has to do with the root of sin, and not only the fruit of it. Simon has to be forgiven for thinking wrongly. Involved in that forgiveness would be the stabilizing of his heart, so that it would not be inclined to such folly again. This is involved in the statement of John concerning the confession of sin. “If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness” (1 John 1:9). The cleansing from all unrighteousness involves being freed from the propensity to the sin, as well as being forgiven for committing it. Those who have “the knowledge of salvation . . . by the remission of their sins” know very well what I mean (Lk 1:77). There is a certain strength that is imparted in the forgiveness of sins that enables a person to go their way and “sin no more” (John 5:14; 8:11). That is the sort of thing Peter says might “perhaps” happen when Simon prays.

DISCERNING THE INDIVIDUAL

“ 23 For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.”

Peter is not conducting himself as a fleshly professional, approaching Simon with a kind of indifference to his situation. When men, in the name of Jesus, render help for payment, it is all the more difficult for them to be truly concerned about the one with whom they are dealing. I am aware that some few noble souls can overcome this circumstance, but they are few and far between.

I PERCEIVE

“For I perceive that . . .” Other versions read, “I see,” NKJV “it is plain to me,” NJB and “I see inside you.” PHILLIPS

The word perceive speaks of an understanding that extends beyond the surface. Perception is not second-hand knowledge – like memorizing a set of mathematical tables. Here, the word “perceive” means “to see with the mind, to perceive, know absolutely,” THAYER “understand, recognize,” UBS and “mentally and spiritually see, perceive, look at.” GINGRICH

This is a special kind of understanding. It does not come by comparing what is seen with a code of conduct, or a manual of definition. It rather results from being able to identify the source of the word or activity. In a sense, Peter looked inside the heart and mind of Simon, seeing the root of the tree instead of its leaves. There is no doubt that he did this in the power of the Holy Spirit. This was by no means the result of developing a natural aptitude. Peter perceives what made Simon offer money to purchase the ability to confer the Holy Spirit on anyone of his choice by the laying on of his hands.

THE GALL OF BITTERNESS

“ . . . thou art in the gall of bitterness . . .” Other versions read, “ poisoned by bitterness,” NKJB “ full of bitterness,” NIV “prisoned in bitter envy ,” BBE “ extremely bitter,” CJB “bitter with jealousy ,” GWN “in the bitter gall ,” MRD “bitterly envious,” NET “full of bitter jealousy ,” NLT “turning into bitter poison ,” ISV and “a bitter weed .” WILLIAMS

Gall

The word “gall” is translated from the Greek word colh.n (khol-aan), which has the following lexical meaning: “a yellowish-green substance called bile,” THAYER “(1) as a bitter digestive fluid stored in the gall bladder in the body gall, bile; (2) as a bitter substance made from wormwood, a plant yielding a bitter-tasting dark-green oil that is alcoholic in its effect gall,” FRIBERG “something bitter,” UBS and “the bitter yellowish liquid secreted by the liver and stored in the gall bladder.” LOUW-NIDA In the English language, and as used in our text, the word “gall” means, “brazen boldness coupled with impudent assurance and insolence.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

In the Scriptures, the word is used to denote being “full of bitter poison, be very jealous, be bitterly envious” FRIBERG and “bitter anger, wrath.” LIDDELL-SCOTT This is the only place in Scripture that the word is used in this way. The same word is used in Matthew 27:34 to describe what was given Jesus to drink – “vinegar mingled with gall.”

Bitterness

Bitterness is translated from the Greek word pikri,aj (pik-ree-ahs). The lexical meaning of this word is “bitterness,” THAYER “inedible or poisonous.” FRIBERG As used in our text, the word means “extreme wickedness,” THAYER “particularly envious or resentful of someone,” LOUW-NIDA and “animosity and anger.” GINGRICH In English, the word means “marked by intensity or severity.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

What Is Peter Saying?

Peter is saying that what Simon has offered is like the emission of a bitter poison from within him, and that it is extremely distasteful to Peter himself. Not only was the thought like a noxious and bitter substance, it was also poisonous – lethal in its effects upon the soul. We might liken this verbal eruption to an appendicitis that resulted in the rupturing of the organ. Poison is thus spewed out into the vital parts of the body, transmitting its effects throughout the entire physiological makeup of the individual. Unless some way is found to get the poison out of the body, the person will die from its effects.

Because of the dichotomy of natures found in the believer, he must contend with variant influences from within. Boiled down to its essence, these influences are the flesh and the Spirit. This it is written, “For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would” (Gal 5:17). These competitive desires are bidding for expression – to be taken into the heart and mind and then expressed in willing thoughts, as well as words and deeds. Both the Spirit and the flesh are aggressive in their attempts. Speaking of the Holy Spirit, James wrote, “Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?”, or “The Spirit Whom He has caused to dwell in us yearns over us and He yearns for the Spirit [to be welcome] with a jealous love?” AMPLIFIED (James 4:5).

When an believer gives heed to the desires of the flesh, welcoming them into his mind for contemplation, it is like turning on a picket which begins dumping all of the desires of the flesh, or corruption of “the old man” into our soul – the part of us that is the appointed means of expression. What happens when a believer commits sin is this. Satan has hurled a fiery dart into the thought processes, as vividly described in Romans 7:14-25. Rather than throwing the thought down with the spiritual weaponry that is provided in Christ Jesus, the thought is entertained like a welcomed guest. The thought then draws upon all of the corruption of “the old man, which is “corrupt according to deceitful lusts” (Eph 4:22). The result is that the “old man” gains control of the individual, spreading his venom throughout the unseen human makeup. Sin then erupts – a process James referred to as “the superfluity of naughtiness,” or “overflow of wickedness ” NKJV (James 1:21).

This is what happened in Simon, and it filled with moral poison. He was like a man swimming in a cesspool of iniquity – “in the gall of bitterness.”

THE BOND OF INIQUITY

“ . . . and in the bond of iniquity.” Other versions read, “bondage of iniquity,” NASB “ captive to sin,” NIV “the chains of wickedness,” NRSV “under the control of sin,” CJB “ bound by iniquity,” CSB “ bonds of iniquity,” DOUAY “ wrapped up in your evil ways,” GWN “ chains of sin,” NJB “bond of unrighteousness,” YLT “bound by sin,” IE “ chained by wickedness,” ISV “a bundle of crookedness,” WILLIAMS “a bond forged by iniquity [to fetter souls],” AMPLIFIED “bound with his own sin,” PHILLIPS and “ prisoner of sin.” GNB

Simon had become a slave to sin – just by uttering a foolish word. It was a word that had been fostered by carnality, because he did not take his thoughts captive to the obedience of Christ. He was not in a position where he could not simply back away from the situation. He was chained to his sin, like Samson was bound with fetters of brass to a grinding mill (Judges 16:21).

Sin Has Enslaving Power

The fact that sin is treated so lightly in our time is confirmation that the people are not aware of the enslaving power of sin. It is too late to for a back to walk away from iniquity when it has been committed. Now repentance and remission is required, for the person has been chained to his sin.

In our time, there is a certain approach to, what is called ministry, that specializes in deliverance. They refer to their work as a deliverance ministry, and affirm that they are able to free men from enslavement to all manner of sin.

Jesus taught this little known fact, and did so with characteristic certitude. His word is preceded by a declaration of that certitude: “Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin” (John 8:34). Now, that is a precise statement of the case. Paul developed this in his exposition of baptism into Christ and its effects. “Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin” (Rom 6:6). That is, if the “old man” is not kept on the cross, being crucified, we will, in fact, “serve sin,” for that is the nature of the sinful nature, or the “natural man.” Sin has the power to “reign in our mortal bodies” after we have been baptized into Christ. Therefore, believers are admonished, “Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof” (Rom 6:12). Paul also declares the same thing as Jesus regarding enslavement to sin resulting from the committing of it. “Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?” (Rom 6:16). When speaking of certain false teachers who were exploiting the people of God, Peter said it this way in his second epistle to scattered believers: “While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage” (2 Pet 2:19).

Thus, Peter has clearly declared Simon’s condition. He has been captured by sin, and is bound with the chains of iniquity. His inner person has been filled with filled with bitter poison, and he is in a condition where the best that can be promised is that if he repents and prays God, “perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven” him (Acts 8:22).

SOMETHING TO CONSIDER

Peter does not lay hands on Simon and deliver him from the bond of iniquity. He offers no assistance, other than the instruction to repent and pray. Now, this is real case of dealing with real sin, and there is no chance that it is in some way flawed.

In our time, there is a certain approach to, what is called ministry , that specializes in deliverance. They refer to their work as a deliverance ministry, and affirm that they are able to free men from enslavement to all manner of sin. Meetings of significant size are held for purposes of deliverance, and the work is spoken of as though it was founded on revelation.

First, let it be clear that Jesus did come “to preach DELIVERANCE to the captives” (Lk 4:18). He also taught us to pray that God would “DELIVER us from evil” (Lk 11:4). That the sum total of the Savior’s use of the word deliver.

There are some other statements concerning deliverance.

- Zechariah prophesied that the effect of the Savior would be the people being “DELIVERED out of the land of their enemies” (Lk 1:74).
- In Christ, we are “DELIVERED from the Law” (Rom 7:6).
- Paul spoke for all who are aware of the struggle against the flesh when he said, “O wretched man that I am! who shall DELIVER me from the body of this death?” (Rom 7:24).
- The “DELIVERER will come out of Zion, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob” (Rom 11:26).
- Paul asked for prayer that he might be “DELIVERED from them that do not believe in Judea” (Rom 15:31), and “from unreasonable and wicked men” (2 Thess 3:2).
- Paul said God had DELIVERED him from a great death, was delivering him, and would yet deliver him (2 Cor 1:10).

- Jesus died to “DELIVER us from this present evil world” (Gal 1:4).
- God “DELIVERED us from this present evil world” (Col 1:13).
- Jesus “DELIVERED us from the wrath to come” (1 Thess 1:10).
- Paul said he was “DELIVERED out of the mouth of the lion” (2 Tim 4:17).
- Paul said the Lord would DELIVER him “out of every evil work” (2 Tim 4:18).
- In Jesus’ death He “destroyed the devil,” and DELIVERED “them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage” (Heb 2:15).
- God knows “how to DELIVER the godly out of temptation” (2 Pet 2:9).

Now, I am wandering about in the field of speculation, or pummeling a straw man. I am questioning the validity of, what is purported to be a deliverance ministry, and I am doing so upon the basis of this text. Here was a man who was in bondage – “the bond of iniquity.” He was standing before a man who was filled with the Spirit, had the keys to the Kingdom of heaven, and had wrought all manner of mighty works. If the way for a believer to overcome sin is to be delivered from it by some godly person, surely this will be the occasion for that to happen. If the only way to recover from sin is for a second party to knowingly enter into the matter with you, then this is an excellent time for that to happen.

I understand that there is such a thing as an effective through which life can be given to those who do not sin a sin unto death. Thus it is written, “If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and He shall give him life for them that sin not unto death” (1 John 5:16). In this case, spiritual life is given to a sinner upon the basis of someone who is in favor with God. This is similar to James’ word

There are sins from which there is no simple means of recovery. These are sins that are of an intrusive nature, causing men to become enslaved to iniquity. When this occurs, the person himself must engage in an earnest quest of forgiveness – like David did concerning the same type of situation. “Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins” (James 5:20). These are not words delivered to especially gifted people, but to those who are walking in the light, and therefore can be employed in restoring fallen souls to the fold. But that is quite different from the case that is before us.

There are sins from which there is no simple means of recovery. These are sins that are of an intrusive nature, causing men to become enslaved to iniquity. When this occurs, the person himself must engage in an earnest quest of forgiveness – like David did (Psa 51). In order for such sins to be committed, a number of things must first be done.

- A place must be made for Satan.
- The warning conscience must be ignored.
- The striving Spirit must be resisted, quenched, and grieved.
- The word of God must be thrust from the mind.
- Life in this world must become prominent.
- Time must outweigh eternity.
- Self must be exalted to the place of preeminence.
- The body must be considered more important than the soul.

- This world must be seen as more important than the world to come.
- The inevitability of death, the coming of the Lord, the end of the world, and the day of judgment must be thrust from the mind.

These are just a few of the conditions that must precede the committing of sin. I give them to confirm how serious it is when men sin – particularly when sins like that of Simon are committed. They involve a wrong assessment of God, Christ, their purpose, and the nature of salvation. In my judgment it is time for the professing church to fervently seek a sensitivity to God and His will that will direct a more acceptable manner of life. Spiritual obtuseness is never right.

A REQUEST THAT WAS NOT APPARENTLY ANSWERED

“ 24 Then answered Simon, and said, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.”

There was nothing about Peter’s words that were not perfectly clear. Simon himself was to repent, changing his mind and ceasing his wicked ways. If it appears as though that was impossible, there is something made known in Christ’s ministry that must be seen. In a number of His wonderful works He told people to do something they were not personally able to do. Here are some of His commands.

- To a man with a withered hand: “stretch forth thy hand” (Lk 6:10).
- To a paralyzed man: “Arise, take up thy bed and walk” (Matt 9:6).
- To an impotent man lying on the porch of a pool: “Rise, take up thy bed and walk” (John 5:8).
- To a man who requested to come to Jesus, walking on the water: “Come” (Matt 14:28).

In each of these cases, there was no outward indication that what was commanded was even remotely possible. The people obvious were not able in themselves to do what Jesus said. However, more was involved in those cases than the ability of the people. There was also the element of faith. It is as the people., my faith, made a hearty effort to do what Jesus said, that grace and strength was imparted to them to do it.

That is still the manner of the Kingdom. Believers are not to look at their own aptitude in order to assess whether or not they are able to do the will of the Lord. Instead, they are to step out upon the circumstance believing that the Lord will support their effort to do His will. This is, in fact, what it means tom “live by faith” (Rom 1:17; Gal 3:11; Heb 10:38).

On a personal note, if there are areas of life in which you appear to be especially lacking in spiritual aptitude, extend yourself to have faith in God. You may recall that when Jesus cursed the fig tree, His disciples were astounded at how rapidly it died. Jesus responded to the expression of their surprise, “Have faith in God!” (Mk 11:21-22). That is still His answer to many of the responses and attitudes of His people.

Now we will behold unbelief in action. What Peter has said was clear, and Simon understood him. Yet, his next words are not addressed to God, but to Peter. They may appear to be quite innocent, but they are not.

PRAY FOR ME

“Then answered Simon, and said, Pray ye to the Lord for me . . .” Other versions read, “Pray to the Lord for me,” NKJV “pray for me to the Lord ,” RSV “ Make prayer for me to the Lord,” BBE “ Please pray to the Lord for me,” CSB “ Supplicate ye for me to the Lord,” DARBY “ Intercede ye with God for me,” MRD “You pray to the Lord for me,” NET “Pray for me to the Lord yourselves ,” NJB “Beseech ye for me unto the Lord,” YLT “Both of you pray to the Lord for me,” IE “Pray, both of you , to the Lord for me,” WEYMOUTH “Both of you beg the Lord for me,” WILLIAMS “Pray for me [beseech the Lord, both of you],” AMPLIFIED “Implore to the Lord on my behalf,” ALT and “You petition to the Lord for me.” LITV

Does this appear to be an honest appear – one of a poor sinner who is weighed down with guilt? Not at all! This a disobedient man expressing his unbelief. Peter told him to pray, and the man, in effect, responded, “No, you do the praying!”

Simon is obviously frightened by what Peter has said, but it is not a fright caused by the fear of the Lord. This is a carnal fear which caused Simon to cower in a corner, unconvinced that he could repent and seek forgiveness from the Lord for the thought of his heart.

In a lot of respects, Simon’s request was similar to several requests that Pharaoh made of Moses. “Entreat the Lord for me . . . entreat for me . . . Entreat the Lord for me . . . Now therefore forgive, I pray thee, my sin only this once, and entreat the LORD your God, that he may take away from me this death only” (Exodus 8:8, 28; 9:28; 10:16, 17). The complicating factor with Simon is that he had believed and been baptized. That made his sin worse than the sin of Pharaoh,

NONE OF THESE THINGS

“ . . . that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.” Others version read, “that nothing of what you have said may happen to me,” NIV “so that these things which you have said may not come on me,” BBE “that these terrible things won't happen to me,” LIVING “that nothing of what you have said may befall me !,” AMPLIFIED and “that none of these things which ye have spoke fall on me .” BISHOPS

“The things” of reference was his money perishing with him in perdition, or he perishing with his money, however

Early Church historians depict him as the pertinacious foe of the apostle Peter, whose movements he followed for the purpose of seeking encounters, in which he was signally defeated. In his journeys he was accompanied by a female named Helena, who had previously been a prostitute at Tyre, but who was now elevated to the position of his e]nnoia , or divine intelligence (Justin Mart. Apol. 1, 26; Euseb. H.E. 2, 13). In the e]nnoia , as embodied in Helena’s person, we recognize the dualistic element of Gnosticism derived from the Manichaeic system. The Gnostics appear to have recognized the du>namiv and the e]nnoia as the two original principles from whose junction all beings emanated. Simon and Helena were the incarnations in which these principles resided. Simon’s first encounter with Peter took place at Caesarea Stratonis (according to the Const. Apost. 6, 8), whence he followed the apostle to Rome. Eusebius makes no mention of this first encounter, but represents Simon’s journey to Rome as following immediately after the interview recorded in Scripture (H.E. 2, 14); but his chronological statements are evidently confused, for in the very same chapter he states that the meeting between the two at Rome took place in the reign of Claudius, some ten years after the events in Samaria. Justin Martyr, with greater consistency, represents Simon as having visited Rome in the reign of Claudius, and omits all notice of an encounter with Peter. His success there was so great that he was deified, and a statue was erected in his honor with the inscription “Simoni Deo Sancto” (Apol. 1, 26, 56). Justin’s authority has been impugned in respect to this statement on the ground that a tablet was discovered in 1574 on the Tiberina insula, which answers to the locality described by Justin (ejn tw~| Ti>beri potamw~| metaxw~| tw~n du>o gefurw~n) , and bearing an inscription, the first words of which are “Semoni Sanco Deo Fidio.” This inscription, which really applies to the Sabine Hercules (Sancus Semo) , is generally supposed to have been mistaken by Justin in his ignorance of Latin, for one in honor of Simon. Yet the inscription goes on to state the name of the giver and other particulars. “Semoni Sanco Deo Fidio sacrum Sex. Pompeius, Sp. F. Col. Mussianus Quinquennalis decus Bidentalibus donum dedit.” That Justin, a man of literary acquirements, should be unable to translate such an inscription that he should misquote it in an Apology duly prepared at Rome for the eye of a Roman emperor and that the, mistake should be repeated by other early writers whose knowledge of Latin is unquestioned (Irenaeus, Adv. Haeres. 1, 20; Tertullian, Apol. 13) — these assumptions form a series of difficulties in the way of the theory (Salmasius, Ad Spartianum, p. 38; Van Dale, De Oraculis, p. 579; Burton, Heresies of the Apostolic Age, p. 374, etc.). The above statements can be reconciled only by assuming that Simon made two expeditions to Rome the first in the reign of Claudius; the second, in which he encountered Peter, in the reign of Nero about the year 68 (Burton, Lectures, 1, 233, 318); and even this takes for granted the disputed fact of Peter's visit to Rome. SEE PETER. This later date is to a certain extent confirmed by the account of Simon's death preserved by Hippolytus (Adv. Haeres. 6, 20); for the event is stated to have occurred while Peter and Paul (the term apostolo evidently implying the presence of the latter) were together at Rome. Simon's death is associated with the meeting in question. According to Hippolytus, the earliest authority on the subject, Simon was buried alive at his own request, in the confident assurance that he would rise again on the third day (ibid. 6, 20). According to another account, he attempted to fly, in proof of his supernatural power, in answer to the prayers of Peter, he fell and sustained a fracture of his thigh and ankle bones (Const. Apost. 2, 14; 6, 9); overcome with vexation, he committed suicide (Arnob. Adv. Gent. 2, 7). Whether this statement is confirmed, or, on the other hand, weakened, by the account of a similar attempt to fly recorded by heathen writers (Sueton. Nero, 12; Juven. Sat. 3, 79), is uncertain. Simon's attempt may have supplied the basis for this report, or this report may have been erroneously placed to his credit. Burton (Lectures, 1, 295) rather favors the former alternative. Simon is generally pronounced by early writers to have been the founder of heresy. It is difficult to understand how he was guilty of heresy in the proper sense of the term, inasmuch as he was not a Christian. Perhaps it refers to his attempt to combine Christianity with Gnosticism. He is also reported to have forged works professing to emanate from Christ and his disciples (Const. Apost. 6, 16). See Tillemont Memoires, 1, 158 sq.; Beausobre, Hist. du Manicheisme, vol. 1; Ittigius, Hist. Eccles. Selecta Capita, 5, 16, etc.; Mosheim, History of the Church, cent. 2, 5, 12; De Rebus Christianorum, etc., p. 190 sq.; Burton, Heresies of the Apostolic Age, lect. 4; Milman, Hist. of Christianity, 2, 96 sq., etc.

you want to view it. It is interesting that he did not think in terms of being forgiven by God – that is the possibility that Peter held out to him: “if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee.” But, alas, someone who is “in the bond of iniquity” finds it exceedingly difficult to think in such a manner. That is why recovery from sin is not a simplistic or easy matter. As soon as a person is made aware of their, and convicted of it, they must immediately seek the remedy by confessing their sin to God (1 John 1:7). The reason for this is that sin has a hardening effect upon the transgressor. That is why we are warned, “But exhort one another daily, while it is called To day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin” (Heb 3:13). It is also why those who dabble in the world, making no association of life with God, tend to become more and more dull of hearing. Oh, that professing believers were made more aware of this. There is a type of Christianity in the land that courts the favor and things of this world, attempting to sanctify its manners. But this cannot be done. If Jesus died to deliver us from “this present evil world according to the will of God and our Father” (Gal 1:4), we cannot afford to look back to the world like Lot's wife looked back on Sodom. That is precisely why the Lord said, “Remember Lot's wife!” (Lk 17:32).

The record of Simon is a case in point. Here, the curtain falls on the incident of Simon, and we hard of him no more. We do not know if he ever repented and prayed for himself, or if he died in the gall of bitterness.

This is another reason why it is so dangerous for the church to adopt the manners and customs of the world, bring its music and manners of presentation and motivation among believers. Such things are like an open door to the devil, as has been confirmed in so many instances of immorality and indiscretion among Christians. Not only were such people living apart from the awareness faith brings to the heart, their religion actually set them up for a fall by making them comfortable with worldly manners and appearances.

SOME THINGS DO NOT MERIT YOUR INVOLVEMENT

There are some situations in which it simply is not wise to become involved. Of course, there must be godly wisdom in deciphering such cases, lest weak believer be wounded and cause to fall. Flagrant sins like that of Simon, are themselves evidence of hardness and rebellion. There are some sins that cannot be committed unless the callousness of sin has already enveloped the soul. In such a case, straightforward and insight responses and exhortations are in order. However, to be sucked into involvement with such people is not wise.

The record of Simon is a case in point. Here, the curtain falls on the incident of Simon, and we hard of him no more. We do not know if he ever repented and prayed for himself, or if he died in the gall of bitterness. Of course, the purpose of the record is not to provide us with firm answers for every situation. Like all Scripture, they have been “written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come” (1 Cor 10:11). Thus, the record precisely matches the counsel Peter delivered to Simon. He did not know if Simon could be forgiven, and now, neither do we. That confirms that God does not desire His people to speculate about the possibilities of being forgiven. They are rather to seek grace to “sin not.”

THE APOSTLES TESTIFY AND PREACH

“ 25 And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.”

So far as the record is concerned, Simon is now forgotten, and we return to the work of the apostles. What a solemn warning for us to be sober and vigilant is found in this account.

THEY TESTIFIED AND PREACHED THE WORD

“And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, . . .” Other versions read, “when they had solemnly testified and spoken,” NASB “testified and proclaimed,” NIV “given their witness and made clear,” BBE “giving a thorough witness and speaking,” CJB “having testified and preached,” DARBY “boldly spoken . . . they spread the Good News,” GWN “Testified and had taught ,” MRD “testifying and preaching,” NLT “having testified fully and spoken,” YLT “told the people the things which they had seen . . . preached the message ,” IE “borne their testimony and preached the message,” AMPLIFIED and given their clear witness and spoken.” PHILLIPS

The preaching of Peter and John fortified what had been declared by Philip, for these brethren were united in the faith. I do not doubt that they had a fuller knowledge of the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus, which things Philip had also declared.

They Testified

The word “testified” carries the idea of confirming something by testimony, this causing it to be believed. When Peter stood before the Jewish council, he said they could not help but speak the things they had “seen and heard” (Acts 4:20). I gather that this is the type of word that was delivered in Samaria. The extent of that testimony was also confirmed in the qualification for the filling of the bishopric vacated by Judas. It had to be a person who “Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John , unto that same day that He was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of His resurrection ” (Acts 1:21-22).

Add to this the ministry of the Holy Spirit who “brought all things” to their remembrance, whatsoever Jesus had said unto them (John 16:26). Also, consider how He must have shed light on the many words of Jesus, guiding them into all truth, illuminating the implications of the death, burial, resurrection, and enthronement of Christ Jesus. In the earlier chapters of Acts, you have a sampling of the expertise with which Peter handled the prophecies of Scripture, integrating them with the facts of the Gospel.

- Joel's prophecy of the pouring forth of the Spirit (Acts 2:16-21; Joel 2:28-32).
- The association of the death of Christ with the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God (Acts 2:23),
- The opening of prophecies of Jesus' resurrection in the Psalms (Acts 2:24-28; Psa 16:8-11; 49:15; 86:13).
- The exposition of the promise God made to David concerning a king to sit on his throne (Acts 2:29-33; 2 Sam 7:16; Psa 89:35-36).
- The opening of the 110th Psalm (Acts 2:34-36; Psa 110:1; 2:8-9).
- The glorification of Jesus (Acts 3:13).
- The exposition of the suffering of Christ as declared by the prophets (Acts 3:18).
- Defining the duration of Christ remaining in heaven (Acts 3:21).
- Expounding Moses' promise of the coming Prophet, who was Jesus (Acts 3:22-23; Deut 18:15,18).
- Expounding the promise made to Abraham (Acts 3:25-26; Gen 22:18).
- The exposition of the 118th Psalm regarding the rejection of the Corner Stone (Acts 4:11; Psa 118:22,23; Isa 28:16).

All of these things involved eye witness accounts of the Christ, His words, miracles, death, burial, resurrection, and ascension. This is not doubt the type of things concerning which they testified. One can only imagine what a rich table of rich things they spread for the Samaritans, and how it must have compared with bewitching work of Simon under which they had been deluded for so long.

They Preached the Word

These days, there is altogether too little of the preaching of the Word, apprising the people of the rich promises and commitments of the Lord to those who believe.

The testimony of Peter and John was integrated with Scriptural proclamations, as confirmed in former accounts of Peter's preaching. By preaching the Word, a proclamation of it is meant, as compared with what is commonly called an application. They were anchoring the faith of the Samaritans in solid declarations by the Almighty God, like affirmations concerning the Lord Jesus, and the exceeding great and precious promises through which believers become "partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (2 Pet 1:4).

These days, there is altogether too little of the preaching of the Word, apprising the people of the rich promises and commitments of the Lord to those who believe. More and more I am seeing that a significant number of professing preachers and teachers really have no message, but spend their time attempting to resolve surface problems.

THEY RETURNED TO JERUSALEM

" . . . returned to Jerusalem . . ." Other versions read, "Started back to Jerusalem," NASB "went back to Jerusalem," BBE "traveled back to Jerusalem," CSB "on their way back to Jerusalem," GWN and "returned toward Jerusalem." PNT

Having completed their mission, and anchoring the Samaritans more firmly in the Word, Peter and John return to their home base. That was the center out of which they would operate, and was the place to which those with serious issues would resort. After this verse, there are forty-five references to Jerusalem in the book of Acts. It remained the hub of Kingdom activity to which inquirers resorted, and from which holy men were dispatched.

THEY PREACHED IN SAMARITAN VILLAGES

“ . . . and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.” Other versions read, “proclaiming the good news in many Samaritan villages,” NRSV “in a number of small towns in Samaria,” BBE “evangelizing many villages of the Samaritans,” CSB “announced the glad tidings,” DARBY “to many countries of the Samaritans,” DOUAY “proclaiming the good news to many Samaritan villages as they went,” NET “they stopped in many Samaritan villages along the way to preach the Good News,” NLT and “proclaiming the glad tidings (Gospel) to many villages of the Samaritans [on the way].” AMPLIFIED

On the day of Pentecost, Peter had announced that the promise was not only to the Jews and their children, but to those who were afar off as well (Acts 2:39). While the Samaritans were geographically near, they spiritually afar off, and now they were privileged to hear the Gospel that first promised to Abraham.

The incident with Simon the spirits of Peter and John, confirming that a day in the courts of the Lord is better than a thousand elsewhere (Psa 84:10). The reception of the Gospel by the faithful offset experiences like that of Simon. That is why it is not wise to get caught up in the trying to resolve difficulties that spring from hardness.

CONCLUSION

This passage of Scripture confirms two vital points. First, the role of Apostle doctrine, with its unique and foundational knowledge. Second, it provides a sterling example of the seriousness of misconceptions of the nature of the Kingdom of God. These are lessons all men do well to take in, digesting and adapting them to their own labors in the Kingdom. These are accounts of genuine Kingdom labors, and are worthy of special notation.

Lesson #39

PHILIP IS SENT TO THE DESERT

“ 8:26 And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert. 27 And he arose and went: and, behold, a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem for to worship, 28 Was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet. 29 Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot. 30 And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest? 31 And he said, How can I, except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him. ” (Acts 8:26-31)

INTRODUCTION

Confirming the rapidity with which the Gospel can spread, the city of Samaria, as well as numerous villages in the region of Samaria, has now been saturated with the Gospel. This has been accomplished without the launching of an expansion program, or the development of a man-made strategy. We are witnessing the expression of “newness of life.” This is something that cannot be confined to a system. True Christian growth, whether on an individual or corporate level, is the result of “holding to the Head,” Jesus Christ (Col 2:19). The purpose of salvation involves joining the saved to the Lord (1 Cor 6:17), being one with Him, even as He is one with the Father (John 17:21-22), and experiencing fellowship with the Son (1 Cor 1:9). This being the case, it is not possible that any valid work can be accomplished independently of that conscious and productive union with Deity. All other professed Christian work, regardless of its successful appearance, is spurious in every sense of the word. It is not possible for any valid work to be done within the church without the One who Himself is building it (Matt 16:18).

One of the serious deficiencies of the American church is its insistence upon working independently of the Person of Christ, the empowerment of the Holy Spirit, and the awareness of the good and acceptable and perfect will of God. Considering that this is the day of the open heavens, access to God and the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, this is a totally unacceptable condition. When prevailing disinterest and its consequent ignorance persist within the professing church, it is evidence that the “great salvation” of God has been neglected.

By way of contrast, the once spiritually barren region of Samaria has become a fertile field, and streams have broken out in a spiritual desert. The prophecy of Isaiah has been fulfilled in that region. “Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes” (Isa 35:6-7). There has also been a liberation from a longtime bewitchment under which the Samaritan people had been held.

All of this was initiated through a single disciple who was filled with the Spirit and wisdom, and was tutored in the apostles’ doctrine. The apostles themselves followed up his effective ministry, confirming the Gospel he had preached, and establishing the people more firmly in the truth. Thus, what had happened in Jerusalem has now taken place in Samaria – and that in strict accordance with the word of the King: “and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria” (Acts 1:8).

NOT A HUMAN STRATEGY

This was not the result of a human strategy. It rather was the result of souls being yielded to the Lord, and therefore they could be directed by the Holy Spirit. Jesus set the tone for the workings of God among men by Himself being “led by the Spirit” (Luke 4:1). When He assaulted the kingdom of darkness, casting out demons, He said He did so “by the Spirit of God” (Matt 12:28).

As Jesus began building His church, He did so through the Holy Spirit. After all, the intention of God is for the church to become His own habitation “through the Spirit” (Eph 2:22). When the time arrived for the Gospel to be preached to the Gentiles, it was the Holy Spirit who directed Peter in what to do (Acts 10:19). When a Divine work was purposed for men of God to perform, it was the Holy Spirit who said, “Separate Me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them” (Acts 13:2). Later when the disciples were spreading the Word everywhere, “they were forbidden by the Holy Spirit to preach the word on Asia” NKJV (Acts 16:6). Again, “they tried to go into Bithynia, but the Spirit did not permit them” NKJV (Acts 16:7).

It ought to be clear that Jesus is not the Head Emeritus of the church – like a retired corporate president that is called in from time to time to give advice. Judging from the amount of time that the contemporary church gives to planning, strategizing, and hawking canned plans and procedures, one might imagine that Jesus was like the idol Baal. When the devotees of Baal got no answer from him, Elijah taunted them saying, “Cry aloud, for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked” (1 Kgs 18:27). The church has, indeed, fallen on hard times when it must caucus with consultants, advisors, coaches, financial analysts, motivators, psychologists, and the likes. Such activities are a reproach to Jesus, evidence of resisting the Spirit, and a denial of the truth. They are not innocent, and must not be approached as though they were. The Lord has given us a record of the manner in which the church of the living God conducts itself. He has provided records confirming how He regards the church directing itself and plotting out its own course. As well, He has made clear that there is no place – absolutely no place – for worldly wisdom among His people.

In fact, when professing believers depend upon the wisdom of the world, it is evidence that they are, in fact, friends with the world, adopting its way. As such, they become enemies of God. As it is written, “friendship with the world is enmity with God . . . whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world IS the enemy of God” – or, “whoever chooses to be a friend of the world takes his stand as an enemy of God” AMPLIFIED (James 4:4).

THE RELEVANCE OF THIS

The relevance of all of this is seen in the fact that the early church knew nothing of all of the organizational and strategical procedures that have been adopted by the modern church. Yet, the results that it realized so dwarf that of today that a connection can scarcely be made between the churches of the first and twenty-first century. Of course, it is quite possible that there is no real association – that they represent two mindsets that are at variance with one another.

While some find it difficult to comprehend, the condition of the church is always the result of what it is doing. This is true when the church is stable and growing up into Christ in all things, or when it is declining and getting further and further from the Lord. It is as though the soul has only one hand. If it takes hold of the things of God, it has to let go of the world. If it chooses to take hold of the world, it must, of necessity, let go of the Lord. Both cannot be held simultaneously. A penchant for the truth causes the lie to become loathsome. The same is true of a predilection for the lie. It makes the truth obnoxious. It is no wonder that men are admonished, “Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life” (Prov 4:23).

The bottom line here is that the Lord is prominent in our text. He is building His church, and directing His servants through His Holy Spirit. The means through which this is being done is the faith of the people. That faith has been confirmed in their abandonment of the world and pursuit of the Lord Jesus. Jesus said, “If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me” (Luke 9:23). That is what is taking place in our text: it is actually happening among the people. In our time, this is more like a goal to be realized than an experience that is taking place.

PHILIP IS SENT TO A NEW PLACE

Now, Philip is sent from a teeming environment of many people in a city, to a single man in the desert – a key man, who himself was journeying through a natural desert to the spiritual desert of Ethiopia. He had been drawn out of Ethiopia through some unknown, yet faithful, Jewish influence. Now, his quest for the truth will be rewarded by insights he had never before experienced, and he would gladly receive the word, and be added to the church. In this man it will be confirmed that those who seek do, indeed, find (Matt 7:7-8)!

DIRECTED BY A HOLY ANGEL

“ 8:26a And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying . . . ” Other versions read, “But as for Philip,” LIVING “Now and angel of the Lord said to Philip,” WILLIAMS “ But an angel of the Lord said to Philip,” AMPLIFIED “ The Lord’s angel said to Philip,” CEV and “Messenger yet of Master talks toward Philip .” INTERLINEAR

It is good for us to be faithfully reminded of this circumstance. I am persuaded that the awareness of this sacred society would significantly alter what goes on in the churches of the land.

Here the direction of Philip is distinguished from that of Peter and John. They returned to Jerusalem, but he did not return with them. The Lord had another work for him to do. He had been faithful, and now he will be given more to do. That is the manner of the Kingdom (Matt 13:12; 25:29). This is not the kind of work men can take upon themselves. It involves reaching a man of whom Philip probably knew nothing. Nor, indeed, was the church in Jerusalem apparently aware of him. But such a lack of awareness did not exist in heaven, and “the heavens do rule” (Dan 4:26).

THE ANGEL OF THE LORD

It is good that we consider the angels and their involvement in redemption. They are integral to spiritual life, and to the various activities of the body of Christ. In revealing the vast society into whose company salvation has brought us, the holy angels are mentioned. “But ye are come unto mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels , to the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, And to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel” (Heb 12:22-24). It is good for us to be faithfully reminded of this circumstance. I am persuaded that the awareness of this sacred society would significantly alter what goes on in the churches of the land. You can rest assured that many of the things that appear so impressive to men have absolutely no such impact on these heavenly hosts.

So far as the inspired record is concerned, the angels are regularly involved with the elect. It is revealed that they are “ALL ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be the heirs of salvation” (Heb 1:14). That means that an unfathomable number of these mighty and wise hosts are at work for the saints of God. The extent of their involvement has not been revealed. However, from time to time the word of the Lord informs us of things they have done in the behalf of the “heirs of salvation.” In these accounts, we are provided some insight into the manner of their activities.

- Already in the book of Acts, “the angel of the Lord” opened the prison doors where the apostles were being held, brought them out, and told them “Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life” (Acts 5:20).
- Stephen told the council that an angel appeared to Moses in the burning bush (Acts 7:30).

- The ministry of Moses, sent “to be a ruler and a deliverer,” was carried out “by the hand of the angel” (Acts 7:35).

- The angel of the Lord accompanied Israel to Mount Sinai and through the wilderness (Acts 7:38).

- The Law of God was given to Israel “by the disposition of angels” (Acts In these few instances, we catch a glimpse of the involvement of heaven with the saints on earth. We cannot speculate about the extensiveness of this involvement, but it certainly is not

- A holy angel spoke to the Gentile Cornelius, instructing him how to contact Peter (Acts 10:3-7,22; 11:13).

- “The angel of the Lord” released Peter from prison, causing him to rise up and the chains to fall off of his hands. He instructed Peter to follow him, and the gates of the prison opened of their own accord by his leadership; (Acts 12:7-10).

In these few instances, we catch a glimpse of the involvement of heaven with the saints on earth. We cannot speculate about the extensiveness of this involvement, but it certainly is not a temporary arrangement, intended only for first century believers. The word of the Lord is that angels ARE ministering spirits, and that they ARE sent forth to minister to those “who shall be heirs of salvation.” As long as such souls exist, therefore, we can depend upon this faithful mass of spirits.

From Romans through the Revelation, there are one hundred references to angels. With very few exceptions the references pertain to holy angels. There are eight references to unholy angels (1 Cor 6:3; 2 Cor 11:14; Gal 1:6; 2 Pet 2:4; Jude 1:6; Rev 9:11; 12:7,9). The messengers of the seven churches are referred to as angels (Rev 2:1,12,18; 3:1,7,14). That leaves eighty-five references to the holy angels from Romans through the Revelation. That certainly is significant enough to get our attention. You will notice that with remarkable consistency, an increase in Divine activity was always matched by increased activity among the angelic hosts. The pinnacle of this activity will occur when Jesus comes again, being unveiled by the Father in all of His glory. At that time, He will be accompanied by “all the holy angels” (Matt 25:31).

But angels not only work on a large scale. In our text, a holy angel focuses on a single man, being sent to a solitary traveler. As with all of God’s servants, both seen and unseen, the number of people involved is not what drives their activity. It is the significance of what men are doing, and how it relates to God’s eternal purpose. Once a person sees this with some degree of discernment, it alters all of life.

THE PRECISION, YET GENERALITY, OF THE DIRECTION

“ 26b Arise, and go toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert.” Other versions read, “Arise and go toward the south along the road which goes down from Jerusalem to Gaza.” This is desert ,” NKJV “the road that descends from Jerusalem to Gaza .” (This is a desert road),” NASB “the road – the desert road – that goes down from Jerusalem to Gaza,” NIV “This is a wilderness road ,” NRSV “through the waste land ,” BBE “the same is desert,” ERV “take the desert road that goes south from Jerusalem to Gaza,” GWN “ the desert route .” NAB “the road that isn't used much now ,” IE and “ out in the desert ,” PHILIPS

Those who have a love for convenience will find the work of the Lord very tedious and difficult. “Ease,” as the world defines it, is not in the believer’s vocabulary. By experience they find that the way that leads to life is “narrow” and difficult for the flesh, and is entered through a gate that is “strait,” small and confining (Matt 7:13). Sometimes the path of holy duty leads through perils: i.e. “in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren” (2 Cor 11:26). The illustrious Christian career was unknown in the church for a considerable period of time. Oh, there have always been men who sought to exploit religion for strictly personal purposes, but they were not common at the first.

Philip does not balk at this calling. The angel of the Lord directs him to a desert – a wasteland, a wilderness road. It was a way of getting from Jerusalem to Gaza, but it certainly was not a sightseeing route, and one that was conducive to pleasure. The stretch of road from Jerusalem to Gaza was in the vicinity of fifteen miles. Yet, the angel of the Lord does not pinpoint exactly where Philip is to go, or what his business is going to be. He only tells the evangelist to “go toward the south along the road which goes down from Jerusalem to Gaza.” NKJV Yet, that is sufficient to get Philip started on his way, and therefore he will ask for no further directions. He does not know precisely where he is headed, or why he is going there.

Something to be Learned

Something of the Divine manner is to be learned from this text. Those who want all of the details spelled out will have a difficult time obeying the Lord. His instructions are not always as detailed as men desire.

- Abram was told to leave his country and his fathers house and go to a country God would later identify (Gen 12:1).
- When the Lord commanded Abraham to offer up Isaac as a burnt offering, He told the patriarch “upon one of the mountains” in “the land of Moriah,” saying He would tell him which one later (Gen 22:2).
- When the Lord led Israel out of Egypt, it was in a general direction at the first – “through the way of the wilderness of the Red sea” (Ex 13:18).
- When the Lord called Paul and Silas into a new region, it was through a dream in which Paul saw a man in Macedonia saying, “Come over into Macedonia and help us” (Acts 16:9). This was not a city, but a region, or country, even having its own race.

Historically, Divine direction generally came in stages. That is, it was along the way, as the people traveled, that more specific directions were received. This was a marvelous depiction of the nature of spiritual life. The Lord guides His people as they walk with Him. Doctrinally, it is through the knowledge of God, or in the process of Divine fellowship with the Lord, that supplies and instruction are received. This it is written, “Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord” (2 Pet 1:2). And again, “His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him” (2 Pet 1:3). This is one of the reasons God has called us “unto the fellowship of His Son” (1 Cor 1:9). It is in the process of that “fellowship” that required resources and direction are ministered from heaven. This is being lived out in our text, as Philip heads down to the desert road leading to Gaza.

GAZA

Gaza was an historical city in Canaan, and was formerly a principle stronghold of the Philistines. When entering the promised land, “Joshua Joshua smote all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the vale, and of the springs, and all their kings: he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed, as the LORD God of Israel commanded. And Joshua smote them from Kadeshbarnea even unto Gaza, and all the country of Goshen, even unto Gibeon” (Josh 10:40-41). However, he spared some of the Anakims (giants), allowing them to live in Gaza, Gath, and Ashdod (Josh 11:21). Years later, “Goliath of Gath” was among those coming from these giants who were permitted to stay in the land. Gaza was the city where Samson “took the doors of the gate of the city, and the two posts, and went away with them, bar and all, and put them upon his shoulders, and carried them up to the top of an hill that is before Hebron” (Judges 16:3). It is also the city where they took Samson after Delilah had betrayed him, put out his eyes, and caused him to be chained to a grinding mill. It is also the place where he pulled down the pillars of the Temple of Dagon, killing “about three thousand men and women” (Judges 16:21-31). Now, in the time of Philip, the city was a familiar place on the landscape of the promised land. Every place it is mentioned in Scripture, although it was in the promised land, and given to the tribe of Judah (Josh 15:21,47), it is associated with the Philistines – not the Jews (Judges 16:21; 1 Sam 6:17; 2 Kgs 18:8; Jer 47:1).

The “desert road” to which our text refers is said to be a road favored by those with carriages, as compared to a walking. “Besides the ordinary road from Jerusalem by Ramleh to Gaza, there was another, more favorable for carriages (Acts 8:28), further to the south, through Hebron, and thence through a district comparatively without towns, and much exposed to the incursions of people from the desert.” McCLINTOK STRONG’S

LEARNING ABOUT SERVING THE LORD

There is much to be learned in this text about serving the Lord. First, the notion of convenience and ease is obviously lacking. Philip is sent to a lonely road in the desert with a minimal amount of initial information. In fact, he is not even told why he was to go “toward the south along the road which goes down from Jerusalem to Gaza.” NKJV He is not told if this is for personal prayer and meditation, preaching, or some other holy activity. He does not know what awaits him there, if he is on a specific mission, or if further directions will be delivered.

Notwithstanding these rather ambiguous circumstances, Philip knows that “The steps of a good man are ordered by the LORD” (Psa 37:23). Faith does teach the ones possessing it to “commit” their “way into the Lord,” trusting in Him (Psa 37:5). It is a blessed day, indeed, when the trusting one can discerningly say, “O LORD, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps” (Jer 10:23). In Philip’s case, I suppose he could have reasoned that there might very well be perils associated with his journey. Then, there was the matter of provisions, etc. However, the person who lives by faith also obtains wisdom from above.

Steps that are “ordered” by the Lord are not characterized by foolishness, rashness, or ignorance. It is an aspect of faith to depend upon being directed in a manner that is wise as well as effective. Faith is willing to trust God in this way.

THE INSTANT OBEDIENCE OF PHILIP

“27a And he arose and went . . .” Other versions read, “So he started out,” NIV “So he got up and went,” NRSV “rising up, he went,” DOUAY “So Philip went,” GWN “He got up and set out,” and “Philip arose and began his journey.” PHILLIPS

As soon as the angel told Philip what to do, he immediately set out on the required journey. This is a vivid picture of the nature of obedience. It is instant, willing, and thorough.

As soon as the angel told Philip what to do, he immediately set out on the required journey. This is a vivid picture of the nature of obedience. It is instant, willing, and thorough.

Philip had been intensely active in Samaria, moving about, working great signs and wonders, and preaching the Gospel. He had also been with Peter and John as they prayed that the people would receive the Spirit, laying their hands upon them. They also preached to the people, confirming them in the Lord. Now, without much lapse in time, and without the benefit of advanced modes of travel, Philip is directed to take a significant journey of somewhere between fifteen and thirty miles. His instructions are sparse, to say the least. The only point of specificity pertained to a “way,” or road, that went from Jerusalem to Gaza. Bringing this scenario into our own day, that would be something like telling a person in Joplin Missouri to go toward the West to the road that led from Tulsa Oklahoma to Bartlesville, Oklahoma – without any word about anything that might happen there, or whether or not the journey would continue on from there.

While this would present some difficulties for the flesh, it is perfectly reasonable to faith. Faith is sustained by an immediate connection with the living God. It also comes with an inner awareness that the Lord directs our steps – one at a time. That is, we are provided details when we need them. Even then, they might not be specific. For example, in the broad spectrum of life, we might simply be told that we will receive a “crown of life” (James 1:12). The extent and implications of that crown are not provided, but the fact of that promise is sufficient to keep us in the path of obedience.

The Time In Which We Live

The time in which we are living, now 2007, is one in which there is a remarkable penchant for the details of life. This is the time of short-range and long-range planning. People are eager to plan the details of their careers, retirement, and even their death. While there is nothing particularly wrong in such things, those in Christ must be careful not to carry this mode of thinking into their life with God. When we live by faith, there are opportunities set before us that require an immediate response – one that is wholly independent of planning, as ordinarily perceived. The objective of the believer is to keep spiritually tuned to heaven, maintaining a robust faith, a confident hope, and sensitive heart. When these conditions are found, obedience will always be instant and complete.

Obedience Unto Righteousness

Lest we be led to think of obedience as something optional, or that is unrelated to our standing with the Lord, the apostle informs us that it is “unto righteousness.” As it is written, “Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?” (Rom 6:16). Other versions read, “obedience leading to righteousness,” NKJV and “obedience resulting in righteousness.” NASB The basic meaning of the word “obedience” includes the ideas of listening to, submitting to, being subject to, yielding to, surrendering to, and hearkening to, and to allow oneself to be governed by. THAYER By its very nature, obedience is a response, or reaction of the heart that dictates what a person does. As used in Scripture, it presumes the presence and dominance of faith, and unquestionable submission to the Lord. Obedience cannot be successfully feigned – it is either real, or the person who pretends to obey is a hypocrite, or mere actor.

The fact that Philip instantly responded to the word of the angel confirms the strength of his faith. It also reveals the tenderness of his heart, and the willingness that dominated his spirit.

OBEDIENCE IN SCRIPTURE

Philip’s response was in strict accord with other records of obedient souls.

The Scriptures contain a considerable number of records of the obedience of people to God. These include references to those who are expressly said to have been obedient – such as Abraham (Gen 22:18; Heb 11:8), Israel (2 Chron 11:4), Zerubbabel and his workers (Hag 1:2), a company of priests (Acts 6:7), believers in Rome (Rom 6:17; 16:19), and Philemon (Phile 1:21). There are numerous indirect references to the obedience of people, where they are said to have responded in faith to what they were commanded to do. These include Noah (Gen 6:22; 7:5; Heb 11:7), Jacob (Gen 35:1,7), Moses (Num 27:22), Caleb (Deut 1:36), Joshua (Josh 11:15), Gideon (Judges 6:25-28), David (1 Kgs 15:5), Hezekiah (2 Kgs 18:6), Josiah (2 Kgs 22:2), Asa (2 Chron 14:2), Jehosaphat (2 Chron 20:32), Ezra (Ezra 7:10), Hanani (Neh 7:2), Job (Job 1:8), Jonah (Jon 3:3), Joseph, Mary’s husband (Matt 1:24; 2:14), James and John (Matt 1:19-20), Matthew (Matt 9:9), Simon and Andrew (Mk 1:16-18), and a host of others.

The “How-To” Mentality

Whatever may be said of such a thrust, it seems to me that it comes short of the revealed Divine objective, which is to change men “from glory to glory,” advancing them forward to their appointed conformity to the image of God’s Son

Without laboring this to the point of distraction, I again want to briefly note the absence of “how-to” details in the words of heaven’s messenger. Philip is not told how to get down to the road. I am sure there were several possible routes. It seems to me that he would have chosen the quickest route, as compared to the most scenic or enjoyable one. He is not told what he is going to do when he arrives, how long to stay, or what to do if he has to wait.

If you were to remove the “how-to” materials and activities from the contemporary church scene, it seems to me that very little would remain. There would definitely be a significant reduction in all Christian communication media, including visual, audio, and literary.

The massive presence of these things is a kind of epitaph to the level of spiritual ignorance that presently exists in the professed Christian community. It also accounts for the absence of kingdom initiatives in which there is a bold proclamation of the truth – independent of perceived domestic and social needs. It is something like a society in which little that makes for growth and advancement is ever introduced. The burden of the time is spent attempting to recover those who were once better off than they are now. Whatever may be said of such a thrust, it seems to me that it comes short of the revealed Divine objective, which is to change men “from glory to glory,” advancing them forward to their appointed conformity to the image of God’s Son (2 Cor 3:18; Rom 8:29). Where this type of advancement is not being realized, obedience will not be found to any measurable degree. Consequently, men like Philip will be exceedingly rare, and therefore great works are not apt to be done. Spiritual insight will also be at a low level. That is the penalty for a lack of spiritual growth.

THE MAN THAT PHILIP CONFRONTED

“ 27b . . . and, behold, a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem for to worship . . .”

We have no idea how long it took Philip to get to this desert road, or the means through which he arrived there. While such details might be interesting to the flesh, they would only prove to be a distraction to the new man. Knowing the flesh as I do, it would have viewed such details as some form of code, standardizing it as a precedent for getting where God wants you to be.

In the book of Acts, we are assisted in thinking objectively – with a mind to what is being accomplished, rather than how it is being done. This is the kind of approach upon which flesh cannot capitalize. This is because such an approach is driven by the Divine agenda, into which human wisdom has no input whatsoever.

Something to be Noted

Remember the activities that had taken place in Jerusalem.

- The ministry of John the Baptist, announcing the presence of the promised Messiah, had been known in that city (John 1:19).
- Jerusalem had been exposed several times to the aggressive ministry of Jesus (Matt 15:1; 20:17; Mk 10:32; 11:11,15; John 5:1; 12:12; Matt 26:55).
- On the day of Pentecost, when the Gospel was preached, a great harvest of souls was reaped in Jerusalem (Acts 2:5,14,41).

- Multitudes of sick people had been healed by the apostles in Jerusalem (Acts 5:16).
- The apostles were charged with filling Jerusalem with their doctrine (Acts 5:28).
- Following the ordaining of the first deacons, the Word of God increased, and the number of disciples in Jerusalem were multiplied (Acts 6:7).
- A great persecution had been launched against the “church which was at Jerusalem” (Acts 8:1).

One might imagine that it would be impossible for anyone to come into Jerusalem – particularly to worship the God of the Jews – without being made privy of the marvelous things that had been taking place there. As Paul told Fetus, “this thing was not done in a corner” (Acts 26:26). Yet, Philip will now confront a man who was apparently not privy to what had taken place – including the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus, together with the pouring forth of the Holy Spirit, powerful preaching, and numerous signs and wonders.

Although the Gospel had filled Jerusalem at the first (5:28), by this time it does not appear to have permeated Jewish activities. In fact, with the passage of time and the persecution of the church, the awareness of the burst of newness of life had apparently faded from both the thoughts and conversations of the people. This clearly appears to be the case in the narrative that follows.

A MAN OF ETHIOPIA

“. . . and, behold, a man of Ethiopia . . .” Other versions read, “an Ethiopian,” NASB “who had come from Cush,” MRD and “a man from the country of Ethiopia.” IE

Now that Philip has arrived on “the desert road” leading from Jerusalem to Gaza, our attention is turned to someone who is traveling on that road. Circumstances are being orchestrated so that Philip’s attention will be turned from a city to a solitary man.

He Was from Ethiopia

Ethiopia is a land of Scriptural significance. It is located in the upper Nile region in the African quadrant of the world. This was the land of Cush, and is mentioned in Genesis 2:13 as a land compassed by one of the rivers flowing out of the garden of Eden. Moses married an Ethiopian woman (Num 12:1). On one occasion, one million Ethiopians (a “thousand thousand”) fought against king Asa and Judah, and were soundly defeated by the Lord (2 Chron. 14:9-12). During the days of Esther, Ahasuerus, her husband, reigned over Ethiopia (Esth 1:1). The book of Job mentions that topaz came from that country (Job 28:19). The Psalmist foretold a time when Ethiopia would “stretch out her hands unto God” (Psa 68:31). When Isaiah “walked naked and barefoot for three years,” it was a “sign and wonder upon Egypt and Ethiopia” (Isa 20:3). Ethiopia is mentioned along with Egypt and Seba as being given by God as a ransom for Israel (Isa 43:3). When Jeremiah was thrown into prison, it was an Ethiopian that interceded for him, leading to the prophet’s deliverance from the pit (Jer 38:7-10).

Now, a man from this part of the world is found on a desert road in the land of the Jews.

A EUNUCH OF GREAT AUTHORITY

A Eunuch

A eunuch was a man who was not married, and did not have children. Among ancient civilizations, some men in the royal courts were emasculated in order to ensure no improprieties took place, and they could be wholly given to their duties. We do not know if this was the case with this man – only that he was called a eunuch. It is quite probable that condition was imposed upon him.

Jesus spoke of eunuchs, declaring that there were several different kinds of them. “For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it” (Matt 19:12).

- Those who were born eunuchs were, by nature, incapable of begetting children.
- Those who were “made eunuchs of men” had the condition forced upon them, so that they could not beget children.
- Those who “made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake” are those who voluntarily abstained from marriage in order to serve the Lord. There is no indication that this involved physical alteration. Paul is an example of such a man. He said that such a condition was a “gift” (1 Cor 7:7).

A Man of Great Authority

This man was an officer of the court, a high ranking official in the government of Ethiopia. Thus, Philip is being directed to a single political dignitary after he had ministered to, what Jews considered to be, lowly Samaritans.

You see how this contradicts the notion of specialists in the ministry – i.e., those who specialize in youth, married, singles, and special segments of society. Some feel they are called to minister to athletes, entertainers, business men, etc. Whatever may be said of such an approach, how does it look when compared with the text before us? The truth of the matter is that there is no sense in which the Gospel is tailored for a particular segment of society. Fleshly distinctions have nothing whatsoever to do with the manner in which the Good News is presented. The present trends of speciality Bibles (Men's, Women's, Youth, etc) is not good. It leads men to approach the Word of God with themselves in mind rather than God, His Son, and His great salvation.

In view of the fact that God does not call many from among the wise, mighty, and noble, it ought to be apparent that such status' cannot be dignified by faith. Those individuals who can maintain faith in God while remaining in those domains are exceedingly rare, as confirmed by Scriptural history.

Those who labor in the vineyard of the Lord must eventually get to the point where they are persuaded the Gospel addresses men precisely as they are. It does not have to be tailored for the people, adapted to their circumstances, and made relevant to their situation. All of that is inherent in the Gospel itself. In order to make some sort of adaptation to a special person or group of persons, one must step away from the Gospel and present it differently than God intends. If that happens, what is presented no longer has any “power unto salvation.”

We will find that Philip will not present a special Gospel for political dignitaries. He will preach the same Christ He declared to the Samaritans.

HIS OFFICE

“ . . .under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, . . .” Other versions read, “in charge of the entire treasury,” NRSV “controller of all her property,” BBE “had charge over all her treasures,” DOUAY “had the rule over all her treasure,” GENEVA “her chief treasurer ,” NJB “ the treasurer of Ethiopia,” NLT and “ responsible for taking care of all her money.” IE

The term “Candace” was a common name for queens in Ethiopia, like “Pharaoh” was of rulers in Egypt, and “Caesar” of Roman rulers. The historian Pliny speaks of this custom: “The edifices of the city were few; a woman reigned there of the name of Candace, which name had been transmitted to these queens for many years.” NAT HISTORY 7:29

This man would be considered roughly equivalent to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States – although he no doubt had more authority than that position. He had charge of the collection and distribution of the Queen’s treasury.

Here is an fulfillment of the word spoken by Paul: “For ye see your calling , brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called ” (1 Cor 1:26). The Scriptures do not say that the “wise,” “mighty,” and “noble,” are neglected people groups – groups that ought to be targeted by the church. It says that not many are “called” from those groups – heaven does not call them. It is not that it unlawful for such to be called. Rather, they are more firmly nailed to this world, and therefore have no fundamental interest in the things pertaining to “the world to come.” But here and there, a person will surface from among these categories of people who is discontent with this world, and engages in a fervent quest for the Lord. Philip is about to confront such a man.

In view of the fact that God does not call many from among the wise, mighty, and noble, it ought to be apparant that such status’ cannot be dignified by faith. Those individuals who can maintain faith in God while remaining in those domains are exceedingly rare, as confirmed by Scriptural history. Even then, men like Joseph, Moses, Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were not called while occupying such position. Instead, they were exalted there to fulfill certain Divine objectives.

HE HAD COME TO JERUSALEM TO WORSHIP

“ . . . and had come to Jerusalem for to worship . . .” Other versions read, “had been to Jerusalem to worship,” CJB “had been on pilgrimage to Jerusalem ,” NJB “ had gone to Jerusalem to worship,” NLT “came to Jerusalem for to worship,” PNT “came to Jerusalem to pray ,” TNT “had visited Jerusalem to worship there ,” WEYMOUTH and “had come worshipping to Jerusalem.” INTERLINEAR

This political dignitary, a man of great authority, had come to Jerusalem – the center of Judaism – to worship. The Queen whose treasures he managed, had apparently been congenial toward him, as Artaxerxes was toward Nehemiah (Neh 2:5-8). Thus, because of her kindness, the eunuch had made the lengthy pilgrimage to Jerusalem.

His position and responsibility did not interfere with his commitment to the Lord. He rather gave way to the preeminence of the faith that he had, not allowing his devotion to God to be neutralized by his responsibilities to the Queen.

Although we do not know the name of this man, we learn very much concerning him by this brief account.

With the technical exceptions of Nicolas the Proselyte (Acts 6:5), and the Samaritans converted through Philip’s ministry (some of whom were probably not pure Jews), here is the first example of a pure Gentile being exposed to the Gospel of Christ. In a sense, he was much like Nicolas, himself being a proselyte. The journey from Ethiopia to Jerusalem is estimated to have been around 1,500 miles – a staggering distance when you consider the mode of travel. It was a journey much like that of the wise men who came from the East to see the infant Jesus. (Assuming they commenced their journey as soon as the Holy Child was born, it probably took them around two years to get to Bethlehem – Matt 2:16). That is why one version of Scripture refers to the eunuch's journey as a "pilgrimage" NJB – the word "pilgrimage" meaning "a journey of a pilgrim," MERRIAM-WEBSTER going through whole regions to which he does not belong.

The Influence of Jewry

The fact that this man was worshiping the God of the Jews confirms their influence in their dispersion. God had told the Israelites He would scatter them because of their waywardness (Jer 9:16; Ezek 4:13; 5:10; 20:23; Dan 9:7; Hos 9:17; Amos 9:9). Even in Jesus' day, the Jews were in a state of dispersion. Once, when Jesus told the Jews He was going where they could not come, they replied, "Whither will he go, that we shall not find him? will he go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles?" (John 7:35). On the day of Pentecost, "devout" Jews "out of every nation under heaven" had assembled in Jerusalem, confirming they were still in a state of dispersion (Acts 2:5).

While scattered, the Jews still maintained their identity, not being absorbed by the cultures into which they were dispersed. There were people who took the counsel of the Lord seriously: "And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the LORD for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace" (Jer 29:7). Here is a case of a man who was reached by the faithfulness of Jews in his native region. As a result, he had come to worship "the God of the Jews" (Rom 3:29). In him the Psalm was fulfilled, "Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God" (Psa 68:31). And again, "I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me: behold Philistia, and Tyre, with Ethiopia; this man was born there" (Psa 87:4). This was also a pledge to the greater fulfillment of the prophesy of Zechariah: "Thus saith the LORD of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you" (Zech 8:23).

This is a marvelous depiction of the potency of a godly witness, and of maintaining the ordinances that God has set in place. Faithfulness to God is a telling witness to those beholding it.

COMING BACK FROM A HOLY GATHERING

"28 . . . Was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet."

WAS RETURNING

". . . Was returning . . ." Other versions read, "on his way home," NIV "returning home," NRSV and "going back." BBE Having spent time in Jerusalem in worship – for that was his reason for going there – we are confronted with this man as he was returning to Ethiopia. We are not told what he heard when he was in the holy city. It is assumed that he spent considerable time in the Temple complex. Again, there is something to be said for the faithful observance of the ordinances of the Lord. Although the Jews had been widely dispersed, and their Temple twice destroyed, yet when someone came to Jerusalem, the feasts of the Lord were still being observed, the Temple was open, and some commitment to the Lord was evident. All of this was not maintained in a perfect manner, to be sure, and there was gross hypocrisy present among the leaders. Yet, the ceremonies of the Law had been given by

All of this was not maintained in a perfect manner, to be sure, and there was gross hypocrisy present among the leaders. Yet, the ceremonies of the Law had been given by God Almighty, and there was a valid association that could be made with Him through them.

God Almighty, and there was a valid association that could be made with Him through them. Thus, after Jesus had died, been raised, and returned to heaven – after He had been enthroned and the New Covenant inaugurated – the Law and its attending ceremonies still had a ministry. It is true that this situation gradually faded from the picture. The ceremonies were not intended to be perpetual, or to be the continual means of readying people for salvation. Yet, during the infancy of the church, gracious provision was made for sincere souls to gain advantages from the details of the Old Covenant which was, as the book Hebrews affirms, “ready to vanish away” (Heb 8:13).

Here we have a man returning from a time of worship in Jerusalem. It will be interesting to see how he returns, and what activities his visit to the holy city has provoked.

READING ISAIAH THE PROPHET

“ . . .and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet.” Other versions read, “ reading the book of Isaiah the prophet,” NIV “reading the prophet Isaiah aloud,” CSB “reading the prophet Isaiah out loud,” GWN “as reading aloud from the book of the prophet Isaiah,” NLT and “reading aloud from the book of the prophet Isaiah .” LIVING

A Minor Point

Although the Scriptures do not make a point of which version of Scripture the eunuch was reading, it is generally assumed that it was the Septuagint Version. The Hellenization of the world under Alexander the Great no doubt contributed to this. This was a project of the Grecian monarch in which the whole world was brought to speak Greek. The Septuagint Version was the Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures, and was widely distributed in the world.

All of this being true, here is an instance of Divine providence shaping the culture of the world with a mind to give the advantage to those who were seeking Him. While this is not a doctrinal point over which men should contend, it does provide a profitable perspective for those who are able to receive it.

So, what does a man do who is returning from a time of worship – real worship? In our country, men can go straight to an athletic event, or some form of entertainment, or some other casual affair. The very concept of worship has been so dumbed down that it is scarcely associated with a serious quest for God. Here, however, there is no need to indulge in speculation. Here is a man who had been to Jerusalem to worship. He is returning home, and we are expressly told what he was doing.

Not only did this man have a copy of the Scriptures, he was reading from them. In some way stimulated by his time in Jerusalem, he was reading from the prophet Isaiah, applying his mind to the Word of God. Enough cannot be said about the Word itself, and its centrality in the use and shaping of the mind. Those who have been deprived of Scripture have been robbed of nearly everything of lasting value. The Scriptures are able to make men “wise unto salvation” (2 Tim 3:15), and then equip them to be “thoroughly furnished unto every good work” (2 Tim 3:16-17). A person or a group of persons who are fundamentally ignorant of the Word, or are guilty of neglecting it, will inevitably decline spiritually.

CONCERNING THE SEPTUAGINT

“Among the Greek Church fathers Irenaeus (lib. 3, c. 24) relates that Ptolemy Lagi, wishing to adorn his Alexandrian library with the writings of all nations, requested from the Jews of Jerusalem a Greek version of their Scriptures; that they sent seventy elders well skilled in the Scriptures and in later languages; that the king separated them from one another and bade them all translate the several books. When they came together before Ptolemy and showed their versions, God was glorified, for they all agreed exactly, from beginning to end, in every phrase and word, so that all men may know that the Scriptures are translated by the inspiration of God. Justin Martyr (Cohort. ad Groecos, p. 34) gives the same account, and adds that he was taken to see the cells in which the interpreters worked. Epiphanius says that the translators were divided into pairs, in thirty-six cells, each pair being provided with two scribes; and that thirty-six versions agreeing in every point were produced, by the gift of the Holy Spirit (DePond. et Mens. c. 3-6). McCLINTOK STRONG'S CYCLOPEDIA

At any rate, the eunuch's time in Jerusalem had provoked him to read the Scriptures. He did not do this to impress anyone, or out of a sense of duty. He was on his own time, so to speak, and chose to consider the Word of God. That was the effect worship had upon him. One wonders why the current worship-fads have not produced similar results.

Another Point

Also, note the inclination of the Lord toward a devout person – one who worshiped God, and was engaged in a serious quest for the truth. While this is not the only kind of people who were given to hear the Gospel, it is arresting to consider how such individuals were the target of Gospel labors.

- On the day of Pentecost “devout men” were subjected to the Gospel (Acts 2:5).
- The Apostles preached and wrought many signs and wonders in Solomon's porch, a structure within the Temple complex (Acts 5:12).
- After releasing the apostles from prison, an angel from heaven instructed them to go and preach “in the temple to the people all the words of this life” (Acts 5:20).
- The Lord made special provisions for Cornelius to hear the God, who was “A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway” (Acts 10:2).
- Paul and Silas gained a following of “Devout Greeks” in Thessalonica (Acts 17:4).
- Paul spoke with Jews and “devout persons” in Athens (Acts 17:17).
- The book of Acts contains sixteen references to the outreach activities of believers in the synagogues (6:9; 9:2,20; 13:5,14,15,42;14:1; 17:1-2,10, 17; 18:4,19,26; 19:8).

The Blight of Sectarianism

One of the spreading blights of sectarianism is its tendency to attach little or no worth to an earnest quest for God – particularly among those who have little or no knowledge of the truth, and are not acquainted with either the scope or the details of the truth. Thus far in the book of Acts, there has been a total absence of this way of thinking. All of this has taken place without any tolerance for doctrinal corruption. Neither has there has been any excusing of ignorance.

Yet, there has been a longsuffering and tenderness evidenced in the teaching of uninformed souls. That same marvelous quality will be seen in this passage. It is good that we make a special note of this, and determine to participate in such an life-sapping approach. The Scriptures are consistent in their representation of sincere souls getting the attention of God, and being sent faithful laborers to assist them in apprehending the truth more fully. We must not allow any sectarian corruption to rob us of having the mind of Christ toward such people. Such an attitude will put us at variance with God.

THE SPIRIT SPEAKS A WORD OF DIRECTION

“ 29 Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.”

In keeping with the manner of the Kingdom, further direction will be given to Philip while he is obeying – living by faith and walking in the Spirit. Within the framework of fellowship with Christ, he will be told what to do. Within the perimeter of the knowledge of the Lord he will become cognizant of the proper thing to do.

My Own Experience

It seems to me that enough cannot be said about this principle. I know how long it was before I had any cogent thought concerning this Divine manner. I had unwittingly adopted an approach to life in Christ that did not require closeness to the Lord, and a lively fellowship with Him. In all honesty, I was not averse to this thought, but did not perceive how central it was to spiritual life. In personal experience, I found that my most productive thoughts were realized when I felt the closest to the Lord, and was most aware of Him. During those times, the world had no attraction to me, I had a voracious appetite for Scripture, and I was eager to please the Lord in all things. Yet, I had not yet put it all together, making the vital association between my own growth and those times of closeness to the Lord.

It was not until some years later that the phrases “knowledge of God” (Col 1:10; 2 Pet 1:2), “knowledge of Him” (Eph 1:17; 2 Pet 1:3) “knowledge of the Lord” (Isa 11:9; 2 Pet 2:20), “knowledge of Christ Jesus” (Phil 3:8), “knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ” (Phil 1:8; 2 Pet 3:18,) and “know Me” (Heb 8:11), arrested my attention. It was absolutely revolutionary when it burst upon my soul that eternal life is knowing God, and Jesus Christ whom He has sent (John 17:3; 1 John 5:20).

What had happened was that I had unwittingly bought into a religious system that actually obscured the truth, even though it boasted of having a kind of monopoly on the truth. I was not coerced into this position, but was greatly handicapped by my ignorance of the purpose of God and the nature of salvation. The “tradition of men” casts a cloud of obscurity over the entirety of the revelation (Col 2:8). Once accepted, it forces men to consider Scripture in view of the tradition. This is owing to the fact that men tend to ascribe to their own tradition the traits that belong to the Word of God. Their view is thus equated with Divine utterance. All of this is done without ever plainly declaring that is what has taken place. The one who has embraced the tradition of men will adamantly declare that this has not taken place. However, once freed from the clutches of human wisdom, it all becomes so apparent that the liberated soul marvels he was ever seduced.

The Reason for Saying These Things

My point in drawing attention to my personal experience is simply this: the conditions that hindered my own progress were not present during the time of our text – at least not to the degree that they exist now. The great falling away that Jesus and the Apostles foretold has, however, come to pass (Matt 24:12; 2 Thess 2:3; 1 Tim 4:1-3; 2 Tim 3:1-5; 2 Pet 2:1-3). The liabilities that have been introduced by this departure are staggering – so much so that it is nearly impossible to delineate it.

The purity of motive, earnest inquiry, and instant obedience of which we are reading are all standard in the Kingdom. However, they appear extraordinary because of their clash with present-day religious manners. My prayer is that the record itself will awaken a fervent desire for doctrinal purity and thoroughness of commitment within the hearts of everyone hearing these words.

THE SPIRIT SAID

“Then the Spirit said unto Philip . . .” Other versions read, “The Spirit told Philip,” NIV and “The Holy Spirit said to Philip.” LIVING

Notice the progression in Philip’s life. It speaks to us of the nature of living by faith.

- He was noted for being full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom (Acts 6:3-5).
- He faithfully joined in the administration of food to the needy within the community of believers (Acts 6:6).

- Upon the raising of a persecution of the church, he was forced out of Jerusalem (Acts 8:1).
- He went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ to them (Acts 8:5).
- An angel directed him to go down to the desert road that led from Jerusalem to Gaza.
- Now, the Holy Spirit directs him to an even more specific action.

It is evident that being “led by the Spirit” (Lk 4:1; Rom 8:14) is not a sporadic event. There are some who consider the Spirit moving, directing, or leading the individual to be something unexpected, sudden, and much like an interruption to the normal course of life. However, this is not how the working of the Spirit is depicted in Scripture. A few examples will suffice to buttress this point.

- When the Holy Spirit came upon the early disciples, it was while they were all together with one accord and in one place, waiting as the Lord had commanded them (Acts 1:4; 2:1).
- When the disciples were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and great grace came upon them all, it was after they prayed together with one accord for boldness to preach the Word (Acts 4:31).

I am persuaded that many people are not directed by the Spirit of God, whether being steered away from danger, or brought into holy involvements, because they are not walking in the Spirit. Their lives are being lived outside the perimeter of Divine fellowship.

When Peter and John prayed that the Samaritans would receive the Holy Spirit, it was after they had received the Word of God, believed, and been baptized (Acts 8:15-17).

- When the Spirit directed Peter to go with the men sent to him by Cornelius, it was while Peter was thinking on a vision that had been given to him from heaven (Acts 10:19).
- When the Holy Spirit came upon Cornelius and his household, it was after they had gathered to hear words whereby they might be saved (Acts 11:14-15).
- When the Holy Spirit told the brethren in Antioch to separate Barnabas and Saul to the work to which He had called them, it was after they had been ministering to the Lord and fasting (Acts 13:2).

Now, Philip is directed by the Holy Spirit while he is engaged in doing the revealed will of God.

I am persuaded that many people are not directed by the Spirit of God, whether being steered away from danger, or brought into holy involvements, because they are not walking in the Spirit. Their lives are being lived outside the perimeter of Divine fellowship. It ought to be obvious that this greatly complicates life, putting one in a state in which deception is more liable to occur, and Satan’s devices will not be readily perceived.

GO NEAR AND JOIN

“ . . . Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.” Other versions read, “Go near and overtake this chariot,” NKJV “Go up and join this chariot,” NASB “Go to that chariot and stay near it,” NIV “Go over to this chariot and join it,” NRSV “Go near, and get on his carriage,” BBE “ Approach and join this chariot,” DARBY “Go over and walk along beside the carriage,” NLT “Go up and join him in his chariot,” WILLIAMS “Go forward and join yourself to this chariot,” AMPLIFIED “ catch up with the chariot.” CEV

Once again, note that the Spirit does not think in terms of convenience and ease. Philip has been traveling, and he is in a desert. A man riding in a chariot is within sight, and the Spirit tells Philip to join himself to the chariot. The language is very precise. The expression “join thyself to” is translated from a single Greek word – kollh,qhti (kol-lath-a-ti). The word means “to glue, to glue together, cement, fasten together to join or fasten firmly together.” THAYER There was no question concerning what Philip was to do. He was not sent to survey the situation, evaluate the circumstances, or consider the possibilities. His mission was straightforward: connect with that chariot, and do not leave it.

We observe here the nature of spiritual life – a step at a time. The flesh would rather have an elaborate plan developed, laid out upon the table, and all of the details spelled out up front. However, this is not the manner of the Kingdom. In Christ Jesus direction springs from fellowship, and guidance is the fruit of familiarity. In view of this, it is apparent that a deliberate aloofness from the Lord involves a forfeiture of participation in His will — and that is the very reason we are a new creation in Christ Jesus. We have been “created in Christ Jesus unto good works , which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them” (Eph 2:10). Walking “in” these good works involves living by faith, relinquishing self-centeredness.

THE TYPE OF OBEDIENCE RENDERED BY PHILIP

“ 30a And Philip ran thither to him . . . ” Other versions read, “So Philip ran to him,” NKJV “Philip ran up to the chariot ,” NIV “ running up to him,” BBE “when he came near ,” MRD “ having run near,” PHILLIPS and “ ran up close .” CEV

I have noticed over the years the manner in which professed believers are generally addressed from the pulpit. They are regularly told how they balk at the word of the Lord, are slow to learn, and are generally in disagreement with the Lord. I cannot begin to tell you of the times I have heard preachers and teachers confess after reading some Divine utterance, that they would not have said it that way. Others, relating the aggressiveness of some personality of Scripture, might point out how that is certainly not what they would have done. All of this is covered over with a psychological shroud that represents the people of God as fundamentally wayward, bucking against the will of the Lord, and pretty much in a state of ignorance when it comes to the things of the Lord. They want things conveniently packaged for them, steer away from any demands upon their lives, and want to take the easy course. At least this is how they are being represented.

However, this is not the way believers are exemplified in Scripture. Disobedience and recalcitrance are always presented as departures that are totally unacceptable to God. Rather than explaining how this is the manner of those in Christ, the Spirit testifies that we are to rid ourselves of such tendencies, mortifying the deeds of the body, and cleansing ourselves of all filthiness of the flesh and the spirit (Col 3:5; 2 Cor 7:1). In fact, it is plainly stated, “And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts” (Gal 5:24).

Rather than treating dullness of hearing and slowness of response as a characteristically human trait of Christians, such things are held out as putting one in eternal jeopardy (Heb 3:12; 6:4-8; 10:38-39).

By way of comparison, behold the type of obedience found in Philip. Upon being told by the Spirit to catch up with the chariot ahead of him, he instantly runs to it. His spiritual senses are honed, as it were to a fine edge, so that he knows when the Spirit is speaking to him, and is ready to leap into action immediately.

Rather than treating dullness of hearing and slowness of response as a characteristically human trait of Christians, such things are held out as putting one in eternal jeopardy told the palsied man who had been lowered through a roof to His feet, “Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house,” it is written, “And immediately he arose, took up his bed, and went forth before them all” (Mk 2:11-12). Once Jesus told an impotent man at the pool of Bethesda, “Rise, take up thy bed and walk.” It is written, “And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked” (John 5:9). When Peter confronted Aeneas, a man who was bedridden for eight years, he said, “arise and make thy bed.” Upon hearing him, Aeneas “arose immediately ” (Acts 9:33-34).

When Paul was called into the ministry by Jesus Himself, he testified, “ immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood” (Gal 1:16). When the Lord sent Paul a vision in the night of a man in Macedonia saying, “Come over into Macedonia and help us,” it is written, “ immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia” (Acts 16:9-10). On the Isle of Patmos, when a holy angel said to John “Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter,” John said, “And immediately I was in the Spirit” (Rev 4:2).

Jesus admonished His disciples, “And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately ” (Luke 12:36).

I am confirming that Philip’s response was not an unusual one – even though it might be so considered today. This was the Kingdom norm. It is the way faith moves a person to respond, as the eleventh chapter of Hebrews confirms. Jesus called those who were “slow of heart to believe” fools (Lk 24:25). He asked those who were surprised when He calmed the storm in which they found themselves, “Where is your faith” (Lk 8:25). When His disciples did not believe the testimony of His resurrection, delivered to them by some women, and two who had been blessed with His presence, He “upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart” (Mk 16:14). When Paul confronted those who were slow to understand he wrote, “ ye are dull of hearing. For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat” (Heb 5:12).

Philip’s response is one of the new creation (2 Cor 5:17). It depicts the character of “the new man” who is “created in righteousness and true holiness” (Eph 4:24). No other kind of response is acceptable.

THE IMPACT OF THE JERUSALEM TRIP UPON THE EUNUCH

“ 30b . . . and heard him read the prophet Esaias . . . ” Other versions read, “heard the man reading Isaiah the prophet,” NIV “could hear the official reading the prophet Isaiah out loud,” GWN “he heard the man reading aloud . He was reading from the prophet Isaiah,” IE and “ listened to him reading the prophet Isaiah.” WILLIAMS

Although I have already made a point of this, it seems me that the circumstance here described justifies further comments. We are not provided the details of the eunuch’s visit to Jerusalem. However, his activity on his return signifies the impact of his time in Jerusalem. It also reveals something of what took place during Jewish gatherings. Keep in mind, that this man did not know about the Lord Jesus Christ. His exposure had only been to the Jewish people and their activities under the Law. Yet, he had made an association of the worship of God with the reading of the Scriptures. Later in this book, Paul will deliver a stirring recap of Jewish history in Antioch of Pisidia. During that message he referred to “ the prophets which are read every sabbath day . . . ” in Jerusalem (Acts 13:27). Here was a man who had taken the reading seriously, and, as a consequence, he was reading the Scriptures on the way back home. His heart and mind had apparently been stirred, and thus he was drawn to the Word of God.

Not only was he reading, he was reading out loud, for Philip heard him. Many, myself included, have found that reading Scripture aloud has an undeniable impact upon the soul, moving one to have extended thoughts on the text being read.

We see in this passage the working of the Lord. Philip is led by God to meet a man who has been led to read the Scriptures. None of this is mere coincidence. This is a sterling example of those who seek finding, and those who ask receiving (Matt 7:7-8). It is also an example of someone being drawn to Jesus by God (John 6:44,65). The role of the Scriptures in all of this is very apparent, and is to be duly noted by all. A person or a church that neglects the Word of God is not apt to be drawn to the Lord Jesus, much less receive salvation through Him.

A WISE AND APPROPRIATE QUESTION

“ 30c . . . and said, Understandest thou what thou readest?” Other versions read, “ Do you understand what you are reading?” NKJV “Is the sense of what you are reading clear to you ?” BBE “ Dost thou then know what thou art reading of ?” DARBY “ Thinkest thou that thou understandest what thou readest?” DOUAY “Do you understand it?” LIVING and “Do you really understand what you are reading?” AMPLIFIED

Philip knew that before God understanding is a critical matter. Jesus spoke of those who could not profit from Him or His words as not understanding (Matt 13:13-15). Furthermore, He said that when a person did not understand the Word, “then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away what which was sown in his heart” (Matt 13:19). Conversely, the one who understands the Word is the one who brings forth fruit (Matt 13:23). When explaining why some people “could not believe,” John said it was because God blinded their eyes and hardened their heart so they could not understand (John 12:39-40).

In accounting for the reprobacy of the Gentile world, Paul said they were “without understanding” (Rom 1:31). The fallenness of the human race is accounted for in these words : “there is none that understandeth” (Rom 3:11).

Believers are admonished to “be men” in understanding (1 Cor 14:20). Again Paul admonished them to “understand what the will of the Lord is” (Eph 5:17). Paul prayed for the churches that then “eyes of their understanding” might be opened so they could know essential matters (Eph 1:15-19), and that they might be “filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9). John declared that Jesus “is come, and hath given us an understanding” of God Himself (1 John 5:20).

These things were to some significant degree known by Philip. This is why he asked if the eunuch understood what he was reading. He knew that Scripture has no favorable effect upon person unless he understands it.

There is no hint that the eunuch was reading in a section of Scripture with which Philip was not familiar. Philip appears to have instantly recognized the passage, and therefore confidently asks if the man understood what he was reading. One can only imagine how this whole event would have fared if an average twentieth-century deacon had been dispatched to that chariot.

Here we are introduced to the thoroughness of sincere Jewish teaching, and the caliber of disciples that were developed under the apostles’ doctrine. While we are not sure of the precise time frame involved in this text, it could not have been too long after Pentecost. Yet, here was a man that was grounded in the truth and could handle aright the Word of God. Surely, Philip was a diligent workman that had no need to be ashamed (2 Tim 2:15).

A MAN OF INTEGRITY AND WISDOM

“ 31a And he said, How can I, except some man should guide me?” Other versions read, “ explains it to me,” NIV “ How is that possible when I have no guide?” BBE “unless some man shew me?” DOUAY “How can I understand, unless some one instruct me ?” MRD “Why, how am I able , if some one may not guide me?” YLT “How in the world could I, unless someone teaches me ?” WILLIAMS “Why, how can I unless someone shall show me the way ?” MONTGOMERY and “How is it possible for me to do so unless someone explains it to me and guides me [in the right way] ?” AMPLIFIED

There is altogether too much naivety in the professing church on this subject. I am not sure of the value of holding up signs at a public event reading John 3:16, or dropping copies of Scripture, or sections of Scripture in populated areas.

We immediately learn that the man had been seriously considering what he was reading. His thoughts were wrapped up in the text so that he instantly responded to Philip’s inquiry.

JUST READ THE BIBLE

Perhaps you have heard people say to the spiritually unlearned, “Just read the Bible.” Also, it is possible for a person to read the Scriptures naively, thinking that repeated exposure to them will somehow cause the meaning of them to come through. Well, we have before us a man who was exposing his mind to the Scriptures – a choice section of them at that. If a person can really study themselves into an initial grasp of the truth, then surely this man will be able to do it. Apollos is another case in point. He was a man who was “mighty in the Scriptures.” He was also “instructed in the way of the Lord, being fervent in spirit,” He even “taught diligently the things of the Lord.” Yet, he had this dark spot in his understanding. He knew “only the baptism of John.” This was at least twenty-four years after Pentecost. However, notwithstanding, the path of Apollos was crossed with two who knew the way of the Lord more perfectly, just as the account of our text (Acts 18:24-26).

HOW CAN I

I am impressed with the guileless manner of this unnamed man. To him, arriving at an understanding on his own simply was not possible. He seemed to sense that repeated exposure to the text would not magically clear it up. Now, all of this reflects the manner of the Kingdom, and the ordained way of learning. Initially, a person cannot read their way into Jesus. In this case, we have a man who was obviously learned and in possession of a disciplined mind. Yet, as it is written, “How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!” (Rom 10:14-15). That is the Divine arrangement. Paul confirmed this when he said to the Corinthians, “Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man ?” (1 Cor 3:5).

There is altogether too much naivety in the professing church on this subject. I am not sure of the value of holding up signs at a public event reading John 3:16, or dropping copies of Scripture, or sections of Scripture in populated areas. I would certainly not be so foolish as to set myself against such a work. However, at some point, a person who actually knows the truth must deliver it to the people. That is one reason for Christ’s injunction, “Preach the Gospel to every creature” (Mk 16:15).

THE INTERDEPENDENCE OF THE BODY OF CHRIST

There is something also to be learned here regarding the interdependency within the body of Christ. No member of the body of Christ can stand on their own, for we are “every one members one of another” (Rom 12:5). No one can say of other members of the body, “I have no need of thee” (1 Cor 12:21). God has placed all believers “in the body as it hath pleased Him” (1 Cor 12:18). That placement is in order that mutual edification may take place. Furthermore, “the body” is certainly not limited to a specific congregation, or even to those who remain alive in the world.

It is possible to read the Scriptures with minimal benefit, simply because the mind is not exposed to the insights of other members of the body of Christ. Permit to cite a few examples.

- David, for example, was a man with understanding far beyond his peers. He had a working knowledge of the Law, and frequently asked the Lord for understanding (Psa 119:34,73, 125,144,169). Yet, he also had his own seer, or prophet. It is written, “For when David was up in the morning, the word of the LORD came unto the prophet Gad, David's seer, saying” (2 Sam 24:11). Note, God did not speak to David, but to David's “seer” – a name formerly applied to a prophet (1 Sam 9:9).

- The example of young Jesus who asked questions. Although He was the Son of God, yet, when young, He availed Himself of known teachers. “And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions. And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers” (Lk 2:46-47). We know that Jesus did not always have all knowledge and understanding, for as He grew, He is said to have increased in wisdom (Lk 2:52).

- Take the proclamation of the mystery, kept secret from the beginning of the world. Although it was hidden in the text of Moses and the prophets, God did not reveal it to everyone. He made it known to Paul, and Paul proclaimed it to the people. “If ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward: How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote afore in few words, whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ) Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit” (Eph 3:5). Paul correlated this teaching with Scripture, but apparently everyone could not do this.

A Modern Circumstance

In our times there is a circumstance similar to that of Apollos. In his case, he had been subjected to the teaching of those with limited understanding. The effects of that lingered with him for some time, until Aquila and Priscilla discerned the situation, and gave him the advantage of more advanced understanding. I am persuaded there are great numbers of believers in our day who have also been limited by the understanding of those who have taught them. The impact of a great falling away cannot be understated. This can prove to be an excellent opportunity for those with understanding to bring desired advantages to hungry souls. It will require, however, that they be discerning, and themselves free from sectarian tendencies. There is a great need for insightful proclamation.

SEEKING FIRST THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND HIS RIGHTEOUSNESS

“ 31b And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.” Other versions read, “he asked ,” NKJV “ invited ,” NASB “ besought ,” ASV “he made ,” BBE “ begged ,” DARBY “ requested ,” MRD “ urged ,” NJB “ earnestly invited,” WEYMOUTH “ earnestly requested ,” AMPLIFIED “ called Philip near,” LITV and “asked.” MKJV

Here we behold the Lord working in the human heart. Here is a dignitary traveling on a desert road reading the Bible. A man appears out of nowhere, and asks him if he understands what he is reading. The man does not ask the eunuch what text he is reading, but gave him reason to believe he could assist him. Some men might have considered this to be a robber, or someone bent on doing mischief. But this is not the attitude of the eunuch.

The word “desired” is a strong one. Coming from the Greek word Pareka,lese,n (para-ka-le-sen), it has a lexical meaning of “to call to one’s side, call for, summon.” As used here it means “to beg, entreat, beseech,” THAYER “earnestly ask for, implore, beg,” FRIBERG “request, ask, appeal to,” UBS and “To ask for earnestly, to request, to plead for.” LOUW-NIDA

It is apparent that this man would not take “No” for an answer. His appetite had been whetted for the word of the Lord, and he seized upon the opportunity to know it more fully.

- Here is an excellent example of seeking first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness (Matt 6:33).
- It also lives out hungering and thirsting after righteousness (Matt 5:6).
- There is also a sense in which this is calling upon the name of the Lord (Acts 2:21).
- This is how “the love of the truth” impacts upon the heart 2 Thess 2:10).

“The written Word stands immovable, the touchstone of truth, the standard of doctrine, the referee in doubt, the pattern and model, the crucible of error, the court of final appeal in all controversies of faith.” PULPIT COMMENTARY

This man not only confessed his ignorance, and his understanding of how to address it, but was eager to do something about it. Such a strong desire will be answered to his thorough satisfaction.

I know by experience how satisfying this response was to Philip. Having himself seen the truth, his love for it was accompanied by a burning desire to speak it. That is how “the spirit of faith” affects a person (2 Cor 4:13). Young Elihu was not the last man who determined, “I will speak, that I may be refreshed” (Job 32:20).

We have no lived in this area for fifteen years (1992-2007). During that time there have been two things that have greatly impacted my life. First, the disappointment at the relative rarity of the love of the truth in this area, coupled with a fervent pressing toward the mark. During our first years here, this condition proved to be very disconcerting. However, it was wonderfully offset by the presence of a very commendable spirit in these meetings, and the spiritual quality of the people who attend them. In fact, it is of a caliber that I have rarely witnessed anywhere else.

Much of my own advance in the faith is owing to the presence of such souls. I know they are of great price in the heavenly realms, and that a book of remembrance has no doubt been written of these very gatherings. They have also been a source of strength to many people who are not able to attend them.

CONCLUSION

Thus far in the book of Acts great things have been done. The day of Pentecost, the preaching in Solomon’s porch, and the marvelous prayer of the brethren when they were threatened. There have been remarkable preaching and defenses of the faith before the Jewish leaders, and a host of signs and wonders as well. Stephen has confounded those who refused to believe on Jesus, and has nobly laid down His life for the sake of Christ, bearing a strong testimony in the doing of it. When the church was scattered by persecution, it did not faint, but the disciples went everywhere preaching the Word. Philip took up the cause following the death of Stephen, and powerfully preached Christ in the city of Samaria, working signs and wonders among them as well. The entire city believed, and was freed from influence of Simon the Sorcerer. Now, a dignitary from Ethiopia is going to be subjected to the preaching of the Gospel, and will carry the truth into that barren region. All of this is the marvelous working of the Lord.

The particular thing to be seen here is that all of this was done by grace through faith. Those involved in the work were not recognized leaders, and there were no strategy meetings to orchestrate the events that took place. This was simply God working among a people whose faith was unqualifiedly in Him.

This is the newness of life being displayed before us. It is the New Covenant in operation, and the Holy Spirit working in an environment where He is neither quenched nor grieved. The truth has sway because of the purity and fervency of the preaching. This is not a first century phenomenon but Jesus at work, building His church, sending out preachers, confronting unbelief, and giving repentance and forgiveness of sins.

THE CONVERSION OF THE EUNUCH

“ 8:32 The place of the scripture which he read was this, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth: 33 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth. 34 And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man? 35 Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. 36 And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? 37 And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. 38 And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. 39 And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing. 40 But Philip was found at Azotus: and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Caesarea. ” (Acts 7:32-40)

INTRODUCTION

Having been directed by a holy angel to go to a certain place, and then by the Holy Spirit to join himself to a certain chariot, Philip now finds himself sitting in that chariot with a dignitary from Ethiopia who is reading the Scriptures. The direction, though given supernaturally, and outside of the realm of nature, was nevertheless discerned and effective. There is something to be seen here That is of especial value. In Christ Jesus, we not only are reconciled to God, we are placed in the heavenly places with Christ Jesus (Eph 2:6). There, we are brought to a place where we are more aware of the things of God, and of the Lord Himself. Having been cleansed from sin, and with our conscience purged from dead works, the reluctance that sometimes characterized those of earlier times is not found. A few examples of previous responses of holy men will suffice to confirm this point.

- MOSES. When Moses was called of God, he responded, “And Moses said unto the LORD, O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken unto thy servant: but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue . . . O Lord, please send someone else to do it NIV ” (Ex 4:10).

- JEREMIAH. When the Lord called Jeremiah to be a prophet unto the nations, he responded, “Then said I, Ah, Lord GOD! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child” (Jer 1:6).

- SOLOMON. Following David’s death, when Solomon took the office of king, he said to the Lord, “And now, O LORD my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David my father: and I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in” (1 Kgs 3:7).

- ISAIAH. In a vision, when Isaiah saw the Lord high and lifted up, he responded, “Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts” (Isa 6:5).

I am careful not to stand in criticism of these men of God, and that is not the point of making this observation. It is rather to confirm the superiority of the New Covenant and its impact upon the people. Previous saints had not yet received the promise that is fulfilled only in Christ – even though they “died in faith.” As it is written, “These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth” (Heb 11:13), And again, “And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise : God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect ” (Heb 11:39-40).

Those who sit in judgment on these saints of old do well to remember the spiritually primitive nature of the times in which they lived. Their seeming slowness was not owing to any dulness of hearing or hardness of heart. It was not because they did not have faith in God, or desire to be in His presence. It was rather the effects of a defiled conscience, which the blood of bulls and goats could not purge (Heb 10:1-4). The sin of the world had not yet been taken away, and the reconciliation of men to God had not yet been effected. It simply was not possible for them to respond to God as though all of those blessed New Covenant realities had taken place. They were hindered because the time of liberty had not yet come. However, it is here now!

A lot of the religion of our time dignifies similar responses to the Lord today, as though the conditions that existed during the time of the patriarchs still prevailed. But they do not. This is the day when a removal of sin and consequent reconciliation to God has taken place. Furthermore, God has been satisfied with what has been accomplished, and has consequently exalted His Son to the place of absolute and total preeminence. The Son is now effectively bringing many sons to glory, and all of the promised benefits of the New Covenant are in place.

THE MARVEL OF IT ALL

If Philip had told anyone but believers how his connection with the Ethiopian eunuch had come to pass, they probably would not have believed him. Even in our time, there are some who pay little attention to the glorious manner in which Philip was directed, and how quickly he assessed and responded to that direction. The years of the reign of the great harlot (Rev 17:1,15,16; 19:2) have served to dull the minds of men to the “wonderful works of God.” Earlier in the history of the world, there was a keen awareness of a dimension of working that extended outside the confines of nature. Even the heathen were aware of these such transcendent occurrences, as confirmed in Pharaoh (Ex 8:8), the inhabitants of Jericho (Josh 2:10-11), Balak (Num 22:4-6), the sailors on Jonah’s vessel (Jonah 1:10-11), and others. When Gideon encountered a holy angel who was calling him to a work, the thought did not occur to him that it was no longer possible for miracles to be wrought. Instead, he inquired concerning the absence of them (Judges 6:13). When Zacharias came out of the Temple after confronting an angel, the people “perceived that he had seen a vision” (Lk 1:21). Also, when Jesus walked among men, there was a sense of powers outside the boundary of nature. People knew about demons (Lk 9:39; John 10:21). When the disciples saw Jesus walking on the water, they thought it was a spirit (Matt 14:26).

This is by no means intended to encourage a quest for the miraculous. I am rather pointing out that the conception men have of God and the unseen realm has been significantly altered by the promotion of human wisdom. In such a context, there is a natural tendency to underplay the necessity and power of faith. There is also a corresponding disposition to accent the wisdom and works of men. In my judgment, there is far more danger in these earthy views than men dare to imagine. They tend to form a spiritual crust over the hearts of men, confine their minds to the domain of nature, and render them obtuse concerning the things of God.

My point here is that such an environment was not present during the time of our text. It remained for men to build such an environ with the blocks of human wisdom and hardness of heart toward the Lord. All of this means that if we read the book of Acts with a mind to justify a religious institution of support a theological position, we are off on the wrong foot. To put it more succinctly, we are pointed in the wrong direction, and cannot possibly arrive at a proper conclusion.

SOMETHING TO NOTE

Keep in mind, in the account of Philip we are not speaking of an Apostle, or even one of the “elders” with whom they frequently met (Acts 15:2,4,6; 15:22,23; 16:4). He did not have the powers of an apostle, as confirmed in the sending of Peter and John to pray that the Samaritans might receive the Holy Spirit. Yet, this man was dispatched by an angel from God, and directed by the Holy Spirit. The Lord did not lead him to remain with Peter and John, who were of higher rank in the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:28). Philip had advanced in the Lord and, like Timothy, could be trusted to work independently. He did not do the work of an apostle, but the work of an evangelist. In fact, he is later referred to as “Philip the evangelist” (Acts 21:8). His work complemented that of the apostles, and did not conflict with it. That, of course, is the manner of valid Kingdom endeavors. It is also what makes division and sectarianism wrong. When the things that professing Christ’s do cause conflict among those who are living by faith, they cannot be right.

PHILIP WILL TAKE CHARGE

Now, Philip will take charge of the situation, assuming the leadership of this man of great authority. Suddenly, and without any objection on his part, this man is the student and Philip is the teacher; he is the learned and Philip is the instructor. Philip, who, so far as the record is concerned, had never instructed a man of this intellectual and social caliber, has no difficulty with the task. He will know how to answer the eunuch’s questions, and what to do when the time comes that requires a decision on his part. All of this is a wonderful example of the newness of life being lived out in a production manner. It is a glimpse of the impact faith has upon the one possessing it, and the wisdom that accompanies it.

WHERE THE EUNUCH WAS READING

“ 8:32 The place of the scripture which he read was this, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth: 33 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.”

Here we have a wonderful example of God working all things together for the good of those who love Him and are called according to His purpose. In this case, the working is taking place before the person is baptized into Christ. As with Cornelius, who will surface later, this man was a worshiper of God, and a devout man. His actions testify to his quest for the Lord and his desire to please Him. Jude refers to this kind of Divine activity as individuals being “kept for Jesus Christ,” NASB or “preserved in Jesus Christ, and called” (Jude 1:1). In nature, there is life prior to birth – so much so that the unborn are referred to as persons (Gen 25:23; Rom 9:11-13; Jer 1:5; Lk 1:44; Gal 1:15). Even so, in the Spirit there is also life prior to being born again. It is nature, it is preliminary life, and is not intended to be an end of itself. However, it is very real, and is part of the process of being saved. From one point of view, it is evidenced in the individual being drawn to Jesus (John 6:44). From another point of view, it is the presence of faith, the expression of repentance, and the making of confession. On the day of Pentecost it was confirmed when men called upon the name of the Lord, asking what they should do (Acts 2:37). In Cornelius, it was his prayers being heard and his alms being recognized in heaven (Acts 10:4). In our text, it is a man going to Jerusalem to worship, then devoting himself to reading the Scriptures and seeking to understand them. The orchestration of the events is so precise, that the place in Scripture in which the man is reading is most exact.

THE PLACE OF THE SCRIPTURE

“The place of the scripture which he read was this . . .” Other versions read, “the passage of Scripture,” NASB “the place in the book,” BBE “the portion,” CJB and “the contents of the writing.” YLT

Just as in the Tabernacle and Temple, there are places in Scripture that are more sacred than others. This does not mean they are less inspired, or any less the Word of God – any more than the outer court and holy place were not a very real part of the Tabernacle and the Temple. However, the Holy of Holies was the most important. This was not owing to the way it was built, or the materials used to construct that places or the articles of furniture in them. Rather, it was because the Most Holy Place had more directly to do with the Lord Himself. His presence was more immediate there, and there is where He communed with the ordained representatives from “between the cherubim” that were part of the Mercy Seat, situated on top of the ark of the covenant (Ex 25:22).

The Greek word translated “place” is perioch . (peri-ox-ay). Its lexical meaning is, “an encompassing, that which is contained,” THAYER and “passage or portion, content or wording.” FRIBERG

The Scriptures are an expressed intellectual structure in which the truth is housed – a treasure house for the heart and mind. There are various rooms in this house that contain bodies of Divine rationale. Technically, the Scriptures, or inspired writings, are a container in which truth is deposited. Peter referred to them in this manner when he wrote, “Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded” (1 Pet 2:6). The Greek word translated “contained” is perie,cei (peri-ox-ei), the verb form of the very word used in this text (“place”). The use of this word confirms the importance of the Scriptures themselves – the writings. Loose translations that reflect an inordinate attempt to accommodate a given generation are not always good. It is possible for a language to lack a words that precisely parallel the Scriptural text.

Transliteration

This is what gave rise to the transliteration of Scriptural words that “contained” more than another language was capable of containing. In transliteration, each letter of the original language is translated into a corresponding English letter. This is done because there is not a parallel English word that conveys the idea of the original language. Here is a sampling of transliterated Bible words.

Containers of Scripture

Extending the thought of Scripture being a container, some of these containers pertain to right and wrong, as defined by the Divine nature , for “the law” contains “the form of knowledge and of the truth” (Rom 2:20). While this law was the framework of the First Covenant, made with Israel, it is not the framework of Scripture itself. This has to do with the duty of man, and, as such, is not the heart and soul of Scripture. There is also a room, so to speak, that deals with domestic life and interpersonal relationships . Expressions of this kind are found in the Law, Proverbs, the Prophets, and within the apostolic writings. There is also a room that might be defined as History . This relates the working of God among the sons of men. Of particular note is His dealings with Israel, as noted in the Law and the Prophets, and the church, as noted in Acts and portions of the Epistles and the Revelation.

THE HEART OF SCRIPTURE

However, the largest, and key, room of Scripture concerns the great salvation of God, as revealed in the Person and work of Jesus Christ. As it is written, “the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy” (Rev 19:10). These sections are precisely expressed in the various prophecies relating to the Messiah, the record of His life and words when He walked among men, and the expositions of the Gospel as related in the apostles’ doctrine. This room is the heartbeat of Scripture. Life is initiated and sustained from this room. Apart from the things it contains spiritual growth is not possible. In the grand work of conforming people to the image of Christ (Rom 8:29), participating in the Divine nature (2 Cor 3:18), and being changed “from glory to glory” (2 Cor 3:18), the minds of men must be subjected to Scriptures that focus upon the Person, accomplishments, and ministry of Jesus Christ.

Those who preach through the Bible have done a good thing in acquainting people with the text of scripture. However, unless they have related the Scriptures to the Christ, they have brought no lasting value to the people. They have only given them an academic advantage, not a spiritual one. This is why Jesus said, “Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life” (John 5:39-40).

There are still men who approach the Word of God like the Pharisees, not making an association of all Scripture with Jesus Christ. It is this required association that enables the Scriptures to make one “wise unto salvation” (2 Tim 3:15). Those who fail to make this association have the tendency to superimpose their own perceived agenda on the Scriptures. Furthermore, the Scriptures have been given to us in a form that makes them appear to justify preconceived notions of their emphasis. This is because the erroneous view of Scripture blocks out its real meaning, so that it cannot be seen by the reader. This is precisely why the Sadducees, thinking themselves to be experts in the text of scripture, were told by Jesus, “Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God” (Mat 22:29). It is also why it is necessary for human understanding to be opened to the meaning of the Scriptures. Therefore it is said of Jesus, “Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures” (Luke 24:45).

No understanding is valid that allows for Jesus to be upstaged, overshadowed, or relegated to a secondary position. This is why religious specialists who focus on particular people groups, unique human associations, or the moral obligations of men, invariably neglect Jesus. The people who follow them always have a small and undetailed view of the Christ. Their understanding of the salvation of God is never adequate. Whatever apparent good is realized from their efforts, it does not have to do with clarifying the nature and content of the Gospel. I am going to wax bold and say there are not exceptions to this rule. Even if a person fastens upon the church itself, and makes it his aim to purify it, restore it, or make it more effective, he will eventually end up diminishing the worth of the Son in the minds of the people.

The reason for this circumstance is obvious. God will not allow any person or group of persons to arrive at a valid view of the truth independently of His Son. Matters relating to morality are only as clear as one’s perception of Jesus. Confidence and assurance, so essential to the life of faith, cannot extend beyond the boundary of one’s understanding of Jesus. People who boast of being happy and confident in Jesus, yet who are fundamentally lacking in their understanding of Him, are not what they imagine themselves to be. They are like little children who run and play with glee, thinking all is well while storm clouds hang over their heads.

WHY IS ALL OF THIS NECESSARY

It might not be apparent why I have spent so much time on this subject. There is a reason for it. When Philip found the eunuch, he was feeding in the right room. He was reading from a proper “place,” of area in which truth was contained. For those who are expert in Scripture, knowing how to handle it aright (2 Tim 2:15), it is possible to begin at any text and advance toward the Christ – for He is in every text. However, there are texts that are more easily seen as being focused upon Christ, and thus can be more readily expounded in relation to Him. This is the eunuch was not found reading from Proverbs or Ecclesiastes. The distance between the point of Scripture in which he was reading and the Lord Jesus Christ was shorter than it could have been from other texts.

It is not wise to attempt to formulate a static approach to the handling of Scripture, and that is not my intention. However, it is imperative to understand that a proper understanding of Scripture is directly related with its correlation to the Lord Jesus Christ and the reason for His being sent into the world, dying, rising from the dead, and returning to heaven. Where this correlation cannot be made, it is not possible to have a proper understanding of Scripture.

It is for this reason that the text that was being read by the eunuch was of preeminent importance. It was not dealing with the duties of men, but with the atoning death of the Lamb of God. It was not primarily a commentary on the wickedness of men – although that could certainly be seen in what is there declared. However, it was even more a commentary on both God and His Son – God for making such an investment, and the Son for carrying it out so willingly. Truth can be seen more precisely in the clear waters of Divinity. It cannot be so seen in the murky waters of humanity, whether in the area of duty or potential. How marvelously this is confirmed in this passage.

The text from which the eunuch was reading was Isaiah 53:7-8. This is a portion of a large section devoted to a prophecy of the coming Messiah. In the 52nd chapter, the Lord declared that His people would come to know Him, even though they would first be taken away and their enemies rule over them “Now therefore, what have I here, saith the LORD, that my people is taken away for nought? they that rule over them make them to howl, saith the LORD; and my name continually every day is blasphemed. Therefore my people shall know my name: therefore they shall know in that day that I am he that doth speak: behold, it is I” (Isa 52:5-6). The people are presented as being in exile, when a good word is sent to them by God Himself. “How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!” (Isa 52:7). Those “good tidings” would prove to be the Gospel of Christ, as Romans 10:12-15 confirms. The glorious message would prove to be a uniting factor, bring the people to “see eye to eye” (Isa 52:8). That message would have directly to do with salvation – a salvation in which God would make Himself known: “The LORD hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God” (Isa 52:10). It would also have a compelling influence upon the people who received it, moving them to “touch no unclean thing,” and to keep themselves clean (Isa 52:11). The message would also be associated with deliverance, with the Lord going before the people, and coming after them as well (Isa 52:12).

Isaiah declares that all of this will be accomplished by a single Person, referred to as God’s “Servant.” Although He would be exceedingly wise, He would be rejected, and His appearance disfigured by His enemies. Notwithstanding His maltreatment, He would be finally exalted and extolled. “Behold, My Servant shall deal prudently, He shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high. As many were astonished at Thee; His visage was so marred more than any man, and His form more than the sons of men” (Isa 52:10-14). In His enthronement He would sprinkle “many nations,” raising up a saved people within them, and thereby bring glory to His name. His exaltation would be so thorough, that it would shut the mouths of kings when they eventually see Him as He is: “So shall he sprinkle many nations; the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider” (Isa 52:15).

Now, this is the “place” in Scripture in which the eunuch was plowing, considering the Servant of whom Isaiah spoke. As our text opens, the man has progressed to the middle of the fifty-third chapter – a text that is opening up what was involved in the “visage” of God’s Servant being marred more than any of the sons of men.

LED AS A SHEEP TO THE SLAUGHTER

“ . . . He was led as a sheep to the slaughter . . .” Other versions read, “to be put to death,” BBE “to be slaughtered,” CJB and “taken away to be killed.”

Although Himself prophesied to be “a leader and commander to the people,” the prelude to the accomplishment of redemption required Him to be “led” by His enemies. He was “led as a sheep to the slaughter,” but unlike the unsuspecting sheep, Jesus knew what was happening. From one point of view, He knew His captors were going to have Him killed. From the higher point of view, He knew that this was the reason for which He came into

He did not defend Himself or answer the false charges that were leveled against Him. This was because He was fulfilling the will of His Father. From one point of view, that made all of the attending circumstances incidental.

the world – “to give His life, a ransom for many” (Matt 20:28). In the giving of His life, or laying it down (John 10:15,17), He submitted to His enemies – at least, that is the way it appeared. Actually, He was submitting to the will of God, which He agreed to fulfill before He came into the world (Heb 10:7-8). The fortieth Psalm, which is quoted in the ten chapter of Hebrews, says of the coming Messiah, “I delight to do Thy will, O My God” (Psa 40:8).

Thus the text says that Jesus was led “ AS a sheep to the slaughter.” That is, this is the way it appeared. In actuality, the “determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God” was being worked out, and the people were carrying out what God’s “counsel determined before to be done” (Acts 2:23; 4:28). At this time, Jesus appeared helpless, but it was only because He humbled Himself, becoming “obedient unto death, even the death of the cross” (Phil 2:8). Although He was, in truth, “the Lion of the tribe of Judah” (Rev 5:5), as He was led away, He appeared as an innocent and unsuspecting lamb.

LIKE A LAMB DUMB BEFORE HIS SHEARER

“ . . . and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth . . .” Other versions read, “He made no sound,” BBE and “He did not say a word.” CEV

As a sheep remains docile and silent while its ,wool is sheared from it, so the Lord Jesus humbler submitted to His enemies, who attempted to remains His dignity, and deprive Him of all rights. Lest we forget what they did to Jesus, recall His shearing.

- When before the high priest, they spit in His face, pummeled Him with their fists, slapped Him, and challenged Him, “Prophecy unto us, Thou Christ, Who is he that smote Thee?” (Matt 26:67).
- The soldiers of the governor (Pilate) “stripped Him” of His own garment, and, in mockery, placed upon Him a scarlet robe” (Matt 27:28).
- They wove a crown of thorns, put it on His head, and a reed in His hand, bowing before Him and mockingly saying, “Hail, King of the Jews” (Matt 27:29).
- They spit on Him, taking a staff and beating Him on the head (Matt 27:30).

And what was the response of the Lord to all of this? When before the high priest, “Jesus held His peace ” (Matt 26:63). When before Pilate, “He answered him to never a word ; insomuch that the governor marveled greatly” (Mat 27:14). He did not defend Himself or answer the false charges that were leveled against Him. This was because He was fulfilling the will of His Father. From one point of view, that made all of the attending circumstances incidental. However, you may rest assured that there is coming a day when those who treated Jesus in such a manner will give an account of themselves to God.

IN HIS HUMILIATION

“ 33 In His humiliation . . .” Other versions read, “Being of low degree,” BBE “in humility,” DOUAY “when He humbled Himself,” GWN “He was humiliated,” NLT “because of His humbleness,” TNT “He was shamed,” IE and “He was treated like a nobody.” CEV

According to appearance, it looked as though men were humiliating Jesus. However, in actuality, He was humbling Himself (Phil 2:8). He did not go through the series of events leading to and consummating in His death with bitterness of heart, or a vindictive spirit. Instead, He set His face toward the joy that was set before Him. As it is written, “who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God” (Heb 12:2). The shame of Hebrews twelve is the humiliation of Acts 8:33.

In Christ’s “humiliation” every advantage was taken away from Him. There was nor justice given to Him by men – no fairness, equity, legal propriety. In His trial by the Jewish council, false witnesses presented the charges for which He was tried

The precise words of our text – “in His humiliation” – are not found in the Hebrews version of Isaiah 53:7-8. However, the English translation of Septuagint Version reads, “in His humiliation His judgment was taken away.” It is apparent, therefore, that the eunuch was reading from the Septuagint version of the Hebrew Scriptures. The Hebrews Scriptures read, “He was taken from prison” (Isa 53:8). Other English versions read, “by oppression,” NIV “by a perversion,” NRSV “they took away from Him help,” BBE “forcibly, after sentence, He was taken,” NJB and “by restraint.” YLT

This is a commentary on the occasion when the Jews finished their sentence upon Jesus, and led Him away bound, to Pilate the Governor. Thus it is written, “And when they had bound Him, they led Him away, and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate the governor” (Matt 27:2). They led Him “from prison” in the sense of Him being bound and confined to the palace of Caiaphas until led to Pilate.

En route to the cross, there are three occasions in which Jesus was “led.”

- WHEN ARRESTED IN THE GARDEN. “And they that had laid hold on Jesus led Him away to Caiaphas the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled” (Matt 26:57).

- WHEN TAKEN FROM CAIAPHAS TO PILATE. “And when they had bound Him, they led Him away, and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate the governor” (Matt 27:2).

- WHEN TAKEN TO BE CRUCIFIED. “And after that they had mocked Him, they took the robe off from Him, and put His own raiment on Him, and led Him away to crucify Him” (Matt 27:31).

In all of this, the word “humiliation” proves to be a most adequate description – and Jesus voluntarily submitted to it all. As used in this text, the meaning of “humiliation” is, “spiritual abasement,” THAYER “the experience of being abased,” FRIBERG “low condition,” LEH and “humble station.” GINGRICH

HIS JUDGMENT WAS TAKEN AWAY

“ . . . His judgment was taken away . . .” Other versions read, “His justice was taken away,” NKJV “He was deprived of justice,” NIV “justice was denied Him,” NIV “ His cause was not given a hearing,” BBE and “and did not have a fair trial.” CEV

In Christ's "humiliation" every advantage was taken away from Him. There was nor justice given to Him by men – no fairness, equity, legal propriety. In His trial by the Jewish council, false witnesses presented the charges for which He was tried (Matt 26:60). Even Pilate, himself anything but a paragon of virtue, "knew that for envy they had delivered Him" (Matt 27:18).

When the appointed time arrived – "the hour" (Matt 26:45; Mk 14:35,41; John 17:1) – there was absolutely no justice extended to Jesus. All judicature was "taken away."

So far as the record is concerned, no one rose in His defense at this time. Earlier, shortly after Jesus had fed the five thousand, Nicodemus rose to His defense before the Pharisees who were plotting against Christ (John 7:50-51). But his voice was not heard after Jesus was arrested in the garden. During the time of Isaiah, Israel was rebuked for the absence of judgment in the land (Isa 59:8,15). But never was judgment so lacking as when they were granted license from God Almighty to judge the Son of man!

If there was any doubt about what sin had done to the human race, it was abundantly demonstrated in the trial of the Lord Jesus. Here was the chosen race, which had been given a superior Law (Deut. 4:8), and yet when they sat in judgment upon the Christ of God, all sound judgment was abandoned. This highlighted the depravity of the fallen human nature. And the injustice of it all did not stop with the Jews, but extended into Gentile domain, and included the political world as well. The Roman Empire boasted of its legal system, and yet that very system was employed to condemn Jesus. The early church summarized it well in their prayer to God when they were threatened by the Jewish council. "The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ. For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together" (Acts 4:26-27).

WHO SHALL DECLARE HIS GENERATION

" . . . and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth." Other versions read, "who shall relate His generation," NASB "who can speak of His descendants," NIV "who can describe His generation," NRSV "who has knowledge of His family," BBE "who will tell of his posterity," NAB "there will be no story about his descendants," IE

Some of the versions completely miss the point in this text – namely God's Word, GWN The Living Bible, LIVING and The Amplified Bible. AMPLIFIED They render the verse as follows: "who from His generation will talk about His life," GWN "and who can express the wickedness of the people of His generation?" LIVING and "Who can describe or relate in full the wickedness of His contemporaries (generation)?" AMPLIFIED The error of these liberal translations – and it is serious – is that they describe the wicked people of that age as Christ's generation. Nothing could be further from the truth. The point of the text is that Jesus had no fleshly generation.

Throughout revealed history, the generations of people were declared. We read of "the generations of Adam" (Gen 5:1), "the generations of Noah" (Gen 6:9), "the generations of the sons of Noah" (Gen 10:1), and "the generations of Terah" (Gen 11:27). There are also "the generations of" Abraham (Gen 17:9), Ishmael (Gen 25:12), Isaac (Gen 25:19), Esau (Gen 36:1), Jacob (Gen 37:1), and Aaron and Moses (Num 3:1).

The phrase "the children of . . ." – which is generational language – is mentioned 1,355 times in Scripture. The phrase "the children of Israel" accounts for 635 of those occurrences, which accents the fact that they descended from Jacob. Genealogies were a large part of Jewish history (1 Chron 4:33; 5:1; 5:7; 7:9,40; 9:22; 2 Chron 31:16; ,17,18; Ezra 2:62; ; 8:1,3; Neh 7:5,64). Priests were reckoned by their genealogy (2 Chron 31:17). The various ministers of the Temple were also reckoned by genealogy (1 Chron 9:22). Christ's entrance into the world was according to a very strict genealogy. In fact, the Spirit makes a special point of this in both Matthew (Matt 1:1-17) and Luke (Lk 3:23-38).

Yet, when it came to Jesus Himself, He had no fleshly offspring. The bloodline ended with Him. Yet, He did have a generation – but it was not after the Adamic order. In fact, Jesus was the “Last Adam” (1 Cor 15:45). In a very real sense, in Him, the race of Adam was terminated. That is why Jesus is also called “the Second Man” (1 Cor 15:47). That is, in Jesus a new race was started that would be called “the sons of God” (1 John 3:1). All of these would be a “new creation” (2 Cor 5:17), “created in Christ Jesus unto good works” (Eph 2:10), “Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever” (1 Pet 1:23). This is the generation of Jesus, and one of His names is “Everlasting Father” (Isa 9:6). From another point of view, these are “the children” the Father has given to Him (Heb 2:13).

A POINT TO BE CLARIFIED

Many believers are being addressed and treated without regard to them being of a different generation – the generation of Jesus. This is a very real generation! Rather than being seen in relation to Christ, they are being seen as primarily to Adam. When men speak to the children of God, this is a fundamentally flawed approach, and no lasting good can come from it.

Right here we depart from conventional Christianity. Much of what flies under that banner approaches life as though those in Christ were “only human.” The strengths and failings of professing Christians are approached as though they were nothing more than cultured or neglected human traits. But this is not at all the case. There is a race of people who have been “begotten of God,” and they are not of the Adamic order. When it comes to acceptance with God, Adam and all of his progeny have been written off. That is precisely why men “must be born again” (John 3:7). It is why there is such a thing as “the washing of regeneration” (Tit 3:5), the “new creature” (2 Cor 5:17), and “the new man” (Eph 4:24; Col 3:10). It is why believers are referred to as “strangers and pilgrims” in the world (1 Pet 2:11), and those who have been “delivered from this present evil world” Gal 1:4). It is why Jesus said His disciples were “not of the world” (John 15:19; 17:14,16). In Christ they are of another family (Eph 3:15), whose primary citizenship is in heaven (Phil 3:20-21).

It is a matter of deep concern to me that so much preaching, teaching, and religious activity appears to ignore this circumstance – the circumstance of the new creation. The preponderance of preaching and teaching appears to what men should do, or possibly can do. I understand that men tend to gravitate to the view that the Scriptures are primarily a guideline for conduct. Human conduct is, indeed, addressed in Scripture, and without any compromise whatsoever. However, that is not the thrust of Scripture. “The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy,” not the manner in which men are to live (Rev 19:10). The fundamental testimony of Scripture relates to Jesus, not to mankind (John 5:39). Acquaintance with Deity is the main point, not familiarity with duty. Of course, that is expressly stated in First John 5:20: “And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know Him that is true, and we are in Him that is true, even in His Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life.” Seeing this, Paul articulated the aim of His life – which was not to know what he was to do, but the One for whom He would do all things: “That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings . . .” (Phil 3:10).

Many believers are being addressed and treated without regard to them being of a different generation – the generation of Jesus. This is a very real generation! Rather than being seen in relation to Christ, they are being seen as primarily to Adam. When men speak to the children of God, this is a fundamentally flawed approach, and no lasting good can come from it.

This cannot be codified, as ought to be evident. However, it is imperative that any given generation be served by enlightened men who declare the Gospel of Christ without human additives. We are living in a generation that has not done well in producing such individuals.

Preaching to Produce Responses

There is a philosophy of preaching that I once embraced. It is this: that we preach to produce a response. This objective is stated in a number of ways: to win souls, to save souls, to bring people to Christ, etc. It is certainly not that this is an unlawful aim, and therefore there must be taken in expressing personal views on the subject. The aim of preaching is to make the Son of God known, and to announce that Divine provisions have been made for the human dilemma of sin. When the Gospel is preached, it is accompanied with Divine power – power that includes convicting men of sin, righteousness, and judgment (John 16:8-11). It also makes known the wrath of God against all unrighteousness, and the righteousness of God that is given to men through Jesus Christ by faith (Rom 1:16-18).

The message itself is calculated to produce a response in men. It does not need assistance from men. This is the precise point Paul was making when he declared, “For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect” (1 Cor 1:17). He certainly did not mean that baptism was not necessary, or that it was a kind of option available to those who desired it. Nor, indeed, was he suggesting that baptism was unrelated to salvation. Paul himself related baptism to salvation in a most extensive manner (Rom 6:1-23; Col 2:11-15). Those who responded to his message were, in fact, baptized (Acts 16:15,33; 18:8; 19:5). But it was primarily the message of the Gospel itself that produced that response. The message of the Gospel, when believed, will move men to inquire what they ought to do (Acts 2:37).

This cannot be codified, as ought to be evident. However, it is imperative that any given generation be served by enlightened men who declare the Gospel of Christ without human additives. We are living in a generation that has not done well in producing such individuals.

THE RELEVANCY OF THIS

The relevancy of these remarks will be confirmed in the text before us. Philip will preach Christ (the sum and substance of the Gospel) to this man, and a God-honoring response will be produced by the Spirit. The message itself will illicit a that response, thus confirming that it is, in fact, “the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek” (Rom 1:16).

WHO IS ISAIAH SPEAKING ABOUT?

“ 34 And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?”

The eunuch at once sees Philip as a man of spiritual understanding – a man that can clarify the Scriptures.

THE EUNUCH ANSWERED PHILIP

“And the eunuch answered Philip . . .” Other versions read, “the eunuch asked Philip,” NIV “the eunuch said to Philip,” RSV “The eunuch replied to Philip,” CSB “the eunuch addressed Philip,” NJB “ inquired the eunuch,” WEYMOUTH and “The eunuch turned to Philip and said .” PHILLIPS

Even though there is no record of Philip saying something after he had entered the chariot, the text says the eunuch “answered Philip.” The word “answered” means “to respond to something that has been said or done.” THAYER In this case, the only thing Philip had said was, “Understandest thou what thou readest?” (8:30). Now he had entered into the chariot, and is apparently seated by the eunuch. By saying the eunuch “answered,” two things are meant. First, he was continuing to respond to Philip’s question. Secondly, now he was responding to Philip’s presence.

The Manner of the Kingdom

In this text, we are seeing the manner of the Kingdom lived out. When the truth is brought within range of the individual, it is that person’s responsibility to pursue it. When knowledge of the wisdom of Solomon came to the attention of the Queen of Sheba, she went to him, and did not call for him to come to her (1 Kgs 10:1-10). Jesus drew the attention of the people to her action, saying that the response of the people should be even more strong to Him (Matt 12:42).

If John the Baptist was preaching in the vicinity, it is the duty to go to him – which they did (Matt 3:5; Mk 1:5). When Jesus came preaching, the people came to Him (Matt 4:25; 8:1; 12:15; 13:2; 15:30; 19:2; Mk 6:33; 9:25; Lk 4:42; 5:1,15; 6:17; 9:37; 14:25; 21:38; John 6:24; 8:2). This does not mean that Jesus never went to the people. He did go to the helpless Gadarene demoniac (Mk 5:1-2), the poor widow of Nain who had lost her son (Lk 7:11-14), and the Syrophenician woman whose daughter was vexed with a demon (Mk 7:24-26). But most of the time, the people came to Him. They came to Him in the Temple (Matt 21:14; Lk 21:38), the mountain (Matt 15:29-30), the desert (Mk 1:45; Lk 4:42), in the plain (Lk 6:17) and the seashore (Matt 13:1-2; Mk 2:13). He came within their reach, being made accessible to them. Those who were wise then availed themselves of His presence.

This is the principle involved in the saying, “Seek ye the LORD while He may be found, call ye upon Him while He is near” (Isa 55:6). It is not that the LORD has what might be likened to office hours. Rather, it is that when He “visits” the people, they are to take advantage of the opportunity that has been afforded to them. When Jesus entered the world, it is said that He “visited and redeemed His people” (Lk 1:68), and that “the Dayspring from on high hath visited us” (Lk 1:78). Those who heard Jesus with some degree of discernment responded, “God hath visited His people” (Lk 7:16). At that time, if you lived in Syria (a region in Asia), it was your responsibility to go where Jesus was – and that is precisely what they did (Matt 4:24). The ten-city complex called Decapolis was in Syria, and people from that region came to Jesus (Matt 4:25).

Jesus did send His disciples to preach the Gospel to every creature. The record of their going, however, confirms that it involved the people coming to where they were.

I do not know that there are words precise enough to state the seriousness of people not availing themselves of the truth when it is made available to them. Who is able to adequately assess the opportunities to know the truth that have been vouchsafed to men – even men in this very area. Jesus has given us to understand that time will be spent in the day of judgment pointing out squandered opportunities, and the penalties for ignoring them (Matt 12:41-42). For that matter, the unparalleled judgment against Jerusalem that took place in 70 A.D. was, Jesus said, “because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation” (Lk 19:44).

OH WHOM SPEAKETH THE PROPHET?

“ . . . and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?” Other versions read, “ Tell me, please, who is the prophet talking about, himself or someone else?” NIV “ Here's my question to you- is the prophet talking about himself or someone else?” CJB and “I beg of you .” AMPLIFIED

ON THE MARTYRDOM OF ISAIAH

It is held traditionally that Isaiah suffered martyrdom under the wicked Manasseh, by being sawn in two under a memorable tree long said to have stood in the vicinity of Jerusalem (Gemara, Jeban. 4, 13; compare Sanhedr. f. 103 b, and the Targumites, in Assemani, Catalog. Bibl. 'Vat. 1, 452; Trypho,

p. 349; Jerome, in Jes. 57; Origen, in Psalm. 27 in Matthew 23; Tertullian, Patient. 14; Augustine, Civ. Dei, 18, 24; Chronic. Pasch. p. 155). The traditional spot of the martyrdom is a very old mulberry-tree which stands near the Pool of Siloam, on the slopes of Ophel, below the south-east wall of Jerusalem. A similar account of his death is contained in the Ascension of the Prophet Isaiah, an apocryphal work, the Greek original of which was known to the early Church (Epiphan. licer. 40, 2; Jerome, in les. 44, 4, p. 761, etc.), and of which only recently an Ethiopia version has been found and translated by Dr. Laurence, Oxford, 1819 (see Nitzsch, in the Studien und Krit. 1830, 2, 209; Engelhardt, Kirchengesch. Abhandl. 207 sq.). The same fate of Isaiah appears to be alluded to by Josephus (Ant. 10:3, 1). EXCERPT FROM McCLINTOK and STRONG'S

Keep in mind, the eunuch's mind has been stirred by statements made concerning the Lord's "Servant." He has not been reading a record of the Ten Commandments, of the details of what was required in keeping the various feast days. He has been digging in a fertile field, and has uncovered a treasure, although he does not yet know the greatness of its value. Nevertheless, he seems to sense that more is here than has met his eye.

Although an obviously intelligent man, the eunuch had not been able to determine from the statement of its context whether the prophet Isaiah was speaking of himself or some other man. Some could have supposed Isaiah was speaking of himself, for he suffered significantly at the hands of Manasseh, as is recorded in uninspired history.

I do not doubt that this man, being a proselyte, was familiar with the traditions of the Jews concerning Isaiah. From a purely academic point of view, they had more of an interest in the Scriptures and various writings related to them, that is common in our society. Of course, they had been a specially cultured society, deliberately associated with words and manners that were God-centered in nature. It is therefore inconceivable that this man could have been a proselyte, and yet unfamiliar with the records that were of value to the Jews.

This is something worthy of consideration, for a departure from the truth has occurred in our time that has stooped beneath the elementary status of those under the Old Covenant. Today it is not at all unusual to find a professing Christian who lacks even a very elementary understanding of the Word of God and the observations that insightful men have made concerning it. People can be affiliated with the church for years, and yet remain deplorably infantile in their understanding. Intellectually transplanting out situation into the time of our text, the eunuch would not have been aware that Jerusalem was city associated with God, or that the book of Isaiah even existed. Further, it would be highly unlikely that there be a deacon available who was obviously conversant with the Scriptures and competently deliver an understanding of them.

DISCONTENT WITH IGNORANCE

Here was a man that was discontent with being ignorant about Scripture. He had done what he could to obtain an understanding – going to Jerusalem to worship, reading the Scripture, and perhaps in other ways seeking an understanding. He had not concluded that the text was simply beyond him, but was pressing to obtain an understanding of it. Here is an example of a man that was seeking, and He will "find," just as Jesus said. In fulfillment of the promise of Jesus, he will ask, and will receive (Matt 7:7-8).

Unless Jesus was not telling the truth, those who remain in a state of perpetual ignorance, even though they have access to the Scriptures, have not sought. That is why they have not found, They have not asked, and that is the reason they have not received. The Good Shepherd will not allow a seeker to ultimately fail to find. In the text before us, somewhere between Jerusalem and Gaza, a man that was earnestly seeking found, and one that asked received. While engaged in a quest for an understanding, the Lord intervened in the situation, sending a member of the body of Christ to clarify the Word of God, and bring an understanding of Jesus.

HE PREACHED UNTO HIM JESUS

“ 35 Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.”

Philip had apparently not taken a course on soul-winning, or attended a local workshop on personal evangelism. The approach he took could not possibly be taught. He did not subject this man to a system or plan, but adapted himself to the circumstance confronting him. That is an approach that cannot be learned by rote, or fulfilled by following a procedural manual.

HE BEGAN AT THE SAME SCRIPTURE

“Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture . . .” Other versions read, “beginning from this scripture,” NASB “began with this very passage,” NIV “starting with this scripture,” NRSV “commencing with that same portion of Scripture,” WEYMOUTH and “using this scripture as a starting point.” PHILLIPS

Oh, the blessedness of being filled with “wisdom and spiritual understanding.” It is no wonder that Paul prayed for this blessing to be realized by all believers (Col 1:9-11). Attesting to the fact that the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy (Rev 19:10), and that the Scriptures fundamentally testify of Jesus (John 5:39), Philip begins the very text the eunuch has been reading. While I am sure the Holy Spirit was active in this matter, Philip has also familiarized himself with the text of Scripture. He apparently did not have to pray for direction at the time. He certainly did not have to ask this official to go to a text with which he was more familiar. Whatever one may think about Bible knowledge, or an understanding of Scripture, there is more to be seen that the facts that are declared therein. Factual knowledge is essential, to be sure, but it is a beginning, and not an end. A person will not be “taught of God” independently of a knowledge of the text of Scripture. That is why Peter wrote, “Wherefore laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speaking, as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby” (1 Pet 2:1-2). The truth of God is, so to speak, encapsulated in Scripture. Thus Jesus said in His prayer to the Father, “Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth” (John 17:17).

The Role of Scripture

I know that some with a cursory knowledge of the Lord point to the fact that Jesus is pointedly called “the Word of God” (Rev 19:13). He is thus referred to by some as “the Living Word” – even though that expression is found nowhere in any standard version of Scripture. It is not possible for a person to have a cogent and productive thought about Jesus apart from Scripture. Great care must be taken not to present Jesus as though that was not the case. When we talk about “fellowship” with Jesus (1 Cor 1:9), we are by no means suggesting that this is accomplished independently of the Word of God. When we refer to every man being taught by God (John 6:45), we do not suggest that this is realized without the Scriptures. The fact that there is such a thing as “the communion of the Holy Spirit” NKJV (2 Cor 13:14) does not mean that there is a valid spiritual experience that is not linked with the Word of God.

When Israel was faced with those who claimed to have appropriated knowledge from questionable resources, they were told to validate what they said by comparing it with the Scriptures. This Isaiah wrote, “And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them” (Isa 8:19-20). While we may not be exposed to those who have familiar spirits, and wizards that peep and mutter, we do frequently hear citations of authorities extraneous to the Scriptures. It is not uncommon to hear the principles of psychology and sociology cited as though they carried all of the weight of Scripture. Who has not heard statements made upon the basis of statistics, which are compiled upon the basis of random sampling, telling us of how unlikely it is for people of a certain age to learn, or change their views? And, how about those who spout concocted information about the basic emotional and intellectual makeup of men and women, trying to frame how we think of their capabilities, or accounting for their conduct? Oh, we still have those who “peep and mutter,” and we do well to go to the Law and the testimony of Scripture to validate what they say. If they are not speaking according to “this word,” it is because there is “no light in them.” Their self-acclaimed intellectual expertise is nothing more than pretension, and no thinking person should allow them to shape their thinking.

There Is A Direction In Scripture

There is an intention in Scripture – an objective, and a direction toward which all Scripture points. If this was not the case, Philip could not have started at the Scripture being read the eunuch, and proceed where he did.

It ought to also be noted that you cannot begin with something originated by men, and proceed to a Divine conclusion. It is not possible to begin with some world religion and end up at the feet of Jesus – much less with some “science falsely so called.” Jesus cannot be found in something unrelated to the Living God.

HE PREACHED UNTO HIM JESUS

“ . . . and preached unto him Jesus.” Other versions read, “ told him the good news about Jesus,” NIV “ proclaimed to him the good news about Jesus,” NRSV “ gave him the good news about Jesus,” BBE “ announced the glad tidings of Jesus,” DARBY “ began to preach to him concerning our Lord Jesus,” MRD “then used many others to tell him about Jesus,” LIVING and “he announced to him the glad tidings (Gospel) of Jesus and about Him.” AMPLIFIED

Philip took the text that was being read by the dignitary from Ethiopia and made a bee-line for Jesus! He “preached” Jesus. Although I have made a point of this before, it seems to me that it must be made again. Preaching is not instruction, but proclamation. It is the means by which God has chosen to save those who believe. As it is written, “For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching A NOUN, NOT A VERB to save them that believe” (1 Cor 1:21). There is a certain message that must be proclaimed if men are to be saved, and it centers in the person of Jesus. Men cannot be saved through a message that declares moral duty, or that promotes a religious institution. Philip will not preach the church at Jerusalem, or the conversion of the Samaritans. He will “preach” Jesus!

The word “preached” is translated from the Greek word eu^hggeli^sato (eu-ang-le-isa-to). The word has the following lexical meaning: “to bring good news, to announce glad tidings,” THAYER “to make known God’s message of salvation with authority and power,” FRIBERG “to communicate the good news concerning something,” LOUW-NIDA and “to bring or announce good news.” GINGRICH

When preaching, proclaiming, or reporting Christ, the Savior Himself is the subject being delineated. The objective of such preaching is to acquaint the hearer with the Lord Jesus Christ. That acquaintance is from the Divine perspective – the records God has given of His Son

In all of the world, the those in Christ Jesus are the only ones with a message of good news to proclaim. The word “news” speaks of a report of things that have already taken place, or are about to take place. In this case, the “news” is good, or is “glad tidings of good things” (Rom 10:15). Philip’s preaching is not the proclamation of a system, a procedure, or an organization. It is not the declaration of what men can be, or what they can possess. It is not the announcement that all will be well with them if they do this or that. It is not relating probabilities that could take place if certain conditions are met. At its core, Philip’s preaching is a report of what has already been done, and of its relevance to the human race.

In the case of Gospel preaching, it is in view of the message that is proclaimed that a call is made for a response from the hearers. The news itself becomes the incentive for that response. Therefore, when Jesus began to preach, it is written that He said, “Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand” (Matt 4:17). The good news was that the long awaited kingdom that God had promised was about to appear, and in view of that, men ought to repent. We may expect that when Philip preaches, a kind of pressure will be exerted on the eunuch to respond, for that is the nature of the Gospel.

Preaching Christ

What does it mean to “preach Christ” ? It should not surprise you that this kind of preaching is rather uncommon in our time. The matter of preaching Christ is mentioned six times in Scripture.

- “And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ” (Acts 5:42).
- “Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them” (Acts 8:5).
- “And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God” (Acts 9:20).
- “But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness” (1 Cor 1:23).
- “Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will” (Phil 1:15).
- “The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds” (Phil 1:16).

When preaching, proclaiming, or reporting Christ, the Savior Himself is the subject being delineated. The objective of such preaching is to acquaint the hearer with the Lord Jesus Christ. That acquaintance is from the Divine perspective – the records God has given of His Son (1 John 5:10-11). Strictly speaking, preaching Christ is not relating what He has done for the speaker – although there is certainly a place for declaring such a testimony. However, Jesus is not to be defined by the narrow perimeter of personal experience. What God has inspired to be said of Jesus is of the highest priority when it comes to declaring Jesus. In fact, that is all we know concerning Jesus. Our personal experience of Him is defined by what God has revealed concerning Him. Apart from that, we have no way of identifying any valid experience of Jesus. The book of Acts provides us several examples of what was proclaimed about Jesus.

- He was a Man approved of God by miracles, and signs, and wonders (2:21).
- He was delivered up by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God (2:23a; 13:29).
- The Jews, by wicked hands, crucified and slew Him (2:23b; 3:13-15; 4:10; 5:30; 7:52; 10:39; 13:28).
- God raised Him from the dead, freeing Him from the agony of death NASB (2:24,32; 10:40; 13:30,33,37; 17:31).
- He fulfilled David’s prophecy in Psalm 16:8-11, 49:15, and 86:13 and (2:25-26).
- He is the One God raised up to sit on David’s throne (2:29-30; 5:30).
- He has been exalted to the right hand of God (2:33a; 5:31a).
- He has received the promise of the Spirit from the Father, and has poured Him forth upon men (2:33b).

- He will remain seated at the Father's right hand until His enemies are made His footstool, fulfilling the prophecy of Psalm 2:8-12 (2:34-35; 13:33).
- God has made Jesus both Lord and Christ (2:36).
- God has glorified Jesus (3:13).
- Jesus is the Holy and Just One (3:14).
- He is the Prince of life (3:15).
- In His suffering, Jesus fulfilled the words of the prophets (3:18).
- Jesus will remain in heaven until the restoration of all things about which Jesus spoke through the holy prophets (3:21).
- Jesus is the Prophet foretold by Moses in Deuteronomy 18:15-18 (3:22).
- Whoever does not give heed to Jesus will be cut off from the people (3:23).
- All the prophets from Samuel foretold the days of Christ (3:24).
- God first sent Jesus to the Jews to turn them away from their iniquity (3:26).
- Jesus is the Stone rejected by the builders, who has become the Head of the corner of God's building, as prophesied in Psalm 118:22 (4:11).
- There is salvation only in Jesus, and in none other name (4:12).
- Jesus has been exalted to give repentance and remission of sins (5:31b).
- He is the Son of God (9:20).
- He is the very Christ, or One chosen and anointed by God (9:22; 18:5,28).
- Peace is by Jesus Christ (10:36a).
- He is Lord of all (10:36b).
- God anointed Jesus with the Holy Spirit and power (10:38a).
- Jesus went about doing good, and healing all who were oppressed of the devil (10:38b).
- God showed the risen Christ to chosen witnesses (10:40-41).
- He is ordained of God to be the Judge of the living and the dead (10:42).
- The Prophets give witness that whoever believes in Him will receive remission of sins (10:43).
- Jesus was raised up of David's seed as a Savior (13:23).
- Following His resurrection He was seen many days of those who came to Galilee from Jerusalem (13:31).
- In Jesus God is fulfilling His promise to David concerning the giving of sure, or certain, mercy (13:34).
- Through Jesus the forgiveness of sins is preached (13:38).
- Those who believe on Him are justified from all things (13:39).
- Through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved (15:11).
- Those who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ shall be saved (16:31).
- Christ needed to suffer and be raised from the dead the third day (17:3).

- The resurrection of the dead is associated with Jesus (17:18).
- God will judge the world in righteousness through Jesus (17:31).
- They testified of repentance toward God and faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ (20:21).
- Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that it is more blessed to give than to receive (20:35).
- Jesus should suffer, be the first to rise from the dead, and should show light unto both the Jews and the Gentiles (26:23).

It is apparent that there is considerable to be declared about Jesus – and I have not even touched the epistles that contain an abundance of details not mentioned in the book of Acts. It seems to me that if men would occupy themselves with preaching Christ, it would significantly alter the thrust of their message. I do not doubt that, under such circumstances, many denominations and specialized groups would actually cease to exist, for they depend upon another kind of message.

PREACHING CHRIST GLORIFIES GOD, REVEALS HIS GREAT SALVATION, AND BRINGS THE SPIRIT.

WHAT DOTH HINDER ME?

“ 36 And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?”

The details of what Philip preached are not provided – only that he “preached Christ” to the eunuch, beginning with the Isaiah text that he was reading. It is evident that Luke assumes his readers will know what he means, and what is involved in preaching Christ. Those are the kind of times that existed then, quite unlike the ones in which we live. Thoughtful believers were able to express things more precisely, and would give a more accurate appraisal of things occurring when Christ was preached. I do not want to linger long on this point, but feel as though it is necessary to make a few cursory observations.

Up to this time, the way of the chariot belonged to the eunuch himself. Now, however, it was the way of both the eunuch and Philip – “their way.” There was an accord between these men that developed as Philip preached Christ. Two that are agreed can ride together as well as walk together

Think, for example, of some of the phrases found in Acts. Luke apparently knew they would be discerned by Theophilus, for he did not accompany them with any extensive explanation. Yet, these phrases are not at all common in the church environment of our time. These are phrases used up to this point in this book.

- “They were pricked in their hearts” (2:37).
- “Gladly received his word” (2:41).
- “The apostles’ doctrine” (2:42).
- “Gladness and singleness of heart” (2:46).
- “The Lord added to the church” (2:47).
- “The God of our fathers hath glorified His Son Jesus” (3:13).
- “Faith in His name” (3:15).
- “Repent ye therefore, and be converted” (3:19).

- “God, having raised up Jesus, sent Him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities” (3:26).
- “Great grace was upon them all” (4:33).
- “Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost?” (5:3).
- “Great fear came on all them that heard these things” (5:5).
- “Tempt the Spirit of the Lord” (5:9).
- “Great fear came upon all the church” (5:11).
- “We ought to obey God rather than men” (5:29).
- “Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins” (5:31).
- “The Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him” (5:32).
- “Rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for the name of Jesus” (5:40).
- “Full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom” (6:3).
- “Stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears” (7:51).
- “Had received the word of God” (8:14).

These expressions, and many others like them, are not at all common among twentieth century Christians. In some circles their use would have to be attended with an extensive explanation. They would even be found dividing the people. With the great falling away, coupled with the flood of new translations of Scripture, an institutional vocabulary has taken the place of Scriptural phraseology. There has been a dramatic shift of emphasis from Christ and the salvation He brings so that it is exceedingly rare for men to associate what is passed off as Christian with Jesus Christ, the great salvation of God, or the New Covenant that He has sanctified by which we “draw nigh unto God” (Heb 7:19).

For those whose minds have been shaped by Scripture, the incident that follows will make perfect sense – just as it doubtless did to Theophilus. To some whose minds have been shaped by a humanly devised systematic theology, unwarranted conclusions will be drawn.

Let Me Be Clear About This

Let me be clear about where I am going on this matter. Our text does not say that Philip preached how to get into Christ. It says he “preached Christ” unto the eunuch. I have already commented extensively on precisely what was said about Christ in the apostle’s doctrine, citing no less than forty-four things that was “preached” (Under HE PREACHED UNTO HIM JESUS/Preached Christ). It is that kind of preaching that provoked the response of this text.

THEIR WAY

“And as they went on their way . . .” Other versions read, “as they went down the road,” NKJV “as they were going along,” NRSV “while they were going on their way,” BBE “as they proceeded on the way,” MRD “as they rode along,” NLT and “as they continued along on the way.” AMPLIFIED

Up to this time, the way of the chariot belonged to the eunuch himself. Now, however, it was the way of both the eunuch and Philip – “their way.” There was an accord between these men that developed as Philip preached Christ. Two that are agreed can ride together as well as walk together (Amos 3:3). Where hearts are honest and good, the preaching of Christ has a uniting effect.

A CERTAIN WATER

“ . . . they came unto a certain water . . .” Other versions read, “some water,” NKJV “a small body of water,” LIVING and “a place where there was some water .” CEV

This is worthy of note, as the road on which they were traveling was called “the desert road” NIV (8:26). Ordinarily, you would not expect water to be found in such a place. As I understand the case, this was not an miraculous phenomenon, suddenly created at that time. It is well known that such a body of water was along this road, and, indeed, exists to this very day (2007). It was, however, unusual, with no other such body of water along the road. It has been confirmed that there is no large body of water in this vicinity, such as a river, brook, or large standing body of water like a lake.

A COMMENT ON THIS PHENOMENON

“When we were at Tell-el-Hasy, and saw the water standing along the bottom of the adjacent wady, we could not but remark the coincidence of several circumstances with the account of the eunuch’s baptism. This water is on the most direct road from Belt Fibrin (Eleutheroplis) to Gaza, on the most southern road from Jerusalem, and in the midst of a country now ‘desert,’ i.e. without villages or fixed habitations. There is no other similar water on this road” (Robinson, ‘Bibl. Res.,’ vol. it. p. 345). There were three roads from Jerusalem to Gaza, of which the one above described still exists, “ and actually passes through the desert” (ibid. p. 514). PULPIT COMMENTARY

This being the case, we have in this record an instance of the providential working of the Lord. Here is an example of the steps of a good man being “ordered by the Lord” (Psa 37:23). He directed the eunuch concerning the route he was taking to Gaza, and then directed Philip to join him at the proper time and in the correct place. The book that the eunuch was reading was directed by the Lord, as well, as the place of the book that he was reading when Philip caught up with him. Everything was Divinely orchestrated so that at the right time, they came to this body of water. Now, we will see if the eunuch is able to associate this “certain water” with what Philip has been preaching, or if he will only connect it with refreshment and convenience.

HERE IS WATER!

“ . . . and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?” Other versions read, “What prevents me?” NASB “ Why shouldn’t I be baptized?” NIV “What is to prevent me?” NRSV “ Why may I not have baptism?” BBE “ Is there any reason why I shouldn’t be baptized?” CJB “ What would keep me from?” CSB “ What can keep me from?” GWN “ What doth forbid that I?” MRD “ What is to stop ?” NET “Is there anything to prevent?” NJB “ Why can’t I be baptized?” NLT “What is stopping me from being immersed,” IE and “ is there any reason why I should not be baptized now ?” PHILLIPS

Noting the rarity of water along the way, the eunuch is unwilling to pass by this “certain water” without inquiring concerning himself being baptized. There was some way in which preaching Christ brought this man to think in such a manner. Without commenting extensively on the matter, it is obvious that much of the preaching of our day would never produce such a response. However, here is an inspired record of what preaching Christ can provoke, and we do well to consider it with great sobriety.

Now, the question arises why such a question was provoked. It is the only question of its kind in all of Scripture, and it was provoked by associating a “certain water” with what had been preached. Adam Clarke, well known commentator, observes, “By this we may see that Philip had explained the whole of the Christian faith to him, and the way by which believers were brought into the Christian Church.” If this was the case, the eunuch probably had asked what he ought to do prior to this time, and would have been directed to repent and be baptized as those on the day of Pentecost (2:38).

However, there is no indication that there was extensive dialog between the eunuch and Philip after he started preaching Christ. So far as the record is concerned, this is the initial response of the eunuch to Philip's preaching.

We do have the record of several instances where Christ was preached to those who themselves were not reconciled to God. Prior to this we have those on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2), those in Solomon's porch (Acts 5), those in Samaria (Acts 8), Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9), the household of Cornelius (Acts 10), the household of Lydia (Acts 16), the Philippian jailor (Acts 16), and those in Athens (Acts 17).

To my knowledge, there is no record of any person delivering a word concerning baptism to those who had not made some kind of inquiry concerning what they ought to do. As I have already stated, the message of the Gospel is calculated to produce a response in those who hear it. The question is whether or not preaching Christ necessarily includes declaring the means by which men are to be saved. There is no question that there is a proclamation that regards what men are to do. Before He ascended to heaven, Jesus told His disciples "And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke 24:47).

While I do not mean to be contentious on this point, it is my persuasion that the preaching of Christ itself led the eunuch to make this inquiry – not the recitation of the means through which men are brought into Christ. This whole matter has been greatly complicated by an institutional approach to the Gospel that makes recruitment the primary point rather than the preaching of Christ. For this reason, I want to show how that preaching Christ will produce an inquiry into the matter of baptism. I will further affirm that the announcement of how men are brought into identity with Christ is premature until an inquiry is made into the matter.

When the record of Jesus was given, it is referred to as "the beginning of the Gospel of Christ" (Mk 1:1). Note what is included in that record.

- Jesus was introduced by John the Baptist (Baptizer), who was noted for baptizing the people "for the remission of sins" (Mk 1:4). This was the manner in which the people were prepared for the Messiah.
- Jesus Himself was baptized by John. When John balked at baptizing Him, knowing that He was a righteous Man, Jesus said that it was becoming that "all righteousness" be fulfilled by Him being baptized (Matt 3:15).
- It was when Jesus was baptized that the Father spoke out of heaven, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt 3:17).
- The ministry of Jesus was defined as "Beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection" (Acts 1:22).
- Before Jesus returned to heaven, He commanded His disciples to baptize those whom they discipled. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt 28:19).
- Jesus also told them that believing and being baptized were associated with being saved: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:16).

It simply is not possible to preach Christ without declaring these things. They are part and parcel of the Gospel itself. It is further inconceivable that any

I am saying that if men will devote themselves to preaching Christ, those who believe the message will be unable to avoid the consideration of baptism. The challenge men face is not that of convincing men that they ought to be baptized, but that they must believe Jesus and follow Him.

person of integrity could hear or read those words and conclude that baptism was incidental, or that there was no reason to think it was necessary. Who is the person who would dare to affirm that following Jesus would exclude baptism – for He Himself was baptized! Who would venture to say it was incidental, when Jesus commanded His disciples to baptize the disciples into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit? What kind of mentality would move a person to say that salvation had nothing to do with being saved, when Jesus said the one who believed and was baptized would be saved? He did not say the one who believed and was saved should be baptized. How could it possible be right for men to say so?

I am saying that if men will devote themselves to preaching Christ, those who believe the message will be unable to avoid the consideration of baptism. The challenge men face is not that of convincing men that they ought to be baptized, but that they must believe Jesus and follow Him.

The Household of Cornelius

If it is countered that the household of Cornelius was saved, then were baptized, I must object. That is not what the text says. Here is the record of that event. “While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God ” (Acts 10:44-46).

After witnessing this phenomenon, Peter concluded that the Gentiles were also included in the salvation of God. It is then that he said, “Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.” – just as Jesus had told him to do (Acts 10:47-48; Matt 28:18-19). I do not know how any honest person could read that passage and say that baptism had nothing to do with being saved.

Putting aside for the moment the fact that this was an epoch and not a precedent, the record does not say that these people were “born again” at that time (1 Pet 1:23), or that they were added to the church (Acts 2:47), or that they become one spirit with Christ (1 Cor 12:17). There is no question but that these people had life – but life must be birthed, and baptism mis associated with birth (John 3:5; Tit 3:5).

The Disciples at Ephesus

Another epoch took place when Paul was in Ephesus. While there he encountered “certain disciples.” They were obviously sincere people, and yet Paul sensed something was missing. He asked them, “Did you receive the Holy Spirit when you believed?” They responded, “We have not so much as heard whether there is a Holy Spirit” (Acts 19:2). Paul immediately associated the gift of the Spirit with baptism. He asked them, “Into what, then, were you baptized?” They replied, “Into John’s baptism” – which was for the remission of sins (Mk 1:4). Paul then told them, “John indeed baptized with a baptism of repentance, saying to the people that they should believe on Him who would come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus” (Acts 19:4). Upon hearing about Christ Jesus, these disciples were “baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.” NKJV (Acts 19:4-5). Thus we see that baptism is not a mere option, and is associated with believing and receiving the Holy Spirit.

Something to Consider

If, after relatively brief instruction, Ethiopian eunuch inquired concerning baptism, how, then, do we account for people who have been supposedly been subjected to the Gospel for lengthy periods of time, and remain among the unbaptized? How is it that any person claiming to represent Christ would make a point of diminishing the importance of baptism? How is it even possible to do such a thing, seeing that Jesus was introduced to the world by a baptizer, was Himself baptized to fulfill all righteousness, and was confessed by the Father to be His beloved Son at His baptism. His ministry had its beginning with the baptism of John, He told His disciples to baptize those who were disciples, and said that those believing and being baptized would be saved.

All of this is in the Gospel of Christ. It therefore makes perfect sense that upon hearing Christ preached, the eunuch would inquire concerning himself being baptized. The example and words of Jesus leads to such an inquiry.

IF THOU BELIEVEST

“ 37a And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest.”

The eunuch has asked if there is anything that would prohibit him from being baptized. He is not speaking philosophically, but with a mind to take advantage of the water that was before him. Philip will answer him with a keen awareness of the urgency of the request.

ABOUT THE OMISSION OF THE VERSE

It's Omission Is Not A Cut and Dried Matter

“The whole of ver. 37 of the A.V. is omitted in the R.T., on the authority of the best existing manuscripts. But on the other hand, Irenaeus, in the third book against Heresies, Acts 12:8, distinctly quotes a portion of this verse. The eunuch, he says, when he asked to be baptized said, Pisteu>w to<n uiJo<n tou~ Qeou~ ei]nai to<n Ihsou~n Cristo>n : and Cyprian, in his third book of Testimonies, 43., quotes the other part of the verse. In proof of the thesis that “whoever believes may be immediately baptized,” he says, “In the Acts of the Apostles [when the eunuch said], Behold water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? Philip answered, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest.” So that in the second and third centuries, long anterior to the oldest existing manuscripts, this entire verse must have been found in the codices both of the Greek and Latin Churches.” PULPIT COMMENTARY

“This whole verse is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in five of Beza’s copies, and in the Syriac and Ethiopic versions; but stands in the Vulgate Latin and Arabic versions, and in the Complutensian edition; and, as Beza observes, ought by no means to be expunged, since it contains so clear a confession of faith required of persons to be baptized, which was used in the truly apostolic times.” JOHN GILL

Other versions read, “If you believe with all your heart,” NKJV “If thou dost believe out of all the heart,” YLT and “If you believe with all your heart [if you have a conviction, full of joyful trust, that Jesus is the Messiah and accept Him as the Author of your salvation in the kingdom of God, giving Him your obedience, then] you may.” AMPLIFIED

The priority of faith, or of believing the record God has given of His Son, cannot be overstated. The statements that are made concerning those who believe confirm both its necessity and scope.

- “Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth ” (Mark 9:23).
- “And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses” (Acts 13:39)
- “Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe : for there is no difference” (Rom 3:22).
- “And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that he might be the father of all them that believe , though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also” (Rom 4:11).
- “But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe ” (Gal 3:22).
- “When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day” (2 Th 1:10).
- “For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe ” (1 Tim 4:10).

Believe What?

One can only imagine how a person in our time and country would respond to Philip's word. Precisely what is it that is to be believed? If Philip has been preaching Christ to the man, then obviously what is to be believed pertains to Him. Jesus said the one who believes and is baptized shall be saved. He did not specify what was to be believed either – yet it did pertain to the Gospel being preached (Mk 16:15-16). As we expect, Philip will respond with perfect accord with what Jesus said.

THOU MAYEST

“ . . . thou gayest.” Other versions read, “it is allowable,” MRD and “it is lawful.” YLT

Unlike some of our day, Philip does not lead the eunuch in the mythical “sinner's prayer.” He does not tell the man he needs to be saved first, then he can be baptized. He knows that all that stands between this man and baptism is the confirmation that he believes. This amounts to a confession of Jesus. He does not tell the man to repent, for it is obvious that he has already done that. Nor, in fact, does he recite a series of steps that lead up to baptism. He simply says if the man believes, he can, in fact, be baptized – and he does not even tell the man what it is that is to be believed!

I BELIEVE

“ 37b And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.”

The Ethiopian eunuch does not hesitate to respond to Philip's word. It will be obvious that he has discerned what has been preached, has garnered the proper focus, and is in possession of a confidence that is only experienced by faith.

I BELIEVE

“And he answered and said, I believe . . .” Other versions read, “I do believe.” AMPLIFIED

What does this man mean when he says, “I believe” ? From the lexical point of view, the expression “I believe” is an interesting one. Perhaps it will be a good beginning point to provide those technical meanings.

- “To think to be true; to be persuaded of; to credit, place confidence in; a. universally . . . the conviction and trust to which a man is impelled by a certain inner and higher prerogative and law of his soul,” THAYER “as primarily an intellectual evaluation believe; (a) with what one is convinced of added as an object believe (in), be convinced of,” FRIBERG “as primarily an intellectual evaluation believe; (a) with what one is convinced of added as an object believe (in), be convinced of,” LOUW-NIDA “to trust, trust to or in, put faith in, rely on, believe in a person or thing . . . to believe that, feel sure or confident that a thing is, will be, has been,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “to trust, to put faith in, to believe in . . . to admit the reality of,” LEH “believe, believe in, be convinced of, give credence to . . . believe (in), trust in a special sense . . . have confidence.” GINGRICH

Take note of the words that are related to believing. Because these are all English words, I will give the English definition of each word.

- Persuasion: something held with complete assurance.
- Confidence: the quality or state of being certain.
- Conviction: a strong persuasion; the state of being convinced.
- Trust: assured reliance . . . dependence on.
- Evaluation: establish the value of by careful appraisal and study.
- Sure: admitting to no doubt . . . sure knowledge.

- Reality: the quality or state of being real . . . an actual fact.
- Credence: a mental acceptance as true or real.

The extent of believing confirms that it is, indeed, “with the heart” that en “believe unto righteousness” (Rom 10:10).

The eunuch was not speaking of mere intellectual assent or acquiescence. To acquiesce is to submit passively, or agree without any real persuasion. It is like agreeing with a statement just to keep the peace, or avoid an altercation – perhaps just be to part of the group, which is perceived as holding some temporary advantage.

What is the matter of which the treasurer of the Queen of Candace has been convinced? What kind of persuasion did the preaching of Philip produce? That is the point that will not be made.

JESUS IS THE SON OF GOD

“ . . . that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.” Other versions read, “Jesus Messiah is the Son of God.”
MRD

Philip’s preaching obviously emphasized the Person of Christ – who He was versus what He did during His earthly ministry. His deeds were seen as a confirmation of who He was. Peter had said on the day of Pentecost that Jesus of Nazareth was “a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs” (Acts 2:22). That message had obvious come home to the heart of this man from Ethiopia.

The fact of Jesus being the Son of God is depicted as being a critical one.

Philip’s preaching obviously emphasized the Person of Christ – who He was versus what He did during His earthly ministry. His deeds were seen as a confirmation of who He was. Peter had said on the day of Pentecost that Jesus of Nazareth was “a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs.” That message had obvious come home to the heart of this man from Ethiopia.

- This was the fact that Satan sought to obscure, challenging Jesus in the temptation, “If Thou be the Son of God ” (Matt 4:3,6).

- This is precisely what the demons recognized when they confronted Him: “they cried out, saying, What have we to do with Thee, Jesus, Thou Son of God ? art Thou come hither to torment us before the time?” (Matt 8:29).

- This is what the Father twice confessed, once at His baptism, and again at His transfiguration: “This is My Beloved Son ” (Matt 3:17; 17:5).

- This was the word that Peter recalled when He spoke of Jesus many years after He had returned to heaven: “For He received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to Him from the excellent glory, This is My beloved Son , in whom I am well pleased” (2 Pet 1:17).

- When Jesus died, a centurion that took note of the events said, “Truly this man was the Son of God ” (Mark 15:39).

- John the Baptist bore record to this when He saw the Holy Spirit descending in the form of a dove, and resting upon Jesus: “And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God ” (John 1:34).

- Nathaniel confessed to Jesus , “Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God ; Thou art the King of Israel” (John 1:49).

- John wrote His Gospel that we might believe that “Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God” (John 20:31).
- After Saul of Tarsus was converted. He preached in the synagogues that Jesus Christ “is the Son of God ” (Acts 9:20).
- Paul wrote that Jesus was “ declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead” (Rom 1:4).
- John wrote that the person who overcomes the world is the one who believes that “Jesus is the Son of God ” (1 John 5:5).
- The person who believes Jesus is the Son of God “hath the witness in himself” (1 John 5:10).
- John confirmed, “He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life” (1 John 5:12).
- It is “ the Son of God ” who is come and “hath given us an understanding” (1 John 5:20).

As “the Son of God,” Jesus is the “Heir of all things,” and the One through whom God is speaking to men (Heb 1:2). He is the One in whom all; “the fulness of the Godhead” dwells “bodily” (Col 1:19; 2:9). His ranking is so high that the Father Himself says “unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God , is for ever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom” (Heb 1:8). Nothing – absolutely nothing – comes from God to men except through the Son. God has even committed “all judgment unto the Son” (John 5:22).

Much of this had obviously come across to the eunuch in the preaching of Philip. When given the opportunity to make a statement concerning what he believed, he immediately said that he believed Jesus Christ was the Son of God.

That is what Peter confessed in Matthews 16:16: “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.” Jesus told Peter that flesh and blood had not revealed this to him, but the Father had revealed it. It is doubtless true that He had done the same for the man from Ethiopia. Thus we see that the preaching of Christ produced the same effects as the presence of Jesus.

HE BAPTIZED HIM

“ 38 And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.”

We will see that faith provokes action – immediate action. Retarded responses and delays in obedience are evidences of unbelief, not faith.

HE COMMANDED THE CHARIOT TO STAND STILL

“And he commanded the chariot to stand still . . .” Other versions read, “He ordered the chariot to stop,” NASB “ gave orders to stop the chariot,” NIV “ The official ordered the carriage to stop,” GWN “So he commanded the chariot to stand still,” NRS “he stopped the chariot,” LIVING and “the officer gave the command for the chariot to stop.” IE

Although a dignitary, and no doubt accustomed to some degree of convenience, this man was intent upon obeying the Lord immediately. Of course, if Philip had told him of the baptism of Jesus, which he doubtless did, he knew that Jesus did not delay his baptism, even though John at the first recoiled at the thought of baptizing someone more righteous than himself. The entire ministry of John the Baptist was also marked with immediacy. When he preached, he did so near a body of “much water” in order to baptize the people right away. Thus it is written, “And John also was baptizing in Aenon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized” (John 3:23).

Therefore the eunuch stops the chariot and interrupts his journey back to Ethiopia. He knew he was dealing with something that was of greater importance than the trip he was taking. This, of course, is the nature of obedience. It always adjusts the circumstances to the response that is being rendered to God.

THEY WENT DOWN BOTH INTO THE WATER

“ . . . and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch . . .” The greater percentage of all English versions read “went down into the water.” Some variant versions read, “to the water.” DARBY/MRD/YLT/PHILLIPS

If you have been involved with the church for some time, you know that the “mode” of baptism is often a source of controversy. Although this may be a technical point, yet it ought to be made to confirm the nature of and requirement of a “form.” Whenever God ordains a “form,” it is always in perfect accord with the truth. In fact, there is no purpose for form if it does not parallel the reality of which it speaks.

In Romans 6:17, baptism is referred to as “the form of the doctrine.” As used in that text, the word “form” refers to “print . . . a figure formed by a blow or impression . . . the teaching which embodies the sum and substance of religion, and represents it to the mind,” THAYER “model,” FRIBERG and “a pattern, example, model, standard.” UBS

In baptism, the form perfectly confirms to the doctrine. The doctrine is the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Baptism depicts precisely that in a burial and resurrection, which incorporates the idea of dying and being raised to walk in newness of life.

Baptize or Immerse

Owing to the corruption that is extant in the various man-made doctrines concerning baptism, some have preferred the use of the word “immerse.” However, this is not a good word, for it does not embody the doctrine. The word “immerse” means to “dunk, submerge, or submerge.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER However, the point of baptism is not the burial but the resurrection that follows. We do not remain “buried with Christ,” but are “raised up from the dead” like Jesus, to “walk in newness of life.”

It is also incorrect to refer to modes of baptism. Baptism itself is the mode, or manner. It is depicted as a burial (Rom 6:3-4) and a planting (Rom 6:4).

I want to underscore that the only reason for any “form” is that it agrees with the substance that it represents. This is the reason for the pattern given of the tabernacle, which was “the example and shadow of heavenly things” (Heb 8:5). This is also the reasoning behind the unleavened bread used at the table of the Lord and the “fruit of the vine.” Both required crushing and bruising, and perfectly depict Christ’s flesh and blood which are said to be “meat indeed” and “drink indeed” (John 6:55).

HE BAPTIZED HIM

“ . . . and he baptized him.” Other versions read, “Philip baptized him,” NIV Philip gave him baptism,” BBE “Philip immersed him,” CSB/IE and “Philip baptized the eunuch.” MRD

When ever one person baptizes another, it always “with water.” No mere man is ever said to have baptized another in the Holy Spirit. That is something that Jesus alone can do (Matt 3:11; Acts 1:5).

I say this because there are some who read the various texts on baptism and say they refer to a spiritual baptism, having nothing to do with water. Peter, however, specifically associates baptism with water (1 Pet 3:21).

In baptism, more takes place than what is seen – but that does remove the necessity of what is seen, for that is the reference point of the doctrine. The entire sixth chapter of Romans is devoted to the exposition of baptism. Apart from a baptism like that of the eunuch, which baptism is referred to as the washing of our bodies with pure water, I do not know how you could identify the time of your baptism, or even the fact of it. Nor, indeed can an invisible baptism is associated with obedience.

All of the things that are said of baptism took place when the eunuch was baptized.

- Receive remission of sins (Acts 2:38).
- Receive the gift of the Holy Spirit⁵ (Acts 2:38).
- Baptized into Jesus Christ (Rom 6:3a; Gal 3:27).
- Put on Christ (Gal 3:27).
- Baptized into His death (Rom 6:3b).
- Buried with Christ (Rom 6:4a).
- Raised like Christ to walk in newness of life 6:4b).
- Planted together in the likeness of His death (Rom 6:5a).
- Being in the likeness of His resurrection (Rom 6:5b).
- The old man crucified with Him (Rom 6:6).
- Freed from sin (Rom 6:7).
- Circumcised with the circumcision of Christ (Col 2:12).
- Putting off the body of the sins of the flesh (Col 2:12b).
- Born of the water and of the Spirit (John 3:5).
- By the Spirit baptized into one body (1 Cor 12:13).

None of these things can be seen, nor can any of them be performed by a man. Yet, all of them are identified with the time we obeyed from the heart the form of the doctrine delivered to us. Baptism involves being buried in water and raised from it – but that is not all that is involved, nor is it the heart of the matter. It is what the Lord does at that time that makes the event significant. However, the outward form is the very thing to which all of these things have been tied, and which enables us properly diagnose our situation.

All of these happened when Philip baptized the eunuch. That is why he was able to go on his way rejoicing.

HE WENT ON HIS WAY REJOICING

“ 39 And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.”

THEY CAME UP OUT OF THE WATER

“And when they were come up out of the water . . .” Other versions read, “stepped out of the water,” GWN and “come out of the water.” TNT With only three or four exceptions, all versions read “up out of the water.”

Confirming that the form of the doctrine was carried out, Phil and the eunuch emerged from the body of water, into which they had both gone. The eunuch came out with a conscience that had been purged from dead works, and his name being written in heaven. The life that was begotten through the preaching of Christ was birth in joyful obedience.

PHILIP IS CAUGHT AWAY

: . . . the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more . . . ” Other versions read, “snatched Philip away,” NASB “suddenly took Philip away,” NIV “caught up Philip,” RSV “took Philip away,” BBE “carried Philip away,” CSB “was taken away,” NJB “[suddenly] caught away Philip,” AMPLIFIED and “took Philip away suddenly.” PHILLIPS

You cannot read the book of acts without being made acutely aware of the supernatural. Whatever you may choose to think about it, you do not want to adopt a view of Scripture that ignores such realities, or fails to take them into account in such a way as promotes praise to God. Thus far we have been confronted with the following:

- The ascension of Jesus (1:9-10).
- A sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind (2:2).
- The appearance of cloven tongues of fire sitting upon each of the disciples (2:3).
- The disciples speaking with other languages as the Spirit gave them utterance (2:4).
- Many wonders and signs were done by the apostles (2:43).
- The healing of the lame man at the Temple gate Beautiful (3:1-6).
- Ananias and Sapphira and stricken dead (5:1-10).
- Signs and wonders were wrought by the apostles in Solomon’s porch (5:12).
- Multitudes come from other cities, bring their sick, and they are healed (5:15-16).
- The angel of the Lord delivers the apostles from prison (5:19).
- Stephen does great wonders and miracles among the people (6:8).
- Phil works miracles in Samaria (8:6).
- The Samaritans receive the Holy Spirit through the laying on hands of Peter and John (8:17).
- The angel of the Lord directs Philip to the Ethiopian eunuch (8: 26).
- Now, Philip is caught away by the Spirit of the Lord (8:39).

Although some theology does so, the Scriptures do not foster doubts concerning the possibility of works outside the confines of natural power or ability. It is certainly not right to develop an inordinate appetite for the miraculous, but neither is it proper to culture a disdain for it.

HE WENT ON HIS WAY REJOICING

Like Abraham coming down from that mountain in Moriah, the eunuch went on his way rejoicing. He had the joy of sins forgiven, a purged conscience, a sense of reconciliation, and the knowledge of God. The law was written on his heart, his old man was crucified, and he was walking in the newness of life. He certainly did have a right to go on his way rejoicing.

PHILIP WAS FOUND AT AZOTUS

“40 But Philip was found at Azotus: and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Caesarea.”

It had been a busy day for Philip – at least if men were prone to look at it after the flesh. But the work of the Kingdom is accompanied by a certain refreshment that only those who labor with the Lord know.

PHILIP WAS FOUND ON AZOTUS

“But Philip was found at Azotus . . .” Other versions read, “Philip found himself in Azotus,” NASB “appeared in Azotus,” NIV “came to Azotus,” BBE “showed up at Ashdod,” CJB “found himself in the city of Azotus,” GWN “found himself farther north at the town of Azotus,” NLT “was found ion Ashdod,” WILLIAMS and “found himself in Ashdod.” MONTGOMERY

The city of Azotus was the ancient city of Ashdod (Azwtov). This was the Graecized form of the name of the city Ashdod, and owed its change to the Hellenizing of world by Alexander the Great (Acts 8:40; so 1 Maccabees 4:15; 5:68; 10:77, 78, 83; 11:4; 13:34; 16:10)

HE PREACHED IN ALL THE CITIES

“ . . . and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Caesarea.”

Other versions read, “kept preaching the gospel to all the cities, until he came

AZOTUS – THE CITY OF ASHDOD

(Heb: 'ashdodh; Grk: Azotos; modern Esdud): One of the five chief cities of the Philistines. The name means stronghold or fortress, and its strength may be inferred by the fact that Psammetik I, of Egypt, besieged it for many years (Herodotus says 29). Some of the Anakim were found there in the days of Joshua (Josh 11:22), and the inhabitants were too strong for the Israelites at that time. It was among the towns assigned to Judah, but was not occupied by her (Josh 13:3; 15:46,47). It was still independent in the days of Samuel, when, after the defeat of the Israelites, the ark was taken to the house of Dagon in Ashdod (1 Sam 5:1,2). We have no account of its being occupied even by David, although he defeated the Philistines many times, and we have no definite knowledge of its coming into the hands of Judah until the time of Uzziah (2 Ch 26:6). Ashdod, like the other Philistine towns, came under the authority of the Assyrian monarchs, and we have mention of it in their records. It revolted against Sargon in 711 BC, and deposed the Assyrian governor, Akhimiti, who had been appointed by him in 720. Sargon at once dispatched a force to subdue the rebels and the city was severely punished. This is referred to by Isaiah (Isa 20:1). Amos had prophesied such a calamity some years before (1:8), and Jeremiah refers to "the remnant of Ashdod" as though it had continued weak until his day (Jer 25:20). Zephaniah (Zeph 2:4) refers to the desolation of Ashdod and Zechariah to its degraded condition (Zec 9:6). It continued to be inhabited, however, for we find the Jews intermarried with them after the return from Babylon (Neh 13:23,24). In the Maccabean period we are told that Judas and Jonathan both took it and purified it of idolatry (1 Macc 5:68; 10:84). In these passages it is called Azotus, as it is also in the New Testament (Acts 8:40). In the 4th century AD it became the seat of a bishopric. It had been restored in the time of Herod, by the Roman general Gabinius, and was presented to Salome, the sister of Herod, by the emperor Augustus. It is now a small village about 18 miles Northeast of Gaza.

to Caesarea,” NASB “traveled about, preaching the gospel in all the towns until he reached Caesarea,” NIV “passing through the region, he proclaimed the good news to all the towns until he came to Caesarea,” NRSV “went through all the towns, preaching the good news, till he came to Caesarea,” BBE “passing through, he was evangelizing all the towns until he came to Caesarea,” CSB “he walked to and from preaching in all the cities, till he came to Cesarea,” GENEVA “continued his journey, proclaiming the good news in every town as far as Caesarea,” NJB “ He preached the Good News there and in every town along the way until he came to Caesarea,” NLT “he walked through out the country preaching in their cities till he came to Cesarea,” TNT “He preached the Good News there and in every city along the way, as he traveled to Caesarea,” LIVING “He was preaching the Good News in all the towns along the way from Azotus to Caesarea,” IE “visiting town after town he everywhere made known the Good News until he reached Caesarea,” WEYMOUTH and “as he passed through the countryside he went on telling the good news in all the cities until he came to Caesarea.” PHILLIPS

The idea is that everywhere Philip went,. He kept preaching the word, all along the Mediterranean coast, and covering a considerable distance.

What constrained such aggressive labors? It is quite frankly staggering to consider how much this man did – at least if you look at it with current-day efforts in mind. However, we are being exposed to real spiritual life, and real Kingdom laborers.

This is something that could not possibly be taught, or learned by routine. There was something inside Philip that was moving him. He was like Jeremiah in whose heart the word was like a burning fire (Jer 20:9). The conversion of the city of Samaria, and now the Ethiopian eunuch, had only served to put more fuel on the fire within him, and he could not keep silence.

CONCLUSION

We have witnessed the spreading of the Gospel through men whose hearts were tender and supple in the hands of the Lord. Surely you have noticed how instantly these men obeyed, and how easily they were directed. This is the manner of the kingdom, and it is glorious to consider.

Lesson #41

SAUL OF TARSUS CONFRONT'S JESUS

“ 9:1 And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest, 2 And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem. 3 And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven: 4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me? 5 And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. 6 And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do. 7 And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man. 8 And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus. ” (Acts 9:1-8)

INTRODUCTION

Luke's record now focuses on Saul of Tarsus, introduced to us in the report of Stephen's martyrdom (7:48), and when a great persecution was unleashed against the church in Jerusalem (8:1-3). At this point, this man is opposed to Jesus, and is aggressive against His people. After consenting to the death of Stephen, he is described as "making havoc of the church, entering every house, and dragging off men and women, committing them to prison” (8:3). It is this man’s single initiative that caused the scattering of the believers in Jerusalem. Of his initiative it is written, “Therefore they were scattered abroad.” (8:4). By his own testimony, Paul’s aggression led to the death of many believers and “binding and delivering into prisons both men and women” (22:4). When the believers were executed by the authority of the high priest, Paul said, “I gave my voice against them” (26:10). He even said, “I punished them often in every synagogue and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly enraged against them, I persecuted them even to foreign cities.” NKJV (26:11). After he became an apostle he said of this initiative, “I persecuted the church of God” (1 Cor 15:9), doing so “beyond measure,” or pressing the matter beyond all reason (Gal 1:13). He said of that period of his life, I “was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious:” adding that he “obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief” (1 Tim 1:13).

This is the height of opposition to Christ – persecuting His people. There is no more clear indication of opposition to Jesus than this. This is why Paul said he was “not meet” (worthy) “to be called an apostle” (1 Cor 15:9). This is why he referred to himself as “less than the least of all saints” (Eph 3:8), and “chief” of sinners (1 Tim 1:15). Jesus said that men’s eternal destiny will, in part, be directly related to how they treated His people (Matt 25:32-46). The separation of the sheep from the goats is, in this regard, said to primarily revealed in these two circumstances: “Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me,” and “Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me” (Mat 25:40,45). Jesus also said that His people were chiefly made known in the love they had for one another: “By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another” (John 13:35). John said that the love of the brethren one for another was the evidence that they had passed from death to life: “We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death” (1 John 3:14).

Saul of Tarsus was the direct antithesis of this. He had an absolute hatred of the people of God, and consequently of Jesus Himself. It appears as though Satan had control of him, and that he is beyond all help. If it is true that there is no Divine initiative toward men until they want it, the future looks very gloomy for Saul of Tarsus. If it is only those who seek that find, then there are no good prospects of him coming to know Christ and enjoy the benefits of His atonement and present reign.

PAUL IS A CASE-STUDY

On the surface, it appears as though the turning of Saul was the exception, or very unusual, to say the least. Yet, there is something here that reveals the manner in which Jesus apprehends people.

It is important that we consider these things, for Saul of Tarsus is something of a case-study, showing things about God that it are essential to know. Later, Paul referred to himself as a “pattern” or example of those who come to believe. Here is what he said: “Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all longsuffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on Him to life everlasting” (1 Tim 1:16). The words “in me first” do not refer to chronology, but to priority – like saying “in me as the foremost one,” or “as the primary example.” On the surface, it appears as though the turning of Saul was the exception, or very unusual, to say the least. Yet, there is something here that reveals the manner in which Jesus apprehends people. We must take care not to adopt a theology that causes us to be blinded to the “pattern” of which Paul spoke. There is something in his conversion that relates to those “who are going to believe on him for everlasting life.” NKJV One of the tasks to be accomplished in our review of this passage is to uncover that pattern, that example, that something that is common to all those who are brought to believe on the Lord Jesus.

CONSIDERING JESUS

It is declared in Scripture that God gives repentance. Those, for example, who instruct those who “oppose themselves” by persistence in sin, are to do so in hopes that God will “give them repentance” (2 Tim 2:25). This repentance is specifically administered by the Lord Jesus Himself. Peter has already declared that Christ has been exalted “for to give repentance ” (Acts 5:31) – and He is fully able to do it.

Repentance is also described as being turned away from one’s iniquities. Peter affirmed that God sent Jesus to do this. “Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities ” (Acts 3:26). Paul also alludes to this work when referring to the restoration of Israel to Divine favor. “And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob ” (Rom 11:26). While this turning does involve remission – something like detaching sin and its guilt from the individual – that does not exhaust the meaning of the phrase “turn away ungodliness.” When this turning takes place, sin becomes repulsive to the one who has committed it, paining the conscience and stabbing deep into the heart. The nature of sin is seen, that it is against God, and God only (Psa 51:4). No sin will ever be forgiven that is not first hated with a “perfect hatred” (Psa 139:22). This aspect of repentance puts it beyond the reach of “the natural man” – it is outside the perimeter of natural abilities. Rarely will you hear the necessity to repent accompanied with an adequate explanation of the sin from which repentance is required. Just prior to our text, Peter admonished Simon the sorcerer to repent of his “wickedness” (8:22). Paul said that men should “repent and turn to God ” – which means sin results in turning from God (Acts 26:20). Hebrews 6:1 refers to “repentance from dead works” – that is, works that are expressions of death, alienation from, and enmity toward God.

While there were occasions prior to His enthronement of men deploring the fact that they had sinned, and of them turning away from iniquity, they were few and far between.

Later in this book, we will read how “God also granted to the Gentiles repentance unto life” (11:18). We know from Peter’s word that God granted it through the Lord Jesus Christ, who actually carried out the doing of it. He is the Prince and Savior who has been exalted to “give repentance.”

The Rarity of Repentance Prior to Jesus

The rarity of any direct references to men repenting prior to Christ is startling to the mind. While there are some expressions of repentance, sorrow for sin, and deep regret, the use of the word “repent” in its varied forms is exceedingly rare (repent, repentance, repenting, repented, etc).

- From Genesis 1:1 through Esther 10:3 (seventeen books), there is a single reference to any person repenting from sin – and even then it is not something that had taken place, but something that God desired to take place: “Yet if they shall bethink themselves in the land whither they were carried captives, and repent, and make supplication unto thee in the land of them that carried them captives, saying, We have sinned, and have done perversely, we have committed wickedness” (1 Kgs 8:47).

- Job once said, “Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes” (Job 42:6) – although he had not sinned (Job 2:1).

- The entire book of Psalms does not contain the word “repent” in any of its forms concerning the sin of men. It only mentions God repenting, or men not repenting (90:13; 106:45; 110:4; 135:14). The Psalms contain frequent penitential expressions, but they are never called repentance or repenting (Psa 32:5; 38:3,4,18; 40:12; 41:4; 51:1-16; 69:5,10; 73:21, 22; 106:6; 119:176).

- Jeremiah referred to men who did not repent (Jer 8:6). He referred to Israel repenting (Jer 31:19).

- Through Ezekiel God told Israel to “Repent, and turn yourselves from your idols” (Ezek 14:6) – something they had not done to that point.

It is certainly out of order to develop a teaching concerning repentance that is founded on human analysis – and that is not my intention. Rather, I seek to accent the marvelous effects of the sin of the world being taken away by Jesus Christ. It was this marvelous accomplishment that led to His exaltation and His consequent empowerment to “give repentance and remission of sins.” While there were occasions prior to His enthronement of men deploring the fact that they had sinned, and of them turning away from iniquity, they were few and far between. Their repentance was also not of the same order as that which is now given by Jesus, “God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect” (Heb 11:40).

Without being overly systematic in this matter, here are some of the things that are involved in repenting from sin.

- Associating sin with offending God (Psa 51:4).
- A hatred of sin itself (Psa 97:10).
- Conversion, or change (Acts 3:19).
- Turning to God (Acts 26:20).
- The awareness of God’s goodness (Rom 2:4).
- A sense of helplessness (Psa 38:4)
- Self abasement (Job 42:6; Ezek 20:43).
- The fear of God (Prov 16:6; Jer 32:40).
- A strong desire for forgiveness (Psa 51:9).
- A fervent desire for purity (Psa 51:10).
- A submissive spirit (Acts 2:41; 9:6).
- A profound sorrow (2 Cor 7:9-10).
- Acknowledging the truth (2 Tim 2:26).

- Mourning (James 4:9).

The objective of these observations is not merely to compile a listing. It is rather to confirm the complexities of repentance that require Divine involvement. When the Scriptures declare that Jesus has been exalted to “give repentance,” an abundance is being said. Now, we will behold the doctrine being lived out when Saul confronts the Christ.

SAUL IS NOT SEEKING JESUS

Saul of Tarsus is not seeking for Jesus, but he will find that Jesus is seeking for him. In fact, it is at the point of our text that Jesus apprehends Saul – a work to which Paul referred in his letter to the Philippians (Phil 3:12). There is no record of anyone praying for Saul, or any focused effort among the saints devoted to bringing him to Christ. Here, however, is a case where Jesus inserted Himself into Saul’s life, forcing him to confront and consider Him. Were this text not in Scripture, some would argue that such a thing is not possible – that it is interfering with man’s free will. Notwithstanding this theoretical objection, here is a revelation of a way in which the exalted Christ worked. He forced Himself into Saul’s life, arresting his attention, engaging his mind, and eliciting a response from him. This was a confrontation Saul could not ignore. In this regard, it was unlike the visitation of the Savior to Jerusalem, of which visitation they had not absolutely no effective knowledge (Lk 19:44).

Saul of Tarsus is not seeking for Jesus, but he will find that Jesus is seeking for him. In fact, it is at the point of our text that Jesus apprehends Saul – a work to which Paul referred in his letter to the Philippians

When Jacob wrestled with an angel, he acknowledged after the fact, “Surely the Lord was in this place; and I knew it not” (Gen 28:16). After an angel had appeared to Menoah and his wife (soon-to-be parents of Samson), he said: “We shall surely die, because we have seen God” (Judges 13:22). In former times, and with few exceptions, the revelation of God was generally subdued, thus making it more tolerable. That is why assessments were often made after the fact. But this will not be the experience of Saul of Tarsus. Before the experience is finished, Saul will have a most precise knowledge of who he is confronting. He was living in a the day of the opened heavens, even though he was not at all aware of it. When the glorified Christ appears to him, he will know he is not confronting a man, or even an angel. He will immediately recognize that this is someone who can be appropriately referred to as “Lord,” and he will inquire concerning what he should do, being perfectly submissive.

BACK TO SAUL OF TARSUS

“ 9:1 And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord . . . ”

The church had found an aggressive foe in Saul of Tarsus. Prior to this, the opponents of the Gospel, waited until the preachers and teachers came into their court , so to speak. The initial opposition came from the Temple authorities, when Peter and John were preaching in Solomon’s court (Acts 4:1-2). They did not, however, hunt them down initially. The times following that initial confrontation, when the religious leaders opposed the apostles, they were “in the Temple” (Acts 5:20). Now, however, there arises an opponent who will pursue the saints, engaging in an effort to discover them wherever they are. Owing to His ignorance and unbelief 1 Tim 1:13), Satan has found someone through whom he can “make war” against those who “keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus” (Rev 12:17). Saul of Tarsus is not a moral wretch, nor is he a political zealot. He is a devout Jew, serious about keeping the Law and maintaining a good conscience (Phil 3:6; Acts 23:1). Yet, because he did not know Christ or believe the Gospel of Christ, he became a vessel through whom the devil could work. All of this was under the government of Jesus, to be sure. However, it does provide us an example of the impact of a lack of spiritual understanding. It also confirms the inadequacy of the human intellect – even a devoted and disciplined intellect – to arrive at an accurate knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. This fact was also confirmed in the Ethiopian eunuch.

THREATENING AND SLAUGHTER

“And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter . . .” Other versions read, “breathing threats and murder,” NKJV “murderous threats,” NIV “bringing with desire to put to death,” BBE “full of threats and deadly hatred,” MRD “uttering threats with every breath, and was eager to kill,” NLT “threatening with every breath and eager to destroy,” LIVING “trying to scare . . . threatening to kill them,” IE “still drawing his breath hard from threatening and murderous desire,” AMPLIFIED and “kept up his violent threats of murder.” GNB

Breathing

The words “breathing out” are translated from a single word meaning, “to breathe, inhale,” THAYER and “to blow or breathe upon.” LIDDELL-SCOTT The word can mean both inhale and exhale – as though what Saul had breathed in, he now breathed out. That is, he had breathed in the death of Stephen, consenting to his death, and now he was breathing out the murder of the other disciples. He was like a snorting warhorse wading into the thick of the battle against the Lord Jesus Christ. He was determined, aggressive, and consistent. Paul himself said of his former aggression against the saints that he was “exceedingly mad against them” (Acts 26:11).

Threatening s

By “threatenings,” the text means that Saul declared he would do harm to anyone devoted to Jesus. He spoke against them, opposed them, and declared himself to be their enemy.

“Slaughter”

This word means “murder,” THAYER “killing,” FRIBERG “to deprive a person of life by illegal, intentional killing,” LOUW-NIDA and “massacre.” LEH

Of this part of his life Paul said, “And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women” (Acts 22:4). He stated, “and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them” (Acts 26:10).

Saul’s Rationale

The reason for Saul’s aggression against the believers was his ignorance of Christ. He thought incorrectly about Jesus, and was thus moved against Him and those who followed Him. Wrong thinking still moves people to do wrong things – particularly when it involves incorrect views of Jesus Christ. Men do not have the option of being incorrect about Jesus.

Saul engaged in this aggression against the followers of Jesus, thinking that he was serving God in the process. He said to Agrippa, “I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth” (Acts 26:9). Once he was standing in the fuller light of the knowledge of the glory of God, he assessed himself during that time as being “a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious” (Acts 26:9).

Because Saul considered the message of Christ to be blasphemy, and nothing more than a delusion, he felt those who were of that way to be worthy of death. With him this was more than personal hatred. He no doubt saw such people as corrupting the Jewish people, classing them among those whom the Law declared to be worthy of death.

The Law said, “And he that blasphemeth the name of the LORD , he shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him: as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land, when he blasphemeth the name of the LORD, shall be put to death” (Lev 24:16). And again, “And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, shall be put to death; because he hath spoken to turn you away from the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you out of the house of bondage, to thrust thee out of the way which the LORD thy God commanded thee to walk in. So shalt thou put the evil away from the midst of thee” (Deut 13:5).

Later, after entering the promised land under the leadership of Joshua, the officers of the people told Joshua, “Whosoever he be that doth rebel against thy commandment, and will not hearken unto thy words in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death: only be strong and of a good courage” (Josh 1:18).

Something to Be Seen

The reason for Saul’s aggression against the believers was his ignorance of Christ. He thought incorrectly about Jesus, and was thus moved against Him and those who followed Him. Wrong thinking still moves people to do wrong things – particularly when it involves incorrect views of Jesus Christ. Men do not have the option of being incorrect about Jesus. If it is true that the Gospel is the record God has given of His Son (1 John 5:10-11), then men do not have the right to be wrong about Him. It is never innocent to be exposed to the truth, and yet maintain a distorted view of it. Even if the individual acts within the framework of a good conscience, thinking himself to be the servant of God, it does not change the fact that he is wrong. Saul was acting in a good conscience, fully persuaded that he “ought” to do what he could to stamp out the influence of Jesus of Nazareth. Yet, the truth of the matter was that in his very deeds he was “a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious” (1 Tim 1:13). Until the day he died, he carried a sense of profound shame for what he did against the church. He wrote to the Corinthians, “For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God” (1 Cor 15:9). He wrote to the Ephesians that he was “less than the least of all saints” (Eph 3:8). He wrote to Timothy, “This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief” (1 Tim 1:15).

Profound sin, although graciously forgiven, has grievous after-effects. This is confirmation of its seriousness. It also accents the greatness of Divine mercy.

THE DISCIPLES OF THE LORD

“ . . . against the disciples of the Lord . . .” Other versions read, “the Lord’s disciples,” NIV “the Lord’s followers,” NLT “every Christian,” LIVING “learners of the Master,” INTERLINEAR and “followers of the Lord,” GNB

As used in Scripture, a “disciple” is “a learner, pupil,” THAYER “one who directs his mind to something, learner; in a technical sense, apprentice,” FRIBERG “follower,” UBS “a person who is a disciple or follower of someone,” LOUW-NIDA “adherent.” GINGRICH

There are two facets of life that are involved in being a disciple: the mind (learning), and conduct (following). No person is a disciple of Jesus who is not in the process of learning from Him. Neither, in deed, is it possible to be a disciple of Jesus if one is not following Him, shaping his life according to his exposure to Jesus.

Not only were the twelve disciples unique men in the body of Christ, they are premier examples of a real disciple. They were always with Jesus, and they were always learning from Him. They further shaped their lives around Jesus, going where He went, saying what He said, and doing what He did. When they went out, they went in His name and preached His message. They always did what He told them to do – whether it was rowing a boat to the other side of the sea, feeding the multitude, catching fish, or going out to preach.

Now, if this is the definition of a disciple, the modern church is presenting a distorted and confusing picture. As a whole, it is not doing good in either learning or following. This is a most serious condition, and is not to be taken lightly. Jesus faced a generation of Jews that were similar to this – claiming to be followers of Moses, yet neither learning from him nor doing what he said. Jesus called their leaders “blind guides” and “hypocrites” (Matt 23:15-16). With great sternness He told them, “But in vain they do worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men” (Matt 15:9). He told that generation they would be condemned because they had not taken advantage of what God had sent to them (Matt 12:41-42). And why did He speak in such a manner? It was because they were not what they said they were. They said they were Jews, but “inwardly” they were not (Rom 2:29). They said they were disciples of Moses, but they were not learning from him or following him (John 9:28). They said they were the children of Abraham, yet they did not have the traits of Abraham (John 8:39).

The manner in which the Luke refers to the people of God continues to intrigue me. It is not at all the way in which our peers refer to them.

And, what will Jesus say of this generation, who say they are Christians, and yet have the traits of the world. What will be said of those who say they are followers of Jesus, yet they do not take up their cross daily and follow Him? And how will it go for those who say they are students of Jesus, yet are not learning from Him, remaining in a state of perpetual ignorance? I do not doubt that, were He here in the body, He would employ the word “hypocrites” quite often.

In my judgment, this is one reason why the name “Christian” is preferred by many. While, of itself, it is a good word, meaning “of or pertaining to Christ,” it has been watered down so that it has no longer has any arresting meaning in the minds of the people. The association with Christ Himself has been stripped from the modern perception of the word. If overnight God changed the language of the people so that they said “disciples of the Lord,” or “followers of Christ” in the place of “Christian,” it would introduce mass confusion.

Luke’s Manner

The manner in which the Luke refers to the people of God continues to intrigue me. It is not at all the way in which our peers refer to them.

- “The church” (2:47; 5:11; 8:1,3; 11:22,26; 12:1,5; 13:1; 14:27; 15:3,4; 18:22; 20:17,28).

- “Disciples” (Acts 6:1,2,7; 9:1,19,25,26, 38; 11:26,29; 13:52; 14:20,22,28; 15:10; 18:23; ,27; 19:9,30; 20:1,7; 21:4,16).

- “Believers” (5:14).

- Those who “believed” (2:44; 4:32; 19:18; 22:19).

- Those who were of “the way” (9:2; 19:9,23; 22:4; 24:14).

- “Christian” (11:26; 26:28) – what they were called by outsiders.

When referring to those in Christ, the term “disciples” is the one most frequently used in this book. It is strange that it is used so infrequently in our day.

SAUL’S AGGRESSIVENESS

“ 1b . . . went unto the high priest. 2 And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem.”

Some details concerning Saul’s aggression against the disciples of the Lord will now be provided. This will set the stage for his apprehension by Jesus. He will not be found praying, or seeking the Lord, or asking for more information about Jesus of Nazareth. He will rather be found while engaged in an inital and aggressive initiative against the Lord Jesus Himself.

WENT UNTO THE HIGH PRIEST

“ . . . went unto the high priest . . .” Other versions read, “went to the high priest in Jerusalem.”
LIVING

Under the Law, the high priest held the highest office. His responsibilities included the following.

- Offer sacrifices (Lev 4:4-17; 2:2,16).
- Designate subordinate priests (Num 4:19).
- Set the showbread on the table within the Holy Place (Lev 24:8).
- Offer the first fruits to the Lord (Lev 23:10-11 Deut 26:3-4).
- Pronounce holy benedictions on the people (Num 6:22-27).
- Teach the Law (Lev 10:8-11).
- Light the lamp in the Holy Place (Ex 28:20-21; Lev 24:3-4).
- Keep the sacred fire from the altar burning (Lev 6:12-13).
- Responsible for the care of the sanctuary (Num 4:5-15; 18:1,5).
- Count the people (Num 1:3).

This is not intended to be a thorough listing. My objective is to point out the thrust of the high priest’s ministry – a thrust that was mandated by God Himself.

In drawing a parallel between the office of the high priest and the work of the exalted Christ, the book of Hebrews provides an overview of the office of the high priest under the Law. This narrows down the focus of the ministry of the high priest defining it as relating to “things pertaining to God.”

• MATTERS HAVING TO DO WITH GOD. “For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God , that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins” (Heb 5:1). “For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices ” (Heb 8:3). The high priest was never intended to be a civil authority – that was the role of Moses, and later of the kings. He was never intended to be a military leader – that was originally the role of Joshua, and later of other special men. The high priesthood was an office that had exclusively to do with matters pertaining to God – that is, with the relationship of the people with God.

• ABLE TO HAVE COMPASSION ON THE PEOPLE, AND THUS EFFECTIVELY INTERCEDE FOR THEM. “Who can have compassion on the ignorant , and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity” (Heb 5:2). Being taken from the people themselves, the high priest could enter more fully into his intercessions and representations of them before the Lord. His role was not to represent them to the governor or king, but before the Lord Himself.

• DIVINELY APPOINTED. “And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron” (Heb 5:4). This was not a political office, nor was it one that was managed by the people. It was strictly controlled by the Lord. At the first, God chose who would be high priest – Aaron. The high priesthood was then maintained through his bloodline.

• MAKE ATONEMENT. “Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others” (Heb 9:25). The matter of sin had to be regularly addressed, because God cannot countenance iniquity. No other work or ministry was allowed to upstage the work of dealing with sin, offering the gifts and sacrifices ordained by God to keep a lively consciousness in both the high priest and the people concerning sin.

By the time Jesus came into the world, and throughout the record of the apostles’ activities, the office of the high priest had been greatly corrupted. It bore little resemblance to its intended objective.

- The high priest had a palace (Matt 26:3; Mk 14:54; John 18:15).
- The high priest had a militia (Matt 26:47; Mk 14:43-47; John 18:6).
- The high priest had maids (Mk 14:66).
- The high priest had servants (John 18:26).
- With scribes and elders, held legal proceedings against Jesus (Matt 26:57-66; Mk 14:53-64; John 18:13-26).
- Opposed and took action against the apostles (Acts 4:6, 5:17, 21, 24, 27; 23:2; 24:1-2)
- Opposed Stephen (Acts 7:1).

When there is an environment of carnality and spiritual artificiality the effects are two-fold. First, the truth is blocked so that it cannot be perceived or understood. This is precisely why Jesus told such people they could not hear His word. “Why do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word” (John 8:43). A worldly mindset causes a growth to form over the spiritual ears and heart of the individual. It creates a condition referred to as being “uncircumcised in heart and ears” (Acts 7:51). There is no resource found in the human nature than can correct this condition. No amount of scholarship, study, or other forms of intellectual discipline can resolve the dilemma created by carnality – being fleshly, or worldly-minded.

The religious leaders among the Jews had created an environment in which iniquity could flourish because it was sanctioned by their approach to the Law. Jesus referred to their approach as:

- “Your tradition” – something that transgressed the commandment of God (Matt 15:3), and “made the commandment of God of none effect” (Matt 15:6; Mk 7:13).
- “The tradition of men,” by which they laid “aside the commandment of God” (Mk 7:8).
- “Your own tradition,” which required that they “reject the commandment of God” (Mk 7:9).
- “The commandments of men,” which voided their worship of God, causing it to be “vain” (Matt 15:9; Mk 7:7).

Jesus spoke harshly concerning the religious leaders, rarely displaying the slightest bit of tolerance for them. He:

- Declared that they said, but “do not” (Matt 23:3).
- Called them “blind guides” (Matt 23:16, 24).
- Said they bound “heavy burdens” on people, yet would not lift a finger to move them (Matt 23:4).

- Did “all their works” to be “seen of men” (Matt 23:5).
- Loved the main places, where they were more conspicuous (Matt 23:6).
- Called them “hypocrites” (Matt 23:13,14,15,23,27).
- Affirmed that they “shut off the kingdom of heaven from men” NASB (Matt 23:13).
- “Devoured widows houses” (Matt 23:14a).
- For pretense made long prayers (Matt 23:14).
- Compassed sea and land to make a single proselyte, then made him twice the child of hell that they were (Matt 23:15).
- Called them “fools and blind” (Matt 23:17,18, 24).
- They omitted the weightier matters of the Law, namely “judgment, mercy, and faith” (Matt 23;23).
- Were like whitewashed tombs that appeared beautiful outwardly, but were filled with “dead men’s bones and all uncleanness” (Matt 23:27).
- Were filled with “hypocrisy and iniquity” (Matt 23:28).
- Were the children of those who killed the prophets (Matt 23:31).
- Were “serpents” and a “generation of vipers” that could not escape “the damnation of hell” (Matt 23:33).
- Warned His disciples to “Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees,” referring to their teaching (Matt 23:6,12).
- Warned His disciples to “Beware of the scribes,” who liked the main places (Lk 20:46).

The conduct of these men was mandated by their religion. Because the truth of God is calculated to impact upon the entirety of life, the corruption of it in the minds of men also causes thorough corruption. There is no more potentially dangerous or corrupt person than the one who is in bondage to perverted religion. This is because their religion sanctions what they do, therein searing their conscience.

The religion of the Jewish leaders, compiled by mixing the traditions of men with corrupted views of Scripture, produced groups like the Pharisees, Sadducees, Scribes, and the Council (Sanhedrin). These groups working together with the high priest, were instrumental in the death of Jesus, the arrest of the apostles and the attempt to quiet them, and the stoning of Stephen. Now the office of the high priest will issue letters authorizing the arrest, incarceration, and death of the followers of Jesus.

WICKED COMMUNICATION

“ . . . And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues . . .” Other versions read, “letters of authorization.” GWN

The journey to Damascus from Jerusalem was about one hundred miles, and involved crossing the Jordan River.

The Authority of the High Priest

Observe how the high priest, located in Jerusalem, exercised authority over the synagogues of that area. Although the high priest was to major on “things pertaining to God,” the office had been become so corrupted that it was now more related to government, and authority over men. The high priest did have some judicial duties, but they related more to the settling of personal disputes and the administration of any required punishment (Deut 17:8-13). The office was never intended to be what it had become during the time of our text.

I have observed over the years a marked predilection among men to use religion as a means of gaining authority over the people. This was not confined to Judaism, but found its way into Christianity as well. The Roman church pioneered this kind of approach, and it has now proliferated into nearly the whole of Christendom. All of this contradicts a specific word that was given by Jesus to His apostles – those who were placed “first” in the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:28). Jesus said, “But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many” (Matt 20:25-28).

Damascus

No reason is provided for Saul singling out the city of Damascus. It is clear from verses ten and thirteen of this chapter that there was a group of believers in that area. In fact, word had already reached the brethren there concerning the havoc that Saul had wreaked against the saints in Jerusalem (9:13).

Although Damascus is mentioned forty-five times from Genesis through Zechariah, this is the first mention of it in the New Covenant Scriptures. It is the most ancient city of Syria, and is first mentioned in Genesis 14:15, and was the city from which Abraham’s steward, Eliezer, came (Gen 15:2). Syria, in which it was located, was a land long noted for opposition to the children of Israel.

THE WAY

“ . . . that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women.”

It is apparent from the above texts that “the way” includes both a manner of life and the doctrine that has been embraced – which doctrine compels one to live in a certain manner and with a specific objective.

Nearly all other versions read, “ the Way.” NKJV Other variations read “that way,” GENEVA “this course,” MRD “the Way [of life as determined by faith in Jesus Christ],” AMPLIFIED “the Lord’s Way,” CEV “the Way of the Lord,” GNB and “the way of Christ.” GW

The words “this way” come from the Greek expression th/j o` dou/ . As used in this text, it has the following lexical meaning. “A course of conduct, a way (i.e. manner) of thinking, feeling, deciding,” THAYER “a manner of living and acting, way of life, type of conduct,” FRIBERG “a way of doing, speaking,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “way of life or acting, conduct.” GINGRICH Robertson says of this word, “A common method in the Acts for describing Christianity as the Way of life.” ROBERTSON’S WORD PICTURES

This expression is also found in the following texts.

- “But when divers were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus” (Acts 19:9).
- “And the same time there arose no small stir about that way ” (Acts 19:23).
- “And I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women” (Acts 22:4).

- “But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets” (Acts 24:14).

- “And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and said, When Lysias the chief captain shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter” (Acts 24:22).

It is apparent from the above texts that “the way” includes both a manner of life and the doctrine that has been embraced – which doctrine compels one to live in a certain manner and with a specific objective.

This way of describing how a person lives is seen throughout Scripture. Life is perceived as traveling on a thoroughfare that leads to a particular destination. Some of the expressions that shape our thinking on this matter are as follows.

- “The WAY of the Lord” (Gen 18:19; Judges 2:22).
- “The WAY of the earth” (Josh 23:14).
- “The WAY of his father” (1 Kgs 22:52).
- “The WAY of sinners” (Psa 1:1).
- “The WAY of the righteous” (Psa 1:6).
- “The WAY of the ungodly” (Psa 1:6).
- “The WAY of Thy testimonies” (Psa 119:14).
- “The WAY of lying” (Psa 119:29).
- “The WAY of truth” (Psa 119:30).
- “The WAY of His saints” (Prov 2:8).
- “The WAY of the evil man” (Prov 2:12).
- “The WAY of good men” (Prov 2:20).
- “The WAY of the wicked” (Prov 4:19).
- “The WAY of life” (Prov 6:23).
- “The WAY of righteousness” (Prov 8:20).
- “The WAY of understanding” (Prov 9:6).
- “The WAY of a fool” (Prov 12:15).
- “The WAY of transgressors” (Prov 13:15).
- “The WAY of the slothful man” (Prov 15:19).
- “The WAY of man” (Prov 21:8).
- “The WAY of the just” (Isa 26:7).
- “The WAY of holiness” (Isa 35:8).
- “The WAY of peace” (Isa 59:8).
- “The WAY of the heathen” (Jer 10:2).
- “The WAY of life, and the WAY of death” (Jer 21:8).
- “The WAY of the meek” (Amos 2:17).
- “The WAY of God” (Matt 22:16).

- “The WAY of salvation” (Acts 16:17).
- “The WAY of truth” (2 Pet 2:2).
- “The WAY of Balaam” (2 Pet 2:15).
- “The WAY of Cain” (Jude 1:11).

There are thirty-one expressions that confirm that what one thinks dictates the way that they live. No person lives out of harmony with the perspective of life they have adopted.

We are living in a time when this fact has been blurred. There are even some who deride living in a strict manner, saying that we should adapt to our environment in order to reach it. This is in sharp conflict with prophecy, the words of Jesus, and apostolic doctrine.

- Prophetically, Isaiah foretold the time of salvation as one in which people would live in a certain manner. He depicted that life as sojourning on a highway that was raised up by God Himself. “And an highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there” (Isa 35:8-9).

- In our time, an approach to Christianity has been taken that makes it nearly impossible to distinguish professing Christians. Often they speak and act like the world – which, according to the Scriptures, would mean that they were, in fact, worldly. Those

Jesus spoke of both life and death as a way. “Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it” (Mat 7:13-14).

- The apostolic doctrine speaks of a new and living way. “By a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, His flesh” (Heb 10:20). They also spoke of the danger of getting off of “the way.” “And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed” (Heb 12:13), and of those who have “forsaken the right way” (2 Pet 2:15).

The Implications of the Text

The fact that Saul of Tarsus sought authority to arrest and incarcerate those who were of “the way” confirmed that there were ways in which they could be identified. The text does not suggest that he would make his determinations by interrogation. When he went into the synagogues of Damascus, there was some way in which followers of Christ would be evident or apparent. Their speech and manner would in some way distinguish them. Their preferences and love for one another must also have been glaringly apparent. How else could they be known?

In our time, an approach to Christianity has been taken that makes it nearly impossible to distinguish professing Christians. Often they speak and act like the world – which, according to the Scriptures, would mean that they were, in fact, worldly. Those who walk in a certain way are considered to be of that way, belonging to it.

Under the First Covenant the people were strictly charged concerning their manners, “And ye shall not walk in the manners of the nation, which I cast out before you: for they committed all these things, and therefore I abhorred them” (Lev 20:23). “Learn not the way of the heathen” (Jer 10:2). Again, they were warned not to get into a state of mind where they would say “We will be as the heathen” (Ezek 20:32).

In Christ we are solemnly admonished, “ Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?” (2 Cor 6:14). And again, “Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate , saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you” (2 Cor 6:17). It is an absurdity unworthy of embracing that after Jesus delivered us from this present evil world (Gal 1:4), and chose us out of it (John 15:19), that He would think nothing of us retaining its manners. Those who make an effort to justify adopting the ways of the world are only betraying their oneness with it.

THE AUTHORITY OF CORRUPT RELIGION

“ . . . he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem.”

The authority by which Saul set out to arrest, incarcerate, and put to death those who were following Christ, was religious authority – corrupt religious authority. The power of such a religion is seen in the fact that Saul did this in all good conscience, thinking he was serving God – when nothing could possibly have been further from the truth (Acts 26:9-10).

Those who exalt the right to human opinion in matters of religion overlook the bondage that is fostered by error. They also fail to consider the power of a personal persuasion, and what it can move a person to do – as seen in Saul of Tarsus. All of this accents the need to embrace the truth alone. Both truth and error have a staggering impact upon the mind and heart. When exposed to either of them, we cannot remain neutral.

DIVINE INTERVENTION

“ 3 And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven . . .”

In this text we are going to be exposed to a heavenly manner that is not commonly acknowledged. Perhaps you have heard it said that God will never force himself upon a person. Whatever is intended by that expression, it certainly is contradicted in this text. Here, that is precisely what the Lord does, intruding into the life of Saul of Tarsus without any invitation whatsoever. Saul is not seeking Christ – in fact, he is dominated by a hatred of Him and those who follow Him. Jesus will now make Saul consider Him. He will not let him get to Damascus to persecute His people. He will stop his evil intention, and even smite him down to the ground. However, the Lord will not bring him to desolation, as He did Sodom and Gommorrah (Gen 19:25), Pharaoh and his army (Ex 14:28; 15:4), Nadab and Abihu (Lev 10:1-2), Uzzah (2 Sam 6:6-7), Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:5,10), and others. He will rather change the course of the life of Saul as he did those who were building a city and a tower in the plain of Shinar (Gen 11:7-8), or Israel, when He “sold them into the hands of their enemies” (Judges 2:14).

God can give life, take life, or change the course of ones life – and do so at will, without the consent of men, and in spite of all of their intentions and activities. This is the God to whom Nebuchadnezzar was introduced when it was confirmed to Him by experience that before God “all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?” (Dan 4:35).

The exalted Christ, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily, conducts Himself in the same manner. The borders of possibility are defined by His will, not His power – for there is nothing He wills that is beyond His power to accomplish. He makes alive whomever He wills, for He has power to do so. That is why He said, “For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will” (John 5:21). Our text provides a sterling example of that very thing.

SUDDENLY

“And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly . . .” Other versions read, “suddenly a light from heaven shone around him,”: NKJV “flashed around him,” NASB “flashed all around him,” CJB “there was poured upon him light from heaven,” MRD “a brilliant light from heaven spotted down on him,” LIVING “suddenly lazed around him,” PHILLIPS and “about-gleam-flings light out of the heaven.” INTERLINEAR

Paul refers to this incident in Acts 22:6 before the Jewish council: “And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me ” (Acts 22:6). He also referred to it before king Agrippa: “At midday , O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me” (Acts 26:13). There we learn that this happened at Noon – when the sun was at its zenith. When, therefore, the light of nature was at its peak, there came a light from heaven that was exceedingly bright, reducing nature’s light to insignificance.

“Suddenly”

The word “suddenly” means “unexpectedly,” THAYER “immediately . . . pertaining to an extremely short period of time between the precious state or event and a subsequent state or event,” LOUW-NIDA and “in an instant.” LEH Here is something that only can be induced by Deity: something, sudden, unexpected, totally altering the condition, and focused.

Among men, for something productive to take place, considerable preparation is required. Things that are sudden and unexpected are not generally productive, but are disruptive in nature, and often even destructive. But it is not always this way regarding things that issue from heaven.

While Saul was not reckoning on anything like this suddenly occurring, those who are in Christ Jesus can live with this in mind, and even derive great consolation and hope from it. The second appearing of our Lord will be in this manner. Jesus said of His return, “Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning: Lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch” (Mark 13:35-37). Speaking of the way in which He will return Jesus said, “I come quickly” (Rev 3:11; 22:12,20). By faith the saints live in the hope of a sudden, climactic, and glorious interruption in the affairs of men. It will be a time when all wickedness will come to a grinding halt, and “the righteous will shine forth in the Kingdom of their Father” (Matt 13:43).

A LIGHT FROM HEAVEN

“ . . . there shined round about him a light from heaven . . .”

Heaven is larger than earth, and is vastly superior to it. Yet, an overpowering light is issued from heaven, and focused on a single geographical location, at a specific point in time, and on a singular individual. That is how exacting and precise heaven’s involvement with men can be!

It seems to me that it is order for believers to live out their lives with a keen awareness of the suddenness with which everything can be altered, and the abruptness with which natural intentions can be ended.

“Shined Round About Him”

Jesus did not allow Saul to even get to Damascus – much less fulfill what he had determined to do there. By saying the light “shined round about him,” the text means it was focused upon him. He had become the object of Divine attention, and there was not a thing he could do about it.

The words “shined round about” are translated from a single Greek word – perih, strayen . The word means, “to flash around,” THAYER “giving out light with lightening quality . . . shine around someone,” FRIBERG and “shine very brightly on an area surrounding an object – to shine brightly around, to flash around.” LOUW-NIDA

As in the natural creation, light, or illumination, precedes all work in the new creation. Here there is an outward circumstance that will precisely parallel what will take place within Saul of Tarsus.

Satan Is Repelled

The prince of the power of the air had blinded Saul’s mind concerning Jesus Christ, and was compelling him to carry out a malicious intent against the believers. Yet, just as suddenly as this light flashed upon and around Saul, so it brought an abrupt conclusion to Satan’s delusion. This occasion was so significant, that it caused the mission in which Saul was engaged to be suddenly terminated. Something was taking place that overshadowed Saul’s intention, and he knew it.

It seems to me that it is order for believers to live out their lives with a keen awareness of the suddenness with which everything can be altered, and the abruptness with which natural intentions can be ended. It is no wonder that James counseled those who lived as though they were guaranteed long and tranquil lives, “Go to now, ye that say, To day or to morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain: Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that” (James 4:15). This is too difficult for those who are not living by faith. It is, however, something that is not only imperative for those who are strangers and pilgrims in this present evil world, but pleasant as well. Such people live with Divine workings in mind.

SAUL IS APPREHENDED WITHOUT SEEKING

“ 4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?”

In his letter to the Philippi an church, Paul referred to the time when he was “apprehended of Christ Jesus,” or when Christ “laid hold of,” NIJV or “took hold of” NIV him (Phil 3:12). Other versions read, “taken possession of,” DARBY “Jesus the Messiah took me,” MRD “first possessed me,” NLT “made me His own,” RSV “I have been embraced by Christ Jesus,” ISV “I was captured by Christ Jesus,” WILLIAMS and “Christ Jesus (the Messiah) has laid hold of me and made me His own.” AMPLIFIED

The phrase used in Philippians 3:12 is admittedly a strong one, and contradicts a lot of notions concerning the role of volition and seeking in the obtaining of salvation. The word “apprehended” is translated from the Greek word katelth, fqh (kat-elaf-tha). This word has the following lexical meaning. “To lay hold of so as to make one’s own, to obtain, attain . . . to take into oneself, to appropriate . . . to seize upon, take possession of,” THAYER “to seize, grasp with force; overpower, gain control over,” FRIBERG and “to acquire, to attain, to obtain, to take.” LOUW-NIDA

However this definition may impact upon one’s theology, there is absolutely no question about the meaning of the word. It is used in the same sense several times in Scripture. I have highlighted the words that are translated from the Greek word used in Philippians 2:13.

• “And wheresoever he taketh him , he teareth him: and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I spake to thy disciples that they should cast him out; and they could not” (Mark 9:18).

- “And the scribes and Pharisees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had set her in the midst. They say unto him, Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act” (John 8:3,4).

- “Then Jesus said unto them, Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you : for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth” (John 12:35).

- “Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain ” (1 Cor 9:24).

- “But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that day should overtake you as a thief” (1 Thess 5:4).

There are also texts in which the apprehension has to do with understanding, attaining, or comprehending (John 1:5; Acts 4:13; 10:34; Rom 9:30; Eph 3:18). However, all of those texts have to do with men taking hold of, or comprehending, the truth or righteousness of God. When speaking of Deity, however, this is not the sense of the word, as though God was comprehending or discerning something. If there is any question about this in the minds of men, the text before us will confirm precisely how Jesus took hold of Saul of Tarsus. It certainly was not merely by comprehending him. He did not pummel him into subjection – Divine power does not need to do that. There is a sense in which Divine power dries up natural strength, rendering the individual physically helpless.

SUBDUED IN AN INSTANT

“And he fell to the earth . . .” Other versions read, “and he fell to the ground,” NKJV “and he went down on the earth,” BBE “and falling on the ground,” DARBY “having falling upon the earth,” YLT and “He dropped to the ground.” ISV

There are a few souls in history who have confronted the Lord in a more direct manner, without the buffer of human intervention. One time when an angry God spoke to Moses and Aaron saying He was going to consume the people “in a moment,” they “fell upon their faces” (Num 16:43) – and they knew who He was! Another time, when a group of soldiers from the high priest came to arrest Jesus, “they went backward, and fell to the ground” when He identified Himself (John 18:6). Once, when an angel from heaven spoke to Daniel he “fainted, and was sick certain days” (Dan 8:27). Another time when Daniel saw a great vision, “there remained no strength” in him, and he “retained no strength” (Dan 10:8). When the glorified Christ appeared to John the beloved, who was living in favor with Him, John testified, “I fell at His feet as dead” (Rev 1:12).

All of these appearances, including the one of our text, were only attended by a partial glory. The fulness of Divine glory did not burst upon any of these people, else they would not have survived. When Jesus returns in all of His glory, His enemies will make an attempt to flee, not to fight (Rev 6:16-17). No mortal can stand before the fulness of Divine glory. Indeed, not even the massive and complex creation can do so (Rev 20:11).

In Our Time

Whether men wish to acknowledge it or not, there is such a thing as a confrontation with Christ Jesus that cannot be ignored. The ultimate example of this will be when He returns again, and “every eye shall see Him”

The point here is that in our time there has been a significant loss of the knowledge of the glory of God within the modern church – if, indeed, there has ever been any awareness of it there. Conversion is pointedly described as “the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 4:6). That knowledge has a calculated effect upon those who receive it, just as surely as that light from heaven had an effect upon Saul of Tarsus. Saul did not lift up a sword, make effort to walk bravely into the light, or even to run from it. Whether men wish to acknowledge it or not, there is such a thing as a confrontation with Christ Jesus that cannot be ignored. The ultimate example of this will be when He returns again, and “every eye shall see Him” (Rev 1:7). If men will be sensitive to it, and not be ignorant of their visitation as Jerusalem was (Lk 19:44), the Gospel of Christ will bring them face to face with the Lord’s Christ, just as surely as it did on the day of Pentecost, in Solomon’s porch, in the city of Samaria, and with the Ethiopian eunuch. It is in this sense that the Gospel of Christ is “the power of God unto salvation” (Rom 1:16).

A VOICE

“ . . . and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?” Other versions read, “why are you persecuting Me?” NKJV “why are you attacking me so cruelly?” BBE and are you persecuting Me [harassing, troubling, and molesting Me]?” AMPLIFIED

Following His enthronement there were not many occasions when Jesus appeared, or spoke to, those upon earth.

- STEPHEN. He appeared to Stephen when he was about to be stoned to death. “But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God” (Acts 7:55-56).

- SAUL OF TARSUS. To Saul while he was en route to arrest and imprison believers in Damascus. “And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks” (Acts 9:4-5).

- PAUL. To Paul in Corinth, when it appeared as though his labors there were vain. “Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace: For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city” (Acts 18:9-10).

- PAUL. To Paul in Jerusalem, while he was in the Temple in a trance. “And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance; And saw him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me. And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee: And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him. And He said unto me, Depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles ” (Acts 22:19-21).

Paul referred to this occasion as him seeing Jesus Christ: “Am I not an apostle? am I not free? have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? are not ye my work in the Lord?” Ananias told Saul he had been chosen to, among other things, “see that Just One.”

PAUL. To Paul when being tried in Jerusalem. “And the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome” (Acts 23:11).

- JOHN. To John, on the Isle of Patmos. “I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea” (Rev 1:10-11).

This is the only known occasion when the glorified Christ appeared to someone who was not born again. However, this is a most unique instance, classed along with the appearances of the risen Christ to chosen witnesses prior to His ascension. As it is written, “And that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day according to the scriptures: And that He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve: After that, He was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that, He was seen of James; then of all the apostles. And last of all He was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time. For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God” (1 Cor 15:4-9).

Paul referred to this occasion as him seeing Jesus Christ: “Am I not an apostle? am I not free? have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? are not ye my work in the Lord?” (1 Cor 9:1). Ananias told Saul he had been chosen to, among other things, “see that Just One” (Acts 22:14).

The Voice

The “voice” that Saul heard was that of the Lord Jesus Himself, as is made clear in what was said by that voice. Later, in a more extended report of what took place in our text, Paul declared that Jesus said, “But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee” (Acts 26:16). This was the call of Saul to the apostleship, and was most unique. Peter, Andrew, James, and John were called when they were engaged in fishing duties (Matt 4:18-19, 21-22). Matthew was called when he was sitting at the seat of customs (Matt 9:9). Saul was called when he was on his way to persecute the disciples of Jesus.

“Why Persecutes Thou Me?”

At this point, Jesus does not identify Himself clearly, stating that He is the one Saul is persecuting. His penetrating question emphasizes how unreasonable it was to be against those who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. Saul’s actions had been duly noted by the Lord of glory. Now, heaven will mandate the abrupt halt of Saul’s initiative against the saints. On that very day, Saul’s oppression of the people of God will stop, and he will embark on a new course of life. In this case, Jesus will first make Himself known as the Lord who has the government upon His shoulder (Isa 9:6). In that capacity it will be evident that He is in absolute control.

THE SENSITIVITY OF A GOOD CONSCIENCE

“ 5a And he said, Who art Thou, Lord?”

Saul responds, “Who are You, Lord?” NKJV He does not ask “Sir, who are you?” as the Complete Jewish Bible, Literal Translation of the Holy Bible read; or “Who are you, Sir?” as the God’s Word Version, the New American Bible, Williams New Testament read; or “Who are you?” as the Contemporary English Version reads; or “Who is speaking, sir?” as the Living Bible reads. How miserably all of those versions represent Saul’s answer, as though he was responding to an ordinary man! When translators allow etymological interpretations to upstage the knowledge of Divine manners, they have ceased to serve the people of God. The rendering of “sir” is wholly unjustified. The consistent word in the Greek manuscripts is ku,rioj (kur-is), which lexically means “one having power or authority, he to whom a person or things belongs, about which he has the power of deciding; master, lord . . . universally of the possessor and disposer of a thing, the owner.” THAYER

There is no possible way that this word can be rendered “sir.” It is true that around the thirteenth century the title “sir” was conferred on knights, barons, and sometimes priests – or some other man of rank of position. MERRIAM-WEBSTER However, such a title does not match the nature of this revelation – a light from heaven smiting Saul the ground, and an arresting voice speaking that demanded the attention and instant respect and submission of Saul.

When the Lord asserts His power, it cannot be resisted. This pertains to an initiative to curse, as with Pharaoh and his armies. There is also the initiative to change a man's mind, as in the case of king Nebuchadnezzar. It also pertains to an initiative to bless, as in the case of Jesus being sent into the world.

These lesser translations are often the means of introducing weakness into the thinking capacity of men. They do not maintain the solidity and power of the Word of God. In fact, they are much like a bag with holes (Hab 1:6), or a broken cistern that can hold no water (Jer 2:13). Men do well to be deliberate in their choice of a Bible for their primary reference. In my judgment, when dealing with the Word of God, it is far better to begin with weighty archaic words, than with small and frail contemporary ones.

When Saul responded, "Who art Thou Lord?" he was not only acknowledging the superiority of the One speaking to him, but expressing his subjection to him as well. He did not know who the Person was, but he did know He was greater than himself. Here was a case where Jesus fulfilled a word from Isaiah the prophet: "He shall smite the earth with the rod of His mouth" (Isa 11:4). All Jesus did was direct his attention to Saul of Tarsus, and say a word to him, and all of his hostility melted like wax!

Notice that Saul sought to know the identity of the one speaking to him. In a way, this required some boldness. Yet, that is not the way it is best viewed. This is rather evidence of the effect of a Divine initiative of the sort made known in this text. When the Lord asserts His power, it cannot be resisted. This pertains to an initiative to curse, as with Pharaoh and his armies (Ex 9:16; Ex 14:27). There is also the initiative to change a man's mind, as in the case of king Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 4:32; 5:21). It also pertains to an initiative to bless, as in the case of Jesus being sent into the world (Acts 3:26; 4:4). In this text, it pertains to someone being called into the ministry. Paul testifies of the process that began to be fulfilled in our text, "But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus" (Gal 1:15-17).

In our day, pseudo-intellectualism has robbed men of natural sensitivity to Divine workings. I question that the average American Christian would have responded in the way Saul of Tarsus did. Some would simply have died of fright. Others would probably say it thundered, like those some who heard the voice of God speaking from heaven in the days of Jesus (John 12:29).

The point is that there is a moral and spiritual condition in which men are more apt to respond to the Lord. In the case of Saul of Tarsus, that condition was one where a consciousness of God was prominent. That consciousness was, in a sense, crude and lacking God-glorifying clarity. Yet, because it was based upon his understanding of Scripture, it caused Saul to be sensitive enough to respond to the revelation of Jesus in an appropriate manner.

JESUS IDENTIFIES HIMSELF

"5b And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest . . ."

Jesus, like the Father, does not desire to remain unknown or mysterious. He desires to be known! In fact, that is the objective that drives Divine involvements with men. Eternal life, by definition, is knowing God – knowing His identity, manners, and purpose. In this respect, the "true God" and "His Son Jesus Christ" (1 John 5:20) differ from all other gods. No other religion can boast of knowing and understanding their god (Jer 9:23-24), or of dwelling in Him, and He in them. There is an element of mystery concerning all false god's, with whom no personal affiliation and experience is affirmed. However, this is not true of God the Father or the exalted Christ. Therefore, when Paul asks who this superior One is, to whom he admits he is subject, Jesus will reply with great specificity.

“I AM JESUS”

When men referred to Jesus they said, “Jesus of Galilee” (Matt 26:69), “Jesus of Nazareth” (Matt 26:71), “Jesus the prophet of Nazareth” (Matt 21:11), or “Jesus the son of Joseph” (John 6:42). Here, the Lord simply referred to himself as “Jesus,” and stated that He was the One whom Saul was persecuting.

Paul knew very well who “Jesus” was – at least in His human form. At this time he was thinking within himself that he “ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth” – something he acknowledged to Agrippa when describing his life during the time of our text. It is true that there were other men named “Jesus.”

- This was the Greek form of “Joshua,” to which both Stephen and Paul referred by the name “Jesus” – Ίησους (Acts 7:45; Heb 4:8).
- There was also “Jesus, whose surname was Justus” (Col 4:11).

In addition to the above, and according to the Jewish historian Josephus, there were at least nine other men from the time of Christ who were named “Jesus.”

CONTEMPORARY MEN NAMED “JESUS”

- 1 A high priest displaced by Antiochus Epiphanes to make room for Onias (Antiquities 12, 5, 1; 15, 3, 1).
2. The son of Phabet, deprived by Herod of the high priesthood in order to make way for his own father-in-law Simon (Antiquities 15, 9,4).
- 3 Son of Sie, successor of Eleazar (Antiquities 17, 13, 1).
- 4 The son of Damnaeus, made high priest by Agrippa in place of Ananus (Antiquities 20, 9, 1).
- 5 The son of Gamaliel, and successor of the preceding in the high priesthood (Antiquities 20, 9, 4; compare War, 4, 4,3).
- 6 Son of Ananus, a plebeian, and the utterer of the remarkable doom against Jerusalem, which was fulfilled during the last siege simultaneously with his own death (War, 6, 5, 3).
- 7 A priest, son of Thebuthus, who surrendered to Titus the sacred utensils of the Temple (War, 6, 8, 3).
- 8 Son of Sepphas, one of the chief priests and governor of Tiberias (War, 2, 20, 4).
- 9 Son of Saphat, a ringleader of the Sicarii during the last war with the Romans (War, 3, 9, 7).

From the writings of Josephus

However, Jesus had so distinguished the name given to Him, that He was at once the person they thought of when they heard that name. To others, it was but a name, and was identified by purely earthly distinction. Joshua, for example, is referred to as “the son of Nun” (Ex 33:11). Another Jew named “Jesus” was “called Justus,” as affirmed in Colossians 4:11.

However, when it came to the “Jesus” who appeared to Saul Tarsus, there were distinctions owned by no other person. He is known as:

- “Jesus the Christ” (Matt 16:20).
- “Jesus the prophet of Galilee” (Matt 21:11).
- “Jesus the King of the Jews” (Matt 27:37).
- “Jesus the Lord” (2 Cor 4:5).
- “Jesus the Son of God” (Heb 4:14).
- “Jesus the Author and Finisher of our faith” (Heb 12:2).
- “Jesus the Mediator of the New Covenant” (Heb 12:24).

There were affirmations of Him, such as:

- “Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God” (John 20:31).
- “Jesus is the Lord” (1 Cor 12:3).
- “Jesus is the Son of God” (1 John 4:15).
- “That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth” (Phil 2:10).

All of these expressions precisely reflect who Jesus is. They are not mere terms. When Jesus speaks, He speaks in those capacities, because they declare who He really is. That means that the statement “I am Jesus” was accompanied with all of the power and majesty of His Person. Saul knew he was not confronting any ordinary man. I long for the time when this impression will register upon the hearts of the people of our time, and they will be freed from the blight of normalcy and ordinariness.

WHOM THOU PERSECUTEST

Other versions read, “whom you are persecuting,” NKJV “are chasing,” INTERLINEAR and “are so cruel to,” CEV The prevailing translation in all versions is “persecuting.”

The word persecute has the following lexical meaning: “To make to run or flee, pout to flight, drive away; to run swiftly in order to catch some person; to harass, trouble, molest one; to persecute,” THAYER “hostile pursuit,” FRIBERG and “to prosecute or bring action against.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

It is evident that the word “persecute” is a very large one. There is intensity and aggressiveness in the action, together with an intention to cause trouble, and even do harm. There is an effort to demonstrate that the one being persecuted is wrong, and worthy of any disadvantage that can be brought to bear upon them. All, of this is seen in the most vivid description of the intentions of Saul of Tarsus.

- Consented to the martyrdom of Stephen (Acts 8:1).
- Made havoc of the church (Acts 8:3a).
- Entered from house to house, dragging both men and women to prison (Acts 8:3b).
- Breathed out threats and murder against the disciples of the Lord (Acts 9:1).
- Obtained letters to enter synagogues in Damascus, and bring believing men and women bound to Jerusalem (Acts 9:2).
- Persecuted believers, both men and women, unto the death (Acts 22:4).
- Brought believers bound to Jerusalem to be punished (Acts 22:5).
- Received authority to bind all the saints of the Lord (Acts 9:14).
- Destroyed them that called upon the name of the Lord (Acts 9:21).

- Shut up many saints in prison (Acts 26:10).
- When saints were put to death, gave his consent (Acts 26:10).
- Punished believers in the synagogues often (Acts 26:11a).
- Compelled some believers to blaspheme (Acts 26:11b).
- Was furiously engaged against believers, even pursuing them into foreign cities (Acts 26:11c).
- Wasted, or tried to destroy, the church of God (Gal 1:13).

We do not know how long this aggression continued. It was of sufficient duration for Saul to develop a reputation for his initiative against the followers of Jesus Christ (Acts 9:14,21,26). Conservative estimates are one to two years (35/36 A.D. – 37 A.D.), with two years being the more probable.

The Spirit reasons with us concerning the impact of faith upon those possessing it. He testifies of the great victories that were wrought by faith, mighty deliverances, and the subduing of inimical forces. But that is not all that faith does!

Now Jesus informs this persecutor that He is actually the One he has been oppressing. During His ministry, Jesus told Peter, Andrew, James, and John that when He comes again, He will separate the sheep from the goats. At that time He will make public the fact that the precise manner in which every individual responded to His people will be a key factor in the determination of their eternal destiny. Allow me to repeat the words of Jesus to which I referred at the beginning of this lesson – this time from The Amplified Bible. To the saved He will say, “Truly I tell you, in so far as you did it for one of the least in the estimation of men] of these My brethren, you did it for Me .” To the lost He will say, “ Solemnly I declare to you, in so far as you failed to do it for the least [in the estimation of men] of these, you failed to do it for Me .” (Mat 25:40,45). The gravity of this statement is confirmed in our text, leaving no doubt that this is precisely how the response of men to the people of God is viewed in heaven. With that in mind, the confrontation of Saul with the living Christ on the road to Damascus was a singular blessing!

Why Do Such Things Occur?

Those who entertain simplistic views of Divine protection and aid may wonder why such an initiative was allowed to continue. The church was not weak at this point, and there appeared to be no need for severe chastening. Why didn't the angel of the Lord camp round about those believers to protect them, as Psalm 34:7 states? Why were they not the head instead of the tail, as Deuteronomy 28:44 had promised? Or – could it be that such assessments come short of a good understanding?

The saints in question were subjected to the seeming superiority of their enemy for the same reason that Abel was killed by Cain (Gen 4:8), holy prophets were killed by Jezebel (1 Kgs 18:4,13), Zechariah the prophet was stoned in the court of the house of the Lord (2 Chron 24:21-22), and Stephen was stoned by the Jewish council (Acts 7:58-60).

The Spirit reasons with us concerning the impact of faith upon those possessing it. He testifies of the great victories that were wrought by faith, mighty deliverances, and the subduing of inimical forces. But that is not all that faith does! There is also the record of others who “were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection: And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; (Of whom the world was not worthy:) they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth” (Heb 11:35-38).

There is an evil spirit that moves men to equate well being with blessing, and trouble with punishment, or even Divine abandonment. But such views are not comely for the people of God, and they ought to be abandoned with haste. Even Job, who did not have a Bible, knew that it was not right to expect only good from the Lord and not evil (Job 2:10). What is the source of the modern faddish Christian view of prosperity? Precisely how would you explain it to those saints who were put to death during the aggression of Saul of Tarsus? For that matter, how would you explain it to Paul himself who said of the apostles, “For I think that God hath set forth us the apostles last, as it were appointed to death: for we are made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men” (1 Cor 4:9).

If they do not already do so, believers must learn to avoid assessing life according to circumstance. The Kingdom of God does not revolve around people, but around God’s eternal purpose as it is being carried out by the exalted Jesus. There are several objectives that are being accomplished in the government of Jesus.

- God Himself is being glorified (Eph 3:21).
- The greatness of His grace is being confirmed (Eph 2:7-8).
- The saints are being matured, thereby being prepared for glory (Acts 15:14).
- Heavenly citizens are being perfected in a hostile realm (2 Tim 2:21; 1 Pet 5:10).
- Believers are being changed from one degree of glory to another by the Holy Spirit (2 Cor 3:18).
- Through the church, heavenly principalities and powers are being tutored in the manifold wisdom of God (Eph 3:10).
- The extent of the fall of man is being confirmed (John 6:63; Rom 7:18; 8:7-8;).
- The superiority of the new creation is being demonstrated (2 Cor 4:16).
- The transcendence of our spiritual weaponry is being confirmed in battle (2 Cor 10:3-5).
- God is showing unto the heirs of the promise the immutability of His counsel (Heb 6:17).

These, and similar, objectives often require the sifting and trial of those who are in Christ Jesus. Sometimes, as confirmed in Job, trials really have nothing to do with what is taking place on earth, but owe their origin to confrontations that take place outside of the world (Job 1:8-12; 2:3-6).

This is why an earth-centered view of life in Christ is so wrong, and therefore thoroughly unprofitable. In fact, it is very damaging. It moves people to think as though they were the only persons, and this world was the only place – and both conclusions are glaringly incorrect!

SOMETHING THAT IS DIFFICULT TO DO

“ 5c . . . it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.”

This entire statement, together with the first part of verse six, are omitted from the majority of later versions. In fact, of the forty-four versions I possess, the ONLY ones that include these words are the King James Version, New King James, Douay-Rheims (1899), Geneva (1599), Bishop’s New Testament (1565), Webster and Revised Webster’s (1833), Tyndale (1534), Young’s Literal (1862), Amplified Bible (1954), Bishop’s Bible (1568), and the Literal Translation of the Holy Bible.

The irony of this circumstance is that this phrase is precisely repeated in Paul’s recounting of this event before King Agrippa: “And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks ” (Acts 26:14). All of the versions that omit the phrase in Acts 9:5 include it in 26:14. I will therefore proceed with the persuasion that it is a precise statement of what was said by Jesus to Paul.

IT IS HARD

“ . . . it is hard for thee . . . ” Other versions read (from 22:14), “it hurts you ,” NRSV “It’s hard for a mortal like you ,” GWN “You are hurting yourself ,” NET “it is useless,” NLT “you are only hurting yourself ,” LIVING “You are finding it painful ,” WEYMOUTH “It is dangerous and turns out badly for you,” AMPLIFIED “It is not for you ,” PHILLIPS “It is difficult for you ,” ALT “It is foolish ,” CEV and “You are hurting yourself .” GNB

Considering these words to be said by Jesus, as I have already confirmed, we have here a rare interpretation of the effect of Divine influences upon the conscience.

Jesus says the activity He will describe was “hard” for Saul. This word means “hard, harsh, rough . . . offensive and intolerable,” THAYER “unpleasant, hard to take,” FRIBERG “difficult . . . terrible,” UBS “pertaining to being harsh and violent,” LOUW-NIDA and “severe.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

The word “hard” not only implies great difficulty, but something that produces mental pain and anguish. It is something that becomes intolerable, and unable to bear.

What we have here is a Governing Savior who has allowed Saul of Tarsus to live with a most difficult circumstance, and do so to the point where it is no longer bearable. Then, at the precisely proper time, He appears to this persecutor of the church of God, facing him with the extreme difficulty he has had living with the situation.

KICK AGAINST THE PRICKS

“ . . . to kick against the pricks.” Other versions read, “the goads,” NKJV “go against the impulse that is driving you,” BBE “kicking against the ox-goads ,” CJB “to resist God,” GWN “fight against My will,” NLT “by fighting Me,” IE “keep on kicking against the goads,” ISV “keep kicking against the goad [to offer vain and perilous resistance],” AMPLIFIED to kick against your own conscience ,” PHILLIPS to fight , CEV by hitting back , like an ox kicking against its owner's stick . GNB

The “pricks” to which Jesus refers are the goads, or prodding, of his conscience. The lexical meaning of the

SUGGESTED CAUSES FOR GOADS

- (1) By violating plain laws of God.
- (2) By attempting to resist His claims.
- (3) By refusing to do what the conscience requires.
- (4) By attempting to free one’s self from serious impressions and alarms.
- (5) By pursuing a course of vice and wickedness against what they know to be right.
- (6) By refusing to submit to the dealings of Providence.
- (7) In any way by opposing God, and refusing to submit to his authority, and to do what is right.

word is, “a sting, as that of bees, locusts; an iron goad for urging on oxen, horses, and other beasts of burden,” THAYER “literally of insects with a poisonous tip stinger; of prodding instruments,” FRIBERG “sharp pointed projection used in stinging,” LOUW-NIDA “a horsegoad,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “the sting of an animal; goad, a pointed stick.” GINGRICH

In my judgment, the goading of the conscience is an experience in which Divine influences are present. I do not know that it can be established that any portion of the human constitution functions independently. The God who can cleanse the conscience can surely convict it.

An ox goad was a very large, and fully adequate for the task of moving a stubborn animal along. You may recall that Shamgar, a judge of Israel, killed six hundred Philistines with an ox goad (Judges 3:31). In my judgment, the goading of the conscience is an experience in which Divine influences are present. I do not know that it can be established that any portion of the human constitution functions independently. The God who can cleanse the conscience can surely convict it. In fact, I do not doubt that being convicted of sin – a work of the Holy Spirit (John 16:8-9) – is involved in the goading of an individual.

Under the Law God revealed that a troubled spirit came from him: “the LORD shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind” (Deut 28:65). David said of the experience of goading, “For thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore” (Psa 38:2). Referring to complex inner experiences, David spoke of the bones that God had broken (Psa 51:8).

Jesus was telling Saul that it was difficult and painful to contend with such feelings.

Kicking against the pricks is an act of stubbornness and rebellion. It is a refusal to yield to the pangs of the conscience. Saul did this, but it was difficult for him to do. Perhaps he could not forget that awful day when he consented to the stoning to Stephen, whose voice rang out in prayer petitioning for those who slew him. It could have been those he dragged off to prison, and to the sentence of death – many of whom were women. And what of those whom he compelled to blaspheme? What could possibly drown out the word by which they blasphemed that worthy name by which they had been called. Ponder the disruption that was caused in the synagogues he entered, as well as the homes, when he went from house to house, making havoc of the church. Oh, there was a lot that could have pricked the conscience of a man who was serious about serving God! No one had imagined that Saul was being jabbed with the goads of a wounded conscience – but he was, and Jesus knew it.

To make this matter even more personal, Paul confessed to something else that happened on this occasion that is not mentioned in this text. When testifying before king Agrippa, Paul told him, “And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks” (Acts 26:14). None but the Jews spoke in that language – it was peculiar to them. That added all the more weight to the words of Christ, for it identified Him as someone having to do with the Jewish people.

Peter indicated that the saints are to reckon on their lives and testimony being like goads to the conscience of those who oppose them. In order for this to happen, they must set their hearts apart to the Lord and maintain a good conscience. That will have a calculated effect on those who oppose them. “But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear: having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ” (1 Pet 3:15-16).

This is no doubt the reason why Saul of Tarsus had to contend with a stinging conscience, and goads to the soul. Those whom he was persecuting had maintained their lives, and responded to initiatives against them, in an exemplary manner. In so doing Saul no doubt had to wrestle with some sense of shame, just as Peter said.

INSTANT RECOGNITION AND SUBMISSION

“6a And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?”

How will Saul respond to the words of the Lord? Would he resist the Lord's Christ as he had done to this point? Indeed, that will not be the case!

TREMBLING AND ASTONISHED

“And he trembling and astonished . . .” Again, these words omitted in most of the later translations. Such translation procedures give no advantage to the people of God, and even introduce an element of confusion. In Paul's recounting of this event before a Jewish assembly, he referred to his response to Jesus. “And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutes . . . And I said, What shall I do, Lord . . .” (Acts 22:10). All of the versions contain these words. Other than a miserable academic explanation, what possible reason can be given for omitting what really happened from the account as stated in the ninth chapter of Acts? Precisely how is that handling aright the word of truth? If it is said that it was omitted from several of the other manuscripts – none of which are the actual originals – what difference does that make? It is the solemn responsibility of translators to arrive at the truth of the matter, not by consensus, or the tallying up of the worth of manuscripts (the value of which they themselves have established). I am developing a growing disdain for those who handle the translation of Scripture as though they were dealing with the words of men. It is the business of both translators, preachers, and even those who procure the finished work, to give themselves the greatest advantage. This will require that they know the truth. As in this text, further accounts establish that what is actually represented in the Authorized Version is a precise account. There can be no satisfactory reason given for its omission. The purported scholarship of men is not weighty enough to justify such a sloppy handling of Scripture. I will proceed with this text in the persuasion that it does portray with exactly precision the response of Saul.

Other versions read, “trembling and astonished,” DOUAY/AMPLIFIED “trembling and astonished,” GENEVA/RWB “and he both trembling and astonished,” PNT/TNT/BISHOPS “trembling also and astonished,” YLT and “both trembling and being astonished.” LITV

The word “trembling” speaks of “being afraid,” THAYER “quiver,” FRIBERG and “shake or tremble, often with the implication of fear and/or consternation.” LOUW-NIDA

This is the response of someone in the flesh confronting Deity, or being made acutely aware that they are in the presence of the Lord. David, a man after God's own heart, once said, “My flesh trembleth for fear of Thee; and I am afraid of Thy judgments” (Psa 119:120). When but an angel spoke directly to Daniel he reported, “And when He had spoken this word unto me, I stood trembling” (Dan 10:11). When the Philippian jailer sensed something supernatural was happening he “came trembling” (Acts 16:29). The newly-found casualness that attends many who say they are coming into the presence of the Lord is really nothing more than a confirmation that they only imagine they are in His presence. No one of Scriptural note was ever knowingly in the presence of the Lord, yet conducted themselves as though He was one of their peers.

The word “astonished,” means to be “astonished, terrified, and amazed; to be frightened,” THAYER “startled,” FRIBERG “a state of astonishment due to both the suddenness and the unusualness of the phenomenon,” LOUW-NIDA “to be astounded,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “to be terror-struck.” LEH

There is such a contradiction between the Lord and mankind that a sudden revelation of Him in His fulness would cause the people to succumb because of that variance. This is why “every eye shall see” the glorified Christ only when their present bodies have been discarded, and the resurrection body is possessed.

Again, this is the effect of the revelation of Deity upon someone who is in the body. It is all the more highlighted when the person has been opposed to the Lord Jesus Christ. This circumstance is why the Lord told Moses, “Thou canst not see My face: for there shall no man see Me, and live” (Ex 33:20). There is such a contradiction between the Lord and mankind that a sudden revelation of Him in His fulness would cause the people to succumb because of that variance. This is why “every eye shall see” the glorified Christ only when their present bodies have been discarded, and the resurrection body is possessed.

And, what kind of response will be found in the opponents of Jesus when He comes in all, of His glory, and the glory of the Father, and that of all the holy angels (Lk 9:26)! The revelation of the glorified Christ to Saul of Tarsus was only partial. It was not the full glory, for that will cause the entire natural creation to “flee” (Rev 20:11). Just as surely as Saul of Tarsus did not oppose Jesus that day, or marshal the men with him to fight against Him, so it simply is not possible that such an action will take place when Jesus is revealed in all of His glory. Any view to the contrary is to be thrown on the trash-heap of useless theology.

WHAT WILT THOU HAVE ME TO DO

“ . . . said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?” Other versions read, “What do You want me to do?” NKJV what dost Thou wish me to do?” YLT and “what do You desire me to do?” AMPLIFIED Paul’s testimony in Acts 22:10 reads, “What shall I do, Lord?” Other versions read, “What am I to do, Lord?” NRSV “What should I do, Lord?” CJB and “What do You want me to do, Lord?” GWN

Once Saul knew who was speaking to him, he also knew there was something he should do. Not knowing what it was, he at once asked for direction. I conclude that a person who is not interested in what the Lord wants him to do is simply not aware that he is living before Him. We know this is the case from the recorded responses of those who were persuaded they were in some way dealing with the Lord.

- THE PEOPLE’S RESPONSE TO JOHN THE BAPTIST. “And the people asked him, saying, What shall we do then?” (Luke 3:10).

- THE RICH YOUNG RULER. “And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?” (Mark 10:17).

There is only one way to avoid this response, and that is to be reconciled to God, being justified from all things. Until that takes place, even the intellectual awareness of the Lord is a rather frightening experience. With that awareness comes a certain insight into the human nature and its fallenness.

- A CERTAIN LAWYER. “And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?” (Luke 10:25).

- ON THE DAY OF PENTECOST. “Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do ?” (Acts 2:37).

- THE PHILIPPI AN JAILER. “And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?” (Acts 16:30).

The general absence of this posture in the professing church is a sad commentary on its condition. The apparent penitent people have to do the minimum, say the minimal, and give the least required, betrays a state that is even beneath that of an inquirer – like the rich young ruler and the certain lawyer.

Those who knowingly confront Jesus Christ at once know that He is Lord – just as Saul of Tarsus did. That is why they inquire concerning what they are to do, for the will of the One who is Lord supercedes the will of all others.

When self-will dominates individuals, it is confirmation that they are unaware of the Lord, and are living at an experiential distance from Him. It is not simply that it is wrong not to be humble and obedient. The very presence of self-centeredness means the person is actually a reject – for “The LORD is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit” (Psa 34:18). And again, “The LORD is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth” (Psa 145:18). Note, it is “THE LORD” that is near to them – not their Friend! This is the reason professing believers are required to examine themselves to determine if they are in the faith. The reason cited is that Christ is in a person unless he is a reprobate (2 Cor 13:5). When the human spirit becomes conscious of God – the “true God” (1 John 5:20) – a low estimation of the natural self at once envelopes in the individual. That is what happened to Isaiah when He saw “THE LORD high and lifted up.” He instantly responded, “Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips” (Isa 6:5). There is only one way to avoid this response, and that is to be reconciled to God, being justified from all things. Until that takes place, even the intellectual awareness of the Lord is a rather frightening experience. With that awareness comes a certain insight into the human nature and its absolute corruption. The need for a new heart becomes evident.

JESUS WORKS THROUGH THE MEMBERS OF HIS BODY

“ 6b And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.”

Here we are introduced to the manner of the Kingdom. When it comes to what men are to do in order to appropriate His salvation, it must come from lips of one of His servants. I have often heard of people who were said to have read the Bible and arrived at the knowledge of Jesus and what is required to be saved – independently of any human involvement. While I am not prepared to say that such a thing is impossible, I unqualifiedly say it is improbable. Paul said that a person cannot believe on the One of whom He has not heard, and that he cannot hear without a preacher that has been “sent” (Rom 10:14). If this was true of Paul, who was “separated” from his “mother’s womb,” was an ardent student of Scripture, and was called directly by Jesus Christ Himself (Gal 1:15-16), it appears to me that it will be exceedingly difficult to support the notion that a person can read their way into Jesus. Notwithstanding, not willing to be contentious about the matter, we will proceed with the record, and let it speak for itself.

GO INTO THE CITY

“And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city . . .” Other versions read, “rise and enter the city,” NASB “get up and go into the city,” NIV and “stand up and enter the city.” NET Paul’s account in Acts 22:10 identifies the city: “Arise, and go into Damascus.”

Thus, Saul is commanded to enter the very city from which he had determined to haul men and women out of the synagogues and bring them bound to Jerusalem (9:2). His itinerary was instantly changed! He was now going to the very place he had originally intended, but this time for a different reason.

Keep in mind that at this time Saul was laying on the ground where he had fallen when this blinding light focused upon him. You might say this was a brief interruption in his journey, designed to bring him into accord with the purpose of the Lord. He will go to the same city, but for reasons defined by Jesus, and not himself.

IT SHALL BE TOLD THEE

“ . . . and it shall be told thee what thou must do.” Other versions read, “you will be told what you must do,” NKJV “you will be told what you are to do,” RSV “it will be made clear to you what you have to do,” BBE “it will be told thee what thou oughtest to do,” MRD “it shall be told thee what it behoveth thee to do,” YLT “and await my further instructions,” LIVING “Someone there will tell you what you must do,” IE and “it will be told to you what it is necessary [for] you to be doing.” ALT Notice the stress that is placed on necessity: “ must do,” “ are to do,” “ have to do,” “ oughtest to do,” behoveth [necessary , fit, and proper] thee to do,” and “ necessary for you to be doing.”

Acts 22:10 reads, “. . . there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do ” (Acts 22:10). In

However, in the aftermath of it all, their minds were incapable of forming a cogent thought about this experience, and their mouth could frame no words concerning it. They had just experienced something transcendent to the natural, and did not have the faintest idea what it was. They were, in a very real sense, struck dumb.

Acts 26:14-18 Paul relates more extensively what Jesus said to him on the road to Damascus. He outlined WHY He had appeared to Saul. “I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee ; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in Me” (Acts 26:14-18). There would, then, be future appearances of Jesus to Saul. However, at this time, he must receive directions from one who is himself acquainted with, and employed by, the Lord Jesus Christ. His induction into Christ will come from his exposure to one of Christ’s disciples – just as it was with those on the day of Pentecost, those in Solomon’s porch, the Samaritans, and the Ethiopian eunuch. The same pattern will follow with the household of Cornelius, Lydia, the Philippi an jailor, the Corinthians, and others. The future appearances of Jesus will come only after Saul has been baptized into Him.

THE OBTUSENESS OF THE FLESH

“ 7 And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man.”

Prior to Him being revealed in all of glory, the fact that Jesus appears and speaks does not mean that everyone in His presence realizes it. There is a certain obtuseness in unregenerate men that makes them incapable of recognizing Jesus unless He enables them to do so. This is what He does in our text. He opens the heart of Saul, and leaves the other hearts closed. He enables Saul to hear and understand what He says, but withholds that ability from those who are with him. It certainly should not surprise us that when the Gospel is preached some understand and some do not. Such a distinction cannot be traced to the human will, for Saul and those who were with him were all in the same category, headed for the same place, and with the same intent. There should be no question about them all being Jews, for Saul was on a Jewish mission, authorized by the Jewish high priest. Him being a zealous for the Law, it is not likely that he hired some mercenaries from the Gentile sector. All of the men were opposed to Jesus, as confirmed by their initiative against His people. Yet, only one of them is singled out and addressed by Jesus. Only one of them is told what they are really doing. Only one of them is told who is speaking. Only one of them is diagnosed by Jesus. And, only one of them is told what to do. Apart from the will of Jesus, exactly how do you explain those distinctions?

In Acts 22:9 Paul reported, “they that were with me saw indeed the light .” In his testimony about this very event to Agrippa, he made a point of saying that up to the time when Jesus spoke, the whole group was involved in what was taking place “At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me . . . And when we were all fallen to the earth , I heard a voice speaking unto me . . .” Acts 26:14). I do not know how any person can escape the conclusion that this is a display of Divine discretion.

STOOD SPEECHLESS

“And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless . . .” Other versions read, “were not able to say anything,” BBE and “stood amazed,” GENEVA

What was taking place was of such magnitude that it rendered those who were accompanying Saul “speechless.” Notice, even though Paul said all of them were “fallen to the earth” (26:14), now they are said to be standing. I assume that they had risen and attempted to gather their senses after the appearance of this blinding light. As noted before, the light is thought to have been flashing like lightening. Apparently it had stopped, or at the very least was not as bright as it was at first. However, in the aftermath of it all, their minds were incapable of forming a cogent thought about this experience, and their mouth could frame no words concerning it. They had just experienced something transcendent to the natural, and did not have the faintest idea what it was. They were, in a very real sense, struck dumb.

HEARING BUT NOT SEEING

“ . . . hearing a voice, but seeing no man.” Other versions read, “they heard the sound, but did not see anyone,” NIV “hearing his voice, but seeing no man,” GENEVA “they heard merely the voice, and no one was visible to them,” MRD and “they heard the sound of someone's voice but saw no one.” NLT

There is one other possibility. The voice that they heard may have been that of Saul himself, speaking to, and responding to, the Lord Jesus. In such a case, Saul would have appeared to them as speaking to someone that could not be seen or heard.

In Acts 22:9 Paul said of this event, “And they that were with me... were afraid; but they heard not the voice of Him that spake to me ” (Acts 22:9). They did not know what Jesus said to Saul. When it says they “heard a voice,” it means they only heard the sound of a voice, yet could not distinguish what was being said. Some have alleged this was because Jesus spoke to Saul in the Hebrew tongue (26:14). However, this is as unlikely as Paul accumulating some Gentiles to carry out his mission. They did not hear what was being said because Jesus did not want them to hear. For this occasion, He did not give them ears to hear. Like the multitudes to whom Jesus spoke in parables, it was “not given” to them to hear (Matt 13:11). Thus they only heard a noise, like those who heard God speak to Jesus, and thought that it had thundered (John 12:28-29).

There is one other possibility. The voice that they heard may have been that of Saul himself, speaking to, and responding to, the Lord Jesus. In such a case, Saul would have appeared to them as speaking to someone that could not be seen or heard. This, in my judgment, is what the text probably means. That allows for the precise accuracy of both texts. This seems clear because in Paul's witness to the Jewish council he precisely said the men did not hear the voice that directed to him (Acts 22:9).

Throughout Christ's earthly ministry this kind of discretion is made known. The truth was withheld from some people, yet revealed to others.

- “At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes . Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in Thy sight” (Mat 11:25-26).

- “Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given ” (Mat 13:11).

- “And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven ” (Mat 16:17).

- “ If any man will do His will , he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of Myself” (John 7:17).

This circumstance is why David prayed, “Give me understanding” (Psa 119:34,73,,125,144,,169). It is why God alone can give ears to hear (Deut 29:4; Rom 11:8). It is why Paul prayed that God would enlighten the saints, and open the eyes of their understanding (Eph 1:15-19). It is why He prayed that the church might be “filled with all wisdom and spiritual understanding” (Col 1:9-10). It is why Jesus called out, “He that hath ears to hear, let him hear” (Mat 11:15). It is why the Lord says, “He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches” (Rev 2:7).

INSTANT AND UNQUESTIONED OBEDIENCE

“ 8 And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus.”

For the time being, Jesus has completed His word to Saul. Now Saul must go into the city as Jesus has commanded him. He will find, however, that the vision has left him with a decided handicap, or inability.

SAUL ROSE FROM THE EARTH

“And Saul arose from the earth...” Other versions read, “Saul got up from the ground,” NIV “They helped Saul get up off the ground,” CJB “Saul was helped up from the ground,” GWN “Saul picked himself up off the ground,” NLT and “ Saul was lifted up from the earth.” LITV

The word translated “arose” can mean “to arouse, or cause to rise,” THAYER as one that has been acted upon, or caused to get up by someone else. This is why some versions read that Saul was “helped” up.

Throughout Christ’s communication with Saul, he had remained on the ground. He later referred to the episode as “the heavenly vision” (Acts 26:19). It appears as though he was in a kind of trance, like Peter was on the housetop (Acts 10:10). This is apparently a condition in which the mind is active independently of the body – a state where men become aware of realities that cannot be accessed by the human senses. Balaam is said to have fallen into a trance “having his eyes open” (Num 24:4).

Now Saul regains his normal composure and rises to his feet, probably being helped up those who were with him.

WHEN HIS EYES WERE OPENED

“ . . . and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man . . .” This refers to the physical opening of the eyelids, not to him being able to see. The text does not mean that Saul looked around but could not see Jesus. It rather means that he was blind, and could not see anyone. He explained this in his defenses before the Jewish council. Speaking of this very occasion he said, “And when I could not see for the glory of that light ” (Acts 22:11). Other versions read, “because of the brightness of that light,” NASB “because the brilliance of the light had blinded me,” NIV “because the light had been so bright,” GWN “Since the light had been so dazzling that I was blind,” NJB “I was blinded by the intense light,” NLT “I saw nothing for the brightness of the light,” PNT “he found that he was blind,” LIVING “he couldn’t see anything, even though his eyes were open,” ISV and “but although his eyes were open, he continued to perceive nothing.” MONTGOMERY

Saul's encounter with the glorified Christ brought something to him.

There is a very real sense in which great blessings from the Lord are coupled with certain fleshly debilities. This has been the portion of many saints in an overt manner, and with remarkable consistency in a spiritual way. Those who traffic in heavenly realms will soon know what it means to have “no confidence in the flesh” (Phil 3:3), and to confess “I know that in me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing”

However, it also took something from him – at least for a while. It is quite possible that the eye trouble Paul had (Gal 4:15; 6:11) was traced back to this very event. Such a condition would certainly fit in with other heavenly visitations. Jacob received a blessing, and a hip that was out of joint as well (Gen 32:25). Daniel received a revelation, and he fainted and was sick for “certain days” (Dan 8:27). Again, he received message from heaven, and there remained no strength in him (Dan 10:8,16,17). Habakkuk heard from the Lord and confessed, “When I heard, my belly trembled; my lips quivered at the voice: rottenness entered into my bones, and I trembled in myself” (Hab 3:16). The glorified Christ appeared to John the apostle and he “fell at His feet as dead” (Rev 1:17).

There is a very real sense in which great blessings from the Lord are coupled with certain fleshly debilities. This has been the portion of many saints in an overt manner, and with remarkable consistency in a spiritual way. Those who traffic in heavenly realms will soon know what it means to have “no confidence in the flesh” (Phil 3:3), and to confess “I know that in me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing” (Rom 7:18).

THEY LED HIM BY THE HAND

“ . . . but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus.”

Saul was blind, but he did not think to wait until he could see to make his way into Damascus. Those who were with him assisted him, leading him into the city. In Acts 22:11 Paul testified, “And when I could not see for the glory of that light , being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus” (Acts 22:11). Speaking of his trek into the city, and the rest of his life, he confessed to Agrippa, “Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision” (Acts 26:19).

Saul did precisely what Jesus told him to do: he went into the city and waited. He also did it immediately, not waiting to recuperate from his blindness. Jesus did not tell Saul he was going to be blind, but when he discovered that he was, it did not deter him from obeying Jesus. Like the blind man made his way to the pool of Siloam, so blind Saul made his way into the city of Damascus. Obedience is like that: through faith it gets to the place to which the person has been sent by Jesus.

CONCLUSION

We have been introduced to the apprehension of Saul by Jesus. In that apprehension the Divine nature as revealed through the prophet Ezekiel has been confirmed. Through that prophet God Almighty said, “For thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out . As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep , and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day” (Ezek 34:11-12). Again He said, “I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick; but I will destroy the fat and the strong; I will feed them with judgment” (Ezek 34:16). Through Isaiah He said, “The Lord GOD which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, beside those that are gathered unto him” (Isa 56:8).

Thus Paul was “put into the ministry” by the Lord Jesus Himself, as he declared to Timothy: “And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that He counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry ” (1 Tim 1:12). He was “made a minister according to the dispensation of God” (Col 1:25).

Each believer experiences the same sort of thing in their measure, being placed in the body where it has pleased God (1 Cor 12:18). All members of the body have been given a “measure of faith” that enables them to be contributors in Christ’s body, which is the church (Rom 12:6-10). Just as surely as Paul was called into His work according to God’s purpose, so it is with all of the members of the body. Therefore it is written, “Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began” (2 Tim 1:9). May you be faithful to your calling as Paul, was to his. Then you too will receive the crown.

Lesson #42

“ 9:9 And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.” (Acts 9:9)

ANANIAS SENT TO SAUL, Part One

INTRODUCTION

The narrative of our text begins with Saul in Damascus, having entered the city as he was instructed. He was instantly obedient, and was in no way hesitant to do as he was commanded. As soon as Jesus said, “Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do,” “Saul arose from the earth” and “they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus” (Acts 9:6,8). No exhortation was required, and no further instruction was given at this point. If Saul was to find out what he was to do, he had to go into the city – and he knew it. It only took one revelation for Saul to be convinced of the Source of the message: “I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks” (Acts 9:5). At that instant Jesus revealed both Himself and the pangs of conscience that Saul of Tarsus was experiencing with great difficulty.

However, Saul learned there is no stereotyped manner in which the Lord makes Himself known. For example, Jesus did not make Himself known to Saul of Tarsus as He did to Mary when she came to the tomb, speaking tenderly to her and telling her to tell His brethren that He was going to ascend to His Father and their Father, and to His God and their God (John 20:16-17).

The Savior did not speak to Saul as He did to the two on the road to Emmaus, “beginning at Moses and all the prophets,” and expounding “unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning Himself” (Luke 24:27). Later He revealed Himself to them “in breaking of bread,” at which time they recalled how their hearts “burned within” them as He talked with them and opened to them the Scriptures (Lk 24:32,35).

Jesus did not show Saul His hands and feet, as He did the other disciples (Lk 24:40), nor did He eat bread with him as He did with the other apostles and disciples (Lk 24:40-43). He did not expound the Scriptures to him, or open his understanding as He did to the others following His resurrection from the dead (Lk 24:44-45). Nor, indeed, did He prepare Saul a meal, as He did His disciples during His third appearance to them (John 21:9-13).

Those were all appearances that took place prior to Christ’s ascension and enthronement – something that had taken place approximately seven-years before our text. Thus Saul experienced a special visitation, for he was one “born out of due time” (1 Cor 15:8). The revelation of Christ to Saul will take the form of “visions and revelations” (2 Cor 12:1), not with Jesus appearing with a body of “flesh and bones” (Lk 24:39).

Yet, in this initial revelation of Jesus, the theology of Saul was instantly changed. It obtained a new and different focus, and he threw overboard erroneous conceptions that he had held for some time. He required no orientation course, and it did not necessitate a lengthy period of time to unlearn the misconceptions he had adopted. This is a marvelous thing to consider, and I want to dwell longer upon it.

ENLIGHTENMENT

Enlightenment is a subject not often addressed by many of my professional teachers. While my father, unlearned in the religious schools of men, spoke often and with insight on this matter, I do not recall a single discourse, or period of time, in which the teachers to whom I was subjected spent time on this theme. Mind you, the Word of God speaks on the subject, but the scope of theological knowledge to which I was subjected in my educational experience was not large enough to take in enlightenment or illumination. Mind you, there was no denial of the reality of such an experience. Rather, it was limited to a certain cluster of men and a specific period of time. Nearly one thousand years before Christ David said, “the Lord my God will enlighten my darkness” (Psa 128:28). He also confessed that “the commandment of the LORD is pure, enlightening the eyes” (Psa 19:8). In Christ, conversion is associated with being “once enlightened” (Heb 6:4). The experience itself is described as light shining into the hearts of those who are thus born again: “For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 4:6).

In the case of Saul of Tarsus, the disclosure of the Person of Christ was the revelation, not the direction given to him by Ananias. The comprehension of duty is a kind of lesser light that is seen more clearly in the greater light of the Lord’s Person and purpose

There is a body of knowledge that cannot be fully grasped by the unaided intellect of humanity. It pertains to realities that lie outside the scope of natural sense and aptitude – the human intellect being included. This is why it is written, “But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned” (1 Cor 2:14). It is a serious error to overstate the capacity of the human intellect, viewing the Word of God as little more than a text book. The Word of God is the “seed” of the Kingdom (Luke 8:11). That is, the Word is what God uses to make men aware of His Person, purpose, will, and ways. However, without Divine involvement, men are not capable of deciphering the true contents of Scripture.

The Spirit also refers to our conversion as a time of illumination. “But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions” (Heb 10:32).

Other versions read “after being enlightened,” NASB and “had received the light.” NIV The world is a domain of darkness that must be penetrated by light from heaven. If that light is not given, the soul remains in darkness, ignorant of eternal realities.

This is precisely why Jesus opened up the understanding of the disciples concerning the Scriptures (Lk 24:45). It is why David prayed for understanding to be given to Him concerning the Law (Psa 119:34,73, 125,144,169). It is why Paul told Timothy to “consider” what he had written to him, and then prayed, “and the Lord give thee understanding in all things” (2 Tim 2:7).

There is also the matter of further enlightenment that is related to spiritual maturity (Eph 1:18). Peter referred to this expanded spiritual understanding in these words, which were delivered to those who are in Christ Jesus: “We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts” (2 Pet 1:19). Paul also referred to this when he prayed for the enlightenment of the eyes of our understanding, in order that we might perceive the magnitude of what is found in Christ Jesus (Eph 1:15-19).

A HIGHER FORM OF KNOWLEDGE

At this point, we are not speaking of mere moral obligations, such as were initially made known in the Law and its attending ordinances. At its heart, enlightenment, or illumination, does not have to do with human responsibility. That area of knowledge has certainly been made known from heaven, but that is not the point of enlightenment. The day dawning is not descriptive of a time when it registers upon us what we are supposed to do. This has more to do with Divine intent than human obligation.

In the case of Saul of Tarsus, the disclosure of the Person of Christ was the revelation, not the direction given to him by Ananias. The comprehension of duty is a kind of lesser light that is seen more clearly in the greater light of the Lord’s Person and purpose. That is why we read, “For with Thee is the fountain of life: in Thy light shall we see light” (Psa 36:9). Once Saul of Tarsus was persuaded of the reality of Christ, he would be on the initiative to know what he himself was to do. And, indeed that is precisely what took place in our text.

A BESETTING SIN

However, in this day of salvation, there is no acceptable reason for not pursuing the will of the Lord with unparalleled aggressiveness. When other things are allowed to upstage doing the will of the Lord, a most serious deficiency has been revealed.

It seems to me that the besetting sin of the American church is its lack of understanding concerning both the Person and purpose of God. Aside from the relatively few exceptions, the professing church is guilty of the sin of the Athenians – worshiping an unknown God (Acts 17:23).

If knowing God is, in fact, “eternal life” (John 17:3), what can possibly be said in defense of a people who are ignorant of God – particularly since He has now been revealed in the Person of Christ (2 Cor 4:6)? Should not those who are unacquainted with the Lord tremble when they read that all who “know not God” will experience the “vengeance” of “flaming fire” (2 Thess 1:6).

NECESSARY OBSERVATIONS

Our text makes these observations necessary. Here we are faced with an aggressive adversary of the Lord Jesus. Like a warhorse, he has been breathing out “threatenings and slaughter” against the saints of the Lord. In fact, he is en route to Damascus to arrest and incarcerate any who are followers of Christ. Yet, in a moment of time, his entire perspective is altered, and his intentions are brought to a grinding halt. The single thing that caused this to happen was that he found out the truth about Christ's Person, and the evil of what he himself had been doing. That moment of illumination moved him to ask, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" (Acts 9:6).

Now, my point for bringing this up is that many professing Christians have not yet come to this place – a place where they are not willing to do anything else until what Jesus desires is fulfilled. When Saul of Tarsus asked, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" it is to be understood that the will of Christ had become his preeminent consideration. As soon as he knew who Jesus was, he scrapped his intentions to arrest the followers of Jesus in Damascus. Now his compelling desire was to do what Jesus wanted. He knew nothing of receiving Jesus as Savior, but not as Lord!

In our time, all manner of explanations are offered for the absence of this compelling attitude. Some point to their background, some form of what men call addiction, or another reason they consider to be an adequate explanation for their lack of inquiry into the will of the Lord. However, in this day of salvation, there is no acceptable reason for not pursuing the will of the Lord with unparalleled aggressiveness. When other things are allowed to upstage doing the will of the Lord, a most serious deficiency has been revealed.

THE POWER OF THE TRUTH

There is a power inherent in the truth itself. Jesus referred to this when He said, "If ye continue in My word, then are ye My disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (John 8:31-32).

No person is truly "free" who is not a disciple, and no person is a "disciple indeed" who fails to continue in the Word of truth. It is in that continuance that true discipleship is made known. Further, it is the acquaintance, or practical familiarity with the truth that liberates one from the enslaving properties of sin, enabling the individual to draw near to the Lord, obtaining mercy and finding grace to help in the time of need (Heb 4:16; 10:22).

Men resort to other helpers because they have not continued in the Word, and thus have not experienced the liberty for which they have been made free. Freedom from guilt is not the ultimate freedom, but is the prelude to freedom from the power of sin, and the consequent liberty to draw nigh unto God. All of this is being lived out in this text, and all within a relatively brief period of time.

It is good that we take due note of Saul's response, for it is the unvarying characteristic of faith to obey. In fact, faith never disobeys. Disobedience is always the manifestation of unbelief, for which the Lord has an absolute and unvarying intolerance. No person who has been properly instructed what to do, yet fails to obey, is accepted by the Lord.

THE BANE OF DISOBEDIENCE

Although professing Christians have grown accustomed to disobedience within the professing church, there really is no place for it. Salvation makes no provision for disobedience. It is a sin that must be confessed, forgiven, and abandoned. If it is not, there is no hope of being saved, all profession notwithstanding. "Children of disobedience" are those in whom Satan himself is at work (Eph 2:2). It is further written that the wrath of God will come upon such (Eph 5:6; Col 3:6). Paul affirms that "the law" is made for the "disobedient" (1 Tim 1:9). He also classifies the "disobedient" as those to whom "nothing" is pure (Tit 1:16). Prior to the newness of life, we were referred to as being "disobedient" (Tit 3:3). Peter declares that Jesus is made a "stone of stumbling and a rock of offence" to those "which be disobedient" (1 Pet 2:7-8).

I am drawing attention to the seriousness of disobedience because of the obvious clash of such a response with our text. Saul's obedient response came after a single appearance of Jesus, and one word from Him. Jesus did not appear to Saul several times, giving incremental revelations that led to a moment of conviction. This is in keeping with the nature of the responses that have been recorded in this book up to chapter nine – all exhibits of faith.

- The disciples were to tarry in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high (Luke 24:49; Acts 1:5,14-2:1).
- On the day of Pentecost convicted inquirers immediately obeyed the word delivered to them (2:38,41).
- The apostles, when told to preach all the words of life in the Temple, immediately obeyed (Acts 5:20-21).
- The Samaritans obeyed, when Philip preached the Gospel to them (Acts 8:12).
- Philip, when told to go to the desert road leading to Gaza (Acts 8:26-26).
- Philip, when told to join himself to a certain chariot (Acts 8:29-30).
- The Ethiopian eunuch, when Philip preached Christ to him (Acts 8:36-38).
- Saul of Tarsus, when told to go into the city of Damascus and await word concerning what he was to do (Acts 9:6-8).
- Now, we will be confronted with a certain disciple who responded to Divine direction to go to Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9:10-17).
- Upon hearing what he was to do, Saul of Tarsus was obedient (Acts 9:18; 22:16).

This is the manner of New Covenant life, fulfilling the 110th Psalm, which describes life under the Messiah: “Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power. It is the result of the law of God being written upon their hearts and mind, knowing the Lord, being devoted to God, and God to them, and having their sins remitted.

This is the manner of New Covenant life, fulfilling the 110 th Psalm, which describes life under the Messiah: “Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power” (Psa 110:1-3). It is the result of the law of God being written upon their hearts and mind, knowing the Lord, being devoted to God, and God to them, and having their sins remitted (Jer 31:33-34; Heb 8:10-12; 10:16-17). There is no such thing as a Christian or a church that perpetually lacks the characteristic of obedience. In fact, any professing believer who is disobedient cannot possibly substantiate any claim to being a child of God, saved by grace, or justified by faith. While we are not licensed to sit in judgment upon others, it is the business of every individual claiming identity with Jesus to examine themselves to see whether or not they are in the faith, and Christ is in them (2 Cor 13:5).

EXAMPLES OF HESITANCY

It is true that there are at least three examples of hesitancy to respond immediately to the Lord. These are not intended to be standards, and were each characterized by unique circumstances. Yet, because men may tend to hold them forth as justifying the lack of an immediate response to the Lord, I consider it needful to make a few brief remarks concerning them.

- GIDEON. When the angel of the Lord appeared to Gideon, announcing that he had been chosen to deliver Israel, he asked for a sign of the truth of the message. Gideon asked the Lord to confirm that He would save Israel by his hand. (1) He would put a fleece of wool on the ground. If the dew was on the fleece only, and the ground remained dry, he would know it was the Lord. (2) This having taken place, Gideon then asked that the Lord not be angry with him. One more time he would put down the fleece. If the fleece was dry, and the dew was upon all the ground, then he would be assured deliverance would come from his hand. This being done, Gideon was convinced he had been called to deliver Israel from the Midianites (Judges 6:36-40). Aside from the fact that those were spiritually primitive times, God had delivered Israel into the hands of the Midianites, and there had been a long time since He had communicated with Israel. Such circumstances are not to be compared with this day of salvation in which the presence of the Lord has not only been vouchsafed to His people, but extensive revelation has been given to them.

• JONAH. When Jonah was commanded to go to Nineveh and preach “against it,” he fled “unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord” (John 1:1-2). After his experience in the belly of a great fish, “the Lord came to Jonah the second time,” telling him to go to Nineveh and deliver the “preaching” that would be given to him. This time Jonah did go, preaching that the city would be overthrown in forty days. Later, when the Lord interrogated him concerning his actions and attitude, he replied, “I knew that Thou art a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest Thee of the evil” (Jonah 4:2). While there is no way to sanctify Jonah’s response, the times in which he lived, together with his elementary reasoning concerning Divine intent put him at a decided distance from the time of the New Covenant. He is among those who were not made perfect without us (Heb 11:40).

• PETER. When the Lord sent Peter to deliver the Gospel to the Gentile household of Cornelius, He first gave him a vision of a net let down from heaven containing “all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air” (Acts 10:12). The command was given, “Rise, Peter; kill and eat.” Peter responded, “Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean” (Acts 10:14). This was done three times, with no explanation being given. Eventually, the Lord directed Peter to go with three men who came to him from the household of Cornelius. As Peter talked with Cornelius, he acknowledged he had now seen the significance of the vision. The Gentiles, who were technically “unclean,” were no longer to be viewed in such a manner – now that Jesus had put away sin and reconciled the world to God. Peter’s initial response is to be understood in view of the transition that was being made from the Old Covenant to the New Covenant. By “transition,” I do not mean to include the ineffectiveness of the Old or the effectiveness of the New. It was the transition of understanding that was taking place (Heb 8:13). That period of time is not to be compared with this day, when the “more sure word of prophecy” has been declared and delineated with power.

None of the above responses were indicative of the New Covenant era. They were not the norm, or standard, and are not to be considered as though they were. The obedience reported in the book of Acts is the standard, and represents the normal response to Divine direction. I do not consider it necessary to further establish this truth (although that is certainly possible).

THE EXPERIENCE OF SAUL OF TARSUS

The impact of Saul’s experience on the road is confirmed in his body and in his spirit. He has been “apprehended,” and he knows it (Phil 3:12). Now, he is waiting for appropriate instruction, and he does not have any idea as to its source – only that someone will tell him what he “must do.” He is not on a research mission, nor is he to launch into a scholastic quest for answers. He is to wait, and that is precisely what he does. He has no idea how long he is to wait, yet does so with patient determination.

This will be the first test of his faith. Jesus has given no indication of how quickly the required instruction will come – only that it surely will come. In the meantime, Luke turns our attention to the individual whom heaven has chosen to tell Saul what he “must do.” He is not one of the apostles, or even Philip, who has had excellent success delivering the message of Jesus. In fact, this is the very first time we read of this disciple – and the last as well.

It is obvious that he is a faithful person, and himself instructed in the ways of the Lord. At the first, however, after hearing the name of the one to whom, he is sent, he will be a bit hesitant. His hesitancy is not the result of unbelief. Rather, it is the result of ignorance. However, the Lord will clarify the mission, and Ananias will quickly go, doubting nothing. Once again, willingness is seen as the standard.

THREE DAYS AND THREE NIGHTS

“ 9 :9 And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.” Other versions read, “For three days he was blind, and did not eat or drink anything,” NIV and “for three days he was not able to see, and he took no food or drink.” BBE

What thoughts must have been coursing through the mind of Saul! No doubt the recollections of Stephen and his stoning must have been summoned from his memory for profound consideration. After all, Saul had “consented” unto his death (Acts 8:1; 22:20). Indications are that he was not able to dismiss this experience from his thinking.

I do not doubt that his prodigious mind walked too and fro through the Scriptures, considering them with Jesus of Nazareth in mind. It seems to me that his first preaching confirms that his thinking had been solidly focused upon Jesus Christ and the prophecies of Him in the Scriptures. His very first activity is described in these words: “And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that He is the Son of God” (Acts 9:20). What exhilarating insights he must have had – and they all were the result of the revelation of Jesus Christ!

Perhaps Saul recalled with repentance and tears those into whose houses he had entered, binding both men and women and taking them off to prison (Acts 8:3). Then there were the times when he had testified against those who believed in Jesus, and gave his consent to their death (Acts 26:10). And what of the times he entered into their synagogues, compelling disciples to blaspheme (Acts 26:11). Surely Saul of Tarsus found out that “the way of transgressors is hard” (Prov 13:15).

It ought to be noted that blindness is ordinarily a very disconcerting experience. Yet, in this case, Saul’s mind was active as he waited, tarrying for further instruction from the Lord. It would be good if such traits were common in the Western church.

For Saul, eating and drinking were not in his thoughts – not now that he had seen the Lord’s Christ and been made aware of his own wayward conduct. He thought that he was serving the Lord, but he was actually the enemy of the Lord. Now, eating and drinking were easily forgotten. His mind was focused, and his heart was supple.

There are very real spiritual experiences that dwarf the compelling appetites of the flesh. Job once said, “Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lips; I have esteemed the words of His mouth more than my necessary food” (Job 23:12). I will go so far as to say that until this is experienced to some significant measure, spiritual growth and further illumination are not possible. This accounts for the condition of many emaciated and malnourished souls.

CONCLUSION

This brief lesson provides an introduction to the text that follows. It brings lucidity to the account, explaining why Saul eagerly did everything he was told, and set out immediately to declare Christ in the very city in which he sought to arrest believers. It provides us with a rich commentary on the effectiveness of “by grace through faith” (Eph 2:8).

ANANIAS SENT TO SAUL, Part Two

“ 9:10 And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord. 11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth, 12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight. 13 Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem: 14 And here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name. 15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel: 16 For I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake. 17 And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. 18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized. 19 And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.” (Acts 9:9-19)

INTRODUCTION

Having testified to the instant obedience of Saul, and to his undistracted devotion to waiting on the Lord, the narrative now turns to the one chosen by God to restore Saul’s sight, usher him into Christ, and be the one through whom Saul will be filled with the Holy Spirit. It is evident that the Lord is orchestrating this entire set of events. There is not so much as a minuscule thought originating with men that enters into the procedures that are reported in this text. So far as we know, there was not even a prayer raised up to God for which this record could be considered an answer. The apostles as a group, nor Peter who had been given the keys to the Kingdom were in any way instrumental in the events that are now reported. They were not the result of prayers offered by Saul himself, for the arrangements had already been made by the Lord, as He had announced to Saul: “it shall be told thee what thou must do” (Acts 9:6).

All of this is another confirmation that it is ever true, “the heavens do rule” (Dan 4:26). Those who are currently propagating the heresy that God cannot do anything until men ask Him to do so, could not possibly be more wrong. This should not be difficult for any professing Christian to accept. Jesus taught us to acknowledge the superiority of Divine rule in our prayers: “For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen” (Matt 6:13).

While men often make an issue out of human choice, the Scriptures make an issue out of Divine choice and the implementation of God’s purpose. Without fear of contradiction God declares, “I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like Me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all My pleasure ” (Isa 46:10). The best of men, and even the generally acknowledged most advanced person among the saved, Paul the apostle, confessed, “to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not” (Rom 7:18). However, you will never hear of the God of heaven being frustrated in His revealed purpose, or coming short of what He has determined to do.

WHAT ABOUT LIMITING GOD AND QUENCHING THE SPIRIT?

Those who are lacking in their acquaintance with Divine manners draw our attention to the fact that Israel “limited” the Lord by their recalcitrance. And, indeed, this is revealed to have been so. “Yea, they turned back and tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel” (Psa 78:41). The idea is not that a restriction was placed upon God Himself, but that the benefits flowing to the generation of unbelievers was restricted. God did not remove or void His promise to give Israel the land of Canaan, but excluded the ones who “believed not” from entering into it. They, and they alone, are the ones who “could not enter” (Heb 3:19). Their children entered (Deut 29:22), but those who refused to believe expired in the wilderness – even though their children had to wander for forty years in the same wilderness until they did so (Num 14:33).

In the record of Israel, we see the principle of Divine intent carried out in meticulous detail.

PURPOSE OR INTENT. First, God’s purposes are conceived independently of any human involvement. His purposes – particularly as they regard His multi-faceted salvation, are conceived “in Himself.” As it is written, “Having made known unto us the mystery of His will , according to His good pleasure which He hath purposed in Himself ” (Eph 1:9). And again, “According to the eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord” (Eph 3:11). God’s purposes are not reactions to human circumstances. They are not a response to conditions perceived by prescience, or seeing what was going to happen. Divine purposes are not driven by human need or desires. They are conceived within the circumference of God’s Person – “according to His good pleasure,” and “in Himself.” That is why His purpose is referred to as being “eternal” (Eph 3:11), conceived “before the foundation of the world,” or before its “creation” NIV (Eph 1:4). It was actually put into motion “before the world began” (1 Tim 1:9), being “promised before the world began” (Tit 1:2). An understanding of this is fundamental to sound theology. A proper understanding must both commence and conclude with God and Christ. It is not possible to arrive at a correct conclusion concerning the things of God apart from this manner of thinking.

IMPLEMENTATION. The revealed purpose of God, which finds its ultimate expression in the salvation that is in Christ Jesus, is implemented within an arena of competition. This is in order to the glory of God, for there is no Divine purpose that is not driven by the objective to glorify God. The fact that Divine intention is carried out within the framework of competition has no ultimate bearing on the fulfillment of that purpose. God does what He intends, and does not fail to fulfill His good pleasure. Thus He declares, “Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure ” (Isa 46:9-10). In this case God’s “counsel” equates to what He has purposed. It simply is not possible for God to purpose something and it fail to be fulfilled. Such a circumstance would cause His Godhood to come into question. Thus He declares, “I have purposed it, I will also do it” (Isa 46:11). He hurls the challenge into the domain of conflicting personalities, “I work, and who will reverse it?” NKJV (Isa 43:13). Again, the Psalmist affirms, “The counsel of the Lord standeth forever” (Psa 33:11). If this was not true, His promises could not be trusted, and thus could never be guaranteed as the means of becoming a partaker of the Divine nature (2 Pet 1:4). That is why it is affirmed without qualification, “Whatsoever the LORD pleased, that did He in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places” (Psa 135:6). Even though men contradict the counsel of the Lord, oppose it, and doubt it, “the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand” (Prov 19:21). Should men choose to oppose the Lord, they must know, “There is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the LORD” (Prov 21:30).

FULFILLMENT. There is a level at which it is not possible for the purpose of God to fail. As it is written, “My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure” (Isa 46:10), and “I have purposed it and I will do it” (Isa 46:11). This is precisely why the “purpose of God” stands “according to election,” or what He has determined (Rom 9:11). Examples of the fulfillment of Divine determinations are the flood (Gen 7:11-24), Abraham and Sarah having Isaac (Gen 12:3; 18:14), the deliverance of Israel from Egypt (Gen 15:14; Ex 12:41,51), the birth of Jesus (Gen 3:15; Isa 7:14; 9:6; Matt 1:22-25), and the resurrection of Jesus (Acts 13:33; 17:3). It simply is not possible for purposes such as these to come short of fulfillment. Furthermore, the “exceeding great and precious promises” of God are in this category of Divine intention. This is confirmed by the fact that they are the appointed means through which we become partakers of the Divine nature (2 Pet 14). If there was the slightest chance that they could fail, it would not be possible to have such a guarantee.

PARTICIPATION. The variable factor has to do with the level of participation. Even then, the Divine purpose itself will not fail. Only those who fail to believe will be excluded. For example, the commitment of God to give Canaan to the Israelites did not fail of fulfillment. It was those who did not believe that were excluded – but that had no effect upon the promise itself. The same is true of the commitment of God to turn away ungodliness from Jacob. Contrary to the teaching that God has abandoned Israel, thereby voiding His commitment to them, “Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace” (Rom 11:5). Only “some of the branches” were removed from the natural olive tree (Rom 11:17). The tree itself remains, together with its root and its fatness. In fact, the Gentiles are presently being sustained by “the root and fatness of the olive tree” of Israel (Rom 11:17). Salvation is still “of the Jews,” just as Jesus announced (John 4:22). At no point has it become “of the Gentiles.” That fact alone confirms that God’s promise concerning Israel has not been voided. If that was the case, a new olive tree would have been required.

WHAT BEARING DOES THIS HAVE UPON OUR TEXT?

It might appear as though we have journeyed down an unrelated tributary – but that is not the case at all. The apprehension of Saul of Tarsus was not a response to his quest for God – regardless of how ardent it may have been. Saul was an enemy of Jesus, not a seeker of Him. He had no notions of Him being the Messiah, but eagerly sought to do everything he could “contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth” , all the while maintaining a good conscience toward God (Acts 26:3; 23:1). Notwithstanding, the very fact that Saul was breathing threatening and slaughter against the church of Jesus Christ confirms that he felt he had found the truth pertaining to God. There is no evidence that he was seeking further enlightenment as David did (Psa 119:34,73,125,144,169).

In Saul of Tarsus we have a fulfillment of the remarkable affirmation, “So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy” (Rom 9:16). How else can you possibly account for the apprehension of Saul?

A CERTAIN DISCIPLE NAMED ANANIAS

“ 10 And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord.”

THE DIVINE MANNER

It is arresting to consider the way of the Lord in this matter. He does not choose an apostle to perform this ministry – not even the one who had been given the keys to the Kingdom. He does not choose a significant disciple like James, the Lord’s brother, or Barnabas, who will be instrumental in promoting the acceptance of Saul and his initial involvement in preaching Christ. Choosing to ignore more prominent leaders in the church, the Lord sends “a certain disciple at Damascus” – not from the hub of Kingdom activity, Jerusalem, but from Damascus. This was a city that is not mentioned in the New Covenant Scriptures until Acts 9:2, where it is identified as the target for Saul’s initiative against the church.

A CERTAIN DISCIPLE

“And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias . . .” Several later versions eliminate the word “certain” (NIV, NRSV, RSV, Amplified, etc.). All of the accepted Greek manuscripts contain this indefinite pronoun (Greek, τις), that means “ a certain one.” THAYER The point here is that there was not only a Divine appointment of the one to be an apostle, but of the one who would be used to initiate his entrance into the Kingdom as well. All of this was under strict heavenly supervision. Nothing was left to human discretion. This has been a pattern throughout the book of Acts.

- The choice of the apostles by Jesus (Acts 1:2).
- The selection of one to fill the office vacated by Judas (Acts 1:24).
- The one who spoke on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:14).

Those who are enamored with career building will find no fuel for their lusts in the record of Ananias. The work to which he was called ushered another person into prominence. Such is often the Lord’s manner.

The one who delivered the Gospel to the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:26,29).

- The choosing and calling of Saul of Tarsus (9:4).
- The one who through whom Saul was officially called into the apostleship (Acts 9:10).
- The separation of Barnabas and Saul to a special work (Acts 13:2).
- The choice of who first delivered the Gospel to the Gentiles (Acts 15:7).

The prophet Isaiah affirmed that the government would rest upon the shoulders of the Messiah, and that He would administrate it in an ever increasing manner. The record of the book of Acts confirms that this is precisely what took place, and that it was characteristic of the Lord’s manner of ruling,

In our time there has been an alarming distortion of Kingdom manners presented and embraced. Jesus is no longer perceived as the Head of His church. Instead key people and institutions imagine themselves to have seized control. However, they are not governing the Kingdom of God, but are only administering their own private agenda – and it will be short-lived. Of old time the Lord revealed that every competing kingdom would be decimated by the Kingdom of the Lord's Christ, and no place will be found for them (Dan 2:35). Jesus Himself spoke of those on whom He would fall, saying they would be "ground to powder" (Matt 21:44).

Within an institutional setting, it is generally known that those with a spiritual mind and understanding are not accepted. This has been the case throughout history, and sadly continues until this very day. It can be said of the Gentile church just as it was said of the institutionalized Judaism: "Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted?" (Acts 7:52). Jesus said of Jerusalem, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not!" (Luke 13:34). It is the manner of religious organization to eventually come against those who carry the message of the Lord. This tendency reached its apex in the rejection of the Lord Jesus Himself.

This is why the government has been placed upon the shoulders of the Lord Jesus, and not upon the church itself. Jesus told those holding the highest position in His church that they would not exercise authority over the other people, like the kings of the Gentiles (Lk 22:25-26).

Thus Ananias is summoned by the Lord to the work of informing Saul of his role in the Kingdom. It is clear from the record that Saul would never have been set apart to the apostleship, had it been left up to men to do so.

The First and the Last

This is also the first and last mentioning of this "certain disciple." Yet, in all the world there is not an informed believer in Jesus who does not know of this man. How marvelous to consider the works of God! Those who are enamored with career building will find no fuel for their lusts in the record of Ananias. The work to which he was called ushered another person into prominence. Such is often the Lord's manner.

THE LORD CALLED AND ANANIAS ANSWERED

" . . . and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord."

We learn a lot about Ananias from his response to the Lord. Like all people of faith, it was an instant response, for faith puts one in a ready and waiting posture.

- When Abraham was about to offer Isaac, an angel called to him and he answered, "Here am I" (Gen 22:11),
- When an angel called to Jacob, he answered, "Here am I" (Gen 31:11).
- When God spoke to Jacob he replied, "Here am I" (Gen 46:2).
- When the Lord called to Moses from the burning bush he replied, "Here am I" (Ex 3:4).
- When the Lord called to young Samuel, he responded "Here am I," thinking that Eli had called him (1 Sam 3:4,5,6,8). When Samuel perceived it was the Lord, he instructed Samuel to reply, "Speak, Lord; for Thy servant heareth" (1 Sam 3:9).
- When the Spirit told the brethren at Antioch to separate Barnabas and Saul to the work to which He had called them, they did so immediately (Acts 13:2-3).
- When a directive vision was given to Paul instructing him to go into Macedonia, he, and those with him, immediately "endeavored to go into Macedonia" (Acts 16:9-10).

Particularly in Christ, this confirmed the nature of the New Covenant. A marvelous accord is wrought between the Lord and His people that makes for an acute sensitivity to Divine direction. This is seen in makeup of the covenant: “For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put My laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to Me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know Me, from the least to the greatest” (Heb 8:10-11). The absence of an keen sensitivity to the Lord belies, or contradicts, any profession of identity with God through Christ Jesus. It simply is not possible for a person to be a part of the New Covenant while lacking its essential elements. We are under no obligation to receive anyone in Jesus’ name in whom they are not found.

INQUIRE FOR ONE CALLED SAUL OF TARSUS

“ 11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth, 12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.”

The specificity of this word is most remarkable.

- A specific street: “Straight.”
- A specific house: “the house of Judas.”
- A specific man: “Saul of Tarsus.”
- A specific activity in which the man is engaged: “he prayeth.”
- A specific vision given to the man naming the one who would come to him: “a man named Ananias.”
- Precisely what this man would do when he came to Saul: “putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.”

Those who tend to think only in broad generalities do well to take note of this direction. It teaches us that there is such a thing as Divine instruction that is complete in all of its details. Other remarkably detailed instructions were given for the observance of the first Passover, that would conclude with Israel being delivered from Egypt (Ex 12), and the day of atonement (Lev 16). Although some affirm that God leaves matters in the hand of men, instances such as the one before us confirms that this not the case – particularly in matters relating to the salvation of God and its implementation among men. When it is stated that the government is upon the shoulder of Jesus (Isa 9:6), and that He has all power in heaven and earth, it is to be understood that the rule is both precise and total. There is a level of Divine involvement among the sons of men in which the human will and choice are not revealed factors. In such cases we do well to avoid making any attempt to blend the text with our perception of the Lord and His ways. Suffice it to say, our text is dealing with a man who was separated unto the Lord before he was born (Gal 1:15). Further, he will be “called” in strict conformity with that Divine appointment.

A SPECIFIC STREET AND HOUSE

“And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus...”

The directions are certainly specific, yet general enough to require diligence and inquiry. I do not know the size of the city of Damascus at the time of our text. However, it is one of the most ancient and important cities in the world. Located in Syria, it was an established city during the time of Abraham (Gen 14:15; 15:2) – that was more than 3,000 years before our text. Confirming it was a significant city, David put military garrisons there (2 Sam 8:6). From ancient times it was a city of remarkable commerce (Ezek 27:18). Therefore, finding a street named “Straight” was no small task, to say nothing of finding “the house of Judas” that was located on it.

The point to be seen here is that Divine direction and involvement in the will of God does not eliminate the need for deliberate and thoughtful activity. The Lord did not say He would tell Ananias when he had come to the designated street and arrived at the specified house. He would even have to “inquire in the house of Judas,” asking for “a man from Tarsus named Saul.” NIV

In Romans 12:1-2, a salient point is made of being usable to God. “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God.” We may safely assume that Ananias had done what Romans twelve admonishes. This is, in fact, what made him usable in this critical situation. There also can be no doubt that he had separated himself from defiling influences, as Paul enjoined Timothy to do: “But shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness. And their word will eat as doth a canker: of whom is Hymenaeus and Philetus; Who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some. Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity. But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honor, and some to dishonor. If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work” (2 Tim 2:19-21).

Within a lifeless institutionalized setting, where the wisdom of men and their strategies are exalted, there is a necessary loss of this perspective. An overestimation of the human intellect and reasoning aptitude causes Divine requirements to recede into the background. They actually become inaccessible to the mind that is shackled to the institutions of men.

I am saying that it is highly unlikely that a suitable man could be found within the average church of our land who could have been directed as Ananias – “a certain disciple” who resided in the Syrian city of Damascus. To me, if this assessment is correct, it reveals a most deplorable situation. God has revealed that it is the nature of the Kingdom into which we have been translated to grow, increase, and mature. The prophets declared that the Kingdom administered by Jesus would be one of unending increase (Isa 9:7). Jesus revealed that the Kingdom of God was like a mustard seed, beginning small, and eventually outgrowing all other kingdoms (Matt 13:31-32). Daniel also declared this to be a characteristic of the kingdom over which Jesus presides (Dan 2:44). Additionally, the Lord has so equipped the church as to promote its edification and maturity (Eph 4:8-16). Also, the Scriptures themselves are deigned to make “the man of God perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work” (2 Tim 3:16-17). This is in perfect keeping with the nature of the new birth itself. As it is written, “For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them” (Eph 2:10).

In today’s Christian setting Ananias would be an unusual disciple. However, in our text he is appropriately described as “a certain disciple” – not a certain leader, but a “certain disciple!” He was representative of the common believer – for “disciple” is a common designation, not a unique one like “apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastors and teachers” (Eph 4:11). He was not described as one of those placed “first,” second or third in the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:28). He is not described as an elder who had “labored in the word and in the doctrine” (1 Tim 5:17), but simply as “a certain disciple.”

We hear no more of him as we do of Barnabas, Silas, Timothy, Titus, Luke, and others. Precisely how would someone like Ananias fit into the patterned structure of the institutionalized church. How would he fit into the average Bible College or Seminary? Precisely what would be his role in the average Christian convention, or television ministry, or missionary organization? Is Ananias the kind of man that the average pulpit committee, missionary board, or religious conference would have sent to usher the premier apostle into his work?

Precisely what is the difference between the church of Ananias' day and the one of our time? Surely you can see that there is a significant difference – so much so that we appear to be reading about a church that is altogether different than what is paraded as “the church” today. Indeed, it is my studied opinion that the church of the book of Acts is radically different from the professed church of our time. The difference can be traced to the variance existing between life and death, and reconciliation and alienation. It can be accounted for by the difference between being alive unto God and dead to sin, and being free from righteousness and dead toward God. Jesus does not have two bodies, or two churches. There are not differing branches of His church that have contradicting characteristics. All of this is involved in the expression, “there is one body” (Eph 4:4). It is Christ's “body” because it is the intended recipient of His “fulness” (John 1:16; Eph 1:23; 3:19; 4:13). Just as “all the fulness of God” dwells in Jesus (Col 1:19; 2:9), so all the fulness of Christ dwells within His church. Just as Jesus bears the traits of God, so the church possesses the traits of Jesus. I know of no way to successfully contradict these statements.

If the professed church is fundamentally unlike Jesus, then, if it is to be accepted, it has no alternative but to change. That is precisely why Jesus solemnly warned the wayward churches of Asia to “repent” (Rev 2:5,16,21,22; 3:3,19), “do the first works” (Rev 2:5), and “buy” from Him things that would make them acceptable to Him (Rev 3:18). Things like leaving one's “first love” (Rev 2:4), tolerating members that hold to erroneous doctrines (Rev 2:14-15), allowing the propagation of damaging teaching (Rev 2:20), and having a name of being alive when actually death reigns (Rev 3:1) are intolerable circumstances. The presence of such qualities thrusts the church into a spiritually backward motion. They are why the professing church is so unlike the church reported in the book of Acts. They are conditions that cause men like Ananias to appear dominant and in the minority, while, in truth, he was appropriately described as “a certain disciple.”

BEHOLD, HE PRAYS

“ . . . for, behold, he prayeth . . .” Up to this time, we have not been told what Saul of Tarsus was actually doing – only that he was blind and was neither eating nor drinking. Now, however, the Lord tells Ananias that Saul “is praying.” NKJV On one occasion Jesus said to a woman from the city of Samaria, “If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water” (John 4:10). Now, Saul knows the One he has met, and there is no doubt that he has correlated that experience with the Scriptures concerning the Messiah. There is no question in my mind that Saul was experiencing an extraordinary measure of the godly sorrow that “worketh repentance,” or that “produces repentance” NKJV (2 Cor 7:10). If David's sin with Bathsheba, and treachery that led to her husband's death produced the expressions of the fifty-first Psalm, one can scarcely imagine what the knowledge that one had been persecuting the Son of God must have produced. Behind the scenes, it was the goodness of God that was leading Saul to repentance (Rom 2:4) – Divine forbearance was productive.

This street (“Straight”) extends now from the eastern to the western gate, about three miles, crossing the whole city and suburbs in a direct line. Near the eastern gate is a house, said to be that of Judah, in which Paul lodged. There is in it a very small closet, where tradition reports that the apostle passed three days without food, until Ananias restored him to sight. Tradition also says that he had here the vision recorded in 2 Corinthians 12:2. There is also in this street a fountain whose water is drunk by Christians, in remembrance of what, they suppose, the same fountain produced for the baptism of Paul.

(Robinson, Calmet, reported by Albert Barnes)

Praying is set forth as a point of change. The captivity of Job was “turned” when he “prayed for his friends” (Job 2:10). Jesus Himself was transfigured while He was praying (Luke 9:29). Christ’s great triumph over the temptation to draw back from drinking the bitter cup appointed to Him took place while He prayed (Luke 22:44). The powerful prayers of Elijah caused the rain to cease for three and a half years, and to rain again after the famine that was imposed upon the land (James 5:17-18). In seasons of prayer such as the one described in our text, there is a clarity of understanding ministered that cannot be otherwise obtained. It is as though the individual was being exposed to Divine light – the light in which “all things are naked and opened,” not only to God Himself, but to those who are lingering in His presence (Heb 4:13).

SAUL ALSO HAD A VISION

“12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.”

We are being exposed to Divine manners, and we do well to take note of it. Not only is the Lord preparing Ananias to confront Saul, He is also preparing Saul to confront Ananias. We have already been exposed to this manner in the book of Acts.

- Devout men were present in Jerusalem, focusing their thoughts on the things of God (Acts 2:5). It was then that the Spirit filled Peter to deliver an exegesis of Christ’s death, and the Divine intent that caused it to happen (Acts 2:14-36). The outcome was that three souls were added to the church.

- The Ethiopian eunuch was being prepared to hear the Gospel while reading the prophecy of Isaiah (Acts 8:32). Philip was being prepared to preach to him by means of angelic direction and the Spirit’s guidance (Acts 8:26,29). The outcome was that the eunuch was baptized into Christ and went on his way rejoicing.

- In the next chapter, the Lord will give coordinated visions to both Cornelius and Peter, preparing the way for Cornelius and his household to be added to the church (Acts 10:3-23). The outcome was that Cornelius and his household were “saved.”

- Later, some women in Macedonia will be drawn to a riverside where they will pray. Just prior to this, Paul had a vision of a man in Macedonia who said, “Come over into Macedonia, and help us” (Acts 16:9-15). The outcome was that Lydia and her household were baptized, and a church was launched in that area.

The Reign of Jesus

In this text we are being exposed to the reign of the Lord Jesus and its manner. Isaiah prophesied of the Messiah, “Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness” (Isa 32:1). He further declared that from the throne of David the Messiah would establish the kingdom “with judgment and with justice” (Isa 9:6). Peter boldly proclaimed that the prophecy of Jesus sitting upon David’s throne was fulfilled when Jesus was raised from the dead. Now, enthroned in the heavens, God has made Him to be both “Lord and Christ,” fulfilling His promise to David (Acts 2:30-36). Now, we are being exposed to the way in which Jesus is ruling.

The book of Acts provides several behind-the-scene glimpses of the work of the Lord. These are introducing us to the government of Jesus which is active at all times, though it is not always apparent. There is no valid Kingdom activity in which Jesus Himself is not active, else He could not be appropriately called “King of kings and Lord of lords.”

In our text, King Jesus arrested a persecutor of the church, forcing Himself into his life, and choosing to elevate him to the highest office in His body – an apostle (1 Cor 12:28). He then chooses to induct him into Christ by means of a “certain disciple” who does not have the slightest idea that Saul of Tarsus has been chosen for this office. In the whole arrangement Jesus coordinates two preparatory visions that were not sought, and came to the men completely independently of their wills. All of this was done in strict comportment with righteousness – for that is the kind of rule Jesus is executing. The whole matter also confirms that man’s goings are, indeed, “of the Lord” (Prov 20:25), and that “it is not in man that walketh to dirt his steps” (Jer 10:23).

This is the only reference to this vision – the knowledge of which was vouchsafed to Ananias, and to Luke, the writer of this book. Paul refers to Ananias and his role in his calling, but makes no reference to the vision to which our text refers (Acts 22:12-16). In the account he delivered to Agrippa, Paul made no reference to Ananias, only mentioning the commission of Jesus (Acts 26:13-18). It appears as though, before Agrippa, Paul puts together the words of Jesus on the road to Damascus with the words delivered to him by Ananias, who probably elaborated on the commission Jesus had delivered to Saul (Acts 9:3-6,17;18; 22:6-16; 26:13-18). We should have no difficulty with this, for Ananias delivered the word of Jesus to Saul, calling him into the office of an apostle. He was not speaking for himself, but for the One who sent him.

A Needed Perspective

In this regard Paul embraced the same perspective for which he commended those who heard him. He received the word delivered by a messenger of the Lord as the word of the Lord Himself. Thus he wrote to the Thessalonians, “For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe” (1 Thess 2:13). It is the peculiar prerogative of faith to react in this manner to the word of God. Whether the commission delivered to Saul came from Jesus Himself on the road to Damascus, or through the lips of Ananias, a “certain disciple,” it was accompanied with Divine certitude, and was to be received as being from heaven. The Word of God is not diluted by the fact that a messenger brings it.

I HAVE HEARD OF THIS MAN

“ 13 Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem: 14 And here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name.”

The response of Ananias to the Lord may appear to the novice to be a form of rebellion, stubbornness, or unbelief. This, however, is emphatically not the case. It is not unusual for pretentious preachers and teachers to attempt to parallel those of Scriptural record with the shallow professing Christians of our time.

It is important that we approach this text with sobriety and without unbecoming simplicity. The response of Ananias to the Lord may appear to the novice to be a form of rebellion, stubbornness, or unbelief. This, however, is emphatically not the case. It is not unusual for pretentious preachers and teachers to attempt to parallel those of Scriptural record with the shallow professing Christians of our time. This is not a wise practice, for it presumes levels of similarity between the people and circumstances of these differing then-and-now ages that are quite unreal. These observations will become apparent as we proceed through this text.

I HAVE HEARD OF THIS MAN

“Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man . . .’ Other versions read, “I have heard many reports about this man,” NIV “I have had accounts of this man from a number of people,” BBE “I have heard from many sources about this man,” NAB and “ many people have told me about this man Saul.” IE

At this point, the Lord has not provided many details concerning Saul of Tarsus. He has revealed that Saul is in Damascus, on a street called “Straight,” and in the house of a person named “Judas.” He has also told him that Saul is praying. He has simply told Ananias to “inquire” at the house of Simon for “one called Saul of Tarsus” (9:11). He has also told Ananias that Saul has “seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight” (9:12). So far as the record is concerned, Ananias has not been told why Saul’s sight was lost in the first place. Nor has the Lord divulged to him anything pertaining to Saul confronting Christ and fasting for three days. With the sparse amount of information that he has received, Ananias begins to reason with the Lord.

This “certain disciple” admits that he has some knowledge about the man to whom he is being sent. He has been the subject of many reports. In fact, the followers of Jesus had been speaking considerably about him – and the reports were not encouraging ones.

HOW MUCH EVIL HE HAS DONE

“ . . . how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem . . .” Other versions read, “all the harm he has done to your saints in Jerusalem,” NIV “what evil things he has done to your holy ones in Jerusalem,” NAB “the terrible things this man has done to the believers in Jerusalem,” NLT “especially the great sufferings he has brought on your people in Jerusalem,” WILLIAMS and “especially how much evil and what great suffering he has brought on Your saints at Jerusalem.” AMPLIFIED

Word had gotten all the way to Damascus about what Saul had been doing to the Lord’s “saints” in Jerusalem. Notice how Ananias refers to the people of God: “Thy saints,” or “Your holy ones,” NAB for that is the meaning of the word “saints.” The word “saints” is translated from the Greek word ἅγιοι, which has the following lexical meaning: “set apart for God, to be, as it were, exclusively His . . . pure, upright, holy,” THAYER “holy, pure, consecrated to God,” FRIBERG “holy, morally pure, upright,” UBS and “pure, upright, worthy of God.” GINGRICH Therefore, Ananias confesses that he had heard from various sources about Saul of Tarsus, how he had been on the initiative to do evil and harm to God’s holy, pure, and upright ones in Jerusalem – people who were dedicated to God, living lives that were worthy of God (as all believers are enjoined to do (1 Thess 2:12). These were not a special category of believers, but was a spiritually generic way of referring to them all. Saul had not targeted a segment of the Christian community, like the radical points. It was the community itself that was being attacked.

Of course, it is one thing to read this account concerning God’s holy ones in Jerusalem. It is quite another to conceive of such a report being delivered in our time and place. What if the report was circulated in your home town that God’s holy ones in Chicago were being oppressed? Or His saints in Joplin? Or His dedicated ones in London? Precisely how would such a report be viewed? I can even conceive of a considerable amount of confusion following such a report – particularly in our country where professing Christians are not noted for being dedicated to God, holy, pure, or upright. It is exceedingly rare to find a professing Christian that equates the words “Christian” and “saint,” or “church” and “holy ones.”

Men may attempt to build a case for people being saved, yet unholy; or being Christians, yet not being pure. But how will they substantiate their case. It is said of everyone who is in the New Covenant: “I will put My laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to Me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know Me, from the least to the greatest” (Heb 8:11).

In this text, we are reading about the real church, not one of man's creation.

Is there any person of sound mind who can imagine any church creed or humanly-devised theological position being the foundation of the day of judgment? And if such will not be case then, what will be the Divine pronouncement toward those who have made such things the basis of judgment, acceptance, and rejection in this world?

HE HAS AUTHORITY

“ 14 And here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all . . .” Other versions read, “And he has come here with authority from the chief priests to arrest all,” NIV “He has come here with a warrant from the chief priests to arrest everybody,” NJB and “Now he is here and has authority from the high priests to put in chains all .” AMPLIFIED

Saul has been in Damascus no more than three days, and word of his presence has already circulated among the disciples: “he has come here !” NJB The word had apparently quickly spread from the moment Saul had received letters of authority to put believers in chains and bring them to Jerusalem for punishment. He was not seeking selected people within the body of believers, but had come to “bind all ,” “arrest all ,” NIV and “put in chains all .” AMPLIFIED

The self-created religious authorities had given official authority for the synagogues to be invaded by Saul, and every person following Christ to be bound and brought to Jerusalem. Like Satan himself, who was animating these religious leaders, they had arrogated to themselves authority that did not belong to them. That, of course, is the manner of religious bigotry.

WHO CALL ON YOUR NAME

“ . . . that call on thy name.” Other versions read, “ invoke Your name,” NRSV “who give worship to Your name,” BBE and “who trust in Your name.” IE

And, how does Ananias describe these people. Does he refer to them as “Christians,” or “church members,” or “people from our movement?” Exactly how do you describe those who are the brunt of an aggressive persecution? Do you refer to them by a denominational name? Is it possible to describe them by some theological persuasion? How would it appear if the text said the persecution had been launched against Catholics, or Protestants, or Fundamentalists, or Conservatives? How would it sound to hear such people described as members of the Reformed Movement, the Restoration Movement, or the Charismatic Movement? What if they were described as Lutherans, or Methodists, or Baptists, or Episcopalians, or Quakers? How would you react to them being called Pre-millennialists, or Post-millennia lists, or Amillennia lists? What would such terms do for the text? You already know that they would pull the power out of the text. And why is this so? Because none of those terms, or any others similar to them, have anything at all to do with God, Christ, or the Gospel. They all have to do with identity with human conceptions and perceptions – all of which are worthless before the Lord of heaven and earth.

Is there any person of sound mind who can imagine any church creed or humanly-devised theological position being the foundation of the day of judgment? And if such will not be case then, what will be the Divine pronouncement toward those who have made such things the basis of judgment, acceptance, and rejection in this world?

Something to See

There is something else to be seen here. The church to which we are being exposed in the book of Acts consisted of people who were selfless. They were frequently described as being “with one accord ” (Acts 1:14; 2:1,46; 4:24; 5:12), and “of one heart and of one soul” (Acts 4:32).

The community of selfless saints. When something happened, the word was spread among the disciples (Acts 4:24; 5:5,11; 8:14).

Now, in our text, the believers in Damascus have heard of an initiative launched against them from Jerusalem. They knew who authorized it, and the name of the one who was carrying it out. They also knew that he had arrived in their city.

This kind of communication is virtually unknown in our time. Even though there are several aggressive attacks being made against believers throughout the world, it is not common knowledge among the churches. In fact, those who are reporting such things have formed an organization that is devoted to delivering such reports. It is not something the church itself is doing. Within any given city, if anything of significance is taking place in another body of believers, it is not commonly known. What we have on our hands is a religious environment that promotes self-interest, not body-interests. There is a spirit extant in the professing Christian community that has led the people to arrange their priorities something like this: (1) Self. (2) One's own family/ relatives. (3) One's private circle of friends. (4) Those with similar worldly interests. (5) Interests pertaining to one's place of employment/education. (6) Certain community interests. (7) Possibly matters relating to one's preferred local congregation.

Oh, the blight of a Christianity that leaves people satisfied to be uninformed, and unaware of what is happening around them. It is not likely that such people will ever enjoy Divine employment, for that is not the kind of people God uses. They are not "prepared unto every good work," nor are they "meet for the Master's use." That simply is not the kind of society from which laborers are chosen.

HE IS A CHOSEN VESSEL

" 15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel: 16 For I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake."

He has a mind that will not discard revelation, but will rather throw aside misconceptions as soon as the light of the Lord shines upon them. Once the mind of the Lord is discerned concerning Saul of Tarsus, Ananias will proceed with no further concerns.

Because Ananias' heart was right, and his priorities were proper, the Lord will provide a further explanation. He has a mind that will not discard revelation, but will rather throw aside misconceptions as soon as the light of the Lord shines upon them. Once the mind of the Lord is discerned concerning Saul of Tarsus, Ananias will proceed with no further concerns. That is the way a "disciple" thinks. Such people are described by Isaiah: "For he said, Surely they are My people, children that will not lie: so He was their Savior" (Isa 63:8). These are the kind of people that can be trusted with the truth, else it would be hidden from them (Matt 13:11). It is still true that there are certain people who are never able to perceive the truth because they do not have a heart for it. Ananias was not such a person!

HE IS A CHOSEN VESSEL

"But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto Me . . ." Other versions read, "chosen vessel of Mine," NKJV "chosen instrument of Mine," NASB " My chosen instrument," NIV "an instrument whom I have chosen ," NRSV "a special vessel for Me," BBE "an elect vessel to Me," DARBY and " I've chosen this man." GWN

What Jesus had told the other apostles was true for Saul also: "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you , and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain" (John 15:16). It is also the Divine manner to select who is to work in His behalf, and labor in His vineyard. Men may, while basking in His glory, say “Here am I, send me” (Isa 6:8). Yet, every spiritually educated person knows that only those whom the Lord sends are approved to labor in His vineyard. As it is written, “how shall they preach, except they be sent ?” (Rom 10:15).

With such a plethora of evidence on this subject, it is difficult to believe how any one could not see it. Yet, the traditions of men blind men to things that are otherwise quite obvious. Ponder the men that were chosen by God.

- Noah – Gen 6:8
- Abraham – Neh 9:7
- Isaac – Gen 26:2-5
- Jacob – Rom 9:11-13
- Joseph – Psa 105:17
- Moses – Ex 3:7-10
- Aaron the high priest – Num 16:7
- Israel – Deut 7:7
- David – Psa 78:70
- Solomon – 1 Chron 28:6.
- Jeremiah – Jer 1:5
- Zerubbabel – Hag 2:23
- The twelve apostles – Luke 6:13
- The seventy disciples that were sent out – Luke 10:1
- Matthias to replace Judas – Acts 1:24
- Barnabas and Saul – Acts 13:2

This is the manner in which the Lord governs His kingdom. He is not looking for volunteers! His eyes are rather ranging throughout the whole earth, looking for a man “whose heart is perfect before him” (2 Chron 16:9). Even then, however, that is a secondary activity. There are Divine choices that were made “before the foundation of the world” (Eph 1:4), and before the person chosen was born (Jer 1:5; Rom 9:11; Gal 1:15).

In his letter to the Galatians Paul reveals that he had been chosen to be an apostle from the moment of conception. “But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace” (Gal 1:15). The “call” which to which he refers commenced on the road to Damascus when Jesus “apprehended” Saul. Here the NIV totally misrepresents the text, stating “God, who set me apart from birth.” However, Paul is saying that he was set apart before he was born, as the New Revised Standard Version states: “But when God, who had set me apart before I was born.” The point that Paul is making is that he was born to be an apostle – set apart as was Jeremiah. God said to the prophet, “Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations” (Jer 1:5). I realize that this encroaches on certain theological views However, the texts are plainly stated, and are to be believed.

Paul also reveals another factor that pertained to his appointment. This related to the Lord viewing him as faithful – one that could be trusted with

There could hardly be any people more varied in their natures than Gentiles, kings, and the children of Israel. Yet, Paul was called to minister to all three of them. He did not have a special Gospel for each of them. Nor, indeed, did he sift the Gospel through some special intellectual filter when he declared it to these different audiences.

the remarkable revelations that would be given to him. “And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry” (1 Tim 1:12). The Amplified Bible reads, “because He has judged and counted me faithful and trustworthy, appointing me to [this stewardship of] the ministry.”

THE ASSIGNMENT GIVEN TO HIM

“ . . . to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel . . . ”

The scope of Paul’s ministry is most arresting to consider. It strikes a decisive blow against the very concept of specialized ministries – a modern-day fabrication. There could hardly be any people more varied in their natures than Gentiles, kings, and the children of Israel. Yet, Paul was called to minister to all three of them. He did not have a special Gospel for each of them. Nor, indeed, did he sift the Gospel through some special intellectual filter when he declared it to these different audiences. The message of the Gospel is itself adapted to all people , dealing with them at the point of their commonality: “for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God” (Rom 3:23).

TO BEAR MY NAME BEFORE GENTILES. Paul was, in fact, “the apostle of the Gentiles,” or “apostle to the Gentiles” NKJV (Rom 11:13). He also described himself as “an apostle . . . and teacher of the Gentiles” (1 Tim 2:7). Too, he is described as “a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles” (2 Tim 1:11). In this capacity, men often think of Paul as being sent only to the Gentiles who had never heard the Gospel. However, this is a complete misrepresentation. The truth of the matter is that his primary ministry was to the Gentile church. He wrote to the believers in Rome, “So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also . . . For I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office ” (Rom 1:15; 11:13). He also wrote to the Colossian brethren (whom he had never seen), “Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you , to fulfil the word of God; even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints” (Col 1:25-26).

The fact that the majority of the New Covenant Scriptures were written by Paul to the churches confirms that his primary ministry was to the body of Christ. This is why he chose to correct the Corinthian church rather than enter an open door to preach to others at Troaz (2 Cor 2:12-13). The mystery that was opened to him was intended to be expounded to those who believed – to the “saints.” Thus it is written, “ Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you , to fulfil the word of God; even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints : to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory” (Col 1:25-27).

The irony of the situation is that of all the writings of Scripture, the professed church is most uninformed concerning the writings of Paul. In view of the pivotal role assigned to Paul to “make all men see,” this is a transgression of monumental proportions.

Paul also clarified this aspect of his ministry to the Ephesians, testifying that God’s purpose involved making known His diverse wisdom to heavenly principalities through the church. “Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery , which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God” (Eph 3:8)

The irony of the situation is that of all the writings of Scripture, the professed church is most uninformed concerning the writings of Paul. In view of the pivotal role assigned to Paul to “make all men see,” this is a transgression of monumental proportions. Paul is not being duly honored and heeded by the Gentile church. He is being treated with the same practical contempt that he received from the Corinthian church, and from others who maligned his name (Rom 3:8).

If the message delivered by Paul is intended for the church, in order that principalities and powers might become more thoroughly acquainted with the “manifold wisdom” of God, then we have a most serious problem on our hand. What will be said on the day of judgment to those who have redirected the attention of the church to their own agenda. Some examples follow.

- That reaching the lost and increasing the numbers of the church is the fundamental work of the body of Christ.
- That the stabilization of the family unit is the primary work of the church.
- That ministering to the needy is the preeminent work of believers.
- That reaching the youth as the church of tomorrow is the main work.
- That becoming involved in politics and various social issues is to be the thrust of spiritual activity.
- That majoring on the signs of the last times is the emphasis for today.

All of these may appear quite innocent, and even noble. However, if what Paul said is true concerning the revelation given to him, and if this is what God intends for the saints to know, then why are His people so ignorant of the thrust of Paul’s message? If Paul was, in fact, appointed by Jesus to bear His name to the Gentiles, then it is time for the Gentiles to start paying attention to him.

TO BEAR MY NAME BEFORE KINGS. Paul was chosen to testify of the Lord and His purpose before kings – rulers of the Gentiles. He testified before king Agrippa, speaking the following.

- The promise made by God unto the fathers: “And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers” (Acts 26:6).
- Living by hope: “Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come” (Acts 26:7)
- The resurrection of Jesus Christ: “Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?” (Acts 26:8).
- Announcing why Jesus had chosen him: “To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me” (Acts 26:18).
- That men should repent and turn to God: “that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance” (Acts 26:20).
- That Christ should suffer, and be the first to rise from the dead: “That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles” (Acts 26:23).

Jesus also told Paul; he would be brought before Caesar (Acts 27:24). The effectiveness of his witness is confirmed in his writings. He wrote to the Philippians concerning certain brethren who were in “Caesar’s household” (Phil 4:22). It is also generally understood that Paul referred to his appearance before Nero in 2 Timothy 4:16-17: “At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge. Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.”

TO BEAR MY NAME BEFORE THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL. Paul's primary ministry was to the Gentiles. However, this did not exclude a ministry to the Jewish people. He was also sent to testify of the name of Jesus to them. This is why Paul, when entering a city, went first to the local synagogue, testifying of the Gospel of Christ (Acts 9:20; 13:5,14-15,42; 14:1; 17:1,10,17; 18:4, 8; 18:19; 19:8; 24:12).

Paul himself confessed that the Gospel of Christ is "the power of God unto salvation, to the Jew first" (Rom 1:16). He also acknowledged that his ministry to the Gentiles was actually the appointed means of reaching the Jews. "For I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office: if by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save some of them" (Rom 11:13-14). This, Paul affirms, was according to Divine purpose: "I say then, Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid: but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy" (Rom 11:11). Through Moses, God said this is what He was going to do. Paul refers to that word in Romans 10:19: "But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you" (Rom 10:19). This prophesy is found in Deuteronomy 32:21: "They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God; they have provoked me to anger with their vanities: and I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation."

This confirms the utter foolishness of those who teach that Israel has been altogether abandoned by God.

I WILL SHOW HIM

"16 For I will show him how great things he must suffer . . ." Other versions read, "how many things he must suffer," NKJV "how much he must suffer," NASB "what troubles he will have to undergo," BBE "the great sufferings he must pass through," WEYMOUTH "how great are the sufferings he must endure," WILLIAMS "how much he will be afflicted and must endure and suffer," AMPLIFIED and "how many [things] it is necessary [for] him to suffer." ALT

The word "show" is an interesting one. As used here, it means "to show by placing under (i.e. before) the eyes," THAYER "give a glimpse of," FRIBERG "Make known," UBS "to make known,, to demonstrate." LOUW-NIDA This does not refer to speech, but to experience. Jesus would make known the matter revealed – that he must suffer – through Saul personally undergoing certain things. This is not a generic statement, suggesting that some suffering may take place, or that it can be averted by taking certain actions. Jesus will lead Paul through the desert if trial, and it will be extraordinary. In his own writings Paul explains WHY this suffering was required. It was because of "the abundance of the revelations" that were vouchsafed to him (2 Cor 12:7).

It is a principle that when a lot is received from heaven, a corresponding sacrifice concerning the things of this world is experienced.

It is a principle that when a lot is received from heaven, a corresponding sacrifice concerning the things of this world is experienced. Any deviation from this norm is the exception to the rule, and is not to be considered normal. One might cite Moses, Joseph, and Daniel as exceptions to the rule. However, all three of those men endured sufferings while they were in land of their exaltation.

The word "must" is also significant. Jesus is not simply revealing what he sees ahead in Saul's life – for foretelling the future, so to speak. As used here, the word "must" means "is necessary, there is need of, behooves, is right and proper," THAYER "inevitability of an event," FRIBERG "must necessarily take place," LOUW-NIDA "it is binding on one to do a thing, one must, one ought," LIDDELL-SCOTT "it is needful to," LEH and "one must, or has to." GINGRICH These sufferings were an appointment, and were the designated accompaniments of his apostleship. All of them would be experienced while Paul was engaged in the ministry to which he was appointed. They would not be a prelude to his work, but experienced during which he would fulfill his work.

Paul wrote of his sufferings. Though there was a certain generality that characterized his descriptions, there is a staggering amount of specificity in them.

- Was troubled on every side (2 Cor 4:8a).
- Experienced perplexity (2 Cor 4:8b).
- Was persecuted (2 Cor 4:9a).
- Was cast down, or thrown down (2 Cor 4:9b).
- Fought with beasts in Ephesus (1 Cor 15:32).
- Alexander the coppersmith did him much evil (2 Tim 4:14).
- Forsaken by all men when called to defend himself before his enemies (2 Tim 4:16).
- Experienced afflictions, necessities, and distresses (2 Cor 6:4).
- Experienced stripes, imprisonments, and tumults (2 Cor 6:4).
- Called to strenuous labors, watching, and fastings (2 Cor 6:6).
- Experienced dishonor, had evil reports circulated about him, was reported to have been a deceiver (2 Cor 6:8).
- Although a spiritual prince, endured being unknown, was sorrowful, was subjected to death, and had nothing (2 Cor 6:9-10).
- Had stripes laid upon him above measure (2 Cor 11:23a).
- Was frequently imprisoned (2 Cor 11:23b).
- Was repeatedly subjected to death (2 Cor 11:23c).
- Was beaten five times by the Jews with forty stripes save one (2 Cor 11:24).
- Was beaten with rods three times (2 Cor 11:25a).
- Was stoned once (2 Cor 11:15b).
- Experienced at least three shipwrecks (2 Cor 11:15c).
- Spent a day and night abandoned in the sea (2 Cor 11:15d).
- Made frequent difficult journeys (2 Cor 11:16a).
- Experienced perils of robbers, from his own countrymen, by the heathen, in the city, in the wilderness, in the sea, and among false brethren (2 Cor 11:26).
- Experienced weariness and painfulness in frequent watching, hunger and thirst, fastings, cold, and nakedness (2 Cor 11:27).
- Was given a grievous thorn in the flesh, from which he sought deliverance, yet was denied his request (2 Cor 12:1-9).

Valid suffering is not an end of itself. The fact that people endure all manner of hardship may awaken sympathy within the tender of heart, but of itself, such suffering does not make one better, nor is it a reason for Divine commendation. It is the cause for the suffering that makes it commendable, and worthy of being logged in the books of heaven.

Child of God, do you want a lot from God? An abundance of understanding, spiritual insight, and the privilege to communicate the truth effectively? Do you imagine that such an honor comes without price? It does not appear that it is possible to flourish in the knowledge of God and in this present evil world simultaneously. Some will sight Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, and Daniel as examples of the faithful flourishing in this world. But how will they compare them with Paul, or those who traffic in the knowledge of the Lord? Are not all of those men among those who died “not having received the promise?” Is it pointedly stated that God has “provided some better thing” for us,” and “that they without us should not be made perfect” (Heb 11:39-40). And, where in all of the Scripture are these men said to be examples of worldly wealth for us? Is not their faith that is their consistent treasure? And was not their standing with God set forth as their premier possession? Where is there a person of understanding who does not know this?

If men want to know how those in Christ are blessed, then let them sit at the feet of those who are expert in life in the Son. Such men did not exist prior to Christ’s exaltation! The Holy Spirit who confers such understanding was not given to men in that capacity until Jesus was glorified (John 7:37-39). We do not have a single example of someone noted for the understanding of God’s eternal purpose who was also noted for having an abundance of this world’s goods. That does not mean that such a condition is sinful or wrong. However, it does mean there is nothing particular noteworthy about it, nor is it something that is to be pursued. Instead of Paul boasting in wealth, he preferred to glory in his “infirmities,” stating that in such a circumstance “the power of Christ” would rest upon him. We conclude, therefore, that not only did the Lord “show” him “what great things” he must suffer for the sake of Jesus, but Paul acquiesced with that Divine arrangement. It is obvious that the revelations he received from the Lord were considered of greater worth. That evaluation perfectly comported with the truth.

FOR MY NAME’S SAKE

“ . . . for My name's sake.” Other versions read , “for My name,” NIV “for the sake of My name,” NRSV “for Me,” BBE “on account of My name,” CJB “for My sake,” WEYMOUTH and “for worshiping in My name.” CEV

Valid suffering is not an end of itself. The fact that people endure all manner of hardship may awaken sympathy within the tender of heart, but of itself, such suffering does not make one better, nor is it a reason for Divine commendation. It is the cause for the suffering that makes it commendable, and worthy of being logged in the books of heaven. Some people, for example, suffer because they have conducted their lives foolishly. Thus Peter writes, “For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently?” (1 Pet 2:20). And again, “But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busybody in other men's matters” (1 Pet 4:15). There is also a suffering that is experienced through the chastening of the Lord (Heb 12:11). That is a suffering that can be avoided, for, as it is written, “For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world” (1 Cor 11:31-32).

The suffering to which Saul would be subjected was an appointed suffering. Peter referred to this kind of suffering as suffering “according to the will of God” (1 Pet 4:19). Paul wrote to the Thessalonians about afflictions that were appointed: “That no man should be moved by these afflictions: for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto” (1 Thess 3:3). There are some sufferings through which greater and more effective measures of grace are dispensed – sufferings that actually enhance an ordained ministry. Paul refers to his own sufferings as being in this category, stating that when he was weak (through sufferings), he was actually made more strong (2 Cor 12:10).

Here, Jesus states that Saul’s sufferings would be for His own “name’s sake,” or because of Saul’s identity with Christ. This kind of suffering goes beyond merely enduring insults because of a religious stance. This is suffering that reflects the hatred of the world for Christ, and the fact that the suffering one is clearly associated with Christ. It is also referred to as suffering “for righteousness sake” (Matt 5:10; 1 Pet 3:14). Peter referred to this as something that is “thank worthy,” when “a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully” (1 Pet 2:19).

In the case of Saul, Jesus was going to reveal more of Himself and His purpose to him, which, in turn, would provoke more enmity from men. This is owing to the hostility of the carnal mind against the things of God (Rom 8:7). The mind and ways of Christ are not in harmony with the ways of the world.

There is an unbecoming naivete extant in the professing church about suffering for Jesus. Simply claiming to love Jesus, have traditional moral values, and be devoted to the family structure can easily be tolerated by the world. It is not unusual for such words to be perceived as just a different way of looking at things.

They rather represent the pinnacle of opposition to the ways of the world.

There is an obvious comparison made here between the coming experiences of Saul and the suffering that he caused among believers. While there is a sense in which he would be reaping what he sowed, it seems to me that this is not the specific point that is being made here. The believers that were persecuted by Saul had exhibited an obvious association with Jesus, and for that reason Saul had vigorously opposed them. However, Jesus was now going to divulge greater measures of truth to Saul than He had to others before him. He would later refer to a unique knowledge that he possessed – “my knowledge in the mystery of Christ.” declaring that God had, “by revelation . . . made known” to him “the mystery” (Eph 3:3-4). It was this unique understanding, that would be vouchsafed to Saul, that would awaken the activity of the devil among his children. Because of this understanding, more of the effect of Christ would be registered upon the kingdom of darkness, thereby provoking more hostility against Saul.

There is an unbecoming naivete extant in the professing church about suffering for Jesus. Simply claiming to love Jesus, have traditional moral values, and be devoted to the family structure can easily be tolerated by the world. It is not unusual for such words to be perceived as just a different way of looking at things. No real threat is perceived in such a stance. However, Jesus made clear what actually awakens the opposition. He once said to His half-brothers, “The world cannot hate you; but me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil ” (John 7:7). Jesus elsewhere said that the condemnation was that “light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil” (John 3:19). That light exposed what the people opposed to Jesus really were. He did not leave the matter to be concluded by His enemies, but spoke plainly to them about their condition. “Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will it” (John 8:44). He referred to them as “a generation of vipers” (Matt 12:34), “blind guides” (Matt 23:16), “hypocrites” (Matt 15:7), and “ye are as graves which appear not” (Matt 11:44).

The sufferings of Saul would also come because of His testimony of the truth. He would identify both errors and hypocrites, powerfully and clearly. He would give no allowance to flesh. Suffering would come from the Jews, and even from some churches who doubted the authenticity of his message. Saul would learn by experience how to suffer.

THE LORD, EVEN JESUS, HATH SENT ME

“ 17 And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.”

Once again, I want to draw your attention to the response of Ananias to the word of Jesus. Although the circumstance with which he was confronted was, according to appearance, a life-threatening situation, yet a word from Jesus was sufficient to bolster his confidence and move him to instant obedience. Once the explanation was given – and only once – all fears were removed.

AND ANANIAS WENT HIS WAY

“And Ananias went his way and entered into the house. . .” Other versions read, “Ananias departed and entered into the house,” NIV “Ananias went and entered the house,” NRSV “Ananias went out and came to the house,” BBE and “Ananias set out and went to the house.” PHILLIPS

I prefer the rendering “went his way,” as compared with “departed,” NIV “went,” NRSV and “went out.” BBE The expression “went his way” is translated from a single Greek word – Vaph/lqen . There is intention in this word – in this case, intention to do precisely what Jesus had said. Lexically, and as used in this text, the word means “to go away in order to follow anyone, go after him figuratively, I. e. to follow his party, follow him as a leader,” THAYER “of discipleship go after, follow, go with,” FRIBERG “departure from one place and arrival at another is implied,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “go in search of.” GINGRICH This rather complex meaning is accurately conveyed in the translation, “went his way.” Several versions translate the phrase in this way (King James Version, New King James Version, Douay-Rheims, Geneva, Bishop’s New Testament, Tyndale).

Prior to Jesus’ explanation, this was not the way of Ananias. Now, however, his faith embraced the word of the Word, and the way of Jesus became the way of Ananias. This is the manner of a “disciple” – to willingly and eagerly follow the direction of his Master. Therefore, Ananias departed with the determination to find the house to which he was sent, and perform the work for which he was Divinely dispatched.

Many professing believers have never participated in such a response. Their hearts have never really acquiesced with the will of the Lord. At the very best, their feigned obedience is to avoid punishment, or to fulfill a rather grievous obligation – but their hearts are not in the matter. Let it be clear that such responses are not acceptable to God. In fact, they are a cause for His judgment. Jesus spoke of this kind of thing in these words: “This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men” (Matt 15:8-9).

When it is the manner of people to withdraw from the Lord in their hearts, unwilling to pursue His will and gladly receive what He says, it voids any religious claim they have.

When it is the manner of people to withdraw from the Lord in their hearts, unwilling to pursue His will and gladly receive what He says, it voids any religious claim they have. Psychologists and motivators may make a valiant effort to defend such a posture, saying it is “just the way we are,” but their efforts are in vain. A denial of the Lord in one’s manners is a very real denial, and is so recognized in heaven. Therefore it is written, “They profess that they know God; but in works they deny Him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate ” (Titus 1:16). In other words, such people are incapable of doing anything “good,” as defined by the Lord, for that is the meaning of “reprobate” – “disqualified for any good work,” NKJV “worthless for any good deed,” NASB and “unfit for doing anything good,” NIV This is an alarmingly strong statement.

This throws to the ground the modern heresy that says praise ushers us into the presence of the Lord. People are being left with the impression that “praise and worship” is a kind of end of itself, divorced from the way in which men live and the manner in which they respond to the Lord. Those who are not duly “prepared unto every good work” will not be employed in the doing of such (2 Tim 2:21). Those whose hearts are “far from” the Lord, immersed in the affairs of this present evil world, are not capable of worshiping the Lord. Their status voids their pretentious worship, so that it becomes nothing more than “noise” (Amos 5:23).

Ananias was a man of faith, and that is why he was employed for this work. He was not living at a distance from the Lord, and his will gravitated to conformity with the good and acceptable, and perfect will of God. Some time later, when Paul stood before a Jewish council, he referred to Ananias as “a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there” (Acts 22:12). This did not make Ananias unusual among other Christians – although that would surely be the way he would be viewed today. This man was representative of the body of believers. He was one of the many – “a certain disciple.”

JESUS SENT ME

“ . . . and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me . . . ”

Our text does not tell us how long it took Ananias to find the house of Judas. Perhaps he knew the man already, we do not know. The point to be seen here is that he arrived where he was sent. That arrival was owing to the determination of faith, which never comes short of its intended objective.

Putting His Hands on Saul

The Lord had already shown Saul a vision in which he saw “a man named Ananias coming in and putting his hand upon him” (9:12). Now, that is precisely what happens, confirming the authenticity of Saul’s vision.

In the book of Acts, the first example of the laying on of hands is Acts 6:6, where the first deacons were set aside to their work by the laying on of the apostles’ hands. There is an allusion to this kind of action in Acts 5:12, where it is written, “by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people.” In Acts 8:17 Peter and John laid their hands on the Samaritan believers, “and they received the Holy Spirit.” NKJV Now, for only the third time, this practice is mentioned – and it does not concern the “hands” of an apostle. What is more, this text will also state by this means Saul was “filled with the Holy Spirit” – by the laying on of non-apostolic hands. Apostolic hands were required when the Samaritans turned to the Lord, but not when Saul of Tarsus was being inducted into Christ. Those with a penchant for patterns will find this most confusing.

Brother Saul

Of the sixty times the word “brother” is used in Acts through Jude, fifty-five of them apply to a “brother” in Christ – as compared to a flesh-and-blood relation (as in Acts 1:13; 12:2; Gal 1:19; 1 John 3:12; Jude 1:1). The remaining references (used in the singular) always refer to an individual in Christ (Acts 9:17; 21:20; 22:13; Rom 14:10,15,21; 16:23; 1 Cor 1:1; 5:11; 6:6; 7:12,15; 8:11, 13; 16:12; 2 Cor 1:1; 2:13; 8:18,22; 12:18; Eph 6:21; Phil 2:25; Col 1:1; 4:7,9; 1 Thess 3:2; 4:6; 1 Thess 3:6,15; Phile 1:1, 7,16,20; Heb 8:11; 13:23; James 1:9; 2:15; 4:11; 1 Pet 5:12; 3:15; 1 John 2:9,10,11; 3:10,14,16,17; 4:20,21; 5:16).

There is no reason to think this is not the way in which Ananias used the word here. While Saul had not yet obeyed the Gospel, the Lord had already revealed that he was a “chosen vessel” unto the Lord. That was reason enough to refer to him as a member of the household of faith. Of course, this does not comport with the view that one is technically not to be viewed as “saved” until they have met all of the requirements for entry into Christ. Discerning souls should be able to perceive the proximity of a person to an entrance into the Kingdom, and when all that is required is for them to be told what they are to do. For those who are not able to perceive such things, they should step back from the controversy and deal with matters concerning which they have more understanding.

Saul recounts the words of Ananias in his defense before the Jewish council: “And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there, came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul” (Acts 22:12-13).

Jesus Hath Sent Me

The precise manner in which Ananias speaks of Jesus was confirming to Saul: “the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest.” The record of Jesus’ words to Ananias does not include an account of the Lord’s appearance to Saul. These words surely stirred Saul deep within, for Jesus had appeared to him on the road as the One whom he was persecuting.

Jesus had told Saul that when he was located in Damascus, someone would tell him what he “must do.” Now Saul knows that Ananias has been chosen for that task. I do not doubt that all of his senses were elevated to their highest level as he awaited the directive word.

TO RECEIVE SIGHT AND BE FILLED WITH THE SPIRIT

“ . . . that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.”

Jesus told Ananias that Saul had a vision of him coming in and putting his hand on Saul “that he might receive his sight” (9:12). Paul also recounted this in his defense before the Jewish council (Acts 22:13). Paul did not recount this part of his experience before king Agrippa (Acts 26:12-19).

This is the only one of the three accounts that mentions that say Ananias was also sent in order that Saul might be “filled with the Holy Spirit.” I gather that this was a filling after the order Jesus promised to the disciples – an endowment with power from on high (Lk 24:69). This was the “promise of the Father,” conferred on Saul to empower him for the work he was being sent to do.

There is no such thing as a valid work for the Lord Jesus in which the influence of Divinity is not present. Any work that is governed by mankind is destined to failure, for the work of the Lord demands more resources than men possess by nature.

In his testimony before Agrippa, Paul provided more details concerning the objective of his calling. He represents these words as being spoken to him on the road to Damascus: “Choosing you out [selecting you for Myself] and delivering you from among this [Jewish] people and the Gentiles to whom I am sending you. To open their eyes that they may turn from darkness to light and from the power of Satan to God, so that they may thus receive forgiveness and release from their sins and a place and portion among those who are consecrated and purified by faith in Me.” AMPLIFIED
What a remarkable commission! : “To open their eyes that they may:”

- Turn from darkness to light. Turn their attention from the domain of darkness to the domain of light. This involved delivering them from the power of darkness, so that they were no longer dominated by a fundamental ignorance of God and His will.

- Turn from the power of Satan to God. This is release from the dominion of sin. In this, they were no longer debtors to the flesh, to live after the flesh. They would be able to resist the devil and draw close to God. Now, being alive unto God, they could walk in the light as He is in the light.

- Turn so they may receive forgiveness, being released from the guilt and power of sin. They would no longer be bludgeoned with the guilt of sin, for their conscience would be purged from dead works to serve the living God.

- Receive an inheritance among all who are sanctified by faith in Christ. Now, being delivered from this present evil world, they would be saved by their hope – the expectation of an eternal inheritance that is reserved in heaven for them.

All of these benefits would result from the opening of their eyes – the “eyes of their understanding” (Eph 1:18).

Such as ministry could only be fulfilled under the influence and direction of the Holy Spirit. This is why Jesus, prior to His ascension, told His disciples “not to depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father” (Acts 1:4).

There is no such thing as a valid work for the Lord Jesus in which the influence of Divinity is not present. Any work that is governed by mankind is destined to failure, for the work of the Lord demands more resources than men possess by nature. Those who deny this are simply wrong, and there is no need to hold dialog with them about the matter.

Because Saul could embark on a life of service, he had to be filled with the Holy Spirit, so that no vestiges of the fallen nature were resident in the work. This, of course, is a requirement for all of the people of Gold. Solemnly we are admonished, “Be filled with the Spirit” (Eph 5:18).

This exhortation has never been withdrawn, and is to be taken seriously. The context in which this word was delivered had to do with intelligent communication that yielded edification and profit – teaching and admonishing. Oh, that there was a more lively awareness of these things today!

HE RECEIVED HIS SIGHT, AND WAS BAPTIZED

“ 18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized.”

Although he was appointed to the greatest office in the body of Christ, and was given a commission that is unmatched, yet he entered the Kingdom like everyone does, being born of “water and of the Spirit”

I find it difficult to leave this section without once again drawing your attention to the person through whom, all of this was taking place. It was Ananias, “a certain disciple” from Damascus. Saul is filled with the Holy Spirit through his instrumentality – through the laying on of his hands. Not only is the incident itself most remarkable, but the person who is the object of the benefit is probably the premier preacher and teacher of all time. At least, he is the one through whom we have received the greatest amount of insight concerning the objectives and accomplishments of God’s great salvation. And, there was not so much as one apostle that had anything to do with Saul’s initiation into the Kingdom, him being filled with the Spirit, or him being tutored in the wisdom of God and the realities of redemption. I had to ask myself how this meshed with what I had been taught about the exclusiveness of the twelve apostles. I will tell you candidly, that the record to which we are now being exposed contradicts that entire mindset – and it was all orchestrated by the Head of the church Himself. Admittedly, this is an exceptional incident, and there is nothing about it that is common. However, that is the whole point behind the government of King Jesus. He operates according to His will, not our perception of how He works.

IMMEDIATELY

“ And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith . . .”

Upon the word of Ananias, “something like scales” NKJV fell from the eyes of Saul. Speaking physiologically, in the brightness of the light that flashed around and upon Saul, the structure of the eyeball had probably been severely damaged, for nature cannot stand the sight of glory.

However, having made these observations, there was more to the restoration of Saul’s sight than the removing of some covering or growth that had formed upon his eyes. Later, Paul described the experience in these words: “And the same hour, I looked upon him” (Ananias) – Acts 22:13. When he was on the road, he opened his eyes “and saw no man.” This time he opened them and saw Ananias, “a certain disciple” who had been sent that he might receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Spirit.

HE WAS BAPTIZED

“ . . . and arose, and was baptized.” Other versions read, “he got up and was baptized,” NIV and

“he got up and was immersed.” CJB

Although he was appointed to the greatest office in the body of Christ, and was given a commission that is unmatched, yet he entered the Kingdom like everyone does, being born of “water and of the Spirit” (John 3:5). There was no question about whether or not he should be baptized, or if it was optional. In his account to the Jewish council he stated that his action was a response to clear word from Ananias – who was sent by Jesus to him, “And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord” (Acts 22:16). This was not a spiritual baptism, for that is not something a man does. It does not refer to being baptized by Jesus with the Holy Spirit, for that is not something that men are commanded to do. This is baptism in water, just as occurred shortly after this at the house of Cornelius. It was there that Peter said, “Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days” (Acts 10:47-48).

This is now the seventh time we have read about baptism in the book of Acts.

- Peter told the penitential inquirers, “Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost” (Acts 2:38).
- On the day of Pentecost, “they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls” (Acts 2:41).
- Those who believed in Samaria “were baptized, both men and women” (Acts 8:12).
- Simon and sorcerer “believed also,” and was “baptized” (Acts 8:13).
- The Ethiopian eunuch asked what hindered him from being baptized, and was told if he believed with all of his heart, he could be baptized (Acts 8:36).
- Upon his confession that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, Philip and the eunuch went down into the water, and he baptized him (Acts 8:38).
- Now Saul, upon receiving his sight, and in response to the direction of Ananias, is “baptized” (Acts 9:18; 22:16).

It is difficult to comprehend how anyone could read texts such as these and make statements concerning baptism not being necessary, or having nothing to do with salvation. That such statements are frequently made, I do not deny. However, they are not made by those with honest and good hearts. Else, they would not speak in contradiction of revelation. God has inspired these words, and we are to receive them as such. If we cannot speak about baptism as the Scriptures do, we ought not speak at all.

HE WAS STRENGTHENED AND WAS WITH THE DISCIPLES

“ 19 And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.”

Having obeyed from the heart the form of the doctrine delivered to him (Rom 6: 17), Saul is ready to resume his life. Now, however, he will not continue where he left off. His conscience has been purged (Heb 9:14), his stony heart has been removed, and he has received a new heart of flesh (Ezek 36:26). He has been reconciled to God (Col 1:20-21), and the law of God has been written upon his heart and mind (Heb 10:16). He is a new creation in Christ (2 Cor 5:17), and is God’s own workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works (Eph 2:10). He has been delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of God’s dear Son (Col 1:13). He is dead indeed unto sin, and alive unto God through our Lord Jesus Christ (Rom 6:11). He was not the same man, for old things had passed away and all things had become new (2 Cor 5:17). We will certainly not expect someone experiencing such changes to conduct his life in the same way he did before.

HE WAS STRENGTHENED

“And when he had received meat, he was strengthened.” Having been weakened by three days and nights without taking food or water, Saul now ate something. He had no mind for eating during those three days. Something more important had been occupying his mind.

But now, he has obtained a good conscience, seeking one from God in obeying the form of the doctrine, and being baptized (1 Pet 3:21). He has received the love of the truth (2 Thess 2:10), and has been taught by God to love the brethren (1 Thess 4:9). Now, therefore, he receives food and is strengthened in the body.

What does a person do when he has been joined to the Lord, becoming “one spirit” with Him. We will behold a response in Saul that is perfectly consistent with the nature of “newness of life.” He will “walk” in the newness of life, just as those who have been buried with Christ by baptism into death do.

We will behold a response in Saul that is perfectly consistent with the nature of “newness of life.” He will “walk” in the newness of life, just as those who have been buried with Christ by baptism into death do (Rom 6:4).

HE WAS WITH THE DISCIPLES

“Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.” Other versions read, “Now for several days he was with the disciples who were at Damascus,” NASB “And for some days he kept with the disciples who were in Damascus,” BBE “Saul stayed with the believers in Damascus for a few days,” NLT and “For several days [afterward] he remained with the disciples at Damascus.”
AMPLIFIED

What marvelous fellowship must have taken place during those few days! Saul had come to drag these brethren off to prison, but now he was remaining with them rather than taking them bound with him. How drastically his life had changed! Not only had scales fallen from his natural eyes, but a crust of stone had fallen from his heart. He did not have to grow accustomed to these people, but was at once one with them, remaining with them as their brother in Christ. What lofty conversations they must have enjoyed!

Keep in kind that we are being exposed to the working of the Lord. Here is what really happens when a person is saved “by grace through faith” (Eph 2:8). This is a report of someone who really died with Christ, being planted together with Him, and raised up by God the Father to walk in newness of life (Rom 6:3-5). He was placed within the body of Christ precisely where God wanted him – just like every other believer. As it is written, “But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him” (1 Cor 12:18).

No believer is an island unto himself. He is part of a family – “the whole family in heaven and earth” (Eph 3:15). Now, Saul was at home among those whom he was seeking to persecute just a few days earlier – “the disciples.” That is, the ones who were taking up their cross, following Christ, and learning from Him. Saul did not identify with a mere institution – as when he was a Pharisee, but with the true saints of God.

CONCLUSION

We have read the account of a man who personally experienced what Jesus was sending him out to do: “turn men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they might receive the forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them are sanctified by faith” in Christ (Acts 26:18). His change was not one of habit – learning to do things differently than he had before. His change was the result of a new creation. God had shined into his heart with “the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ Jesus” (2 Cor 4:6). He had a new heart and a new spirit, being dead indeed unto sin and alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord (Rom 6:11).

Of course, there is no other kind of conversion. Where these kind of changes do not occur, men have simply subscribed to a lifeless routine. It is most unfortunate that the Christian community is regularly subjected to a form of religion in which change is not required. Now, instead of being born again, receiving a new heart and a new spirit, the professed church has a battery of psychological experts to assist people with working out their problems. Nearly every city has a number of counselors, ready to teach people new habits, and talk with them about weaknesses with which they were born. When religion comes wrapped in such an absurd package, a great falling away has taken place. The truth of the matter is that the contemporary church at large sees no need for Christ, for His presence would render obsolete much of what they are doing.

I do not mean to be overly critical, but it appears to me that someone has to come to grips with the glaring absence of the kind of conversion and life to which we are exposed in the book of Acts. We are faced with a situation where the profession of Simon the Sorcery is more common than that of the Samaritans. Peter told him, “Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the sight of God. Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee. For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity” (Acts 8:21-23). In my judgment, that is the kind of judgment that needs to be articulated against those professing Christians who are conducting their lives in practical alienation from God. It is time to stop treating people who are carnal as they as though they are accepted. They are not, regardless of their profession. Carnality and friendship with the world puts one at variance with God (Rom 8:7; James 4:4). There is provision for forgiveness and renewal, both of which are effective. However, men must be apprised of their absolute necessity. Where this is not done, the professing church has failed.

SAUL'S CONVERSION AND INITIAL WORK

“ 9:20 And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that He is the Son of God. 21 But all that heard him were amazed, and said; Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests? 22 But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ. 23 And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him: 24 But their laying await was known of Saul. And they watched the gates day and night to kill him. 25 Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket. 26 And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple. 27 But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus. 28 And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem. 29 And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they went about to slay him. 30 Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Caesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus. 31 Then had the churches rest throughout all Judaea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied. ” (Acts 9:20-31)

INTRODUCTION

Having confronted Jesus, obeyed His word to wait in Damascus for further word on what he must do, hearing Ananias and being baptized into Christ, Saul continued for several days with the disciples. These were now his people of preference – the very people against whom he launched an aggressive persecution. It is evident that, having passed from death unto life, he had received the love of the brethren, which is a revealed confirmation of regeneration (John 13:35; 1 John 3:14). You will notice that there is a total absence of philosophizing in Luke’s account. He does not teach that believers ought to love one another, or report that they were exhorted to do so. Instead, he records the undeniable presence of this quality among the disciples. They preferred one another, and therefore spent quality time together (Acts 1:14; 2:1,46; 4:24,31,32; 5:12; 9:19). Within an institutional setting, assembling together and working together is an objective. Within a spiritual environment it becomes a reality. The case before us is a powerful confirmation of that fact.

Saul also immediately began to preach Christ in the synagogues, a place where it was customary to allow devoted visitors to speak. This practice is confirmed by the record of “Paul and his company” attending a synagogue in Antioch of Pisidia. Of that occasion it is written, “And after the reading of the law and the prophets the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on” (Acts 13:15).

A NOTEWORTHY CIRCUMSTANCE

“The order of the synagogue service was first the prayers, read by the Sheliach, or angel of the synagogue, the people standing. Then came the reading of the Law in Hebrew by the reader, and the interpretation by the interpreter, who, outside of Judaea, generally used the version of the LXX (Septuagint). This reading, or lesson, was called the Parashah. Next came the reading and interpreting of the prophets, called the Haphtorah, either by the regular reader or by anyone invited by the ruler of the synagogue (Luke 4:16,17). Then came the Midrash, the exposition or sermon, which Paul undertook at the invitation of the ruler of the synagogue. Our Lord at Nazareth seems to have delivered the Midrash sitting (Luke 4:20); here St. Paul stands (ver. 16).” PULPIT COMMENTARY

“The rulers of the synagogue: Those were persons who had the general charge of the synagogue and its service, to keep everything in order, and to direct the affairs of public worship. They designated the individuals who were to read the Law; and called on those whom they pleased to address the people, and had the power also of inflicting punishment, and of excommunicating, etc.” (Schleusner),

COMMENTS ON ACTS 13:15

I mention this circumstance to emphasize the significant changes that have taken place in the normal Christian gathering. Under the administration of God Himself, and within the framework of His commandments and ordinances, gatherings were structured around prayer and teaching. There was a commitment to the Scriptures themselves – a practice to which Acts 15:21 refers: “For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day” (Acts 15:21). This was the kind of gathering in which Jesus first preached to the people, reading and expounding Isaiah’s prophecy of the Messiah (Luke 4:16–27). That text also informs us that Jesus did this “as His custom was” (Lk 4:16).

The critical distinction of those early gatherings, as compared to the average church gathering of our time is that learning and familiarity with the Word of God were fundamental, having the priority. In our day, there is more of a bent to entertainment and things that center in the people themselves. Those with insight, or who have a word to deliver, are of relatively little or no significance, and no place is made for them to speak. Without laboring the matter to the point of distraction, I will say that it is not likely that any significant move of God will ever occur in such a setting. Wherever there is a gravitation to any form of spiritual lifelessness – whether it is in the form of flesh-pleasing entertainment, or religious tradition – there is a corresponding forfeiture of Divine power and revelation. I do not believe it is possible to avoid this consequence. It is certain that wherever the love of the truth is absent, it is not possible for the truth to be known (2 Thess 2:10-12); and where the truth is not known, it is not possible to be made free (John 8:32,36).

Once again, I am drawing attention to these things to emphasize why the truth of Christ spread so rapidly and effectively during the early days of the church. The remarkable dissemination and embrace of the Gospel, as recorded in the book of Acts, was not owing to a unique impartation of power intended only for the launching of the Kingdom of God. Rather, the purity of the message, and the holiness of the people provided the environment in which the Lord distributed the blessing. This is something that cannot be achieved by education, organization, or institutionalism. It is still true, as the Lord declared to Zerubbabel the builder, “Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the LORD of hosts” (Zech 4:6).

A PROPER ENVIRONMENT IS REQUIRED

Anywhere and everywhere some form of revelation or spiritual renewal took place in Scripture, both the hearts and the minds of the people were engaged, being focused on what was being said. This is precisely why the church is solemnly admonished, “Let all things be done unto edifying” (1 Cor 14:26). Edification is the appointed process through which spiritual solidity and maturity are developed. It is a means through which both the hearts and minds of the people are cultured spiritually, so that they can both think and feel in concert with Deity. Wherever this is not taking place, there really is no purpose for calling for a gathering of the people of God. What is more, there is no place among the saints for religious professionals, or men whose minds are saturated with the wisdom of this world. A setting that allows for the entrance of such imposters would be more suitable for Saul the Pharisee, than for Saul the disciple. In the average church setting of our time, I seriously doubt that Saul would be asked to speak.

In this text, Paul’s preaching also inflamed the anger of the Jews, who set out to kill him, who prior to this was held in high esteem among them. The disciples, however, came to Saul’s aid, providing a most ingenious way of escape. Now, when he attempted to join the disciples in Jerusalem, they hesitated to receive him, requiring that Barnabas come to his aid, assuring the brethren there of the legitimacy of Saul's conversion.

Keep in mind that we are being exposed to real spiritual life, and of its impact upon both those who believe and those who do not. This is not the outworking of a humanly-devised strategy, but is the expression of the "newness of life" common to all believers. This is the newness of life into which every believer is raised, and is intended to be the environment of life.

SAUL IMMEDIATELY PREACHED THAT JESUS IS THE SON OF GOD

"9:20 And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that He is the Son of God."

When once the life of Jesus is within a person, it will be made manifest in their "mortal flesh." As it is written, "For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh" (2 Cor 4:11). It is true that there is a certain obligation placed upon those with spiritual life to express it. This is seen in exhortations such as the following:

- "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Mat 5:16).

It is possible for preaching to be much like a blind man wandering about in a field, stumbling here and there in a vain attempt to find something. In Saul's case, it was a continual focus, and the proclamation of what already existed, which is a definition of truth, or reality.

"And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption" (Eph 4:30).

- "Quench not the Spirit" (1 Thess 5:19).
- "And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it" (Col 4:17).
- "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man" (Col 4:6).

Valid and profitable spiritual expression springs from one's faith. As it is written, "We having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak" (2 Cor 4:13). Now, having believed, Saul begins to "preach." It will be interesting to learn about his focus.

HE PREACHED CHRIST IN THE SYNAGOGUES

"And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues . . ." Other versions read, "immediately he began to proclaim," NASB "immediately he proclaimed," NRSV "immediately began to spread the word," GWN "forthwith he announced Jesus," MRD and "Without delay he proclaimed Jesus." PHILLIPS

There are several significant things to note in this text.

- The Immediacy of Saul's Action – "straightway," or immediately. The nature of the responses recorded in Acts, whether from God for judgment or blessing, or from men themselves, is encapsulated in words like "straightway" (5:10; 9:20; 16:33), and "immediately" (3:7; 5:10; 9:18,34; 10:33; 11:11; 12:23; 13:11; 16:10,26 17:10). Saul wasted no time in expressing his faith. This is the manner in which faith responds. It is fear, doubt, and unbelief that cause men to be retarded in their responses – and none of those conditions is acceptable before the Lord.

• His Activity – “he preached.” To “preach” is to proclaim, declare, announce, publish, or herald. The Greek word employed here is evkh,russen which is the indicative imperfect active 3rd person singular form of the verb form of khru,ssw , which is used to express a public proclamation of an existing person, or event that has occurred. The language structure, or tense, of the term means the following:

- 1– “Indicative” – pointing to a specific matter in an exact manner.
- 2– “Imperfect” – a continual proclamation, as compared to making a single statement.
- 3– “Active” – that the action described is one in which Saul was continually engaged.
- 4– “3 rd person” – Saul was preaching about another person, not himself or his own experience.
- 5– “Singular” – The Person Saul preached was the sole object of his exposition. He did not start with this subject to launch himself into a theme perceived to be more relevant.

While this is admittedly a technicality, it does serve to accent that proper preaching must have an undeniable focus. It is possible for preaching to be much like a blind man wandering about in a field, stumbling here and there in a vain attempt to find something. In Saul’s case, it was a continual focus, and the proclamation of what already existed, which is a definition of truth, or reality.

• The Subject of Proclamation – “Christ.” Saul was proclaiming a Person. Already in the book of Acts the apostles are described as ceasing not to “teach and preach Jesus Christ ” (Acts 5:42). Philip is said to have gone down to the city of Samaria “and preached Christ unto them” (Acts 8:5). Now, Saul is said to have “preached Christ .” The people to whom he preached was not his theme, and their needs were not the subject of his exposition. It is ever true that until a person can truly “preach Christ,” he is not, by scriptural definition, a “preacher” (Rom 10:14).

• The Place of Proclamation – “the synagogues.” It is good to consider where Saul carried out his preaching. It was “in the synagogues.” The Savior Himself was noted for teaching and preaching in the synagogues (Matt 4:23; 9:35; 12:9; 13:54; Mk 1:21,39; 3:1; 6:2; Lk 4:15,16,33,38,44; 6:6; 13:10; John 6:59; 18:20). The apostles and others also were noted for preaching in the synagogues (Acts 6:9; 9:20; 13:5,14-15,42; 14:1; 17:1,10,17; 18:4,19,26; 19:8). Frequently those who believed on Jesus were also said to have been associated with the synagogues (Acts 9:2; 18:26; 22:19; 26:11). Here was a place where those of sober mind were apt to be found. It was a place where the Scriptures were read and expounded, and where devotion was more common. It really is no marvel that Saul began preaching in the synagogues of the city.

HE IS THE SON OF GOD

“ . . . that He is the Son of God.”

Other versions read, “preaching Jesus as the Son of God,” BBE and “saying, He is indeed the Son of God! ” NLT

The primary association of Jesus Christ is the Father Himself – not humanity. He is the Savior of men, to be sure. However He is primarily the Son of God. It is what He is to God that makes Him effective in what He is to men.

The idea is that Saul preached Jesus as the Son of God. He did not proclaim Him as the answer to the perceived needs of men, or the means of realizing personal ambitions. He did not deliver a message that represented Jesus Christ as sanctioning a specific organization, or the way to recover from personal and social setbacks. The primary association of Jesus Christ is the Father Himself – not humanity. He is the Savior of men, to be sure. However He is primarily the Son of God. It is what He is to God that makes Him effective in what He is to men.

- He is “the Son of God ” (Matt 8:29; Rom 1:4; Eph 4:13; Heb 4:14; John 3:8; 5:5,10,12,13,20; Rev 2:18).
- He is “the Son of the living God ” (Matt 16:16).
- He is the “Son of the Most High God” (Mk 5:7).
- He is “the Christ of God ” (Lk 9:20).
- He is “the Son of the Blessed ” (Mk 14:61).
- He is “the Lamb of God ” (John 1:29,36).
- He is “the wisdom of God ” (1 Cor 1:24).
- He is “the power of God ” (1 Cor 1:24).
- He is “the Holy One of God ” (Mk 1:24).
- He is “the Chosen of God ” (Lk 23:35; 1 Pet 2:4).
- He is “the Bread of God” (John 6:33).
- He is “He which is of God ” (John 6:46).
- He is “the Image of God ” (2 Cor 4:4).
- He is “Word of God ” (Rev 19:13)
- The “only Begotten of the Father ” (John 1:14; 3:16,18).
- He is described as One who is “in the bosom of the Father ” (John 1:18).
- He is “the Son of the Father ” (2 John 1:3).
- Concerning His relationship to God the Father, He is referred to as “ His Son” (Acts 3:13,26; Rom 1:3,9; 5:10; 8:29; 1 Cor 1:9; Gal 1:16; 4:4; 1 Thess 1:10; Heb 1:2; 1 John 1:3,7; 3:23; 4:10; 5:9,10,11,20).
- He is referred to as God’s “Beloved Son” (Matt 3:17; 17:5; Mk 1:11; Lk 9:35).
- It is affirmed that only the Father knows the identity of the Son, and only the Son knows the identity of the Father. Any knowledge of God that is realized by men comes through the Son alone (Matt 11:27).
- The Father “loves the Son,” and has given all things into His hand (John 3:35).
- Jesus did not work independently of God, “Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do : for what things soever He doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise” (John 5:19).

It is obvious that when Jesus is preached as the Son of God, the relation of the Son to the Father is primary. The private concerns of humanity, however significant they may appear, are not what the work of Jesus is about. The professed church has not done well in making this clear to the people – something for which it is responsible, seeing it is the “pillar and ground of the truth” (1 Tim 3:15).

Saul preached the very thing that he had vociferously denied just a few days earlier – namely that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. This sudden shift in his thinking was not the result of a lengthy period of training. Rather, his knowledge of the Scriptures had now been augmented, as it were, with spiritual understanding, as the light of God shined upon them from within his new heart and spirit. He now perceived that Jesus is really the Subject of Scripture (John 5:39), and that “the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy” (Rev 19:10).

A NOTICEABLE CHANGE

“ 21 But all that heard him were amazed, and said; Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?”

This is the manner of Divine working. Men are not able to account for it by natural reasoning, or by comparing it to the wisdom and ways of this world. It is not that God merely does things on a grand scale, so that it is remarkable, yet can be explained by appealing to the laws of nature and the natural aptitudes of men. Apart from Divine power, there is no explanation for what the Lord does.

It is to be understood that a moral change that is not confirmed by appearance is really no change at all. In our time, when a hearty effort is being made to blend Christianity with “this present evil world” (Gal 1:5), the necessity for such a change is not being proclaimed. However, Jesus clarified the absolute necessity of change when He said to Nicodemus, “Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God,” and “Ye must be born again” (John 3:3,7). The use of the expression “born again” confirms that the mere adoption of new habits is not intended. The requirement of a new birth establishes that a fundamental change in the character of the individual is required. That is something that can only be accomplished through the Holy Spirit. Therefore, those who are “born again” are said to have been “born of the Spirit” (John 3:6,8), and born of “incorruptible seed” (1 Pet 1:23).

ALL THAT HEARD HIM WERE AMAZED

“But all that heard him were amazed . . .” Other versions read, “continued to be amazed,” NASB “astonished,” NIV “full of wonder,” BBE “astounded,” CSB and “surprised.” IE

The word “amazed” is translated from a word that means “to throw out of position . . . throw one out of his mind, drive one out of his senses,” THAYER “to be amazed beyond comprehension confuse, astound, amaze,” FRIBERG and “to be amazed beyond comprehension confuse, astound, amaze.” LOUW-NIDA The idea is that those who heard Saul could in no way account for the drastic change that had taken place in him. There simply was no natural explanation for the radical alteration of his speech and manners. Here is a classic example of the fulfillment of this word: “I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent” (1 Cor 1:19; Isa 29:14). This is the manner of Divine working. Men are not able to account for it by natural reasoning, or by comparing it to the wisdom and ways of this world. It is not that God merely does things on a grand scale, so that it is remarkable, yet can be explained by appealing to the laws of nature and the natural aptitudes of men. Apart from Divine power, there is no explanation for what the Lord does.

Right here we must come to grips with the kind of things for which God is given purported praise in our day. Too often men give credit to God for things the world can account for using mundane explanations. God is not truly exalted by crediting Him for things that are perceived as quite doable apart from Him. It is not that God is never in such things – like gradual recoveries from debilitating illnesses, changes in weather patterns, financial well-being, etc. The point is that the saints, when giving public praise to God, ought to draw attention to things that cannot be accounted for on a worldly level. That is a matter of conducting ourselves wisely before men.

IS NOT THIS HE?

“ . . . and said; Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?”

Saul’s powerful presentation caused amazement in all who heard him, for they knew of his prior life. They even knew why he had planned to come to that area. They did not know what had happened to him on the way, or of the ordained encounter he had with Ananias. However, it was clear that the man speaking in their synagogue differed radically from the one who was reported to be coming to their city and synagogues to arrest and bind both men and women who were believers in Christ.

There is something else here that is noteworthy. It was apparently not unusual for believers to be among those meeting regularly in the Jewish synagogue on the Sabbath day. It also appears that they were not always expelled from the synagogue. Neither is there any suggestion that the believers in any way compromised their faith, as some had done in Jerusalem during the ministry of Jesus (John 9:22; 12:42-43).

HE CONFOUNDED THE JEWS, PROVING THAT JESUS IS VERY CHRIST

“ 22 But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ.”

BUT

“But . . .” Other versions read, “Yet,” NIV “And,” YLT and “however.” WEYMOUTH This word is translated from the Greek conjunction de , which has the following lexical meaning: “universally, by way of opposition and distinction; it is added to statements opposed to a preceding statement,” THAYER and “to emphasize contrast.” FRIBERG

This small word introduces the next clause, which contrasts sharply with what has just been said. Those who heard Saul speak were thrown out of their wits by the stark contrast between who Saul was prior to this, and what he now appeared to be. However, what they were beholding was a beginning of an continual change. The fact of the matter was that the alteration in Saul of Tarsus was an ongoing one. Furthermore, that uninterrupted change was not impacted at all by their response.

SAUL INCREASED IN STRENGTH

“ . . . Saul increased the more in strength . . .” Other versions read, “increased all the more in strength,” NKJV “kept increasing in strength,” NASB “grew more and more powerful,” NIV “become increasingly more powerful,” NRSV “went on increasing in power,” BBE “was being filled more and more with power,” CJB “grew more capable,” CSB “was the more strengthened,” MRD “Saul’s power increased steadily,” NJB “Saul’s preaching became more and more powerful,” NLT “was still more strengthened,” YLT “became more and more fervent in preaching,” LIVING “gained more and more influence,” WEYMOUTH “grew stronger and stronger,” WILLIAMS “went on from strength to strength,” PHILLIPS “All the more was being empowered,” ALT and “was more filled with power.” LITV

While those who heard Saul were confounded at the remarkable change in him, he himself was increasing in strength more and more.

Once again, we are being exposed to the manner of the Kingdom. Isaiah prophesied that the kingdom placed upon the shoulder of the Messiah would be noted for an “increase” that would never end (Isa 9:6-7). Daniel also prophesied of this Kingdom trait (Dan 2:44-45).

The Scriptures accent at least three areas in which continual change is realized by those who are living by faith.

- FAITH. The word of the Gospel announces that faith is progressive in nature, advancing on and on as the justified ones live by it. “For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith : as it is written, "The just shall live by faith" (Rom 1:16-17). The phrase "from faith to faith" indicates that it is the nature of spiritual life to promote an increase in faith itself, which is the means through which all spiritual growth is realized. That is why it is written that "the just shall live by faith." There is no such thing as a static, inactive, or non-growing faith. When faith does not increase (Lk 17:5) or grow (2 Thess 1:3), it at once begins to wane. Those in such a condition are said to believe only "for a while" (Lk 8:13). Those who keep the faith, on the other hand, experience the advancement of faith to a greater degree or measure.

• STRENGTH. The Psalmist also declared increase to be the nature of those who, in redemption, would appear before God. "They go from strength to strength, every one of them in Zion appeareth before God" (Psa 84:7). Again, this progression is from one degree of strength to a greater degree of strength.

• GLORY. The transformation of the individual takes place in stages. In these stages, the Holy Spirit changes the believer from one increasing stage of glory to another. This is done as we behold the glory of the Lord. "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor 3:18). Here, "glory" refers to the image of Christ into which believers are being transformed. This is done by means of spiritual growth in which they are being more and more conformed to the image of Christ (Rom 8:29).

The fact that Saul continued to increase in strength confirms that the processes to which I have just referred were taking place within him. This is the Kingdom norm – and it was all taking place within the arena of conflict and opposition.

HE CONFOUNDED THE JEWS

" . . . and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus . . ." Other versions read, "baffled the Jews," NIV "the Jews . . . were not able to give answers to the arguments," BBE "creating an uproar among the Jews," CJB "confused the Jews," GWN "causing consternation among the Jews," NET "couldn't refute his proofs," NLT "couldn't withstand his proofs," LIVING "didn't know how to answer him," IE "bewildered them," WEYMOUTH "continued to confound and put to confusion," AMPLIFIED and "reducing to confusion." PHILLIPS

Saul was not spouting philosophy, or resorting to mere human logic. He was reasoning out of the Scriptures – the writings of Moses and the Prophets. As an excelling young Pharisee, who was the "son of a Pharisee," He had been a student of the Scriptures (Acts 23:6; 26:5; Gal 1:14; Phil 3:5-6). Neither, indeed, was he merely relating his experience on the road to Damascus. We know from the words that follow that he was mightily wielding the "sword of the Spirit" (Eph 6:17).

There is no substitute for a knowledge of the Scriptures. Those who have little knowledge and understanding of Scripture are, by virtue of that ignorance, disqualified from any extensive involvement in preaching or teaching. Those who labor in the vineyard of the Lord are described as workman who are "handling accurately the word of truth" NASB (2 Tim 2:15). In his various admonitions to Timothy, Paul mentioned that he had known the Scriptures "from childhood" NKJV (2 Tim 3:15). It was no doubt the same with Saul, who was the "son of a Pharisee" (Acts 23:6).

The point is that when light flooded the heart of Saul, it sanctified the knowledge of the Scriptures that he already possessed. That is why he was able to confound the Jews with irrefutable arguments concerning Christ Jesus – something that could not have been done by a person lacking an extensive knowledge of the Word of God.

PROVING THAT JESUS WAS VERY CHRIST

" . . . proving that this is very Christ." Other versions read, " proving that this Jesus is the Christ,"

NIV “proving that Jesus was the Messiah,” NRSV “he made it clear,” BBE “with his proofs,” CJB “he demonstrated,” MRD and “by comparing and examining evidence and proving.” AMPLIFIED

The word “proving” comes from the Greek word sumbibazwn which has the following lexical meaning: “to cause to coalesce, to join together, put together . . . to put together in one’s mind,” THAYER “strictly cause to stand together . . . intellectually prove conclusively,” FRIBERG and “to bring together, to cause to be a unit.” LOUW-NIDA

Saul’s proofs were developed by correlating what Jesus did and taught with what the Scriptures had foretold of the coming Messiah. That is the only way

Jesus could be confirmed to be “very Christ,” or “THE Christ.” Saul brought the Scriptures and revealed Person of Jesus together, confirming they were perfectly correlated with one another. Jesus Himself said of the Scriptures, “they are they which testify of Me ” (John 5:39). When Philip found Nathanael, he said of Jesus, “We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph” (John 1:45). When Luke introduced this book to Theophilus, he said of his Gospel, “The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach” (Acts 1:1). That record of what Jesus did and taught was in unwavering agreement with what Moses and the prophets said of the coming Messiah.

Now, Saul of Tarsus, by the grace of God (1 Cor 15:10), has seen this also. He therefore takes the Jewish Scriptures (Moses and the Prophets), and matches them perfectly with what Jesus did and taught.

This is also how Jesus began His own ministry among men. In His hometown synagogue, He read a Messianic prophecy from the book of Isaiah, declaring that it was fulfilled that day in the ears of those who heard Him (Lk 4:16-21). Peter also did the same on the day of Pentecost, citing Jesus’ fulfillment of the prophecies of Moses, Joel and David, as well as the promise God made to David (Acts 2:16-21,25-36). Later Peter told the people that “all the prophets from Samuel” had foretold the days of Jesus (Acts 3:24), and that Jesus was the Seed God promised to Abraham (Acts 3:25-26). Peter also told the household of Cornelius that “all the prophets” gave witness to Jesus Christ (Acts 10:43). Later, Paul would confess that in preaching Christ he said “none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come” (Acts 26:22). And, when he was incarcerated in the Gentile city of Rome, it is written that he “expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening” (Acts 28:23).

Paul also wrote to the Romans, testifying to the manner in which he established them by “the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets , according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith” (Rom 16:25-26).

The modern Gentile church has, for the most part, obscured the writings of Moses and the Prophets concerning “the Christ.” It has substituted “another Jesus” (2 Cor 11:4) of whom Moses and the prophets did not write. Now Jesus is associated with the needs and desires of the people as they are defined by men. Now he is perceived as a marriage-mender, drug-deliverer, prosperity-provider, career-conferrer , and success-supplier. He is being presented as the answer to self-perceived problems, and the means through which one’s dreams are brought to fruition. However, this is not the kind of “Christ,” or Messiah, that was foretold in the Scriptures. Therefore, it is not even remotely possible that such is the Savior of the world (1 John 4:14).

THE JEWS TAKE COUNSEL TO KILL PAUL

“ 23 And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him: 24 But their laying await was known of Saul. And they watched the gates day and night to kill him.”

The extent and duration of Saul’s teaching confirms how much he had been given to see – and there would be much more revelation given to him.

We are not sure of the precise time that this circumstance took place.

On the surface, it appears to have taken place within several days from the commencement of his preaching in the synagogue. However, the expression “many days” might very well refer to a rather lengthy period. If this is the case, it could refer to the second time he went to Damascus, after he had spent an unspecified period of time in Arabia. Paul refers to this time in his letter to the Galatians. Following the revelation of Jesus to him, he states, “But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, To reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus. Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and remained with him fifteen days” (Gal 1:15-18).

Luke omits the time Saul spent in Arabia, saying only that it was after he first entered Damascus. It was also before he went to Jerusalem. He also states that he returned to Damascus after spending an unspecified period of time in Arabia. Then, after three years, he went up to Jerusalem. Some assume that Saul went to Arabia after the events of our text. Others are convinced that the events of our text took place after he had returned from Arabia. I am placing all of these events prior to the time Saul spent in Arabia. It seems to me that this best suits the record Luke is delivering, which has primarily to do with the events immediately following Saul’s apprehension by Jesus. However, this is not something concerning which I will be contentious.

THE JEWS TOOK COUNSEL

“And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him . . .” Other versions read, “after some time had passed,” NRSV “after some days,” BBE “later,” GWN “after a long time,” NAB “after a good while,” TNT “at length,” WEYMOUTH “after several days,” WILLIAMS and “after considerable time had lapsed.” AMPLIFIED

The expression “many days” lends itself to the notion that Luke is speaking of a period of twenty-four hour days, not a small cluster of years, or even months. The word “many” is translated from the Greek word ἵκαναι, which means “Reaching to, attaining to, and sufficient,” THAYER and “an implied measurement that reaches a certain stage.” FRIBERG The word “days” is translated from the Greek word ἡμέραι, which means “the natural day, between sunrise and sunset . . . and the civil day, or space of twenty-four hours.” THAYER The emphasis, therefore, is not placed on a specific number of days. Rather, it highlights an unspecified number of days during which the patience of the Jews ran out. While it is conceivable that this could include the period of time Saul spent in Arabia, I do not consider it likely. The initial time Saul spent in the synagogues, immediately following his time with Ananias, was given to confounding the Jews. It is this bewilderment that provoked the Jews to take counsel to kill Saul.

This is precisely the same response that the Jews in the synagogue of the Libertines had toward Stephen. They “were unable to resist the wisdom and spirit by which he spake.” They therefore took counsel to kill him also, and did the same after a brief period of time (Acts 7:8-15, 58-59). Add to this the fact that the Jews reacted similarly to the Lord Jesus Himself after His very first sermon among them (Lk 4:28-29). Unbelieving Jews were not noted for their tolerance of the proclamation of Jesus. I do not know what would lead a person to believe they endured two extended sessions of Saul’s preaching – one before he went into Arabia, and one afterward. I therefore choose to believe that this record precedes Saul's trip into Arabia.

It ought to be noted that time was given for these Jews to receive the love of the truth. However, they did not receive it, but chose rather to hold on to their cherished traditions.

IT WAS KNOWN OF SAUL

“ 24 But their laying await was known of Saul . . .” Other versions read, “their plot became known to Saul,” NKJV “Saul learned of their plan,” NIV “Saul got knowledge of their design,” BBE “Saul was told about their plot,” GWN “but news of it reached Saul,” NJB “but information of their intention was given to him,” WEYMOUTH and “the knowledge of] their plot was made known to Saul.” AMPLIFIED

Here again we see the closeness of the disciples, as well as their alertness to the circumstances. People who are all wrapped up in themselves are not aware of imminent danger, but blunder through life like brute beasts, falling needlessly into pits they could have avoided.

This is the kind of thing that was taking place in our text. While some might well conjecture that certain members of the synagogue overheard the plans of Saul's enemies, that does not get to the source of the matter. This was actually the reigning Christ delivering Saul from the people, just as He promised He would do

But it was not so among the disciples in Damascus. Even though Saul was a new convert, yet the believers were drawn to him, quickly recognizing the grace that had been given to him. Consequently, they apprised him of the plots that were being made against him.

THEY WATCHED THE GATES

“And they watched the gates day and night to kill him.” Other versions read, “they kept close watch on the city gates in order to kill him,” NIV “And they kept watch day and night on the roads out of the town, so that they might put him to death,” BBE “they carefully watched the gates both by day and by night so as to do away with him,” LITV and “Although in their murderous scheme the Jews watched the gates day and night for him.” PHILLIPS

The determination of the Jews appeared to guarantee they would be successful – at least that is what they were thinking. However, because Saul was a chosen vessel unto the Lord, their plans would not succeed. As it is written, “There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the LORD, that shall stand” (Prov 19:21). God is noted for causing the purposes of the ungodly to fail. As it is written, “That frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish” (Isa 44:25).

It is not by coincidence that the plans of his enemies were “known of Saul.” This is an example of the working of the Lord Jesus, upon whose shoulder the government has been placed (Isa 9:6). He carries out the meticulous and mysterious workings to which Solomon alluded when he wrote, “Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bedchamber: for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter” (Eccl 10:20). An example of this kind of Divine working is seen in an account of the king of Syria. When his plots against the king of Israel were continually foiled, he called his servants and inquired if one of them was a friend to the king of Israel, and was divulging his plans to him. It was then that one of his servants replied, stating that none of them were providing the king of Israel with information. He said, “None, my lord, O king: but Elisha, the prophet that is in Israel, telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bedchamber” (2 Kgs 6:12).

This is the kind of thing that was taking place in our text. While some might well conjecture that certain members of the synagogue overheard the plans of Saul's enemies, that does not get to the source of the matter. This was actually the reigning Christ delivering Saul from the people, just as He promised He would do: "But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee" (Acts 26:16-17). Our text is an example of such a deliverance, and is evidence of a ruling Christ.

DELIVERED BY THE DISCIPLES

"25 Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket." Other versions read, "but his disciples took him by night, and let him down through an opening in the wall, lowering him in a large basket," NASB "But his followers took him by night and lowered him in a basket through an opening in the wall," NIV "But his disciples took him at night and let him down through the [city's] wall, lowering him in a basket or hamper," AMPLIFIED and " Saul's disciples took him one night and let him down through an opening in the wall by lowering him in a basket." PHILLIPS

Paul recounts this incident in his letter to the Corinthians, providing some additional details. "In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me: and through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands" (2 Cor 11:32-33). There is nothing more in Scripture concerning this governor or the king under which he exercised his authority. There is some reference to him in secular history (Pollock [Specimen Hist. Arab. p. 76, 77, 78], The book of 2 Maccabees 5:8, and Josephus [Antiqu. 50:14. c. 1. sect. 4. de Bello Jud. 50:1. c. 6. sect. 2]). However, it is enough to know no more than our text declares, for Saul is the subject, and not the Jews or those with whom they had aligned themselves. As is abundantly confirmed in Scripture, the Holy Spirit does not make a practice of informing men of historical persons and facts that have no immediately connection with Divine intent. It is for this reason that students of the Word must discipline themselves not to be unduly distracted by history, culture, and matters that are extraneous to the text of Scripture itself.

Humiliating to the Flesh

Paul places this incident among the things classified as his "infirmities" (2 Cor 11:30). There was a sense in which it was a humiliating deliverance – at least in the flesh. It displayed weakness – particularly when compared with deliverances like that of Israel from Pharaoh and his armies (Ex 14:29-30), David from Goliath (1 Sam 17:49-50), Samson's defeat of a thousand philistines (Judges 15:15), and Shamgar's defeat of six hundred philistines (Judges 3:31). However, God has not always delivered His people in such a manner, and we do well to take note of it, lest we formulate a faulty view of deliverance and Divine protection. Elijah not only slew 850 prophets of Baal (450 +400), he also fled from before the face of Jezebel (1 Kgs 18:19,40; 19:3-4). Jeremiah was temporarily subjected to the will of his enemies (Jer 38:6). Zechariah was killed by his enemies in the Temple court (2 Chron 24:20-21). James was killed by Herod (Acts 12:2). There were also numerous faithful saints who suffered unspeakable atrocities at the hands of their enemies (Heb 11:35-38). We do well not to develop a naive and juvenile view of Divine protection and deliverance.

Ungodly Collusion

The Jews had apparently obtained the approval of the governor of the city to carry out their intended treachery. It is the invariable nature of the flesh to appeal to the world for help – never to the living God. This is what the Jews did in carrying out their intentions against the Lord's. They employed "wicked hands" (Acts 2:23), not only appealing to evil Pilate to assist them, but insisting that he do so after he had desired to release Jesus (Acts 3:13).

Saul's Disciples

Note that it was Saul's own "disciples" who assisted his escape from the Jews. When he presented his proofs of Jesus being the Christ, there were apparently some who saw the truth of what he said. The literal rendering of the expression is "the learners of him," INTERLINEAR with the "him" referring to Saul himself.

Thus Saul escapes by means of creativity and stealth, the disciples lowering him over the wall in a basket. They also did this at an expeditious time, accomplishing the escape during the night. All of this required diligence and perception on their part. In a sense, they were risking their own lives in this matter. However, the love of the brethren places one's personal interests in the background, seeking to bring the greatest advantage to the saints – especially when such advantages have been brought through them.

The incident is reminiscent of the escape of the Israelite spies from Jericho – when Rahab "let them down by a cord through the window; for her house was upon the town wall, and she dwelt upon the wall" (Josh 2:15). Something similar occurred when David was aided in his escape from the designs of king Saul. His wife Michal (who was the daughter of Saul), "let David down through a window: and he went, and fled, and escaped" (1 Sam 19:12).

Was It Right to Do This?

A novice might question whether or not it was proper to flee from the Jews. Is not persecution part and parcel of the life of faith, and is it not proper for men to submit to such maltreatment in faith? The unlearned might cite the words of Jesus in justification of this erroneous view: "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it" (Matt 16:25). Such reasoning might appear flawless to some. However, it is a spiritually juvenile way of thinking. The saving of one's life speaks of the abandonment of Divine interests in a preference for personal ones. That is not the kind of thing we are confronting in this text. This was an exercise of wisdom, not the expression of selfish interests or a love for self.

Speaking of the persecution they would face, Jesus once said to His disciples, "But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another" (Matt 10:23). For that matter, it is said of Jesus Himself, "After these things Jesus walked in Galilee: for He would not walk in Jewry (Judea), because the Jews sought to kill Him" (John 7:1).

Another Principle

Another principle that is unveiled here is that the Gospel is withdrawn from those who persistently reject it. This was lived out when Jesus wept over Jerusalem, citing their rejection of Him as a just reason for withdrawal from them. At that time He said, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. Ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Matt 23:38-39).

Jesus also taught His disciples this when He first sent them out. "And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet" (Matt 10:14). When He sent out the seventy, the Lord told them the same thing. "But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say, Even the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you: notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you" (Luke 10:10-11).

When Paul and the company with him were rejected in Antioch of Pisidia, they frankly told the people, "It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles" (Acts 13:46). It was then that they "shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium" (Acts 13:51).

In all of these cases, there was a remnant of people who accepted the Gospel. Yet, a judgment was rendered against the general environment because of their obtuseness.

A Kind of Judgment

The escape of Saul was, in a sense, a judgment against those Jews that sought to kill him. The Lord could easily have eliminated them, or even enabled Saul to continue among them, refuting their arguments and frustrating their desires. However, that is not what He chose to do, and His action is in perfect agreement with a number of similar incidents in Scripture (Acts 13:50-51; 14:6,19-20; 16:19-23; 17:10,13-15,32-33; 18:12-18; 20:1; 23:16-22; 23-33,35; 24:27; 27:1-5; 2 Cor 1:8-9). Sometimes the witness is withdrawn by means of martyrdom (Gen 4:3-8; 2 Chron 24:21-22; Acts 7:58-60). Sometimes there is a relatively peaceful departure.

There are also times when an escape is accomplished by means of stealth, as in our text. However, whatever means are employed, it is always a circumstance of greatest gravity when the Gospel of Christ is withdrawn from a people or a region.

THE JERUSALEM DISCIPLES ARE AFRAID OF HIM

“ 26 And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.”

There is a gap of time between this verse and the previous one – we do not know its precise length. Some are of the persuasion that it was a relatively lengthy period of time, with his escape taking place after he had been in Arabia. I am of the persuasion that the trip into Arabia followed this escape. However, this is not a critical matter, and there is no benefit in pursuing it any further.

WHEN SAUL WAS COME TO JERUSALEM

“And when Saul was come to Jerusalem . . .”

We know from Paul’s letter to the Galatians, that, from one point of view, this was not the same Saul that initially preached in Damascus. By this time, he had been briefly tutored by Jesus, choosing not to “confer with flesh and blood” following his conversion. He therefore did not go up to Jerusalem to those who were apostles before him. As it is written, “To reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus” (Gal 1:16-17). After “three years” he “went up to Jerusalem to get acquainted with Peter, and stayed with him fifteen days” NIV (Gal 1:18). It is difficult to correlate the testimony of Paul to the Galatians with the record provided in the book of Acts. I have not been satisfied with my own understanding of the timing of these events. Nor, indeed, does it appear worthy of extensive pursuit. I will simply say that, following his departure to persecute the saints, it appears that the first time Saul returned to Jerusalem is the reference of both our text and the first chapter of Galatians. This appears to harmonize well with an additional account Paul gave of this occasion before the Jewish council. In that account he did not refer to his trip to Arabia, but spoke of his journey to Jerusalem as taking place shortly after his conversion. Here is the record. I will commence with the words Ananias delivered to Saul. “For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord. And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance; And saw Him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning Me. And I said, Lord, they know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee: and when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him. And he said unto me, Depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles” (Acts 22:15-21).

The phrase “come again to Jerusalem” refers to his initial return. This passage corresponds to the passage we are reviewing (9:28-30).

Paul also gave a brief summation of his initial experiences in Christ when he testified before Agrippa. “Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision: but showed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judaea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance” (Acts 26:19-20).

The parallel accounts are as follows, and confirm the number of things that probably took place during this period of time. I gather they are all referring to the same visit to Jerusalem, with each accenting something different.

Acts 9:26-27

- Saul come to Jerusalem following his escape from Damascus.
- Saul attempts to join the disciples in Jerusalem, but they are afraid of him.
- Barnabas intercedes for him, bringing him to the apostles and testifying of his encounter with Christ.
- Saul is with the apostles, going in and out of Jerusalem, yet there is no record of him being specifically taught by them.
- He speaks to the Jews boldly, who take counsel to kill him.
- The brethren send him to Tarsus, which is next to Syria.

Acts 22:17-21

- When returning to Jerusalem, Saul receives a vision while in the Temple, in which Jesus reveals that he must leave the city.

Acts 26:20

- Saul preaches Christ when at Jerusalem, declaring to the Jews that they should repent, turn to God, and do works befitting of repentance.

Gal 1:18-23

- Saul returned to Jerusalem three years after his initial departure to persecute the church.
- During that time he conferred with Peter, but did not see any of the other apostles.
- Following that visit he went into the regions of Syria and Cilicia.

HE ASSAYED TO JOIN HIMSELF TO THE DISCIPLES

“ . . . he assayed to join himself to the disciples . . . ” Other versions read, “tried to join,” NKJV “trying to associate,” NASB “attempted to join,” NRSV “tried to meet with,” NLT “assayed to couple himself to,” PNT and “made several attempts to associate with.” WEYMOUTH

While it is true that Saul had been known for persecuting the church in Jerusalem three years earlier, there is more to this matter than this. There is an underlying suggestion that things went on in the assembly that were not designed for those who were not disciples – things that set the people apart from all non-disciples, making them a peculiar people.

The words translated “join himself” are translated from a single word that has the following meaning: “to glue together, cement, fasten together . . .to join oneself as an associate,” THAYER “Adhere to, cleave to . . . unite with,” FRIBERG “to put together, build,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “to enter into close relation with,” LEH and “join closely together, cling to, associate with.” GINGRICH

Right here we confront something that differs radically from the church situation in our country. First, the word “join,” when associated with identity with a body of people, is not considered to mean cleave to, have close association with, enter into close relation, or engage in building together. It generally is associated with mere formality, and perhaps the adoption of a given set of religious traditions. Here, however, the word has everything to do with being knit together in a common cause, and partaking of a common life.

Secondly, there is obviously some kind of formality associated with Saul’s effort. He was surely not merely attempting to attend the meetings of the disciples in an informal sort of way. There was some sense in which he sought to be a part of the disciples in Jerusalem. Without pursuing this matter into the region of futility, there is a tendency among many people to actually avoid some form of formal identity. This would involve some kind of positive action that made clear they wanted to be associated with a given body of believers. While it is not my purpose to set forth unwarranted requirements, it does seem to me that it is in order for some action to be taken by believers that clearly states their intention to be more than an occasional visitor. None of us should take for granted that our desires are understood without some clear form of expression.

THEY WERE ALL AFRAID OF HIM

“ . . . but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.”

The contention of the brethren was not that they refused to have Saul among them – at least that is not what the text says. It is rather that they were “afraid of him not believing that he was a disciple.” NASB They were not convinced that he was a follower of Jesus Christ.

This is a most arresting consideration! While it is true that Saul had been known for persecuting the church in Jerusalem three years earlier, there is more to this matter than this. There is an underlying suggestion that things went on in the assembly that were not designed for those who were not disciples – things that set the people apart from all non-disciples, making them a peculiar people. In Saul’s case, this variance was perceived as something that could provoke him to aggression against the disciples.

There is no suggestion in the text that the disciples tailored their gatherings to convince Saul, or that some special initiative was launched to ensure that he would become a disciple. I will not carry this reasoning any further. However, it ought to be abundantly apparent that there was vast difference between those early disciples and those who profess to be disciples today.

Those early disciples were not naive or simplistic in their reasoning. They were not right about Saul at first, but they would yield to sound reasoning when it is presented to them, thus confirming their fundamental sincerity.

BARNABAS PERCEIVES AND TAKES UP SAUL’S CASE

“ 27 But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how He had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus. 28 And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem.”

Now, for the first time since Acts 4:36, Barnabas surfaces again. Until this time, all we know about him is the following.

- He was a man named Joses (Joseph) – Acts 4:36a
- He was called “Barnabas” by the apostles, which means “The son of consolation,” or “the son of encouragement” (Acts 4:36b).

It ought to be noted that one of the required traits of a true spiritual leader is that of spiritual discernment. A person cannot lead the flock of God if he is not able to distinguish between sheep and wolves, and truth and error.

He was from the country of Cyprus (Acts 4:36c).

- When the distribution of goods was being made, he sold a piece of property, and laid the funds at the feet of the apostles (Acts 4:37).

From this we learn that he was a Jew, for so his name indicates. He was from Cyprus, an island in the Mediterranean Sea. He was obviously active among the believers in the ministry of encouragement and comfort. This means that he was noted for his love of the brethren, which confirms that he had passed from death unto life. He was also an unselfish man, devoted to the work of the Lord. Those are certainly comely qualities that will surely erupt in other notable deeds, one of which will now be chronicled.

BUT BARNABAS TOOK HIM

“But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.”

It is clear from this text that Saul had testified of his experience when he “tried to join the disciples” in Jerusalem (v 26). Barnabas was evidently there, and believed what Saul had testified. Not only, therefore, was Barnabas a comforter, or encourager, he was also a discerning man, being able to decipher the truth when he heard it.

Barnabas Took Him

We learn from Acts 13:1 that Barnabas was also a prophet. Paul once said that a prophet was capable of discerning when the truth had been spoken by someone else. As it is written, “If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord” (1 Cor 14:37). Falling into that category, Barnabas at once takes up the case of Saul, pressing for his acceptance by the brethren. He there aligns himself with Saul, taking him unto himself.

Brought Him to the Apostles

Barnabas knows that the leaders and principle men of the church are the apostles. Their word will be the final word to the rest of the brethren. He therefore brings Saul to the apostles to present his case, subjecting it to their discernment. He knows they will be able to recognize the truth, just as they did with the penitential people at Pentecost, Ananias and Sapphira, the seven deacons of the sixth chapter, Simon the Sorcerer, and others.

It ought to be noted that one of the required traits of a true spiritual leader is that of spiritual discernment. A person cannot lead the flock of God if he is not able to distinguish between sheep and wolves, and truth and error.

He Declared Unto Them

Here we are exposed to the nature of Saul’s testimony, which is doubtless the outward source of the information Barnabas relates. It is important to note the kind of things he cites as qualifying Saul for acceptance.

- Saul had seen Jesus in the way, or on the road to Damascus.
- Jesus Himself had spoken to Saul.
- Saul had preached boldly in the name of Jesus at Damascus.

There are at least two notable things to consider here. First, nothing is directly said about Saul's character, or that he had changed, so that he no longer persecuted the church. Those things will become evident, however, in what is said. Second, the primary evidence that confirmed Saul's acceptance was that Jesus appeared to him and spoke to him. It was the response of Saul to that appearance and instruction that once and for all confirmed his acceptance: he preached in Jesus' name in the very city and synagogue where he had originally planned to arrest and incarcerate believers. Later, Paul himself would summarize his response in his testimony to Agrippa: "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision" (Acts 26:19).

It is still true that those who labor in the vineyard of the Lord are to be noted for these two principle things.

- They must have seen and heard something, being cognizant of the truth itself.
- They must be obedient to the truth to which they have been exposed.

Where these qualities are not found, men must not be permitted to do service in the body of Christ. These virtues equate to the requirements for the first deacons: "men of good reputation, full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom" NKJV (Acts 6:3).

AND HE WAS WITH THEM

"28 And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem." Other versions read, "he was with them moving about freely in Jerusalem," NASB "Saul stayed with them and moved about freely," NIV "So he remained with them and went all over Jerusalem," CJB "he was conversant with them," GENEVA "So he was staying with them, associating openly with them," NET "he had his conversation with them at Jerusalem," TNT "Then they accepted him, and after that he was constantly with the believers," LIVING "Henceforth Saul was one of them, going in and out of the city," WEYMOUTH "So he went in and out [as one] among them," AMPLIFIED and "Saul joined with them in all their activities in Jerusalem." PHILLIPS

From this we learn of effectiveness of Barnabas' efforts.

- The apostles at once recognized the situation and received Saul into their fellowship – "then they accepted him." LIVING
- The brethren also concurred, receiving Saul into their fellowship – "he was constantly with the believers." LIVING
- Saul became obviously one with the apostles and the brethren – "Henceforth Saul was one of them." WEYMOUTH
- Saul stayed with the apostles and the brethren, moving everywhere with them – "he was with them coming in and going out."
- Saul's manner of life was identified by his identity with the saints – "he had his conversation with them." TNT
- Saul participated in the activities of the brethren – he "joined with them in all their activities." PHILLIPS

• None of them doubted Saul's acceptance in Christ, or opposed him in any way –
“moving about freely.” NASB

There we have an example of what it means to be “added to the church” (Acts 2:47), of believers being “the more added to the Lord” (Acts 5:14), and of the Lord setting the members in the body “as it hath pleased Him” (1 Cor 12:18). In our time, being a “member” of the church is generally not perceived as being involved with the members, or continuing together. That, however, is the kind of association that is consistently represented in the book of Acts, and we do well to duly note it.

SAUL SPEAKS BOLDLY AND DISPUTES AGAINST THE GRECIANS

“ 29 And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they went about to slay him. 30 Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Caesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus.”

Just as Saul had done in Damascus, he now declares Christ in Jerusalem among the Jews. Although the text does not say so, it is assumed that he was preaching in the synagogues, a place where he would be found preaching in virtually every city he entered.

HE SPAKE BOLDLY IN THE NAME OF THE LORD JESUS

“And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus . . .” Other versions read, “speaking in the name of the Lord without fear,” BBE “speaking confidently in name of the Lord,” DOUAY “with the power and authority of the Lords,” GWN “he spoke openly,” MRD “preaching fearlessly,” NJB “continued to speak courageously,” WILLIAMS and “Preaching freely and confidently and boldly.”
AMPLIFIED

Saul's preaching was not mere blustering, and it was not the relating of his personal experience. He spoke confidently, freely, and with an obvious assurance, for such is the meaning of “boldly.” One might be inclined to think this lends itself to the thought that Saul spoke more about what had happened to him, and what a change had been made in him. While I do not doubt that he made mention of these things, the text clearly confirms that this was not his focus. He spoke confidently and publically “in the name of the Lord Jesus.” He did not speak in the name of the church, or in his own name, or in the name of some other man. He rather spoke in the name of the One who had appeared to Him, called him into the apostleship, and taught him.

I have not found the few explanations that have been offered for speaking “in the name of the Lord Jesus,” to be in way satisfying. The view that says this means speaking by the authority of Jesus appears to me to come far short of the intended meaning, and seems to me to be nothing more than a lifeless and mechanical explanation.

Preaching in the name of Jesus speaks of the circumference of preaching – the intellectual and spiritual border within which preaching is done, and beyond which one refuses to go.

If it is true that the “light of the knowledge of the glory of God” is seen “in the face of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 4:6), how is it remotely possible for valid preaching to focus on something else? If it is true that God Himself can be understood only by seeing Jesus Christ, how can it be possible for man and his obligation to be perceived by looking at someone or something else?

The truth of the matter is that the heart of Saul's preaching was Jesus Christ Himself. He did not set out to reform the Jewish nation, but to proclaim the Lord's Christ. By speaking “in the name of the Lord Jesus,” he presented a circumstance in which Jesus Christ overshadowed everything and everyone else. If Jesus is the key Man – “THE man Christ Jesus” (1 Tim 2:5), how is it possible for anyone else to be correctly perceived by men as more important than Jesus, or more to be emphasized than Jesus?

I will say plainly that too much preaching leaves people thinking too little about the Lord Jesus. Such preaching is not “in the name of the Lord Jesus,” for it does not leave men thinking about Jesus, pursuing Him, or engaging in a fervent and unrelenting quest to “know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death” (Phil 3:10). Neither is such preaching by Jesus’ authority.

When Saul preached in Damascus he proved that Jesus was “very Christ.” I do not doubt that this is also a fair summation of what he preached in Jerusalem, perhaps elaborating on the implications of Him being “very Christ.”

AND DISPUTED AGAINST THE GRECIANS

“ . . . and disputed against the Grecians . . .” Other versions read, “disputed against the Hellenists,” NKJV “talking and arguing with the hellenistic Jews,” NASB “talked and debated with the Grecian Jews,” NIV “spoke and argued with the Hellenists,” NRSV and “talked and debated with the Greek-speaking Jews.” CJB

The “Grecians” were not Gentiles, but were Greek-speaking Jews – probably from other countries. The word translated “Grecians” is ~Ellhnista,j (hel-lay-nis-tace). The word “hellenist” is a transliteration – letter-for-letter translation instead of a meaning. By definition, the word means “to copy the manners . . . of the Greeks or to use the Greek language; one who uses the Greek tongue, employed in the N.T. of Jews born in foreign lands and speaking Greek (Grecian Jews),” THAYER “a Greek-speaking Jew in contrast to one speaking a Semitic language a Greek-speaking Jew in contrast to one speaking a Semitic language,” FRIBERG It is used three times in the book of Acts (6:1; 9:29; 11:20)a, always referring to Jews from outside the perimeter of the land of Israel, who spoke the Greek language. The practice of speaking the Greek language universally was established by Alexander the Great when he ruled the world.

It is generally understood that this was also an appropriate description for the Jews who opposed Stephen. These were referred to as “libertines,” who were Jewish slaves who had been freed. It is quite possible that their Grecian culture had robbed them of much of their Jewish heritage, making it more difficult to take hold of the truth.

These Grecian Jews could not receive the truth about Jesus Christ, and thus disputation rose when Saul preached “in the name of Jesus.” Later, Paul would “dispute” in the synagogue of the Jews in Athens, arguing the case for Jesus. In this activity, both in Jerusalem and Athens, he was throwing down opposing arguments – “casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God” (2 Cor 10:5). This is the same thing Stephen did so powerfully, so that his opponents “were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit with which he spoke” (Acts 6:10).

THEY WENT ABOUT TO SLAY HIM

“ . . . but they went about to slay him.” Just as with Stephen, the opponents of Saul, not being able to confute him, determined to kill him. This does not highlight how bad they were, but rather displays the hostility between the thinking of unregenerate men and the truth of Christ. The carnal mind is “enmity against God” (Rom 8:7), and the preaching of the cross is “foolishness” to such a mind (1 Cor 1:18). Because preaching that is focused upon Christ necessarily exposes men to more of God Himself, this hostility is magnified.

Saul made no effort to neutralize this hostility by weakening his message. Instead, he disputed with the Grecians, arguing against their foolish thinking. He did not seek to develop a relationship with them, or tone down his words to make them more palatable. This brought out their hostility all the more, so that killing Saul became their quest.

This is the same response he received from the Jews in Damascus, where he had to escape their aggression, being let down over the wall in a basket.

This incident exposes the fallacy of trying to make friends with the ungodly before delivering the Gospel to them – although I am being extremely charitable in suggesting that what such people deliver is even the Gospel.

Holy men in the past used no compromising technique, seeking to endear the people to themselves before delivering their message. Moses did not (Deut 9:6). The prophets certainly made no such effort (2 Chron 24:19). Nor, indeed, did John the Baptist (Matt 3:7), or the Lord Jesus Himself (Matt 12:41-42). Whence, then, is the origin of this dreadful practice that is being hawked in our time? Rest assured, it has not come from God or any godly person. Ultimately, this practice has its origin with Satan, who demonstrated it in his approach to Eve.

It is not the aim of any godly person to intentionally offend people, or to start arguments about tangential issues. It is written that “the servant of God must not strive, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those who oppose themselves” (2 Tim 2:24). This, however, has more to do with manners than with the message itself. When there are ideas expressed that are opposed to the truth of Jesus Christ, they are to be cast down, not tolerated. When men assert their thoughts against the Lord, it is no time for the man of God to practice tolerance. When the Lord sends a man to preach the Gospel (Rom 10:15), he had better deliver the record God has given of His Son. If that record agitates the people, the issue is to be pressed until they either yield or their carnality erupts. Search the Scriptures and see that this has been the consistent response of men of God to aggressive reasoning against the Lord.

One of the chief difficulties of our time is that many professed preachers and teachers are not able to “defend” the Gospel (Phil 1:17). Such men are not to be in the front lines of spiritual battle. This is why James wrote, “My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation” (James 3:1). The idea is that offenses are caused by the words of those who preach truth – not wrongful offenses, but those which are caused because the truth grates against the thinking of worldly minded people. Those who cannot endure and address such conflicts needs to find another occupation.

WHEN THE BRETHERN KNEW

“ 30 Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Caesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus.”

Just as the brethren in Damascus, the believers in Jerusalem were selfless and alert. They were aware of the plot against Saul, not being wrapped up in their own personal lives. Therefore, they took appropriate measures to deliver Saul from the hand of his enemies. Apparently, they did not take into account any personal jeopardy that might be involved.

The trip from Jerusalem to Caesarea (as distinguished from Caesarea Philippi) was about fifty miles. It was a sea port, which apparently provided for Saul to sail to Tarsus, which was about four hundred miles North. In the region of Cilicia. It is apparent that these brethren were not seeking a convenient, quick and easy way, to deliver Saul. They entertained a genuine concern for him, and therefore took whatever measures were necessary to see to it that he was safe.

Here is the love of the brethren being lived out, lifted from the realm of mere philosophy and religious talk. This is the real thing.

A PERIOD OF REST FOR THE CHURCHES

“ 31 Then had the churches rest throughout all Judaea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.”

It is important to note that thus far, throughout the book of Acts, the attention has been upon the church – the believers, or disciples. Other people were involved, but the focus was not upon them. People who became significant did so when they were added to the church, or were numbered with the believers. If we were to confine ourselves to Scripture, we know very little of the social conditions of that time in the land of promise – Judea (South), Galilee (North), and Samaria (middle section). The recollection of the working of the Lord rarely includes any extensive details of anything unrelated to that work. I say this because of the remarkable diversion to “other things” (Mk 4:19) that have penetrated the Christian society of our day. As is always the case, whatever is allowed to compete with the truth always upstages it. It is good to take special note of the manner in which Luke, being moved along by the Holy Spirit, is relating the events of that time. He consistently writes in such a manner as to move Jesus Christ into the forefront, representing the church as the environment in which He is working out His purpose.

Edification is the process through which this building process is accomplished. God does not come to dwell among His people because they praise Him, but because they are built up in Christ! I realize that such a statement is tantamount to heresy among some people.

THEN HAD THE CHURCHES REST

“Then had the churches rest throughout all Judaea and Galilee and Samaria . . .” Other versions read that the churches “had peace,” NKJV “enjoyed peace,” NASB “enjoyed a time of peace,” NIV and “experienced peace.” NET

There was a different climate in those early days – before factions and divisions flooded the landscape. What do you suppose people would think you meant if you spoke of “the churches” in Missouri, Oklahoma, and Kansas having “rest?” It seems to me that all manner of confusion would break out as people would ask, “What churches?” “Which ones?” However, there is no question here concerning the identity of the people. These were those who had been “added to the church” by the Lord Himself (Acts 2:47). These were groups of disciples, who had left all to follow Jesus. This is speaking of those who were of one heart and soul, and were of the same mind.

Prior to this, the chief priests and Jewish leaders had come against the apostles (4:1-3; 5:40). The church had been disrupted by the dishonesty of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:10-10). The Jewish council had stoned Stephen (Acts 7:58-60). The church in Jerusalem had been persecuted, and the believers scattered (Acts 8:1-3; 9:21). There was even an initiative against the brethren in Damascus (Acts 9:2). All of this had stretched over a period of seven to ten years (30-33 A.D. until 40 A.D.).

Now, however, the powers of darkness are stopped by the King, and the church is given a time of “rest” – peace, quietness, and expansion without continual resistance. The word “rest” comes from a word with the following lexical meaning: “exemption from the rage and havoc of war . . . free from persecution,” THAYER “a state of peace,” FRIBERG “favorable circumstances involving peace and tranquility,” LOUW-NIDA and “peace, harmony, tranquility.” GINGRICH

Do not suppose for a moment that Satan gave up, or was chased away by the believers. This was a peace that came down from above – it was an imposed peace, if you please, were the powers of darkness were not permitted to agitate the enemies of the Lord against His people. While these powers were permitted to rage against the saints, there was a certain sifting that took place. As it is written, “For there must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you” (1 Cor 11:19). It is only those who have “no root in themselves” who are “offended” by persecution and consequently “fall away” (Mk 4:17; Lk 8:134). These having been removed from the church, they now enjoyed a period of rest – a time without persecution, undue disputation, liars within, and intruders like Simon the Sorcerer.

AND WERE EDIFIED

“ . . . and were edified . . .” Other versions read, “being built up,” NASB “strengthened,” NIV “was built up,” NRSV and “was made strong.” BBE

This is the grand objective for the body of Christ – “the edifying of itself in love” (Eph 4:16). The idea of edification parallels the idea of strengthening an edifice, fortifying it so it can endure all manner of testing, and is adequate to house its intended contents. In the case of the church, it is intended grow “into a holy temple in the Lord” (Eph 2:21). That is, it is spiritually fortified in order that the Lord Himself might dwell in it. The Amplified Bible reads, “continues to rise (grow, increase) into a holy temple in the Lord [a sanctuary dedicated, consecrated, and sacred to the presence of the Lord].”

Perhaps you have noted that it is now a sign of professed worship to invite the Lord to come into the assembly. Men also speak of standing on holy ground, as though they had come into a place external to themselves where God met with them. I realized there are some elements of truth in such expressions, and that men often are not aware of what they are saying. However, it is important to know that God’s intention is not to visit the churches, but to dwell among them. That is the reason for the church in the first. Its purpose is to be “an habitation of God through the Spirit,” or “a dwelling place of God in the Spirit” NKJV (Eph 2:22).

Edification is the process through which this building process is accomplished. God does not come to dwell among His people because they praise Him, but because they are built up in Christ! I realize that such a statement is tantamount to heresy among some people. However, it is the view that allows for God to dwell among a weak and uninformed people that is the heresy – and it is a serious one. God has spoken clearly to this subject, for there is no need for any confusion concerning it. “Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God” (2 Cor 6:17-7:1). This condition will be realized when, and only when, the people are “edified.”

Some circumstances that are implied by edification are as follows.

- Moral strength, so that the devil can be resisted (James 4:7; Rev 12:11).
- Wisdom and spiritual understanding, so that the things of God are comprehended (Col 1:9; Eph 5:17).
- A growing sense of being a stranger and a pilgrim in this world, that causes one to “groan” under the weight of the bondage of corruption (1 Pet 2:11; Rom 8:23; 2 Cor 5:2).
- A corresponding longing for the coming of the Lord, and the donning of our house which is from heaven (2 or 2:5; Rom 8:23; Phil 3:20-21; Eph 1:14; 4:30).
- A knowledge and comprehension of the Scripture (2 Tim 3:16-17; 2 Pet 1:19).
- Spiritual mastery in the matter of setting our affection on things above, and not on things on the earth (Col 3:1-2).

The absence of these, and similar, spiritual qualities, confirms the corresponding absence of edification. Where believers are not going up into Christ (Eph 4:15), they have not been edified. This can only be explained by the absence of proper teaching and/or impure hearts and carnal minds.

AND WALKING IN THE FEAR OF THE LORD

“ . . . and walking in the fear of the Lord, . . .” Other versions read, “going on in the fear of the Lord,” NASB “living in the fear of the Lord,” NIV and “walking in the respect and reverential fear of the Lord.” AMPLIFIED

Religious men have done their best to neutralize the impact of the word “fear” by using terms like respect, reverence, and awe. However, those words have more of a philosophical bent than one that pertains to God Almighty.

“Walking” has to do with the consistent manner of life, and includes focus as well as a hearty devotion. “The fear of the Lord” is by no means a casual expression. Religious men have done their best to neutralize the impact of the word “fear” by using terms like respect, reverence, and awe. However, those words have more of a philosophical bent than one that pertains to God Almighty. As used here, the words “the fear” come from the Greek word tw/l fo,bw l . The Greek word phobos, is the one from which we derive the word phobia, substantiating the strength of the word. The root meaning of this word is “terror,” and the elaboration of that meaning is as follows: “fear, dread, terror,” THAYER and “a state of severe distress, aroused by intense concern for impending pain, danger, etc,” LOUW-NIDA

The words “respect” and “reverence” are appropriate only to the degree that they reflect the idea of terror and dread. The difference here is that the fear, dead, or terror, does not cause one to run from the Lord, but to the Lord. However, and make no mistake about it, the terror that moves one to “flee” to the Lord for refuge is very real, and is not to be mitigated by the employment of watered down words that have no significant meaning to the hearers. Ponder these clarifying expressions:

- “And so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake” (Heb 12:21).
- “My flesh trembleth for fear of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments” (Psa 119:120).
- “Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts” (Isa 6:5).
- “And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last” (Rev 1:17).
- “Therefore I was left alone, and saw this great vision, and there remained no strength in me: for my comeliness was turned in me into corruption, and I retained no strength” (Dan 10:8).
- “Knowing therefore the terror [fo,bon , phobos, fear] “of the Lord, we persuade men; but we are made manifest unto God; and I trust also are made manifest in your consciences” (2 Cor 5:11).
- “Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling , in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ” (Eph 6:5).
- “Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling ” (Phil 2:12).
- “It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God” (Heb 10:31).
- “For all those things hath mine hand made, and all those things have been, saith the LORD: but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word ” (Isa 66:2).

No person of Scriptural reference has ever been knowledgeable in the presence of God or the glorified Christ and maintained an attitude of casualness. There is such an abrasiveness between the Divine nature and flesh that fear grips the heart of those in the body who know they are dealing with the God of heaven. This is the kind of fear that, mingled with faith, moves them to “mortify the deeds of the body” (Col 3:5), perfect holiness “in the fear of the Lord” (2 Cor 7:1-2), and “love not the world, neither the things that are in the world” (1 John 2:15). Where these things are not being done, God is not feared; and, where God is not feared, He is not known!

No congregation will be blessed by the Lord that does not fear Him. Jesus said to His disciples, “But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him, which after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him” (Luke 12:5). Peter said, “Fear God!” (1 Pet 2:17). A mighty angel from heaven shouted to the inhabitants of the earth, “Fear God and give glory to Him!” (Rev 14:7). I see nothing in those expressions that suggests a kind of casual reverence that does not promote an aggressive stance against darkness and an earnest effort to walk in the light as He is in the light (1 John 1:7).

AND WALKING IN THE COMFORT OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

“ . . . and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost . . . ” Other versions read, “encouraged by the Holy Spirit,” NIV “counsel of the Holy Spirit,” CJB “encouragement of the Holy Spirit,” CSB “consolation of the Holy Ghost,” DOUAY “the help of the Holy Spirit,” IE and “the consolation and exhortation of the Holy Spirit.” AMPLIFIED

The word “comfort” has more to do with rationality than feeling – with perception than emotion. It is given to men in words and thoughts rather than impulses. It has to do with an increased level of Kingdom intelligence, where eternal verity is more clearly perceived than the fleeting things of this present evil world. Much, if not all, of this is directly related to the Word of God, which is the expression of the mind of the Lord. Here, in our thinking, is where we have fellowship with Christ (1 Cor 1:9), the communion of the Holy Spirit (2 Cor 13:14), and access unto the Father (Eph 2:18). As pleasant as feelings may be, they are not even in the same category as sanctified thought. It is said of the wicked that “God is not in all his thoughts” (Psa 10:4).

In our text, the fact that the churches were walking “in the comfort of the Holy Spirit” means that God was in all of their thoughts. They were comforted, consoled, encouraged, and helped by what they comprehended. All of this took place through the faculty of their faith, and because they were edified and walking in the fear of the Lord. In this day of salvation, that posture of life will still yield the same results.

WERE MULTIPLIED

“ . . . were multiplied.” Other versions read, “continued to increase,” NASB “grew in numbers,” NIV “was increased greatly,” BBE “their numbers kept multiplying,” CJB “continued to grow,” NJB and “the group of believers grew larger and larger.” IE

Here we are being exposed to a living church, not a strategizing one. It was its life, not its program, that caused this increase. It involved the power of the Spirit, not the wisdom of men. This was preceded by rest, edification, the fear of the Lord, and the comforting ministry of the Holy Spirit.

Throughout the book of Acts we have confronted this kind of growth – growth that was totally lacking of human wisdom and fleshly stratagem. “There were added to them . . . the Lord added to the church daily . . . believers were the more added . . . the number of disciples was multiplied . . . the word of God increased, and the number of disciples multiplied” (Acts 2:41,47; 5:14; 6:1,7).

As Isaiah prophesied, this is the nature of the Kingdom over which Jesus presides – to “increase” (Isa 9:6-7). Daniel also confirmed this Kingdom characteristic (Dan 2:35,44).

In my judgment, where this is not happening, there is some form of sifting taking place – sifting that is designed to remove “the old leaven” (1 Cor 5:7-8). That sifting can come through persecution and various forms of opposition from the world. It can also come through a deluge of erroneous teaching that attracts those with impure hearts. However, when the church has rest, and when it is being edified, the Holy Spirit will minister consolation, comfort, and encouragement, and the body of Christ will increase. Just as in nature, proper growth and advancement must be preceded by sound health. In the Spirit, the body of Christ must be spiritually healthy if it expects to make appropriate advancement in Christ Jesus. A sick church is a static one.

CONCLUSION

We have thus been introduced to the conversion of Saul of Tarsus – an epoch in the history of the church, His conversion had nothing whatsoever to do with the strategies of men. It was wholly initiated by the Lord Jesus Himself, and carried forward with the help and encouragement of those with pure hearts and a grasp of the truth. Jesus is still governing His Kingdom, and doing so with a strict regard for His body, which is the church. When His people are edified, walking in the fear of the Lord, and being comforted by the Holy Spirit, He is faithful to give the increase.

Lesson #44

PETER SPREADS THE WORD IN JOPPA

“ 9:32 And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters, he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda. 33 And there he found a certain man named Aeneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and wassick of the palsy. 34 And Peter said unto him, Aeneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately. 35 And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord. 36 Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did. 37 And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died: whom when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber. 38 And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not delay to come to them. 39 Then Peter arose and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them. 40 But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning him to the body said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up. 41 And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up, and when he had called the saints and widows, presented her alive. 42 And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord. 43 And it came to pass, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner. ” (Acts 9:32-43)

INTRODUCTION

Having dealt with the conversion of Saul, the narrative now turns to Peter, the leading apostle of “the twelve.” This is the one Saul went to see when he journeyed to Jerusalem, remaining with him for fifteen days (Gal :18). Peter was frequently the spokesman for “the twelve” (Matt 16:16; 17:4,24;. 18:21; 19:27; Acts 1:15; 2:14,37-38; 3:4; 4:8; 5:3,8-9). This confirms some of the involvements of the keys to the Kingdom of God being given to Peter (Matt 16:19). It was for this reason that Paul said of him, “the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter ” (Gal 2:7). Suffice it to say, all who are in Christ Jesus are not equal when it comes to ministry. While there are no natural distinctions between them – like male and female, bond and free, or Jew and Greek (Gal 3:28) – there are distinction among them when it comes to ministries, or functions within the body (1 Cor 12:1-18). Even among the apostles there were some distinctions, as evidenced in Peter’s preeminence, and prominence in the Acts of the apostles. In this regard, it ought to be noted that this distinction was not given to lord it over the people of God – something for which there is no provision in Christ Jesus (Matt 20:25-27).

These principles, while not repeatedly declared doctrinally, are lived out in the book of Acts. Divine appointments, which are the means through which the will of the Lord is executed, are clarified in this book. No person is exalted by the institution, or attains to prominence through natural or cultured aptitude. While this admittedly conflicts sharply with the structure of the modern church, there is no question in this book about how and why men and women are brought into the effective and God-glorifying service of the King.

PETER GOES INTO LYDDA

There is a kind of liberty revealed in the book of Acts. While there is much specific direction that takes place, like Philip and the Ethiopian Eunuch, and Ananias and Saul of Tarsus, there are also activities that were birthed by the walk of faith – like Philip going into Samaria, the apostles sending Peter and John to Samaria, and Stephen preaching in the synagogue of the Libertines. There was also the judgment against Ananias and Sapphira, and the word delivered against Simon the Sorcerer. These do not appear to have been the response of to a direct word from the Lord. They rather reflect something of the impact of having the mind of Christ (1 Cor 2:16), walking in the Spirit (Gal 5:25), and walking in the light as He is in the light (1 John 1:7). There is a certain awareness that accompanies living in fellowship with Christ (1 Cor 1:9) that intuitively directs a person in the work of the Lord. I understand that this does require spiritual maturity and a strong faith, and that it is not to be taken for granted. However, it is possible to be directed by a pure heart, because such a condition brings one into accord with the Lord. This is surely a secondary way of being directed, but it is a valid one, and appears to surface quite frequently in the book of Acts,

Should the individual, in all good conscience, and with a mind to serve and glorify God, conceive of a purpose prematurely, or in an untimely manner, the Lord, working through their sensitivity, will in some way inform of the impropriety of their action.

Should the individual, in all good conscience, and with a mind to serve and glorify God, conceive of a purpose prematurely, or in an untimely manner, the Lord, working through their sensitivity, will in some way inform of the impropriety of their action. This is precisely the circumstance that is unveiled in the sixteenth chapter of this book. “Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia, after they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not. And they passing by Mysia came down to Troas. And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us. And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them” (Acts 16:6-10).

From this we deduce that those who labor for the Lord are not simply to sit about idle until they perceive specific Divine direction. Rather, they are, in faith, to set out to do what they see as proper in the sight of the Lord. As in the text above, their timing may not be right, but if they are living by faith and walking in the Spirit, their lives will be Divinely directed, for “the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord” (Psa 37:23). The Word of God did, after all, and in God’s own time, finally get into Asia and Bithynia (Acts 19:26; 20:18; 1 Pet 1:1).

Peter now goes to into the region of Lydda, to minister to the saints. His ministry did not exclude the saints, but rather caused them to rank very high in his labors. The neglect of the saints is always a sign of apostasy, which has been brought on by the dominating presence of the devil. There is no legitimate office or ministry in the body of Christ that allows for the disregard of those who are in Christ Jesus. When the flock of God is not fed, it confirms that a departure from the Lord has already taken place, for Lord’s “body, which is the church” (Eph 1:23), is His own priority. It is not possible for the Lord of glory to dwell in a person who has no heart for His own people.

Arriving in Lydda, Peter finds a man who had been paralyzed for eight years, and heals him in the name of Jesus, and it was made known to all in the area. As a result, all who dwelt in Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord. The hand of the Lord is working mightily through Peter, who, like Paul, is faithful to his calling.

We ought to know that Scripture – any Scripture – is more than history or an historical perspective. The word of God is “living and powerful,” because of its nature. Scripture contains “the mind of the Lord,” and therefore cannot possibly be irrelevant.

In a neighboring city named Joppa, a godly woman named Dorcas became sick and died. After preparing her body and placing her in a chamber, the disciples, hearing that Peter was in the region, sent two men to him, desiring that he come to them without delay. Upon arriving, and learning of the spiritual nobility of this woman, Peter put all people from the room, prayed to God, and raised her from the dead. When this became known to the people “many believed in the Lord.” Thus the knowledge of God continued to spread throughout the region. What Jesus had begun to do and teach was being carried out by those maintaining fellowship with Him.

WHAT WE ARE BEHOLDING

We ought to know that Scripture – any Scripture – is more than history or an historical perspective. The word of God is “living and powerful” NKJV (Heb 4:12), because of its nature. Scripture contains “the mind of the Lord,” and therefore cannot possibly be irrelevant. Because of this, it not only specifies the purpose of God and the limitless extent of His reign, but provides snapshots of that purpose being worked out among the sons of men. We know very little of God’s working independent His activity among men. We know of the expulsion of Satan from heaven, as well as the reasons for it (Isa 14:12-15; Ezek 28:12-19). Even in that matter, Satan’s ejection from heaven is also related to the ministry of Jesus and the salvation of men (Luke 10:18; Rev 12:9). However, if you were to be asked to note Divine activities that took place before the creation of the world, and that were independent of humanity, you would be hard pressed to find just one. Angels were present at the creation, and rejoiced at the display of God’s mighty power and extensive wisdom (Job 38:5-7). However, we do not have the faintest notion of their activities prior to creation.

In the book of Acts, we are beholding the following things. This is intended to be introductory, and is by no means as thorough as I would prefer. I am providing this only to enhance our perusal of the Acts, and not to give an exhaustive commentary on the subject.

- Jesus governing the Kingdom. Isaiah prophesied that the Messiah would be seated upon David’s throne and the government placed upon His shoulder (Isa 9:6-7). Peter referred to these prophecies on the day of Pentecost, saying they were fulfilled when Jesus was raised from the dead and “made both Lord and Christ” (Acts 2:29-36). The manner in which Jesus governs His kingdom, as well as the nature of its increase, is being chronicled in the book of Acts.

- Jesus building His church. From another perspective, we are being exposed to the way in which Jesus is building His church, as He said He would (Matt 16:18). The spiritual growth and solidity of the members of His body are confirmed by both their understanding and their ability to stand in the time of trial. Acts contains a record of this happening.

- How the godly are employed. In His Kingdom, Jesus employs those who are “prepared unto every good work” – those who have separated themselves from this present evil world (2 Tim 20-21; 2 Cor 6:15-7:1), and have an understanding of the things of the Spirit of God. The book of Acts provides us example after example of this principle.

- The impact of honest and good hearts. When the hearts of men are honest and good, they always respond favorably and consistently to the Lord and His Gospel. Such souls are aggressive to know what they ought to do, and are willing to do it, whatever it may require. The record of the conversion of the Jews on Pentecost, the city of Samaria, the Ethiopian eunuch, and Saul of Tarsus, are sterling examples of this.

- The immediacy of faith’s response. In Christ’s kingdom, the people are willing, because this is the day of His power (Psa 110:3). They do what they are told when they are told, and do not draw back from instant obedience. The responses of the people on the day of Pentecost, in Solomon’s porch, in the city of Samaria, and elsewhere confirm this also takes place on the group level. The Ethiopian eunuch, Saul of Tarsus, Ananias, Barnabas, and others verify that it also happens on the individual level.

- The hostility of the carnal mind. There is natural enmity against the Lord in those who do not believe. That is confirmed in the opposition of the high priest, the chief priests, the scribes, the pharisees, and the captain of the Temple. Before his conversion, this was also seen in Saul of Tarsus.

In order to profit from the book of Acts, a person must be able to detect these things to some measurable degree.

PETER COMES TO THE SAINTS IN LYDDA

“ 9:32 And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters, he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda.”

The focus now shifts from Saul of Tarsus back to Peter. Although he was not instrumental in either the conversion or the tutoring of Saul, he was about the Lord’s business, for he had been appointed to a lofty work. While holy men of Scripture doubtless had personal lives, they are never the point of Scripture. The family life, extracurricular activities, etc., of these men are never the subject of revelation. Those who are fond of referring to men of Scripture as fathers, husbands, family men, etc., are not representing them in a heavenly manner. They are in the area of speculation when they speak of them in these capacities. Even though that aspect of their lives was very real, yet that is not how the Lord intends for them to be remembered, for such recollections detract from His purpose, and therefore diminish the level of individual spiritual understanding. When men say Divinely approached men were bad fathers, inconsiderate family men, or deficient in other areas of domestic and social life, they are giving us their own opinions, which are absolutely worthless in matters pertaining to life and godliness. It simply is not possible to make a valid comment on an aspect of the personal lives of God’s saints concerning which He Himself has provided no commentary. That ought to be plain enough to require no further explanation.

At any rate, the Spirit will now provide some insight into the activities of Peter – activities relating to the purposes of God in Christ Jesus.

PETER PASSED THROUGHOUT ALL QUARTERS

“And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters . . .” Other versions read, “all parts of the country,” NKJV “here and there among all believers,” NRSV “here and there among them all,” RSV “from place to place,” CSB “he passed through all, visiting all,” DOUAY “here and there among them all,” ESV “going around to all of God’s people,” GWN “through all of the towns,” IE “going around among all the disciples,” ISV and “in the course of traveling about among them all.” PHILLIPS

In this passage there is a spiritual nugget that has been covered up with the traditions of men. A surface reading of the passage might lead one to believe that Peter was on, what men call, an evangelistic tour – preaching the Gospel to those who had not yet believed. While some of that no doubt occurred, this is not the word delivered by this text. The passage reads in such a way as to confirm that Peter was visiting the saints – those who had believed. In the process of that visitation, he will come to the saints in Lydda.

The expression “all quarters” is translated from a single Greek word (pa,ntwn). The geographical area covered in these travels was the promised land itself – Judea, Samaria, and Galilee – the places mentioned in verse forty-one: “Then had the churches rest throughout all Judaea and Galilee and Samaria” (Acts 9:31). These were the “quarters” through which Peter traveled, and “the churches” were the people he visited. The grammar, context, and text itself substantiate this view.

The activity of Peter is against the background of the “rest” that the churches were enjoying following the conversion of Saul (Acts 9:31). It is my understanding that Peter’s activity is an explanation of one of the means through which the churches were edified and comforted (9:31). This is the same procedure that Paul will use as his ministry develops further – visiting the churches (Acts 11:28; 14:22,27-28; 15:36, 41; 16:5). This is not to mention Paul’s informative epistles, which were all addressed to believers. Nor, indeed, is there need to mention all of the spiritual gifts, which expressly pertain to the church itself (Eph 4:8-16; 1 Cor 12:1-11; Rom 12:3-6).

At this point it is worthy to note how very little of this is common in our time. While “the churches” were the object of much apostolic activity, they are largely neglected by the Christian community. What informed believer is there who is not keenly aware of this? The state of the modern church is the very means through which false prophets and worldly religious trends are flourishing. If ever the church was to become spiritually knowledgeable and strong, countless numbers of religious professionals and businesses would at once become obsolete and useless.

HE CAME TO THE SAINTS IN LYDDA

“ . . . he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda.” Other versions read, “he also came down to the saints,” NKJV “he went to visit the saints,” NRSV “ descended also to the saints,” DARBY “he went down to the holy ones,” NAB “ eventually came to God's holy people,” NJB “ he came down to visit the believers,” NLT “and in his travels came to the believers,” LIVING “he finally went down to God's people,” WILLIAMS and “he went down also to the saints.” AMPLIFIED

There is no indication that anyone was traveling with Peter, or that he had been sent on a special mission, as when John and himself were sent to Samaria. Acts 8:14 is the last text that mentions Peter and John – or any other person – traveling together. This appears to me to confirm that there was a kind of independency present among believers that cannot exist in an organizational environment. This is seen in the works of Stephen and Philip as well.

It is clear from the grammar of the text that Peter was traveling about, going here and there to the believers in the areas of Judea, Samaria, and Galilee. They were the focus of his attention. The “saints which dwelt in Lydda” are an example of the kind of people to whom he was ministering.

This city bore the Hebrew name “Lod,” and is mentioned in 1 Chronicles 8:12, Ezra 2:33, Nehemiah 7:37, and Nehemiah 11:35. It was a town within the limits of the tribe of Ephraim, thirty-two miles from Jerusalem. It bore in Hebrew the name of LOD, and appears to have been first built by the Benjamites, although it lay beyond the limits of their territory (1 Chronicles 8:12); and we find it again inhabited by Benjamites after the exile (Ezra 2:33; Nehemiah 11:35).

The city of Lydda is also referred to as “Lod,” which is its Hebrew name. It was located within the area of Canaan that was given to the tribe of Ephraim, about thirty-two miles from Jerusalem .

Jesus had told His disciples to preach the Gospel “in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and in the uttermost part of the earth” (Acts 1:8). The book of acts provides a record of those sacred beginnings. It also confirms that the preaching involved the edification of the saints – strengthening and stabilizing them in the faith. Peter and John had done this in Samaria (Acts 8:25), and now Peter was doing it throughout the region, establishing the saints in the faith. There can be no question about the conformity of this practice to the will of the Lord. Both apostolic practice and doctrine confirm the priority of the edifying of the body of Christ. When this is not done, it has a erosive effect on all other labors in the name of the Lord.

ONE MORE THING

I cannot leave this section without once again drawing attention to the way in which those in Christ are mentioned in this book: “the saints,” or holy ones. The term is used four times in Acts (9:13,32,34; 26:10). This is a term that accents the character of the people – holy. It is used forty-three times in the epistles, confirming the very real change that takes place in those who are baptized into Christ Jesus.

In our day, it is exceedingly rare to hear anyone, anywhere refer favorably to the people of God – particularly in keeping with their character. The term “Christian” is quite common, although it has come to mean something very different from simply being “of Christ.” Nowadays, it is more common to refer to sectarian names or theological positions when attempting to distinguish the people of God. Thus men have fallen into the dreadful practice of “measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves” (2 Cor 10:12) – a practice that classifies people with the unwise.

A CERTAIN MAN NAMED AENEAS

“ 33 And there he found a certain man named Aeneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was sick of the palsy.”

HE FOUND A CERTAIN MAN

“And there he found a certain man named Aeneas . . .” Upon arriving in Lydda Peter “found a certain man named Aeneas.” He was not looking for him, but was alert to the circumstances about him, and therefore saw him – just as he did the lame man who was positioned at the Gate Beautiful (Acts 3:1-4). While I do not wish to labor this point, it seems to me that faith sharpens the capacities of men to be alert to their surroundings, and to the opportunities that confront them that can bring glory to God and help to the believers.

The fact that Peter went to the saints in Lydda suggests that Aeneas was in that number, as well as Dorcas, whom he will later confront in Joppa.

The name Aeneas was a Greek name, even though the man was with the Jews. He probably was one of Jews elsewhere referred to as “Grecians,” or Greek speaking Jews (6:1; 9:29; 11:20).

As both Greek and Hebrew, or Syriac, were commonly spoken in Palestine, most persons had two names, one Greek and the other Hebrew. Thus Peter was called Cephas in Hebrew, and Petros in Greek. Paul was called Saul in Hebrew, and Paulos in Greek. The person in Acts 9:36, Tabitha in Hebrew, and Dorcas in Greek. And the paralytic person cured by Peter, Hananiah in Hebrew, and Aineas in Greek. So Thomas was the Hebrew name of the apostle who in Greek was called Didymus.

KEPT HIS BED

“ . . . which had kept his bed eight years . . .” Other versions read, “had been

The idea is that he had kept to his bed, lying prostrate upon it as though wedded to it, or one with it. He could not leave his bed, but kept on it, or remained upon it, all of the time. From the standpoint of the flesh, his case was hopeless, and had continued to be so for eight consecutive years.

bedridden eight years,” NKJV “who for eight years had been in bed,” BBE “who had been lying for eight years upon a couch,” DARBY “which had kept his couch eight years,” GENEVA “confined to a cot for eight years,” GWN “had not been able to leave his bed for the past eight years,” IE and “who had been bedfast for eight years.” AMPLIFIED

The word “kept” is translated from a word that means “to have lain down, to lie prostrate.” THAYER The idea is that he had kept to his bed, lying prostrate upon it as though wedded to it, or one with it. He could not leave his bed, but kept on it, or remained upon it, all of the time. From the standpoint of the flesh, his case was hopeless, and had continued to be so for eight consecutive years. However, the day Peter arrived, the life of Aeneas would take a sudden change for the better.

The word translated “bed” means “a pallet, camp bed (a rather simple bed holding only one person,” THAYER “cot, stretcher,” UBS “a relatively small and often temporary type of object on which a person may lie or recline,” LOUW-NIDA and “a mattress, a poor man’s bed.” GINGRICH A “camp bed” is a portable one on which the man was carried from place to place, probably to beg alms. The word “kept” is translated from a word that means “to have lain down, to lie prostrate.” THAYER

We conclude, therefore, that Aeneas was a poor man, yet was industrious, not remaining cut off from society, and dependent upon the charitable consideration of fellow Jews – like Lazarus who was placed daily at the gate of a rich man (Lk 16:20), or the lame man who was who was carried, and daily placed at the Temple gate (Acts 3:2). On this day, however, as it was for the man at the gate called “Beautiful,” his entire life would change.

SICK OF THE PALSY

“ . . . and was sick of the palsy.” Other versions read, “paralyzed,” NKJV “paralytic,” NIV and “without power of moving.” BBE

The word translated “palsy” comes from a word meaning “to loose or part things side by side,” THAYER “to detach, or undo.” LIDDELL-SCOTT This is a most precise description of a physiological circumstance in which the nerves have no practical connection with the muscles. The individual suffering from the condition is thus paralyzed, and incapable of moving. By its very nature, the condition is one of continued deterioration, with no natural hope of recovery. Eight long years the man had been confined to his bed, confirming that his condition was not a temporary one. Men could not resolve his dilemma!

In Scripture, the employment of Divine power is never considered to be a mere alternative to be preferred over other means that are available. It is rather seen as accomplishing things that could not otherwise be done. Owing to the dominance of unbelief in our day, this kind of thinking has become rather rare.

CHRIST MAKETH THEE WHOLE

“ 34 And Peter said unto him, Aeneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole: arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately.”

The details of how Peter came into contact with Aeneas are not provided. Either he was alert as he moved about, seeing the man and perceiving this to be an open door placed before him, or someone had informed him of this afflicted soul. In either case, the nature of Kingdom life is being made known. In the case of the former possibility, spiritual vigilance was involved. If the latter condition was true, the people lived making an association of human need with Divine power. In either case, life was being lived unto the Lord.

JESUS CHRIST TAKETH THEE WHOLE

“And Peter said unto him, Aeneas, Jesus Christ maketh thee whole . . .” Other versions read, “Jesus Christ heals you,” NKJV “Jesus Christ makes you well,” BBE “Yeshua the Messiah is healing you!” CJB “Jesus Christ cures you,” NJB “Jesus Christ has healed you!!” LIVING “Jesus Christ is healing you,” ISV “Jesus Christ now cures you !” WILLIAMS “Jesus Christ (the Messiah) [now] makes you whole,” AMPLIFIED and “Jesus Christ make thee whole.” BISHOPS

As you can see, the various translations present differing views. Some present the healing as taking place at that time (“is healing”). Others present it as something that is going to occur (“make thee whole”). Still others represent it as already having taken place (“has healed”). The tense of the word used here is Aoristic present middle indicative. Aoristic means the action is indefinite as to its point in time. Present middle indicative means here and now. The meaning, therefore, is that while Peter was speaking, Jesus Christ was in the process of healing Aeneas. Peter discerned it, and therefore proclaimed it.

Here again the manner of the Kingdom is seen. Strictly speaking, Peter did not make this happen, nor did Jesus heal Aeneas independently of Peter. This is a case of Peter being a laborer, or worker, together with God (1 Cor 3:9; 2 Cor 6:1). To put it another way, the Lord was “working with” Peter, confirming the word that he was speaking (Mk 16:20). As elsewhere declared, the Lord was bearing witness with Peter, “both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to His own will?" (Heb 2:4).

At no point does Jesus relinquish the government of His kingdom to men. It is always "the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet 1:11). However, there is such a thing as "reigning with Christ," being made "kings and priests unto God" through Him (Rev 1:5-6). While the participation of men is limited, being bounded by the will of God, yet it is very real, as confirmed in our text. That participation is defined by two principle things: the faith of the individual and the will of the Lord.

All of the spiritual gifts are strictly governed, being given and administered by the Holy Spirit, who is Christ's Vicar. This is expressly taught in the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians where the entire Godhead is declared to be involved in the gifts of reference. "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord . And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all" (1 Cor 12:4-6). If this is not perceived, men will develop views of spiritual gifts that are damaging to the soul.

When Jesus went about doing good and healing all who were oppressed by the devil, He declared that He only did what He saw the Father going. "Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do : for what things soever He doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise " (John 5:19). It goes without saying that no man is given leave from heaven to function in a manner differing from that exhibited by the Son.

ARISE AND MAKE THE BED

" . . . arise, and make thy bed." Other versions read, "take care of your mat," NIV "make your own bed," CSB "truss thy couch together," GENEVA "pick up your cot," GWN "spread thy bed," MRD "tidy up your mat," NIB "roll up your sleeping mat," NLT and "spread thy bed for thyself." ROBERTSON'S WORD PICTURES

Just as in the ministry of Jesus, those in whom Jesus works are to respond. It is in the process of that response that the work is done. Think of these powerful words:

- To a paralyzed man: "Arise and walk" (Matt 9:5).

The man was not to leave his cot lying on the ground, but to pick it up in an orderly manner, rolling it up and taking it with him. When healing impotent or paralyzed people, Jesus also told them to do this .

- To a paralyzed man: "Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house" (Mk 2:11).
- To a dead girl: "I say unto thee arise" (Mk 5:41).
- To a man with a withered hand: "Stretch forth thy hand" (Lk 6:10).
- To a dead man: "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise" (Lk 7:14).
- To an impotent man: "Rise, take up thy bed, and walk" (John 5:8).

Once, when the Lord confronted ten lepers, they cried out, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us!" Jesus responded, "Go show yourselves unto the priests." It is written that " as they went , they were cleansed" (Lk 17:12-14).

It is still true that faith responds to the word of the Lord, and thus the benefit is realized.

Make Thy Bed

The man was not to leave his cot lying on the ground, but to pick it up in an orderly manner, rolling it up and taking it with him. When healing impotent or paralyzed people, Jesus also told then to do this (Mk 2:11; John 5:8). The man was to pick up what had, in fact, been carrying him – the bed to which he had formerly been confined. Now, he was to exercise the mastery over it, instead of it having the domination over him.

This was a very precise picture of deliverance from sin. In that deliverance, the one who was once dominated by sin now gains the supremacy over it. Thus it is written, “Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry: for which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience: in the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them. But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth” (Col 3:5-8). Now, in Christ Jesus, the believer is required to “put off” the things that once controlled him.

A Consideration

One of the initial proofs that Jesus had risen from the dead was the grave clothes that He left behind. Jesus did not leave that clothing scattered about in the tomb. When Peter entered the tomb that morning, he saw “the linen clothes lie, and the napkin, that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself” (John 20:5-7). The word “lying” is translated from the Greek word kei,mena, which means “of things put or set in any place,” THAYER and “to be placed, to be set.” LEH In other words, it means an orderly placement of things, not something that has been strewn about in a haphazard manner.

Thus Peter told Aeneas to gather up his bed in an orderly manner, rolling or folding it together and taking it with him. That is surely a depiction of the life of faith in which the individual keeps under his body, bringing it into subjection, and bearing about in it the life of the Lord Jesus (1 Cor 9:27; 2 Cor 4:11).

HE AROSE IMMEDIATELY

“ And he arose immediately.”

As one should expect, Aeneas immediately responded, doing what Peter had commanded him to do. This too is the nature of faith, as the book of Acts has confirmed to this point.

- On the day of Pentecost, those convicted of their sins immediately received the word and were baptized (2:41).
- The lame man at the Gate Beautiful immediately got up when Peter healed him (3:7).
- When Ananias and Sapphira were judged for lying to the Holy Spirit, they died immediately (5:5,10).
- The Ethiopian eunuch responded immediately to Philip’s word concerning baptism (8:38).
- When Jesus sent Saul of Tarsus into Damascus to receive further instruction, he went immediately (9:8).
- When Ananias laid his hand upon Saul and spoke, his sight was immediately restored (9:18).
- Following his conversion, Saul immediately started preaching Christ in the synagogues (9:20).

Where people are not found responding in this manner to the Word of the Lord, they are being dominated by unbelief. Men may trace tardy responses to other imagined causes – like the people are thinking matters over, or being sure they are doing the right thing. However, this is not a proper diagnosis of delayed responses.

Faith moves a person to act immediately because confidence is inherent in it. Faith involves persuasion and assurance, both of which provoke an immediate response. It is only when men do not believe that they fail to respond in such a manner.

THEY SAW AND TURNED TO THE LORD

“ 35 And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord.”

We should expect the working of the Lord to yield results, for it is absolutely unique. The results can be favorable, as they were here, or unfavorable, as when the Jewish leaders took a stand against Peter and John when they had healed the lame man at the Temple gate. However, when the hand of the Lord is made manifest, there is never indifference. Just as with the Word of the Lord, the work of the Lord sheds light upon human hearts, exposing what is really in them.

THEY SAW HIM

“And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him . . .”

Saron is a region in which Lydda was located, bordering on the Mediterranean Sea, called “the great sea” in Scripture – a sea that formed one of the borders of the land (Num 34:6-7; Josh 1:4; 23:4).

The entire district, of which Lydda was a part, became keenly aware of this miracle, seeing Aeneas, who for eight years had been in an incapacitated state. They all “saw him.” It is evident that they had seen him before as well. Now, however, there was a stark contrast in Aeneas. He was no longer what he was before. There had not only been a change in him, it was an evident change.

“Saron, which is here joined to Lydda, is the name of a fruitful country on the borders of the Mediterranean sea, between Joppa and Caesarea, beginning at Lydda. There were two countries in the land of Israel called Saron, as Jerome observes; there was one between Mount Tabor, and the lake of Tiberias; and there was another which reached from Caesarea of Palestine, to the town of Joppa; the former was inhabited by the Gadites, and was beyond Jordan, (1 Chronicles 5:16) the other was on this side Jordan, near Lydda. And this is what is here meant.” JOHN GILL

Here was evidence of the power of the Lord working among them. This was not something done secretly. The work of the Lord is often made known by contrast. Examples include the following.

- The disciples before Pentecost and after Pentecost.
- Devout Jews before they heard the Gospel and after they heard it on the day of Pentecost.
- The lame man at the Gate Beautiful before his encounter with Peter and John, and afterward,
- Ananias and Sapphira before their deed was made known, and after it was known.
- The Samaritans before they heard the Gospel and after they heard it.
- The Ethiopian eunuch confused before he heard the Gospel, and rejoicing after he had heard and obeyed it.
- Saul of Tarsus before he confronted Jesus and after that experience.

It is the awareness of this change, and its association with the Lord, that brings glory to God. Like the Lord Himself, His works are unique. When, by faith, they are seen for what it truly are, men will give due glory to God. On the other hand, where there is a profession of identity with the living God, yet there has been no corresponding change in the one making the professing, men will not be moved to give glory to God. Something of this is involved in Paul's statement to the Corinthians concerning what Christ had done in them. "Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men" (2 Cor 3:2).

Now we will behold what took place in the region because the people saw Aeneas in a restored state – a state they knew could in no way be accomplished by men or nature.

THEY TURNED TO THE LORD

“. . . and turned to the Lord." Other versions read, "converted to the Lord," DOUAY "turned to the Lord in faith," GWN and "turned to God." MRD

The word "turned" is translated from the Greek word evpe,streyan. Its lexical meaning is, "to turn oneself," THAYER "to turn around," FRIBERG "to turn about," LIDDELL-SCOTT and "to be converted." GINGRICH The idea is that life had been lived in the wrong direction, and thus men were walking on the broad road that leads to destruction (Matt 7:13). In turning to the Lord, there is a sudden and effective change in the reason for living. Life is now lived with the Lord in mind. His will becomes the prominent will, and a deliberate and consistent commitment is made to Him.

Prior to this turn, the individuals were moving further and further from God, and closer and closer to final and total separation from Him. When their eyes were opened, and they saw their very real condition, they adjusted the course of their lives, and headed in a different moral and spiritual direction – toward the Lord. That is, their aim was to be accepted and directed by Him, and Him alone. They no longer lived for themselves, but for the Lord.

I have frequently pointed out the ways in which the Spirit described conversion. Because it is a much neglected perspective, and is so critical to a proper understanding, I take this occasion to once again draw your attention to this matter – the ways in which the Spirit refers to conversion.

- "They that gladly received the word were baptized" (Acts 2:41).
- They "heard the word and believed" (Acts 4:4).
- ". . . they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women" (Acts 8:12).
- Those who "believed on the name on the Lord" (Acts 11:17).
- "Turned unto the Lord" (Acts 11:21).
- "Believed on the name of the Lord," and "were baptized" (Acts 18:8).
- Came to the point where they "turned to God" (Acts 15:19).

Turning to the Lord involves determination and concentration. It includes a profound consideration of the Word that has been delivered, and a turning from sin as well as to God. In the commission delivered to Saul, a great emphasis was placed upon turning. "To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me" (Acts 26:18).

It is possible for a person to present a message that leaves people thinking that what they are delivered from is the most important thing. This is the result of associating salvation primarily with rescue, or deliverance. However, rescue is the part of salvation that is essential to the realization of the object of salvation, or what we are saved to. Israel was delivered from Egypt in order to enter and obtain Canaan. Saul was delivered from his former life in order that he might fill the role of an apostle.

Salvation consists of two parts: from and to. No person is truly saved who lacks one or both of those parts.

- Salvation is deliverance from “this present evil world” (Gal 1:4) in order to the obtainment of “the world to come” (Heb 2:5).
- We are delivered from a life in which we yielded our members as “instruments of unrighteousness unto sin,” in order that we might yield them as “instruments of righteousness unto God” (Rom 6:13).
- The Lord saves us from a life in which we “were darkness,” to one in which we “are light in the Lord” (Eph 5:8).
- We were saved from a state in which we were “not a people” to one in which we have become “the people of God” (1 Pet 2:10).
- Before, we “had not obtained mercy, but now we have obtained mercy” (1 Pet 2:10b).
- Once we were “as sheep going astray, but are now returned unto the chief Shepherd and Bishop of our souls” (1 Pet 2:25).
- Prior to being delivered, we were tainted with the guilt of sin, but now we are “washed,” “sanctified,” and “justified” (1 Cor 6:11).
- Once we were “dead in trespasses and sins,” but now we have been quickened, or made alive, unto God (Eph 1:1-4).
- Before we were delivered, we were “the servants of sin,” but now we are “the servants of righteousness” (Rom 6:17-18).
- Before we were saved we were “without Christ” and “without God,” but now we are “made nigh by the blood of Christ” (Eph 2:12-13).

All of the above, and more, are encapsulated in the words, “turned to the Lord.” In order to turn to Him, there must be a corresponding turning from something. The heart cannot fasten upon two contradicting things at the same time. No person is capable of serving two masters (Lk 16:13).

Herein lies the danger associated with distraction, or being turned aside to another focus or object of attention. As soon as one’s attention is drawn aside to lesser things, one’s faith begins to wane, for it can only be sustained by “looking unto Jesus” (Heb 12:1-2), beholding “the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 4:6). The distraction that captures one’s attention may not be wrong of itself. However, if it requires the inmost part of our persons, which is to be devoted to the Lord alone, a distance begins to form between the Lord and the one distracted. This also applies to novelty, humor, and undue references to worldly life from the pulpit. Such references are potentially dangerous distractions. It appears that this is not a common bit of knowledge, even though it is an essential one.

A DISCIPLE NAMED TABITHA

“ 36 Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did.”

THERE WAS IN JOPPA

“Now there was at Joppa . . .”

Our attention is now turned to another city – Joppa. There are thirteen references to Joppa in Scriptures, a city located on the shores of the Mediterranean sea (2 Chron 2:16; Ezra 1:7; Jonah 1:3; Acts 9:36,38,42,43; 10:5,8,23,32; 11:5,13). This is the city from which Jonah disembarked in a ship as he fled “from the presence of the Lord” (John 1:3).

Joppa was located approximately 15-20 miles from Lydda, confirming the spiritual tenacity of Peter as he went about ministering to the saints. It also provides us with a kind of commentary on what is meant by the words, "Peter passed throughout all quarters." This is the record of a man who was living by faith, carrying out the Word of the Lord.

A CERTAIN DISCIPLE

" . . . a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas . . . "

Once again, I draw your attention to the manner in which reference is made to those in Christ Jesus: "a certain disciple." This is the same way Ananias was described (9:10), and will also be the way in which we first read of Timothy (16:1). A disciple is a learner, a pupil, a follower of Christ who gives heed to His words and has no other priorities before Him. Jesus Himself specified who would be received as His disciple.

- SELF DENIAL. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me" (Matt 16:24).

- AN ABSOLUTE PREFERENCE FOR JESUS. "If any man come to Me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple" (Luke 14:26).

- BEARING ONE'S CROSS. "And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after Me, cannot be My disciple" (Luke 14:27).

- FORSAKING ALL. "So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be My disciple" (Luke 14:33).

The expression "a certain disciple" means infinitely more than a church member, or some denominational name, or being identified with an historical religious movement or theological position. As important as those distinctions may appear, they terminate in men, not God. Their history does not go back far enough, and they have no value relating to making men righteous or giving them an eternal inheritance. By comparison, and as used in our text, the word "disciple" relates directly to Christ.

Tabitha

The name "Tabitha" is the Hebrew form of the Greek name "Dorcas." The name means Gazelle, which has the etymological meaning of, "the creature with the beautiful looks, or eyes."

ROBERTSON The Gazelle is frequently referred to in the Song of Solomon as a type of beauty (2:9,17; 4:3;7:3), NKJV and is of the genus antelope.

It appears that Dorcas was a beautiful woman, in appearance as well as in deeds. Her name indicates she may very well have been very elegant. However, her true beauty will be described as relating to her character, and the selfless life that she lived as a disciple of Jesus Christ.

FULL OF GOOD WORKS AND ALMS DEEDS

" . . . this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did. " Other versions read, "full of good works and charitable deeds," NKJV "abounding with deeds of kindness and charity which she continually did," NASB "always doing good and helping the poor," NIV "devoted to good works and acts of charity," NRSV "given to good works and acts of mercy at all times," BBE "she was rich in good works, and in the alms which she did," MRD "wholly devoted to the good and charitable actions which she was constantly doing," WEYMOUTH and "whose whole life was full of good and kindly action." PHILLIPS

The language strongly suggests that this Dorcas was a woman of means, for such people are admonished to be “rich in good works,” or “full of good works” (1 Tim 6:17-18). The fact that she was continually doing good works, and providing for the poor, also supports the idea that she was a woman of means. In this regard she was much like Joanna, Susanna, and others who ministered to the Lord out of their substance (Luke 8:3). She used her possessions for the good of others, thereby confirming that her goods did not control her. In the words of Scripture, she used the world, and did not abuse it (1 Cor 7:31).

DORCAS WAS SICK AND DIED

“ 37 And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died: whom when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber.”

Now, while Peter was in the region, this beloved disciple became sick and died. As will be confirmed, this was a great loss to the brethren in that area. It is not coincidence that Peter happened to be in the vicinity at that time.

SHE WAS SICK AND DIED

“And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died . . .” Other versions read, “she fell sick and died,” NASB “became ill and died,” NRSV “got ill and came to her death,” BBE “having ailed, died,” YLT “was taken ill just at that time, and died,” MONTGOMERY and “became seriously ill and died.” PHILLIPS

Although it was grievous, this was not an unusual circumstance. The mighty prophet Elisha also fell sick, and died from the illness (2 Kgs 13:14). Jacob also became sick before he died (Gen 48:1). Lazarus, the friend of Jesus, also died of a sickness (John 11:3,14), although Jesus raised him from the dead.

Not all people of Scriptural record became sick and died from it. Hezekiah was “sick unto death,” but the Lord granted him fifteen more years in answer to his prayer (2 Kgs 20:1,6). Epaphroditus was also “sick nigh unto death,” but the Lord intervened, having mercy upon him, and prolonged his life (Phil 2:26-27).

The phrase “by whose stripes ye were healed” does not refer to bodily illnesses, and it is wrong for men to say that it does. Peter, speaking by the Holy Spirit, provides the meaning of the clause. “For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls.” The healing of reference is of the soul, not the body.

The point to be seen here is that healing is not in the atonement – illness is not ended as is sin. There is no question concerning the grace of God in healing, and that is not the issue here. When a person lives by faith, being godly, sin cannot take hold of him. It is written, “This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh” (Gal 5:16). That is because the complete remedy for sin is found in the atoning death of Jesus. However, the same person who cannot be dominated by sin may very well come to a point where he is dominated by illness – like Elisha the holy prophet, or Dorcas who was noted for being a disciple and a prodigious worker of good.

The phrase “by whose stripes ye were healed” (1 Pet 2:24) does not refer to bodily illnesses, and it is wrong for men to say that it does. In fact, Peter, speaking by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, provides the meaning of the clause that is stated in Isaiah 53:5. “For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls” (1 Pet 2:25). The healing of reference is of the soul, not the body. This is a healing from sin, and fulfills the prayer of the patriarch David: “I said, LORD, be merciful unto me: heal my soul ; for I have sinned against thee” (Psa 41:4).

It is quite true that some illness is actually chastening from the Lord, as in the case of certain people in the church at Corinth. They were stricken with sickness, and some of them even died because of their conduct at the Lord's table (1 Cor 11:29-32). Those are illnesses that can be avoided. However, there is no promise within the New Covenant that offers perfect health to those who walk by faith. Not only is Dorcas a confirmation of this, but so are Paul (2 Cor 12:7-10), Timothy (1 Tim 5:23), Trophimus (2 Tim 4:20), and Epaphroditus (Phil 2:26-27).

THEY WASHED HER AND LAID HER IN AN UPPER CHAMBER

“ . . . whom when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber.”

The language used in this text also confirms that the body is considered part of the person. Dorcas died, and they washed “her” and placed “her” in an upper chamber. The same type of language is used when Jesus inquired concerning the place of Lazarus' burial: “Where have ye laid him?”

It is evident that these believers treated the human body with a certain sanctity. They knew that our “bodies are the members of Christ” (1 Cor 6:15), and as such are to be treated with respect. Through the Jewish people, God taught the world concerning the handling of the dead. The Jews were noted for burying their dead – a practice that was consistent among them. They also prepared the body before interring it. As it is written, “Then took they the body of Jesus, and wound it in linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury ” (John 19:40).

It is a sign of degenerate thinking when professing believers condone the practice of burning the dead instead of burying them – something for which the heathen are noted. Cremation is a way of handling the dead which in no way relates to hope.

While this is not as matter to press to the point of distraction, it ought to be noted how the Jews handled their dead, and the manner in which that activity is reported in Scripture. The Jews were not only a chosen nation, they were also one that was cultured by God. The totality of the lives of the people revolved around their religion. Even “the Jew's language” (2 Kgs 18:18; Neh 13:24) was basically theological. Their customs, therefore, are not to be equated with the customs of other nations. In fact, God had told these people not to learn the customs and manners of the other nations (Deut 18:9; Lev 19:27-29).

Another Thing to be Seen

The language used in this text also confirms that the body is considered part of the person. Dorcas died, and they washed “her” and placed “her” in an upper chamber. The same type of language is used when Jesus inquired concerning the place of Lazarus' burial: “Where have ye laid him ?” (John 11:34). When Abraham died, they “buried him ” (Gen 25:9). The same is said of Isaac (Gen 35:29), Jacob (Gen 50:13), Moses (Deut 34:6), Joshua (Josh 24:30)Samson (Judges 16:31), Samuel (1 Sam 25:1), and a host of others.

Man is comprised of spirit, soul, and body (1 Thess 5:23). Every part is to be sanctified to the Lord (1 Thess 5:23). Furthermore, salvation includes all of these parts – the body being the last part that will be redeemed (Rom 8:23). Until that redemption, which will take place at the resurrection of the dead, the body is a “purchased possession” (Eph 1:13). Although it is a house for us, it does not belong to us. As it is written, “Or do you not know that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit who is in you, whom you have from God, and you are not your own ? For you were bought at a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's ” NKJV (1 Cor 6:19-20).

All of this provides the rationale behind the preparation of the body for burial, and the burial itself. I understand that this must not be permitted to drive a wedge between believers. However, having said that, it does appear to me that believers ought to come to a point where no part of their being or their lives is separated from their identity with God through Jesus Christ.

It is equally not proper to philosophize about dying than it is about living. The fact of the matter is that whether we live or whether we die, “we are the Lord’s” (Rom 14:8). That is something to be remembered.

THE DISCIPLES HEARD THAT PETER WAS NEAR, AND CALLED HIM

“ 38 And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not delay to come to them.”

In the text that follows we will be exposed to the manner in which the Lord directs His people. We will also catch a glimpse of the way believers lived – within the context of the body of Christ (the church), as well as His Person.

THE DISCIPLES HEARD PETER WAS IN JOPPA

“And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there . . .”

Joppa is approximately fifteen miles from Lydda. Yet, without modern modes of travel and communication, the saints in Joppa had learned that Peter was in Lydda. There was a communication among believers that confirmed they were not living for themselves. When a significant man of God was in the area, the news got out.

It is a glad day when reports of the working of the Lord in one place can be an encouragement that He may very well work in another place as well.

The expression “noised abroad” speaks of this kind of communication (Luke 1:65; Acts 2:6). Other versions use the expression, “discussed throughout,” NKJV “were being talked about,” NASB “were talking about,” NIV and “there was much talk about.” BBE

If you have been around professed Christians for any length of time, you know that it is exceedingly rare to hear them speaking about anything relating to life in Christ. There might be talk about an athletic event, a political rally, the weather, or some other social matter. However, rarely will you hear anyone speaking about a man of God being in the vicinity, or about how a current crisis could be addressed by such a person.

However, in our text, this is precisely what was taking place. Furthermore, it is not depicted as anything unusual.

THEY SENT, DESIRING HIM TO COME WITHOUT DELAY

“ . . . they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not delay to come to them.”

The disciples did not call for Peter when Dorcas grew sick, which leads me to believe either the illness was brief, quickly terminating in death, or that the disciples were not at first aware of Peter’s presence in the region. Of course, behind all of this are the inscrutable workings of the Lord. He is arranging things for a more significant work. The Divine agenda is setting up for the door of faith to be opened unto the Gentiles. Peter will be in the city of Joppa when he is dispatched to preach the Gospel to Cornelius. In the meantime, this event takes place to ensure that the believers in that area are also comforted and encouraged in the faith.

Notice the urgency of the message delivered to Peter: “that he would not delay to come to them.” The believers had not washed the body of Dorcas and placed it in an upper chamber merely to mourn for her – although they will do that. Neither, indeed, are they calling for Peter that he may come and weep with them – urging him, as it were, to come quickly before the interment of the body. To me, there is no question that they had heard of the healing of Aeneas, and that all who dwelt in Lydda and Saron had turned to the Lord. It is a glad day when reports of the working of the Lord in one place can be an encouragement that He may very well work in another place as well.

We are witnessing the faith of God’s people in action. They were able to correlate the report of Divine working with a present need. They connected a man of God with the working of God. They associated the report of God working in a certain region with the distinct possibility that He was “near,” and could therefore be sought. They are fulfilling the text of Isaiah, “Seek ye the LORD while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near” (Isa 55:6).

THEY BROUGHT HIM INTO THE UPPER CHAMBER

“ 39 Then Peter arose and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them.”

PETER WENT WITH THEM

“Then Peter arose and went with them . . .”

Peter got up and went with the two men who had been sent to him. They asked him to come without delay, and he did so. We do not know what Peter was doing at the time, but the men did not require an appointment to see him. In a highly structured religious institution, I cannot conceive of this happening very often. Today men schedule the activities of their day, and have become enslaved to regime. I have often thought that it is the fewness of their activities that requires such a schedule, and not the abundance of them.

Here, the point to see is that faith can quickly adapt to the circumstances. This is no ordinary disciple, but is the leader among the twelve who has been given the keys to the Kingdom. Yet, he does not have a staff of subordinates around him, and the people have access to him. His life revolved around the work of the Lord, and here was an occasion involving the people of the Lord. There was no question in his mind about what he ought to do: “So Peter [immediately] rose and accompanied them.” AMPLIFIED

“When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber . . .” Other versions read, “when he arrived he was taken upstairs to the room,” NIV and “as soon as he arrived, they took him upstairs.” LIVING

Keep in mind, we are speaking of a journey of about fifteen miles, and they probably walked that distance. It is generally understood that distances were walked at an average of three miles an hour, with a day’s journey being defined as twenty-four miles, requiring eight hours. ISBE This being the case, Peter and his companions walked for approximately five hours, with the men accompanying him doing so the second time.

A DAY’S JOURNEY

- 25-30 miles by camel or horse requiring 6-8 hours.
- 24 miles by foot, requiring 8 hours.
- Sabbath day’s journey = ½ mile.

The significance of this is that as soon as Peter arrived, “they brought him to the upper chamber” – even though he had been traveling for as much as five hours, or if by horseback, at least 3-4 hours. Again, I draw your attention to the total lack of any reference to inconvenience. I get the idea that Peter's mind-set was much the same as that of David when he said to Ahimelech, "the king's business required haste" (1 Sam 21:8).

Our Present Religious Culture

I feel compelled to make a few remarks about our current religion culture. It is one that has been produced by modern day Christian emphases and trends. What is being preached and taught has shaped the way church members think. First, the Lord's "business," or, as Jesus said, "My Father's business" (Lk 2:49), is not ordinarily perceived as requiring haste, or immediate attention. People have no compunction about absenting themselves from the gathering of the saints for reasons they would never consider a justifiable ground for missing work, or school, or an business appointment, or even shopping for supplies. Secondly, it is not often that professing Christians resort to God or those who walk with Him for resolutions. It is not at all uncommon to hear their first resort being to doctors, lawyers, counselors, or other professionals. I am drawing attention to these conditions because of their stark contrast with the things recorded in the book of Acts. This is not a matter intended to be used to judge others, nor am I saying it is a condemning matter. Rather, I am drawing attention to the fruit that is being produced by the religious professional's of our day. It is very much like the "wild grapes" that Israel brought forth, after they had been given all manner of Divine advantage (Isa 5:2,4). The situation is so deplorable that the nominal church has produced offices and functions within itself to address difficulties among professing Christians with the wisdom of this world. Chief among these spurious offices are counselors, youth workers, financial advisors, and other consulting-type offices. There is nothing about these approaches that blends with the inspired record of those who lived by faith. That very circumstance ought to promote some holy initiatives to adjust the focus of the modern church.

THE WIDOWS STOOD BY HIM

"...and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them."

What a touching sight it was. There were a number of widows that were gathered around the body of Dorcas. When Peter came in, they gathered around him, showing him "the tunics and garments which Dorcas had made while she was with them." NKJV Other versions read "robes and other clothing," NIV "coats and clothing," BBE "body-coats and garments," DARBY and "undershirts (tunics) and [other] garments." AMPLIFIED In this case, "tunics" were garments worn closest to the skin – like undergarments. "Garments" refers to outer clothing that could be seen.

The reference to the time that Dorcas was "with them" could mean that she was one of the widows. It could also mean while she was among the brethren. Either way, Dorcas was noted for being among the disciples, whether those who had been widowed, or the saints in general. This was not a reference to their assemblies in particular, but appears to refer to the general company she kept, for she made the clothing of reference while she was among them.

One thing that has been highlighted throughout the book of Acts is the preference of believers for the saints. They were not only of one mind, but they preferred the company of one another. This can be noted in the following sample texts.

- "And all that believed were together, and had all things common" (Acts 2:44).
- "And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart" (Acts 2:46).
- "And being let go, they went to their own company, and reported all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them" (Acts 4:23).

- “And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ” (Acts 5:42).

- “And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple” (Acts 9:26).

- “And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together praying” (Acts 12:12).

Dorcas was not noted for merely living in Lydda, but for being “with” the people of God – “a certain disciple” ! She was not known as a citizen of a province or country, but for being a member of the household of faith.

Some of God’s people have been criticized because of their preference for godly people. They have even been admonished to make more worldly friends. However, this attitude conflicts sharply with the Lord Himself, who prefers to be with His own people. He demonstrated this during His ministry, choosing twelve men to be “with Him” (Mk 3:14), then taking them everywhere He went. His choice time was spent with them. His extensive explanations were given to them. And before He was betrayed, He preferred to be with them, desiring to eat the Passover with them (Lk 22:15). He even declared that if He was to be found, it would be among those who met together in His name (Matt 18:20). Our text, then, perfectly coincides with the Divine manner.

HE PRAYED, AND THEN HE SPOKE

“ 40 But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning him to the body said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up.”

PETER PUT THEM ALL FORTH

“But Peter put them all forth . . .” Other versions read, “put them all outside,” NKJV “putting them all out,” NASB “made them all go outside,” BBE “sent them all out of the room,” CSB and “asked them to leave the room.” NLT

Miracles of this sort were sometimes preceded by mere watchers being removed from the room. When Jesus raised Jairus’ daughter from the dead, he put most of the people out of the room (Mk 5:40; Lk 8:54). When Elijah raised the son of the widow of Zarephath from the dead, he took the boy into a room alone (1 Kgs 17:17-23). When Elisha raised the Shunammite’s son from the dead, he also shut the door, with himself and the body being alone (2 Kgs 4:32-37).

There are some works of the Lord that are not intended to be done in public – some miracles that require the absence of inhibiting influences. In this case, Peter faces “the last enemy” – the most formidable one. He chooses to do it in privacy, apart from people standing about him “weeping.”

HE KNEELED DOWN AND PRAYED

“ . . . and kneeled down, and prayed . . . ” Other versions read, “he got down on his knees and prayed,” NIV “went down on his knees in prayer,” BBE “fell on his knees and prayed,” MRD and “bowed his knees and prayed.” YLT

People may imagine that posture has nothing to do with prayer, but that is apparently not the mind-set of all men. Men who are said to have knelt when they prayed include the following. David (Psa 109:24), Solomon (1 Kgs 8:54; 2 Chron 6:13), Elijah (1 Kgs 18:42), Daniel (Dan 6:10), Ezra (Ezra 9:5), Jesus Himself (Lk 22:41), Stephen (Acts 7:60), Paul (Acts 20:36; Eph 3:14), Paul and several disciples together (Acts 21:5).

Among other things, all of these instances involved an acute sensitivity of being in the presence of the Lord. These were people who lived by faith and were keenly aware of what it means to petition the living God. In our time, there is a casualness that has crept into the church that has robbed the soul of this kind of cognizance. It appears to me that, in such cases, there is very little consciousness of the Lord's presence. This accounts for much of paltry pulpit presentations, retarded responses among the people, and lack of fervency. If the church expects to obtain benefits from the God of heaven, there must come a time when they leave the room of weeping and reminiscing, and enter into the room of faith and supplication. They must, in a sense, leave the trouble and go to Go0d.

HE TURNED TO THE BODY AND SAID

“ . . . and turning him to the body said, Tabitha, arise.” Other versions read, “turning to the dead woman,” NIV “turned to the corpse,” MRD “turned to her body,” NAB “towards the dead woman,” NIB “turned to Tabitha's body,” IE and “the body of Dorcas.” CEV

We do not know what Peter prayed, and it is just as well that we do not. Had it been known, hypocritical leaders would have developed a formula out of the approach Peter took, and then imposed it on the simple. Whatever Peter prayed, it is evident that he sensed that the prayer had been heard. Once that occurred, he ceased to pray, and turned toward the body, speaking to it as though it was not “dead, being alone” (James 2:17).

Tabitha, Arise!

Peter calls out the Hebrew name, addressing her as the seed of Abraham rather than a Greek-speaking Jew. Like Jesus, he sees what the Father is doing, and therefore speaks confidently (John 5:19). Nor, indeed, is this word spoken because Tabitha had faith, for she had left her body, and faith has to do with being in the body. This was a work that depended upon the faith of Peter, as well as the will of the Lord.

The raising of Tabitha did not depend upon a certain procedure, for there is no revealed procedure for raising the dead. This observation is highly disruptive to those who delight in procedures or routines. Think of the different ways in which the dead were raised.

- THE SON OF THE WIDOW OF ZAREPHATH. Elijah took the body of the dead boy, laid it upon his bed, and stretched himself upon the body three times crying, “O LORD my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again.” The Lord heard his prayer, and “the soul of the child came into him again” (1 Kgs 17:21-22).

- THE SHUNAMMITE'S SON. Elisha entered where the dead child had been placed on a bed. He lay upon the child, putting his mouth upon the child's mouth, his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands. When he did this, the flesh of the child became warm. He then walked back and forth in the house, and returned, stretching himself upon the child again. The child then “sneezed seven times, and the child opened his eyes” (2 Kgs 4:32-37).

Under the Law, there were procedures for the cleansing of lepers (Lev 14:8-9), those having an issue of blood (Lev 15:5-13), and those who had eaten an animal that died “of itself” (Lev 17:15). There was a procedure for the installation of priests (Lev 8:6-36), for a woman who had given birth (Lev 12:6-8), and one for those who, in war, had killed a person or touched a dead body (Num 31:19-24). But there was no procedure for raising the dead.

AN ANONYMOUS MAN. Some time following Elisha's sickness and consequent death, a group of men were in the process of burying a man – probably digging the grave. During that year, the Moabites were invading the land. Those who were burying the body saw a band of raiders coming their way. They quickly lowered the body into the open grave of Elisha. As soon as the body touched the bones of Elisha, “he revived, and stood upon his feet” (2 Kgs 13:21).

• RAISING OF THE SON OF THE WIDOW OF NAIN. Near the gate of the city of Nain, Jesus encountered a funeral procession. Jesus touched the “bier,” or open coffin, in which the body was lying. He then said, “Young man, I say unto thee, Arise.” The young man sat up and began to speak (Luke 7:12-15).

• THE RAISING OF JAIRUS’ DAUGHTER. Jesus went into the room in which the body had been placed, allowing only Peter, James, John, and the parents to be with Him. He took the maid by her hand and said, “Maid, arise.” Her “spirit came into her again, and she arose straightway” (Luke 8:49-55).

• THE RAISING OF LAZARUS. Lazarus had been dead for four days, and the body was in a sealed tomb. Jesus commanded the stone to be moved from the door. He then shouted, “Lazarus, come forth.” Lazarus came out of the tomb, wrapped about with grave clothes, with his face wrapped in a cloth. Jesus commanded the people, “Loose him, and let him go.”

• THE RAISING OF EUTYCHUS. When Paul was in Troas, he preached long into the night, being in the third floor of the building. A young man named Eutychus lapsed into a deep sleep, and fell from the third story, and was “picked up dead.” Paul went down, threw himself on the young man, and embraced him. He then announced, “Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him” (Acts 20:9-10).

Under the Law, there were procedures for the cleansing of lepers (Lev 14:8-9), those having an issue of blood (Lev 15:5-13), and those who had eaten an animal that died “of itself” (Lev 17:15). There was a procedure for the installation of priests (Lev 8:6-36), for a woman who had given birth (Lev 12:6-8), and one for those who, in war, had killed a person or touched a dead body (Num 31:19-24). But there was no procedure for raising the dead. In fact, before Jesus, there were very few records of anyone being raised from the dead. Commencing with Jesus, however, the raising of the dead became more common. Jesus was noted for raising the dead (Matt 11:5). Three specific people whom Jesus raised from the dead are revealed: the son of the widow of Nain, Jairus’ daughter, and Lazarus – each one being in a different stage of death. In our text, Peter raises Tabitha from the dead. Paul raised Eutychus from the dead. It appears that Paul himself was even raised from the dead (Acts 14:19-20). However, in all of the records of the raising of the dead, no consistent procedure is employed.

In the case before us, Peter approaches the subject in a way that differs from all other recorded resurrections. He does not lay upon the body as Elijah did. He does not put his mouth, eyes, and hands on those of the body, then walk back and forth, and stretch himself upon the body again, as Elisha did. He does not touch the article on which the body was placed, as Jesus did when He raised the son of the widow of Nain. He does not take the body by the hand as Jesus did when He raised Jairus’ daughter. He does not raise her publically as Jesus did Lazarus. He does not fall on her and embrace her as Paul did when he raised Eutychus. Instead, he puts all of the people out, kneels down and prays, and then speaks to the body.

Now, all of this seem like nothing more than a series of interesting observations. However, in a day when work shops, seminars, week-end recovery retreats, and how-to books are in vogue, this text becomes very significant. We are reading of a man who was working with Jesus. He was living by faith, and had wisdom and spiritual understanding. He knew when to work, and when to let matters alone. Faith does not look for a certain way of doing things. The person who is working together with God is not doing so through a procedure, but through faith in, and fellowship with, the Lord Jesus Christ. If suddenly this manner was found within the professing church, there is no way to estimate how many lucrative religious corporations and businesses would immediately become obsolete.

SHE OPENED HER EYES AND SAT UP

“And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up.”

Like the son of the widow of Zarephath, Tabitha’s soul came into her body again. As in the raising of Jairus’ daughter, her spirit came into her again. The essential parts of her person were once again united – spirit, soul, and body. Her body which had been “alone,” was no longer so. Like the son of the widow of Zarephath, she “revived.” Like the Shunammite’s son, she “opened her eyes.” Like the son of the widow of Nain and Jairus’ daughter, she “sat up.”

The raising of the dead is actually a departure from the normality of life. It is written that it is “it is appointed unto men once to die” (Heb 9:27). In this, they “put off” the earthly tabernacle, and are gathered to their own people (Gen 25:8). So far as life in this world, there is a certain finality in death – at least that is the norm. In the dimness of lesser revelation Job once said, “As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away: so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more. He shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more” (Job 7:9-10). It is true that this is the ordinary lot of men – but it is not the only lot . Some few souls have been raised from the dead, re-entering their body of flesh and blood – a body which cannot enter into the kingdom of God (1 Cor 15:50).

In death, the soul departs, and in this kind of resurrection, it returns to the same body it had left. It returns from whence it had gone. What is more, when the soul returns, the body no longer has the infirmities that caused the death in the first place.

The raising of the dead, such as is revealed in the case before us, confirms that men do not cease to be when they die. In such a resurrection, the body is not merely resuscitated, but the soul or spirit comes into the body again, as it revealed in Scripture. In death, the soul departs (Gen 35:18), and in this kind of resurrection, it returns to the same body it had left (1 Kgs 17:21-22). It returns from whence it had gone. What is more, when the soul returns, the body no longer has the infirmities that caused the death in the first place. The son of the widow of Zarephath died of a sickness (1 Kgs 17:17). The Shunammite’s son died after having severe pains in his head (2 Kgs 4:19-20). Jairus’ daughter died from some illness, even though she was only twelve years of age (Mk 5:23,35). Lazarus died of an illness (John 11:3,14). In our text, Tabitha also died of an illness (Acts 9:37).

All of these illnesses were in the body alone . Yet, when these people were raised from the dead, there is nothing that remotely suggests their bodies remained infirm. Yet, because they were comprised of “flesh and blood,” they would have to die again, for they were still “earthen vessels,” requiring ordinary maintenance. Elijah delivered to the widow raised son, for care (1 Kgs her 17:23). The same was true of Elisha when he raise the Shunammite’s son (2 Kgs 4:37). Jesus delivered the resurrected son of the widow of Nain to her (Lk 7:15). When Jesus raised Jairus’ daughter, He commanded them to give her something to eat (Lk 8:55). After Lazarus was raised from the dead, he ate with the other people (John 12:2). When Eutychus was raised from the dead, we assume he ate with the rest of the brethren as they continued with Paul (Acts 20:10-12).

The point that I am making here is that faith leads us into the realm of the extraordinary, not the ordinary. In this realm things are not accomplished by routine or rote. Everyone who died was not raised from the dead. Every time an apostle visited a place where some disciple had died, they did not raise them from the dead. This was a work directed by Divine will and discretion. Faith puts men into that blessed environment.

A GLIMPSE OF APOSTOLIC MINISTRY

It is written, “and many signs and wonders were done by the apostles . . . And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people” (Acts 2:43; 5:12). Our text provides us with an example of this kind of work. I do not doubt that this was one of the “signs of an apostle” to which Paul referred (2 Cor 12:12). All of the resurrections recorded in Scripture were either accomplished by prophets (Elijah and Elisha), Jesus, or by apostles – either when Jesus first sent out the twelve (Matt 10:8), or following His enthronement in glory (Peter and Paul).

All of this confirms the uniqueness of the account before us. This, in turn, highlights the spiritual sensitivity of Peter, and the strength of his faith. The confidence with which he proceeded is refreshing to consider.

HE GAVE HER HIS HAND, AND LIFTED HER UP

“ 41 And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up, and when he had called the saints and widows, presented her alive.”

A perusal of the miracles of Scripture with confirm how radically they differ from magic and Satanic power. There is a practicality in them that distinguishes them, confirming that God is working with the people in a manner that involves their very practical involvement. While there is certainly the presence of power from heaven, it is revealed with an amazing level of practicality. This is seen in both Elijah and Elisha stretching themselves upon the dead whom they raised, and in Paul embracing Eutychus as he raised him from the dead. We see it in Moses being told to throw a tree in some poisoned waters (Ex 15:26), and Isaiah taking “a lump of figs” and laying it upon a boil from which Hezekiah was dying (2 Kgs 20:7). There was also Moses’ use of his rod (Ex 14:15-16; 17:5), David’s use of a sling (1 Sam 17:50), Samson’s use of the jawbone of an ass (Judges 15:16), and Shamgar’s use of an ox goad (Judges 3:31). All of these instances were miraculous in nature, extending beyond human aptitude, yet involving human activity. We see something of this principle in our text – a principle that tends to personalize the working of the Lord, giving it an edifying quality rather than merely causing amazement.

HE GAVE HER HIS HAND AND LIFTED HER UP

A similar action took place in other miracles, with personal involvement on the part of the worker.

- WHEN JESUS HEALED PETER’S MOTHER IN LAW. “And he came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up ; and immediately the fever left her, and she ministered unto them” (Mark 1:31).

- WHEN JESUS RAISED JAIRUS’ DAUGHTER. “But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand , and the maid arose” (Mat 9:25).

- WHEN JESUS HEALED A BLIND MAN. “And he took the blind man by the hand , and led him out of the town; and when he had spit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he saw ought” (Mark 8:23).

- WHEN JESUS HEALED A DEMON-POSSESSED BOY. “But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up ; and he arose” (Mark 9:27)

- WHEN JESUS HEALED A DEAF AND DUMB MAN. “And he took him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue” (Mark 7:33).

- WHEN JESUS HEALED ANOTHER BLIND MAN. “When he had thus spoken, he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay” (John 9:6).

WHEN PETER HEALED THE LAME MAN. “And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up : and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength” (Acts 3:7).

Let it be clear, there were no healing properties in the hands of Jesus, His spittle, His fingers, His tongue, clay, or the apostles hands. Those were points through which the power of the Lord was made known, but they were not themselves the residence of Divine power. These days there are media-ministers who speak about having the Divine anointing in their hands. However, even they acknowledge it is not resident there, but only comes occasionally – and they say they are even able to feel it. All such claims bear more resemblance to the power of darkness than to the Lord of glory.

Once, when Jesus was passing through various towns in Galilee, and Judea, and in Jerusalem as well, it is written, “the power of the Lord was present to heal them” (Lk 5:17). That evidences Divine discretion. Such power is not always present, but is strictly an expression of the will and purpose of God.

Miraculous power cannot be divorced from God Himself – and that includes His “eternal purpose,” which is His objective. It also involves His will, which is the means through which that purpose is realized. The Lord will never act in contradiction of His purpose or will, for that would require Him to be unfaithful , and “He cannot deny Himself” (2 Tim 2:13). This means that miracles are not simply worked at will by those empowered to do them. Even the Lord Jesus, in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily, said He could “do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do” (John 5:19).

Peter, then, was in synch with the purpose of God. He was walking in the light as the Jesus Himself is in the light (1 John 1:7). That is why he knew what to do. It also why the circumstances were created for the work to be done. The outcome of this miracle will confirm the truth of these observations.

WHEN HE HAD CALLED THE SAINTS AND WIDOWS

“ . . . and when he had called the saints and widows . . . ” Other versions read, “the believers and the widows,” NIV “ the believers, especially the widows,” GWN “the widows and all the believers,” NLT “the holy ones and the widows,” NAB “the congregation and the widows,” NJB “God’s people and the widows,” WEYMOUTH and “the Lord’s people and the widows.” WILLIAMS

Having raised Tabitha from the dead, Peter presented her to the people with whom she had companied: “the saints and widows.” The Greek word translated “saints” is ἅγιοι , and so reads in all Greek texts. The meaning of this word is consistent throughout Scripture, and in the lexicons as well. It means “set apart unto God, to be, as it were exclusively His.” THAYER This is a invariable meaning.

It is equally as absurd to refer to people who are living in sin, have no love for the truth, and have no knowledge of God as Christians, born again, and accepted in the Beloved.

God’s people are identified by expressions denoting what they are, or have become in Christ Jesus : i.e., disciples, believers, holy ones, new creation, sons of God, etc. This is to seen against the backdrop of terms that express institutional or traditional identity, like Fundamentalist, Baptist, Premillennialist, etc.

HE PRESENTED HER ALIVE

“ . . . presented her alive.” Other versions read, “presented her to them alive,” NIV “showed her to be alive,” NRSV “gave her to them, living,” BBE “restored her alive,” GENEVA “She was alive,”

GWN “showed them she was alive,” NJB “delivered her alive,” PNT and “gave her back to them alive.” ISV

The “good works” which are wrought in God (John 3:21) will hold up under scrutiny. When God has really done a work in the individual, whether it is in the spirit or in the body, that work can be verified in appearance. Just as surely as a person who has been raised from the dead can be verified to be alive by what is seen, in the same manner, the person in whom God has placed a new heart and spirit (Ezek 11:19) will be seen to be different than he was before – like Saul of Tarsus. This is precisely why Jesus said, “the tree is known by its fruit” (Matt 12:33).

It would have been a display of gross ignorance to have pointed to Tabitha lying dead on the bed and tell the people that she was alive. It is equally as absurd to refer to people who are living in sin, have no love for the truth, and have no knowledge of God as Christians, born again, and accepted in the Beloved.

Presenting such people as being alive in Christ is like Peter presenting a dead body to the saints and widows, telling them that it was really alive, and just looked dead.

MANY BELIEVED IN THE LORD

“ 42 And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord.”

Here we once again see that the effects of the works of God confirm their Source. That is another way of saying, “wisdom is justified of her children,” or “wisdom is vindicated by her deeds” NASB (Matt 11:19). That is, the fruit that is produced by the tree identified its kind.

IT WAS KNOWN THROUGHOUT ALL JOPPA

“And it was known throughout all Joppa . . .” Other versions read, “became known throughout all Joppa,” NKJV “news of it went all through Joppa,” BBE “Spread throughout the city of Joppa,” GWN “The whole of Joppa heard about it,” NJB “the news raced through the town,” LIVING “People everywhere in Joppa learned about this,” IE and “This incident became known throughout Joppa.” WEYMOUTH

The news of this great work rapidly spread throughout the entire city. This was the case because of the absolute distinctiveness of the works of God. Whether people agree with what has been truly done in the name of the Lord or not, they will, in some way, talk about it. This is owing to its uniqueness. This is demonstrated during Old Covenant times as well as now that Jesus has been enthroned in heaven. A few examples will suffice to confirm this.

• OF ISRAEL’S DELIVERANCE FROM EGYPT. “For we have heard how the LORD dried up the water of the Red sea for you, when ye came out of Egypt; and what ye did unto the two kings of the Amorites, that were on the other side Jordan, Sihon and Og, whom ye utterly destroyed. And as soon as we had heard these things, our hearts did melt, neither did there remain any more courage in any man, because of you: for the LORD your God, he is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath” (Josh 2:10-11).

• OF THE KINGS OF ISRAEL. “And his servants said unto him, Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel are merciful kings: let us, I pray thee, put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads, and go out to the king of Israel: peradventure he will save thy life” (1 Kgs 20:31).

• OF GOD’S DEALINGS WITH ISRAEL. “O LORD, there is none like thee, neither is there any God beside thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears . . . And what one nation in the earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem to be his own people, to make thee a name of greatness and terribleness, by driving out nations from before thy people, whom thou hast redeemed out of Egypt?" (1 Chron 17:20-21).

- THE SUCCESSES OF JOSHUA. "So the LORD was with Joshua; and his fame was noised throughout all the country" (Josh 6:27).

- THE FAME OF SOLOMON. "For he was wiser than all men; than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman, and Chalcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol: and his fame was in all nations round about" (1 Kgs 4:31).

- WHEN JESUS WAS IN THE HOUSE. "And again he entered into Capernaum after some days; and it was noised that he was in the house" (Mark 2:1).

- WHEN THE TONGUE OF ZACHARIAS WAS LOOSED. "And fear came on all that dwelt round about them: and all these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country of Judaea" (Luke 1:65).

- THE BIRTH OF JESUS. "And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child. And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds" (Luke 2:17-18).

- THE FAME OF JESUS. "And His fame went throughout all Syria : and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and He healed them" (Matt 4:24). "At that time Herod the tetrarch heard of the fame of Jesus " (Mat 14:1). "But so much the more went there a fame abroad of Him : and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by Him of their infirmities" (Luke 5:15).

- THE EVENTS ON THE DAY OF PENTECOST. "Now when this was noised abroad , the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language" (Acts 2:6).

- THE REPORT OF ANANAS AND SAPPHIRA. "And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things" (Acts 5:11).

All of this was in perfect accord with what had been declared concerning the wonderful works of God. "My tongue also shall talk of thy righteousness all the day long . . . I will meditate also of all thy work, and talk of thy doings . . . Make me to understand the way of thy precepts: so shall I talk of thy wondrous works . . . They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power " (Psa 71:24; 77:12; 119:27; 145:11).

When once a work of God takes place among believers, they will speak about it. That is their nature, and it is the nature of the works of God to provoke such talking.

Today there are all manner of programs perpetrated within the Christian community that are designed to get people to witness, testify, and speak to others about the Lord. This is an admission that the modern church is weak in this area. However, should the Lord of glory begin working among the people, the tongues of the people would suddenly be loosed. This will not happen, however, as long as the religion of the people is confined to philosophy and institutional fervor. It is ever true, "A city set on a hill cannot be hid" (Matt 5:14). It must, however, be a "city."

MANY BELIEVED IN THE LORD

" . . . and many believed in the Lord." Other versions read, "many believed on the Lord," NKJV "had faith in the Lord," BBE "put their trust in the Lord," CJB "many came to believe in the Lord," WILLIAMS and "many came to believe on the Lord [to adhere to and trust in and rely on Him as the Christ and as their Savior]." AMPLIFIED

Here again, I want to draw attention to the way in which the results are described. This is not the way a great renewal would have been reported among the people with whom I was once identified. We did not use this kind of language for fear someone might think we belonged to a denominational church that was not particular about how they described being saved. However, this is the language of the Spirit, and it is both precise and broad in its meaning.

Prior to this, when Peter healed Aeneas, it is written that the people “turned to the Lord” (9:35). On the day of Pentecost, the people are said to have gladly received the word and been baptized (2:41). Later, we will read of people being granted repentance (11:18), turning to God (15:19), and believing and being baptized (18:8).

These do not represent different ways in which people are saved. Rather, they provide us with different perspectives of salvation, all of which are present in every instance of conversion. There is no such thing as a conversion in which a person does not repent, or does not believe, or is not baptized. No conversion occurs without a person being delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of God’s dear Son (Col 1:13). No person is saved who is not added to the church (Acts 2:47), and placed in the body of Christ precisely where God intends (1 Cor 12:18). Everyone who is saved, with no exception, are quickened from death in trespasses and sins (Eph 2:1-4).

God has made absolutely no provision for a salvation in which men are not saved from sin, the guilt of sin, the power of sin, the devil, and this present evil world. There is no salvation in which men are not effectively raised, justified, accepted, delivered, and quickened (Eph 2:8; 1 Tim 1:9; Acts 13:39; Rom 5:1; Eph 1:6; 1 Thess 1:9; Heb 2:14; 9:14; Gal 1:4).

All of these experiences come together, and none are isolated from the rest. We do not receive the forgiveness of sins, only to be justified later. Nor, indeed are we accepted by God but not given His Holy Spirit. It is not possible to be reconciled to God and not be at peace with Him, or to be made alive in Christ Jesus, yet retain a preference for sin.

When we refer to any component or facet of salvation, we include the whole of it as well. Men cannot receive Christ as Savior, yet not as Lord, for the two always travel together (2 Pet 1:11; 2:20; 3:2,18). What is more, everyone begins the same way and with the same benefits in Christ Jesus. They have all been freed, have access to God, and possess a clean slate. There are not different ways to be born again, or different effects of the birth itself.

This is why men look in vain for patterns and systems in the book of Acts. It is not a book of procedures, but the record of the working of the Lord. That record looks at salvation much as a person beholds a rotating globe of the world. At any one time, a single part of the world may seem dominate, but it is only a part of the world, and not the world itself. Men do well to culture their souls to read the book of Acts in such a way as to never lose the sight of the magnificent entirety of God’s great salvation.

Such a perspective will serve to clarify the greatness of your own salvation, and will produce confidence and assurance within you, both of which will stand in the day of judgment.

HE TARRIED IN JOPPA MANY DAYS

“ 43 And it came to pass, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner. ” Other versions read, “he stayed many days,” NKJV “stayed in Joppa for some time,” NIV “abode many days,” ASV “stayed a long time,” NAB “remained for a considerable time,” WEYMOUTH “for several days,” WILLIAMS and “for considerable time.” AMPLIFIED

SPECIFIED PERIODS IN PAUL’S LIFE

3 years: Damascus and Arabia

1 Year: Antioch

1 ½ years: Corinth

3 years: Ephesus

2 years: prison (Caesarea)

3 months: Greece

3 months: Melita

2 years: Rome

13 YEARS

Now, Peter remains in Joppa for an unspecified period of time. It was not a lengthy period, like some identified with Paul. He said after his conversion it was “three years” before he went to Jerusalem (Gal 1:18). Paul spent “a whole year” in Antioch, meeting regularly with the church there (Acts 11:26). He spend “a year and six months” in Corinth (Acts 18:11). He disputed in a synagogue in Ephesus for “three months” (Acts 19:8), then remained in Ephesus for “two full years,” disputing in the school of Tyrannus (Acts 19:9-10). He told the elders at Ephesus that he had spent “three years” among them, warning every man night and day with tears because of an imminent onslaught of self-centered teachers that he saw coming (Acts 20:30-31). Fetus left him in prison for “two years” in Caesarea (Acts 24:27). He remained in Greece for “three months” Acts 26:3), and “three months ” on the Isle of Melita (Acts 28:13). In Rome, Paul spent “two whole years in his own house” (Acts 28:30).

These specified periods account for thirteen years of Paul’s life. The duration of other imprisonments are not known (2 Tim 1:16; Eph 3:1; Phile 1:1).

I provide these facts to substantiate that lengthy periods of time are not stated in terms of days, but of months and years. The time, therefore, that Peter spent in Joppa does not appear to have been unusually lengthy, and is therefore stated in terms of days.

During this time, we assume that Peter continued to strengthen the saints, and declare the Gospel to those who had not yet believed. The fact that all of Joppa believed at the report of Tabitha being raised from the dead, confirms that the Gospel had been preached to them, for “how shall they believe on Him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher?” (Rom 10:14).

The word “tarried” is translated from a word that means, “to remain, abide . . . not to depart.” THAYER It is as though Peter knew there was a work to be done in that area, and so he continued there, like Paul did in Antioch, Corinth, and Ephesus. Neither he nor Paul was idle when they remained in a place. For the saints in this area, the period of rest that was being enjoyed was augmented with sound doctrine. I do not doubt that the believers in that area continued to take advantage of this unique opportunity.

A TANNER

“This trade, on account of the bad smell connected with it (comp. Schol. on Aristoph. Eq. 44; Petron. Sat. 11), was despised among the Jews (Kethuboth, 7:10; Megillah, 3, 2; see Schöttgen, Hor. Heb. i, 447; Wettstein, N.T. 2, 516).” McCLINTOK & STRONG’S ENCYCLOPEDIA

“The Jews looked upon tanning as an undesirable occupation and well they might, for at best it was accompanied with unpleasant odors and unattractive lights, if not even ceremonially unclean. We can imagine that Simon the tanner found among the disciples of Jesus a fellowship which had been denied him before.” INTERNATIONAL STANDARD BIBLE ENCYCLOPEDIA

SIMON THE TANNER

Here is another man of whom we know very little. He was a “tanner,” Other versions read, “a leather tanner,” CJB “a leather worker,” GWN and “a tanner of hides.” NLT The word “tanner” refers to a person who worked with hides that had been “stripped from dead animals.” THAYER Other definition include the following: “a person who prepares animal skins for use tanner, leather dresser,” FRIBERG “a person who prepares animal skins for use tanner, leather dresser.” LOUW-NIDA

Historians tell us that the work of the tanner was despised by the Jews like the work of shepherding was by the Egyptians (Gen 46:34).

We are not told why Peter chose to stay with Simon. We assume that he was a member of the household of faith, and had opened his house to Peter. The apostle no doubt had recalled some of the words of Jesus, when He first sent out the disciples to preach the Gospel of the Kingdom. “And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy ; and there abide till ye go thence. And when ye come into an house, salute it. And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it : but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you” (Matt 10:11-13). Simon the tanner was obviously a man that was “worthy,” else Peter would not remained there. Further, Peter had no doubt let his peace be upon house, as Jesus had instructed them to do at the first.

The act of hospitality is frequently mentioned in relation to those who preached the Gospel. A man named Judas received Saul of Tarsus while he was waiting for further word from the Lord (Acts 9:11). Mary, the mother of John Mark, entertained many saints in her house as they gathered for prayer (Acts 12:12). Lydia twice received Paul and Silas into her house (Acts 16:15,40). After he was converted, the Philippian jailer received Paul and Silas into his house (Acts 16:34). Jason received Paul and Silas into his house at the jeopardy of his own life (Acts 17:7). A man named Justus received Paul into his house (Acts 18:8). Philip the evangelist received Paul and those with him into his house (Acts 21:8). Paul said a man named Onesiphorus often refreshed him, and prayed the Lord would bless his house because of it (2 Tim 1:6). John wrote a man named Gaius, commending him for frequently entertaining brethren and strangers (3 John 1:5-8). It is always good to remember the word of the Lord concerning the matter of hospitality: “Do not neglect to show hospitality to strangers, for by this some have entertained angels without knowing it” (Heb 13:2). That is what is being lived out in the book of Acts.

CONCLUSION

We have been provided a glimpse of the manner in which the Gospel was preached and people were brought to believe. In this text, it all began with giving attention to the saints , and building them up during a time of “rest” from persecution. When the people of God were strengthened, the Word spread, and people were turned to the Lord, and believed on Him. That continues to be a most excellent strategy, for when people are mature in Christ Jesus, He comes to dwell in their hearts y faith, as affirmed in Ephesians 3:16-17). A weak and vacillating church ought not engage in outreach ministries. They ought to rather heed the word of Jesus to such churches: “I counsel you to buy from Me gold refined in the fire, that you may be rich; and white garments, that you may be clothed, that the shame of your nakedness may not be revealed; and anoint your eyes with eye salve, that you may see” NKJV (Rev 3:18). When churches become strong, Christ works within them, and when He works within them, word gets out.

Lesson #45

CORNELIUS HEARS FROM THE LORD

“ 10:1 There was a certain man in Caesarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band, 2 A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway. 3 He saw in a vision evidently about the ninth hour of the day an angel of God coming in to him, and saying unto him, Cornelius. 4 And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord? And he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God. 5 And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter: 6 He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side: he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do. 7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually; 8 And when he had declared all these things unto them, he sent them to Joppa. ” (Acts 10:1-8)

INTRODUCTION

Our attention is drawn to a Gentile who was a military man, head of a group of soldiers called “The Italian Regiment.” NKJV Here we note the propensity of the Lord to deal with specific people, noting their manner of life. It is possible to have a view of Divine dealings that is too general, accenting the provisions made for everyone, but overlooking the specific and discretionary dispensing of those provisions. God was not only the one who initiated the provision of salvation, He is also the One who originate the experience of it.

Even though Cornelius was a military man with considerable responsibility, this did not interfere with his life before God. While, in the capacity of a Roman Centurion, Cornelius had continued to maintain a godly disposition, fearing God, giving alms liberally, and praying to God always. The Lord saw his devotion, and sent an angel to instruct him. He excelled in praying and giving, both of which require time, thought, and action.

In the event reported in our text, the stage is being set for one of the great epochs of Divine history. The river of the water of life will break out of Jewish boundaries, and begin to flow to the Gentiles. This was something promised to Abraham, announced by the prophets, and declared on the day of Pentecost. Yet, the time had not yet come for the fulfillment of those words. Now, however, the hour has arrived, and the Divine initiative is launched.

As with the Jews, the first to hear the Gospel will be devout people, who have been earnest in living up to what they already knew about the Lord (Acts 2:5). As I have mentioned in prior lessons, this is a facet of Divine working that is scarcely known. In fact, such an approach is often insinuated to be unacceptable. It is commonly perceived that the morally degenerate and spiritually ignorant are the ones that require the immediate attention. However, this is not how God carried out His purpose, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to support such a supposition.

This entire episode was without any original planning or initiative on the part of men. It was not the outcome of a plan or strategy that had been developed by men. Even the church did not come up with this approach. Neither, indeed, was it the result of a prayer for direction on what to do and how to preach and teach. Rather, it was what occurred when the Lord took note of the activities of a man – a man who was devout and gave much alms to “the people” – the Jewish people, who were the chosen nation.

Just as He did with Saul of Tarsus, the Lord will send Cornelius to a man who knows the truth and can effectively declare it. Paul refers to this Divine manner when he wrote, “Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man ?” (1 Cor 3:5). By saying the Lord “gives” these ministers, he means that they are sent out by Him, as affirmed in Romans 10:15: “And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!” Their feet are beautiful, not only because of the message they bring, but because of the One who sent them.

I have repeatedly drawn your attention to the fact that the book of Acts is a record of the Lord governing the Kingdom and building His church. The following references point out this undeniable activity.

- “ . . . the Lord added to the church . . . ” (Acts 2:47).

The preaching and testimonies

However, conversion itself is what initiates accord between God and man, and faith is the means through which it is sustained. Once men commence to really live by faith (Heb 10:38) and walk in the Spirit (Gal 5:25), cleansing themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord (2 Cor 7:1), an environment will be created that will serve to dispel erroneous views and restore power to the church.

recorded in Acts also contain numerous references to angels working in the past (7:30,35,38; 11:13), and the Lord speaking (2:34; 3:22; 7:31,33,37; 9:17,27; 11:16; 12:17; 13:47; 15:17; 20:35; 22:10).

All of this confirms the activity of all of heaven in the Kingdom and work of the Lord: the Father, the Son, the Holy Spirit, and angels. This provides some insight into the phrase, “the heavens do rule” (Dan 4:26). A rule requires involvement with the domain and personalities over whom the rule is maintained. Thus it is written that the “most High ruleth IN the kingdom of men” (Dan 4:17,25). All of these personalities are represented as being involved in the work itself, revealing, directing, judging, and ruling. This view of the Kingdom is essential to a proper understanding of things pertaining to life and godliness. The Scriptures, which are absolutely essential, are not to be considered an end of themselves. They are “given by inspiration of God” (2 Tim 3:16), but are the means to certain ordained objectives.

- They “testify” of Jesus Christ (John 5:19), which testimony is “the spirit of prophecy” (Rev 19:10).
- They are given in order “That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works” (2 Tim 3:17).
- Through them the purpose of God, kept secret from the foundation of the world, is “made manifest” (Rom 16:26).
- They contain records of God’s dealings with men, and were written “that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope” (Rom 15:4).

However, the Scriptures do not obtain their power independently of Divine involvement – and that involvement is realized through faith. The word of God is appropriately referred to as “the sword of the Spirit” (Eph 6:17), who is active in the dissemination and exposition of it. It is the involvement of Deity that causes the appointed results to take place in the people.

The point here is that the book of Acts not only contains the report of the working of the Lord, but of a people who were genuinely converted and were trusting in Him. Corrupt teaching, and consequent departures from the faith, were the exception, not the rule. The clash between the record and the contemporary experience of the church is so significant that men have concocted special theological views to account for the absence of Divine involvement. They have also developed schemes that they say will restore that involvement. However, conversion itself is what initiates accord between God and man, and faith is the means through which it is sustained. Once men commence to really live by faith (Heb 10:38) and walk in the Spirit (Gal 5:25), cleansing themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord (2 Cor 7:1), an environment will be created that will serve to dispel erroneous views and restore power to the church. We are reading of a people who have been joined to the Lord, and are one spirit with Him (1 Cor 6:17).

A CERTAIN MAN CALLED CORNELIUS

“ 10:1 There was a certain man in Caesarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band, 2 A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway.”

We are again exposed to a heavenly initiative. Here was an outreach that was not planned or initiated by men. We will also see in this account the kind of men for whom God is seeking – and it will be in perfect accord with what has been revealed in Scripture concerning that matter. Permit me to remind you of some of the Divine initiatives we have confronted thus far in the book of Acts.

- Jesus poured forth the Spirit upon His disciples, giving them both insight and power to declare that insight in words (2:1-14).
- The angel of the Lord told the apostles to go to the Temple and speak all the words of this life (5:20).
- Philip is told to go down to the desert road leading to Gaza, and then join himself to a chariot on that road (8:26,29).
- Jesus appears to Saul of Tarsus, then sends Ananias to tell him what he must do (Acts 9:3-16).

Now one of the great epochs of Scripture will take place, and it will be strictly initiated, orchestrated, and carried to its fruition by the Lord. This is another picture of Jesus governing the Kingdom and building His church.

A CERTAIN MAN

“There was a certain man in Caesarea called Cornelius . . .”

When men go forth to minister the Word, they speak to men in general, for that is what they have been commissioned to do. However, there are individuals that God will not allow to wait until His people become aware of them, or see the necessity of delivering the Word to them. These are people who have been duly noted in heaven, even if men have not particularly considered them. I do understand that all men may not be in this category. However, I am equally persuaded that there are more such people than are ordinarily perceived. It is God who noted this “certain man,” and will now call him to Himself, using the means that He has ordained – a message and a messenger.

Caesarea

Caesarea was about thirty miles from Joppa, and was in the region of Samaria, the middle section of Canaan. Although this was in the promised land, this area was largely without the knowledge of God. Jesus spent very little time there, and there is no record of Him, doing any miracles there. Yet now, since He was enthroned, an extensive ministry is taking place there. First, Philip carried the Gospel to the city of Samaria (8:5). Then Peter and John preached throughout the region (8:14,25). Then Peter strengthens the disciples in Lydda, preaches in the region, and all of Lydda and Saron turn to the Lord (9:35). Then he ministers in Joppa, and throughout the whole city many believed in the Lord (9:42).

The manner in which the Word is being spread in this area follows no pattern according to man’s wisdom. First, Philip went North to Samaria. Then the Spirit moved him South to the desert to road leading to Gaza, and then to the southern region of Samaria, near the border of Judea, to Azotus. Then Peter goes from Jerusalem to Samaria, then moves South to Lydda, then West to Joppa, then North again to Caesarea. Philip went to Samaria and spoke to a city. Peter and John went to the people in Samaria, than passed through the regions between there and Jerusalem.

However, there were also individuals were also involved. We see, then, that the working of the Lord concerns both groups of people and individuals.

Thus we see Divine direction to:

- CITIES (Jerusalem–Acts 1:8), Samaria–8:14), Azotus–8:40).
- REGIONS (Judea, Samaria–1:8, a desert road near Gaza–8:26).
- THE WHOLE EARTH (uttermost part of the earth–1:8).
- INDIVIDUALS (an unnamed lame man in Jerusalem–3:1, the Ethiopian eunuch near Gaza– 8:29, “a certain man named Aeneas” in Lydda– 9:33, “a certain disciple named Tabitha” in Joppa–9:36, and now “a certain man named Cornelius in Caesarea” – 10:1. There were also specific people who were ungodly in their manners: “a certain man in Jerusalem named Ananias and his wife Sapphira” –5:1), and “a certain man called Simon” in Samaria–9:9).
- CHURCHES (In Judea, Galilee, and Samaria–9:31).

This same diversity will be seen throughout the book of Acts, and the epistles as well.

There is no way that mere men could have planned these incidents, their nature, and the way they were carried out. They all involved the hearts of men as well as their spiritual status. The fulfillment of them required the King of kings and Lord of lords. Not only were there natural circumstances to be overcome, and distracting people like Simon the sorcerer, but there were also principalities and powers in higher realms who had governed this region (largely Samaria), for a long time. If we were able to see behind the scenes, we would behold a significant intrusion being made into the kingdom of darkness.

Now, our attention is focused on a particular man – a Gentile. His name is Cornelius – a Roman name, meaning “of a horn.” It is assumed by historians that he belonged to the Cornelii, “a noble and distinguished family in Rome.” He is reckoned by Julian the Apostate as one of the few distinguished people who embraced Christianity. MCLINTOK AND STRONG’S If this is true, it is another confirmation of a Divine manner declared by Paul: “For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty” (1 Cor 1:16-27). However, even then, when such people are called, it is not owing to their worldly distinction. The church has no need for such people, even though salvation is offered to them. However, when such are blessed to be called, they do not bring their worldly prestige into the church. What they are in this world does not contribute a thing to what they are in Christ Jesus. This is why it is wrong to give lofty religious titles to people because they have attained to worldly status. This includes those with academic credentials, who can fall under the category of “wise men,” should their wisdom extend beyond books. As will be noted in the case of Cornelius, he was noted in heaven for his moral and spiritual demeanor.

A CENTURION

“ . . . a centurion of the band called the Italian band . . . ”

The Roman army was made up of many legion, each one consisting of 6,000 troops. Each Legion consisted of ten cohorts, or regiments. Each cohort, or regiment, consisted of three bands, and each band consisted of two groups of one hundred troops each. Cornelius was the head over one of these groups, for the title “Centurion” means the captain of one hundred men. Thus we are introduced to a man from a noble family, who occupied a significant place in the army of Rome. This government was the fourth government of Daniel’s vision, and was described as a kingdom that was “strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise” (Dan 2:40). It was also likened to a beast that was unique from other governments, “exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron, and his nails of brass; which devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet” (Dan 7:19). It was prophesied that it would be “diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces” (Dan 7:23).

By the time of our text, Rome had accomplished all of those things, and had been ruling the world for many years. It was the kingdom during which the God of heaven set up His Kingdom which will, as it is affirmed, “break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever” (Dan 2:44). Now, we find a man who is integral to this kingdom, and to its military branch that fulfilled the prophesy of a ruthless and powerful kingdom, crushing all other worldly empires. Speaking as a man, it is not likely that one would find a godly person in such surroundings. However, like Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord in an unlikely place, so will Cornelius also experience that marvelous grace.

Keep in mind that this man would never have been reached for Christ if the Lord Himself had not launched the initiative, just as He did with the Ethiopian eunuch and Saul of Tarsus.

A DEVOUT MAN

“ . . . A devout man . . . ” Other versions read, “serious-minded man,” BBE “pious,” DARBY “religious man,” DOUAY “righteous,” MRD “godly man,” LIVING “good man,” IE “very religious man,” CEV and “deeply religious man.” PHILLIPS

Most all of the standard (non-interpretive and literal) versions of Scripture read “devout.” This word is translated from the Greek word euvsbh.j (yoo-seb-ace), which has the following lexical meaning: “pious, dutiful toward God,” THAYER “of a manner of life lived reverently and respectfully toward God,” FRIBERG “godly, religious,” UBS “of a manner of life lived reverently and respectfully toward God,” LOUW-NIDA “righteous in act,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “reverent.” GINGRICH

The word “devout” has to do with the outward life – with the expression of what is in the heart. It parallels the English word “religious,” which is also used in Scripture (Acts 13:43; James 1:26, Acts 17:22 NKJV/NASB/NIV). The noun form of that word (“religion”) is also used in Scripture (Acts 26:5; Gal 1:13-14; James 1:26-27). The word itself does not express emptiness or hypocrisy, although that is often a suitable description for a mere form of religion that is only in outward manners, and not within the heart and mind. However, no person is truly godly who is not outwardly so – devout, or religious.

Often people say they want nothing to do with “religion,” but this is an unthoughtful statement, and is by no means proper. James tells us that religion is vain if it is in any way inconsistent with the truth, or is self-centered (James 1:26-27). While it is possible to emulate a Christian profession through various outward forms, it is not possible to possess faith without it impacting one’s behavior.

The point being made about Cornelius is that he was outwardly pious, living in a manner that was consistent with a profession of being a worshiper of God. Those who live sloppy and inconsistent lives do err when they ask us not to judge them according to their appearance, claiming that they really do love the Lord, yet simply do not reflect so outwardly. That would be similar to God not acting like God, or Jesus not conducting Himself as Lord, or the Holy Spirit not being holy. A consistent conflict between one’s profession and manner of life constitutes one a hypocrite. Cornelius was not such a man, but was devout, pious, and reverent in his manner of life.

HE FEARED GOD WITH ALL OF THIS HOUSE

“ . . . and one that feared God with all his house . . . ” Other versions read, “God-fearing,” NIV “fearing God,” BBE “God-fearer,” CJB “respected God,” GWN “deeply reverent,” LIVING “worshiped God,” IE “revered God,” WILLIAMS “venerated God and treated Him with reverential obedience,” AMPLIFIED and “reverenced God.” PHILLIPS

Those who live unto the Lord are frequently said to “fear God” (Gen 42:18; Ex 1:17,21; 18:21; Neh 8:2; Job 1:1; Psa 66:16; Acts 13:15¹ Col 3:22). This is also an expression that is tied to one’s manner of life, as is confirmed in the texts I have cited. The idea is that the fear of God moves the individual to shape his life to please the Lord. Such a person, as Zacharias and Elizabeth, walks in all the “commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless” (Lk 1:6). Whatever may be said about not being afraid of God, or not being controlled by fear, the truth of the matter is that those who know the Lord are afraid of the consequences of displeasing Him, not obeying Him, or in any way living as though He did not exist. In this day of India rubber theology that has no spiritual firmness, this kind of approach to life is virtually unknown.

The expression “with all his house” applies to both being devout and fearing God. It also includes servants, and is not confined to the family of Cornelius. The outward manner of the lives of all within his house were upright. While one’s relationship to God is certainly not wholly dependent upon outward conduct, it does involve it. In the Spirit’s citation of men and women who lived by faith (Hebrews 11), there is a consistent parallel between their faith and what they did . Those who attempt to draw a fine line between faith and conduct have neither spoken wisely or correctly.

HE GAVE MUCH ALMS

“ . . . which gave much alms to the people . . . ” Other versions read, “gave alms generously to the people,” NKJV “gave many alms to the Jewish people,” NASB “he gave generously to those in need,” NIV “gave much money to the poor,” BBE “gave generously to help the Jewish poor,” CJB “did many charitable deeds for the Jewish people,” CSB “gave generously to Jewish causes,” NJB “gave generously to charity,” LIVING and “was also liberal in his charities to the people.” WEYMOUTH

The words “ the people” are translated from the Greek expression tw/l law/l , which employs the definite article “the,” as opposed to a reference to people in general. As used here, the word translated “people” means “people, tribe, nation, all those who are of the same stock and language” THAYER and “as a religious technical term, of Israel as God's chosen people.” FRIBERG

Whatever may be said about not being afraid of God, or not being controlled by fear, the truth of the matter is that those who know the Lord are afraid of the consequences of displeasing Him, not obeying Him, or in any way living as though He did not exist.

Cornelius is depicted as giving to the poor among the Jewish people – “THE people.” As Peter says of the Gentiles, as compared to the Jews, they are “ not a people” (1 Pet 2:10; Deut 32:21; Isa 7:8). All other nations are gathered under the single appellation “Gentiles.” God recognized no national distinction other than that of Israel , the only conglomerate of individuals that He, outside of Christ, has consolidated under one name.

The text neither states or suggests that the Jewish poor were the only ones to which Cornelius gave alms. They were, however, the people who distinguished his gifts as being related to fearing God – and that is the whole point of the text. This specifically relates to the promise God made to Abraham: “And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee” (Gen 12:3). Isaac also said these words to Jacob: “blessed be he that blesseth thee” (Gen 27:29-30). In his prophesy concerning Israel, Balaam said of them, “Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee” (Num 24:9). You may recall that one thing that commended a certain centurion whose servant “was sick and ready to die” was spoken by the disciples to Jesus: “For he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue” (Luke 7:5). Jesus did not rebuke their statement. Instead, “He went with them,” and healed the centurion’s servant (Lk 7:6-10). This was also the man of whom Jesus said, “I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel” (Luke 7:9) – something He said of no other person.

The view of “people” that considers those who are identified with the Lord perfectly coincides with the teaching of Jesus, who revealed that there is a sense in which the eternal destiny of people will depend upon how they responded to His “brethren” (Matt 25:40,45). In this day of generalities, this view has been so obscured it is scarcely known among professing Christians.

HE PRAYED ALWAYS

“ . . . and prayed to God alway.” Other versions read, “prayed continually,” NASB “prayed to regularly,” NIV “prayed constantly to God,” NRSV “supplicating God continually,” DARBY “was a man of prayer,” LIVING and “was a real man of prayer.” PHILLIPS

There are several different Greek words for praying.

Every person is expected to live up to the measure of truth they possess. Only then will more be given. This fact explains why many people have little . . . Cornelius was living up to the knowledge that he did have of God, and was doing so consistently and with integrity.

- proseu,comai (Matt 5:44) – to speak to or make requests of God. THAYER
- parakale,w (Matt 26:53) – to ask for something earnestly and with propriety .

LOUW-NIDA

- de,omai (Acts 8:22) – to ask for with urgency, with the implication of presumed need. LOUW-NIDA

- de,hsij (Rom 10:1) – that which is asked with urgency based on presumed need. LOUW-NIDA

- eu;comai (2 Cor 13:7) – petitionary pray, or appeal to God. FRIBERG

- e;nteuxij (1 Tim 4:5) – meeting with one, as a form of intercession. FRIBERG

- euvch, (James 5:15) – to speak to or make requests of God. LOUW-NIDA

- evrwta,w (1 John 5:16) – make a request of God. FRIBERG

The word used here is deo,menoj, which a form of de,omai, and means “to ask or beg,” THAYER “make petition, plead, ask,” FRIBERG “implore,” UBS and “to ask for with urgency, with the implication of presumed need - 'to plead, to beg.’” LOUW-NIDA The idea presented here is that of dependency upon God, as though to say Cornelius always depended, or relied, upon God by means prayer. This kind of attitude was found in David. “Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice” (Psa 55:17). Cornelius articulated his desires to God. Prayers of this sort are found in the book of Psalms.

- “Lead me in Thy truth, and teach me: for Thou art the God of my salvation; on Thee do I wait all the day” (Psa 25:5).

- “Be merciful unto me, O Lord: for I cry unto Thee daily” (Psa 86:3).

Also, prayer, by its very nature, is an expression of faith, for “he that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him” (Heb 11:6).

A Technicality

On one occasion, after God had healed a blind man, the restored man was confronted by skeptics. They questioned the possibility of Jesus of Nazareth being heard by God. He replied, “Now we know that God heareth not sinners : but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth His will, him He heareth” (John 9:31). Some, seeking to capitalize on this verse, teach that unless a person is in Christ, their prayers will not be heard, because they are “sinners.” However, the case of Cornelius confirms that this is not an accurate statement. The idea of the statement made by the former blind man is that those devoted to sin, and who have no interest in being forgiven by God, will not be heard by Him. However, He will not turn a deaf ear to those who are seeking Him with their whole heart, are discontent with their sin, and are relying upon Him. He will not, however come to the aid of those who are living an enmity with Him, and turning away from what sparse knowledge they may have of Him. Thus it is written, “If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me” (Psa 66:18). “The LORD is far from the wicked: but He heareth the prayer of the righteous” (Prov 15:29). To a hypocritical nation the Lords said, “And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide Mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood. Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil” (Isa 1:15-16). Every person is expected to live up to the measure of truth they possess. Only then will more be given. This fact explains why many people have little.

I therefore conclude that Cornelius was living up to the knowledge that he did have of God, and was doing so consistently and with integrity. It is for this reason that the Lord, who have given attention to his demeanor, will now intervene, bringing further light to him.

HE SAW A VISION

“ 3 He saw in a vision evidently about the ninth hour of the day an angel of God coming in to him, and saying unto him, Cornelius.”

This Divine initiative was toward a “devout man.” Although this approach conflicts with many contemporary views of evangelism and missions, we will find that it is a fairly consistent approach in the record of Divine initiatives. This was the approach on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:5). Paul was noted for carrying the Gospel to “devout” people (Acts 13:50; 17:4,17). Everywhere he went, he first delivered the Gospel in the synagogues (Acts 9:20; 13:5,14; 14:1; 17:1,10,17; 18:4, 19; 19:8). It is the manner of the Lord to operate according to this revealed principle: “And he said unto them, Take heed what ye hear: with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you: and unto you that hear shall more be given. For he that hath, to him shall be given : and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath” (Mark 4:25).

Jesus also revealed an aspect of the Kingdom that is interesting to consider. He portrayed outsiders as receiving the second invitation to the supper of salvation, not the first. When declaring the kingdom of heaven was likened to “a certain king which made a marriage for his son,” he said that those who had already been “bidden” were to come. When they did not come, he sent a second word, telling them that all things were ready – that they should come to the marriage. When they again declined, he judged them and told his servant, “Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage” (Matt 22:9; Lk 14:23).

In the case of Cornelius, he being a Gentile, fell into the second category who were offered salvation. As it is written, “For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek ” (Rom 1:16). Doctrinally, this was the result of “some” of the Jewish branches being broken off, and the branches from a wild olive tree being grafted into their tree (Rom 11:17-20).

In further confirmation of this principle, Jesus told His disciples “that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem ” (Luke 24:47). Additionally He told that they would be His witnesses “both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth” (Acts 1:8).

When the apostles began preaching, they did precisely as Jesus had told them, first preaching the Gospel to those who had been cultured to receive it. Now, heaven moves to bring salvation to the Gentiles. This will be done in fulfillment of the prophets.

- “And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious” (Isa 11:10).
- “Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles” (Isa 42:1).
- “I the LORD have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles” (Isa 42:6).
- “And he said, It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth” (Isa 49:6).

When the apostles began preaching, they did precisely as Jesus had told them, first preaching the Gospel to those who had been cultured to receive it. Now, heaven moves to bring salvation to the Gentiles. This will be done in fulfillment of the prophets.

“Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders” (Isa 49:22).

- “And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising” (Isa 60:3).

A VISION ABOUT THE NINTH HOUR

“He saw in a vision evidently about the ninth hour of the day . . .” Other versions read, “about three in the afternoon he had a vision,” NIV “While wide awake one afternoon he had a vision – it was about three o'clock,” LIVING and “in a dream.” PHILLIPS

The word “evidently” means clearly. Other versions read, “clearly,” NKJV “distinctly,” NIV “openly,” ASV “plainly,” DARBY “manifestly.” DOUAY “plainly,” NAB “perfectly clearly,” PHILLIPS and “perceived in sight.” INTERLINEAR Visions have been used by God to communicate with men through all ages.

Prior to the Law. God spoke to Abraham in a vision (Gen 15:1). He also spoke to Jacob in a vision (Gen 46:2).

After the giving of the Law. God spoke in visions to Samuel (1 Sam 3:15), Nathan (2 Sam 7:17), Iddo (2 Chron 9:29), Isaiah (2 Chron 32:32; Isa 1:1), Ezekiel (Ezek 1:1), Daniel (Dan 2:19; 4:5; 7:1; 8:1; 9:21; 10:1), Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 2:28); Obadiah (Obad 1:1), Nahum (Nah 1:1), and Habakkuk (Hab 2:2).

After Jesus came into the world. God gave visions to Peter, James, and John (Matt 17:5), Zacharias (Luke 1:22), the women who came to the tomb of Jesus (Lk 24:23), Ananias (Acts 9:10), Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9:12), Cornelius (Acts 10:3), Peter (Acts 10:17; 11:5; 12:9), Paul the apostle (Acts 16:9; 18:9; 26:19; 2 Cor 12:1), and John the beloved (Rev 9:17).

Defined etymologically, a vision is “that which is seen, a sight, spectacle . . . a sight divinely granted in an ecstasy or in sleep” THAYER and “vision as opposed to figment of the imagination.” GINGRICH

Academically, a vision is defined as “a supernatural presentation of certain scenery or circumstances to the mind of a person while awake,” MCCLINTOK-STRONG’S and “a vivid apparition, not a dream.” EASTON

Doctrinally, valid visions are initiated by God (Num 12:8; Joel 2:28; Acts 2:17). There are also vain visions, which are nothing more than the imagination of men (Ezek 12:24; 13:7). While there are valid and profitable visions, they are not the greatest means of Divine communication. This is confirmed by God’s own word to some of Moses’ critics: “Hear now my words: If there be a prophet among you, I the LORD will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream. My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all mine house. With him will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches; and the similitude of the LORD shall he behold: wherefore then were ye not afraid to speak against my servant Moses?” (Num 12:6-8). This by no means justifies a demeaning view of visions, but rather gives us a proper perspective of them so we will not be prone to covet them or seek them.

Visions can be extensive. For example, the entire book of Isaiah was a vision (Isa 1:1). The same is true of the prophesy of Obadiah (Obad 1:1), Nahum (Nah 1:1), much of the book of Daniel (Dan 7:1,7,13; 8:1,17,26; 10:1,8,16), and at least great sections of the book of the Revelation (Rev 9:17).

A vision is distinguished from a dream (Num 12:6; Job 20:8; 33:15), although the distinction is not labored in Scripture. In both cases, however, something is both seen, and something is generally heard in words as well.

Cornelius Has A Vision

Thus, at three o'clock in the afternoon, Cornelius has a vision, being able to see things for which his natural eyes were not adapted. What he will see is not something that came into the circumference of his natural vision, but something God enabled him to see. It seems to me that it is comely to think of God as having both the ability and the inclination to cause men to see things that are otherwise unseeable.

AN ANGEL CAME IN TO HIM

“ . . . an angel of God coming in to him, and saying unto him, Cornelius.” Every major version reads “angel of God,” emphasizing the one to whom the angel belonged, and for whom he spoke, An exception to this rule is found in a single version reading “from God.” GWN The literal rendering of the Greek words involved are “angel of the God.”

Angels are heavenly messengers that are sent out from God to deliver a word from Him, or work something He has purposed. They are wholly devoted to the execution of the Divine will, and never work according to the will of man. Men can neither summon them nor dispatch them. They are never depicted as asking men what they desire them to do. Speaking of both God and Christ, angels are referred to as “His angels” (Job 4:18; 91:11; 103:20; 104:4; 148:2; Matt 13:41; 16:27; Heb 1:7; Rev 3:5). They take orders from God (Psa 91:11), and they do His commandments and hearken to His voice (Psa 103:20). They are also described as ministering spirits who are charged with the care of the saints of God (Heb 1:13-14).

Now, one of these holy angels comes to Cornelius in a vision – that is, while he was awake, this centurion was given the ability to see an approaching angel – coming right straight toward him. What is more, the angel speaks to him, calling him by name – “Cornelius!” Now we will see how a devout man, who fears God, gives alms to the people of God, and always prays reacts to the sight of a holy angel coming toward him. We may be sure he will not be casual.

HE WAS AFRAID

“ 4a And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord?”

Of old time God has revealed there are certain types of people for which He is looking, and toward whom He is disposed to show favor. Because this is not the kind of God that is being declared in our time, it is good that we briefly consider this aspect of the Divine nature.

There is no record of a vision being given to someone who did not see it. The very word “vision” has two sides to it: something to be seen, and someone who sees it. There is no word in Scripture about a person refusing to look at what was made known in a vision. I do not believe there is any example in the Word of God of a person asking for a vision, or in any way seeking one. There is a sense in which the vision is imposed upon the individual. They are, therefore, given in strict accordance with Divine discretion. Here God gives a vision to a non-Jew, who is not in Christ, and, so far as we know, had not yet heard the Gospel of Christ. He is a member of a foreign government that God has already determined will fall, and that is exercising dominion over the chosen people of God. He is not a peaceful man, but is a military man. Yet, in spite of all those seeming restrictions, Cornelius had, without Christ, risen to more lofty spiritual heights than many professing Christians.

The point to see here is that God will not overlook such a person – one who is consistently devout. Of old time God has revealed there are certain types of people for which He is looking, and toward whom He is disposed to show favor. Because this is not the kind of God that is being declared in our time, it is good that we briefly consider this aspect of the Divine nature. I hardly see how person can advance very far in the faith until this perspective is obtained.

• TENDER HEARTED AND HUMBLE. “Because thine heart was tender , and thou hast humbled thyself before the LORD . . . I also have heard thee, saith the LORD” (2 Kgs 22:19).

• A HEART THAT IS PERFECT TOWARD HIM. “For the eyes of the LORD run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him” (2 Chron 16:9).

• A BROKEN HEART AND A CONTRITE SPIRIT. “The LORD is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit” (Psa 34:18). “The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise” (Psa 51:17).

• THE LOWLY. “Though the LORD be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off” (Psa 138:6).

• THE CONTRITE AND HUMBLE. “For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones” (Isa 57:15).

• THE MEEK. “The spirit of the Lord GOD is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound” (Isa 61:1).

• THOSE WHO TREMBLE AT HIS WORD. “. . . to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word” (Isa 66:2).

This very passage will confirm the truth of these affirmations.

WHEN HE LOOKED ON HIM

“And when he looked on him, he was afraid . . .” Other versions read, “when he observed him,” NKJV “fixing his gaze upon him,” NASB “stared at him,” NIV “stared at him,” NRSV “fastening his eyes upon him,” ASV “stared at the angel,” CJB “having fixed his eyes upon him,” DARBY “beholding him,” DOUAY “looked intently at him,” NAB “looked steadily at him,” WEYMOUTH and “having looked earnestly upon him.” YLT

Cornelius was terrified at the sight – not because he was purposefully living at a distance from the Lord, but because of the hostility of the flesh, and the stark contrast between a person from heaven and one upon the earth. It is this contrast that enables a person to properly evaluate the presence of the Lord.

Remember, Cornelius was not merely beholding an unusual sight. He was witnessing a holy angel advancing toward him – “coming in to him.”

HE WAS AFRAID

“. . . he was afraid . . .” Other versions read, “and being much alarmed” NASB “in fear,” NIV “in terror,” NRSV “and being affrightened,” ASV “terrified,” CJB “and become full of fear,” DARBY “being seized with fear,” DOUAY “being much alarmed,” NAU and “becoming greatly afraid.” NET

Cornelius was terrified at the sight – not because he was purposefully living at a distance from the Lord, but because of the hostility of the flesh, and the stark contrast between a person from heaven and one upon the earth. It is this contrast that enables a person to properly evaluate the presence of the Lord. As long as we remain in the body, we do well to thank God for the veil that obscures glory – even the glory of an angel. Whether Cornelius, Daniel, or John the beloved, the frightening confrontation of a holy angel is still a significantly reduced appearance.

It is apparent that the appearance of an angel is not always like those who visited Abraham and Lot. Angels came “unawares,” and either man knew they were entertaining angels, who had the appearance of men (Heb 13:2; Gen 18:2-10; 19:1-3). The same experience happened to Manoah and his wife, to whom it was later revealed that they had, in fact, faced an angel (Judges 13:15-25). However, this was not always the manner in which angels appeared to men. Often the appearance of them caused great fear (Dan 10:7-12; Lk 2:9).

Such was the case with Cornelius. This was doubtless the result of discerning the obvious superiority of the angel, and the corresponding inferiority of Cornelius himself.

There is such a variance between heaven and earth, that when it is clear that some heavenly personality has intervened in the affairs of men, flesh and blood draws back in fear. One can only speculate what kind of fear and trembling will fall on all of the ungodly when Jesus appears in all of His glory with “all the holy angels” (Matt 25:31).

In a sense, the absence of a phenomenon of this sort is a test, to see whether or not we are willing to serve the Lord – like Israel in the wilderness. It is said of that trek, “And thou shalt remember all the way which the LORD thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments, or no” (Deut 8:2). All of the time they were in that wilderness, there was a mighty angel accompanying them (Ex 23:20,23; 32:34). Yet, that angel was not apparent to them. Judging from outward appearance, it could not even be concluded that a mighty angel was with them – but he was.

When the presence of the Lord is not apparent, life is like an arid desert. Yet, the child of God must proceed on, believing that the Lord is not far from every one of us. Men who lived during such desolate times include Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Gideon, Daniel, the Prophets.

Those who fear God and are devout, are eager to know if there is something the Lord wants them to do – or if there is something unacceptable in their lives.

WHAT IS IT LORD?

“ . . .and said, What is it, Lord?” Every standard translation reads precisely the same: “What is it Lord?” Some of more liberal translations read, “What do you want, sir?” GWN a “What, my Lord?” MRD and “What is this all about?” CEV

According to John Gill, this interrogation might be phrased as follows: “What is the matter?” “What is to be said and done?” “What is the reason for this unusual appearance?” I would add that this response also reveals the character of Cornelius. He does not run in fear like Adam (Gen 3:8), but comes closer, as Moses did to the burning bush (Ex 3:3). Those who fear God and are devout, are eager to know if there is something the Lord wants them to do – or if there is something unacceptable in their lives. They want nothing between them and the Lord, and are eager to do His will. Even though they fear, yet they will draw near to hear and learn.

HIS PRAYERS WERE HEARD, AND HIS ALMS WERE NOTED

“ 4b And he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.”

Being a messenger from God, the angel delivers a word to Cornelius. He does not come to smite him, as the angel of the Lord smote Herod (Acts 12:23). He rather comes to inform him of how the Lord has reacted to His life. Frequently messengers from heaven have informed people of how they are viewed in heaven. An angel told Jacob that he had power with God and man (Gen 32:26). An angel informed Gideon that he had been assessed as a “mighty man of valor” (Judges 6:12). The Lord sent an angel to tell Hezekiah He had heard his prayers and seen his tears (2 Kgs 20:5). An angel told Daniel that he was “greatly beloved” in heaven (Dan 9:23; 10:11,19).

Not only does the Lord try , or test, the hearts of men (Prov 17:3), He responds to what He sees. Not only does He ponder the hearts of men, He is moved by what He sees. Our text will prove to be a sterling example of this.

It is interesting to ponder how we would react if a messenger was sent to us to reveal how heaven has viewed our own works – our prayers and our giving in particular. In the case of Cornelius, a good report will be given, together with instruction concerning the appropriation of salvation in Christ Jesus.

THY PRAYERS AND THINE ALMS

“And he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms . . .” Other versions read, “prayers and gifts to the poor,” NIV “your prayers and your offerings,” BBE “prayers . . . and acts of charity,” CJB “prayers and almsgiving,” NAB and “thy prayers and thy kind acts.” YLT

It is arresting to consider just what had been noticed in heaven: the “prayers” and “alms” of Cornelius – what was spoken to God, and what was given to men.

Prayers

It is evident from what is said that the prayers of Cornelius were more than a mere formal repetition – something that was common among Jewish leaders (Matt 6:7). The text suggests his prayers were more in the order of supplications and petitions. The elements of seeking and asking were in them; the presence of inquiry and fervent desire. The response of the Lord strongly suggests that involved a quest for the salvation of God.

Alms

The word “alms” means “the benefaction itself, a donation to the poor,” THAYER “as benevolent activity toward the poor donation, almsgiving, charitable giving,” FRIBERG and “giving money to a needy person.” UBS As used here, “alms” refers to the actual gift itself, and not the pity and mercy that compelled Cornelius to give it. Just as the Lord observed the two mites that the widow cast into the Temple treasury, so the Lord had observed the amount of the gifts Cornelius had given to the poor. Once again, I want to emphasize that this particularly refers to the Jewish poor, and not merely the poor in general. Cornelius will learn first hand what it means for God to bless those who bless Israel (Gen 12:3; 27:29; Num 24:9).

A MEMORIAL BEFORE GOD

“ . . . are come up for a memorial before God.” Other versions read, “ascended as a memorial,” NASB “gone up for a memorial,” ASV ‘Have come up to God, and he has kept them in mind,’ BBE “have gone up into God's presence, so that he has you on his mind,” CJB “are come up into remembrance before God,” GENEVA “God is aware of your prayers and your gifts to the poor, and he has remembered you,” GWN “Your prayers and charitable gifts have been accepted by God,” NJB “have been received by God as an offering,” NLT “Your prayers and charities have not gone unnoticed by God!” LIVING “God has not forgotten the things you have done,” IE “have gone up and have been recorded before God,” WEYMOUTH “have gone up to Heaven and are remembered before God,” PHILLIPS and “God is pleased . . . and is ready to answer you.” GNB

Come up

The God of heaven had taken due note of both the prayers and alms of this man. This means these deeds were properly motivated, for “God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love, which ye have showed toward His name” (Heb 6:10). The prayers were toward God Himself, and the alms toward the people who belonged to Him.

The words “come up” suggest that the prayers and alms of Cornelius were consistent expressions, not sporadic ones. The picture is of them continually coming before the attention of God. There are people who pray and give occasionally, but it is not their manner of life. While I am not prepared to say that such activities are never noted by God, they are not the kind of activities to which our text refers. An example of a noble deed done occasionally is the account of the good Samaritan that Jesus gave (Lk 10:33). The deed the man was solitary, but addressed a specific situation at a particular time. Addressing an unusual crisis in the name of the Lord is good, and will be duly noted in heaven, as is confirmed in the account of the good Samaritan. However, in this text, the point is the continuity of Cornelius’ prayers to God and gifts to the poor. He had faithfully cast his bread upon the waters, and now it will come back to him (Eccl 11:1). This text will also speak of the fulfillment of one of Solomon’s proverbs: “He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed; for he giveth of his bread to the poor” (Prov 22:9).

Memorial

This is an intriguing word: “memorial.” It is translated from the Greek word mnhmo,sunon , which has the following meaning. “that by which the memory of any person or thing is preserved,” THAYER “what is done that causes someone not to be forgotten memorial, means of reminding,” FRIBERG “something done to arouse the memory of another,” UBS and “something done to arouse the memory of another.” LOUW-NIDA

A memorial is not the remembrance itself, but the thing that provokes the remembrance. It is what causes a person to think upon something in particular, whether a person or something the person has done. In this text, the prayers and alms of Cornelius were the things that moved God to think upon him. They were the “memorial.” The idea is that God was aware of the consistent prayers and alms of Cornelius, and therefore thought upon him, determined to do him good.

On the surface, this may appear to contradict the statement that salvation is “not of works.” However, we must not be infantile in our thinking. God will not save Cornelius because he did these things, but will open the door of faith to him because of his activity – and there is a significant difference between the two.

On the surface, this may appear to contradict the statement that salvation is “not of works.” However, we must not be infantile in our thinking. God will not save Cornelius because he did these things, but will open the door of faith to him because of his activity – and there is a significant difference between the two. Mind you, the door of faith is not opened ONLY to those who have done good. However, here is an example of God doing so. This confirms that God is not looking for a reason to condemn men , for those who do not believe on Jesus are “condemned already” (John 3:18).

The Lord is often said to have been favorably moved by the condition of people, or what they have done.

- LEAH. “And when the LORD saw that Leah was hated, he opened her womb: but Rachel was barren” (Gen 29:31).

- MOSES. “And when the LORD saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses. And he said, Here am I” (Ex 3:4).

- ISRAEL. “For the LORD saw the affliction of Israel, that it was very bitter: for there was not any shut up, nor any left, nor any helper for Israel. And the LORD said not that he would blot out the name of Israel from under heaven: but he saved them by the hand of Jeroboam the son of Joash” (2 Kgs 14:26-27).

• THE WIDOW OF NAIN. “Now when he came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow: and much people of the city was with her. And when the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her, and said unto her, Weep not. And he came and touched the bier: and they that bare him stood still. And he said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise” (Luke 7:12-14).

• WANDERING MULTITUDES. “And Jesus, when he came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion toward them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd: and he began to teach them many things” (Mark 6:34).

In Scripture, God is said to have “remembered” several people. These include the following:

• Noah (Gen 8:1). Following the flood, every living thing, and all that was in the ark. He then made a wind to pass over the earth that caused the waters to recede.

• Abraham (Gen 19:29). Before destroying Sodom, God remembered Abraham, and because of it sent Lord “out of the midst of the overthrow.”

• Rachel (Gen 30:22). When the Lord remembered Rachel, who was barren, He “opened her womb.”

• Hannah (1 Sam 1:19). After Hannah had prayed for a child for some time, and was also provoked by her adversary, the Lord remembered her and she conceived.

• Israel (Psa 78:39; 136:23). Even though Israel had provoked Him many times, the Lord spared them because He remembered “they were but flesh.” He also remembered them “in their low estate,” and “redeemed them from their enemies.”

The Lord is also said to have “remembered” His covenant (Ex 2:24; 6:5; 105:8;). Once He even “remembered His covenant for” Israel (Psa 106:45). He also is said to have “remembered His mercy” (Psa 98:3).

In all of these cases, His remembrance was the prelude to His working – particularly the showing of great mercy. This is a Divine manner that we do well to know. It opens up something of what is involved in being “followers of God as dear children.” The recollection of such people may be the occasion for some special mercy during the time of need, as in the case of Noah. Such devotion and commitment may also be the reason for God sharing His “secret” and revealing aspects of “His covenant,” unveiling secrets that are unknown (Psa 25:14). Such remembrance may even prove to be the reason for delivering another person, as when the Lord delivered Lot because He remembered Abraham, or blessed Israel because He remembered His covenant.

DIRECTION FROM HEAVEN

“ 5 And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter: 6 He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side: he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do.”

The God who has heard Cornelius, and chosen to enlighten him, has also chosen the one who will deliver the word of the Lord to him.

Here again, we will see the manner in which God employs human instrumentality as well as the ministry of holy angels. God rarely deals directly with people – such as He did with Noah (Gen 6:3ff), Abraham (Gen 13:14), Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9:5), or John on the Isle of Patmos (Rev 1:13). Even in those cases, it is not certain the Lord did not speak through an angel, although, if that was the case, a point is not made of it. My point here particularly relates to human involvement – not by the choice of men, but by the choice of God Himself. It is He who determines that “every” man is provided with a minister who will bring the word of salvation to them (Rom 10:15; 1 Cor 3:5).

SEND MEN

“And now send men to Joppa . . .” Other versions read, “dispatch men to Joppa,” NASB and “you must send some men to Joppa.” NJB

Here is the sanctified use of the authority of Cornelius, for he was a “centurion,” over one hundred men. He will now employ that authority for a holy purpose. It is to be assumed that the men he sends will be those who are under his authority. He will not hire a professional messenger, but will dispatch those over whom he has rule. He will, in other words, use what is in his hand – like Moses used his rod, and David used his sling. So Cornelius will use his men.

FOR ONE SIMON

“ . . . and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter . . .” Other versions read, “who is also called Peter,” NASB and “known as Peter.” NJB

“Simon ” was the name given to him by men. “Peter” was the name given to him by Jesus (Matt 10:2; 16:18; John 1:42). The word of the Lord is very specific. He does not tell Cornelius to go to Jerusalem and inquire if there is someone there who can speak to him. The God who has heard Cornelius, and chosen to enlighten him, has also chosen the one who will deliver the word of the Lord to him. His name is Simon – a common name. That is not the name that will distinguish him. The distinguishing name is “Peter,” which identified him as one whom Christ had chosen.

The choice of the messenger was strictly at the discretion of the Lord. He chose Philip to go to Ethiopian eunuch, Ananias to go to Saul of Tarsus, and now Simon Peter to go to Cornelius. Truly, the government has been placed upon the shoulder of the Lord Jesus Christ!

WHERE IS LODGES

“ 6 He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side...”

The “sea” of reference was the Mediterranean Sea on which the city of Joppa was situated. That is where we are informed Peter remained for “many days” (Acts 9:43). He was waiting in a specific house until the appointed time, like Saul of Tarsus waited in the house of one named Judas, which was located on a street “called Straight” (Acts 9:11). All of this involved the Lord positioning people for an assigned work.

HE WILL TELL THEE

“ . . . he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do.” Other versions read, “what you must do.” NKJV This phrase is omitted from modern versions. Whatever may be said in justification of its omission is not acceptable. Later, when Peter gives a report of this incident he said Cornelius was told that Peter was the one, “Who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved” (Acts 11:14). This verse is included in all of the versions that omit the expression of reference in verse six. The statement, then, is an accurate one, precisely stating what Cornelius would be directed to do.

There are requirements for those who desire the salvation of God, and they have not been established by men. Those who have been convicted by the Spirit (John 16:7-1) sense this, and it directs the manner in which they respond to the Gospel: i.e. “what shall we do?” (Acts 2:37); “what wilt Thou have me to do?” (Acts 9:6); “See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?” (Acts 8:36); “what must I do to be saved?” (Acts 16:30). Where this kind of inquiry is not found, or some positive indication of the presence of such a mind, there is probably some additional preaching to be done. It certainly is not proper to suggest to non-inquiring people that they repeat a simple prayer – something for which there is not a solitary example in all of Scripture.

Heaven was involved in the matter we are reviewing, interacting with both men and angels. This is how the Kingdom of God functions. God does not merely give orders to men, leaving to their own selves to work out critical matters. The government of God includes the dispatching of holy angels by the Son of God, the preparatory work of the Holy Spirit, and precise directions for men. All of this is being lived out in our text. Men have not been left to themselves, and the world does not function on its own. We are being given a glimpse of behind-the-scenes activities involving both angels and men.

Now, the lot is cast into the lap of Cornelius, as stated in Proverbs 16:33. If what has been said of him is true, he will instantly respond to the glory of God, and wisdom will be justified of her children (Matt 11:19). Remember, the book of Acts contains the record of the working of the Lord, as well as the proper human responses to it.

THE RESPONSE OF CORNELIUS

“ 7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually; 8 And when he had declared all these things unto them, he sent them to Joppa.”

The “angel of God” had come and is now departed. What kind of impact will this visitation have? That is the question. Heavenly visitations, whatever form they may take, are not an end of themselves. It is the response of men that makes the visitation profitable. When, for example, Jerusalem was visited by “the Dayspring from on high,” it was a most marvelous circumstance. However, because the people did not respond properly, it actually became the basis for their judgment rather than their blessing. This is why Jesus lamented over the city saying, “Saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation ” (Luke 19:42-44).

Many a soul has had the door of opportunity opened to them by heaven, yet have not responded to it in faith. Cain was in this category, for before he killed his brother, God told him if he did well, he would be accepted (Gen 4:7). Israel also had the opportunity to send spies into the land of Canaan to confirm that what God had said about it was true. However, they chose to believe the words of unbelievers, and were thus excluded from the land, not being able to enter into it because of their unbelief (Heb 3:19).

We will see in Cornelius the proper response to a Divine directive. It will be immediate and thorough, and nothing will be left undone.

HE CALLED HIS HOUSEHOLD SERVANTS AND A DEVOUT SOLDIER

“ And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually . . .”

Those who operate within the framework of the will of God do not waste time, nor are they slothful in executing the will of God. This is particularly true of angels, who are a kind of archetype of the servants of the Lord.

As is customary with heavenly messengers, this angel delivered the message he was given, and then departed. It is said of the holy angels, “Bless the LORD, ye His angels, that excel in strength, that do His commandments, hearkening unto the voice of His word” (Psa 103:20). Their ministry is immediate and effective, like a flame of fire. As it is written, “Who maketh His angels spirits; His ministers a flaming fire” (Psa 104:4).

Those who operate within the framework of the will of God do not waste time, nor are they slothful in executing the will of God. This is particularly true of angels, who are a kind of archetype of the servants of the Lord. When an angel appeared to John, he identified himself as “thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus” (Rev 19:10). Furthermore, angels are among the fellowship into which we have come in Christ Jesus. As it is written, “But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels” (Heb 12:22).

Now, having delivered his message, the angel has left, and Cornelius enters into the work, doing the bidding of the Lord.

He Called Two Servants and a Devout Soldier

Immediately Cornelius calls two of his household servants – men who were not soldiers, but were part of his immediate household staff. He also called a devout soldier who served him continually – “of those who were in constant attendance upon him,” NASB or “at all times.” BBE

In our culture, such arrangements are not common – but they are in Scripture. Jesus Himself often spoke of the association of servants to their master, or householder (Matt 10:24-25; 18:23-34; 24:45-50; 25:14-30; Mk 12:1-11). The influence of Cornelius over those who served him is apparent. First, he feared God with all of his house (10:2), and second, one of the soldiers who accompanied the two servants was also “devout” (10:7).

This is a sterling example of someone letting their light shine. These men had no doubt seen Cornelius’ “good works,” and glorified God by also fearing Him and being devout.

It ought to be noted that there are many advantages to being “devout” – a condition in which the manner of one’s life is perfectly consistent with their profession of allegiance to the God of heaven. It is most unfortunate that the Christianity of our time, particularly in the United States of America, knows little of a genuine commitment to the Lord, or of being devout. The thrust of contemporary Christianity has placed the stress on the worldly circumstances of believers, thereby neutralizing the possibility of living solely for the Lord. The requirement for believers to crucify the flesh (Gal 5:24), live unto the Lord (2 Cor 5:15), take up their cross and follow Christ (Matt 16:24), and perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord (2 Cor 7:1) are uncommon in the modern church. It is for this very reason that devoutness is rare.

HE DECLARED ALL THINGS TO THEM

“And when he had declared all these things unto them . . .” Other versions read, “and when he had explained,” NKJV “told them everything that had happened,” NIV “related everything to them,” RSV and “rehearsed all things unto them.” ASV

These were servants, yet Cornelius told them everything, bringing clarity to their mission. This was not the ordinary manner of masters with their servants. Jesus once said of ordinary servants, “Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth : but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you” (John 15:15). I gather, therefore, that in this matter the men he called were not functioning as mere servants, but as kindred spirits – for it is said of Cornelius that he “feared God with all of his house” (household NKJV – 10:1).

Jesus sent His disciples out armed with the facts in the case. They knew why they were being sent, what they were to say, and how men would respond to them. True ministry cannot be accomplished while walking in the dark. Candidly, we are told that if we “walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin” (1 John 1:7). Those who are in any proximity to Jesus tend to themselves walk in the light – knowing whom they have believed, understanding the will of the Lord, and knowing the destiny toward which they are journeying.

Now, Cornelius exhibits this trait, informing his servants of the vision that he has had, and the commission that he has been given. In this matter, he does not consider the servants unworthy of possessing this knowledge. He also confirms that he is not ashamed of the vision, nor does he entertain the notion that his servants might consider it foolish or far-fetched.

All of this indicates that there was a closeness in the household that was created by the fear of the Lord and devout conduct. There was an accord that transcended social convention, even though it did not interfere with it. There was a sense in which the men were subordinate to Cornelius. However, that was not their only relationship. There was a superior manner of life that allowed for a closeness that could not be had within the framework of human custom.

This principle can be seen today in various social and domestic associations. When interpersonal relationships are maintained at a higher level in which the fear of the Lord, and even faith in Christ, exist, there is a wider latitude in which men can operate. It is one in which there is more profitability.

HE SENT THEM TO JOPPA

“ . . . he sent them to Joppa.”

Thus the men are sent on their way knowing the WHY of their mission, as well as the basis of it. While they are obeying their master according to the flesh, they are also fulfilling a word that has come from heaven.

The people of God can learn from this example. It is better when the people of God know WHY they are fulfilling the word of the Lord. While it is true that obedience is required whether we understand the reasons or not, that is not the best way to live. It is far better to know the rationale that is behind spiritual life.

The people of God can learn from this example. It is better when the people of God know WHY they are fulfilling the word of the Lord. While it is true that obedience is required whether we understand the reasons or not, that is not the best way to live. It is far better to know the rationale that is behind spiritual life. That knowledge removes the tediousness that can otherwise be experienced. There is a stage in spiritual life that is much like that of an earthly child – one in which we do what we are told simply because we are told to do so. However, that is not a state in which we are to remain. We are candidly told, “Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is” (Eph 5:17). Again, we are admonished to so order our lives that we will come to know and understand the will of the Lord. “And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God” (Rom 12:2).

A few of the reasons that undergird the necessity of being holy and making preparations for eternity are as follows. They provide a framework of reasonability within which we may live.

- Jesus gave Himself to deliver us from this present evil world (Gal 1:4).
- It is appointed unto men to die once, and then to stand before God in judgment (Heb 9:27).

- We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain that we can take nothing out of it (1 Tim 6:7).

- We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ to receive the outcome of what we have done, whether it is good or evil (Rom 14:10; 2 Cor 5:10).

- Jesus died and rose again in order that we might no longer live for ourselves, but for Him (2 Cor 5:15).

There is a sense in which we have been sent on a mission, like the servants and soldier of our text. As sojourners, we are traveling to another country, which is a better one (1 Pet 2:11; Heb 11:16). As Cornelius did, our Lord has given us the facts in the case, and why the journey must be made. This world is destined for destruction – reserved unto fire (2 Pet 3:7), and we are preparing to leave it. In that context, a godly and separated life makes perfect sense.

CONCLUSION

The opening of the door of faith to the Gentiles is a significant event in Scripture. It does not chronicle the abandonment of Israel, but the inclusion of the Gentiles in the promises that were given to them. The Gentiles have been made partakers “with them” of “the root and fatness” of their heritage (Rom 11:17). Paul provides the rationale behind this Divine arrangement in a remarkable statement to the Ephesians. This gives us a picture of the greatness of salvation, as well as some of its intricacies. “Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby: And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellowcitizens with the saints, and of the household of God” (Eph 2:11-19). All of this is beginning to take shape in our text. The Lord is bringing His promise to pass in a most remarkable way.

Lesson #46

PETER IS GIVEN A VISION

“ 10:9 On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the housetop to pray about the sixth hour: 10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance, 11 And saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth: 12 Wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. 13 And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat. 14 But Peter said, Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean. 15 And the voice spake unto him again the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common. 16 This was done thrice: and the vessel was received up again into heaven. ” (Acts 10:9-16)

INTRODUCTION

The occurrences recorded in this section of the book of Acts are also rehearsed in 11:1-30. Upon hearing the report of what we are beginning to behold, the apostles and elders assessed what took place at the household of Cornelius in these words: “Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life” (Acts 11:18). Additionally, these events are also referred to in Acts 15:6-9.

This is truly an epoch in the history of the church, and marked a kind of new beginning – one identified by a greater degree of spiritual understanding.

It is well, therefore, that we take note of the various things that are associated with, and integral to, the singular event of which we are now reading. In the details of this report, we receive some insight into both the manner and extensiveness of Divine workings.

- Men are involved (10:1,9).
- An angel is involved (10:3,7,22).
- Two coordinated visions take place – the 9th hour on day one, and the 6th hour one day two (10:3,7).

While we should not endeavor to impose our own understanding upon the text of Scripture, we do well to strain our spiritual vision to see what is happening behind the scenes. If it is true that God does nothing “without cause,” as He Himself has affirmed (Ezek 14:23), then something of that “cause” may be perceived in what He has done. Of course, all of that will be missed if the text is read simply as history, or events in which the prominent workers were only men.

AN OVERVIEW OF THE TEXT

Great spiritual epochs are not induced by men. They are always the result of Divine workings. Men who are involved in these works are themselves extraordinary, being men of faith and hope.

The day following the vision given to Cornelius, while the men sent to Peter were on their journey, and as they drew near to Joppa, Peter has gone up the rooftop to pray. When there, he became very hungry, and wanted something to eat. However, while something was being prepared for him to eat, he fell into a trance. He saw heaven opened, and a net lowered down to him by its four corners. In the net, all kinds of four-footed animals, as well as crawling creatures, and birds of the air were found. A voice from heaven commands Peter to “Rise, kill and eat.” Although hungry, Peter’s god is not his belly. He remonstrates, saying that he has never eaten anything that was unclean. The same voice that had told him to “Rise, kill, and eat,” spoke a second time saying that anything God had cleansed was not to be called unclean. The vision is repeated two more times, and the same words are delivered to him. The net is then withdrawn and taken back to heaven. No further explanation was given, and Peter was left alone to think upon what he had been given to see.

Great spiritual epochs are not induced by men. They are always the result of Divine workings. Men who are involved in these works are themselves extraordinary, being men of faith and hope. Ponder the individuals who have been used in the book of Acts to this point.

- Peter – On the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:14-47).
- Peter and John – in the healing of the lame man and the preaching that followed (Acts 3:1-4:4).
- Peter and John – in confounding the Jewish leaders (Acts 4:8-13).
- Stephen – in the working of great wonders and miracles, and confounding the Sanhedrin (Acts 6:8-10).
- Philip – in reaching the city of Samaria (Acts 8:5-8).
- Peter and John – in the Samaritans receiving the Holy Spirit. And thwarting the influence of Simon the sorcerer (Acts 8:14-25).
- Philip – in the conversion of the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:28-39).
- Ananias – in the conversion of Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9:10-17).
- Saul, after converted – in confounding Jewish leaders (Acts 9:20-22).
- Barnabas – presenting Saul to the apostles and confirming the genuineness of his conversion (Acts 9:27-28).
- Peter – In reaching the area of Lydda and Saran (Acts 9:33-35).
- Peter – in reaching people of Joppa (Acts 9:36-42).

None of the above activities were the outcome of the plans of men. None of them employed unholy people, or those who were unlearned in “the things of the Spirit of God” (Rom 8:5; 1 Cor 2:14). The Lord Jesus and the Holy Spirit were active in them, and angels were often noted for their immediate involvement. The insightful preaching of Christ was also a key factor, and results, whether in healings or conversions, involved the exchange of one manner of life for another. None of the occasions involved a return to normalcy. All of them involved believing. There is a remarkable consistency in this.

These are glimpses of Kingdom manners, and the way legitimate works are recognized. There is a total absence of institutionalism and all forms of lifeless religion, in all of them. There is no reliance on the world's wisdom, and few individuals of worldly prominence are said to have been involved in any of them (the Ethiopian eunuch is one).

AS THEY WENT ON THEIR JOURNEY

“ 10:9a On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city.”

Cornelius had his vision at “the ninth hour of the day” – around three o'clock in the afternoon (Acts 10:3). The “ninth hour” was also the time when Peter and John had gone up to the Temple, confronting and healing the impotent man at the gate Beautiful. This was also the hour that Jesus cried out upon the cross, “My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me” (Mk 15:34).

ON THE MORROW

“On the morrow . . .” Other versions read, “on the next day,” NKJV and “the day after.” BBE

The vision and the instruction given to Cornelius probably took some time. Following the vision and the directions the angel provided, Cornelius had called two of his servants, and a soldier who was always with him. He had then related the entire episode to the men, then commissioning them to go to Joppa to bring Peter back. By this time it was probably well into the evening. It is not surprising, then, that they commenced their journey “on the morrow,” or “the next day.” NKJV

The distance was approximately 30-35 miles. The journey would be a long one by foot, and a good day's journey by horseback. It was therefore necessary that they prepare themselves for it. Their obedience must be seen as immediate, for as soon as the will of the Lord was known, the lives of those engaged in it were shaped around the word of the Lord. That is the nature of obedience. It is not something that can be carried out casually or with indifference. When a person obeys the Lord, or comes into accord with his will, their life commences to be lived for a different reason.

Neither Cornelius nor those who were to carry out his word returned to any other duty or activity. They immediately gave their attention to the matter at hand, making due preparations for the trip to get Peter.

THEIR JOURNEY

“ . . . as they went on their journey . . .” Other versions read, “as they were on their way,” NASB “while they were still on their way,” CJB “as these are proceeding on the way.” YLT

In what appears to be nothing more than an incidental phrase, we behold another manner of the kingdom. When an individual becomes involved in the good and acceptable and perfect will of God, that will becomes his will. It is, so to speak, personalized. These men owned the way – it was now “their” journey and “their” way. These men, three of them, were technically on a missions for Cornelius, who had been given directions by an angel of God. Yet, after hearing the report of Cornelius and being commissioned by him, the journey now became their own .

These same words – “their journey” – was said of Israel's departure from Egypt (Ex 13:20; 16:1). While these men were doing what they were told, their hearts were in the matter, and the cause of Cornelius became their's.

DREW NIGH TO THE CITY

“ . . . and drew nigh unto the city.” Other versions read, “approaching the city,” NASB “coming near the city,” RSV “Drawing near to the city,” DARBY “coming close to Joppa,” GWN “had only a short distance to go,” NJB “were getting near the town,” WEYMOUTH and “not far from the town.” WILLIAMS

Further Divine activity took place while they were in the process of doing what they were told – as they were drawing near to their destination. This also is the general way in which the Lord directs His people – as they are living by faith and walking in the Spirit. It was after Abraham had left his home for an unidentified land that he received further instructions (Heb 11:8). The same thing took place when he headed for the “land of Moriah” to offer Isaac on an unidentified mountain (Gen 22:2-4). When Israel left Egypt and headed for the promised land, the Lord led them step by step with a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night (Ex 13:17-18; 33:21-22). In all of these instances, it was while the people were engaged in the will of the Lord that further insight and direction were provided.

When it comes to matters pertaining to man’s association with the Lord, it has always proved to be accomplished within the framework of obedience and the pursuit of what has already been made known that more clarity is realized. This principle is being lived out in our text.

PETER WENT UP TO PRAY

“ 9b Peter went up upon the housetop to pray about the sixth hour.”

Here is another marvelous example of heavenly coordination. Because the government is upon the shoulder of Christ, and because principalities and powers have been made subject to Him, He can effectively orchestrate the affairs taking place in this world in order to the accomplishment of the will of God. He causes time, people, place, and circumstance to work together, doing so in the midst of adversarial powers.

There is no way that such precision could take place independently of Divine rule. Satan and his wicked hosts would certainly not allow it, if they could, in fact, stop it. Think of what we are beholding here. A number of people are involved, and they are in two different places – Caesarea and Joppa. Two different nationalities are involved – Jew and Gentile. Two different houses are in the scenario – the house of Cornelius and the house of Simon. Five different occupations are involved: a centurion, two servants, one soldier, a tanner, and an apostle. Two specific time periods are employed – the ninth hour and the sixth hour. An angel is employed, as well as the Holy Spirit. Two different visions are included – one is specific, and one is parabolic in nature. Both men are praying at the time heaven contacts them. One man is ignorant of the salvation of God, and the other is informed about it. One man knows Jesus, and the other does not. Devout men are involved – Peter, Cornelius, and a soldier are specifically identified. There is good reason to believe that the servants and Simon the tanner were also in that category.

How likely is it that such a set of circumstance could be marvelously blended together for the accomplishment of a marvelous purpose? Apart from King Jesus, what we are reading about could not possibly have taken place. This is an example of something of what is involved in the Lord directing an individual. Such direction is far more complex, and involves much more activity, than men are prone to think. Ponder what is said on this subject. Ponder the Word on this.

- “In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths” (Prov 3:6).
- “A man's heart deviseth his way: but the LORD directeth his steps” (Prov 16:9).
- “A wicked man hardeneth his face: but as for the upright, He directeth his way” (Prov 21:29).
- “I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will direct all his ways : he shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward, saith the LORD of hosts” (Isa 45:13).

- “For I the LORD love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering; and I will direct their work in truth, and I will make an everlasting covenant with them” (Isa 61:8).

- “Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, direct our way unto you” (1 Thess 3:11).

- “And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ” (2 Thess 3:5).

- “Thou in thy mercy hast led forth the people which thou hast redeemed: Thou hast guided them in thy strength unto thy holy habitation” (Exodus 15:13).

- “Thus the LORD saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other, and guided them on every side” (2 Chron 32:22).

- “The meek will He guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way” (Psa 25:9).

- “I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with Mine eye” (Psa 32:8).

- “They shall not hunger nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall He guide them” (Isa 49:10).

- “And the LORD shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not” (Isa 58:11).

- “To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace” (Luke 1:79).

This kind of direction and guidance is chronicled in this text, and it is in staggering detail.

As the men from Cornelius come close to the city, Peter goes up to the housetop to pray. Thus he will be in a proper frame of mind when he is confronted with this opportunity that is being orchestrated from heaven. The hour is precise – the sixth hour, or at noon. Peter, who is living by faith and walking in the Spirit, is being positioned for Divine direction. It is taking place in a specific city, in a specific house, and at a particular time. It is also calculated to put Peter in a right frame of spirit for the arrival the entourage from Cornelius.

When it comes to Divine involvement, I am not able to say how detailed our own lives may prove to be managed from above. A lot depends on whether or not we are living unto the Lord, with our affection placed on things above, and our hearts and minds involved in sacred activity, all the while avoiding worldly contamination. However, I am persuaded that such involvements are much more detailed than men tend to think. Spiritual alertness will confirm this to be true.

HE BECAME HUNGRY AND WANTED TO EAT

“ 10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance.”

The normalities of life can prove to be an occasion of unusual benefit, and even revelation and involvement in the will of the Lord. Such times, however, must be attended by a sensitive heart and an alert spirit. It is not often that God forces His way into wayward minds – although there have been occasions when He has done so, as in the case of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan 4:33) and Saul of Tarsus (Acts 9:3-4). In cases such as these a third party was generally involved who has an understanding of the Divine manner and will. Here, however, that will not be the case.

HE BECAME HUNGRY, AND WOULD HAVE EATEN

“And he became very hungry, and would have eaten . . .” Other versions read, “and wanted to eat,” NKJV “was desiring to eat,” NASB “wanted something to eat,” NIV “was looking forward to his meal,” NJB “became unusually hungry and wished for food,” WEYMOUTH and “longed for something to eat.” PHILLIPS

The normalities of life can prove to be an occasion of unusual benefit, and even revelation and involvement in the will of the Lord. Such times, however, must be attended by a sensitive heart and an alert spirit.

The word translated “would have” has the following lexical meaning: “to be resolved, to purpose,” THAYER and “resolve, decision, or design will, intend, purpose, aim.” FRIBERG The idea is that Peter not only wanted to eat, but set out to do something about it. The next verse confirms that some preparations were set in motion. The wording of the verse strongly suggests that they were commenced at the request of Peter. There are some key matters here that are worthy of consideration.

- First, it was while Peter was praying that he became hungry. Among other things, these indicates that prayer does not always suppress natural appetites – even though there are times when it did – such as during the temptation of Jesus (Matt 4:2).
- Second, Peter will experience that war of the Spirit against the flesh. At the same time he is hungry, and had determined to eat something, a conflicting message will be received from heaven.

If what men affirm about Peter being weak, speaking hastily, and sinning a lot, are true, surely they will be accented in the many references to him. However, that is not what is accented, as those familiar with the Word of God know very well,

In this experience, we will be exposed to the strong side of Peter – something that thoughtless ministers often overlook. Religious men who attempt to justify the flesh are fond of pointing out what they feel to be the failures of Peter, even declaring that they were frequent and glaring. This, of course, is altogether wrong. If you were asked to point out five of Peter’s failings, you would have to engage in a concentrated effort to do so. This is particularly significant since so much is said about him. He is the only man named “Peter” in the English Bible – and that name is mentioned one hundred and fifty-eight times. “Cephas,” the Syriac form of “Peter,” is also unique, and is mentioned six times in Scripture. His natural name, “Simon” is mentioned in reference to him forty-six times. There are, then, two hundred and ten direct references to Peter in Scripture. By comparison, Adam is mentioned thirty times, Isaac is mentioned one hundred and twenty-eight times, Jacob is mentioned directly one hundred and sixty-seven times, and Noah fifty-one times. John is mentioned one hundred and thirty-one times, Silas thirteen times, Barnabas twenty-nine times, and Timothy seven times. If what men affirm about Peter being weak, speaking hastily, and sinning a lot, are true, surely they will be accented in the many references to him. However, that is not what is accented, as those familiar with the Word of God know very well,

This event will tell us a lot about Peter, his sensitivity, his devotion, and his readiness to obey the Lord. It will reveal more of his great heart, and of his consistent manner of life. In this verse we see that, so far as the body was concerned, Peter was hungry and desired to eat something immediately. However, an event took place that overrode his bodily appetite. The experience was so powerful that the desire to eat was apparently suspended. His thoughts were directed to other considerations and activities. Although he had been hungry, eating is not the next thing Peter will do.

HE FELL INTO A TRANCE

“ . . . but while they made ready, he fell into a trance.” Other versions read, “a deep sleep came upon him,” BBE “he went into a visionary state,” CSB “an ecstasy came upon him,” DARBY “there came upon him an extacy of mind,” DOUAY “a trance came over him,” NET and “He fell sound asleep and had a vision,” CEV “he had a vision.” GNB

“ . . . but”

By saying “but,” the text means that instead of eating, Peter’s attention was turned to another consideration. His desire to eat, although strong, was trumped by a weightier matter.

Trance

The word “trance” is an intriguing one, indeed. It speaks of a state that transcends nature. The word from which “trance” is translated is the Greek word e;kstasij (ek-sta-sis). The transliteration of the word is “ecstasy,” which confirms that there is no exact English word that parallels it. The root meaning of the word is, “any casting down of a thing from its proper place or state; displacement.” THAYER With that in mind, the lexical meaning of this word is as follows: “a throwing of the mind out of its normal state,” THAYER “as an abnormal state of mind distraction, terror, amazement; (2) as a partially suspended consciousness ecstasy, trance.” FRIBERG

Bible Dictionaries

Various Bible Dictionaries define the word as follows: “a preternatural, absorbed state of mind preparing for the reception of the vision”, EASTON “overpowered by the divine inspiration,” FAUSSET and “The condition expressed by this word is a mental state in which the person affected is partially or wholly unconscious of objective sensations, but intensely alive to subjective impressions which, however they may be originated, are felt as if they were revelations from without.” INTL STD BIBLE ENCY

McClintok & Strong’s Encyclopedia quotes Philip Doddridge, noted theologian from the 1700's, who said the following in definition of a trance: “such a rapture of mind as gives the person who falls into it a look of astonishment, and renders him insensible of the external objects around him, while in the meantime his imagination is agitated in an extraordinary manner with some striking scenes which pass before it and take up all the attention.” A writer named Stockius defines it as, “a sacred ecstasy, or rapture of the mind out of itself, when, the use of the external senses being suspended, God reveals something in a peculiar manner to prophets and apostles, who are then taken or transported out of themselves.”

The English Dictionary

The dictionary definition of the English word “trance” is as follows: “a sleeplike state (as of deep hypnosis) usually characterized by partly suspended animation with diminished or absent sensory and motor activity.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER

The Case of Balaam

A parallel word is found twice in the Hebrew Scriptures and is translated “trance.” – particularly in Numbers 24:4 and 16.

- Numbers 24:4: “He hath said, which heard the words of God, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open.”

• Numbers 24:16: “He hath said, which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open .”

Later English versions translate this word “falls down,” NKJV “falling down,” NASB “falls prostrate.” NIV Other versions accent that the falling was owing to a trance: “falls into a trance,” CSB “falling in a trance,” GENEVA and “falls into a trance.” GWN The English translation of the Septuagint Version (the Greek translation of the Hebrew text) translates Numbers 24:4 as “who saw a vision of God in sleep; his eyes were opened” – almost an exact parallel with our text.

Nave’s Topical Bible

Nave’s Topical Bible lists three Scriptural instances of a trance:

- Balaam (Num 24:4,16)
- Peter (Acts 10:10).
- Paul: “And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance” (Acts 22:17).

The same Greek word is employed in the accounts of Peter and Paul, with most standard versions of Scripture translating it “trance.”

Why I Have Given These Definitions

I give these scholastic definitions to confirm the poverty of the English language to precisely define this word. Ordinarily, definitions assist men in arriving at an understanding. With this word, however, understanding aids in arriving at the definition of the word. The required understanding is not found in language expertise, but in the Word of God itself. Any satisfactory understanding of the word “trance” will only be obtained when there is some acquaintance with Divine manners as they are revealed in the Scriptures. In the definitions that I have provided, a knowledge of the Scriptures was the fundamental basis of the analysis of the word, rather than a knowledge of language itself.

A State of Mind

While the word translated “trance” includes the technical meaning of “falling,” it does not necessarily accent the falling of the body. It appears to have more to do with the falling of the mind into a state in which the things of this world are superseded with a message from above. That is, a “trance” is more a state of mind than it is a state of body. Note the things that are learned from the three instances of a trance that have been noted.

- Balaam: He saw a vision while falling into a trance, with his eyes wide open (Num 24:4,16). There was a particular message delivered to him in the vision (24:5-8, 17-24).
- Peter: He saw heaven opened, saw a great net let down from heaven, and was given instructions concerning what he was to do. Peter verbally responded to what he saw and heard (Acts 10:11-16). The text refers to what Peter saw and heard as a “vision” (Acts 10:17).
- Paul: He saw the Lord, and received specific instructions on what he was to do. Paul also responded verbally to the message (Acts 22:18-21).

The “mind,” which is an aspect of the human make-up that is to be engaged in loving God and doing His will, is not integral to the body itself. It is an aspect of the unseen part of man – the soul and the spirit. Those who equate thinking with the activity of the brain are not correct, and we do well not to refer to the brain as though it was the seat of thought. It is not. Man is not fundamentally physiological, but spiritual.

With these observations in mind, it is obvious to me that a “trance” is a preparatory state – one in which the individual is prepared for a vision, or some form of Divine communication. Some translations interpret the word to include the idea of falling into a sleep. However, what is occurring in a trance is not sleep after the ordinary manner. That is why Balaam referred to his eyes being wide open, even though what he saw was not seen with them. It is why Peter is depicted as praying, and Paul as being in the Temple. It was their mind that was altered, not their body. We know their minds were active, because all of them recounted what took place while they were in a trance – and in great detail. With these things in mind, allow me to make the following observations.

- The “mind,” which is an aspect of the human make-up that is to be engaged in loving God and doing His will, is not integral to the body itself. It is an aspect of the unseen part of man – the soul and the spirit. Those who equate thinking with the activity of the brain are not correct, and we do well not to refer to the brain as though it was the seat of thought. It is not. Man is not fundamentally physiological, but spiritual. When God created man, he became “a living soul,” not a living body! The heart, or center of men, is where thinking, cognition, analysis, and the will, take place (Prov 23:7). Thought and reason will continue after we have departed from the body.

- God has access to the mind apart from the will of man. Peter was praying, not seeking the vision and instruction that he was given. Paul was in the Temple praying when he fell into a trance. There is no indication that he was seeking counsel on whether or not to remain in Jerusalem, yet that is what he received. In both cases, the thoughts of man were governed by God, not the human will. In neither case were thoughts the result of human choice.

- There are some Divine communications that require a suspension of one’s consciousness of worldly surroundings. That is, there are times, strictly determined by God, when a consciousness of this world must be blotted out in order to hear from heaven – when one must be in another state of mind. I understand these to be an exception to the norm. Therefore, man cannot schedule or control them.

- God can profitably employ the mind while man is inactive bodily, and not aware of his worldly surroundings. The marvel is that such times have to do with cognition, and therefore have a direct impact upon human decision and conduct.

SOMETHING TO NOTE

There is something here of particular interest. Peter was engaged in two normalities – one spiritual, and one natural. He was praying, which was a spiritual, and he was hungry, which was natural. In the process of these normal activities, something abnormal, or extraordinary, took place. When it did, the occasion proved to be the means of altering the thrust of his thoughts. It was also the prelude to his involvement in a most extraordinary event.

While I would not pretend to suppose that we should expect such things to happen to us, it seems to me that living by faith and walking in the Spirit make us available for such involvements. When we are duly cultured in our spirits, and “prepared unto every good work” (2 Tim 2:21), we at once become candidates for Divine employment. Faith also brings the ability to recognize and respond to such opportunities. In the modern church, this appears to be a relatively unexplored facet of spiritual life.

HEAVEN WAS OPENED

“ 11 And saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth . . . ”

What Peter is now given to see is outside of the realm of nature. There is no natural aptitude adapted for such a sight. This confirms there is another very real kingdom that presently exists in our surroundings. When the Spirit speaks of the scheduled removal of the present heavens and earth, He refers to it as a shaking that will bring it all down, or removing it. He then makes a salient comment about things that cannot be shaken. “Whose voice then shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain ” (Heb 12:26-27). By saying “remain,” the Spirit has made clear that “those things” presently exist, even though the natural senses cannot detect or discern them. What Peter now beholds is taking place in that domain, which presently exists all around us.

We know from Scripture that this unseen domain is the superior one, for “the heavens do rule” (Dan 4:26). Notwithstanding its superiority, sin has raised an impenetrable barrier between mankind and this dominating realm. There have been times, however, when God Almighty has given favored men the ability to see things for which the Adamic nature has not been adapted. This is one of those rare occasions.

HE SAW HEAVEN OPENED

“ And saw heaven opened . . .” Other versions read, “beheld the sky opened up,” NASB “saw the heavens opening,” BBE “the open sky,” IE and “observes heaven [or, the sky] having been opened.” ALT

The Greek word translated “heaven” is ouvrano.n , and it is in the single: “heaven,” not heavens. Literally, the word means “the heights above, the upper regions.” It is used in a way that means “the vaulted expanse of the Sky with all the things visible in it.” THAYER When used in this way, it is generally in the plural, not the singular (Heb 1:10; 2 Pet 3:5,10,12). It is also used to describe a division of nature, distinguishing between the celestial and the terrestrial – i.e. “heaven and earth” (Matt 5:18; 11:25; Lk 16:17; Acts 4:24; Rev 10:6). The word is also used to describe "the region above the sidereal heavens, the seat of an order of things eternal and consummately perfect, where God dwells and the other heavenly beings” (2 Cor 12:2; Eph 4:10; Acts 7:49; Matt 5:16). THAYER Jesus also used this word when He said He came “from heaven” (John 3:18; 6:38,41). Paul used it when He referred to Jesus as “the Lord from heaven” (1 Cor 15:47). This word is also used to describe the abode of angels (Matt 24:36; 22:30; Lk 2:15). This same word is employed to describe a domain in which certain “things” exist (Eph 1:10; Col 1:16,20). It is also used to identify the place where God’s will is done (Matt 6:10). When Jesus returns, He will “be revealed from heaven” (I Thess 1:7).

Add to this the fact that the definite article is used to identify what was opened (to.n ouvrano.n – THE heaven). It seems to me that this being a revelation from God to Peter, the “heaven” that was opened was the domain in which God, Christ, and the holy angels reside. While it may very well be clear that what was seen was perceived as being brought down through the heavens that are above the earth, that was not the source of the vision – and the source if the point.

When heaven is opened some settled reality is being revealed by God. This is something that only the Lord can do. Men cannot cause the heaven to be opened, or peer into Divine mysteries at will. Further, owing to the debilitating effects of sin, appointed epochs are generally attended by some sign or heavenly manifestation.

There are at least six times in Scripture when heaven, or the heavens, are said to have been opened. They are arresting to consider.

- Ezekiel sees visions of God: “Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened , and I saw visions of God” (Ezek 1:1).

- At Jesus’ baptism: “And Jesus, when He was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto Him, and He saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him” (Matt 3:16; Mk 1:10).

In each case, the things that were seen were revelations that in some way revealed God and His purpose. There is no way that the knowledge that was dispensed at that time could have been acquired by a scholastic discipline. In fact, the revelation contradicts man’s perception.

When Stephen was martyred: “And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened , and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God” (Acts 7:56).

• Peter’s vision of the net: “And saw heaven opened , and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth” (Acts 10:11).

• John on Patmos: “After this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven : and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter” (Rev 4:1).

• John on Patmos: “And I saw heaven opened , and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war” (Rev 19:11).

There are some indirect references to heaven being opened – times when men were enabled to see what was taking place in that sacred domain.

• Micaiah the Prophet: “And he said, Hear thou therefore the word of the LORD: I saw the LORD sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left” (1 Kgs 22:19).

• Isaiah the Prophet: “In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple” (Isa 6:1).

• Daniel the Prophet: “I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him” (Dan 7:13).

• Zechariah the Prophet: “And He showed me Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the LORD, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him” (Zech 3:1).

This is not intended to be a complete list, but confirms that such occasions were not common. In each case, the things that were seen were revelations that in some way revealed God and His purpose. There is no way that the knowledge that was dispensed at that time could have been acquired by a scholastic discipline. In fact, the revelation contradicts man’s perception.

I am drawing attention to this fact to accent the rarity of what was happening. This was truly an epoch.

A CERTAIN VESSEL DESCENDING UNTO HIM

“ . . . and a certain vessel . . . as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners . . .” Other versions read, “an object like a great sheet,” NKJV and “something like a large sheet.” NIV

The word translated “vessel” is skeu/o,j , and it does mean “vessel.” It is also employed in a number of ways in Scripture.

- Mark 11:16 – Jesus would not allow anyone to carry a vessel through the Temple.
- Luke 8:16 – No man covers a candle with a vessel.
- John 19:29 – A vessel filled with vinegar from which they drew some with a sponge to give to Jesus on the cross.

- Acts 10:11,16; 11:5 – The vessel let down to Peter
- Romans 9:21,22 and 2 Timothy 2:20 – People are referred to as vessels for either noble or ignoble purposes.
- 2 Corinthians 4:7 and 1 Thessalonians 4:4 – Our bodies are referred to as vessels.
- Hebrews 9:21 – Vessels used in the Tabernacle ministry.
- 1 Peter 3:7 – Wives are referred to as “weaker vessels.”
- Revelation 2:27 – The wicked that will be conquered by the righteous are referred to as vessels which will be broken to pieces.
- Revelation 18:12 – The merchandise in which spiritual Babylon traffics includes “vessels.”

In each of these cases the point is what was in the vessel, or the purpose for which the vessel was employed. It was not the vessel itself. So it is in this vision. Peter’s attention is not drawn to the container, but what is in the container. Thus Peter’s attention is drawn to something to consider, not merely something to see. He is being summoned into the arena of thought, not that of visual tantalization or some form of visible entertainment.

While it may appear a very incidental point, much of what is being parading today as coming from God is nothing more than a vessel with no profitable contents. In fact, the contents are often defiling, and no genuine spiritual point is delivered through them. As we should expect, this will not be the case with this vision. In fact, it is what is in the net that becomes the total object of consideration. Compare this to the contents of a modern song (which is a vessel), or the actual teaching in a sermon (which is also a vessel).

Emphasizing that this was a matter being controlled by the Lord, and supervised for His glory, the sheet was deliberately held together at the four corners. That is, there was no part of it that was not being managed from heaven. There was no randomness in the vision, for sober thought cannot be accomplished when there is not a certain symmetry in the presentation. That is, it is within the context of Divine order that illumination and learning are delivered. Those who insist on couching things purported to be of God, in mystery are like people trying to carry goods in a sheet that is not being held together by the corners. They only generate a lot of confusion, and what they bring is to be shunned by the saints (2 Tim 2: 16).

DESCENDING TO HIM

“ . . . descending unto him . . . ” Other versions read, “a great sheet coming down.” NASB

Here is a marvelous example of the precision associated with the revelation and works of God. As large as the natural heavens may appear to men, together with the vastness of the surface of the earth, they are impressive only to humanity. God can open heaven and deal with a single individual, on a specific rooftop, of a particular house, owned by a given person, on a distinct day, and at a certain point in time. Now, that kind of revelation requires a Lord who is in total control, and whose purposes cannot be thwarted.

Keep in mind that this sheet is being lowered through Satan’s domain, who is “the prince of the power of the air” (Eph 2:2). Heaven’s rule of this world, and the manner in which Jesus is maintaining the government, is that precise! That is why “if God be for us, who can be against us” (Rom 8:31).

LET DOWN TO THE EARTH

“ . . . and let down to the earth. . . ” Other versions read, “lowered . . . to the ground,” NASB “being let down to earth,” NIV “being lowered to the ground,” CSB and “It descended from heaven to the earth.” MRD

The sheet did not fall down to the earth, but was let down to it – an expression of Divine focus and control. This was something that was intentionally done, and was intended to accomplish a specific purpose. Nothing comes from heaven by happenstance, nor is revelation in any of its forms nothing more than a kind of spilling over of the truth. When it comes to the things of God, things “that pertain to life and godliness” (2 Pet 1:3), men understand what God gives them to know, and nothing more. This is precisely what Jesus meant when He explained why He taught the multitudes differently than He taught His disciples. “And he said, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand” (Luke 8:10). Paul referred to the same principle when he explained why all of the Jews were not excluded from the salvation of God. “What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded” (Rom 11:7).

The point to be seen here is that any gracious activity of God toward man reveals His will. The Lord does not make Himself known to men merely to assist them in some temporal dilemma. Man is never at the heart of Divine intention. Rather, He makes Himself known to men in order to bring them into accord with Himself. There is something to be known at that time. It is not a mere experiment, but is more of a prelude to further involvement in His good, and acceptable, and perfect will. This text will confirm that this is the case. In it we will behold God working salvation in the midst of the earth (Psa 74:12).

A TEST OR A REVELATION?

“ 12 Wherein were all manner of four footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.” Other versions read, “all kinds of four-footed animals, as well as reptiles of the earth and birds of the air,” NIV “all sorts of animals, snakes and birds [forbidden to the Jews for food],” LIVING

We know from what follows that these were, according to the Law given to Israel, unclean animals. They came from three different groups: four-footed animals, creeping things (or reptiles), and the winged fowl. At this point, it will be profitable to list the animals that were unclean. All of the prohibited meats faintly reflected spiritual conditions. While this is a matter of personal observation, I will mention some of them for your consideration.

- Flying insects than crawl on all fours (Lev 11:20). Exceptions to this rule included those with jointed legs that could leap off of the earth, which were locusts and grasshoppers (Lev 11:21-23). The class of insect that was clean could leap off of the earth. This is also a reflection of the distinction between spiritual and unspiritual people. Those with the Spirit can get above the earth – the worldly order. Those who are not spiritual do not have this capacity.

- Whatever crawled upon its belly (Lev 11:42a). This includes snakes, who were cursed to navigate on their belly in the dust of earth (Gen 3:14). It also includes worms and maggots. These, like unspiritual people, stay close to the earth and multiply while they move about on it. On the other hand, those who are spiritual choose to avoid close contact with the world, preferring the posture of strangers and pilgrims in it.

- Whatever crawled on all four on the earth, and those with multiple feet (Lev 11:42b). This includes moles, rats, hedgehogs, centipedes, caterpillars, spiders, etc. These creatures are especially close to the earth, and burrow in it. They also portray the nature of the carnal which crawls about in worldly muck, and burrows in darkness.

- Four footed beasts that did not chew the cud and have divided hoofs. These included the camel, the rabbit, the cony (rock badger), and the swine (Deut 14:7-9). Chewing the cud is similar to meditation – a process in which the things of God are brought up again and passed through the spiritual digestive system. The parted hoof was one that could not become clogged with the dirt and mire through which the animal traversed. Here again, the distinction between the godly and the ungodly is portrayed. The godly meditate and muse upon the things of God, also not allowing the world to stick, so to speak, upon them. Those who are carnal may make an effort to meditate, but do not separate from the world. Or, they may give an appearance of separation from the world, yet their minds are not processing the truth. The ungodly cannot do both of these simultaneously, and generally are not capable of either one of them in any measure.

• water creatures that did not have both fins and scales (Lev 11:9-10; Deut 14:10). Fins enabled the fish to move more rapidly in the waters, while scales prohibited vermin and other malignant growths from forming upon the fish. These also reflect the distinction between the carnal and the spiritual. The spiritual are able to move about in life more rapidly, thereby escaping many of its snares. They are also protected against the malignancies, of this world clinging to them. In these matters, the godly are not so.

• Unclean birds included eagles, buzzards, kites, falcons, ravens, owls, gulls, hawks, pelicans, cormorants, storks, herons, hoopoes, bats, and everything that crawled and flew (Deut 14:12-19). Many of these fowls tend to be scavengers, and are also creatures of the night. They too reflect the nature of both the old man. The old man loves the darkness, and feeds on things that are spiritually dead. However, the new man is a creature of the light, and feeds on things that make for life.

Whatever conclusions are delivered from heaven on this subject will be the final word concerning it. I say this because a great number of people say that this passage has nothing whatsoever to do with our view of clean and unclean foods. Such people teach that the distinctions in foods made within the Law was owing to their nature, and that the dietary practices and health of the people were the fundamental thing. However, this kind of reasoning is flawed to the core. That would mean that what was revealed to Peter about the Gentiles was actually founded on a vision that did not portray reality.

In Scripture a valid conclusion or teaching is never based upon a condition that does not exist. Notwithstanding the objections of those whose god is their belly, this passage will confirm that a distinction in foods no longer exists. Those who teach men to honor the Levitical laws concerning foods are not using the Scriptures properly. While there may be practical opinions concerning proper diets and the likes, they must not be imposed upon men as though they related to life before God. I will be dogmatic on this point as it is developed later.

Now, Peter is confronted with a sheet filled with animals that were forbidden to the Jews. Is it a test, or is it the prelude to Divine tutelage – or is it both? What will Peter be told to do, and how will he respond to the directive?

HEAVENLY DIRECTION

“ 13 And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat.”

Peter was hungry, and now a voice from heaven gives him an opportunity to satisfy his hunger. The directions are clear, and while they are introductory to a more significant point, they must be taken seriously. Peter is to get up, kill some of the beasts in the lowered sheet, and eat, satisfying his hunger. The only complication is the nature of the foods within the sheet.

This word has come from heaven, from whence the clean and unclean distinctions of foods were given under the Law. On the surface, it will appear to be a contradictory word, which will dictate the way in which Peter responds to it.

Right here we are being exposed to a Divine manner through which the truth is brought home to the heart with strength. Peter is given something to think about – something to assess. As a wise scribe, he must reach into the bag of human thought and perception and reason upon what he is being shown. As we will find, the purpose of this vision is not to establish what kind of food Peter is to eat. It is rather intended to pave the way for carrying the Gospel to the Gentiles. However, before that is done, Peter must first understand a condition that exists concerning which he is not yet clear – clean and unclean foods.

The reason for the necessity of this understanding is that the ceremonial law was never intended to be an end of itself. It foreshadowed reality, but was not the reality itself. It rather introduced spiritual verity that, when revealed, superseded the Law, or were characterized by a greater glory. This is involved in Paul's exposition of the great glory of the New Covenant (2 Cor 3:7-11).

SOMETHING TO BE SEEN

There is a principle of understanding that is integral to godly reasoning. First, consideration, or thoughtfulness, must begin with God's revelation – what He has made known. That is the subject of consideration. It is the matter that is to be comprehended. It is not proper to make it our primary aim to understand what men have said. Such an understanding will not enlarge the border of godly wisdom and spiritual understanding. Not knowing this, some sincere men have squandered a lot of their time with their primary objective being to understand men, or what men have said.

On one occasion, when Jesus was teaching His disciples, He likened the Kingdom of God to several different things: 1) A man who sowed wheat in his field, only to have an enemy come in while men slept, and sow tares in the same field (Matt 13:37-43). 2) A man who found a treasure in a field, and sold all that he had to buy the field (Matt 13:44). 3) A merchant man who was in quest of "goodly pearls, who, upon finding one pearl of great price, sold all that he had and bought that pearl (Matt 13:45-46). 4) A net that was cast into the sea, gathering fish of every kind. Upon being drawn to shore, the bad fish were thrown away, and the good fish were gathered into vessels (Matt 13:47-50). At the conclusion of His words He asked the disciples, "Have ye understood these things?" The disciples said, "Yea, Lord" (Matt 13:51). It is then that He delivered this word: "Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old" (Matt 13:52).

The "treasure" of which Jesus spoke was the individual's knowledge and recollection of certain things. These were resources for processing thoughts. New things would be things newly learned, or revealed. Old things would be things already known, or formerly revealed. An attempt to understand a matter often involves integrating what is known with what has been revealed, yet is not yet clearly discerned.

This is what is going to take place in our text. Something will be required of Peter that is, in a sense, new – to rise, kill an unclean animal, and eat it. Immediately he will reach into his intellectual treasury to find something pertaining to this matter. What he finds does not integrate with what he has heard, and he will express that to the Lord.

The outcome of it all will be good, but it did involve using the knowledge that was obtained, comparing it to what had been made known, and arriving at a new conclusion. That conclusion will be based upon the newest insight, and will replace an understanding that was but introductory.

I have observed that some people cannot reason properly because they have nothing of significance in their scribal treasury. Most of what they have is nothing more than the religious traditions of men – and the traditions themselves are fundamentally flawed. For this reason, statements of Scripture are often confusing and difficult to understand. It was in this sense that Jesus charged the perpetrators of these traditions with shutting up the Kingdom of God so that none could enter (Matt 23:13), and taking away the key of knowledge (Lk 11:52).

It is difficult to estimate the spiritual damage that occurs when the religious mind feeds upon the traditions of men, and is not exposed regularly to the truth of God. The mind is thus being cluttered with all kinds of contaminating thoughts that are much like poison to the soul. Unlike Timothy, who “knew the Scriptures” from his childhood (2 Tim 3:15), these poor souls do not have good things in their treasury. That is why their reasoning is unacceptable.

THE DICTATES OF THE CONSCIENCE

“ 14 But Peter said, Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean.”

It is important that we peruse this text properly, and not impose upon it the thinking of the corrupt theology of our time. Much is revealed in this passage concerning the impact of “an honest and good heart”

Here, we will be exposed to the power of the conscience. Heaven has contacted Peter, and he knows it. Yet, he will refuse to do what he is told. It is important that we peruse this text properly, and not impose upon it the thinking of the corrupt theology of our time. Much is revealed in this passage concerning the impact of “an honest and good heart” (Lk 8:15). Because of the wave of religious distractions, focused and sober thought is not common in our time. However, that circumstance is not a Kingdom normality, and ought not to be treated as though it was. For believers, contemporary standards are to be established according to Scripture, and in strict harmony with the pilgrimage-nature of spiritual life. Where this is not done, confusion and division are the inevitable results.

NOT SO, LORD

“But Peter said, Not so, Lord . . .” Other versions read, “By no means, Lord,” NASB “Surely not, Lord!” NIV “No, Lord,” RSV “in no wise, Lord,” DARBY “Far be it from me,” DOUAY “I can’t do that, Lord,” GWN “Certainly not, sir,” NAB “God forbid, Lord,” TNT “Never, Lord,” LIVING “I would never do that, Lord,” IE “Absolutely not, Lord,” ISV “Never by any means, sir,” WILLIAMS “No, by no means, Lord,” AMPLIFIED and “Most certainly not, Lord!” ALT

The words “Not so” are significant, and it is important that we understand them. They are translated from a single Greek word – Mhdamw/j (may-dam-occe). This word is used four times in the New Testament Scriptures – twice by Jesus, and in two accounts of the event we are considering (Acts 10:14; 11:8). The texts in which Jesus used this word are as follows. I have emphasized the word that is translated from the Greek word.

- “If thy whole body therefore be full of light, having NO part dark, the whole shall be full of light, as when the bright shining of a candle doth give thee light” (Luke 11:36).
- “And I say unto you my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have NO more that they can do” (Luke 12:4).

It is apparent from the above texts that the word we are considering does not reflect a rebellious spirit. It is not a word of refusal, even though some of the versions of Scripture suggest this to be the case: “I can’t do that,” GWN “Certainly not,” NAB “I would never do that,” IE “Absolutely not,” ISV and “Most certainly not!” ALT I realize that many of the translators have the notion that we should bring the text closer to the people. However, I have a contention with that type of thinking. It seems to me that the aim of the preacher and teacher is to bring the people closer to the text.

Peter was not saying, I refuse to that! Or, I will not do that! He was rather reflecting his understanding of the holy Law of God, which He perceived as forbidding such an action. It is what God had said that, in his understanding, forbade him to do what he was told to do. In other words, he could not violate his conscience – a conscience that had been formed by the Law to which he had been subjected. Technically, we will find that he was not correct in his assessment of the case. However, it was because he refused to violate his conscience, that he personally came to see the error in his thinking.

Paul had the same experience when he set out to persecute the church of God., He did not do this out of a personal hatred for believers, but because he saw them as violating the Law of God., He was also incorrect in his assessment, but he also refused to dishonor his conscience, which had also been formed by the Law. Like Peter, Paul refused to ignore his conscience. He confessed to the Jewish council, “I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day” (Acts 23:1). That is precisely what Peter is saying. Furthermore, like Peter, Paul’s conscience was made more perfect, and he too changed his mind.

Whether we are speaking of the Old Covenant or the New Covenant, “the end [purpose, NKJV goal, NASB] of the commandment is . . . a good conscience .” (1 Tim 1:5). In Christ, that objective is enlarged to include charity out of a pure heart, and faith that is not feigned or pretentious. A “good conscience” does not speak of a person who simply feels they ought to do this or that. Such feelings can be driven by fleshly lusts, and reflect a mindset that regards self above all else – God included. A person, for example, may say their conscience does not condemn them because they smoke, or drink, or gamble. However, such a conscience has not been formed by the Word of God – not even an incorrect understanding of the Word of God.

In the Scriptures, a person who is said to have been living with a good conscience is one who has been living to please the Lord. They may have been incorrect in their assessments of God, but that incorrectness was not owing to the preference of self. It was rather the result of an imperfect understanding – or a “weak conscience” (1 Cor 8:12).

This is a vital distinction, for no person has been granted license by the Creator to live for themselves, without regard to God Almighty. Even if they have a deficient understanding, they are to honor their conscience, and not smite it to the ground with the bludgeon of self-will. In due time, God will bring further light to such souls, even as he is doing in our text – both to Cornelius and to Peter.

I HAVE NEVER . . .

“ . . . for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean.” Other versions read, “unholy and unclean,” NASB “impure or unclean,” NIV “profane or unclean,” NRSV “I have never taken food which is,” BBE “polluted or unclean,” GENEVA “defiled and ritually unclean,” NET “anything that our Jewish laws have declared impure and unclean,” NLT “at no time did I,” YLT “I have never in all my life eaten such creatures, for they are forbidden by our Jewish laws,” LIVING “I have never yet eaten anything . . .” WEYMOUTH “anything common, or not ceremonially cleansed,” WILLIAMS “anything that is common and unhallowed or [ceremonially] unclean,” AMPLIFIED “For not once in my life have I ever eaten anything . . .” PHILLIPS “anything] common [fig., ritually impure] or unclean [or, which defiles],” ALT and “anything that is unclean and not fit to eat.” CEV

This is a remarkable statement, and separates Peter from the masses of religious people in our time – even before He became a disciple of Jesus. I have already referred to the laws specifying clean and unclean meats. They were extensive, and required analysis and deliberate action. They did not allow for a change of the rules in a time of hardship, or an adjustment of the standards under unusual circumstances.

It is generally thought that Peter was one of the older disciples. If this was so, it accents all the more the manner of life that he lived. He states to the Lord that he had “ never eaten anything that is common or unclean” – never! The word “never” is an especially strong one. It is translated from the Greek word ouvde,pote , and has the following lexical meaning. “Denying absolutely and objectively, not ever,” THAYER and “not at any time,” FRIBERG “not ever, at no time.” LOUW-NIDA The clear meaning is that in all of his life there was not a single time when Peter ate something forbidden by the Law – not so much as one time!

This kind of discipline is not common in the Western world – particular when it comes to food. Yet, this is how a noble Jew lived, of which Peter was surely one. Whatever people may think about any crudeness in Peter, or hastiness to do something that was not right, or to assert his own will, it is good to give due consideration to this text. At a mature age, he could say to the Lord Himself with all honesty that he had never allowed any food forbidden by the law to come into his mouth.

ABOUT “JEWISH LAWS”

Some of the Bible versions take the liberty of referring to “Jewish laws” (NLT–New Living Translation, YLT–Young’s Literal Translation, Living Bible), “ritually unclean” (NET–The Net Bible), “not ceremonially cleansed” (Williams), “ceremonially unclean” (Amplified), and “ritually impure” (CEV–Contemporary English Version).

In my judgment, these version have misrepresented the case, as though Peter was giving honor to a national law, or the Jewish way of doing things. This was emphatically not the case. He did this because of His devotion to God Himself. That is why he honored the Law, not simply because he was a Jew.

It is possible for a person to do the right thing for the wrong reason – like being baptized because the church requires it, or abstaining from fornication out of a fear of contacting a deadly disease, or keeping yourself pure in the prospect of marriage. However noble such causes may appear, they are not noble enough. At some point the individual must be moved by the fear of God and faith in Christ. The commandments of God are to honored because of Him, not because of some temporal advantage they are perceived as bringing to us. And, surely they are not to be kept to please a religious sect.

THE SECOND TIME

“ 15 And the voice spake unto him again the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.”

Heaven will reply to the response of Peter, confirming that his answer was not a rebellious one, and that he was being prepared for involvement in the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. This, of course, is an aspect of Divine fellowship. It is a two-way engagement. Here it in words. Such fellowship can also take place in musings and deep thought.

THE VOICE

“And the voice spake unto him again . . .” There have been dreams and visions in which nothing is recorded to have been said. These include Joseph’s dreams (Gen 37:5-10), the dreams of the baker and butler who were in prison with Joseph (Gen 40:5-13), Pharaoh’s dreams (Gen 41:1-7), Nebuchadnezzar’s dream (Dan 2:29-45), and Daniel’s vision (Dan 8:1-12). These, however, were the exception to the rule. Visions were nearly always attended by intelligent words. Those involved in such communications include Abraham (Gen 15:1), Jacob (Gen 46:2), prophets (Num 12:6), Balaam (Num 24:4), Samuel (1 Sam 3:4-14), Nathan (2 Sam 7:17), Daniel (Dan 2:19), Obadiah (Obad 1:1), Zecharias (Lk 1:11-22), the women who came to the tomb (Lk 24:23), Ananas (Acts 9:10), Cornelius (Acts 10:3), and Paul (Acts 16:9).

In all of these things, the significance and value of the dreams or visions was found in what was said in or about them. An appeal was made to their minds.

This is what will take place in our text. There will be an appeal to Peter's mind. He will be required to review something he thinks is true, reassessing it in view of something God has done – something he had apparently not yet comprehended.

I fear that this is a facet of spiritual life that has been greatly minimized in our time. One of the great weaknesses of the modern church is its thoughts and perceptions. Comprehension is the revealed objective of God for His people (Eph 1:18-20; 3:18-19; Col 1:9). They are categorically told, "Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is" (Eph 5:17). I acknowledge that the fulfillment of this objective would put a great host of religious professionals out of business. However, they need to be put out of business, because they have brought no spiritual advantage to the people of God.

These words accent that what was said this time differed from what was said the first time. A second oracle was delivered. The first one had to do with what Peter was to do. The second had to do with what God had already done. In the Scripture, "the second time" does not speak of mere repetition, but rather speaks of an advanced word or work.

Now we will see how God goes about promoting an increase in understanding in Peter, and how Peter himself responds to Divine overtures.

THE SECOND TIME

“. . . the second time”

These words accent that what was said this time differed from what was said the first time. A second oracle was delivered. The first one had to do with what Peter was to do. The second had to do with what God had already done. In the Scripture, "the second time" does not speak of mere repetition, but rather speaks of an advanced word or work. A few illustrations from Scripture will serve to substantiate this point.

- When Abraham was commanded to offer Isaac as a burnt offering to God, he headed for the designated place, and there commenced to complete the sacrifice as he was instructed. However, "the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven," instructing him not to do anything to Isaac. Now the angel knew that Abraham truly feared God. After Abraham had offered a ram in the place of Isaac, Abraham called the name of that place Jehovahjireh, which means "the Lord will see to it" (Gen 22:10-14). At that time "the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time." This time the angel promised the Lord would bless Abraham with blessing, multiply his seed, and blessing all nations of the earth because he obeyed the Lord (Gen 22:15-18).
- It was when Joseph's brothers had returned to Egypt "the second time" that he revealed himself to them (Acts 7:13; Gen 45:1-13).
- It was when the Lord appeared to Solomon "the second time" that He confirmed He had heard Solomon's prayer of consecration for the Temple, also promising that He would never allow David's throne to pass away, reserving it for the Christ (1 Kgs 9:2-5).
- When the angel of the Lord appeared to fleeing Elijah "again the second time," he provided a meal of rich fare for him that enabled him to go in the strength of it for forty days (1 Kgs 19:7-8).
- Through Isaiah God promised He would "set His hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea” (Isa 11:11).

- Three times Jeremiah said the word of the Lord came to him “the second time ” (Jer 1:13; 13:3;33:1).
- The hope of the church is the appearing of Christ “the second time ” (Heb 9:28).

In all of these instances, there was an extension of the involvement of men. They confirmed that the Lord finishes what He begins. It also goes without saying that this circumstance requires the increased awareness of the listener, and an alertness to perceive what is being said.

GOD HATH CLEANSED

“What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.” Other versions read, “What God hath cleansed no longer consider unholy,” NASB “Do not call anything impure that God has made clean,” NIV “What God has made clean, you must not call profane,” NRSV “Stop treating as unclean what God has made clean,” CJB “The things that God hath purified, pollute thou not,” GENEVA “Don't say that the things which God has made clean are impure,” GWN and “What God has made clean, you have no right to call profane.” NJB

At once we see that God will not allow for ideas to be entertained that are at variance with what He has said. Men may speak of having a right to their opinion, and the promotion of rights of free speech – but God does not. I understand there are certain political advantages to these things. Notwithstanding, such are never the focus of Divine communication.

Peter is looking at a sheet that contains all manner of living creatures. According to the Law, he sees them as falling into the category of “unclean.” That means that throughout his life he had made a point to know precisely what God had identified as unclean, and then to avoid contaminating himself by eating those creatures. Right there we find a startling difference between serious Jewish people and the Gentile church. They made it their business to understand the covenant that was given to them. In our time, we find multitudes of professing Christians that do not have the faintest idea of the nature of the New Covenant, and of the matters that are made known under the administration of Jesus.

“What God hath Cleansed”

Now a voice from heaven informs Peter that what he has seen as unclean has actually been cleansed by God, and is no longer unclean. In other words, the stipulations of the ceremonial law were no longer valid. They had been superceded by a greater glory.

The cleansing was very real, rendering the clean and unclean distinction in foods no longer valid. The Old Covenant “stood only in meats and drinks, and diverse washings, and carnal ordinances,” (Heb 9:10), but that is not the manner of the New Covenant.

And, when did God “cleanse” these meats, making them fit for consumption? He did it through a word that was delivered by His only begotten Son. About midway through His ministry, Jesus confronted the Jewish leaders with the vanity of their religion. His words were occasioned by a question the Pharisees and scribes asked Him about His disciples. “Why walk not Thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashen hands?” (Mark 7:5). The Lord then launched into a scathing rebuke of these men for their hypocrisy, telling them they had made the Word of God “of none effect” through their tradition.

Jesus then turned called all of the people to Himself, and delivered an arresting word. Here is the record. “And when He had called all the people unto him, He said unto them, Hearken unto Me every one of you, and understand: There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him: but the things which come out of him, those are they that defile the man. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear” (Mark 7:14- 16). His disciples did not understand what He had said, Therefore, “when He was entered into the house from the people, His disciples asked Him concerning the parable” Mark 7:17). Jesus immediately responded saying, “Are ye so without understanding also? Do ye not perceive, that whatsoever thing from without entereth into the man, it cannot defile him; because it entereth not into his heart, but into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purging all meats?” (Mark 7:18-19).

The last expression in verse nineteen is an explanation of what Jesus had accomplished in these words: “purging all meats.” This is, in fact, a parenthetical statement – a saying that elaborated on His previous words. Other versions read, “This he said, making all meats clean,” ASV “thus purifying all foods,” NKJV “(Thus He declared all foods clean),” NASB (“In saying this, Jesus declared all foods clean),” NIV “As a result, He made all foods clean,” CSB “By saying this, Jesus declared all foods acceptable,” GWN “by saying this, he declared that every kind of food is acceptable in God's eyes,” NLT and “Thus He was making and declaring all foods [ceremonially] clean [that is, abolishing the ceremonial distinctions of the Levitical Law].” AMPLIFIED This is the cleansing to which the heavenly voice referred.

The cleansing was very real, rendering the clean and unclean distinction in foods no longer valid. The Old Covenant “stood only in meats and drinks, and diverse washings, and carnal ordinances,” (Heb 9:10), but that is not the manner of the New Covenant. As Paul confirmed, those who command “to abstain from meats” are out of order, speaking lies out of their hypocrisy. Paul goes on to substantiate that all meats have, in fact been cleansed, are good for food, and are to be received with thanksgiving: “. . . meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving: For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer” (1 Tim 4:3-5).

Now, in our text, Peter is informed, and all other men as well, “What God has cleansed and pronounced clean, do not you defile and profane by regarding and calling common and unhallowed or unclean!” AMPLIFIED Add to that the words of Paul: “But meat commendeth us not to God: for neither, if we eat, are we the better; neither, if we eat not, are we the worse” (1 Cor 8:8). Those, therefore, who would bind the Levitical laws concerning foods upon us ought to be dismissed from the church, for God has made no place for their words. They are more closely related to the Pharisees than Jesus, and their words are to be summarily rejected. They contradict the voice that spoke to Peter, the teaching of the Lord Jesus, and the exposition of Paul. No man is to attempt to speak in contradiction of God, for He will be justified in all of His sayings!

The importance of this saying will be confirmed by its contribution to the opening of Peter’s understanding concerning the acceptance of the Gentiles. This entire incident also shows the strength required to overturn wrong views – wrong, not because they are the outgrowth of rebellion, but because something God has done is not known.

WHAT IS INVOLVED IN THE CLEANSING

It is necessary that we have an understanding of what was involved in the cleansing of all foods. This has to do with what is referred to as the ceremonial law. It is related to the Ten Commandments, which were the “words of the covenant” that God made with Israel. This is what Apostolic writings refer to as the “ordinances” that accompanied the Law: “Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace” (Eph 2:15). The book of Hebrews refers to these ceremonies as “carnal ordinances,” imposed upon the people until the time of the New Covenant, which was the time of reformation, or the “new order.” NIV “Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation,” or “of the complete new order when Christ, the Messiah, shall establish the reality of what these things foreshadow—a better covenant” AMPLIFIED (Heb 9:9-10).

These ordinances, ceremonies, feasts, and various washings, were the ordained means of Israel living within the parameters of the Old Covenant. The people were not made better in the fulfillment of them, nor did they obtain the remission of sins through them. That is why it is written that they were not made “perfect, as pertaining to the conscience.” Even after the highest ceremony of all – the day of atonement – the priest and the people went away with a reminder of their sins, not a sense of forgiveness (Heb 10:1-4). Nevertheless, the various washings and ceremonies were the appointed means of them living unto the Lord, or having the Lord at the center of their lives.

This approach was put in place because Israel did not have new hearts, and were therefore primarily directed by outward means. The distinction in foods, holy days, new moons, and Sabbath days were, in fact, “a shadow of things to come.” They were not the real thing, for “the substance is of Christ” (Col 2:17). They pointed to something else, and were not an end of themselves. That is, the real issue before God was not what the people did, but what they themselves were. They were a people whose thoughts were not in synch with those of God, and that was an unacceptable condition (Isa 55:8-9). The only way their works could in any way please God were for them to, through ordained procedures and ceremonies, reflect the spiritual substance that would be realized with the induction of the New Covenant. That was the intent of the ceremonial law – to provide a rational depiction of things to come. They had nothing whatsoever to do with sound agriculture, or the health of the body, or a Divinely approved pattern of behavior.

Therefore, when Christ brought the real bread (John 6:35,48), the living water (John 4:10-11; John 7:38), spiritual washing (1 Cor 6:11; Eph 5:26; Tit 3:5; Heb 10:22), and eternal rest (Heb 4:1-5, 8-11), the other things, contained in the ceremonial Law, ceased to have any validity, for they were only introductory. When what they introduced was given to the people, there was no further need for the introduction – just as when Jesus came, the introductory ministry of John the Baptist was no longer required. The shadow and the substance cannot continue simultaneously. This is because the substance has a greater glory that causes the glory of the shadow to diminish – like the light of the moon and the stars in the glory of the light of the sun.

This was the circumstance Paul delineated in the third chapter of Second Corinthians. “For if the ministry of condemnation had glory, the ministry of righteousness exceeds much more in glory. For even what was made glorious had no glory in this respect, because of the glory that excels. For if what is passing away was glorious, what remains is much more glorious” (2 Cor 3:9-11).

The New Covenant is like the sun, which sheds its greater light, dispelling the darkness, and outshining all lesser lights, so that they are no longer prominent. The Old Covenant itself, which rested upon the doing of man, is like the moon, which had a glory of its own, yet was inferior to the glory of the New Covenant. The ceremonial law was like the stars, numerous in number, yet which are even lesser lights than the moon. In nature, the inferior light of the moon and the stars are no longer visible when the sun has risen to its apex. So it is in the spiritual economy. When the New Covenant was inaugurated, it emitted a glory that caused the glory of the Old Covenant and its attending ordinances to fade away.

It is important to see that the New Covenant did not simply replace old laws with new ones. It is a superior covenant, and is the fulfillment of the promises of old, being what God had intended to do from before the foundation of the world. Questions regarding unclean foods and the Sabbath day cannot be answered on the basis of law. It is Divine glory that is the issue, not what men do. Under an economy of grace a system of works and routines makes no sense, because “better things” are now in place (Heb 11:40; 12:24). This is the very thing that is being confirmed to Peter.

Jesus is very pointed in identifying when “the time of reformation” commenced. The time was associated with His own coming into the world. That introduced a new period with a new thrust, and was a sort of interim between the old and new covenants. There had never been a time like it before, nor has there been one like it since. Here is how Jesus stated the case. “The law and the prophets were until John : since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it” (Luke 16:16).

The distinction of foods belonged to the era of “the law and the prophets.” Therefore, during His ministry Jesus “declared all foods clean” NASB (Mk 7:19). In this He was preparing the way for the better covenant and its “better things.”

At the time of our text, this had not yet dawned upon the understanding of Peter. That is why he refused to kill and eat any of the creatures let down to him in the net. However, this occasion will prove to be the a prelude to the time when he will see matters more clearly – something essential to what he will be asked to do.

THREE TIMES, THEN WITHDRAWAL

“ 16 This was done thrice: and the vessel was received up again into heaven.”

There is a kind of heavenly tenacity revealed here that is most refreshing. It reveals the aggressiveness of the Lord to accomplish His work, and the extent to which He goes to bring a proper understanding to His servants. In view of this no child of God can be content to remain in ignorance concerning things on which the Lord has spoken. Just as the disciples inquired for the meaning of things Jesus said they did not understand (Matt 13:10,36; 15:15; Mk 7:17; John 16:18), so are we to be aggressive to do the same.

“This was done thrice . . .” Other versions read, “And this happened three times,” NASB “this was repeated three times,” NJB “the same vision was repeated three times,” NLT and “This occurred three times.” AMPLIFIED

There have not been many messages delivered by God three times. God delivered the Law one time. The penitent on the day of Pentecost were told what to do one time. Jesus died one time, rose again one time, ascended one time, and will return to earth one more time to gather His own. Paul was called into Macedonia one time.

Some understand the reference to three times to be applicable to the speaking of the words, “And the voice spake unto him again the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common” (Acts 10:15). However, I do not believe this is the meaning of the text. The language itself seems to me to forbid this interpretation. First, the word “This” is literally translated “This thing” THAYER – singular, as opposed to the plural “these words.” Second, this is something that was “done,” which term is translated from a word meaning “to come into being, or begin to be.” THAYER Translators use the following expressions to translate the word: “happened,” NASB “took place,” DARBY “was repeated,” NJB and “occurred.” AMPLIFIED Words are spoken. They are not said to happen, take place, or occur. Further, the expression “was repeated” refers to something that was single, not plural. I gather, then, that the entire vision with its accompanying words and Peter’s response took place three time.

Here, therefore, is a vision that occurred three times. Three times a net filled with all manner of unclean creatures was deliberately let down to Peter. Three times he was told to rise, kill, and eat. Three times he said he could not do this because he had never eaten anything unclean throughout his entire life. Three times he was told not to call anything that God created unclean.

That dark spot in his understanding is also reflected in his view of the Gentiles. For fifteen hundred years, God had dealt exclusively with the Jews. All of the prophets came from them. Jesus was born out of their nation, and Jesus ministered primarily to “the lost sheep of the house of Israel,” to whom He was sent

It ought to be clear that a very major misconception is about to be cast down. It will be done indirectly, not directly. In a very rare case of Divine repetition, Peter will be forced to consider something that has already taken place, yet of which he has no cognitive awareness. Here is the man with the keys of the kingdom, who directed the early believers on why Judas was to be replaced, and how they ought to go about it. This is the man who opened the door of salvation to the Jews, and had exerted Divine power in the presence of many witnesses at the Gate called Beautiful. He had confounded religious authorities, boldly speaking to them and even causing them to marvel. He had discerned those who had repented and told them what to do. He had recognized someone who had lied to the Holy Spirit, and had responded appropriately. He had laid his hands on Samaritan believers, and they received the Holy Spirit. He had discerned the inward thoughts of Simon the Sorcerer. He has also spread the word powerfully in the region of Samaria and Saron, and multitudes in Joppa had believed because of what he has said and done. Yet, he is not yet aware of something that God has done – cleansed all meats.

That dark spot in his understanding is also reflected in his view of the Gentiles. For fifteen hundred years, God had dealt exclusively with the Jews. All of the prophets came from them. Jesus was born out of their nation, and Jesus ministered primarily to “the lost sheep of the house of Israel,” to whom He was sent (Matt 15:24).

THE VESSEL WAS RECEIVED UP AGAIN INTO HEAVEN

“ . . .and the vessel was received up again into heaven.” Other versions read, “taken up into heaven again,” NKJV “and immediately the object was taken up into the sky,” NASB “and immediately the sheet was taken back to heaven.” NIV

This terminated the vision, and concluded the words that were spoken to Peter concerning the matter. Now, the apostle is left to ponder what he has both seen and heard. What has taken place is that heaven has prepared him for the men sent to him by Cornelius, and for the events that will follow. To this point, the matter is not clear to Peter, but as he thinks upon it, clarity will come. That is the calculated effect that meditation is intended to have.

CONCLUSION

This account confirms the manner in which Gods works with men. Prior to involvement, there are generally preparations for that involvement. Sometimes they are immediately before the intended participation, while at other times there is a more lengthy preparation. Israel was prepared for deliverance by a lengthy period of bondage. Saul of Tarsus was prepared some time prior to his calling by the stoning of Stephen, to which he consented. The disciples were prepared for the coming of the Spirit by a period of prayer, waiting, and attending to some necessary things. The people on the day of Pentecost were prepared by the feast of the Passover, which they were observing. The Ethiopian eunuch was prepared by his reading of the prophet Isaiah. Solomon well said, “The preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the LORD” (Prov 16:1).

In all of these instances, and more, there was a certain mental disposition. Thoughts became more ordered and focused, and the things of God in some way became more prominent in the thoughts of the people. This circumstance is one of the primary reasons for edification, or the building up of the saints through rational and contemplative means. In edification, exhortation, and comfort (1 Cor 11:3), more takes place in the heart of a believer than learning. A certain spiritual culture is developed in which advancement in the faith can take place, and Divine employment is more likely.

When professing Christians are not edified, and their thinking is not elevated and focused on eternal matters, they become less likely to fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life (1 Tim 6:12). Living by faith and walking in the Spirit involves thought, contemplation, meditation, and pondering. An unthinking Christian is a living contradiction, for there is nothing about Jesus, the Gospel, the New Covenant, or any facet of spiritual life, that is disassociated from thought. That is why an entertainment-based approach to reaching people for Christ is nothing more than an exercise of vanity. It simply is not possible to engage people in holy thought by appealing to their emotions or fleshly preferences. Such approaches do not prepare the heart, or ready the individual for Divine confrontation, revelation, or sanctioned areas of involvement.

In our text, Peter has been prepared by a vision from heaven, and words that forced him to think anew about something that he had already settled in his mind. From this point on, as he considers the vision, the way Peter is to take will become more clear. This is an example of someone having fellowship with Jesus, and of its powerful impact.

Lesson #47

PETER IS DIRECTED TO GO TO CORNELIUS

“ Acts 10:17 Now while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate, 18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there. 19 While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee. 20 Arise therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have sent them. 21 Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius; and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek: what is the cause wherefore ye are come? 22 And they said, Cornelius the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee. 23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him. ” (Acts 10:17-23)

INTRODUCTION

After receiving an arresting vision while in a trance, Peter was perplexed about its meaning – which was not given to him. He had been commanded to do something that contradicted a manner in which he had lived all of his life – a mode that involved living with a good conscience toward God. Not willing to dismiss the vision as though it was nothing more than an imagination, he thought upon it, carefully considering and weighing it. Precisely at the time the vision concluded, the men from Cornelius arrived and were standing at the gate. They inquired if Simon, who was surnamed Peter, was there. Now, as Peter was thinking upon the vision, the Holy Spirit spoke to him, informing him that three men were seeking him. He told Peter to go down to them without any misgivings or confusion, for He Himself had sent the men to Peter. The apostle immediately went down to the men, identified himself, and asked them the cause for which they sought him, which cause had not been told him by the Spirit. The men reported the cause, Peter lodged them, and they left in the morning for Caesarea.

The manner in which everything is being carried out is worthy of notation. This is God working all things together for good – something that those with faith know. As it is written, “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose” (Rom 8:28). Both Cornelius and Peter trusted God, as their lives testify – although the measures of their trust differed because of the measure of their understanding. Both men have also been called according to His purpose, as the recorded events confirm. Both men have been living within the awareness of what they do know, and both of them are responsive to Divine direction. Apparently neither of them are stunned that they have heard from heaven, and both of them respond immediately to what they have heard.

We must not allow the rarity of such people in our time to move us to imagine that men cannot be like this today. In fact, this is the Kingdom norm: living with a consciousness of what is known of God, and responding to Divine direction. This is confirmed over and over in Scripture. Special details are provided for such men. Prior to the Law, there was Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph. Following the giving of the Law there was Moses, David, and the holy Prophets. Commencing with the appearing of Jesus, there was John the Baptist, the twelve apostles, Stephen, Philip, Paul, Barnabas, Silas, Timothy, and others.

THE GENTILE WORLD DESCRIBED

The epochal nature of the door of faith being opened to the Gentiles is confirmed by the revealed description of their moral and spiritual condition. This was partly owing to the limited revelation given to them. However, it was primarily the result of the nature, or moral and spiritual makeup, of the people. They were wholly undeserving of any Divine preference and goodness. God clearly establishes this in the first chapter of Romans (1:19-32).

Thus, over and above the unacceptable traits of the Gentiles, God had NOT chosen them as He had Israel. He had NOT shown favor to them as He did Israel. He had NOT provided them with revelations of Himself as He had Israel.

However, of themselves, Israel was no better than the heathen. God did not choose them because of any excellence or superiority in them. Rather, it was because of His promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Therefore Moses said to Israel, “The LORD did not set His love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people: But because the LORD loved you, and because He would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers , hath the LORD brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt” (Deut 7:7-8).

Thus, over and above the unacceptable traits of the Gentiles, God had NOT chosen them as He had Israel. He had NOT shown favor to them as He did Israel. He had NOT provided them with revelations of Himself as He had Israel. Now, consider the Gentiles as they are presented in Scripture. This is the view of them according to their nature – their Agamic nature.

- Israel was forbidden to learn their ways. They were warned, “Learn not the way of the heathen . . . For the customs of the people are vain . . .” (Jer 10:2-3)
- Jesus refers to Gentiles. Jesus said of the Gentiles, “But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do : for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking” (Matt 6:7).
- They walked in their own ways. “. . . the Living God . . . Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways ” (Acts 14:16).
- They sacrificed to demons. “But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God : and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils” (1 Cor 10:20).
- They were carried away to lifeless idols. “Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led” (1 Cor 12:2).
- They were termed sinners. “ We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles” (Gal 2:15).
- They were without Christ, alienated, strangers, having no hope, and without God. “Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world ” (Eph 2:11-12).
- They lived in the vanity of their mind. “This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind ” (Eph 4:17).

The inclusion of the Gentiles in God’s great salvation is a marvelous display of His mercy and grace. I fear that with the exaltation of human reason, and the vaunting of man’s wisdom, the true condition of the Gentile world has been greatly obscured. All of the bodies of corrupt knowledge and defiled wisdom have issued forth from the Gentile world.

- They did not know God. “That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honor; not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God ” (1 Thess 4:4-5).
- They were not a people, and did not obtain mercy. “Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy” (1 Pet 2:10).

• They were noted for the immorality. “For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, ravelings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries ” (1 Pet 4:3).

THE ACCEPTANCE OF THE GENTILES IS MARVELOUS THING

The inclusion of the Gentiles in God’s great salvation is a marvelous display of His mercy and grace. I fear that with the exaltation of human reason, and the vaunting of man’s wisdom, the true condition of the Gentile world has been greatly obscured. All of the bodies of corrupt knowledge and defiled wisdom have issued forth from the Gentile world. God Himself says of that aspect of the Gentiles, “Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools” (Rom 1:22).

The term “Gentiles” linguistically means “nations.” However, and this must be known, it means more than that in the Word of God. The word “nations” is intended to describe every group of people in the world, with the single exception of the Jews, or the fleshly offspring of Abraham. Although small, even minuscule, in number, it is said of the Israelites, “Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen.” (Rom 9:4-5). Proportionate to the total population of the world, the Israelites are no where near a single digit on the left side of the decimal point. Yet, they were given the privilege of being “a peculiar treasure” to Him “above all people” (Ex 19:2). God said of them, “For thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God: the LORD thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth ” (Deut 7:6). Moses, the faithful servant of God said to them, “Only the LORD had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and he chose their seed after them, even you above all people, as it is this day” (Deut 10:15).

THE CHARACTERISTIC OF DIVINE PREFERENCE

This circumstance continued for fifteen hundred years. On rare occasions, some Divine consideration would be shown to the Gentiles, as with Nineveh , whom God spared when they repented (Jonah 3:10). However, the favor He showed toward Nineveh was nothing to compare with that which Israel received. God did not remain with Nineveh, vouchsafe a Law to it, or set up prophets within her walls. The privilege of serving God was not given to them, and they were not invited into His courts. Israel remained in His favor, even though they were frequently chastened for their rebellion and obstinance. When Israel was preparing to enter into the promised land, God said to them, “For thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God: the LORD thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth ” (Deut 7:6). Again, He told them He had chosen them “above all people ” (Deut 10:15). Again, Moses told them, “the LORD hath avouched thee this day to be His peculiar people” (Deut 26:18). And again he said, “For the LORD’S portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance ” (Deut 32:9). Over six hundred and fifty years later He said to Israel through Amos, “ You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities” (Amos 3:2).

God’s preference for Israel was confirmed in His dealings with them. They are the ones who were associated with God through adoption. When God made Himself known, it was to them. When He made a covenant, it was with them. They are the ones who received His Law. They alone were given the privilege of serving and worshiping God. All of the promises were given to them. All of this is stated with remarkable precision in Romans 9:4-5: “Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen” (Rom 9:4-5).

God has always been known for His preference of people. He has never revealed Himself as having a preference for all people, or for favoring all people the same, or indiscriminately. Prior to His selection of Israel, His favor was focused on certain individuals. These included Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Melchizedek, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph. These few people lived during a period of time spanning two thousand, five hundred years! What is more, following the exaltation of Christ, this Divine manner was accented all the more. Now God receives only those who are in Christ Jesus. They are the only ones He accepts, and are the people He favors above all others. In confirmation of this, they are referred to as “the elect” (Col 3:12), “His elect” (Matt 24:31), “the children of God” (Rom 8:16), “the sons of God” (Rom 8:14), “a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people” (1 Pet 2:9), and those He has purified “unto Himself a peculiar people” (Tit 2:14).

Even within the body of Christ, all people are not considered to be the same. Although salvation is “common” (Jude 1:3), and faith is “common” (Tit 1:4), yet there are some people who are “first” within the church – “first” by Divine appointment and preference (1 Cor 12:28). Even among the “apostles,” there were some who were favored above others – like Peter, who was given the keys of the kingdom of heaven (Matt 16:19), and Paul, to whom special mysteries were revealed (1 Cor 12:1-7). This perspective is in perfect harmony with what God has revealed of Himself throughout the ages.

In a way, it is astounding that in our time the God of heaven is being presented as though these things were not true. Professed Christian leaders and teachers have led men to believe that God being no respecter of persons means that he views every man alike. However, this is not so. The meaning of God being no respecter of persons is that He views every man as they really are, and will not be swayed in His view by some distortion of the truth, or by mere human accomplishments.

The extraordinary amount of revelation on this subject makes an ignorance of it totally unacceptable. If men do not know this, it is only because they have neglected the Word of God, which speaks so abundantly and clearly of it – a word by which spiritual life is both begotten and sustained (Luke 4:4). That Word cannot be neglected with impunity!

WHILE PETER DOUBTED IN HIMSELF

“ Acts 10:17a Now while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean . . .”

The vision being completed, and heaven being closed, Peter now returns to an ordinary environment. However, he will not be able to forget what he has supernaturally seen and heard.

HE DOUBTED IN HIMSELF

“Now while Peter doubted in himself . . .” Other versions read, “wondered within himself,” NKJV “was greatly perplexed in his mind,” NASB “was wondering,” NIV “was greatly puzzled,” NRSV “was inwardly perplexed,” RSV “at a loss,” NJB “mused in himself,” TNT “was still puzzling,” PHILLIPS “was thoroughly perplexed,” ALT and “in self was bewildered.” INTERLINEAR

The word “doubted” is translated from the Greek word dihpo,rei, which has the following lexical meaning: “to be entirely at a loss, to be in perplexity,” THAYER “of mental perplexity be utterly at a loss, be thoroughly perplexed, be bewildered,” FRIBERG “to be confused, wonder,” UBS “to be very confused,” LOUW-NIDA “to be a matter of doubt of question,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “to be greatly perplexed, be at a loss.” GINGRICH

It is true that “doubt” sometimes involves unbelief, being the opposite of trust. When this kind of doubt is mentioned in Scripture, the English word is derived from a different Greek word. The Greek language being more precise, had more than one word for what we refer to as “doubt.” For example, when Peter’s attention was diverted when he was walking on the water to go to Jesus, he began to sink, and cried out for the Lord to save him.

• Doubt, Meaning #1. When Jesus rescued Peter, He said, “O thou of little faith, wherefore midst thou doubt?” (Matt 14:31). Here, a different Greek word is used: evdi, stasaj . This word means “waver,” THAYER “be of two minds about something,” FRIBERG “to think that something may not be true or certain,” LOUW-NIDA and “hesitate,” LIDDELL-SCOTT This kind of doubt involves wavering, vacillating, fluctuating, and being unstable. It includes the idea of wavering between two conflicting considerations, then defaulting to the thing that is not the primary consideration – like Peter seeing the boisterous wind, then assessing his situation as impossible.

• Doubt, Meaning #2. Jesus once said to His disciples, “Verily I say unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; it shall be done” (Matt 21:21). Here the word “doubt” is translated from the Greek word diakriqh/te . This word means, “to be at variance with oneself, hesitate,” THAYER and “being undecided in oneself, doubt, hesitate, waver.” FRIBERG Here, the idea is that of experiencing conflicting thoughts, as compared to beholding a troubling circumstance. In that case, doubting is deferring to the inferior and false notion of the circumstance itself.

In both of the above cases, doubting had to do with pondering two different things (thought or circumstance), and choosing what was not in conformity with the will of God. This kind of doubt is related to unbelief, and is not acceptable before God. It reveals a yielding to the powers of darkness, and a rejection of the light. This is not the kind of doubt that Peter had.

In view of the fact that no explanation was given to Peter concerning the vision he had just seen. He was left in a state of confusion. This matter had extended beyond the circumference of his understanding, and therefore he could not arrive at its meaning. He would have to become involved in what God was doing in order for the vision to be made more clear. It is as he walked in the light, participating in the will of God, that more clarity would be given to him. He was not required to make a choice between believing or not believing, or choosing a lie to the truth. Rather, this was a matter that he did not understand. Once the understanding of the situation was realized, then Peter would be required to make a choice. That is the manner of the Kingdom.

In view of this circumstance, some might conjecture that because they do not understand, they have no obligation to ponder the matter, or engage in a quest to obtain understanding. However, this is flawed thinking. God has enjoined obtainable understanding upon us: “Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is” (Eph 5:17). And again, “See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise ” (Eph 5:15). By obtainable understanding, I mean comprehending what God revealed or made known. The very fact that God exposes us to some facet of truth or expression of His mind, places a solemn obligation upon us to arrive at some understanding of what was made known. The fact that it may extend beyond the circumference of our understanding, or even beyond all natural ability, has no bearing whatsoever on the matter. What God makes known is intended to be understood – that is why He makes it known. If men do not pursue that understanding, God will not ignore it. He will, then, pour out a spirit of deep sleep upon the people, as He did with Israel, causing the truth to be closed to them, and then condemning them for that condition (Isa 29:10).

WHAT DID THE VISION MEAN?

“ . . . what this vision which he had seen should mean . . . ” Other versions say that Peter was wondering within himself “what this vision which he had seen meant,” NKJV “as to what the vision which he had seen might be,” NASB “about the meaning of the vision,” NIV “as to the purpose of this vision,” BBE “what the vision he had seen could denote,” MRD “what the vision he had seen could signify,” NET and “What could this vision mean?” LIVING

Peter cannot dismiss the vision from his mind. He knows that more is involved than clean and unclean meats, but has no idea what the vision has meant, or even implied. He does not turn from the consideration of the vision, but inquires within what it could possibly mean.

Here, we are being exposed to the thinking of a godly man. Such a person has an inquiring mind that becomes occupied with the things of the Spirit of God. As it is written, “For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace” (Rom 8:5-6).

We are to understand that the enlargement of our understanding often involves facing something that we cannot figure out or understand. The fact that what has been made known cannot be understood only means that we are being tested to confirm the validity of our profession. Genuine faith will pursue the truth, for it comes with a love for the truth. On one occasion, when John was receiving the Revelation on the Isle of Patmos, he saw the book of Divine Destiny being held by the One on the throne. The book was written inside and on the back side, yet was sealed with seven seals so that it could not be read. A strong angel cried out, “Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?” It is written that there was “And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon” (Rev 5:2-3). A casual watcher might have concluded that God did not want anyone to read what was in the book, and thus let the matter go. However, John, even though advanced in years, did not think in this way. He himself acknowledged, “And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon” (Rev 5:4). He knew that what was made known from heaven was intended to be understood. His desires were met, and he was given to know what was in the book.

In like manner, the text suggests that Peter was not satisfied to remain in a state of ignorance concerning this vision. He desired an understanding of it.

SOMETHING TO BE SEEN

There is a facet of the Kingdom of God confirmed here that must be seen. God’s Kingdom is not a static one. There are purposes that God is fulfilling in a timely and effective manner. One of them is the acceptance of the Gentiles, and the grafting of them into the Jewish tree (Rom 11:17,24). This engrafting did not take place during the time of Moses. That was not the time for it. It did not take place during the Babylonian captivity, when Judah was being punished for its neglect of the honoring of the sabbath years. This acceptance was intended to take place after Jesus had come into the world, and after “His own” had failed to receive Him (John 1:11). Now, while Peter is in Joppa, in the house of Simon the tanner, the time has arrived for the fulfillment of this Divine purpose.

Although Peter’s understanding is not yet in synch with God’s purpose, it is necessary that it be elevated. Just as surely as the Kingdom itself is not static, so the understanding of that kingdom must not remain unchanged. Here, we are not speaking of an understanding that is deficient because of a rebellious condition. This is a matter of growth, but that does not make it optional. Peter will be brought to comprehend what God is doing, and why He is doing it. This is essential, for men are, in fact, “workers together” with the Lord (1 Cor 6:1) and “laborers together with God” (1 Cor 3:9).

The condition of the modern church is not good when it makes a place for workers without understanding and laborers without discernment. Yet, this condition is so prevalent that it is staggering. The work of the Lord is not being associated with spiritual understanding. In fact, there is a kind of disparagement of godly wisdom and spiritual understanding, as though it inhibited, what is conceived to be, the main work of the church.

Our text is the record of the work of the Lord being carried out – He is, under there watchful eyes of angelic hosts, “working salvation in the midst of the earth” (Psa 74:12). As is apparent, those involved in the work will experience an enlargement of their understanding.

THE MEN FROM CORNELIUS ARRIVED

“ 17b . . . behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate, 18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there. ”

If it is true that God is “working salvation in the midst of the earth,” then He is doing so within a competitive environment, not a vacuum. The earth is an arena in which there are personalities working who are appropriately referred to as “principalities,” “powers,” “the rulers of the darkness of this world,” and “spiritual wickedness in high places” (Eph 6:12). This is the domain in which the devil himself walks about “as a roaring lion . . . seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pet 5:8). He launches the arrows of poisoners thoughts – “fiery darts” – into the minds of men, to bring them down (Eph 6:16). There is also demonic activity, for they are perpetrators of “doctrines” that subvert the souls of men (1 Tim 4:1). These dark spirits are responsible for promoting “strongholds of thought” that take hold of unstable souls, and “imagination” and “every high thought” that are designed to throw men into a confused state, and ultimate condemnation (2 Cor 10:4-5). There are also “unreasonable and wicked men” from which even apostles have sought deliverance (2 Thess 3:2). This is not even to mention the allurements of “this present evil world” (Gal 1:4), and “fleshly lusts, which war against the soul” (1 Pet 2:11). Of course, for the faithful, all of this is neutralized by the presence of an “innumerable company of angels,” who are “sent forth to minister for those who shall be heirs of salvation” (Heb 1:13). There is also the Holy Spirit who is sent to convict the world “of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment” (John 16:11). Add to that “the powers of the world to come,” that are tasted by those who are “accepted in the Beloved” (Heb 6:5; Eph 1:6). The speaking Jesus is also brought into this scenario – the One who is speaking “from heaven” to men in the earth (Heb 12:25).

The will of God is being carried out in the midst of this remarkably teeming environment of activity. Holy and unholy influences. Righteous and unrighteous thoughts. The powers of the world to come, and the powers of the domain of darkness. Men have to do with them all, whether they are aware of them or not.

This is the environment in which, by design, the will of the Lord is being carried out. Ultimately, it is this circumstance that will confirm God is over all. It will also confirm the truth that Jesus did, in fact, destroy the devil in His death, and plunder His principalities and powers.

Additionally, the understanding of this environment is what establishes to the heart that “it is God that worketh in you, both to will and to do of His own good pleasure” (Phil 2:13). Those who perceive this situation know that it is true, “salvation belongeth unto the Lord” (Psa 3:8). They begin now to cry out with discernment, “Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb” (Rev 7:10). This is why repentance must be given by Christ (Acts 5:31), being a grant from heaven (Acts 11:18). This is why both faith and love have to come from “God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ” (Eph 6:23). The environment in which we are working out our own salvation with fear and trembling requires that we be “taught of God to love one another” (1 Thess. 4:9).

What a marvelous commentary on the effectiveness of Divine direction, and the surety that attends those who set out to do what the Lord has required of them. When insightful men say, “The will of the Lord be done,” they speak truth.

This condition is why human wisdom is vain. It is why the will of man is not sufficient. It is why God has saved us and called us “not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace” (2 Tim 1:9). Of himself, man cannot navigate through this maze of competing powers and influences. Who does not know this?

THE MEN ARRIVED

“ 17b . . . behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate”

Now, when we read that the men from Cornelius arrived at the house of Simon the tanner, we must do so with the environment I have just mentioned in mind. You may be sure that the prince of the power of the air was aware of the mission on which these men were sent. He is not privy to the secret counsels of the Almighty, but he does know what men are saying and doing, else he would not seek to exploit those occasions for his own purposes.

Do you not know that Satan was as aware of Cornelius as he was of Job? He had been restrained in the case of this gentile centurion just as surely as he was in the case of Job. If he had been able to do so, he would have stopped these men from arriving at the destination, as he sought to do the three shipwrecks in which Paul was involved. He would have had some thieves waylay these men like he did the man who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho (Lk 10:30). He certainly had ample time to cause such a thing to happen, had he been able to do so. He could not even “hinder” them, so they would be required to make repeated efforts to get to the house of Simon the tanner – as he was given leave to do with Paul (1 Thess 2:18). The hook of God was in Satan’s nose, so that he could not interfere with the journey of these men.

God still works in this manner, directing the feet of the godly, restraining the wicked one, and seeing to it that we are not tempted above what we are able to bear. The only catch in it all is that we must be about our Father’s business, doing the will of God from the heart.

So now, the men have arrived in Joppa, made inquiry concerning where Simon’s house was located, identified the house, and are standing at the door – safe and sound! What a marvelous commentary on the effectiveness of Divine direction, and the surety that attends those who set out to do what the Lord has required of them. When insightful men say, “The will of the Lord be done” (Acts 21:14), they speak truth.

THEY ASKED IF PETER LODGED THERE

“ 18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there.” Other versions read, “and calling out,” NASB “They called out,” NIV and “they called out to inquire.” AMPLIFIED

A spiritually naive person might have sat down near the door and waited for God to prompt someone to bring Peter to them. There might even be some inclined to think God would have Peter standing at the door waiting for them. After finding the house of Simon the tanner, these men did what they could: they inquired if Peter was there.

Although it may appear incidental, these men were living out walking by faith. They knew who they were looking for, and where he was located. They did not rest when they had arrived, but pursued their mission with zeal. In was in the process of that pursuit that they realized their objective.

As seemingly simple as that may appear, this is the way men walk by faith. They do what they know to do, and go where they know to go. They do not lose sight of their objective, but always keep it before them, refusing to be content until it is realized. We know that the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord (Psa 37:23). “The steps” of reference depict a person on the move. He is engaged in the fulfillment of the Lord’s mandate. If it is Abraham, he leaves his home and heads in the general direction of an unknown country. If it is Moses, he returns to Egypt to deliver the word of the Lord to Pharaoh. If it is Philip, he heads for the road that leads to Gaza. If it is Saul of Tarsus, he proceeds to the city to which he had been directed. If it is Ananias, he heads for a street called “Straight,” and the house of a man named Judas. These are the kind of steps that are ordered by the Lord. It is not the idleness of a person that is directed, but his steps. Many a poor soul has never made any significant progress in the kingdom of God simply because they have not done what they already know to do. They have really never made a journey on the highway God has raised up (Isa 35:8). They have never engaged in the crucifying of the flesh, denying ungodliness, coming away from defiling influences, or perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord. Their steps have never been in those ways, and that is why they have not been directed in areas of blessing. When you know what you are to do, get to the doing of it, and then you will be given further Divine direction. You will find what the Lord has for you when you pursue it – just as the men in our text.

PETER THOUGHT ON THE VISION

“ 19a While Peter thought on the vision . . .” Other versions read, “reflected on the vision,” NASB “was still thinking about the vision,” NIV “was pondering the vision,” RSV “was turning the vision over in his mind,” BBE “mind was still on the vision,” CJB “was still thinking seriously about the vision,” NET “was puzzling over the vision,” NLT “was still earnestly thinking over the vision,” WEYMOUTH “was meditating on the vision,” WILLIAMS “was earnestly revolving the vision in his mind and meditating on it,” AMPLIFIED “was still thinking deeply about the vision,” PHILLIPS and “trying to understand what the vision meant.” GNB

In order for the vision to be profitable, it must engage the mind of Peter. It was not enough for him to merely have the vision, then going about his way without understanding it. Carnal men are content to experience things they do not understand. In fact, at the low end of the moral ladder, men are provoked to engage in all manner of conduct that excuses the productive use of the mind. Those who resort to hard drink, drugs, and excessive forms of entertainment are engaged in activities that tend to dull the mind and make it useless. Euphoria in its varied states, which rest primarily upon the feelings or senses, are sought in an effort to get away from thinking.

It is most unfortunate that this tendency has also been brought into the church by men who have crept in unawares. They teach people that things like falling on the floor in a kind of unconscious state, speaking mysterious languages, and other forms of conduct that side-step the mind, are special blessings from the Holy Spirit. However, Jesus never promised His disciples a Spirit that would work in such a manner. Like it or not, the Holy Spirit administers a domain of spiritual intelligence. When He is said to moved holy men, they wrote the Scriptures, which employed their intelligence, and appealed to the intelligence of others (2 Pet 1:21).

If we are to love the Lord with our mind (Matt 22:37), and if we serve the Law of God with our mind (Rom 7:25), then it cannot be excluded in our involvements with the Lord. If we are transformed by the “renewing” of our minds (Rom 12:2), have they not been sanctified by God for sacred use? It is shameful when any professing Christian, who is in possession of all of their mental faculties, is weak in the area of thought. Those who are not thoughtful cannot possibly be godly, for thought and cognition are principle parts of godliness. When God diagnosed fallen humanity, He accounted for the wickedness in these words: “every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually” (Gen 6:5). Again, He said of the wicked, “God is not in all his thoughts ” (Psa 10:43). David well observed that the Lord “knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity” (Psa 94:11). When God assessed wayward Israel He said, “For My thoughts are not your thoughts” (Isa 55:8).

It is for this reason that one of the fundamental changes that takes place in the believer is that he thinks differently. His thoughts begin with a different basis, and proceed to a different conclusion. The ministration of Divine favor actually takes place in one’s thoughts. David well said, “In the multitude of my thoughts within me Thy comforts delight my soul” (Psa 94:19). He even cried out to God, “Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts ” (Psa 139:23). Solomon once observed, “Commit thy works unto the LORD, and thy thoughts shall be established” (Prov 16:3).

When Paul wrote the churches, he told them to “think soberly,” or with spiritual soundness of rectitude (Rom 12:3). That is, think in view of ultimate reality – reality that has been revealed in the Word of God. He admonished them to think upon things that are approved by God and eternally profitable to men: “Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things” (Phil 4:8).

The church has fallen upon hard times when it is weak theologically – in the knowledge of God. The lack of sober thought accounts for the lack of understanding, for understanding is administered to men through the process of thinking. This principle is lived out in our text. When the church is inundated with frothy music and shallow and intellectually inferior preaching, it is in the process of spiritual decline. By intellectually inferior, I mean something that does not promote sound thought. It will do no good for men to speak of revival and renewal if, in matters pertaining to God, their understanding is paralyzed! Whatever may be said of falling down under the power, jumping, shouting, and various forms impromptu actions, they do not compensate for a lack of holy thought. Such things are not the means through which extended profitable thought are realized.

Sound thinking presumes a knowledge of God’s Word – just as in this very text. If people do not have a basic knowledge of the Word of God, their thoughts will tend to drift toward vanity and theological nonsense. It is no wonder that our adversary the devil is so aggressive to suppress the preaching and teaching of the Word of God itself. He does not object to men diagnosing humanity and making an effort to help them if their thoughts are not shaped by the Word of God. Wicked men can engage in charitable enterprises, but they cannot promote the knowledge of God and righteousness.

BACK TO OUR TEXT

Now, it is as Peter is thinking upon what has been shown to him from heaven that he will receive further direction. When the text says Peter thought upon the vision, it does not mean that he was absorbed with what he saw. It is what was said at that time that produced the perplexity, not what was seen. The sheet that was seen, together with what was in it, was the preparation for what was said – and that is what Peter was thinking about. What God has done through this vision has now engaged Peter’s mind, and therefore more will be given to him – matters that must be comprehended for what is ahead.

THE SPIRIT SAID UNTO HIM

“ 19b . . . the Spirit said unto him . . . ” All versions read fundamentally the same: i.e. “The Spirit said to him,” or “the Spirit told him.”

While Peter was thinking on the vision that had been given to him from heaven, the Holy Spirit of God addressed him directly. Precisely how this was accomplished is not made known, whether by means of an audible voice, or a kind of spiritual intuition. I can see the wisdom that has withheld the details from us. What very little we know about the Person of the Holy Spirit has provoked all kinds of speculation in the Christian community. Religious men who are not Christ-centered are easily drawn aside to profitless tangents, and tributaries of thought that do not empty in the sea of God’s will.

If men are going to “hear what the Spirit says” (Rev 2:7,11,17,29; 3:6,13,22), they must be in the proper frame of mind, and considering the truth of God. It was after an angel had directed Philip to go down to the desert road that led to Gaza, and while he was engaged in obeying that word, that “the Spirit said unto Philip . . . ” (Acts 8:29). I do not believe I am stretching the point when I say that if men do not act upon what they know, and ponder the truth to which they have been exposed, it is not likely that anything more will be given to them.

The Spirit speaks in much the same way as God spoke to Elijah the prophet. When he had arrived at “Horeb the mount of God,” from which the Law had been given (Mal 4:4), he went into a cave, and spent the night there. While there, the word of the Lord came to him, asking what he was doing there. Elijah replied that he had been very zealous for the Lord, yet the people had forsaken the covenant, thrown down His altars, and now the prophets of God were being slain with the sword. He said he was the only one that was left – at least that is what he thought. The Lord told Elijah to go and “stand upon the mount before the Lord” – the mount from which the Law was giving amidst a violent shaking, tempest, and fire (Heb 12:18). When Elijah stood upon the mountain, “behold, the LORD passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the LORD; but the LORD was not in the wind.” Immediately after that destructive wind, there occurred a violent “earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake.” Further, “after the earthquake a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire.” Thus the circumstances that had attended the giving of the Law were duplicated before Elijah. However the Lord Himself was not perceptible in any of them. Only after these things – “after the fire a still small voice” came to Elijah – and God was in it! (1 Kgs 19:11-12). One version reads that there was “a gentle whisper.” We are not told what was said, but it was at that point that Elijah returned to the cave. God then asked him again what he was doing there. After the prophet had rehearsed what he had said before, he was given specific direction. During the time he was standing on the mount of God, his attention had been turned to God Himself. At that point there was no thought of Jezebel and her threats, or of the decline of the people. It appears that the soul of the great prophet was quieted, and his thoughts more ordered. It was then that God told him what to do.

Most believers have learned of the value of thinking about right things. It does have a quieting effect upon the soul, so that the still small voice of the Lord can be discerned. One of the things that the modern Christian counselors have managed to do is turn the thoughts of the people toward their problems. This is because they really do not have any solutions. However, above that, they are thrusting the people into a state of mind in which it is not possible to hear from the Lord or be consciously directed by Him. When thinking centers on difficulties, we will find that God is not in the matter. Those difficulties are like the wind, earthquake, and fire to which Elijah was subjected. However, when our thinking fastens upon what God has said, then, like Peter, we are positioned for advancement and learning.

ONE MORE WORD

I cannot leave this section without observing that many people never experience Divine direction because they are not prepared to do so. They are occupied with things that have no spiritual relevance, and therefore cannot be taught. Or, they are engaged in things that have nothing to do with the maintenance of a good conscience before God, and thus are spiritually deaf.

Throughout my deliberate and concentrated involvement with the church, now over fifty-seven years, I have been chagrined with the caliber of most professing Christians. Within the circles in which I have walked, godly people were always the exception. Those who could handle the Word of God, and had some degree of spiritual understanding, were exceedingly rare. Among the leaders of the sect with which I was identified, there were constant efforts to get the people to read the Bible more, pray more, attend the assemblies, and “win souls.” There was an acute deficiency in the people, and the leaders knew it. Yet, nothing ever changed. The effects of revivals were dissipated in a very short time. Young people who were stirred Godward by their experience at a Christian service camp returned to face the indifference of their home church. Any person or group of persons who sought for more exposure to the Word of God faced apathy, and often outright opposition. These conditions continued year after year, and decade after decade.

Such circumstances were not unique to the group to which I belonged. When speaking with insightful leaders of other sects, they said they were facing the same situation. All of the groups could only find solace in the beginnings of their movement – from the Reformation Movement in the 1500's to the Charismatic Renewal in the twentieth century. From time to time they would all bring relics out of the spiritual museums and parade them before the people in a vain attempt to get the fires burning again.

Precisely what caused these conditions – conditions that continue to this very day? It was, and still is, the lack of the occupation of the mind with what God has said – what He has revealed. Until men think upon what God has said, the heavens will remain as brass, just as they did for Israel (Deut 28:23). As long as professing believers tolerate songs and sermons to center in human experience instead of Divine revelation, their religion will be nothing more than vanity that actually provokes the God of heaven to anger. It is necessary to remember that it was Israel's religion that angered God. When they came into the courts of His house with their pretentious worship, He asked them who invited them to enter into His courts (Isa 1:12). He told them their songs was nothing more than "noise," and commanded them to take them away from Him (Amos 5:23). He told them that when they offered burnt offerings to Him, He would not receive them (Amos 5:21).

Why did the Lord speak to His own people in such a manner. It was because their hearts and minds were not involved in their religion. The most solemn of all religious activities were done perfunctorily, without the involvement of the mind. They talked a lot, but their hearts and minds were corrupt. God's own assessment of their condition tells the story. "Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near Me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor Me, but have removed their heart far from Me, and their fear toward Me is taught by the precept of men: Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid" (Isa 29:13-14).

WHY SAY THESE THINGS?

These observations are not a mere hobbyhorse on which I delight to ride. Our text is in sharp contrast to those ancient conditions, and we need to consider why it is. Peter had come from the very heritage I have just mentioned. However, he had not stayed there. By the grace of God, he had been "redeemed from the empty way of life handed down" from his "forefathers" NIV (1 Pet 1:18). That is, the salvation of God, or the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, included deliverance from pointless and profitless religion. Those who remain in the grip of such a religion have good reason to question whether or not they are saved! I do not say this in a condemning way, as though consigning all such people to the lake of fire. That is not something that is lawful for any man to do. However, it is necessary to say these things in order to provoke self examination, and that is something that God Himself requires. As it is written to the church, "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" (2 Cor 13:5).

Peter had made the transition from the old to the new (2 Cor 5:17), and from the darkness to the light (Acts 26:18). He had been translated out of the kingdom of darkness, and into the kingdom of God's dear Son. Any deficiency of knowledge in him was NOT owing to rebellion or hardheartedness. The lack of understanding in the matter at hand was owing to a need for further insight. Peter would be given that insight because, as one who had been born again, he chose to think about proper things. When he was exposed to something more advanced, he thought upon it.

THREE MEN SEEK YOU; GO WITH THEM

"19c . . . Behold, three men seek thee. 20a Arise therefore, and get thee down, and go with them . . ."

This is not an area of life in which men are authorized to legislate – whether it is by outlining suggested plans, or making hard and fast rules for other people. This is strictly a personal matter, but it is something that requires our personal attention.

Behold the remarkable details. The number of men seeking him is specified, and why they are there. Peter is told to get up, go down to the men, and go with them. Remember, this communication is from the Holy Spirit. It comes to Peter while he is thinking about the vision vouchsafed to him, which thinking put him in a proper frame of mind for heavenly direction.

I suppose for some, this might appear to be nothing more than something incidental. However, here we are being exposed to the practicality of spiritual life. It is possible to adopt a form of religion that is intellectually nothing more than philosophical, and in activity mere lifeless routine. Our culture both subtly and apparently promotes this kind of religion. It is a form that is without power (2 Tim 3:5). There is really nothing practical about it, and therefore it is rarely, if ever, perceived as being related to life. It does not provoke people to get up and actually do something in response to the Lord.

Here was a circumstance where Peter was required to leave where he was. Remember, he had gone there to pray, and now he is required to leave that activity, as well as the place where it was being done. He had been hungry, and something was being prepared for him. Yet, he had to leave that activity as well, suppress his appetite, and engage in an activity that appeared to neither blend with prayer, nor provide the satisfaction of hunger.

INTERRUPTIONS

This incident confirms that the Divine agenda can interrupt both our religion and our appetite; our prayers and our meals; our plans and our routines. It is possible to live as a slave to routine and natural appetites, so that the individual is never turned aside from life's normalities to do the will of the Lord. Many a soul has fallen into this snare, and has therefore missed the blessing of the Lord.

Part of this circumstance is owing to the fact that people live their lives and make their plans without the Lord Himself in mind. When it comes to making personal plans, the word of James is most appropriate: "Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that" (James 4:14-15).

This is not an area of life in which men are authorized to legislate – whether it is by outlining suggested plans, or making hard and fast rules for other people. This is strictly a personal matter, but it is something that requires our personal attention. It is possible to pass by some great spiritual benefit while engaged in ordinary and lawful pursuits. Life can be lived so casually and routinely that we bring upon ourselves severe limitation.

The Incident of Elisha

Take, for example, one of the final words spoken by Elisha the prophet. When Elisha had fallen sick of a disease from which he would die, Joash the king of Israel came down to him, and wept over the prophet. He dreaded the thought of this man of God being removed from the nation. Perhaps thinking that Elisha would be translated into heaven like Elijah, Joash said, "O my father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof" (2 Kgs 13:14).

Elisha, unmoved by the lamentation of Joash told him to take to himself a bow and some arrows. When the king had done so, the prophet told him take the bow in his hands. When he did, Elisha put his hands on the king's hands and told him to open the window toward the East. He then said "Shoot. And he shot. And he said, The arrow of the LORD'S deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria: for thou shalt smite the Syrians in Aphek, till thou have consumed them" (2 Kgs 13:17). This was not a mere target practice, for Elisha has associated what was happening with the Lord God of Israel. The prophet then told the king, "And he said, Take the arrows. And he took them. And he said unto the king of Israel, Smite upon the ground. And he smote thrice, and stayed” (2 Kgs 13:18). Elisha became angry that the king shot only three arrows. He said, “Thou shouldest have smitten five or six times; then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it: whereas now thou shalt smite Syria but thrice” (2 Kgs

Many a soul has got caught up in the routines of life, being distracted by life rather than reigning in life, which is the intended result of salvation.

The whole incident makes no sense to the flesh, but it makes a lot of sense to the mind controlled by the Spirit. Joash did not shoot his arrows with the Lord and his deliverance in mind. He lapsed into a kind of normal state – as one who was just shooting arrows in a routine manner. This casualness resulted in his victories being limited, whereas they could have been extensive.

Many a soul has got caught up in the routines of life, being distracted by life rather than reigning in life, which is the intended result of salvation (Rom 5:17). Such have forfeited long-term benefits and Divine employment for the normalities and routines of life. It all looks innocent enough, and it is not something about which beholders should rant and rave. However, it is possible to live in such a manner as to be alert to possibilities and opportunities that are superior, and are laden with Divine benefits – matters of true relevance. Such souls will never forfeit the blessing of the Lord for some temporary benefit – whether it is praying or eating.

All of this is involved in loving the Lord our God with all of our heart, soul, mind and strength (Mk 12:20). It is part and parcel of being sanctified spirit, soul, and body (1 Thess 5:23). This is what is required when whether we eat or we drink, we “do all to the glory of God” (1 Cor 10:31). This is the core of living NOT unto ourselves, but unto Him who died for us and rose again (2 Cor 5:15). See, this is actually being lived out in our text. Peter is not living for himself, and therefore can be called to a higher work.

DOUBTING NOTHING

“ 20b . . . doubting nothing: for I have sent them.”

The Spirit specifies the manner in which Peter is to receive these men, and explains why he should not hesitate to adapt that manner. This is an appeal to Peter’s faith and trust. If Peter was not a man of faith, these words would have no appeal. This is one of the advantages of living by faith, conducting our lives in the prevailing interest of God’s will. In such a case, when we become aware of the will of the Lord, we more readily obey. If, however, a person is not living by faith, obedience to the Lord becomes less likely, for obedience proceeds from faith (Rom 16:26; Heb 11:8).

DOUBTING NOTHING

“ . . . doubting nothing . . .” Other versions read, “without misgivings,” NASB do not hesitate,” NIV “without hesitation,” NRSV “with no doubts at all,” CSB “let not thy mind hesitate,” MRD “all is well,” LIVING “without any doubt [about its legality] or any discrimination or hesitation.” AMPLIFIED “with no wavering,” EMTV and “not discriminating.” LITV

Here, the word “doubting” is translated from the Greek word diakrino,menoj , which means to discriminate, as in differentiating between Jew and Gentile. THAYER It also carries the idea of hesitation and doubt because one is at variance with himself – caught, as it were, between two contradicting views, and unable to make up his mind, THAYER or being “undecided within oneself; doubt, hesitate, waver.” FRIBERG Peter was to go immediately, and not delay. The idea is also present that Peter was not to hesitate when he faced some Gentiles at the door, drawing back from them as he did from the unclean animals that were in the sheet let down from heaven. He was not to weigh in his mind whether it was right or wrong to hearken to these men, or lawful or not lawful to company with them. If he did have any scruples, or difficulty in conscience about what he was going to face, he was to lay them all aside, and do so at once.

Now, the manner in which the word “doubt” is used by Jesus and the apostolic writers will serve to more precisely define the word. Remember, this is something that the Holy Spirit strictly charged Peter to do: “doubting nothing!”

- Jesus used this precise word when He spoke to His disciples about their faith: “Verily I say unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; it shall be done” (Matt 21:21).

- When referring to Abraham’s strong faith, Paul employed this word also. It is translated “staggered not” in the King James Version: “He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God” (Rom 4:20). Other versions read “did not waver.” NKJV

Every professing believer must address any such tendency, for it militates against faith, which always responds instantly. Howbeit, this is another thing that cannot be resolved by Law. It will be much easier to yield instant obedience when it is remembered that the Lord’s requirements are always right, and never wrong.

The same word is employed in Romans 14:23, where the person who has doubts about a matter, proceeds to do it anyway, in spite of the of pangs of conscience that he has. Such a person will be judged for his lack of concern. “And he that doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for whatsoever is not of faith is sin” (Rom 14:23).

- James also uses this word, contrasting it with faith. In his text the word is translated “wavering” in the King James version. Other versions translate the word “doubts.” “But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed” (James 1:6).

Peter was not to draw back or hesitate because of any preconceived notions he might have entertained. The men were at the door, and he was to go, receive them, and go with them without hesitation . The Spirit will proceed to elaborate on why his obedience must not be delayed.

A Divine Manner

This is also a Divine manner – the requirement for unhesitating responses to the directives of the Lord. Israel was tutored in this manner through the ceremonial Law. “Thou shalt not delay to offer the first of thy ripe fruits, and of thy liquors: the firstborn of thy sons shalt thou give unto me” (Ex 22:29). No person was permitted to think in terms of convenience, or to hesitate because they saw no sense in the requirement, or felt that they were incapable of carrying it out.

David saw the truth of this. When the commandments of the Lord were clear to him, he confessed, “I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments” (Psa 119:60).

When Lot’s family was delivered from Sodom, he almost lost his life while he delayed. The angels who were sent to deliverer him had to take hold of him to get him out of the city. “And while he lingered, the men laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters; the LORD being merciful unto him : and they brought him forth, and set him without the city” (Gen 19:16). This has not always been the experience of people who were being delivered. However, the account is given to us to encourage us to stay close to the deliverer, and ponder the effects of not submitting immediately.

This too is a most sensitive subject for some. They have learned to live in slothful manner, so that they are “slow of heart to believe” (Lk 24:25). Every professing believer must address any such tendency, for it militates against faith, which always responds instantly. Howbeit, this is another thing that cannot be resolved by Law. It will be much easier to yield instant obedience when it is remembered that the Lord’s requirements are always right, and never wrong. They are also timely.

I HAVE SENT THEM

“ . . . for I have sent them.” Other versions read, “I have sent them Myself,” NASB “It was I who told them to come,” NJB and “it is I who have sent them to you.” WEYMOUTH All other versions read “I have sent them” or “I sent them.”

The Holy Spirit told Peter that He had sent the three men who were standing at the door.

- The record of that initiative states that an angel appeared to Cornelius. The angel told him, “And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter: He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side: he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do” (Acts 10:5-6). That angel was referred at as “an angel of God ” (Acts 10:3).
- When Cornelius rehearsed the experience to Peter, he said, “behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing” (Acts 10:30).
- When Peter gave an account of the event, he said that Cornelius had “seen an angel in his house” (Acts 11:15).
- Much later, when Peter referred to this incident, he said, “God made choice among us , that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe” (Acts 15:7).

No Contradiction

Once the manner of the kingdom is perceived, it is apparent that there is no contradiction in these accounts. God the Father is “above all” (Eph 4:6). He, in turn, has committed all authority in heaven and earth to the Lord Jesus Christ, who is carrying out His will (Matt 28:18. Jesus sends forth the Holy Spirit, who carries out His will (John 16:7). Angels are the next level of command, who come to men as representatives of Deity. From one point of view, they are “the angels of God” (Heb 1:6). From another point of view, because they are under the command of Jesus, they are referred to as “His angels” (Matt 13:41). From yet another perspective, our text associates the men sent from Cornelius at the word of an angel as being sent by the Holy Spirit (Acts 10:20). From yet another vantage point, and at the detailed level, it was Cornelius that sent the men. Yet, it was the men themselves that delivered the message as good stewards.

There we have some of the complexities of Divine government being lived out. While God is fully able to impose His own will upon the people, as He will do on the day of judgment, and as He has done with men like Pharaoh and Herod, His ordinary manner of working is through, what I will call, a chain of command. As I understand it, this method is required because of the contaminating effects that sin has had upon the human race. There is a sense in which God Himself will not be fully with us until we are divested of these bodies – these “earthen vessels” (2 Cor 4:7). When that is completed, it is said of the redeemed, “and God Himself shall be with them” (Rev 21:3).

This chain of command to which I refer is why it is imperative that men respond favorably when the message of God is brought to them. To reject the one who delivers the message is to reject the One who gave it. Jesus said to His disciples, “He that heareth you heareth Me; and he that despiseth you despiseth Me; and he that despiseth Me despiseth Him that sent Me” (Luke 10:16).

In our text, the response of Peter will be to the men who will deliver the message to him. It will also be to Cornelius, who sent the men to him. It will also be to the angel, who told Cornelius to send them. It will also be to the Spirit, and to Jesus who sent the angel. It will also be to God, who gave “the Man Christ Jesus” His authority.

This is why no room has been made in things pertaining to life and godliness for the opinions of men. In the Divine chain of commandment, they can only deliver what they have been given, or what they have received – and what is given must come from heaven.

Just how serious is it when the message that men deliver in the name of the Lord has its genesis with men? Be assured, that it is serious beyond measure. Men may have learned to live with such a condition, but heaven will have nothing to do with it. It is God who will be justified in “all” of His sayings (Rom 3:4) – whether they have been delivered by Jesus Himself, the Holy Spirit, an angel, or those who have received those words.

A Speaking Spirit

There are a number of texts in which it is said that the Holy Spirit spoke to people. They are not numerous, but they are all significant.

- “Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot” (Acts 8:29).
- “While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee. Arise therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have sent them” (Acts 10:19-20).
- “And see, now I go bound in the spirit to Jerusalem, not knowing the things that will happen to me there, except that the Holy Spirit testifies in every city, saying that chains and tribulations await me” NKJV (Acts 20:23).
- “The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God” (Rom 8:16).
- “Therefore, as the Holy Spirit says : Today, if you will hear His voice, Do not harden your hearts as in the rebellion, In the day of trial in the wilderness” (Heb 3:7-8).
- “This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness , because the Spirit is truth” (1 John 5:6).
- “He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God” (Rev 2:7).
- “He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death” (Rev 2:11).
- “He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it” (Rev 2:17).
- “And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them” (Rev 14:13).

It is apparent from these texts that the Holy Spirit does not speak as an independent Agent. Jesus said of the Holy Spirit, “He shall not speak of Himself,” or “will not speak on His own authority,” NKJV or “will not speak on His own initiative,” NASB (John 16:13). Technically, He is the appointed Spokesman for Jesus. Jesus said the Spirit would speak “whatsoever He shall hear” (John 16:13). Another place Jesus said “He will testify about Me” NIV (John 15:26).

Sometimes the Holy Spirit speaks through individuals.

- When Jesus was preparing His disciples for the time when they would speak for Him, He said, “But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak: for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you ” (Mat 10:19-20). Mark’s Gospel reads, “But when they arrest you and deliver you up, do not worry beforehand, or premeditate what you will speak. But whatever is given you in that hour, speak that; for it is not you who speak, but the Holy Spirit ” NKJV (Mark 13:11).

- On the day of Pentecost, the Holy Spirit enabled the disciples to speak in other languages. Their message concerned the things that God had done: “And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance . . . we hear them speaking in our own tongues the wonderful works of God ” NKJV (Acts 2:4,11).

- Paul referred to words that were taught by the Holy Spirit: “which things we also speak, not in words taught by human wisdom, but in those taught by the Spirit, combining spiritual thoughts with spiritual words” NASB (1 Cor 2:13).

Words that the Spirit has delivered, however, maintain their primary association with Him, not the human agent.

An Intelligent Message

All of this confirms that the Holy Spirit speaks, or testifies, to men intelligently. He delivers a message that can be understood – indeed, a message that is intended to be understood. A religion that is void of understanding is also one that is void of the Holy Spirit.

This is not the only way He speaks, but, owing to their frailty and fleshly restrictions, it is the only way He speaks to men. We are also told that He speaks to God, making intercession for the saints. That, however, is an intercession that cannot be spoken in human words, therefore it is not spoken to them (Rom 8:26-27). It is spoken in groaning that cannot be uttered.

PETER INQUIRES WHY THEY ARE SEEKING HIM

“ 21 Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius; and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek: what is the cause wherefore ye are come?”

The Holy Spirit had not told Peter who these men were, whom they represented, or why they were there. He had only told him they are three in number, that they were looking for him, and that he was to go with them. He did not even tell Peter they were going to ask him to come with them, or why their mission would require him to do so. It is now Peter’s responsibility to learn all of these things as he goes about to do what the Spirit has said. He will come to know what is intended as he proceeds.

I AM HE WHOM YE SEEK

“Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius; and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek . . .” Other versions read, “Yes, I am he whom ye seek,” NKJV “Behold, I am the one you are looking for,” NASB and “I am the Simon you are inquiring form.” WEYMOUTH

In order for Peter to learn of their mission, he must ask them personally. He cannot send a messenger, or a servant – as when Elijah send his servant to see if the clouds of rain were in the sky

(1 Kgs 18:43). Or, as Elisha did when a Shunnamite woman came to him for help (2 Kgs 4:12,36). He must go directly to the men and make himself known.

Peter must not think of himself as being in danger, even though he does not know these men, or why they are there. It is enough that the Spirit has sent them, and that is something he must believe and rest in without any reservation. Without fear, therefore he plainly identifies himself to some strangers who, he has been apprised, are seeking him: "Behold, three men seek thee." The number of the men will confirm the truth the Spirit has spoken.

WHAT IS THE CAUSE?

" . . . what is the cause wherefore ye are come?" Other versions read, "For what reason have you come?" NKJV "Why have you come?" NIV "what is the reason for your coming?" NRSV "Why are you here?" GWN "what is the cause for which you are present?" YLT "Now what is it that you want?" LIVING "what is the purpose of your coming?" AMPLIFIED and "what brings you here?" PHILLIPS

The Spirit did not tell Peter why these men were seeking him. That was something that would be made known in the process of doing what the Spirit had directed Peter to do. This is frequently the manner in which God deals with men – not divulging the whole of the directions at the first. This was the way in which God called Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldees, clarifying the call as the patriarch proceeded in his journey (Gen 15:7). He did the same when he tried Abraham, commanding him to offer Isaac on an unknown mountain (Gen 22:2).

In the case before us, Peter had to ask the men concerning the cause for which they sought him. This reminds me of the time a Shunammite woman came to the prophet Elisha concerning her son, who had just died. When she arrived, and had been greeted by Elisha's servant, she moved forward and took hold of the feet of the prophet. The servant, Gehazi stepped forward to push her away, thinking the action was inappropriate. The prophet could tell that the woman was distraught, but did not know why. He said to his servant, "Let her alone; for her soul is vexed within her: and the LORD hath hid it from me, and hath not told me " (2 Kgs 4:27).

When we say the Lord directs the steps of a good man (Isa 37:23), we do not mean that the one who is being directed has nothing for to do. Often there is searching, thinking, and even inquiry required, as in this case. The whole person, spirit, soul, and body, is engaged in the process.

Peter knows that there is a cause behind everything the Lord does. As He Himself has said, "I have not done without cause all that I have done in it, saith the Lord GOD" (Ezek 14:23). The apostle, although he is in the highest ranking office in the church, knows he must ask the servants of another man the cause for which they are seeking him.

Pride would stop a worldly man from pursuing an understanding in such a way – but Peter is not a worldly man. Faith does produce a confidence in the one possessing it to make expectant inquiry into matters pertaining to the Lord. It is eager to pursue an available answer.

THEY TOLD HIM OF THEIR MISSION

" 22 And they said, Cornelius the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee."

One of the marks of a good understanding is the ability to be able to state a matter in a few words, and to do so at the proper time. There is also a certain boldness, or confidence, that accompanies this kind of understanding – an understanding that comes from faith (Heb 11:3). There have been men who have seen something take place, but did not know how to report it. One such man was Ahimaaz, an eager young man who had really seen something, but could not relate it appropriately to king David. He was a messenger – something like a postman. He came to bear news of a military conflict in which David’s son, Absalom, had been killed. When David asked this messenger, “Is the young man Absalom safe?” Ahimaaz replied, “When Joab sent the king’s servant, and me thy servant, I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was” (2 Sam 18:29). Of course, such an answer is not in order, so David replied, “Turn aside, and stand here” (2 Sam 18:30).

There is still no place for those who speak about things that concern the kingdom and people of God, yet have no understanding of them. Unfortunately, there is a host of people who are speaking about God, Christ, the Scriptures, and the will of God, who have nothing more than a borrowed knowledge of such things. They really do not comprehend spiritual matters, and therefore can only venture an opinion concerning them. This may appear quite innocent to naive souls. However, consider how inappropriate it would have been for these servants to report their private opinion about what Cornelius had experienced. Peter’s involvement required that a proper report be given to him concerning the cause.

When people go out in the name of the Lord, they must be prepared to give an accurate report of the cause for their mission. If they are speaking to unbelievers, they need to be able to state the cause for salvation, and why it is needful for the people to turn to the Lord – as Paul did to Felix, and the Athenians (Acts 17:17-31; 24:25). If they are engaged in building up the saints, it is essential that they confirm why this is being done – as the apostles did in their epistles

This kind of requirement still exists. When people go out in the name of the Lord, they must be prepared to give an accurate report of the cause for their mission. If they are speaking to unbelievers, they need to be able to state the cause for salvation, and why it is needful for the people to turn to the Lord – as Paul did to Felix, and the Athenians (Acts 17:17-31; 24:25). If they are engaged in building up the saints, it is essential that they confirm why this is being done – as the apostles did in their epistles (Rom 8:29-30; Eph 4:12-16; 2 Pet 3:10-13). In my judgment, much of the weakness of modern evangelism and missions is the absence of such reasoning.

Now, behold how precisely the servants replied, and with what few words they stated the case.

CORNELIUS THE CENTURION

“And they said, Cornelius the centurion . . .” Other versions read, “We have come from Cornelius the centurion,” NIV “Cornelius, a Roman army officer” GWN “A certain man whose name is Cornilus, a centurion,” MRD and “We were sent by Cornelius, A Roman officer.” NLT

While there is a sense in which individuals are incidental, this is not always the case. Here, the identity of the individual was important. The men standing before Peter were the incidental ones. The one whom they represented was the significant one. The Lord had not appeared to them, but to Cornelius. He had not directed them, but Cornelius. The details of their mission were not divulged to these men by the Lord, but by the one to whom a heavenly messenger had been sent. This was not a man Peter might suspect to have been directed by the Lord: “Cornelius,” a Gentile, as even his name indicated; and “a centurion,” an occupation that did not appear to qualify a man for the privilege Cornelius had enjoyed. Before this mission is completed, Peter will have a fresh view of how God regards men.

A JUST MAN

“ . . . a just man . . .” Other versions read, “righteous,” NASB “upright,” NRSV “a man who has God’s approval,” GWN “devout,” NLT “good,” LIVING “just and upright and in right standing with God,” AMPLIFIED and “good-living.” PHILLIPS

The Greek word from which “just” is translated is di,kaioj . The lexical meaning of the word is, “righteous, observing divine and human laws; one who is such as he ought to be,” THAYER “morally and ethically, of persons righteous, upright, just,” FRIBERG “conforming to the standard, will, or character of God; upright, righteous, good; just, right; proper; in a right relationship with God; fair, honest; innocent,” UBS “pertaining to being in accordance with what God requires - righteous, just.” LOUW-NIDA

This word is used nineteen times in the New Testament Scriptures, always being applied to individuals.

- JOSEPH, MARY’S HUSBAND – “Then Joseph her husband, being a just man . . .” (Matt 1:19).
- SIMEON – “And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just . . .” (Luke 2:25).
- JESUS – “Now when the centurion saw what was done, he glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous Man” (Luke 23:47). “For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust . . .” (1 Pet 3:18).

While there is a sense in which individuals are incidental, this is not always the case. Here, the identity of the individual was important. The men standing before Peter were the incidental ones. The one whom they represented was the significant one.

JOSEPH OF ARIMATHAEA – “And, behold, there was a man named Joseph, a counsellor; and he was a good man, and a just ” (Luke 23:50).

- CORNELIUS – “And they said, Cornelius the centurion, a just man . . .” (Acts 10:22),
- THOSE LIVING BY FAITH – “ . . . The just shall live by faith” (Rom 1:17; Gal 3:11; Heb 10:38).
- NOT DESCRIPTIVE OF ANYONE BY NATURE – “As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one” (Rom 3:10).
- THE LORD – “ . . . the Lord, the righteous judge . . .” (2 Tim 4:8)
- ABEL – “By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous . . .” (Heb 11:4).
- THE RIGHTEOUS, AS COMPARED WITH THE UNGODLY – “And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? ” (1 Pet 4:18). “...and he that is righteous , let him be righteous still . . .” (Rev 22:11).
- LOT – “For that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds” (2 Pet 2:8).
- GOD – “If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness” (1 John 1:9). “If ye know that He is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of Him” (1 John 2:29). “And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous , O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because Thou hast judged thus” (Rev 16:5).”
- THE ONE DOING RIGHTEOUSNESS – “Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as He is righteous ” (1 John 3:7).

The reference to God and Christ being “just” or “righteous” is descriptive of an inherent characteristic, or one that is integral to their persons. There was not a point in time when They became righteous. That is what they are by nature.

However, when it comes to men, this is not the case. With men, there comes a time when they pass from being unjust to just, and from being unrighteous to being righteous.

As we should expect, this is not a simplistic accomplishment – going from being unjust to being just, or from being unrighteous to being righteous. Now, indeed is the process identical in every case.

- Some, like the Philippian jailer, pass from a totally uncultured spiritual state to one in which they are fully accepted in Christ Jesus. These are those who were found by God, even though they had not sought Him (Isa 65:1; Rom 10:20).
- Others pass from a state in which, as the seed of Abraham, they were cultured by the Law, and lived devoutly within the parameters of that Law – like those on the day of Pentecost, and Saul of Tarsus. These were brought to Christ by the Law, which was their schoolmaster (Gal 3:24,26).
- Still others are brought to Christ from a Gentile state, in which they had been exposed to the Jews, and consequently to the Law and the Prophets. They became proselytes, embracing the what had been made known under the Old Covenant, and living with a conscience toward God. The Ethiopian eunuch was an example of such a man, and now Cornelius is also found in that category.

A Technical Point

From a technical point of view, which is affirmed in Scripture, no one by nature is righteous, or just. It is pointedly affirmed that “There is none righteous” (Rom 3:10; Psa 14:2-3; 53:2-3)– and the word used there is precisely the same as the one used in our text (di,kaioj). This is a description of man according to his nature – what he is independent of Divine workings or immediate affiliation with God through Christ. That is, there is nothing within the natural man that qualifies him for Divine acceptance.

Those who are untutored in the ways of the Lord often take this fact and carry it further than God intended for it to be carried. While there is a sense in which a person is either in or out of Christ, saved or lost, and righteous or unrighteous, there is a process involved in passing from death unto live. I am not referring to a set of procedures, but to certain Divine involvements that are initiatory, or preparatory.

For example, between death and life there are such things as conviction, the development of conscience, a desire to be right with God, and a kind of moral rectitude that is provoked by an increasing awareness of God Almighty. These are all preparatory, yet they do involve the development of life within – like a babe is developed in the womb of its mother. It is spiritual life that is born, or birthed. That is, when a person is “born again,” very real life from God preceded that birth. That initial life was not sufficient of itself, any more than a babe in the mother’s womb has realized its purpose.

In the case of Cornelius, his conscience had been awakened Godward to such an extent that he altered his life, bringing forth “fruits meet for repentance” (Matt 3:8). This was the conversion to which Peter referred when he said, “Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord” (Acts 3:19). The objective of the conversion was in order that their sins might be blotted out, and the refreshment, or renewal, of the Holy Spirit might come to them (Tit 3:5). In other words, the people were to live up to the measure of knowledge that they had – and Peter had significant increased the perimeter of that knowledge.

Cornelius was “just” in the sense of ordering his life to conform to the understanding of God that he possessed. That knowledge was not sufficient to actually make him righteous, as occurs in Christ

Jesus (Rom 5:19). However, because he lived with a good conscience, and was supple in the hands of the Lord, he is called a “just” man. God had recognized his manner of life, particularly taking note of prayers and gifts to the poor among the Jews (Acts 10:4).

It is good that men temper their judgment of others with this knowledge of the ways of God. Peter will elaborate on this matter when he arrives at the house of Cornelius, declaring that God has shown that those who conscientiously love God are, indeed, recognized and received by Him. That reception is not in the same sense as when we are “accepted in the Beloved” (Eph 1:6). However, it is the kind of acceptance that will be honored by further revelation – revelation that will enable one to pass from death to life, be born again, and be justified from all things.

Therefore, we are introduced to Cornelius as a “just man,” but not yet a “justified” one. However, God does not condemn Cornelius for not being justified, but commends him for being just – living up to the measure of knowledge that he had received.

ONE THAT FEARS GOD

“...and one that feareth God . . .” Other versions read, “a God-fearing man,” NASB “a God-fearer,” CSB “respects God,” GWN “godly man,” LIVING “he worships God,” IE “one who reveres God,” WILLIAMS and “God-fearing and obedient.” AMPLIFIED

It is good to take special note of this expression, because it is uncommon in our time. Rarely will you hear anyone refer to a devout person as someone who fears God. It is almost as though this terminology has been stricken from the religious vocabulary.

This is an unusually strong word, and we do well not to attempt to neutralize it with powerless words like “reverence” and “respect.” The word “fear” is translated from the Greek word fobou,menoj. This is a verb participle of the word fobe,w from which we get the word phobia. The root meaning of the Greek word is “to terrify, frighten,” THAYER and “be afraid, become frightened; (a) absolutely be frightened, be alarmed, be afraid.” FRIBERG This is not a philosophical word, but one that stems from being exposed to the Lord, or some work that was obviously from him. The knowledge of God produces such fear. It is accurate knowledge, and moves the individual to dread the very thought of being displeasing to God, or being exposed to His anger or indignation. It is the sharp conflict of God with the flesh that causes this fear.

As in the case of Cornelius, although this can involve terror and dread, it is not the kind that moves a person to run from God. Instead, it compels to draw close to him, and live their lives in a deliberate and consistent manner to please the Lord. Such people “tremble” at the very thought of being displeasing to God. They even “tremble” at His word – which trembling is duly noted and honored by God Himself. As it is written, “but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at My word” (Isa 66:2).

THE FEAR OF GOD

There are people in Scripture who were noted for fearing God, and that trait was always commendable. Jacob confessed, “I fear God” (Gen 42:18). Those who are declared to have feared God include the following.

- Noah (Heb 11:7).
- Abraham (Gen 22:12).
- The midwives in Egypt (Ex 1:17,21).
- Certain Egyptians during the time of the plagues (Ex 9:20).

- Obadiah (1 Kgs 18:3-4).
- Jehosaphat (2 Chron 20:3).
- Nehemiah (Neh 5:15).
- Hanani, Nehemiah's brother (Neh 7:2).
- Job (Job 1:1,9).
- David (Psa 5:7; 119:38).
- Hezekiah (Jer 26:19).
- Jonah (Jonah 1:9).
- The Jews working with Zerubbabel (Hag 1:12).
- Those who witnessed the loosing of the tongue of Zacharias (Lk 1:64-65).
- The women who came to the tomb of Jesus (Matt 28:8).
- The disciples on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:43).
- All who heard of the death of Ananias (Acts 5:5).
- The whole church when they heard of the death of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:11).

The knowledge of God produces such fear. It is accurate knowledge, and moves the individual to dread the very thought of being displeasing to God, or being exposed to His anger or indignation. It is the sharp conflict of God with the flesh that causes this fear.

- The churches throughout Judea and Galilee and Samaria (Acts 9:31).
- All who heard of a man dominated by an evil spirit who overcome and wounded the seven sons of Sceva (Acts 19:17).

One of the points that condemns all natural men is that “there is no fear of God before their eyes” (Rom 3:18). How frequently the apostolic writings bring up the matter of fearing the Lord.

- Those who are tempted to be complacent about their identity with God, and to assume their acceptance are told, “Be not highminded, but fear” (Rom 11:20).
- Paul said when he was among the Corinthians, he came “in much fear and trembling” – not in fear of them, but because of their tenuous spiritual condition (1 Cor 2:3).
- To the same people he said, “Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men” (2 Cor 5:11).
- Believers are told to cleanse themselves from all filthiness, perfecting holiness “in the fear of the Lord” (2 Cor 7:1).
- The saints are told to submit themselves to one another “in the fear of God” (Eph 5:21).
- Believing servants are told to submit to their masters “with fear and trembling” (Eph 6:5). Peter wrote the same thing (1 Pet 2:18).
- Those in Christ are admonished to work out their own salvation “with fear and trembling” (Phil 2:12).

Exactly how do you account for any professing Christian being lacking in this area – the area of fearing God? How is it that a Gentile like Cornelius, acquainted only with the Old Covenant, walked in the fear of God, yet those who are exposed to the New Covenant do not? How is it that any person, anywhere, who wears the name of Jesus is not afraid to sin.

Paul exhorted Timothy to publically rebuke those who sinned, including elders, “that others also may fear” (1 Tim 5:20).

- Those with a propensity to religious routine are told, “Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it” (Heb 4:1).

- The redeemed are exhorted, “Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear” (Heb 12:28).

- Peter admonished believers, “And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear” (1 Pet 1:17). Again he said, “Fear God!” (1 Pet 2:17).

- Not only are we told to be ready to give an answer to everyone who inquires about our hope, we are to give the answer “with meekness and fear” (1 Pet 3:15).

- Jude referred to false prophets who, among other things, were characterized as “without fear” (Jude 1:12).

As you can see, the Spirit has spoken much on this subject. That is why it is inexcusable for the professing church to be so lacking in this area. It betrays a near-total lack of respect for the Word of God, by which we maintain spiritual life (Lk 4:4). Very rarely will you hear anyone in our time refer to a Christian or member of the body of Christ as one that “fears God.” However, this is the very way which the Holy Spirit wrote up the record of Cornelius – and it is most refreshing to hear it.

Something to Consider

Exactly how do you account for any professing Christian being lacking in this area – the area of fearing God? How is it that a Gentile like Cornelius, acquainted only with the Old Covenant, walked in the fear of God, yet those who are exposed to the New Covenant do not? How is it that any person, anywhere, who wears the name of Jesus is not afraid to sin. How can any one in fellowship with Jesus not be afraid to touch the unclean thing, be defiled, live aloof from God, or dabble in the world? How is such a thing possible? And, who would have the audacity to suggest that such a person is saved, walking in Divine favor, or accepted by God? Those whose theology allows for such a condition need to step forward and provide some explanations for why they are at variance with God, the Holy Spirit, the Lord Jesus, His Word, and the godly of all ages.

OF GOOD REPORT AMONG ALL THE NATION OF THE JEWS

“ . . . and of good report among all the nation of the Jews . . .” Other versions read, “has a good reputation among all the nation of the Jews,” NKJV “well spoken of by the entire nation of the Jews,” NASB “respected by all the Jewish people,” NIV “highly regarded by the whole Jewish nation,” CJB “of whom all the people of the Jews bear good report,” MRD and “well thought of by the Jews.”
LIVING

You may remember that one of the promises given to Abraham was, “I will bless them that bless thee” (Gen 12:3). Knowing this, when Isaac blessed Jacob he said, “blessed be he that blesseth thee” (Gen 27:29). In Balaam’s prophecy, he also referred to this: “Blessed is he that blesseth thee” (Num 24:9). Cornelius is an example of someone who blessed the Israelites, particularly in his alms, or charitable gifts. They recognized it, and held him in high regard.

Cornelius’ respect for the Jewish people was a point of commendation – much like another Centurion who was commended to Jesus because “he loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue” (Lk 7:5).

This kind of commendation is exceedingly rare in our day – one where all of the chosen people give their commendation. One of the curses of sectarianism is that the church is so divided that it is rarely, if ever, perceived as being united on anything, much less the commendation, of someone who loves the people of God and is inclined to them.

WAS WARNED BY GOD SEND FOR THEE

“ . . . was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee into his house . . .” Other versions read, “was divinely instructed,” NKJV “was divinely directed” NASB “a holy angel told him,” NIV “directed by a holy angel,” NRSV “had word from God by an angel,” BBE “was warned from heaven by an holy angel,” GENEVA “was divinely warned by a holy messenger,” YLT and “was commanded by a holy angel.” PHILLIPS

The words “was warned from God” are translated from a single Greek word – evcrhmati,sqh . The lexical meaning of the word is “a divine response, an oracle,” THAYER “as the content of what God makes known answer, response from God, oracle,” FRIBERG “oracle, reply from God,” UBS “to make known a divine revelation,” LOUW-NIDA “an oracular response, divine warning,” LIDDELL SCOTT “oracular response, divine statement,” LEH and “a divine statement or answer.” GINGRICH As you can see, there is perfect accord among linguists as to the meaning of the word in this text.

The same word is used elsewhere in this way, and is appropriately translated.

- “And being warned of God (crhmatisqe,ntej) in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way” (Matt 2:12).
- “But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judaea in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: notwithstanding, being warned of God (crhmatisqei,j) in a dream, he turned aside into the parts of Galilee” (Mat 2:22).
- “And it was revealed unto him (kecrhmatisme,non) by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ” (Luke 2:26).
- “Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God (kecrhma,tistai) when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount” (Heb 8:5).
- “By faith Noah, being warned of God (crhmatisqei,j) of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith” (Heb 11:7).
- “See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth (crhmati,zonta) , much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven” (Heb 12:25).

Everywhere in Scripture, those who do not hearken to the word of the Lord, or obey it, are summarily condemned – whether the word was spoken directly, or through a messenger

The report of the servants, together with the representation of it in the text, is altogether accurate. Ultimately, the word came to Cornelius from God, for the angel that delivered it was said to be “an angel of God” (10:3). Further, the angel reported that his prayers and alms had come up “for a memorial before God” (10:4). This was, then, a Divine directive – a word from God, delivered by an angel, instructing Cornelius what he was to do.

The word “warning” is also appropriate, although it is omitted in several translations. Several lexicographers say that this meaning is inherent in the word itself. However, even if this was not so, who is the person who does not see the absolute necessity of hearkening to a word sent to them by God? Everywhere in Scripture, those who do not hearken to the word of the Lord, or obey it, are summarily condemned – whether the word was spoken directly, or through a messenger (Ex 6:9; 7:13; 8:15,19; 9:12; 16:20; Judges 11:28; 1 Sam 2:25; 2 Chron 35:22; Neh 9:16,29; Psa 106:25; Jer 7:24,26; 34:14; 36:31; 44:5).

The fact that Cornelius acted on the word of the angel immediately conformed that he took it seriously.

One of the great tragedies of our time is that multitudes of professing Christians do not take the word of God seriously. They do not see the warning aspect of the Scriptures. In stark contrast of this circumstance David said of the Word of God, “More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold: sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb. Moreover by them is thy servant warned : and in keeping of them there is great reward” (Psa 19:10-11). This is precisely why people neglect the Word of God, and even when they know portions of it, do not keep it.

AND TO HEAR WORDS FROM THEE

“ . . . and to hear words of thee.” Other versions read, “and hear a message from you,” NASB “hear what you have to say,” NIV “to give hearing to your words,” BBE “to listen to what you have to say,” CJB “hear discourse from thee,” MRD “to hear sayings from thee,” YLT “tell him what God wanted him to do,” LIVING and “to listen to and act upon what you have to say.” AMPLIFIED

The word that is translated “words” is r`h,mata . This is a unique word, and is not always the word translated “words.” For example, the term “words” that is found in Acts 2:22,40; 5:5; 7:22, and a number of other places is lo,gouj. The difference in these two words is technical, but significant. In the case of the latter meaning, the emphasis is placed on the words themselves, whether they are a statement, a question, or an answer. However, as used in our text, the term “words” denote a message – a compilation of words that are focused on something specific, and deliver a cogent thought or specific communication.

In this case there was a specific objective that would be served by Peter’s “words.” Acts 10:6 states that they were words that would tell Cornelius what he ought to do . When Cornelius rehearsed his vision to Peter, he said they were all there to hear “all things that are commanded thee of God ” (Acts 10:33). When Peter rehearsed this incident to the believing Jews in Jerusalem, he reported Cornelius showing them “how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter; who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved ” (Acts 11:14).

These were nor mere oratorical words, rhetoric, or a kind of speech with enticing words of men’s wisdom. There was an objective in them – a specific message that was calculated to clarify what Cornelius was to do.

If you have an ear for such things, you will detect the absence of a message in a lot of preaching and teaching. Much of what is said today lacks spiritual power, because it is in word only. That is, there is no meaningful content – nothing that faith can grasp, and nothing that can sustain the soul.

These will not be the kind of words that Peter brings to the household of Cornelius. He will deliver a word that clarifies the purpose of God, declares what Jesus has accomplished, and elucidates what is required of Cornelius and those who are with him. He does not have a lot of time to prepare for this occasion – and it is an epoch of major proportions. However, he has been living by faith and walking in the Spirit, and will therefore be easily directed. What he speaks will come from his heart, but that will not be the origin of his words. His mind will be fully engaged in what he says, but that will not be the fountain from which they spring. He will speak as an ambassador Christ, delivering His message, while understanding it and being in full accord with it. His mouth, his mind, and his heart are coordinated.

HE CALLED THEM IN, LODGED THEM, AND WENT AWAY WITH THEM

“ 23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him.”

Once the men have spoken, Peter needed no further word from them. He knows what he is to do, and immediately responds in an appropriate manner.

HE CALLED THEM IN

“Then called he them in . . .” Other versions read, “he invited them in,” NKJV “invited the men into the house,” NIV “called them in,” RSV “took them in,” BBE “bringing them in,” DOUAY “asked the men to come in,” GWN “led them in,” MRD and “Upon hearing this, Peter invited them in.” WEYMOUTH

This is a display of hospitality, which carries the idea of receiving a person who is away from home, and providing all of the necessities and amenities that are associated with one’s personal residence.

These brethren had traveled a considerable distance – about 30-35 miles, and probably on foot. Peter immediately invited them in so that they might be refreshed, and no doubt given something to eat. He himself was about to eat before they came. Now they could join him in the meal. By this time it was considerably after Noon. He had gone up to the roof to pray at Noon, had grown hungry and was having food prepared. He then had a vision that reoccurred three times, each time with some dialogue. He had then been thinking about the vision when the Holy Spirit spoke to him. Now he has met the men at the door and heard the cause for which they had come.

HE LODGED THEM

“ . . . and lodged them.” Other versions read, “gave them lodging,” NASB “to be his guests,” NIV “for the night,” BBE “gave them lodging,” CSB “had them stay overnight,” GWN “entertained them where he lodged,” MRD “showed them hospitality,” NAB “entertained them as guests,” NET “lodged them overnight,” LIVING “stay for the night,” IE and “they were his guests.” ISV

He invites them in as his guests, doing as the good Samaritan who left the man he had found wounded and half dead in an inn. He paid for the man’s keeping, and told the innkeeper “Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee” (Luke 10:35). I do not doubt that Peter did the same thing here. The word translated “lodged” is evxe,nisen , has the following lexical meaning: “to receive as a guest, to entertain hospitably,” THAYER and “entertain as a guest.” UBS

This is a display of hospitality, which carries the idea of receiving a person who is away from home, and providing all of the necessities and amenities that are associated with one’s personal residence. There are a number of instances of hospitality recorded in Scripture, and they are there for our learning.

- Pharaoh was hospitable to Abraham, even though it was for Sarah’s sake (Gen 12:16).
- Melchizedek was hospitable to Abraham (Gen 14:18).
- Abraham entertained angels unawares (Gen 18:1-8).
- Lot entertained angels unawares (Gen 19:1-11).

- Abimelech was hospitable to Abraham (Gen 20:14-15).
- The sons of Heth were hospitable to Abraham (Gen 23:6,11).
- Laban entertained Abraham's servant (Gen 24:31).
- Laban was hospitable to Jacob (Gen 29:13-14).
- Isaac entertained Abimelech (Gen 26:27-30).
- Joseph was hospitable to his brethren (Gen 43:31-34).
- Pharaoh was hospitable to Jacob (Gen 45:16-20; 47:7-12).
- Jethro was hospitable to Moses (Ex 2:20).
- Rahab entertained the spies from Israel (Josh 2:1-16).
- David was hospitable to Mephibosheth, Jonathan's son (2 Sam 9:7-13).
- The widow of Zaraphath was hospitable to Elijah (1 Kgs 17:10-24).
- The Shunammite woman entertained Elisha (2 Kgs 4:8).
- Job was hospitable to strangers (Job 31:32).
- Martha was hospitable to Jesus (Lk 10:38; John 12:1-2).
- Zaccheus entertained Jesus (Lk 19:1-10).
- Lydia was hospitable to Paul and Silas (Acts 16:15).
- Publius, a barbarian, was hospitable to Paul (Acts 28:7).
- Phebe was hospitable to Paul (Rom 16:2).
- Onesiphous cared for Paul (2 Tim 1:16).
- Gaius was faithful to entertain brethren and strangers (3 John 1:5-8).

It has always been the manner of holy people to be hospitable. Among the Gentile believers, hospitality was also urged. Paul admonishes brethren in Rome to be "given to hospitality," or to practice it (Rom 12:13). One of the qualifications of those who feed the flock of God is that he must be "given to hospitality" (1 Tim 3:2). Paul told Titus that an elder must be a "lover of hospitality" (Tit 1:8). Before a widow can qualify for being supported by the church, she must have "lodged strangers," "washed the saint's feet," and "relieved the afflicted" (1 Tim 5:10). Hebrews 13:2 admonishes us, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares" (Heb 13:2). Peter exhorts us, "Be hospitable to one another without grumbling" NKJV (1 Pet 4:9).

This was not mere obedience to a commandment, for there was no specific commandment for Peter to do this. This was the expression of a person who was living toward the One who died and rose again for him

Well, there certainly is no lack of teaching or examples on this subject. However, my point is not simply to draw attention to the appropriateness, and even necessity, of hospitality. Rather it is to again confirm that true spiritual life is being lived out in the book of Acts. No one admonished Peter to take these men in. The Holy Spirit did not instruct him to care for these men, or to lodge them overnight. He only told him to go with them (Acts 10:19-20). However, because Jesus was dwelling in Peter's heart by faith, and he was engaged in fellowship with God's Son, this is what he did. This was not mere obedience to a commandment, for there was no specific commandment for Peter to do this. This was the expression of a person who was living toward the One who died and rose again for him (2 Cor 5:15).

HE WENT AWAY WITH THEM

“And on the morrow Peter went away with them . . .” Other versions read, “the next day Peter went away with them,” NKJV “he arose and went away with them,” NASB “started out with them,” NIV and “got up and went with them.” NRSV

Having obtained a night’s rest, Peter got up in the morning and went with the men, just as the Spirit had instructed him to do. He did not delay, but set out immediately on the mission. Here was a man who was “meet for the Master’s use, and prepared unto every good work” (2 Tim 2:21). Peter was one of whom it could be said, “For me to live is Christ” (Phil 1:21).

I cannot emphasize enough that we are being exposed to what it means to live by faith (Heb 10:38), walk in the Spirit (Gal 5:25), be ready to give an answer (1 Pet 3:15), and work out your own salvation with fear and trembling (Phil 2:12).

CERTAIN BRETHREN WENT WITH HIM

“ . . . and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him.” Other versions read, “some of the brethren from Joppa accompanied him,” NASB “some of the brothers from Joppa sent along,” NIV “some of the believers from Joppa,” NRSV “some disciples from Joppa went along,” GWN and “Some of the Jewish brothers from Joppa went with Peter.” WEYMOUTH

There was communication and unanimity among believers in those days – a closeness that is rarely seen in an institutionalized setting. When the lives of professed believers revolve around the organization, this kind of unity is absent. Here we are seeing something of the impact of the 133 rd Psalm: “Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard: that went down to the skirts of his garments; As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion: for there the LORD commanded the blessing, even life for evermore” (Psa 133:1-3).

We know from Peter’s report in Acts eleven, the number of brethren that accompanied him on the trip to Cornelius’ house. The men were with him when Peter reported, “And, behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Caesarea unto me. And the Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house” (Acts 11:11-12).

I have often pondered the conversations that must have taken place during that journey. It was not until some time during the next day that they entered into Caesarea, where Cornelius was awaiting them.

The brethren who accompanied Peter would also be witnesses to the work of God – a work that was truly an epoch, long to be remembered. They will also be with Peter when he reports this event.

CONCLUSION

Things are now positioned for the Lord to work mightily. The one designated to receive the truth of the Gospel is ready. The one who has been chosen to declare the message is alert to the circumstance, and is now on his way to the appointed gathering. A body of people is being assembled at the house of Cornelius as the time has arrived when the door of faith will be opened to the Gentiles.

Both the chief recipient of the message, and the one who will deliver it, have been living with an acute consciousness of God Almighty. The message that is delivered will be a proper one, and the response to it will be a God glorifying one.

Ten men are journeying together back to the house of Cornelius: two household servants, one soldier, six members of the body of Christ, and the apostle who has been given the keys of the kingdom of heaven. What a marvelous example of holy diversity!

Lesson #48

PETER AND CORNELIUS GIVE THEIR EXPLANATIONS

“ 10:24 And the morrow after they entered into Caesarea. And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends. 25 And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him. 26 But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man. 27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together. 28 And he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean. 29 Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for: I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me? 30 And Cornelius said, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house, and, behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing, 31 And said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God. 32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner by the sea side: who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee. 33 Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. ” (Acts 10:24-33)

INTRODUCTION

Having been directed by the Holy Spirit to go with the men who have appeared at the house of Simon the tanner, Peter leaves the next morning with the men. Six brethren in Christ from Joppa join them. When the men came from Cornelius, he had a soldier join them. When Peter returned with them, six brethren join him. It is evident from the account that the soldier was more than a mere soldier. In fact, he is referred to as “a devout soldier” – the word “devout” meaning godly, or pious. Behold how those with a reverence for God find themselves coming together – whether they are Jew or Gentile.

The whole account is refreshing in that it centers around the activities of devout people – in the case of Cornelius, a man who was obviously in quest of salvation; in Peter’s case, a man who was eager to proclaim the Gospel. Both men were intent upon serving God, and both men were experiencing the expansion of their understanding. Also, we will observe how devout people focus upon the Word of the Lord, and are intent upon knowing what the Lord has said, and what He requires. This is a common trait among those who fear the Lord. It is not found among those who lack this fear. The glaring absence of this attitude in our time is a cause for alarm.

Upon arriving at the house of Cornelius, Peter finds many people gathered together to hear the Word of the Lord. While they were called together by Cornelius himself, there was still a common interest in what was going to take place, else they would probably not have been there.

At once, he and Cornelius begin speaking with one another concerning the uniqueness of the situation, and how they had both been prepared by God for the occasion. Everything gravitated to the heavenly agenda, which was the total reason for the involvement of both men.

In this passage, we are being exposed to the impact of revelation upon tender, honest, and good hearts. Both men report what they have learned from heaven, and how they have been directed. This has caused their thinking to come to a common point, where true spiritual advance is possible. It is as though they came from different countries, converging on the same island, or from different rooms of a house, arriving in the same room. This is precisely how a company of people come to comprehend the truth of God. Whether they are separated from one another, or are privileged to company with one another, they must arrive at the point of a “common salvation” (Jude 1:3), and a “common faith” (Tit 1:4).

ALL ROADS

DO NOT LEAD TO GOD

Contrary to some ideas, all roads do not lead to God. Jesus said there was a broad that leads to destruction, and He gave no indication that it is clearly marked so that casual travelers can detect and avoid it. He also said that there was a single “way” that leads to life, and a solitary and restrictive “gate” by which it is accessed (Matt 7:13-14).

There are various means that men employ in their quest to find Divinity, ultimate truth, or unshakable reality.

Philosophy

One of the premier methods involves philosophy. Analytical Philosophy involves an discriminating approach that employs worldly wisdom and natural aptitude. Moral philosophy involves a study of human conduct that employs the assignment of certain norms and definition based purely upon the psychoanalysis of men. Natural philosophy involves the analyzation of nature, and a consequent statement of various laws and characteristics that are based upon the wisdom of men. While there may be some place for this approach when dealing with things under the sun, they have no value in an effort to know God, arrive at an understanding of His will, or obtain His approval. It cannot penetrate the brick wall of the natural man and the ignorance produced by sin.

Nature

Some men have sought to find God by studying nature. Beholding in it some measure of order, they imagine that it will assist them in finding God, discerning His will, or gaining His acceptance. But nature does not deliver a message that is precise enough to provide a profitable perception of God. The best that it can do it testify of the reality of God and of His power (Rom 1:20). Even then, the affirmation of Scripture is that no man has ever formed an acceptable concept of God through nature. Instead, they concluded that they ought to worship nature in its varied forms (Rom 1:23,28).

Discipline

There have also been men who have imagined that God could be discovered by some form of bodily or mental discipline. In doing this, they think they can find Divine approval and strength. Thus some men have fasted for long periods, or stood in one position for a long time, or followed some form of transcendental meditation. But none of these attempts brought clarity of understanding concerning God or His ways. Nor, indeed, did they gain a sense of God’s acceptance of them.

Tradition

This, in my judgment, is the most difficult to overcome – the religious traditions of men. This difficulty is owing to the feigned association of the traditions with the Lord Himself, as well as the access men have to Him. Let me define “tradition” as I am using the word. As used in Scripture this is more than a mere thought or opinion. When the Scriptures use this word in bad sense, they employ a term that means, “The body of precepts, esp. ritual, which in the opinion of the later Jews were orally delivered by Moses and orally transmitted in unbroken succession to subsequent generations, which precepts, both illustrating and expanding the written law, as they did were to be obeyed with equal reverence.” THAYER In other words, these represent the opinions of men concerning something that God has said. Those opinions are then encased in a precept, or requirement (like the washing of hands—Mark 7:5). This requirement is then bound upon men, carrying all of the force of a word that had been given directly from God. Stated yet another way, the tradition is equated with Scripture.

In other words, these represent the opinions of men concerning something that God has said. Those opinions are then encased in a precept, or requirement (like the washing of hands—Mark 7:5). This requirement is then bound upon men, carrying all of the force of a word that had been given directly from God. In other words, the tradition is equated with Scripture.

Jesus soundly denounced such traditions, affirming that they transgressed the commandment of God: “But He answered and said unto them, Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?” (Mat 15:3). He also said those traditions “made the commandment of God of none effect,” removing its effectiveness (Matt 15:6), and rendering the Word of God itself as powerless (Mk 7:13). In fact, Jesus said that to take hold of “the tradition of men,” it was necessary to “lay aside the commandment of God” (Mk 7:8). It is difficult to conceive of anything being more serious than these effects!

Throughout the history of the church, it has struggled against the traditions of men – rules and precepts that have been bound upon men just as though they were given by God, and were stipulated in Scripture precisely as they are encased in the traditions. Permit me to name a few of the more apparent ones.

- That it is wrong for priests to marry, even though “it is better to marry than to burn” [with lust] (1 Cor 7:9).
- That it is wrong to eat certain meats, even though God says they are all to be received with thanksgiving (1 Tim 4:3-4).
- That the Lord’s Table is observed for the forgiveness of sins, when God says it is where we remember Jesus and proclaim His death (1 Cor 11:24-26).
- That it is sinful to use a musical instrument in expressing praise to God, even though the Scriptures speak of “the musical instruments of God” (1 Chron 16:42), and “the harps of God” (Rev 15:2).
- That men are saved through a five-step plan, even though no men inquiring about salvation were ever told such a thing (Acts 2:37-38; 16:30-31)..
- That men are saved by repeating a prayer, even though that is nowhere affirmed to be the means through which salvation is realized (Eph 2:8).
- That evangelizing the lost is the fundamental work of the church, when the edification of the body is said to be the objective (Eph 4:11-12).
- That elders are the administrators of the affairs of the church, when the Scriptures say they are to “feed the flock of God ” (1 Pet 5:2).
- That women are fundamentally inferior to men, even though the Spirit teaches there is not even a distinction of female in Christ (Gal 3:28), speaks of prominent women (Acts 17:4), and admonishes even men to assist holy women in certain ministries they have (Rom

- That the man is the priest and manager of the household, and all decisions must go through him, even though children are told to honor their mother as well as their father (Lk 18:20), and hearken to the law of their mother (Prov 1:8; 6:20). Younger women are even admonished to marry, bear children, and guide, or manage the house (1 Tim 5:14).

There is a vast difference between a private view and the tradition of men. There is freedom to have private views, but they may not be bound men as a law from God – which is something that the traditions of men seek to do. I say this because it is not my intention to encroach on the right of any person to have views that spring from a good conscience. I am speaking of opinions that are employed to sit in judgment of others. Also, a person may unnecessarily constrict their own life by such perceptions when God makes no such demands of them. These areas will be addressed and settled as a person grows up into Christ. Those in Christ must be willing to allow such a process to take place in their peers as well, allowing the formation of a good conscience.

In view of these things, my own observation is that any response to the truth of God that is not in harmony with the reactions of Peter and Cornelius, is a kind of revelation of an “evil heart of unbelief” (Heb 3:12). Both of these men were faced with something that did not conform to their present perception. Both of them were being confronted by something that bore directly upon the conscience, and upon an extended practice in their lives. There were also some traditions held that complicated the whole matter. Yet, neither of them clung obstinately to their old way of thinking. The horizon of truth was being expanded, and both Cornelius and Peter responded to it in faith, together with a good conscience.

THE NEXT DAY THEY ARRIVE IN CAESAREA

“ 10:24 And the morrow after they entered into Caesarea. And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends.”

Ten men had left Joppa, traveling northward to Caesarea – approximately thirty miles. The group consisted of two servants, one soldier, Peter the apostle, and twelve brethren – believers in Jesus – from Joppa. All of the men were devout, including the servants, who were members of a household “that feared God” (Acts 10:2). Two groups, both noted for being “devout,” yet one group was more advanced than the other, having heard and embraced the Gospel, which shed a greater light. One group of men were living within the framework of the Old Covenant. The other were joyously within the larger perimeter of the New Covenant. Both groups were in a favorable position with God, yet one was justified and one was not. One was illuminated and one was not. One had been reconciled to God, and the other had not. One had been born again, yet the other had not. Yet, both groups were in a state of advancing. One was moving toward birth, and the other we as moving toward glory. One was being prepared for justification, and the other was in a state of justification, yet still being changed by the Holy Spirit into the image of Jesus.

Within some of the constraints of certain sectarian stances, these men could never have traveled together – at least not without condemning one another. However, a single purpose and work was directing them, and when those are from heaven, they tend to unite those who would otherwise be divided.

THE MORROW AFTER

“And the morrow after they entered into Caesarea.” Other versions read, “the following day,” NKIV “the day after that,” BBE and “the next day.” MRD

A trip of this duration would compare to a trip of 500-700 miles in our time. Of course, such a trip would be spent in the relative ease of a vehicle of some sort, yet, the average person would consider it tiring, and would not want to commence immediately with some kind of focused endeavor. However, no such circumstances are made known in our text.

After leaving the morning following the arrival of the three men, the entourage arrive at the city of Caesarea some time the next day, the trip lasting 1-1 1/2 days. Even in our time, a trip of that duration for purposes of delivering the truth to an inquiring soul is exceeding rare. A trip of this length would compare to one of 500-700 miles in our time. Of course, such a trip would be spent in the relative ease of a vehicle of some sort, yet, the average person would consider it tiring, and would not want to commence immediately with some kind of focused endeavor. However, no such circumstances are made known in our text. It reads as though they had, so to speak, walked across the street, beginning their communication without delay.

The Impact of Involvement with God

There is a certain enlivening impact that results from being involved in the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God – as all who have experienced it can attest. I do not doubt that these men all arrived in Caesarea with in a state of high spiritual exhilaration and anticipation. They were engaged in something that had been initiated by heavenly communication – both to Cornelius and to Peter.

- A vision appeared to Cornelius (10:5)
- An angel spoke to Cornelius (10:5b)
- Cornelius' actions had come up as a memorial before God (10:4)
- An angel told Cornelius what he was to do (10:5-6)
- Peter had seen heaven opened (10:11a)
- Peter saw a “certain vessel” descending out of heaven to him (10:11b-12)
- A voice from heaven spoke to Peter (10:13,15)
- The Holy Spirit directed Peter concerning what he was to do (10:19-20)

There had been more heavenly communication with these two men, within a period of two days, than entire generations of people had experienced. In addition to Peter having an understanding of this, He also knew the enthronement of Jesus had changed the degree of Divine involvements with men. It is difficult to comprehend how all of these things must have impacted upon what took place among these men as they made their way to Caesarea. I do not doubt that the trip seemed to pass very swiftly.

Until a person desires Divine approval more than anything else, and is ready to hear what God has commanded, without any reservations or preconceived notions, they are not ready to be instructed concerning the appropriation of salvation.

It is one thing to talk about what God is doing. It is quite another to become involved in it. In my understanding, no place has been made for an individual or a group to voice a view of something God is doing while they themselves are external to it. I do not know how the validity of such a procedure can be validated.

CORNELIUS WAITED FOR THEM

“ And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends.” Other versions read that Cornelius “was waiting,” NJKV “was expecting,” NIV “was looking for them,” DARBY “was waiting anxiously for them,” NET and “was waiting for an expecting them.”
AMPLIFIED

Cornelius was not casual in his response to Divine direction. The words “waited for” are translated from as single Greek word – prosdokw/n . This word “denotes mental direction,” THAYER and has the following root meaning: “to look for,” THAYER “expect, anticipate, with the added element of tension arising from hope or fear,” FRIBERG “live in suspense, wait or be on watch,” UBS “to wait with anxiety,” LOUW-NIDA and “to expect, wait for a person.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

The words “waited for” contain the idea of fervency, waiting with anticipation, and being in a state of suspense, or excitement. Modern colloquialisms that express this attitude include, “I can hardly wait to meet him” or, “he was on pins and needles.”

The idea is that all of Cornelius’ thoughts were focused on the arrival of Peter. At this point, his entire life revolved around this anticipated event. And what was there about this occasion that elicited such a fervent desire and expectation in this centurion? Was it that he was going to meet a famous man? Indeed not! It was that he was going to be told what God wanted him to do! The servants told Peter Cornelius had sent for him so that he could “hear words” from him (Acts 10:22).

The record will confirm that the words would have to do with Cornelius and those with him being saved. In other words, the matter of salvation, or being delivered from sin and put in right relation with God now dominated the mind of this man. He anxiously awaited the arrival of a man who would tell him what God had commanded.

I will tell you that it is not likely that any person will ever be saved who does not obtain this mindset. Until a person desires Divine approval more than anything else, and is ready to hear what God has commanded, without any reservations or preconceived notions, they are not ready to be instructed concerning the appropriation of salvation. To my knowledge there are few examples in Scripture, if, indeed, there are any at all, of a person being told what to do to be saved who had no prevailing interest in salvation. I realize that this contrasts sharply with many notions of evangelizing and soul-winning. However, it is the preaching of the Gospel itself that arouses in men a desire to be saved, not relating a plan whereby they are to be saved.

So far as the involvement of men is concerned, instructions on how to be saved really mean very little to any person who does not desire to be saved. If there is not first evidence of some Divine work within, teaching men what they ought to do to be saved is premature, to say the least. Although this may appear to be very elementary, there is lot of confusion among professing believers on this matter. This is why the text before us is especially relevant.

HE HAD CALLED TOGETHER HIS RELATIVES AND FRIENDS

Other versions read that he had called “his relatives and close friends,” NKJV “all the kindred of his family, and also such intimate friends as he had,” MRD and “all his relations and intimate friends.” PHILLIPS

While salvation is, indeed, a personal matter, it is not a private one . As everyone who has had a prevailing interest in salvation knows, that interest is accompanied with a concern for others who are close to them. No person who believes has the faintest desire to be the only one who does so. It is the nature of faith, hope, and love, to spread, desiring that others participate in the blessing.

Even at the inception of spiritual life, before it is birthed, there is a kind of accord with the Divine nature that is developed. The Lord Himself desires that “all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth” (1 Tim 2:4). Even so, those who are being drawn toward Him participate in that desire. This principle is being lived out in Cornelius, as well as in Peter, who is the one bringing the good news to him.

CORNELIUS WORSHIPS PETER

“ 25 And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.” Other versions read, “fell at his feet in reverence,” NIV “worshiped him,” NRSV “gave him worship,” “did him homage,” DARBY “at his feet adored,” DOUAY “did him reverence,” NJB “did bow before him,” YLT and “paid worshipful reverence to him” AMPLIFIED

It is quite possible that Cornelius met Peter before he actually arrived at his home. Because he was anxiously awaiting the arrival of Peter, this is probably what took place.

Here, the word “worshiped” describes a physical activity, as compared to an inward expression of the heart. It comes from the Greek word prosekunhsen, which has the following lexical meaning: “to prostrate oneself . . . by kneeling or prostration to do homage (to one) or make obeisance,” THAYER “(fall down and) worship, do obeisance to, prostrate oneself before, do reverence to,” GINGRICH

Technically, what Cornelius did was not tantamount to the fear of God, or having another god before Him. However, even physically bowing down in homage and an attitude of submission to any created personality is forbidden by God. The Law said of idols, “Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them : for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me” (Ex 20:5). Physically bowing down or serving an inanimate object was strictly forbidden by the Law, which had “a form of knowledge and of the truth” (Rom 2:20). Whether it was the brazen serpent Moses made (2 Kgs 18:4), or statute of Molech or Baal (2 Kgs 11:7), this was a forbidden practice. In our day, it is still wrong, whether it is an image of Buddha or of the virgin Mary. This is why the three Hebrew children refused to fall down before the giant image that Nebucahdnezzar had reared up in Babylon (Dan 3:5-18).

It is quite true that falling prostrate before a person in the expression of honor was practiced among oriental people. Abraham bowed himself to the children of Heth (Gen 23:7), and before the people of the land (Gen 23:12). Jacob bowed seven times before his brother Esau (Gen 33:3). His handmaidens and their children did the same (Gen 33:6). Leah and her children, together with Joseph [not Jacob’s son, who was not yet born] and Rachel did the same (Gen 33:7). When angels appeared as men before Abraham and Lot, they bowed down before them (Gen 18:2; 19:1). Ruth bowed down before Boaz (Ruth 2:10). There are a few other instances like this recorded in Scripture (1 Sam 20:41; 25:23; 28:14; 2 Sam 14:22,33; 24:20; 1 Kgs 1:23; 2:15; 1 Chron 21:20). However, those were times when less of God Himself was known, and little light had been shed on His Person. It appears from the record that this is why these actions, many of which were very much like the action described in our text, were tolerated. By tolerated, I mean by the person to whom the others bowed. Although some of them were holy men, yet their understanding of God Himself was vastly inferior to that which has now been made known. It was not, therefore, that men were willing to receive something God had forbidden, but because they did not yet possess a fully formed understanding of both the depravity of man and the absolute holiness of God. However, in our text, the conditions just described no longer existed – at least not among those who were reconciled to God.

When the devil tempted Jesus during those forty days following His baptism, he endeavored to induce Jesus to fall down before him. “Again, the devil taketh Him up into an exceeding high mountain, and showeth Him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; and saith unto Him, All these things will I give Thee, if Thou wilt fall down and worship me ” (Matt 4:9). The word translated “worship” is a form of the same word used in our text: proskunh,shlj . This is also the word used to describe John falling down before an angel during the giving of the Revelation (Rev 19:10; 22:8). Both times John did this, the angel forbade his reaction, telling him to not do it. Remember, this was an overt activity that God had forbidden for anyone but Himself. The angel knew that this included even lofty heavenly personalities, and solemnly reminded John of that fact.

Most of the times this kind of bowing down is mentioned in the New Covenant Scriptures (sixty times), it refers to men either bowing before Jesus, or God the Father (Matt 2:2,8,11; 8:2; 9:18; 14:33; 15:25; 20:20; 28:9,17; Mk 5:6; Lk 24:52; John 4:23,24; 9:38; 12:20; Acts 8:27; 24:11; 1 Cor 14:25; Heb 1:6; Rev 4:10; 5:14; 7:11; 11:1,16; 14:7; 15:4; 19:4,10; 22:9).

Now, we will see how a man of God, who possesses a fuller knowledge of Him, is acquainted with His ways, and is not overcome by the circumstance, responds to this action of Cornelius. Behold how a true disciple thinks!

PETER REFUSES THE WORSHIP

“ 26 But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man.” Other versions read, “Peter lifted him up, saying,” NKJV “I too am just a man,” NASB “I am only a man myself,” NIV “I am only a mortal,” NRSV “I myself am also a human being,” NAB “I’m a human being just like you!,” NLT “I’m not a God!” LIVING and “I am nothing more than a human.” CEV

Peter refuses to allow Cornelius to bow down to him. He has a more thorough understanding of both the nature of men and the nature of God. While Cornelius was not treating him as though he was God, or even some lesser god, yet Peter considers the action of Cornelius inappropriate. His reaction was similar to that of Paul and Barnabas when certain men in Lystra thought they were gods, and were going to make sacrifices to them. When the men of God heard of their intention, “they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out, and saying, Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God, which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein” (Acts 14:15). Even after some extensive reasoning on the matter, they “scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them” (Acts 14:18).

Within those insightful laborers of the first century, there was an acute sensitivity to proper manners and expressions. The thought of a man receiving admiration or recognition that was due only to God was repulsive, and they would not allow it.

Lest anyone imagine that this sort of activity has become obsolete in our time, the Roman Pope still receives such recognition, with men bowing before him, kissing his ring, and even his feet. The Roman church also still promotes and practices what it referred to as genuflection, which is to bow, bending the knee to certain images that are thought to be sacred. Other orthodox churches also practice the honoring of prelates in this manner.

It is important to note that there is a level at which all human distinctions are dissolved. As a general rule, the closer one is to the earth, the more prominent such distinction become. However, the closer one is to the Lord, and the more aware they are of heavenly things, the less likely it is for such distinctions to be entertained. In Christ, no individual is permitted to “think more highly of himself than he ought to think.” Rather, they are to think of themselves in direct relation with ‘the measure of faith’ that God has “dealt,” or dispensed to them (Rom 12:3). Also, when considering other men, believers are not to assign a greater worth to the individual than their words and deed support. Paul carefully stated the case in these words: “For if I do wish to boast I shall not be foolish, for I shall be speaking the truth; but I refrain from this, so that no one may credit me with more than he sees in me or hears from me ” (2 Cor 12:6).

In stark contradiction of these things, and especially within Christendom, there is a remarkable veneration of men who have little to say, and appear to do little that is declared to be valuable in the eyes of God. Too often religious leaders are abysm ally ignorant of the Word of God and the purpose of God – to say nothing of the Lord Himself and “His Christ.” If you were to remove their academic credentials, and refuse to fasten your attention on their outward accomplishments, there would be precious little that would distinguish them from other men. This is not an acceptable practice, even though it is quite common. In Christ Jesus, the mark of greatness has to do with serving, not ruling (Mark 9:35). This has particular regard to the distribution of spiritual nourishment that God provides in Christ and through His Word, and assisting men in things that pertain to life and godliness. No man is truly great who is deficient in these areas.

Even though Peter is anything but incompetent in matters pertaining to life and godliness, and the declaration of the mind of God, yet he refuses the honor Cornelius attempts to give him. He does not do so because of any disdain for Cornelius, or any feigned humility. Rather, as he is basking in the light of the knowledge of God, he perceived such honor as wholly unreasonable. He knew there was One greater than himself, and that it would be nothing more than a distraction to receive such honor.

PETER FINDS MANY WHO HAD COME TOGETHER

“ 27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together.”

AS HE TALKED WITH THEM

“And as he talked with him, he went in . . .” Other versions read, “And he went in, talking with him,” DARBY “While he conversed with him,” NAB “Peter continued talking with him as he went in,” NET “Talking together they went in,” NJB “So they talked together and went inside,” NLT “So he got up and they talked together for a while and then went in,” LIVING and “Then Peter went right into the house in deep conversation with Cornelius.” PHILLIPS

The very notion contradicts everything we know about the impact of Divine confrontation. And yet, across the length and breadth of this land, there are casual and quotidian conversations taking place among those who say they have come to worship the Lord or in some way honor His name.

And what do you suppose these two men were walking about, being instantly engaged in conversation? The weather? The trip from Joppa to Caesarea? Peter’s first impression of Cornelius’ dwelling? To even ask such questions appears rather foolish! Considering what had prompted Cornelius to call send for Peter, and what had moved Peter to come with the men without questioning their mission, should indicate this was no casual conversation. How can a man who has seen and been directed by an angel speak casually with the person of whom that angel spoke? And how can a man who has had a vision from heaven accompanied by a command and response, and repeated three times, additionally being specifically directed by the Holy Spirit, now engage in mundane conversation at his appointed destination? The very notion contradicts everything we know about the impact of Divine confrontation. And yet, across the length and breadth of this land, there are casual and quotidian conversations taking place among those who say they have come to worship the Lord or in some way honor His name.

Over the years I have observed, with some degree of sorrow, the great difficulty with which professing Christians attempt to make the transition from the carnal to the spiritual. I have especially noted that this trait is more prominent among professed church leaders, who are often quite uncomfortable with such a passage. They appear to be more comfortable with things that have to do with this world, though often making a valiant effort to connect them with the things of God.

You will find a remarkable consistency throughout this entire account. Everything will find its center in the salvation of God as wrought out and revealed in Jesus Christ.

HE FOUND MANY THAT WERE COME TOGETHER

“ . . . and found many that were come together.” Other versions read, “found many people assembled,” NASB “found a large gathering of people,” NIV “found many persons gathered,” RSV “saw that a great number of people had come together,” BBE and “found a large group of persons assembled.” AMPLIFIED

The word translated “many” has the following lexical meaning: “multitude, numerous, great . . . equivalent to abundant,” THAYER and “great crowds.” UBS A significant number of people were gathered together at the house of Cornelius – all being assembled within four days from the time he was notified from heaven to send for Peter. His family was there, together with those servants belonging to the household. In addition, he had called in relatives (“kinsmen”), and close friends.

You may recall that when Matthew prepared a feast for Jesus, there were a great number of people who were also there. During that occasion, Matthew says that “many publicans and sinners came and sat down with” Jesus “and His disciples” (Matt 9:10). Mark says of that group, “for there were many” (Mk 2:15).

It ought to be noted that those who have a genuine interest in the Savior are always forward to seek for others to join them in their quest to be taught by Him and about Him. What earnest disciple has not experienced a bit of frustration in attempting to gather a group of relatives and friends together for exposure to the things of God? Yet, Cornelius has managed to accomplish this, even further confirming the presence of the Lord in this entire experience.

There have been a few times when I have experience something like this – when a body of people came together for the express purpose of advancing their understanding of the Lord and His purpose. These very gatherings (A Ministry for Hungry Saints) are a sterling example of this phenomenon. There are precious few Kingdom laborers who have enjoyed the benefits of such gatherings, as countless faithful ministers of the Gospel can testify. One of the sure marks of the legitimacy of a gathering of believers is an unquenchable appetite for the things of God, and a prevailing interest in coming together hear the word of God

A PIECE OF COMMON, YET OBSOLETE, KNOWLEDGE

“ 28a And he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation . . .”

YOU KNOW IT IS UNLAWFUL

“And he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing . . .” Other versions read, “how unlawful it is,” NKJV “it is against our law,” NIV “it’s forbidden,” CSB “how abominable it is,” DOUAY “an unlawful thing,” ERV “how wrong it is,” GWN “against the Jewish laws,” LIVING “strictly forbidden,” ISV “it is illegal” MONTGOMERY and “is not lawful or permissible.” AMPLIFIED

Although the Law of Moses did not specifically forbid contact with the Gentiles, there were certain overtones in it that led conscientious men to this conclusion. Solemnly the Israelites were admonished not to learn the way of the heathen that initially occupied the promised land. Anyone who learned and practiced the ways of the heathen would “be cut off from among their people” (Lev 18:24-30). When Israel came into Canan, the Lord told them to cast out the heathen nations, and to make no covenant with them or show them mercy. “When the LORD thy God shall bring thee into the land whither thou goest to possess it, and hath cast out many nations before thee, the Hittites, and the Girgashites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, seven nations greater and mightier than thou; And when the LORD thy God shall deliver them before thee; thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them; thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them ” (Deut 7:1-2).

The people were also told not to marry any of the heathen. “Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son” (Deut 7:3). The reason for this prohibition was spelled out: “For they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods: so will the anger of the LORD be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly” (Deut 7:4). It is obvious, therefore, that the notion that marriage can be the means of converting wayward souls did not originate with the Lord. It is a human imagination, and has brought great damage to the church of God. God told the people how to deal with the heathen, and it was most precise: “For thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God: the LORD thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth” (Deut 7:6).

The practice of Jews having no official dealings with non-Jews was well known during the time of Jesus. This is precisely why the Samaritan woman was astounded that Jesus had asked her for a drink of water.

Some years later, during the renewal that took place in the days of Ezra, the people confessed they had not honored this Divine prohibition. “Which thou hast commanded by thy servants the prophets, saying, The land, unto which ye go to possess it, is an unclean land with the filthiness of the people of the lands, with their abominations, which have filled it from one end to another with their uncleanness. Now therefore give not your daughters unto their sons, neither take their daughters unto your sons, nor seek their peace or their wealth for ever: that ye may be strong, and eat the good of the land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children for ever” (Ezra 9:12).

The practice of Jews having no official dealings with non-Jews was well known during the time of Jesus. This is precisely why the Samaritan woman was astounded that Jesus had asked her for a drink of water. She responded to His request, “How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans” (John 4:9). Jesus did not tell her that this was not true, or that it was driven by a misconception of the nature of the Law. He rather spoke to her of the coming of a better day.

Peter had also spent three years with Jesus, during which He heard the Lord command the apostles, “Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not” (Matt 10:5). Although the Law did not expressly say the Jews could not enter into the dwelling of a Gentile, it is easy to see how men were led to that conclusion. If the jeopardy was as the Lord declared – that they could lean the way of the heathen – then thoughtful men surmised that they ought not choose to be among them. Further, if any Gentiles came among them, they were under obligation to keep the Jewish laws (Ex 12:49; 23:12; Lev 24:16,22; Num 1:51; 9:14; 15:15-16,26,29; 19:10; 35:15; Deut 1:16).

The restrictions were required because of the fundamental ignorance of the Gentiles who “know not God” (1 Thess 4:5). It is why they were described as “sinners of the Gentiles” (Gal 2:16).

By means of the Law, a very real “middle wall of partition” had been erected between the Jew and the Gentile (Eph 2:14). Peter knew this and had maintained his life within the framework of that perception. However, with the advent of Jesus something had occurred of which Peter was not yet aware. In his involvement with Cornelius, the Lord would show him what had happened.

Peter Said It to Them

The words that follow were spoken to all of the people who were gathered at the house of Cornelius: “He said unto THEM .” Further, these people were well aware of the circumstance. There was already an awareness of the mindset of God’s people, even though, at this time, there was more revelation on the subject will be discussed.

In our time, it is exceedingly difficult to establish the mindset of professing Christians – what the Christian community thinks of this or that. As has been confirmed by recent religious surveys, the average Christian knows very little about God, Christ, heaven, or hell – to say nothing about justification, sanctification, and the eternal purpose of God. The very foundations and basic elements of the doctrine are scarcely known among professing believers, as men have been led down bypaths that feed the worldly desires of the people.

In our text, there was a very keen awareness of what the people of God believed, and what they practiced. Oh, that such an awareness would be restored in our time! Today there are such divisions and fragmented knowledge that relatively few professing Christians have any accurate understanding concerning the nature and direction of spiritual life. Consequentially, there are only very general and crude notions concerning what they believe and practice.

Today there are such divisions and fragmented knowledge that relatively few professing Christians have any accurate understanding concerning the nature and direction of spiritual life. Consequentially, there are only very general and crude notions concerning what they believe and practice.

It seems to me that this circumstance contradicts the very idea of God having special people – a body of individuals described as having been purified “unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works” (Tit 2:14), and those who are a “chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people,” who are to “show forth the praises of Him” who has called them “out of darkness into His marvelous light” (1 Pet 2:9). How is it possible for such a people to not have distinctive manners and persuasions? How can a distinctive people be without observable distinctions? How can a special people have no special marks of identity? How can a chosen people have no indications in their manner of life that so identifies them? Of course, such circumstances are glaring contradictions. They simply are not even possible, for were they to exist, they would suggest a powerless God who separates a people who bear no signs of that separation.

FOR A MAN THAT IS A JEW

“ . . . for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation . . .” The term, “Jew” originally referred to someone from the tribe or country of Judah. Eventually, it came to refer to all of the people of the Hebrew language. This word is used thirty-two times in Scripture, first appearing in the book of Esther (Esth 2:5; 3:4; 5:13; 6:10; 8:7; 9:29,31; 10:3; Jer 34:9; Zech 8:23; John 4:9; 18:35; Acts 10:28; 13:6; 18:2,24; 19:14,34; 21:39; 22:3; Rom 1:16; 2:9,10,17,28,29; 3:1; 10:12; 1 Cor 9:20; Gal 2:14; 3:28; Col 3:11). The word “Jews” occurs two hundred and fifty-seven times, with one hundred and seventy-five of them being in Matthew through Revelation. “Jewess,” a female Jew, occurs two times (Acts 16:1; 24:24). “Jewish” is found once, in Titus 1:14. “Jewry” is found twice (Luke 23:6 and John 7:1), being translated “Judea” in later versions. Thus, with nearly three hundred references to some form of this word, its distinction is clearly seen.

When Peter says, “a man that is a Jew,” he is speaking of infinitely more than nationality or ethnicity. “A Jew” was a member of a chosen race – a special group of people to whom God had vouchsafed the adoption, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the Law, the service of God, and the promises. They were the offspring of “the fathers,” Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the body of people from which Jesus sprang forth (Rom 9:4-5).

It is, therefore, of great interest to know precisely what these people practiced, and why they did so. For the perceptive among them, not mingling with the Gentiles was not a matter of carnal prejudice. It rather reflected a Divine choice, and one that could include Gentiles that were willing to acclimate to their Divinely directed manner of life. The provision of Jewish synagogues for Gentile proselytes (Acts 6:9), and presence of proselytes among them (Acts 6:5; 16:9) confirm this to be the case. This was a matter of conscience toward God.

GOD HAS SHOWN ME

“ 28b . . . but God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean.”

Immediately Peter relates something that God has taught him – something critical to the situation.

GOD HAS SHOWN ME

“ . . . but God hath showed me. . . ” Most of the standard versions read “God has shown me.” Other versions read, “God has made it clear to me,” BBE “to me God did show,” YLT “God has taught me,” WEYMOUTH “God has shown and taught me by words,” AMPLIFIED and “God has shown me plainly.” PHILLIPS

The word “shown” is translated from a word that has the following lexical meaning: “to expose to the eyes; metaphorically to teach one what he ought to do . . . to give the evidence of proof of a thing,” THAYER and “to point out.” LEH

Some Examples

This same language is used elsewhere in Scripture, and is indicative of the kind of involvement God has with those with whom He is working. It is both personal and effective.

• A HEATHEN KING – CONCERNING THE DREAM OF PHARAOH AND THE COMING FAMINE. “And Joseph said unto Pharaoh, The dream of Pharaoh is one: God hath showed Pharaoh what he is about to do” (Gen 41:25). In this case the matter shown was not understood by Pharaoh, and therefore had to be interpreted by Joseph.

• A CHOSEN PEOPLE – CONCERNING THE REVELATION AT SINAI. “And ye said, Behold, the LORD our God hath showed us his glory and his greatness, and we have heard his voice out of the midst of the fire: we have seen this day that God doth talk with man, and he liveth” (Deut 5:24). Here, what was made known included aspects of the Divine nature, as well as a definition of morality and detailed instructions concerning ordained routines.

• CORRUPTED GENTILES – WHAT COULD BE KNOWN OF GOD FROM NATURE. “Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath showed it unto them” (Rom 1:19). In this case, what was shown was not comprehended. Further, there was no earnest inquiry into the matter, for which men were judged.

In Our Text

In this text, God had shown something to Peter, who had been reconciled to God and made a partaker of the Divine nature. Unlike Pharaoh, he will not have to call for another person to interpret what was shown to him. Unlike the Israelites, the matter will not have to be bound upon Him by reaffirmation. Quite different from the Gentile world, he will not ignore what has been shown or assign a corrupted meaning to it.

A Unique Trait of the New Covenant

The prophets foretold a time when men would, in a unique manner, be taught by God.

- “And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in His paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem” (Isa 2:3).

- “And all Thy children shall be taught of the LORD; and great shall be the peace of thy children” (Isa 54:13).

- “And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem” (Micah 4:2).

Jesus referred to this teaching, declaring that those who came to Him had experienced such a blessing: “It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me” (John 6:45). Paul also confirmed that such teaching takes place among those who are in Christ Jesus. “But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another” (1 Thess 4:9).

It is clear from the prophecies, the words of Jesus, and the writings of Paul, that this teaching involves more than the conveyance of mere factual information. The prophets indicated that Divine tutelage would bring a familiarity with God’s “ways.” Jesus indicated that it would result in people coming to Him to appropriate what He had been appointed to give. Paul informs us that this teaching results in believers having a love for one another.

We see, therefore, that in this text what is “shown” is not merely the relating of a commandment or precept. This is showing, or teaching, that is of a higher order – one that is more in keeping with the nature of the New Covenant, in which the laws of God are written upon the heart and put into the mind (Heb 8:10; 10:16). This will become apparent as we note what Peter was shown, or taught.

DO NOT CALL ANY MAN COMMON OR UNCLEAN!

“ . . . that I should not call any man common or unclean.” Other versions read, “unholy or unclean,” NASB “Impure or unclean,” NIV “profane or unclean,” NRSV “polluted or unclean,” GENEVA “defiled or unclean,” MRD “defiled or ritually unclean,” NET “think of anyone as inferior,” LIVING “vulgar or ceremonially unclean,” WILLIAMS “common or unhallowed or [ceremonially] unclean,” AMPLIFIED and “unclean or unfit.” CEV

If we review precisely what was shown to Peter and said to him while he was on the rooftop, here is what we find.

- He saw a sheet let down from heaven with all manner of four foot beasts, wild beasts, creeping things, and fowls in it.
- He was told get up, kill some of these creatures, and eat them.
- After responding that he had never eaten anything unclean, Peter was told not to call anything that God had cleansed “unclean” (Acts 10:11-16).

Following the vision, which was repeated three times, and upon the arrival of the three men from Cornelius, the Holy Spirit spoke to Peter: “While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee. Arise therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have sent them” (Acts 10:19-20).

It is therefore evident that what was shown to Peter did not take place on the rooftop, but was actually accomplished as he considered the matter. The teaching that took place was within the context of Divine fellowship (1 Cor 1:9; 1 John 1:3). In that fellowship, Peter took into his mind what had been shown and said to him. Those things were “mixed with faith” (Heb 4:2). That is, his thinking began with the Person and will of God, and his unmitigated trust in the Lord. Into that scenario, Peter pondered what he had seen and heard, handling it as a kind of spiritual treasure box. In that process, God opened the treasure box, unveiling to the understanding of Peter something that he had never seen before.

What Peter had now seen – that he should refer to no man as being “common of unclean” – was not a conclusion that he reached through logical thinking. Also, it is not that he ignored logical thinking, and God forbid that anyone should exalt such a manner of thought. So far as logic is concerned, Peter’s reasoning was based on the fact that God is true, He does not lie, and He has a purpose that is to be comprehended. That was truly analytical thinking. However, what he came to see was what God “showed” him, not what he concluded – and there is a vast difference between the two.

As has been confirmed in the Christian community, men – even deeply religious men – have this inveterate tendency to rely upon “the wisdom of men.” This includes both manners of thinking and the means of ascertaining the meaning of the Word of God. Today there is a great body of both literary and verbal dialog that focuses on such things as hermeneutics (the science of interpretation), language expertise, and arriving at conclusions by means of consensus, historical analysis, and statistical analyzation. None of these approaches have any validity at all when it comes to understanding the things of God. This is because those are matters that are both governed and determined by God, and can only be discerned through a living identity with Him.

This is precisely why the Word of God can only be profitable to a people when it is mixed with faith – which is intensely personal (Heb 4:2).

An Erroneous View

This is also why men should question the validity of defining faith as a body of doctrine – something that is quite common among purported Christian scholars. McClinkok and Strong’s Cyclopedia refers to this approach in its definition of faith, adding a key observation. “An objective body of truth: ‘the faith;’ designated by the schoolmen as fides quae creditur, the faith which is believed. So the Augsburg Confession speaks of ‘our holy faith and Christian religion.’ (This sense does not occur in N.T.)” It also adds, “A rule of thought, the fides penes quam creditur: so the Roman Catholics say such a thing is “of faith” (not found in N.T.)”

Commentators have long taken the above view of the expression “the faith which was once for all delivered” (Jude 1:3). Here are some of the statements that have been written.

- “To the Church universal, the whole body of believers, has been committed, therefore, a sacred deposit of truth, here called the faith, embracing evangelical history, doctrine, and precept. This body of truth is a permanent trust.” PULPIT COMMENTARY

- “. . . by the ‘faith’ is meant the doctrine of faith, in which sense it is used whenever faith is said to be preached, obeyed, departed, or erred from, or denied, or made shipwreck of, or when exhortations are made to stand fast, and continue in it, or to strive and contend for it, as here; and which is sometimes called the word of faith, the faith of the Gospel, the mystery of faith, or most holy faith, the common faith . . .” JOHN GILL

- “The system of religion revealed in the gospel. It is called “faith,” because that is the cardinal virtue in the system, and because all depends on that. The rule here will require that we should contend in this manner for all “truth.” ALBERT BARNES

- “Dative of advantage. Here not in the sense of trust, but rather of the thing believed in as in verse 20; Ga 1:23; 3:23; Php 1:27.” ROBERTSON’S WORD PICTURES

All of these views represent an interpretation of the text, and not the text itself. They suggest that faith is not an entity of itself. Yet, faith is declared to be something that “came” (Gal 3:23), is “obtained” (2 Pet 1:1), comes to us through grace (1 Tim 1:14), and is given by Christ (Eph 6:23). Faith, while possessed by the individual, is actually separate from him. He possesses faith, but it originated outside of himself. Further, the qualities ascribed to faith, and the things that are said to be accomplished through it, cannot be ascribed to a body of teaching.

The word from which “faith” is translated in Jude 1:3 is πίστει. This word is used fifty-eight times in Scripture (Acts 3:16; 6:7; 14:22; 15:9; 16:5; 26:18; Rom 3:28; 4:19,20; 5:2; 11:20; 14:1; 1 Cor 16:13; 2 Cor 2:4; 8:7; 2 Cor 13:5; Gal 2:20; Phil 1:27; 3:9; Col 1:23; 2:7; 2 Thess 2:13; 1 Tim 1:2,4; 2:7,16; 3:13; 4:12; 2 Tim 1:13; 3:10; Tit 1:13; Tit 2:2; 3:15; Heb 4:2; 11:3,45,7,8,9,11,17,20,21,22,23,24,27,28,29,30,31; James 1:6; 2:5; 1 Pet 5:9; 2 Pet 1:5; Jude 1:3,20). It is interesting that the same word is used in Hebrews 4:2 that is used in Jude 1:3. There it states that “the word preached” was not “mixed with faith.” In the Greek, the article “the” precedes: i.e., “the faith.” Here, then, the body of the things to be believed, “the word preached,” is clearly distinguished from “the faith” itself. This means that, as used in Scripture, faith does not stand for what is believed, but for the actual apprehension of what is believed.

One of the rare departures from this scholastic view of Jude 1:3 was provided by John Calvin. He said of the text, “He says that faith had been once delivered, that they might know that they had obtained it for this end, that they might never fail or fall away.” CALVIN on JUDE

Why Say These Things?

It is necessary to say these things because of the impact of mere traditional approaches to the understanding of truth. When God “showed” Peter that he should not call any man common or unclean, it seems to me to be questionable that he did so through Peter analyzing a body of doctrine. It was rather the personal faith of the apostle that was used to bring him to a proper conclusion of the matter.

Call No Man Common or Unclean

So far as the record is concerned, this is not something God said, but something He “showed,” or revealed. It was something concealed within the Gospel – something that had to be unveiled. That is, there were effects wrought by the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ that had not yet been comprehended by Peter – and this event took place an estimated ten years after the day of Pentecost (41 A.D.).

Prior to Christ’s death, a certain condition existed in the world that was owing to the dominance of sin. Sin had not been taken away, either in its entirety or partially. No sin – not so much as a single one – had actually been removed or blotted out. In preparation for the coming Savior, God created and selected a nation with whom He worked exclusively. Though small, they were isolated from all other families, or nations, of the earth. That separation was formalized by means of a covenant – the “first covenant” (Heb 8:7; 9:1). The covenant was a moral one, and was presented in the Ten Commandments, which are referred to as “the words of the covenant” (Ex 34:28).

From the standpoint of the identity of the people, this covenant became a “middle wall of partition” between the Jews and the Gentiles. Although both peoples were under the dominion of sin, Israel, because of its role in bringing forth the Savior, was given special privileges (Rom 9:3-5). As long as sin was not dealt with directly, this distinction remained, being required because of God’s righteousness. Further, God’s work was on their side of the wall.

However, when Jesus “put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself” (Heb 9:26), the whole situation changed. The “middle wall of partition” was removed, and a common basis for dealing with all men was put into place. Paul referred to this when he said of Jesus, “For He is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us” (Eph 2:14). Now, no man could be viewed as “unclean” because of an outward distinction. That is, no man was excluded from Divine consideration purely upon the basis of their bloodline or being uncircumcised.

This is the truth that was opened to Peter. It is what God “showed” Him. However, He did not do this by simply saying the separation of Jew and Gentile no longer existed. Rather, he used the knowledge that he already had – the Law and its various requirements, the Scriptures, the words of Jesus, the Gospel, and the New Covenant. He then brought into the mixture the things that were new – the vision and the statements that attended it, and the words of the Holy Spirit. All of this was gathered together in, then mixed with faith. The shaking together of this mixture was accomplished in Peter’s thoughts – his reasoning and consideration. It was within this activity that the Lord drew near to him, as Jesus did to the two on the road to Emmaus. He then showed Peter a perspective that he had never seen before – yet it all made perfect sense to him because of his faith. It was something new, but it was not something strange, and thus he was able to embrace it immediately. He will now shape his life around what he has been shown.

A CONCLUSION

When the devil is successful in suppressing the truth, diverting the attention of men to religious tradition, and placing an emphasis on this present evil world, something of significance takes place. Men are brought to the point where they cannot reason properly. They do not possess the components required for sound thought, and therefore they arrive at erroneous conclusions. Just as you cannot build a stable house that can withstand storms out of newspapers and cardboard, so men cannot build good spiritual thoughts out of religious tradition and the wisdom of this world.

Many church people have arrived at completely inaccurate conclusions, and derived damaging opinions and views, because they have gone about the work of thinking with unacceptable components. Perhaps they have mingled together principles of psychiatry, statistical data from human research, and the observations of certain philosophers. Then they have brought into the mixture the religious persuasions of men and their undeveloped and juvenile opinions. The whole conglomeration is only capable of producing erroneous conclusions. God will not dignify such a procedure by drawing near to teach the individual caught up in it. Nor, indeed, can faith operate in such a surrounding, for there is no spiritual substance in it – nothing that faith can grasp.

It is essential that professing Christians extend themselves to have a working knowledge of the text of the Scriptures, for they alone are able to make men “wise unto salvation” (2 Tim 3:15). The Scriptures are also the appointed means of coming into spiritual maturity (2 Tim 3:17). In addition to this, it is imperative that believers be given a consistent and robust diet of the Word of God. All of this also requires a surrounding of godly souls, who themselves are also living by every word of God.

The word translated “without gainsaying” has the following lexical meaning: “without contradiction,” THAYER “without raising any question, without objection, without hesitation,” FRIBERG and “pertaining to what cannot be spoken against or objected to - 'cannot be denied, without opposition, without objection, indisputable.” LOUW-NIDA

Remember, we are being exposed to real spiritual life, not a theoretical scenario. It is quite common to hear preachers and teachers speak about how hesitate “we all are” to respond to Divine directives. These days, much is made out of how men argue with God, resist doing what they know it right, and entertain g personal views differing with those of the Lord. For some, this appears to address life right down where the rubber meets the road, so to speak. However, nothing could be further from the truth! It is the “carnal mind” that is “enmity against God,” not the spiritual mind (Rom 8:7). Jesus said His sheep know Him, hear His voice, follow Him, and refuse to follow a stranger (John 10:4-5,8,13). That is not the way they ought to be, but is rather the way they are. This is being lived out in our text.

Peter was asked to do something he had never done before – not in all of his life, and he was a mature man. He was faced with a fundamental change in how he was to view mankind. He was directed to go with some Gentiles to the house of a Gentile, which contradicted even his conscience. He was not told the nature of the mission. He was simply told to go with the men standing at the door, doing so “doubting nothing.”

Now, initially, that is what Peter had to work with. He asked no further questions. He made no objections. He did not attempt to justify his views at that time – views he had held for his entire life. He simply proceeded to do what the Spirit had instructed him to do. Like Abraham, he moved out “not knowing whether he went” (Heb 11:8). He also was “strong in faith, giving glory to God” (Rom 4:20).

Peter did not ask the men to wait while he sought an answer from the Lord. He did not ask them to pray with him about what he ought to do. He did not ask for time to think the matter out, weigh all of the options, and determine how best to meet their need. He did not quote Solomon’s words – “in the multitude of counselors there is safety” – then call some of the other apostles and ask their advice

That is the way faith responds. It never disobeys, never hesitates, and never doubts. Those are all traits of the flesh and of unbelief. You will never read in Scripture of someone who believed, and in that posture disobeyed; or, had faith and doubted what was believed, or believed what the Lord said, but argued with Him about what He had declared.

AS SOON AS I WAS SENT FOR

He did not quote Solomon’s words – “in the multitude of counselors there is safety” – then call some of the other apostles and ask their advice (Prov 11:14). Within the framework of the New Covenant, such an approach is not always appropriate.

At this point, all Peter knows is what the servants of Cornelius have told him. Cornelius was told by an angel to send for Peter “to hear words from” him (Acts 10:22).

One can only speculate the response of a modern preacher or teacher if he received a request like that. The specialist in marriage might imagine he was receiving a request to assist in the development of happy home conditions. The specialist in finances might think the inquirer was interested in learning how to set up a family budget. The specialist in youth activities might consider this to be an inquiry for assistance in handling a wayward child. Of course, all such tributaries of religious thought were not yet developed at that time. Also, Peter was versed enough in the things of God, and was living close enough to the Savior, to handle critical issues without advance preparation. He knew that the same Spirit who sent him could empower him.

There is something else that can be seen here. Those who are brought into the vineyard of the Lord will be required to fulfill their work by faith. There is no valid work in the Kingdom that can be done independently of a strong faith. Notwithstanding this circumstance, there is a phenomenal amount of Christian work being done that does not apparently require faith. However, the kind of work that the Lord honors, and does not forget, is referred to as a “work of faith, and labor of love” (1 Thess 1:3). Such efforts are also referred to as a “work and labor of love” (Heb 6:10). Paul further prayed that God would fulfill in His people the “work of faith with power” (2 Thess 1:11).

The kind of work to which I have just referred often involves being sent somewhere without any details concerning what the worker will find – like Paul’s vision of a man in Macedonia calling out, “Come over into Macedonia and help us” (Acts 16:9). Paul and Silas had no idea what they would find when they arrived in Macedonia. In fact, their first subject was not even a man, but a group of women who were praying by a riverside. Then there is the case of Philip who was told to “go South unto the way that leadeth down from Jerusalem to Gaza” (Acts 8:26). Even after Philip found the road, the Spirit told him catch up with a specified chariot, and join himself to it. Philip had no idea what he would find, or the nature of the opportunity that would be opened to him.

The same was true of the disciples, whom Jesus told to tarry in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high (Lk 24:49). He did not tell them the details of what would happen after that – only that they would be witnesses unto Him in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, and the uttermost part of the earth (Acts 1:8). The day of Pentecost, the confrontation of the lame man at the Gate Beautiful, and the opposition of the chief priests, captain of the Temple, and the Sadducees, were all unspecified ahead of time – as well as the handling or need to appoint men to oversee the daily distribution of food, and the handling of the case of Ananias and Sapphira. All these things had to be handled as they occurred. When they took place was no time to commence living by faith and walking in the Spirit. Neither was it possible to prepare the brethren for them by means of a work shop or a special series of studies on methods and techniques.

The weakness of teaching methods and techniques is found in the fact that they do not integrate with an unknown plan or circumstance. Nor, indeed, do they contribute to God-honoring participation and effectiveness in doing the will of the Lord. Once again, all of this is being lived out in our text. We are being exposed to a slice of Kingdom life, and the manner in which God calls His people into His own good work.

Satisfying and effective involvement with the living God depends on the faith of the participants, for “without faith, it is impossible to please God” (Heb 11:6). That is true whether we are speaking of Cain or Abel, Noah or Abraham, or David or Paul. There is no place in Divine fellowship for unbelief of recalcitrance. Those are things that exclude men from blessing.

FOUR DAYS AGO I WAS FASTING

“30a And Cornelius said, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour. . .” Cornelius does not launch into a lengthy dialog about how much he wants to know the will of the Lord. That desire was certainly present, but he first relates the real reason why he had sent for Peter. It was not that he had heard about Peter, and therefore thought his relative nearness to his home was an excellent opportunity to contact him. He had sent for Peter because a heavenly messenger had told him to do so. Peter, on the other hand, was there because the Holy Spirit had directed him to go with the men sent from Cornelius.

At this point we see the length of time required to get Peter to the house of Cornelius – four days! In a sense, those days were testing the faith of Cornelius, as well as the fervency of his desire and the degree of his obedience. A person with only a casual interest in the salvation of God could not have waited four days. Cornelius, on the other hand, not only waited, but took the opportunity to fill up his house with his own household, relatives, and close friends. It is still true that the measure of a person’s interest in the things of God is revealed in how much they are willing to do to obtain a spiritual understanding, and how long they can endure.

FOUR DAYS AGO I WAS FASTING

“And Cornelius said, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour . . .” Other versions read, “Four days ago to this hour, I was praying,” NASB “Four days ago I was in my house praying at this very hour,” NIV “I was keeping the ninth hour of prayer,” RSV “This is now the fourth day since about this time I was observing the ninth hour (three o’clock in the afternoon) of prayer in my lodging place.” AMPLIFIED and “Three days.” PHILLIPS

The word used here is proseuco,menoj , , and means “offer prayers,” THAYER and “technical term for talking to a deity in order to ask for help, usually in the form of a request, vow, or wish pray, speak to (God), ask.” FRIBERG

The meaning of the text is somewhat garbled by some of the translations. Later versions, such as the NASB, NIV, and NRSV represent the text as saying Cornelius was praying four days ago about the same hour that Peter now has arrived at his home. This does

At this point we see the length of time required to get Peter to the house of Cornelius – four days! In a sense, those days were testing the faith of Cornelius, as well as the fervency of his desire and the degree of his obedience. not appear to be the meaning. The word translated “unto” [this hour] does mean “up to a certain point in time.” THAYER The point in time is specified as “this hour” – that is, the hour that Peter had arrived. It therefore appears that Cornelius has been praying for four days, like Saul of Tarsus had prayed for three days (Acts 9:9,11). This is why the word “fasting” is employed in the KJV. This is also in keeping with the nature of spiritual life, which is not turned on and off, operating in cycles. While the early disciples waited in Jerusalem, they also prayed (Acts 1:14). Once they heard from Jesus, they continued in prayer until the appointed time. Once Saul heard from Jesus, he also continued in prayer until the appointed time, when he would be told what to do. It is therefore reasonable to consider that Cornelius did the same. Truth is always worth waiting for, doing so patiently and productively.

A MAN STOOD BEFORE ME

“ 30b . . . and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house, and, behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing . . .”

THE NINTH HOUR I PRAYED

“ . . . and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house . . .”

Cornelius states that he saw a man before him at the ninth hour, or three o'clock in the afternoon. This is, as we should expect, in strict accord with the report of Luke in Acts 10:1. The earlier account does not say that Cornelius was praying at the time – only that he saw a vision “evidently about the ninth hour.” Also, according to the record, the servants did not tell Peter that Cornelius was praying at the time of the vision. However, now our understanding is enlarged on the matter.

It appears that the vision was actually heaven's response to the particular prayer Cornelius was praying.

A MAN STOOD BEFORE ME

“ . . . and, behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing . . .” Other versions read, “shining garments,” NASB , “shining clothes,” NIV “dazzling clothes,” NRSV “bright apparel,” RSV “a dazzling robe,” CSB “white apparel,” DOUAY and “radiant clothes.” GWN

Acts 10:1 states that Cornelius “saw in a vision . . . an angel of God coming in to him.” There, the commissioning of the angel was the particular emphasis, and therefore he is said to have been coming in to Cornelius. Speaking of the same visitation, Cornelius emphasizes the arrival of the heavenly messenger, saying, “a man stood before me.”

Actually, this was not a man, but only had the appearance of a man. The clothing that he was wearing substantiated that this was actually a messenger from heaven – a holy angel. Acts 10:3 categorically says that: “an angel of God coming in to him.” The servants also reported to Peter that Cornelius was “warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee” (Acts 10:22). This confirms that Cornelius had reported to them that it was, in fact, an angel that had appeared to him.

HEAVEN VERSUS EARTH

There is such a stark contrast between heavenly personalities and those upon earth, that they are often seen as being associated with whiteness, light, and brightness. Men are never impressive to heavenly beings, nor are they ever seen in this world as arrayed in dazzling garments. Earth is the inferior realm, where corruption and defilement have cast a shadow upon humanity. But it is not so with those who are from heaven. Even when Moses and Elijah came back from the other side to speak with Jesus about the death He would accomplish, they “appeared in glory,” or “In glorious splendor” (Lk 9:30-31).

When Jesus was transfigured, “His raiment was white as light” (Matt 17:2), and “became shining” (Mk 9:3). When the women came to the tomb where Jesus had been buried, they were met by “two men . . . in shining garments,” indicating they were really angels (Lk 24:4). When Jesus ascended into glory, angels appeared to the disciples as “two men . . . in white apparel” (Acts 1:11). Redeemed souls that have been seen on the other side are said to be “arrayed in white robes” (Rev 6:11; 7:9,13). There is a certain purity and glory that pervade the heavenly realms. It causes personalities sent from there to earth to appear distinct from men, even though they take upon themselves in their likeness.

THY PRAYER IS HEARD

“ 31 . . . And said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God.”

Cornelius now gives a precise report of the words of the angel who came to him. Four days have passed, but he has not forgotten what was said.

YOUR PRAYER IS HEARD

“ . . . And said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard . . . ”

In Acts 10:4, the report was that Cornelius “prayers” had come up before God as a memorial, for it is said that he “prayed to God alway.” Here, however, some more details are provided. The angel states that a specific prayer had been heard: “thy prayer is heard.” With the exceptions of the Living Bible, and the Contemporary English Version, all forty-seven versions of Scripture that I have read the same. Cornelius’ “prayer” was heard.

It appears from this that Cornelius had been calling upon the name of the Lord, seeking more light, and making some petition relative to the appropriation of salvation. Here is an example of the Law, in the role of a schoolmaster, bringing a person to the point where they are ready for Christ (Gal 3:24-25). It is possible that the servants, according to the record, had not reported the matter of Cornelius’ prayers to Peter.

YOUR ALMS ARE REMEMBERED

“ . . . and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God.” Other versions read, “your alms are remembered in the sight of God,” NKJV “have been remembered before God,” NASB “remembered your gifts to the poor,” NIV “your offerings are kept in His memory,” BBE “remembered your acts of charity,” CJB “your charitable gifts have not been forgotten by God,” NJB “your gifts to the poor have been noticed by God!” NLT “your charities have been put on record before God,” WEYMOUTH and “your donations to the poor have been known and preserved before God [so that He heeds and is about to help you]!” AMPLIFIED

It is possible to be intimidated by the knowledge that God sees and knows everything – the words and deeds of men, and their thoughts as well. Some have presented this as though God is only searching for something that He cannot receive – looking for some flaw or deficiency in His creatures.

It is possible to be intimidated by the knowledge that God sees and knows everything – the words and deeds of men, and their thoughts as well. Some have presented this as though God is only searching for something that He cannot receive – looking for some flaw or deficiency in His creatures. There is no question that He does see such things, being fully aware of them. It is also true that those who are of tender heart want such things to be discovered by the Lord. Therefore they pray with David, “Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting” (Psa 139:23-24).

However, there are also things that God beholds in those with honest and good hearts that delight Him. He wants us to know that He is “not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love, which ye have showed toward His name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister” (Heb 6:10).

For some, it might be difficult to reconcile this with the fact that “all of our righteousnesses are as filthy rags” (Isa 64:6). However, the meaning of that affirmation is that the best of our deeds cannot become a basis for our justification. They are not sufficient to pay the debt for any of our unrighteousnesses, and they cannot outweigh our past. But, this is not the kind of thing that is being declared in our text – that Cornelius was accepted by God upon the basis of his prayers and giving to the people of God who had need. Rather, he had demonstrated a certain discontent with himself, and was in quest of Divine approval. This was doubtless the result of an honest and good heart.

Therefore, God will show him more, and give him more, because he has handled well the limited spiritual resources to which he had access. He has been faithful over a little, and will therefore be given more. He will no longer have to struggle with limitations in his understanding. God will send him to get a man who will know what he ought to do to avail himself of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. He will speak to Cornelius through a man He has taught. Rest assured, this is still God's manner!

SEND FOR PETER

“ 32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner by the sea side: who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee.”

What kind of heavenly direction will Cornelius receive. To whom will he be sent? Will it be a young Christian, who does not yet have a grasp of the salvation of God? Will it be someone who has a good supply of tracts, like The Four Spiritual Laws, or The Roman Road? Will he send him to a Bible supplier? Will he be invited to a series of local meetings or workshops that outline how men are to be saved?

Our text will confirm the importance of this, for Peter will confront things he has never confronted before. In fact, he will behold something taking place that contradicts a vein of contemporary theology that remains prevalent to this day. If he lacked maturity, or was not conversant with the salvation of God, and acquainted with the Scriptures, he would not have been able to respond properly.

See, these are what men do, but why do they take such a course of action? Mind you, it is not that I stand in judgment of those who make a hearty effort to reach the lost. My question involves why God did not follow that kind of procedure.

CALL FOR PETER

“Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner by the sea side . . .” This is exactly what Luke reports in Acts 10:5-6. It is also what the servants reported to Peter when he asked them why they had asked for him (Acts 10:22).

And why were they sent to Peter? Or, why was Philip sent to the Ethiopian? Or, why was Ananias sent to Saul of Tarsus? It is because they had an understanding of the salvation of God! They did not come to present an easy way to be saved, or recite a procedure that had been developed by the Jerusalem church. They were acquainted enough with the salvation of God to meet a person where they were, and open their eyes, turning them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God (Acts 26:18). The person who reaps the fields that are white unto the harvest must first have partaken of the fruit he is attempting to dispense. There must be some level of maturity present in the person so that they are capable of properly representing and presenting the Lord and His Christ.

Our text will confirm the importance of this, for Peter will confront things he has never confronted before. In fact, he will behold something taking place that contradicts a vein of contemporary theology that remains prevalent to this day. If he lacked maturity, or was not conversant with the salvation of God, and acquainted with the Scriptures, he would not have been able to respond properly.

HE WILL COME AND SPEAK TO YOU

“ . . . who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee.” Later versions omit this expression, but they have served no noble purpose in doing so. When the servants told Peter why they were sent, they reported the angel had said it was in order that Cornelius might “hear words of thee” (Acts 10:22). The next verse of our text states the people were all there “to hear all things that are commanded thee of God” (Acts 10:33). Later, when Peter reported the incident to the brethren in Jerusalem, he said the angel told Cornelius Peter “shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved” (Acts 11:14).

Peter did not come to Cornelius’ house to sing a song, or give a personal testimony, or recite a creed of some sort. He came with message that would not only define what God is doing in Christ Jesus, but would enable Cornelius and those with him to obtain the blessing of salvation by grace through faith.

It ought to be noted that there is a sense in which Divine appointments are guaranteed to proceed according to Divine plan, being brought to their appointed conclusion. The reason for this includes God’s consistent employment of those who are knowledgeable of Him and His will, and are supple in His hands. Throughout Scripture, there is a remarkable consistency in this manner of the Lord. It is part of His “ways.”

A person who lives by every word of God, walking by faith, will eventually come to the point where they are “thoroughly furnished unto all good works” – “a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the master’s use, and prepared unto every good work” (2 Tim 2:21). Let it be clear that one of the functions of godly leaders is to see to it that such men are raised up under their ministry (2 Tim 2:2). Holy men consider succeeding generations, and do not limit themselves to their own.

IMMEDIATELY, I SENT FOR YOU

“ 33a Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come.”

IMMEDIATELY

“Immediately therefore I sent to thee . . .” Other versions read, “at once,” RSV “Forthwith,” ASV and “without delay.” MONTGOMERY

Here again we are confronted with an invariable trait of those who believe: they respond as soon as they can see or comprehend. Every response thus far has been on this wise – instant, and without delay. Those who were convicted on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:40). The response of the lame man to Peter’s word (Acts 3:6-7). The disciples when their prayer was answered concerning speaking with boldness (Acts 4:31). The Samaritans response to Philip (Acts 8:12). Philip’s direction to the eunuch (Acts 8:26,29). The eunuch’s response to the preaching of Christ (Acts 8:38). Saul’s response to Jesus (Acts 9:6-8). Ananias response to the call to go to Saul (Acts 9:13-17). The response of Saul to Ananias (Acts 9:17-18). The response of Aeneas to Peter’s command to pick up his bed and walk (Acts 9:34). Dorcas’ response to Peter’s call to sit up, though she was dead (Acts 9:40). Cornelius response to the angel (Acts 10:7-8). The servants response to Cornelius’ word, as directed by the angel (Acts 10:9). Peter’s response to the Spirit’s direction (Acts 10:23).

How do men explain the presence of lethargy and indolence within the professed church. Why are motivators and organizers in such demand among professing Christians? How can men be identified with the Lord Jesus, yet lack the very qualities that are found wherever He works? No explanations are required, for we already know. They are lacking in faith, and it is not possible to be deficient in a more critical area!

YOU HAVE DONE WELL TO COME

“ . . . and thou hast well done that thou art come.” Other versions read, “you have been kind enough to come,” NASB “if was good of you to come,” NIV “you did the right thing coming,” CSB “Thank you for coming,” GWN “I thank you heartily for having come,” WEYMOUTH and “you [being a Jew] have done a kind and courteous and handsome thing in coming.” AMPLIFIED

In my judgment, some of the versions have wholly misrepresented the nature of Cornelius’ response, as though it was nothing more than an expression of politeness and congeniality – like thanking Peter for taking time out of his busy schedule to honor Cornelius’ request.

This not a proper reflection of what was taking place here. This is a matter over which heaven was presiding. It was an answer to prayer. An angel was involved in the matter. There were two visions given from heaven, one to Cornelius and one to Peter. The Holy Spirit was active in both speaking and directing. Words were going to be delivered that were commanded by God, and would tell men what to do to be saved. Within that context, I hardly see how Peter’s response could be viewed as anything but “the right thing,” and something that was “well done.” This involved infinitely more than being kind and courteous. Here is obedience to God!

WE ARE HERE TO HEAR EVERYTHING GOD COMMANDED YOU

“ 33b Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.”

These words from Cornelius will confirm that when he saw Peter he was not thinking of mere human kindness and consideration. I do not doubt that such thoughts were involved, but they were in the back seat of Cornelius’ thinking, not in the driver’s seat.

WE ARE ALL PRESENT

“Now therefore are we all here present before God . . .” Other versions read, “in the presence of God,” NIV “present in the sight of God,” RSV “waiting before God,” NLT “before God,” YLT and “in God’s presence.” WEYMOUTH

It is evident that God was dominant in their thinking, and was the ultimate reason for their gathering. This is the only acceptable frame of mind and spirit when we come together to hear what the Lord has said. It is a marvelous expression of spiritual insight and a desire to please and serve the Lord. This is the secret to the productive gathering of believers. Where this attitude is missing, there is no reason for professing Christians to come together. I do not believe a person could support the idea that coming together out of a sense of institutional obligation, and with no lively awareness of the Lord Himself, is in any way pleasing to God. Oh, that the “we are all here present before God” mentality was more obvious in the churches.

What a blessed gathering it is when people come together to hear what God has commanded to be both heard and done! And more blessed still is that audience who can find a man who will tell them what the Lord has commanded – who will deliver the Word that God has sent out into the world!

TO HEAR WHAT GOD HAS COMMANDED

“ . . . to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.” Other versions read, “everything the Lord has commanded you to tell us,” NIV “all the things which the Lord has given you to say,” BBE “everything the Lord has ordered you to say,” GWN “the message God has given you,” NLT and “all the instructions God has given you.” NJB

This is the attitude of faith! Faith will not settle for some of what God has commanded, or a portion of the message He has delivered. Faith wants to hear it all – “ everything the Lord has commanded you to tell us!” How do you account for people with honest and good hearts that have not been exposed to “all the counsel of God?” (Acts 20:27)? Some who have laborer for the Lord have actually been told to withhold some of what God has said, and not to speak on it, lest the people be offended. How should a man of God respond to such requests? He should ignore them, and even rebuke the requesters before all, that others may fear (1 Tim 5:20).

Note that this sizeable gathering did not draw back from the idea of being commanded by God. Flesh does not like to think about God commanded people – but faith has no difficulty with it. It will shout out, “What wilt Thou have me to do?” The heart in which faith is welcomed is not content to remain ignorant concerning what God has commanded to be declared!

What a blessed gathering it is when people come together to hear what God has commanded to be both heard and done! And more blessed still is that audience who can find a man who will tell them what the Lord has commanded – who will deliver the Word that God has sent out into the world!

When Jeremiah was told of the fall of Babylon and the destruction of its false gods, God demanded that the news be published abroad. Here is what He said. “Declare ye among the nations, and publish, and set up a standard ; publish , and conceal not : say , Babylon is taken, Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces; her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces” (Jer 50:2). Now, if that was the word when God brought down Babylon, what do you suppose He will say about the message of salvation? What of the announcement of peace, reconciliation, and the ending of the Law as a means to righteousness? What of the exaltation of Jesus, the soon demise of the world, and the swallowing up of death? What of an eternal inheritance, and a house in heaven?

May there be a fresh awareness of these things when we gather together to hear everything that the Lord has commanded to be proclaimed! Faith delights in such proclamations.

CONCLUSION

Once again, we have seen the manner of the Kingdom. Those who engage in efforts to please and serve the Lord, honoring their conscience and seeking spiritual enlargement, will not be disappointed. Further, those who live by faith and walk in the Spirit, fighting the good fight of faith and laying hold in eternal life, will find themselves in the service of the King. The eyes of the Lord are still scanning the earth, running to and fro in quest of a man whose heart is perfect toward Him. He will show His covenant and divulge His secret to such souls, employing them in His good, and acceptable, and perfect will. May you be among that number, enjoying all of the benefits of being included in such a host!

Lesson #49

PETER PREACHES TO CORNELIUS

“ 10:34 Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: 35 But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. 36 The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all:) 37 That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judaea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached; 38 How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him. 39 And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree: 40 Him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly; 41 Not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. 42 And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. 43 To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.”
(Acts 10:34-43)

INTRODUCTION

Peter is one of the very first apostles that Jesus chose. He had been tutored by Jesus for over three years, was prominent among the twelve, and had been given the keys of the kingdom of heaven (Matt 16:19). He is mentioned one hundred and eight times in the Gospels, and fifty-nine times in the book of Acts (thru chapter fifteen, after which he is not mentioned again). Peter had directed the disciples in the replacement of Judas (Acts 1:15-26), and was chosen to first deliver the Gospel to the Jews on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:14-40). Under His leadership the Gospel had spread throughout Jerusalem (Acts 5:28). People came to Jerusalem and sought for only his shadow to fall upon them, that they might be healed (Acts 5:15). He also managed the selection of seven men to oversee the daily distribution of food among the thousands of disciples – men who were of honest report, and filled with the Holy Spirit and wisdom (Acts 6:1-6). He had dealt with the intrusion of hypocrisy into the church, and joined with John in being used of God to confer the Holy Spirit upon the Samaritans (Acts 8:1-11; 8:17-24). Through him many had believed in Lydda, Saron, and Joppa (Acts 9:32-42).

At the time of our text, approximately ten years have passed since Jesus has returned to heaven to be seated on the throne of David and commence the government of the Kingdom. Throughout that time, Peter has been consistently involved in the vineyard of the Lord, sowing, watering, and reaping.

- He has detected when men should be told what to do to be saved (Acts 2:38).
- He knew how to exhort those who were receiving the word (Acts 2:40).
- He knew when to raise a lame man, and how to go about doing it (Acts 3:1-6).
- He knew how to respond to those who were astounded at the above miracle (Acts 3:12-26).
- He knew how to answer the chief priests and Jewish leaders who questioned himself and John concerning their preaching (Acts 4:7-9).
- He also knew precisely what to declare to them about Jesus (Acts 4:10-26).
- He had perceived when Satan filled the heart of Ananias (Acts 5:3-5).
- He knew how to deal with Sapphira, who had conspired with her husband Ananias

(Acts 5:7-10).

- Together with John, he was aware of what was required for the Samaritans to receive the Holy Spirit, and how to go about that reception taking place (Acts 8:14-17).

- He at once recognized that the heart of Simon the sorcerer was not right in the sight of God (Acts 8:18-24).

- Peter knew what to do when he confronted Aeneas, a man who had kept his bed for seven years (Acts 9:32-35).

- He knew how to address the matter of Dorcas, who had died (Acts 9:36-42).

- Now, in our text, he knows what to ask Cornelius, and has the discernment to see what the Lord is doing.

The record confirms that the Lord had treated Peter the same way he did Paul – He counted him faithful, “putting” him into the ministry (1 Tim 1:12). He could be trusted with the Gospel, with difficult circumstances, and with Divine power. He will not allow Satan to fill his heart, or lie to the Holy Spirit – like Ananias did. He would not seek to prostitute the power of God – as Simon the sorcerer did. He will not seek a prominent place for himself – as the chief priests, elders, and Sadducees did.

PETER WILL SPEAK IN ORDER TO MAKE DISCIPLES

When this man speaks in the name of Jesus, He will certainly reflect the mind of Christ. It will be of interest to be subjected to how He presents Christ, and what he chooses to accent. It will be very apparent that he is not merely trying to gain converts – something Jesus never told His apostles to do. He is rather preaching Christ and making disciples, as Jesus commanded His followers to do: “Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit” NKJV (Matt 28:19). The word “teach,” as used in the King James Version, means, “to make a disciple; to teach, instruct,” THAYER “make a disciple of someone, instruct, cause someone to become a follower,” FRIBERG and to make “a disciple of someone, in the sense of adhering to the teachings or instructions of a leader and in promoting the cause of such a leader,” LOUW-NIDA

If you are at all familiar with the landscape of Christendom, you know that it is not at all common for professing preachers and teachers to “make disciples” – that is, to so teach and instruct the people as to cause them to embrace Jesus, hear Him, adhere to Him, and follow Him. All of the moral lapses within the Christian community, the cooling of an affection for Christ, and failing to seek the things that are above are directly owing to the failure of the people to become disciples of Jesus. They have been lured into the church, so to speak, by the wisdom of men, and have not actually been attracted to the Person of Jesus Christ.

Now, let us be clear about this. When a person is not like Jesus, it is because he is not a disciple of Jesus. Further, if he is not a disciple of Jesus, either he has not been properly taught, or he has rejected the truth to which he has been subjected.

It must be admitted that Jesus is basically compelling, drawing men to Himself. That is why He is the subject of preaching, and is the theme of the Gospel (Rom 1:16). It is why the Scriptures in their entirety testify of Him (John 5:39), and the testimony of Jesus is the “spirit of prophecy” (Rev 19:10). No one will follow Jesus if they do not know Him, and no one can know Him who is not taught about Him.

What we have today – at least in America – is a church that is fundamentally ingrown. That is, it has made itself the primary subject. It promotes itself, and seeks to enlarge itself. Its programs center in the institution, not in Jesus. As a result, disciples of Jesus are exceedingly rare. In fact, proportionately speaking, few people within the professing church are any more knowledgeable of the Lord Jesus than the average person on the street. It is a most serious condition.

Jesus said, “It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord” (Matt 10:25). And again, “every one that is perfect shall be as his master,” or “everyone, after he has been fully trained, will be like his teacher” (Luke 6:40). In fact, after men are taught by God fearing men, the Holy Spirit, working through the truth, changes the individual into image of Christ from one stage of glory to a greater one (2 Cor 3:18). If this is true – and it certainly is – then making a disciple is not something that occurs in an instant of time. The work of discipling is not complete until the disciple is like his Master. That is why early believers were referred to as “disciples” (Acts 1:15; 6:1,2,7; 9:1,19,25,26,38; 11:26,29; 13:52; 14:20,22,28; 15:10; 18:23,27; 19:9,30; 20:17,30; 21:4,16).

I am particularly sensitive about this matter because of my own religious background. I was cultured in a background where the word “disciple” was viewed with some skepticism. This was because a certain denomination of which we did not approve had chosen that word as their term of identity: “Disciples of Christ.” The outcome of this distorted view was that few of my peers even considered the word “disciple.” If regarded at all, it was only brief and in a cursory manner. Rarely did anyone make an extended point of what Jesus said about disciples. I consider the time I spent under such influences to be a time of spiritual robbery.

Now, let us be clear about this. When a person is not like Jesus, it is because he is not a disciple of Jesus. Further, if he is not a disciple of Jesus, either he has not been properly taught, or he has rejected the truth to which he has been subjected.

Thinking On the Facts

Allow me to reason for a moment on this matter, for it is critical to an understanding of our text. In Scripture, those who were being subjected to the truth, yet did not have a heart for it, eventually were made known. Either they objected to the truth, like those in the Libertine synagogue who heard Stephen (Acts 6:9), or their hypocrisy was made known like that of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:1-11). Perhaps their sinful hearts erupted in all manner of deviate conduct, like those in Corinth (1 Cor 1:10; 3:1-3; 5:1-5; 6:1-5; 15:12,34).

If those who have hard-hearts, no love for the truth, or are involved in sinful manners of life continue undetected for a long period of time, there is a flaw in the preaching and teaching. The truth itself, because the Holy Spirit works through it, promotes conviction (John 16:7-11), purifies (1 Pet 1:22), and sanctifies (John 17:19). It simply is not possible for the truth as it is in Jesus to be consistently preached without both believers and unbelievers surfacing. The truth is what actually discovers the heart. This is confirmed in the preaching and teaching of Jesus. It brought out those who were inclined to the truth, and those who were not. To put it in parabolic form, the message of Christ will confirm what kind of hearts the people possess – whether they are hard, like a path, impenetrable like the rocky soil, filled with distractions like the soil with thorns and thistles, or soft and free from contaminant like the good ground (Matt 13:19-23).

WHY SAY THESE THINGS?

Why take the time to say such things? – particularly when, to some, they seem to have negative overtones. Is this really nothing more than finding fault with professing Christians? Indeed not! In the account that we have before us, Peter is carrying out the mandate of Jesus to “make disciples.” He will speak with this in mind, which will compel him to always have Jesus at the center of what he says.

As you consider what Peter proclaims, regard what he does not say, as well as what he does say. Behold the focus of what he says, and ponder how different it is from what is often preached in Jesus’ name. The contrast will be obvious. We are being exposed to a real man of God, preaching the real Gospel, to a really interested group of people. This circumstance is of such weight that heaven itself will respond favorably to what is taking place.

I PERCEIVE THAT GOD IS NO RESPECTER OF PERSONS

“ 10:34 Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons . . .”

Jesus once said to Nicodemus, “Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness” (John 3:11). This is the manner of the Kingdom, employed and set in motion by the King Himself. There is no place in the work of the Lord for speaking what is not known, attempting to declare what has not been perceived. Religious mimicry is entirely out of order among those who wear the name of Jesus and attempt to speak in His name. To mimic is to closely imitate someone, simulate, or impersonate. In the manner in which I am using the term, it means to speak about something that is not really perceived just as though the speaker had a perfect understanding of it. Because such an one cannot draw anything out of his own spiritual treasury, he resorts to what other people have said, speaking it out as though it was the truth itself. While what is said may be true, yet because the person has not seen it, it is out of order to speak it as though he did see it. This is because his faith is not involved, for faith is the mother of understanding (Heb 11:3). Both David and Paul said they spoke because they had believed. “We having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak” (2 Cor 4:13; Psa 116:10).

In confirmation of this manner, Peter will declare what he has perceived, or what he has been brought to understand.

OF A TRUTH

“Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth . . .” Other versions read, “in truth,” NKJV “most certainly,” NASB “how true it is,” NIV “truly,” NRSV “in very deed,” DOUAY “most certainly and thoroughly,” AMPLIFIED and “in solemn truth.” PHILLIPS

The phrase “of a truth” reflects a degree of confidence that proceeds from faith and the insight that it brings. It means that what is said perfectly agrees with the way things really are. There is a very real way of looking at spiritual verity and speaking about it. That manner in no way obscures reality. This is the manner in which Peter will speak. He will not utter a private opinion that he has on the subject of reference. He will not speak about how he feels about this or that. Rather, he will testify to something that he has comprehended. Really, in the work of the Kingdom, this is the only way in which anyone should speak.

I PERCEIVE

“I perceive . . .” Other versions read, “understand,” NASB “realize,” NIV “see clearly,” BBE “discover,” MRD “see,” NAB “see very clearly,” NLT “clearly see,” WEYMOUTH “really see,” WILLIAMS “begin to see,” MONTGOMERY “perceive and understand,” AMPLIFIED “I can see now,” PHILLIPS “comprehend,” ALT “I am certain,” CEV and “realize.” GNB

Peter exclaims that he has taken hold of something: “I perceive.” The Greek word translated “perceive” is katalamba,nomai . As used in this text, the lexical meaning of this word is, “to lay hold of with the mind, to understand, perceive, learn, comprehend,” THAYER “realize,” UBS “to seize with the mind, apprehend, comprehend,” LIDDELL-SCOTT and “grasp, find, understand.” GINGRICH Inherent in the root meaning of this word is the idea of seizing something that is elusive, battling through inhibiting factors and taking hold of something with the mind. Aggressiveness is in the word, honesty, and overcoming indifference.

Interestingly, when Paul said he was laboring to “apprehend” that for which Jesus had “apprehended” him, he used a different tense of the same word as used in this text – katala,bw .

Here, perceiving equates to knowing the truth, and therefore experiencing liberty from delusion and misconceptions. Jesus referred to this experience when He said, “Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in My word, then are ye My disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free ” (John 8:31-32). Knowing the truth, therefore, involves hearing Jesus, continuing to hear Him, pondering what He has said, and following Him wherever He goes. It is in that posture, and only in that posture that one can come to “know the truth.” When a person knows the truth, they are able to use it and profit from it. They will also conform their lives to what they have apprehended.

This is not an academic perceive, but a spiritual one. In such a perception not only are the facts seen, but the implications of them as well. What is perceived, therefore, makes perfect sense to the perceiving one, and thus he immediately adapts his life to what has been comprehended.

GOD IS NO RESPECTER OF PERSONS

“ . . . that God is no respecter of persons . . . ” Other versions read, “shows no partiality,” NKJV “not one to show partiality,” NASB “does not show favoritism,” NIV “does not play favorites,” CSB “no acceptor of persons,” GENEVA “show favoritism in dealing with people,” NET “hath no regard of persons,” PNT “God is not partial,” TNT “treats everyone the same,” IE “makes no distinctions between one man and another,” WEYMOUTH “ shows no partiality and is no respecter of persons,” AMPLIFIED “not one to accept faces,” ALT “treats everyone on the same basis,” GNB and “not a respecter of faces.” LITV

You will perceive in the various versions how that some of them wholly distort the meaning of the text. Treating people equally is not the point at all , as is stated in some of the versions: “treats everyone the same,” IE “makes no distinctions between one man and another,” WEYMOUTH “treats everyone on the same basis,” GNB and “does not show favoritism.” NIV

There is certainly a sense in which God does, in fact, show favoritism, although it is not according to the flesh, or the natural state of men.

- He accepted Abel and his offering, but He did not accept Cain and his offering (Gen 4:4-5).
- In all of the world of his time, only Noah “found grace in the eyes of the Lord” (Gen 6:8).
- God called Abraham His “friend” – not one of his friends (Isa 41:8).
- He chose Israel above all other nations (Deut 10:15).
- God “loved” Jacob and “hated” Esau (Mal 1:1-2; Rom 9:13).
- He vouchsafed special privileges to Peter, James, and John (Mk 5:37; 9:2; 14:33).
- John is described as “the disciple whom Jesus loved” (John 21:20).
- He gave more visions and revelations to Paul (2 Cor 12:1; Eph 3:2-4).
- It is written that the Lord gave Joseph “favor” (Gen 39:21).
- Samuel grew in favor with God, as well as men (1 Sam 2:26).
- The Lord surrounds the righteous with “favor” (Psa 5:12).
- Mary, the mother of our Lord, was told that she was “highly favored” by God (Lk 1:28), and had “found favor” with Him (Lk 1:30).

• David “found favor” with the Lord (Acts 7:46), and is described as “a man after His own heart” (1 Sam 13:14).

If we fail to recognize this aspect of the Divine nature, certain pivotal texts will become meaningless to us. “Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children” (Eph 5:1). “That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God” (Col 1:10). “Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord” (Col 3:20). “And whatsoever we ask, we receive of Him, because we keep His commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in His sight” (1 John 3:22).

What Is the Meaning?

What, then, is the meaning of this affirmation of the character of God? – “God is no respecter of persons.” The phrase is not referring to the spiritual composition of the individual – what cannot be perceived with the natural senses. That would include a good conscience a pure heart, a love for God, tenderness toward God, a love for His word, etc. The expression “persons” refers to natural distinctions – what men are in Adam, so to speak. Especially now, that Jesus has put away sin and been seated at the right hand of God, God does not view people as men or women, Jew or Gentile, or bond or free. To be sure, He does not evaluate them on the basis of stature, talent, or any form of natural aptitude. At the bottom of evaluation totem-pole is the attainment of worldly status. None of these things determine what God thinks of a person!

When traced back to Adam, men are all reduced to the same level before God – and all natural distinctions can be traced back to Adam. Because of their relation to Adam, all men are condemned, for they are his progeny (Rom 5:16). Because of that relationship, death reigns over all of Adam’s offspring (Rom 5:17). Judgment came upon all men unto condemnation because of Adam (Rom 6:18). By virtue of their identity with Adam, all men were “made sinners” (Rom 6:19).

He will not treat a person who lives in stark contradiction of Him as though he was really one of His own. Nor, indeed, will He despise and turn away from a person who is conscientiously living in the awareness of His own Person, seeking to please Him and to do His will – even if he has no formal identity with the Lord.

In the text before us, Peter is particularly referring to the Jew/Gentile distinction that was maintained under the Law, or the first covenant. Now He perceives, or comprehends, that being a Jew or a Gentile does not alter the fundamental way in which God views men. The criterion by which the Lord favorably evaluates men is not determined by anything that can be traced back to Adam. Such things do rank high with professed Christian leaders and institutions – but not with God! It is the upward propensity of an honest and good heart that ranks high with the Lord. Such a person has been receptive to the truth God has vouchsafed to men. In the case of Cornelius, he had taken advantage of the introductory knowledge that was made known under the Old Covenant. He had extended himself beyond the perimeter of the Gentiles, who “know not God,” and had availed himself of what has been given to Abraham’s children. We do not know precisely how this took place, but we do know that it was duly noted in the heavenly chambers. The prayers and almsgiving of Cornelius were not the result of anything learned from the Gentile world. No worldly philosopher had taught him such things. They were rather appropriated from someone who was within the covenant God had made with Abraham, and God was now honoring Cornelius’ devotion.

If God were a respecter of persons, as used in our text, He would have rejected Cornelius upon the basis of his natural lineage. In such a case, he, by nature, was a stranger from the covenant. That is, he was not within the category of people with whom God had made a covenant.

However, traits were found in Cornelius that were godly, and were expected to be found in all Israelites. It is God’s nature to recognize and honor such traits, even when they are found in a person who is technically unqualified to have them. Paul referred to this kind of condition when correcting some Jewish believers in Rome. He reasoned in this manner: “So if a man who is uncircumcised keeps the requirements of the Law, will not his uncircumcision be credited to him as [equivalent to] circumcision? Then those who are physically uncircumcised but keep the Law will condemn you who, although you have the code in writing and have circumcision, break the Law. For he is not a [real] Jew who is only one outwardly and publicly, nor is [true] circumcision something external and physical. But he is a Jew who is one inwardly, and [true] circumcision is of the heart, a spiritual and not a literal [matter]. His praise is not from men but from God” AMPLIFIED (Rom 2:26-29).

That is a classic example of reasoning upon the reality that God is “no respecter of persons.” Of course, the same logic applies to a situation in which a person is found who is outwardly identified with the covenant and wears the name of the Lord. If such a person is living as the those who do not know God, then, in the eyes of the Lord, their profession is negated, and they fall into the category of people against whom God has aligned Himself. This was demonstrated in Israel over and over. When they lived as their heathen, God abhorred them, conducting Himself toward them as if they were, in fact, Gentiles. The consistency of this Divine reaction is remarkable (Deut 32:19-20; 1 Kgs 11:25; Psa 78:59; 106:40; Lam 2:7).

This is what it means for God to be “no respecter of persons.” He will not treat a person who lives in stark contradiction of Him as though he was really one of His own. Nor, indeed, will He despise and turn away from a person who is conscientiously living in the awareness of His own Person, seeking to please Him and to do His will – even if he has no formal identity with the Lord.

The perception of this aspect of the Divine nature significantly alters the manner in which we view people. It also frees men from inhibiting traditions. Peter will now elaborate on this fact.

THOSE WHO ARE ACCEPTED WITH GOD

“ 35 But in every nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with Him.”

The global manner in which Peter now speaks contradicts a modern sectarian view, as well as the ancient Jewish view. It simply is not possible for a person to truthfully fear God, and yet be disdained by Him. Nor, indeed, is it possible for a person to not fear the Lord, and still be respected by Him because of some recognized formal identity with a professing church. God always acts in perfect alignment with His nature. There is no such thing as a person in a moral state that displeases the Lord, being an individual with whom God is pleased.

HE THAT FEARS HIM AND WORKS RIGHTEOUSNESS

“But in every nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness . . .” Other versions read, “fears Him and does what is right,” NASB “has a fear of Him and does righteousness,” CSB “feareth Him and worketh justice,” DOUAY “respects God and does what is right,” GWN “fears Him and acts uprightly,” NAB “worship Him and does good deeds,” LIVING “worships Him and does what is right,” IE “fear Him and live good lives,” WEYMOUTH “reveres God and practices doing right,” WILLIAMS and “venerates and has a reverential fear for God, treating Him with worshipful obedience and living uprightly.” AMPLIFIED

Fears Him

This is an expression that has nearly become extinct in modern Christendom. It is not heard very often, nor does it appear to be a key factor that shapes the way men are viewed.

A person who does not fear God is one who is not afraid to contradict Him, or do things that are clearly not accepted by the Lord. The Amalekites were an example of such a people. When Israel was en route to Canaan, they attacked the feeble among the people, and those who lagged behind because they were faint and weary. God took note of their conduct, and blotted out their remembrance under heaven, removing their identity. Therefore it is written, “Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt; How he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary; and he feared not God. Therefore it shall be, when the LORD thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it” (Deut 25:17-19). And how is it that Amalek dared to attack the people of God? It was because he had no fear of God!

When Judah drifted from the Lord, He said the same thing of them –

Even though a life that is lived in ignorance is not commendable, to say the least, when a person is living up to the measure of knowledge they do have, they are not despised by God.

that they did not fear God. “And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away, and given her a bill of divorce; yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also” (Jer 3:8). He is no respecter of persons!

Also, how is it that a person who claims to be a Christian lives in a manner that has actually been condemned by God, flirting with the world, even making friends of it, and living as though they had been freed to follow the dictates of the flesh? Why do professing Christians live in such a manner? It is because they do not fear God. Men may concoct various religious dogmas to make such people feel comfortable in their condition, telling them they cannot do anything to make God love them any less, or that it is not possible for them to be rejected by God. However, if that was true, God would be a respecter of persons!

Now, Peter refers to people, who DO fear God. They exercise themselves to avoid doing things they understand displease the Lord, and engage in activities they have been told please the Lord. For example, the Hebrew midwives refused to obey the edict of Pharaoh to kill the male Hebrew babies, because they “feared God” (Ex 1:17) – and God honored them for it, giving them families of their own (Ex 1:21). Nehemiah entrusted responsibilities to his brother Hanani because he “feared God above many” (Neh 7:2).

Peter is now standing before a man who had shaped his life around his understanding of God. Luke said he was “a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house” (Acts 10:2). Some of my own contemporaries would have viewed Cornelius as someone that was “sincerely wrong.” I know for a fact that some view Apollo as such a person prior to his baptism into Christ. Even though a life that is lived in ignorance is not commendable, to say the least, when a person is living up to the measure of knowledge they do have, they are not despised by God. Neither, indeed, should they be despised by men. Cornelius is a man with imperfect knowledge in matters pertaining to God. Yet, as evidenced in his prayers, he was not content with that condition. Therefore, God will enlarge his understanding, and direct him to the way that leads unto life.

The same may be noted of Peter himself. His understanding concerning the Gentiles had not been perfect, yet his heart had been purified by faith, and he was living in strict accord with what he did know. The Lord therefore is bringing him into a fuller understanding of Himself. Further, because both Peter and Cornelius have been living in accord with what they did know, they will have no difficulty embracing new and truthful insights given to them.

I am becoming increasingly aware of the need for believers to bring this sort of thinking into their assessment of professing Christians. I am not speaking of those who are dogmatic and insolent in their error, but of those whose knowledge is imperfect – yet who do exhibit the fear of the Lord. We must not speak of them as being “unclean” before God, for that contradicts the things that are being revealed in this text.

A brief reflection upon “the fear of the Lord” will confirm why we ought to think in this manner. While such a “fear” is not an end of itself, it is pointed in the right direction, and is to be so regarded. It is never wrong to fear the Lord.

- “The fear of the LORD is clean, enduring for ever . . .” (Psa 19:9).
- “The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom . . .” (Psa 111:10).
- “The fear of the LORD is to hate evil . . .” (Prov 8:13).
- “The fear of the LORD is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death” (Prov 14:27).
- “The fear of the LORD is the instruction of wisdom . . .” (Prov 15:33).

Works Righteousness

However, this does emphasize that God is not repulsed by such a person. That is, grace will be extended to an individual like this, rather than wrath. This is so because such people have extended themselves to shape their lives around what they do know about the Lord – even though that knowledge may be fragmentary. That person has made the most that he could out of what was relatively a little, and therefore the Lord will give them more.

From one perspective, it is true that “there is none righteous, no not one” (Rom 3:10), and “none that doth good, no, not one” (Rom 3:12). However, that is man’s state by nature, without due regard for the living God. In this text, “righteousness” is not speaking of a state through which Divine approval is realized. Rather, this is a condition in which a person does what is morally and religiously correct because they have a fear of God – like praying always, and giving alms to the needy among those who have been identified with God.

Such conduct is not enough of itself, but it catches the eye of God, and it ought to catch ours as well. Here, we are not speaking of notorious sinners who occasionally do something that is morally right – like a mobster giving to the poor, or a vile entertainer contributing to a worthy cause. In this text working righteousness is knit together with fearing God. Such a person does not do what is right to get the attention of men, or because of a kind of carnal sympathy. Rather, their works are driven by the fear of the God of heaven.

IS ACCEPTED WITH HIM

“ . . . is accepted with Him.” Other versions read, “is welcome to Him,” NASB “pleasing to Him,” BBE “welcomed before Him,” NET and “acceptable to Him and 23sure of being received and welcomed [by Him].” AMPLIFIED

As used here, the word “acceptable” means favorable, appropriate, and even pleasing. It is not the ultimate sense of acceptance – as “accepted in the Beloved” (Eph 1:6). This is not acceptance in the sense of being “received” by Christ “to the glory of God” (Rom 15:7).

However, this does emphasize that God is not repulsed by such a person. That is, grace will be extended to an individual like this, rather than wrath. This is so because such people have extended themselves to shape their lives around what they do know about the Lord – even though that knowledge may be fragmentary. That person has made the most that he could out of what was relatively a little, and therefore the Lord will give them more. This kind of diligence is what prompted Jesus to say “He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much” (Luke 16:10). While men are not given eternal life on this basis, they are afforded opportunities and privileges that will lead them to the obtaining of the ultimate blessing.

This will be confirmed in God's response to Cornelius. It will make more clear what it meant by Divine acceptance.

This kind of acceptance is the opposite of the experience of Cain, of whom it is written, "But unto Cain and to his offering He had not respect" (Gen 4:5). It is antithetical to the rejection and indignation to which Sodom and Gomorrah were subjected because "their sin was very grievous" (Gen 18:20). It is a Divine reaction that is the inverse of God's reaction to the people in "a plain in the land of Shinar," when they conspired to build a city and a tower (Gen 11:1-6).

It is the same kind of acceptance that is mentioned in the second chapter of Romans (to which I previously made reference). The acceptance of such a person is the prelude to additional revelation and direction. It suggests that the grace of God is generally preceded by some kind of conscious activity toward God – whether it is wise men following a star, or a centurion building the Jews a synagogue. Such activities are certainly not sufficient to justify a person before God. However, they will be honored by the extension of the hand of the Lord. In this case, Cornelius will be sent words through which he might be saved.

This kind of acceptance also parallels what Jesus referred to as being worthy. "And when ye come into an house, salute it. And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you" (Mat 10:12-13). Let it be clear that this is not a worthiness like that which is identified with being in Christ Jesus: i.e. "Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy" (Rev 3:4). That is a worthiness that is associated with remaining in the state of purity that is brought about by being justified from all things. However, there is a worthiness that has to do with one's state prior to being justified. It has to do with a proper and God-honoring response to what has been made known. When Jesus send out the twelve, a house that was "worthy" was one that received them in a hospitable manner, and was therefore granted the blessing of peace.

An understanding of this Divine manner will assist us in responding more honorably to people who do not have an extensive grasp of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Even though this is their condition, yet they are not hostile to the truth, and are eager to hear and take hold of more. It is not right to evaluate people solely upon the basis of their external associations. That would be like Peter continuing to hold Cornelius aloof from himself simply because he was a Gentile. However, Cornelius was not like other Gentiles. He was conducting his life in keeping with what had been revealed under the Old Covenant, living up to the measure of knowledge he had received. While that was not sufficient to justify him from sin, it was enough to prompt the God of heaven to provide him with a more thorough revelation of Himself.

In a sectarian surrounding, it is, at the very best, difficult to maintain a proper attitude about people like Cornelius. Some are simply confounded that there are actually people who do not see what they profess to see, yet are living in a manner that is obviously superior to their own. So far as the sectarian mindset is concerned, such people are lost, and that is pretty much the end of the matter. However, for the person who, like Peter, perceives that God is no respecter of persons, such a person is seen as one who "is not far from the kingdom of God" (Mk 12:34). Such people will respond to further light.

It seems to me that it is on the part of wisdom to heartily embrace this view of things, and to promote it among those who wear the name of Jesus. It might be viewed as holy leniency. This is more than a theological position – it is something that is lived out in our text, reflecting both the nature of God and those who are in Christ Jesus.

PREACHING PEACE BY JESUS CHRIST

“ 36a The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ . . . ”

The manner in which Peter proceeds to speak reflects several things.

- A grasp of what God has done in Christ Jesus.
- An understanding of the heart of the message of the Gospel.
- A discernment of the role of Jesus in the salvation of God.
- A comprehension of the present reign of Jesus.
- A perception of the marvelous extent of the Gospel.
- What God intends to be preached in the name of Jesus.

As we proceed through the words of Peter, it will become very apparent that they differ significantly from much of the preaching of our day. He will not present a “plan of salvation.” He will not lead them in a prayer. There will be no evidence of an effort to recruit people to an organization. However, Peter will deliver a message through which the Holy Spirit can work on the hearts of the hearers. He will give them something to believe that is of eternal consequence.

SENT UNTO THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL

The redemptive value of Jesus is found in these three facts: His death, burial, and resurrection. It is in these deeds that sin was removed, reconciliation was made, and a just basis provided for men to be “made righteous”

“The word which God sent unto the children of Israel . . .” Other versions read, “sent to the sons of Israel,” NASB “send to the people of Israel,” NIV “sent to Israel,” RSV “sent to the Israelites,” NAB “descendants of Israel,” WEYMOUTH and “sons [and daughters] of Israel.” ALT

Here, the Gospel is described as “the word” that was sent by God “to the children of Israel.” The “word” refers to a message, or what was contained in what Peter said. It is the substance of what is said, or what is said boiled down to its essence. “The word” refers to WHAT is being said, not the way in which it is being said. This is something that cannot be taught by men, because it has to do with discernment and understanding. When God sends a word, He is delivering a message that is, when it is believed, calculated to produce a certain effect. The Psalmist wrote of this kind of word: “He sent His word , and healed them, and delivered them from their destructions” (Psa 107:20). He spoke similarly with he referred to God’s management of nature: “He sendeth forth His commandment upon earth: his word runneth very swiftly” (Psa 147:15). In this same Psalm the sending forth of God’s word is described in these words: “He showeth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and his judgments unto Israel” (Psa 147:19). That is, God revealed or made known His mind in a matter – particular regarding morality and a properly ordered life.

When God sends a word, it is decidedly more than a mere announcement, or passing along a piece of information. It always has to do with something He Himself is doing or has done. That word, or message is intended to illuminate Divine workings, and is therefore attended by power that is designed to bring the hearer into harmony with what the Lord is doing.

In this text, “the word” is the Gospel itself – the announcement, or proclamation of the accomplishments of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of their impact upon the condition created by sin. These accomplishments revolve around, and are resident in, the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Further, His resurrection was a kind of process that commenced with Him returning from the realm of the dead, involving His ascension into heaven, and enthronement at the right hand of God. The redemptive value of Jesus is found in these three facts: His death, burial, and resurrection. It is in these deeds that sin was removed, reconciliation was made, and a just basis provided for men to be “made righteous” (Rom 5:19).

For example, Jesus providing a pattern for living in this world is true, but it is not the Gospel! That is not the word that God sent! The word that God sent pertained to the remedy for unacceptable living, not an outline of how life ought to be lived.

Christ's prodigious ministry prior to His death was necessary, but it did not take away sin or justify sinners. It was preparatory, not redemptive in nature. The blood He may have shed prior to the cross, whether in Gethsemane or during the floggings He endured, did not take away sin. It was "the blood of His cross," on which He was cursed by God, that wrought redemption (Col 1:20; Gal 3:13). That is precisely why Paul preached "Christ crucified." No person of understanding eliminates the birth and ministry of Jesus in preaching the truth. However, they were the "beginning of the Gospel," and not the Gospel itself (Mk 1:1). For example, Jesus providing a pattern for living in this world is true, but it is not the Gospel! That is not the word that God sent! The word that God sent pertained to the remedy for unacceptable living, not an outline of how life ought to be lived. As gentle as I can, I will say that the perception of this fact would render many professing ministries immediately obsolete.

Unto the Children of Israel

The immediate target of the Gospel was, indeed, "the Jew first" (Rom 1:16) – not the Jew only, but "the Jew first." These are the people who were cultured to receive the Messiah. They are the ones who were given the promise of a Savior. Here are three of those promises.

- "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon His shoulder: and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace" (Isa 9:6).

- "Thus saith the LORD, the Redeemer of Israel, and His Holy One, to him whom man despiseth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a servant of rulers, Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the LORD that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose thee" (Isa 49:7).

- "In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS" (Jer 23:6).

When Peter preached to the Jews, he made quite clear that the resurrected Jesus was first sent to them. "Unto you first God, having raised up His Son Jesus, sent Him to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities" (Acts 3:26). Paul and Barnabas also preached the same, affirming that it was essential that the Gospel first be preached to the Jews, because they were the ones who had received "the promises" (Rom 9:). "Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles" (Acts 13:46). Because of the investment made in Israel, both blessing and cursing are "to the Jew first," for they had unspeakable advantages – "much every way" (Rom 3:1-2). "Tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile; but glory, honour, and peace, to every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile" (Rom 2:9-10).

A Technical Point

Although the specific promise of a Savior and of salvation was given to the Jews, God revealed that it would extend to the Gentiles as well (Psa 72:17; Isa 11:10; 42:1,6; 45:22; 49:6,22; 52:10; 54:3; ; 60:3; Mal 1:11). However, as expounded by Paul, the door of salvation would not be opened unto them until the Jews had rejected the Messiah.

- "Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fulness?" (Rom 11:12).

• “For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?” (Rom 11:15).

Through this means, God declared He would provoke the Jews to jealousy, so that they would desire to embrace the Savior they once rejected. “I say then, Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid: but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy” (Rom 11:11). In fact, Paul accounted for his ministry among the Gentiles, affirming that it was designed to provoke the Jews to this jealousy. “For I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office: if by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save some of them” (Rom 11:13-14). Further, this provocation was even revealed to Moses. “They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God; they have provoked me to anger with their vanities: and I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation” (Deut 32:21).

In proceeding in this remarkable manner, several things were, and would be, accomplished.

- God would keep the promise made to Abraham concerning the coming of the Savior.

- God would prove Himself to be faithful in keeping His word.

- God would confirm that He was righteous, in punishing Israel for the sin of rejecting their Savior.

- The door would be justly opened for the Gentiles to hear the Gospel, thus confirming that all the world would be blessed.

- A means would be put in place to recover the Israelites, thus enabling God to keep His word, while maintaining His righteous character.

- Thus, in all cases, whether concerning Jew or Gentile, God would be both just and the Justifier of the one believing in Jesus (Rom 3:26).

Now, to a significant measure, all of this has come together in the heart and mind of Peter. He knows that the word of salvation was sent to Israel, but it was not confined to them, nor was it ever intended to be. Thus the inscrutable wisdom of God is demonstrated in the provision of salvation itself, as well as its proclamation and implementation.

PREACHING PEACE

“ . . . preaching peace . . .” Other versions read, “telling the good news of peace,” NIV “preaching good news of peace,” RSV “preaching good tidings of peace,” ASV “announcing shalom,” CJB “proclaiming the good news of peace,” CSB “brought them the good news of peace,” GWN “announcing to them peace and rest,” MRD “the message . . . there is peace with God,” NLT “there is peace with God,” LIVING “peace has come,” IE “preached the gospel of peace,” MONTGOMERY and “announcing the good news (Gospel) of peace.” AMPLIFIED

There is a vast difference between preaching peace and offering peace! An offer of amnesty is not at all the same as a declaration of amnesty, or pardon. Peace between God and man has actually been accomplished. It is not something that is simply a potentiality, but something that is in place. The experience of that peace, however, is conditioned upon the persuasion that it already exists.

Following the second world war, it was reported that a cluster of Japanese soldiers were found on an island. They were not aware that the war was over, and thus were set to resist and fight to the death, any of the forces that had been aligned against them. It took a considerable effort to convince them that there had not only been a declaration of the end of the war, but that an amnesty was in place. They could return to their homes without being sent to prison. It was not until twenty-nine years later that their leader was convinced of what had really taken place.

A Sorrowful Experience

Many a poor soul is struggling under the weight and guilt of sin because they do not know that peace has already been made. It is to such souls that peace is “preached,” or announced. It is not held forth as a possibility, or even a probability, but something that is to be received. Strictly speaking, men do not make their peace with God, as some are prone to say.

It is for this reason that the Gospel is referred to as “the gospel of peace” (Rom 10:15; Eph 6:15). It is news – good news! It is not something forged by men, or negotiated with them. That is why it can be preached, announced, or reported.

BY JESUS CHRIST

“ . . . by Jesus Christ . . . ” Other versions read, “through Jesus Christ,” NKJV “through Yeshua the Messiah,” CJB “brought by Jesus Christ,” NJB “through Jesus, the Messiah,” LIVING and “when He sent Jesus Christ.” CEV

AMNESTY WITHOUT KNOWLEDGE

In 1944, Lt. Hiroo Onoda was sent by the Japanese army to the remote Philippine island of Lubang. His mission was to conduct guerrilla warfare during World War II. Unfortunately, he was never officially told the war had ended; so for 29 years, Onoda continued to live in the jungle, ready for when his country would again need his services and information. Eating coconuts and bananas and deftly evading searching parties he believed were enemy scouts, Onoda hid in the jungle until he finally emerged from the dark recesses of the island on March 19, 1972 . . . During the 30 years that Onoda had remain hidden on Lubang island, he and his men had killed at least 30 Filipinos and had wounded approximately 100 others. After formally surrendering to Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, Marcos pardoned Onoda for his crimes while in hiding. When Onoda reached Japan, he was hailed a hero. Life in Japan was much different than when he had left it in 1944. Onoda bought a ranch and moved to Brazil. In May 1996, he returned to the Philippines to see once again the island on which he had hidden for 30 years.

20 th Century History

Jesus is the One who has actually forged this peace, and this also is why it can be preached. It is written that Jesus has “made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven” (Col 1:20). That has to do with God and man. It is also written that He has “abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace” (Eph 2:15). That has to do with men – Jew and Gentile.

There is no reason for men to remain at enmity with God – peace has been made. There is also no reason for those who wear the name of the Lord to be at variance with one another – peace has been made between Jew and Gentile.

The preaching of peace is the very thing that makes the feet of the herald beautiful. This why it is written, “And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace , and bring glad tidings of good things!” (Rom 10:15). There is a whole host of difficulties that are resolved when the heart is persuaded of the peace to which our text refers.

You cannot exploit this message! It is simply impossible to do so. This is a message that proclaims the achievement of Another. The accomplishment itself involved only one Man – the Man Christ Jesus. There was absolutely nothing about the accomplishment of the peace that involved any member of Adam's race – not so much as a single person.

It ought to be noted that there is no possible way to capitalize on this peace, or employ it for personal gain. Men can establish a business – even a religious business – on problem resolution. But they cannot establish one on causing peace to be realized. There are professional religious careers that allow men to accumulate wealth, make a name for themselves, and establish an ongoing organization. But no such things can be achieved by publishing or proclaiming peace! You cannot exploit this message! It is simply impossible to do so. This is a message that proclaims the achievement of Another. The accomplishment itself involved only one Man – the Man Christ Jesus. There was absolutely nothing about the accomplishment of the peace that involved any member of Adam's race – not so much as a single person.

This is not a peace that was started by Jesus and finished by men. It is not a partial peace that is mostly completed, but requires some additional work to finalize it. Nothing can be added to it to make it more effective. Its effectiveness is realized in its acceptance – an acceptance that is the peculiar prerogative of faith, and faith alone. Just as the faith of the woman with the issue of blood made her “whole” (Mk 5:34), so faith brings the realization of peace. Just as Jesus told the sinful woman who anointed His feet, “Thy faith hath saved thee” (Lk 7:50), so faith brings the experience of the peace Jesus made to the one who believes.

THE ESSENTIALITY OF PREACHING PEACE

It is essential that this peace – the peace that Jesus has made – be preached! The present state of Christendom is deplorable in this matter. Men are preaching a variety of other messages that have caused a cloud of confusion and obscurity to cover the people at large. Men are preaching self-improvement, better health, financial gain, and the way to be successful and happy in this world. Some are preaching how we ought to worship God, while others are laying before the people purported secrets to domestic happiness and marital stability. Some are propagating methodologies that can be used to start a church, or grow a church, or make one popular. Some have clinics on how to win souls, or how to handle your finances and plan for the future. All of this is being done in the name of the Lord, who is depicted as desirous that people have a happy experience while they are in this world. They can dream big things, and expect God to help them carry them out.

All of these approaches conveniently ignore the presence and effects of sin, as well as the provision God has made for sinners. Jesus came to “save sinners,” not business men. He came to “save sinners,” not marriages. It is written that He came to “save sinners” (1 Tim 1:15), not help people realize their ambitions in this world. God sent Jesus into the world to be the “propitiation for our sins,” or merciful covering, for our sin (1 John 4:10), not address the social and domestic ills of humanity.

Peace with God – that is the issue! It is so because God has appointed that every man will be judged, standing before the judgment seat of Christ, who will execute God's judgment. At that time, the preeminent issue will be whether or not men are experiencing peace with God. Are they drawn to Him, or are they repulsed by Him? When they see the glorified Christ and the Father, will they cry out to the mountains to hide them (Rev 6:16), or will they shout with joy, “Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the LORD; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation” (Isa 25:9).

It is the awareness of this ultimate confrontation that makes the publishing of peace such a glad sound to its hearers, and the feet of those who declare it to be beautiful. There are souls like Cornelius who are ready to hear such a word, and will gladly receive it.

HE IS LORD OF ALL

“ 36b (He is Lord of all) . . .” Other versions read, “who is Lord of all,” NIV “who is Lord of everything,” CJB “He is Lord of all things,” DARBY “is everyone’s Lord,” GWN “who is Lord of all creation,” LIVING “who is Lord of all men,” IE “He is the Lord of us all,” PHILLIPS “He being Lord of all,” EMTV and “Jesus Anointed, this One IS of all Master.” INTERLINEAR

He is “Lord of all” because the Savior of men must be such an One. Whatever is opposed to salvation must be controlled by Him, otherwise salvation cannot be sure. He must be able to deliver people from the power of darkness, and bring them to God, and keep them from falling. He must be, and He IS, “Lord of all.”

This is an explanation of the Jesus of whom Peter is speaking. Jesus said that other “Christ’s” would be proclaimed (Matt 24:23). He also said that “false Christs” would arise (Mk 13:22). Paul also declared that some were preaching “another Jesus” (2 Cor 11:4). Therefore, Peter defines the specific Jesus to whom he is referring. It is the One who is “Lord of all.” It is not one who will be Lord of all, but who IS Lord of all. In both the Greek and the English, the statement is very precise. Jesus “IS” (evstin) “the One” (ou-to,j) who is Lord, or Sovereign, “over all.” The word “all” is a very comprehensive one, being translated from the Greek word pa,ntwn . The word means every kind and in all ways. GINGRICH This includes all personalities and all impersonal things. It includes all men – both Jew and Gentiles, and all minds of men from princes to paupers. It includes celestial personalities, like angels, principalities, powers, and authorities. All of nature is held together by Him. Times and seasons are in His power. Circumstances are controlled by Him. Even the devil and his hosts are subject to Jesus Christ.

He is “Lord of all” because the Savior of men must be such an One. Whatever is opposed to salvation must be controlled by Him, otherwise salvation cannot be sure. He must be able to deliver people from the power of darkness, and bring them to God, and keep them from falling. He must be, and He IS , “ Lord of all.”

The Living Bible reads that Jesus is “Lord of all creation.” If this is seen as being over everything and everyone who is created, then the meaning is true.

The idea here is that Jesus could not have made peace if He was not, in fact, “over all.” If He was to bruise the head of the serpent, thus destroying him (Gen 3:15; Heb 2:14), and spoil principalities and powers, making a public display of them (Col 2:15), then He must be effectively and unquestionably “over them.” If He is to bring us to glory, He must be “over all.”

THAT WORD WAS PUBLISHED

“ 37 That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judaea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached . . .”

THAT WORD

“That word, I say . . .” Other versions read, “the thing which took place,” NASB “what has happened,” NIV “the message,” NRSV “the testimony,” DARBY “that saying,” ASV “the events,” CSB “the words which came,” GENEVA and “the same message.” AMPLIFIED

And what was “that word?” It is the word “which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ” (verse 36). “That word” is the message that is made known through the preaching of the Gospel.

YE KNOW

“ . . . ye know . . .” Other versions read, “you yourselves know,” NASB “you yourselves have knowledge of,” BBE “ye also know,” MRD “you surely know,” CEV and “you have perceived.” INTERLINEAR

Here, the word “know” means to be made aware of. It does not mean what was known was comprehended – only that the people to Peter was speaking were aware that a new message had been circulating among the people. That is, the preaching and teaching of Jesus Christ had become so prominent that it could not be hid. Even though the message had been opposed, and believers scattered try means of an aggressive persecution, it was common knowledge that the preaching of Jesus was taking place throughout the area.

In our time, there is another kind of preaching that has become prominent. The message that is generally being delivered is not embodied in the person of Jesus. It has rather become fashionable to deliver a kind of self-help message that accents what a person can do and be within the framework of this world. The accomplishments of Jesus, His present ministry, and the objective of God’s great salvation remain relatively unknown.

PUBLISHED

“ . . . which was published throughout all Judaea, and began from Galilee . . .” Other versions read, “proclaimed,” NKJV “the message spread,” NRSV “was made public,” BBE “was spread,” DARBY and “the words . . . which came.” GENEVA

The word “published” means “what began to be . . . what came to pass, or happened . . . what appeared in history, or came on the stage.” THAYER The idea is that the things that came into being through Jesus Christ were being proclaimed in the message of the Gospel. That included what Jesus did during His ministry, what He did in His death and resurrection, and what He is currently doing in heaven. For example:

- In His ministry he went about doing good, and healing all who were oppressed of the devil.
- In His death He took away the sins of the world, laying down His life as a ransom.
- In His resurrection He triumphed over death.
- In His present ministry, He is giving repentance and remission of sins.

This was not a message of what could be or should be, but of what had been accomplished. It was not a word that centered in what men were obligated to do, but in what Jesus had already done.

This was not a message of what could be or should be, but of what had been accomplished. It was not a word that centered in what men were obligated to do, but in what Jesus had already done.

The declaration of this word has already been affirmed several times in this book.

- “And as they spake unto the people, the priests, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees, came upon them, being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead ” (Acts 4:1-2).
- “Then came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people ” (Acts 5:25).
- “And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ ” (Acts 5:42).
- “Therefore they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word ” (Acts 8:4).
- “Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them” (Acts 8:5).

- “But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women” (Acts 8:12).
- “And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans” (Acts 8:25).
- “Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus” (Acts 8:35).
- “But Philip was found at Azotus: and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Caesarea” (Acts 8:40). Caesarea is the city in which Cornelius was located.
- “And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God” (Acts 9:20).
- “But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus” (Acts 9:27).

Throughout All Judaea

Judaea was the southern part of Canaan, in which Jerusalem was located. In addition to the personal ministry of Jesus (Matt 19:1; Mk 10:1; Lk 7:17), that area had been filled with the message of Christ (8:1,4; 9:31). This had been done as Jesus said: “But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth” (Acts 1:8).

Beginning from Galilee

Galilee was the northern part of Canaan, and was not far from Caesarea, which was in northern Samaria. This is where Jesus began His preaching, declaring the kingdom of God (Matt 1:14). His fame had spread throughout that region, so that all of the people were made aware of Him (Mk 1:28). He had preached throughout the synagogues of that region (Mk 1:39). Matthew says that Christ’s ministry in Galilee and the surrounding regions fulfilled the word of Isaiah the prophet, “The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles; The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up” (Mat 4:15-16).

These are things Peter says his audience knew – even though he had not inquired concerning their knowledge of these things. However, he did know that the life of Jesus and the reports of the Gospel were very prominent, and that no one was totally ignorant of them. Peter had told the Jews on the day of Pentecost the same thing concerning the ministry of Jesus. “Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know” (Acts 2:22).

We are not told how or why the household of Cornelius could have known of the work and message of Christ, yet not acted upon it. Or, perhaps, in the prayers of Cornelius he was, in fact, acting upon the limited knowledge he had. The fact is that the phenomenon of knowing something about the Lord, yet not acting upon it, is not a strange circumstance.

- The people to whom Peter preached on the day of Pentecost knew about the ministry and death of Jesus, yet had not acted upon that knowledge (Acts 2:22).
- The number of believers in Jerusalem grew exponentially AFTER Jesus had returned to heaven – even though He had ministered extensively in that area, even on a daily basis (Lk 22:53; John 2:13-16; 5:1-14; 7:14; 8:2,20; 10:22-23; 12:20).
- The people in Samaria had been exposed to both the ministry of Jesus and the testimony of the woman to whom He ministered at Jacob's well. Yet, the city had not reacted to that knowledge as they did when Philip preached to them (John 4:28-30,39-42).

The knowledge of Christ does not come from mere exposure to the Gospel – although that exposure is essential. However, until there is a quickening within the individual, no association is made between Jesus Christ and the condition of the person. Information about Him is only novel, perhaps even interesting, but there is no power in it until God gives “the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ” (2 Cor 4:6). He who knows the hearts of men does this at the appropriate time, calling the individual into the fellowship of His dear Son (1 Cor 1:9).

In his hymn “How Can It Be,” Charles Wesley expressed this experience in the fourth of six verses.

Long my imprisoned spirit lay,
Fast bound in sin and nature's night;
Thine eye diffused a quickening ray—
I woke, the dungeon flamed with light;
My chains fell off, my heart was free,
I rose, went forth, and followed Thee.
My chains fell off, my heart was free,
I rose, went forth, and followed Thee.

This is precisely the experience Paul declares in Second Corinthians 4:6, and it is also the one that will take place in the house of Cornelius.

AFTER THE BAPTISM OF JOHN

“ . . . after the baptism which John preached . . .” Other versions read, “after the baptism John proclaimed,” NASB “after the baptism that John announced,” NRSV and “after the baptism of which John was the preacher.” BBE

The “baptism of John” was associated with preparing people for the Messiah. The angel Gabriel told Zecharias, who was to beget John, that his ministry was “to make ready a people prepared for the Lord” (Lk 1:17). Later Zecharias prophesied that John was to “prepare His ways” (Lk 1:76). John says it was to “make straight the way of the Lord” (John 1:23). Isaiah prophesied of the ministry of John the Baptist in these words: “The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the LORD, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain” (Isa 40:4). Matthew says that John the Baptist fulfilled that word of Isaiah and he came preaching, “Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand” (Matt 3:1-3).

John's baptism is referred to as “the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins” – a baptism that John “preached” (Mk 1:4; Lk 3:3). Paul reminded the Jews that “John had first preached before his coming the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel” (Acts 13:24). Paul later added that John had “verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus” (Acts 19:4).

The preparation for Christ, therefore, consisted of a public renunciation of sin. Being baptized with the baptism of John confirmed this renunciation, and was in order to the remission of sins that would be realized in Christ Jesus. John refused to baptize those who did not give evidence of repentance, choosing rather to cling to their old manners (Matt 3:7-8). That baptism also prepared them to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, whom, John said, would come after Him, yet was preferred before him (John 1:15,27,30).

We are living in a time when repentance is rarely proclaimed by those who represent Christ. Instead, sinners are being offered counseling and other man made remedies to address the matter of sin. They are being told to come to Jesus with all of their sins, as though they were not required to abandon them in order that they might embrace Jesus. It is to be acknowledged that the triumph over sin cannot be realized independently of being joined to the Lord. However, the determination to forsake sin must be made before a person can, in fact, come to Christ. People are not to come to Jesus to gain the victory over bad habits. Rather, they are to come to appropriate the remission sins, and to obtain eternal life. Neither of those benefits have any genuine appeal to the person who has not renounced sin.

Peter also preached the necessity of renouncing sin prior to receiving the forgiveness of sins. “Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord” (Acts 3:19). It appears to me that a better job can be done of making this clear to the people. If, when men are urged to come to Jesus, they are not also told of the necessity of repentance and being converted, they will be more liable to fall. The reason is that such people, from the very beginning, have not been impressed with the gravity of sin. Consequently, they have also been put into a position where they cannot see the magnitude of salvation.

The baptism of John was a spiritual line of demarcation – taking place at a transitional point in time. Jesus said of the ministry of John (for that is all that we know of him), “The law and the prophets were until John : since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it” (Luke 16:16). The ministry of John the Baptist stood between the covenants. It was a time of preparation for the Messiah, when the hills of human tradition were brought down, and the valleys of human obtuseness were raised. Therefore Isaiah said of ministry of John, who would prepare the way of the Lord, “Let every valley be lifted up, And every mountain and hill be made low; And let the rough ground become a plain, And the rugged terrain a broad valley” NASB (Isa 40:4).

Men became acutely conscious of the Lord and His working, and there was a sense that something great was on the horizon: “ And as the people were in expectation, and all men mused in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ, or not” (Luke 3:15). For the first time in history, the kingdom of God was “preached,” and it whetted the appetite of the people. However imperfect the men’s understanding of God’s kingdom may have been, their attention had been turned toward it. They now saw it as something to be possessed. The expectation of the people was elevated, sin was seen as abhorrent, and the remission of sins as desirable. It was a time of significant change, indeed! All of this also confirmed the nature of salvation.

GOD ANOINTED JESUS WITH THE HOLY SPIRIT AND POWER

“ 38a How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power . . .”

Here Peter is continuing to comment on what his audience knew – the reports to which they had been subjected. Keep in mind that there had been no inspired record or report of a miracle-working prophet for centuries.

ANOINTED

“How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth . . .” Other versions read, “God gave,” BBE “God consecrated,” WILLIAMS “anointed and consecrated,” AMPLIFIED and “God poured out on him.” GNB

In anointing Jesus, God set Him apart to do His works. This was not something that was required for Him when He was in heaven! When He was “the Word,” and was “with God and was God” (John 1:1), there was no need to anoint Him.

Technically, the word “anoint” means “to touch with the hand, to besmear,” THAYER “to touch on the surface: to rub or anoint with scented unguents,” LIDDELL-SCOTT As used here, the word that is translated “anointed” has the following lexical meaning. “Of God, consecrating Jesus,” THAYER “appoint, assign, give a task” FRIBERG and “to assign a person to a task, with the implication of supernatural sanctions, blessing, and endowment - 'to anoint, to assign, to appoint, assignment, appointment.’” LOUW-NIDA

The point is not the act of anointing itself, but its purpose, or objective. It is a form of sanctification, or setting apart for a work specified and assigned by God Himself. Thus Aaron and his sons were “anointed” to function as priests, ministering to God Himself (Ex 28:41). The tabernacle and all of its furniture and vessels were also anointed – set apart to the work of the Lord (Ex 40:9). According to the command of the Lord, the kings of Israel were anointed, being set apart to their work (1 Sam 16:12; 1 Kgs 1:34; 19:16).

Having “made Himself of no reputation,” and come into the world, taking upon Himself “the form of a servant,” and appearing “in the likeness of men” (Phil 2:7), Jesus Himself was set apart for the work He would do. The works that He would do would be the ones He saw the Father doing (John 5:19). His works were the ones the Father had given Him “to finish” (John 5:36). Jesus said of His works, “the works that I do in My Father’s name, they bear witness of Me” (John 10:25).

In anointing Jesus, God set Him apart to do His works. This was not something that was required for Him when He was in heaven! When He was “the Word,” and was “with God and was God” (John 1:1), there was no need to anoint Him. Angels are never said to be anointed. However, when appearing in the likeness of men, even the Savior required anointing. He was being identified with a sinful race – not in His nature or character, but only in appearance and non-sinful experiences. He therefore had to be consecrated, and invested with power and ability as well. This is because, by entering into the world as a man, He was required to “empty Himself” of the prerogatives of Deity. That is, while He was in this world, He had to sheathe the sword of Divinity, and submit to receiving power and ability. That is not something required by Deity. It is, however a trait of humanity, and Jesus partook of that trait without His essential Person being changed.

This accents the degeneracy of the human race, corrupted by sin, and alienated from God. There is a sense in which even being in the likeness of men involved certain restrictions in the Son. He was hungry (Matt 4:2), thirsty (John 4:8; 19:28), and was weary (John 4:6). He was tempted (Matt 4:1; Heb 4:15), required sleep (Matt 8:24; Lk 8:23), and suffered (Heb 2:18; 1 Pet 2:11). These are the conditions that brought about the need to be anointed by God – consecrated and empowered for the work He was sent to do.

WITH THE SPIRIT

“ . . . with the Holy Ghost . . .” Other versions read, “with the Holy Spirit,” NKJV “gave the Holy Spirit to him BBE and “with the power of the Holy Spirit.” PHILLIPS

Prior to Jesus, I do not believe there is any record of someone being anointed with the Holy Spirit. In Second Corinthians Paul suggests that those in Christ are anointed with the Holy Spirit. “Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts” (2 Cor 1:22). John also says that believers have received an anointing, which is obviously the Holy Spirit. “But you have an anointing from the Holy One, and you know all things . . . But the anointing which you have received from Him abides in you, and you do not need that anyone teach you; but as the same anointing teaches you concerning all things, and is true, and is not a lie, and just as it has taught you, you will abide in Him” (1 John 2:20,27). These references, however, do not reflect the fulness of the anointing Jesus received, for God did not give the Spirit “by measure” to Him (John 3:34).

Isaiah prophesied that Jesus would be anointed by God (Isa 61:1). In the synagogue of His home town Nazareth, Jesus declared that He was the fulfillment of that prophecy (Lk 4:18,21). The early church confessed to God in their prayer that Jesus Christ had been “anointed” by Him (Acts 4:27).

Others were anointed with oil (Ex 29:7; Lev 8:12; 1 Sam 10:1; 16:3; 2 Sam 1:21; 1 Kgs 1:39; 2 Kgs 9:1). However, Jesus was anointed by God with the Holy Spirit who saturated His spirit as the anointing oil saturated Aaron’s beard and garments (Psa 133:2; Lev 8:12).

Now that Jesus had divested Himself of the privileges of Deity, He would do His work through the enabling power of the Holy Spirit – something He did not do when He was with the Father in glory. Before beginning His ministry, Jesus was “ led by the Spirit into the wilderness, being forty days tempted of the devil” (Lk 4:1-2). Jesus also told the people to whom He ministered that He “cast out demons by the Spirit of God ” NKJV (Matt 12:28). The condescension that is made known in those words is most remarkable.

A Word About the Word “Ghost”

The first meaning of the word “ghost” in the contemporary dictionary is, “the seat of life or intelligence.” The second meaning is, “a disembodied soul.” The third is “Spirit, demon.” The definition of “Holy Ghost” is “the third person of the Trinity: Holy Spirit.” MERRIAM-WEBSTER 2003 None of these definitions are identified as archaic.

While this is not the preferred way of referring to the Holy Spirit, I do wish to point out that the academic community does not object to its use, and even identifies it with the Scriptures. Any person confused about the terminology can readily become acquainted with its usage, just as they would with any other word with which they are not familiar.

Having said that, there is a reason why the word was used by linguists of old when referring to the Holy Spirit. The Greek word from which “Ghost,” or “Spirit,” is translated is pneu,mati . The lexical meaning of the word is, 1– “a movement of air (gentle) blast.” It is used in this manner in Second Thessalonians 2:8, where reference is made to the “spirit of His mouth.” It is also used in this way in Revelation 11:11, where “the breath of life from God” is said to have been given to the two slain witnesses. 2 – “the vital principle by which the body is animated.” It is used in this way in Luke 8:55 where the spirit of Jairus’ daughter returned to her and she was raised from the dead. It is used similarly in Acts 7:59, where Stephen called upon Jesus to receive his spirit. Apart from its technical definition, the word is also said to be applied to God Himself (John 4:24), to the “third person of the Trinity” (Acts 16:7), and even to demons (Matt 8:16) THAYER

The word “ghost” is more closely related to a personality than to something unseen, or impersonal power, like breath. Although I personally do not prefer this word because of the associations that are made with it, there is a certain manner of reasoning that is associated with its use. Once this is known, there will be no offense in the word itself, nor will be viewed with academic disdain.

AND WITH POWER

“ . . . and with power . . .” Other versions read, “and with strength and ability and power,” AMPLIFIED and “anointed him with the power of the Holy Spirit.” PHILLIPS

The word “power” is translated from the Greek word duna,mei . Technically, the word does mean “power, mighty, strength, and force.” GINGRICH Therefore, some have mistakenly paralleled the word to dynamite, which they feel is a proper comparison of the word. However, nothing could be further from the truth. Dynamite is destructive, explosive, and devastating. This, however, is not an appropriate view of the “power” with which Jesus was anointed. Instead of the transliteration of this word being dynamite, it is more properly dynamo . A dynamo is a generator, or “a device for converting mechanical energy into electrical current.” OXFORD ENG DICTIONARY It is something with which production and accomplishment are associated.

This kind of “power” refers to holy aptitude, or the ability to carry out the mission on which Jesus had been sent. He not only was given a work to do, but the power, or ability, to do it well. When Jesus spoke of His mission in summation, He said that He had been given a commandment to “lay down” His life, then “take it again” – something no one had ever done before in the sense in which He would do it – dismissing His Spirit, then taking it back, returning from the region of the dead. Then, He told how He would accomplish this: “I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again” (John 10:17-18). This was the “power” with which the Father had anointed Him. It is what compensated for laying aside the right to employ His inherent Divinity to accomplish the mission on which He had been sent. He was given power from heaven to do it.

This also applied to all of the mighty deeds He did throughout His exceptional ministry. In fact, Peter will now make a special point of this very thing. Jesus was anointed with the Holy Spirit and power to DO something.

GOD WAS WITH JESUS

“ 38b . . . who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him.”

Here is a marvelous summary of the ministry of Jesus while He walked among men.

DOING GOOD

Doing good involves bringing advantages or benefits to the people. It is more than giving to a good cause, casting a vote for the right person, or doing what you are supposed to do. Everything Jesus did – everything! – brought benefit, profit, and advantage.

“. . . who went about doing good...” Other versions read, “who went through all quarters doing good,” DARBY and “went everywhere and did good things.” GWN All other versions read that He went about “doing good.”

This was not a category of things that Jesus did, but was an appropriate description of everything He did. Adam sinned – but Jesus did good. All humanity was described as those whose thoughts were only evil “continually” (Gen 6:5) – but Jesus did good. He DID good, and did not merely speak about it. The word from which “good” is translated means “bestow benefits,” THAYER “show kindness to, benefit,” FRIBERG “to do that which is good and beneficial to someone,” LOUW-NIDA “to do good services or show kindness to one.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

Doing good involves bringing advantages or benefits to the people. It is more than giving to a good cause, casting a vote for the right person, or doing what you are supposed to do. Everything Jesus did – everything! – brought benefit, profit, and advantage. This includes cleansing the Temple (John 2:14-17; Matt 21:12), as well as teaching in it (Mk 12:35; John 8:2,20). It included the rebuke of the scribes and Pharisees (Matt 23), as well as teaching the people many things (Mk 4:2). People who gave heed to Jesus were the better for it.

Jesus said that those who came before Him were “thieves and robbers” (John 10:8), taking from the people, and even plundering widows houses (Matt 23:14). Jesus came, however, that men might “have life, and have it more abundantly” (John 10:10). He truly “went about doing good.” The words He spoke were good. The works He did were good. Peter now speaks specifically of some of the good things Jesus did.

HEALING ALL THAT WERE OPPRESSED OF THE DEVIL

“ . . . and healing all that were oppressed of the devil . . .” Other versions read, “healing all who were under the power of the devil,” NIV “making well all who were troubled by evil spirits,” BBE “healing all the people oppressed by the Adversary,” CJB “curing all who were under the tyranny of the Devil,” CSB “healing everyone who was under the devil's power,” GWN “healed those that were suffering from evil,” MRD “curing all who had fallen into the power of the devil,” NJB “healing all who were possessed by demons,” LIVING “healing all who were possessed by demons,” IE “healing all who were possessed by demons,” WEYMOUTH “curing all who were overpowered by the devil,” WILLIAMS and “in particular, curing all who were harassed and oppressed by [the power of] the devil.” AMPLIFIED

This is a most remarkable way of describing the works of Jesus. We have a picture here of Satan assaulting and dominating men – even those who were of the chosen race, and had been given all manner of Divine privileges. There are those who say the devil really has no power. I do not know how Peter could say what he did if that was true. If Satan really has no power, and can only deceive, why would a Deliverer be required who was anointed with the Holy Spirit and power? Why would Peter refer to people who were “oppressed by the devil,” if the devil was powerless, and could only tell lies.

The word “oppressed” is a very strong one. It is translated from a word that has the following lexical meaning. “To exercise harsh control over one, to use one’s powers against one,” THAYER “being under the devil’s tyrannical power,” FRIBERG “to cause serious trouble to, with the implication of dire consequences and probably a weakened state - 'to cause severe hardship, to oppress, to overwhelm,” LOUW-NIDA “to prevail against, to conquer, to be enslaved,” LEH and “exploit, dominate.” GINGRICH

We are not left to conjecture on this matter. Sufficient is said of the works of Jesus to underscore the truth of the statement Peter made.

- Jesus healed a man dominated by an unclean spirit, who shouted out to Jesus, asking Him to let them alone (Mk 1:23-25).
- Jesus healed a man who was made blind and dumb by a demon (Matt 12:22).
- Jesus healed a wild man who ran naked through the hills, cutting himself, and even breaking chains with which he had been bound. He was controlled by a legion of demons (Mk 5:1-10).
- He healed a man who had been made speechless by a demon (Matt 9:32-33).
- He healed a young girl who was grievously vexed by a demon (Matt 15:22-28).

It is no marvel, therefore, that when the Savior came into the world to destroy the works of the devil, make an end of sin, and bring in everlasting righteousness, “God was with Him.”

- Jesus healed a young boy whom a demon caused to jump in fire and water, also causing him to have convulsions, and to wallow on the ground, foaming at the mouth (Matt 17:14-18).
- He healed a woman who had been bound by Satan for eighteen years, being bowed over, and unable to straighten up (Lk 13:11-16).

These were not cases of delusions, but of oppression, bondage, and captivity. Satan had been having his way among those in the promised land for some time – to say nothing of the rest of the world. However, when Jesus came, He invaded the kingdom of darkness, freeing those who had been dominated by the dark world of evil spirits. He truly went about “doing good.”

GOD WAS WITH HIM

“ . . . for God was with Him.”

The reason for Jesus’ effectiveness is that “God was with Him.” Even though He had come down from heaven, having humbled Himself, “God was with Him.” Because God Himself is “above all and through all” (Eph 4:6), and “all things are of Him and through Him, and to Him” (Rom 11:36), whoever God is “with” is superior to all circumstance. The truth of this was lived out in Jesus while He was in a humble condition, being subject to suffering and temptation. He did not cease to do the will of His Father, the Father was always with Him. That is what Jesus said: “And He that sent Me is with me: the Father hath not left Me alone; for I do always those things that please Him ” (John 8:29).

It should not surprise us that John built on this fact, telling us, “Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world” (1 John 4:17). This is also why Jesus said, “It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord” (Matt 10:25).

When Solomon excelled, it was because “God was with him” (2 Chron 1:1). In his better days, when king Asa purged the land of idols, and was successful in gathering the people, it was because “God was with him” (2 Chron 15:9). Stephen testified that Joseph’s success, even though his brothers were moved with envy against him, was because “God was with him” (Acts 7:9; Gen 39:3,23). Samuel grew and advanced in the Lord, and none of his words fell to the ground because “the Lord was with Hm” (1 Sam 3:19). When king Saul opposed young David, he actually became afraid of him because he sensed “the Lord was with him” (1 San 18:12).

It is no marvel, therefore, that when the Savior came into the world to destroy the works of the devil, make an end of sin, and bring in everlasting righteousness, “God was with Him.”

The household of Cornelius had heard about the fame of Jesus. Now, however, Peter is accounting for the great ministry of Jesus of Nazareth. He was not simply a gifted man, capable of doing extraordinary things. God was with Him!

WE ARE WITNESSES OF ALL THINGS

“ 39a And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem . . . ”

The foundational preachers and teachers are those who personally saw and heard Jesus Christ, All other professing authorities must deliver the apostles’ doctrine, for no other message has been confirmed by God. This is all easy enough to say, but when you consider how much is being said today in the name of Christ that was never said or alluded to by apostles, it is rather startling. Think of the things the apostles did not speak or write about. What about the rights of citizens, or financial security, or how to win the lost. What of church planting, increasing the size of a congregation, or how to reach the youth of the community. What of missionary programs, or the election of church officials, of professional training. How about the procedures of good worship, or how to maintain a happy marriage. What of the role of the church in the community, or how the church can appeal to the community. Where did they ever address the matter of a counseling program, or how to address the outbreak of divorce.

Precisely why is so much being said of such things today, while there is a glaring absence of them in the apostles' doctrine? Who can be called forward to be a witness for Jesus in the areas that I have mentioned? Where did He address such matters?

If this all seems meaningless, consider how they sound in comparison with what Peter will say. How is it possible for any person to be preaching the truth if it is actually at variance with what the eye-witnesses of Jesus said? If our preaching and teaching does not reflect the priorities of apostolic doctrine, how can it be justified?

WE ARE HIS WITNESSES

“And we are witnesses of all things which he did . . .” Other versions read, “we can testify to every Jesus did,” GWN “we apostles are witnesses of all He did,” NLT “we saw all of the things,” IE “we are eye and ear witnesses of everything of everything He did,” AMPLIFIED “Now we are eye-witnesses of everything that he did,” PHILLIPS and “We saw what Jesus did.” CEV

It must be remembered these were appointed witnesses, not volunteers. Jesus told his disciples, “And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things ” (Luke 24:46-48). Again He told them, “But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth” (Acts 1:8).

Again and again, these men confessed, “we are all witnesses” (Acts 2:32); “we are witnesses” (Acts 3:15); “we are His witnesses of these things” (Acts 5:32). And now, Peter says it again: “we are witnesses of all things.”

What Is A Witness

Someone who was willingly involved in what was taking place, and are allied with the Worker. The word “witness” has an intriguing root meaning. “etymologically one who is mindful, heeds; probably allied with.” THAYER This does not refer to a passer-by who was simply there when a certain thing happened. Such a witness may have some value in a legal setting, but not in a spiritual one. In things pertaining to God, for example, Pharaoh, Sennacherib, Pilate, and Herod would not be acceptable witnesses – even though they had personally witnessed Divine workings. These witnesses were not mindful of what they saw, and certainly were not allied with the heavenly Worker.

A witness must also be faithful, reporting what had actually taken place, and not merely what was interpreted to have taken place. Thus when Isaiah was commanded by God to write on a large scroll, he chose “faithful witnesses” to do the recording (Isa 8:2).

There is also a sense in which witnesses are chosen by God, and not simply garnered by men. Thus God speaks of “My witnesses” (Isa 43:10,12; 44:8). Jesus referred to the apostles as “witnesses unto Me” (Acts 1:8). They are also described as “His witnesses unto the people” (Acts 13:31).

Valid witnesses are inspired by God. In the case of the apostles, they were not only eye-witnesses, but were given the Holy Spirit to enable them to recall and properly convey what they had seen and heard (Lk 24:48-49; John 14:26; Acts 1:8).

Willing to die, if required to do so, for delivering the witness. The Greek word from which “witness” is derived is μαρτυρεῖν (martyres), from which the word “martyr” comes. In Scripture it is used in the sense of one “who after his example have proved the strength and genuineness of their faith in Christ by undergoing a violent death.” THAYER While martyrdom is not as requisite for being a witness, it is imperative that there be a willingness to be one.

The Qualification of the Witness

The apostles, who were Christ's handpicked witnesses, had certain qualifications. When Jesus chose them, the fact that He did the choosing was sufficient. It is written that "He ordained twelve, that they should be with Him, and that he might send them forth to preach" (Mark 3:14). They were not simply with Him during the day, as though they were employees. For the most part, if not totally, their personal lives ended when He chose them. Those who had been employed by others, or had a business "left all" and followed Him (Matt 4:20,22; Lk 5:11; Mk 10:28; Lk 18:18). Wherever Jesus went, they went – the only exception being when He went out alone to pray (Matt 14:23; Mk 6:47). Any occasion when the disciples were not with Jesus was exceedingly rare, and never lasted very long.

When Peter led the disciples in filling the office vacated by Judas, he, by inspiration, gave the qualifications that had to be met. "Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection" (Acts 1:22). Additionally, Jesus had told them on the eve of His betrayal, "And ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning" (John 15:27).

From the Baptism of John

The "witnesses" chosen by Christ not only saw what He did and heard what He said, they were able to set it all within the context of His overall ministry and particular explanatory words He addressed to them. In addition, they were given the Holy Spirit to enable them to precisely recall relevant matters, and to also properly interpret them.

The stipulation "from the baptism of John" suggests that the chosen witnesses were also required to have been disciples of John. This is fitting, seeing that He was sent to prepare the way of the Lord. It would also suggest the witnesses were present at His baptism. We are given a record of two of John's disciples that heard what He said of Jesus, and immediately left him and followed Jesus. One of the two is identified as Andrew, Peter's brother. "And looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God! And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus. Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where dwellest thou? He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day: for it was about the tenth hour. One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother" (John 1:36-40).

The "witnesses" chosen by Christ not only saw what He did and heard what He said, they were able to set it all within the context of His overall ministry and particular explanatory words He addressed to them. In addition, they were given the Holy Spirit to enable them to precisely recall relevant matters, and to also properly interpret them. There have never been any other witnesses of this sort – the only exception being Paul the apostle, who was even given special insights and revelations.

THE REALM OF THE WORK

" . . . both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem . . ." Other versions read, "country of the Jews and Jerusalem," NIV "Judea and in Jerusalem," NRSV "Judean countryside and Jerusalem," CJB and "in all the region of Judaea and in Jerusalem," MRD and "throughout Israel and in Jerusalem."
LIVING

Jesus ministered in God's land (Deut 32:43; 2 Chron 7:20; Psa 10:16; Joel 2:18), in His Father's house (John 2:16), and among the chosen people (Matt 15:24; John 1:11; Acts 3:25-26; 13:26). This was the land that God had chosen. Jerusalem was the city that He had chosen (1 Kgs 11:36). The Temple was the place where He “dwelt between the cherubims” (Ex 25:22; 1 Sam 4:4; 2 Kgs 19:16; Psa 99:1; Isa 37:16). The Jews were the people to whom the promise of the Messiah was given (Isa 9:6). The sanctity of Israel, Jerusalem, and the Temple is underscored in the great prayer of Solomon at the dedication of the Temple. “When they sin against You (for there is no one who does not sin), and You become angry with them and deliver them to the enemy, and they take them captive to the land of the enemy, far or near; yet when they come to themselves in the land where they were carried captive, and repent, and make supplication to You in the land of those who took them captive, saying, 'We have sinned and done wrong, we have committed wickedness'; and when they return to You with all their heart and with all their soul in the land of their enemies who led them away captive, and pray to You toward their land which You gave to their fathers, the city which You have chosen and the temple which I have built for Your name : "then hear in heaven Your dwelling place their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their cause” NKJV (1 Kgs 8:47-49). This saying was fulfilled in Daniel who, from the land of the enemy, faced Jerusalem and prayed (Dan 6:10).

When God visited His people through Jesus, He did so in His land, His city, and His house. As Peter will develop, the tragedy was that they did not know the time of their “visitation” (Lk 19:44).

Whatever you may personally think about the land of Israel, or the “land of the Jews,” or Canaan, there are some things that it is well to recall. All of the redemptive works that were done upon the earth were done in that land. Christ’s birth, dedication, and upbringing took place there. His ministry, death, burial, and resurrection took place in that land. All of the powerful things that He declared were said in that land. He even ascended back into glory from that land. This is where Moses and Elijah came to speak with Him about the death He was going to accomplish. His miracles were all done in this land. This is also the land where the Gospel, according to Jesus’ own commandment, was first preached. This was all according to Divine intention. It was not the mere response of God to circumstance.

THEY SLEW AND HANGED ON A TREE

“ 39b . . . whom they slew and hanged on a tree . . .” Other versions read, “they killed by hanging on a tree,” NKJV “put Him to death by hanging Him on a cross,” NASB “They did away with him by hanging him on a stake,” CJB “ People hung him on a cross and killed him,” GWN “This same person the Jews hanged on a tree, and slew him,” MRD “They put him to death by hanging him on a cross,” NLT “He was murdered on a cross,” LIVING “they put Him on a cross made of wood,” IE “They even put Him to death, by crucifixion,” WEYMOUTH “they murdered Him by hanging Him upon a tree,” WILLIAMS and “And [yet] they put Him out of the way (murdered Him) by hanging Him on a tree.” AMPLIFIED

This is now the fifth time Peter has laid the responsibility for the death of Jesus at the feet of the Jews (Acts 2:23; 3:15; 4:10; 5:30). Stephen also charged them with murdering Jesus (Acts 7:52). Paul did the same (Acts 13:27-29; 1 Thess 2:14-15). Those who say the Jews did not kill Jesus are at variance with these inspired utterances. We have absolutely no interest in an explanation of their position. It is false to the core, and is unworthy of a hearing.

HANGED ON A TREE

Several versions substitute another word for “tree” – “cross,” NASB/NLT/LIVING “stake,” CJB “cross made of wood,” IE and “crucifixion,” WEYMOUTH Right here, certain language scholars have superimposed their own understanding on the text. It is true that the word translated “tree” (xu,lou) has a meaning of “wood,” “beam,” or “cross,” and is so used in many classical writings. THAYER This same word is used by both Paul and Peter to describe the instrument on which Jesus was crucified. Galatians 3:13 reads, “Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree .” First Peter 2:24 reads, “Who His own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree , that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed” (1 Pet 2:24). Most versions use the word “tree” in Galatians 3:13. Exceptions are “stake” CJB and “wooden cross.” LIVING Variant readings of First Peter 2:24 include “cross,” NASB/NRSV/GWN/ MRD/NAS/NAU/NJB/NLT and “stake” CJB

The doctrinal point here is that the atoning death of Christ is not to be seen as taking place on a Roman cross. It is rather to be seen as being accomplished on a tree of Divine cursing – a place where Jesus was “made a curse for us.” Sin was not removed because of the sentencing of Pilate or the initiative of the Jews. It was rather removed when Jesus was made a curse for us on a tree, as foreshadowed under the Law.

Now, all of this may seem to be of little consequence. However, the instrument on which Jesus was crucified is tied back to a statement made under the Law: “ for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree.” That statement is found in Deuteronomy 21:22-23, and it concerns the punishment of someone found worthy of death. “And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be to be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree: His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day; (for he that is hanged is accursed of God ;) that thy land be not defiled, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.” Most all of the versions read “tree” in this text. Exceptions read “impale him on a tree,” TNK “gibbet,” (upright post) DOUAY

We have in Scripture an example of capital punishment being executed in this manner. It took place when Joshua executed five kings that had fought against them. Joshua honored the law of Deuteronomy in carrying out that execution. “And afterward Joshua smote them, and slew them, and hanged them on five trees: and they were hanging upon the trees until the evening ” (Josh 10:26).

Now, the point here is that the curse of God was upon the one who was hanged on a tree. The body was not to remain on the tree over night, but was to be taken down and buried. This, of course, is precisely what was done with the body of Jesus.

The doctrinal point here is that the atoning death of Christ is not to be seen as taking place on a Roman cross . It is rather to be seen as being accomplished on a tree of Divine cursing – a place where Jesus was “made a curse for us.” Sin was not removed because of the sentencing of Pilate or the initiative of the Jews. It was rather removed when Jesus was made a curse for us on a tree, as foreshadowed under the Law .

Those who were familiar with the Law would recognize this fact. I do not believe it can be seen when alternative words are arbitrarily chosen by the linguists. This is why those who translate Scripture must have a grasp of the Scriptures themselves, and the purpose and manner of God. When there are alternative terms available, the default should be to one that has been sanctified by both Divine use and prophecy.

GOD RAISED JESUS AND SHOWED HIM OPENLY

“ 40 Him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly; 41 Not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead.”

There is a remarkable consistency in the various messages that are recorded in the book of Acts. Those words are also quite unlike the presentations of Christ that have become common in our time. Men of honest heart are right in questioning why Christian leaders have taken upon themselves to speak differently about Jesus than those who were His appointed witnesses. Such men do owe us an explanation, and until they provide us with a satisfactory one, they ought not to be given a hearing.

GOD RAISED HIM THE THIRD DAY

“Him God raised up the third day . . .” Other versions read, “God raised Him from the dead on the third day,” NIV “On the third day God gave Him back to life,” BBE “God raised up this man on the third day,” CSB “God brought him back to life on the third day,” GWN “God raised him to life on the third day,” NLT and “But God brought him back to life again three days later.” LIVING

This is now the eleventh time a point has been made of God raising Jesus from the dead (Acts 1:22; 2:24,31, 32; 3:15,26; 4:10,33; 5:30,31; 10:40).

Although Jesus was raised in a very real body, it was not one adapted to this world. In order for Him to be seen by mortals, God had make Jesus visible to them. From the subjective point of view, the eyes of those who saw Him were opened so they could see Him who was not suited for this world. From the objective point of view, God caused Jesus to be seen, for if He did not do this, no one could possibly have seen Him.

This is the first time that the record states He was raised “on the third day.” Of course, prior to His death, Jesus had told His disciples He would rise again on “the third day” (Matt 16:21; 17:23; 20:19; Mk 9:31; 10:34; Lk 9:22; 13:32; 18:33). After He rose again, Jesus reminded His disciples that He had said He would “rise again” on the third day (Lk 24:7-8,46). When Jesus appeared to the two on the road to Emmaus, it was still “the third day” (Lk 24:21). I hardly see how a point could be established with any more clarity.

Yet, there remain those who haggle about the day on which Jesus was crucified – whether it was Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday. They draw attention to the words of Jesus on the matter: “For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth” (Mat 12:40). They reason that three full days and three full nights are meant, and therefore Jesus could not possibly have been crucified on Friday. The whole manner of reasoning has an intellectual sound to some. But what are they going to do with the eleven clear statements that affirm Jesus rose ON the third day? Such foolish excursions into the realm of philosophy are unwarranted and even disgraceful.

Here we also see involvement of the entire Godhead in the resurrection of Jesus. From one point of view, Jesus took His own life back again (John 10:17-18). From another point of view, God raised Him from the dead (Acts 13:30). From yet another point of view, He was raised from the dead “by the glory of the Father” (Rom 6:4). From still another perspective He was “quicken by the Spirit,” or “made alive by the Spirit” NIV (1 Pet 3:18).

These are not contradicting views, but make known to us something of the complexities of Divine working. The Godhead is united in their involvement in redemption. God is said to have raised Jesus from the dead because He is the One who sent Him, and it was His purpose that was being fulfilled. Jesus is said to have taken back His life because He had been given power to do so, working, as it were, in concert with the Father Himself. He was made alive by the Spirit because “it is the Spirit” that quickens or makes alive, and He is not excluded in any conferment of life. Among other things, this provides confirmation of the surety that is realized when faith takes hold of the truth of the Gospel.

AND SHOWED HIM OPENLY

“ . . . and showed him openly . . .” Other versions read, “granted that He should become visible,” NASB “caused Him to be seen,” NIV “allowed Him to appear,” NRSV “made Him manifest,” RSV “let Him be seen,” BBE “permitted Him to be seen,” CSB “gave Him to be openly seen,” DARBY

“gave Him to be made manifest,” DOUAY “made Him to appear,” ESV “caused Him to be seen with naked eyes,” MRD “granted that He be visible,” NAB “showed Him,” LIVING “permitted Him to appear unmistakably,” WEYMOUTH and “caused Him to be manifest (to be plainly seen),” AMPLIFIED

Although Jesus was raised in a very real body, it was not one adapted to this world. In order for Him to be seen by mortals, God had to make Jesus visible to them. From the subjective point of view, the eyes of those who saw Him were opened so they could see Him who was not suited for this world. From the objective point of view, God caused Jesus to be seen, for if He did not do this, no one could possibly have seen Him.

In Mark’s record concerning Jesus’ appearance to the two on the road to Emmaus, he says He appeared to them “in another form,” or a “different form” NASB (Mk 16:12). This was an example of God showing Jesus openly, enabling the two to behold Him as though He was still like them.

The reality of His body was confirmed when He appeared to His disciples and said, “Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I Myself: handle Me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see Me have” (Luke 24:39). This was not a commentary on the constitution of His resurrected body, but was rather an evidence that God was showing His Son to them, confirming that He had risen from the dead. Without this revelation of God, Jesus could not possibly have been seen.

The second appearing of Jesus will also be on this order, when God will “show” Him as He is (1 Tim 6:15). Then, the difference will be twofold. First, He shall appear in all of His glory, and not simply “in another form.” Second, the dead will be “raised incorruptible,” and the living will be “changed,” having “put on immortality” (1 Cor 15:52). Also, then “every eye shall see Him,” and not only select witnesses, as in our text (Rev 1:7).

By saying that Jesus was shown “openly,” the text means it was a public showing. Yet, as Peter will affirm, the “public” was made up of people God Himself selected.

NOT TO ALL THE PEOPLE

“Not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after He rose from the dead.” Other versions read, “witnesses who were chosen beforehand by God,” NASB “witnesses whom God had already chosen,” NIV “to us who were chosen by God as witnesses,” RSV “witnesses marked out before by God,” BBE “witnesses appointed beforehand by God,” CSB “witnesses preordained by God,” DOUAY “whom God had chosen in advance to be his witnesses,” NLT and “who were chosen (designated) beforehand by God as witnesses.” AMPLIFIED

Before Jesus died, He told His disciples that after that death, the world would see Him “no more” (John 16:10). Now, the only people who saw Him were those chosen by God. When Peter says “not to all the people,” He means not to all the Jewish people. He appeared only to special “witnesses” that God had chosen “before.” And who were these witnesses to whom God chose to reveal the risen Christ? We do not know them all by name, but we can compile quite an impressive list.

- He first appeared to Mary Magdalene. He spoke to her (Mk 16:9).

Now, the only people who saw Him were those chosen by God. When Peter says “not to all the people,” He means not to all the Jewish people. He appeared only to special “witnesses” that God had chosen “before.”

The women who came to the tomb, to whom Jesus also spoke (Matt 28:9-10).

- The two on the road to Emmaus, to whom He spoke (Mk 16:12; Lk 24:13-32).

- Matthias and Barnabas, who met the qualification of witnessing the risen and speaking Christ (Acts 1:22-23).

- Those who were “with the eleven” when Cleopas and his partner reported they had seen the Lord. During that time, Jesus appeared to that group also, and spoke (Lk 24:33-45).

- Those who witnessed Christ’s ascension, and returned to Jerusalem to wait for the promise of the Father (Lk 24:52). These included “the women, Mary the mother of Jesus, and Jesus’ brothers” Acts 1:14). At that time, we are told that one hundred and twenty were gathered together (Acts 1:15). Far less than the more than five hundred who seen the resurrected Jesus at the same time (1 Cor 15:6).

- When Jesus showed Himself to the disciples at the Sea of Tiberias, seven men were present: Simon Peter, Thomas, Nathanael of Cana, James and John, and two unnamed disciples. We do not know if they were among the eleven (John 21:3) There is no record of Nathanael being one of the apostles, and we know very little of him (John 1:47).

- A special appearance to Cephas, or Peter (1 Cor 15:5a).

- A special appearance to the twelve (1 Cor 15:5b).

- Over five hundred brethren during a single occasion (1 Cor 15:6).

- A special appearance to James, whom we understand to be the brother of our Lord (1 Cor 15:7).

- Last of all to Paul, as one who was born out of due season (1 Cor 15:8).

As you can see, there were a considerable number of witnesses chosen before hand. I do not doubt that someone from every group of people were present in that number. All of them are dignified by the fact they were chosen witnesses.

HE COMMANDED US TO PREACH TO THE PEOPLE

“ 42 And He commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is He which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead.”

When we subject ourselves to the raw text of Scripture, refusing to run it through the filter of human wisdom and religious tradition, it will have a jarring effect upon our soul. Our minds will be agitated with new and fresh perspectives, and we will be shaken out of any complacency that has been caused by religious casualness.

HE COMMANDED US TO PREACH

“And He commanded us to preach unto the people . . .” Other versions read, “give news of this to the people,” BBE “proclaim and attest to the Jewish people,” CJB “ordered us to warn the people,” GWN “proclaim and testify to the people,” MRD “proclaim this to His people,” NJB and “preach the Good News everywhere.” LIVING

These are the people who had been schooled by Scriptures and hewn by the prophets. They had been taught how to think about God, and had some acquaintance with revelation. Now Peter will announce a word for which their own Scriptures had prepared them.

Precisely who is “the people?” While there is a sense in which this includes everyone, it is particularly focused on the people who have been made ready for the Lord – the Jewish people in particular. These are the people who had been schooled by Scriptures and hewn by the prophets. They had been taught how to think about God, and had some acquaintance with revelation. Now Peter will announce a word for which their own Scriptures had prepared them.

AND TO TESTIFY HE IS THE APPOINTED JUDGE

“ . . . and to testify that it is He which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead.”

This verse is noteworthy. Here Peter will declare something Jesus commanded them to “preach” – the men who have been set “first” in the church (1 Cor 12:28). It will become apparent that this message is not one that is being preached in our time – at least not on any significance scale.

The Jews, and any proselytes who had joined them, were very much aware of the coming judgment. The Scriptures had spoken on this subject, and although it was not marked with the clarity of the Gospel, it was clear enough to reach the honest and good heart. Ponder what was written in the Jewish Scriptures.

- “Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the LORD, because He cometh to judge the earth ” (1 Chron 16:33).
- “What then shall I do when God riseth up? and when He visiteth, what shall I answer him?” (Job 31:14).
- “But the LORD shall endure for ever: He hath prepared His throne for judgment ” (Psa 9:7).
- “Our God shall come , and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before Him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about Him” (Psa 50:3).
- “He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that He may judge His people ” (Psa 50:4).
- “Before the LORD: for He cometh, for He cometh to judge the earth: He shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with His truth ” (Psa 96:13).
- “I said in mine heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked ” (Eccl 3:17).
- “Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment ” (Eccl 11:9).
- “For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil” (Eccl 12:14).
- “A fiery stream issued and came forth from before Him: thousand thousands ministered unto Him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before Him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened ” (Dan 7:10).
- “Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God , O Israel” (Amos 4:12).

It is apparent that any Jew of sober mind was acutely aware that a time was coming when men would be called into account before God. There was some acquaintance with the fact that a kind of Divine review would be made of the lives of the people, and the books, or records, would be opened and made public. There was also a word from Amos that told people they should prepare to confront God. They were even told God would be on the initiative to judge the earth, not waiting for men to come to Him. He would, in fact, come to judge the earth, doing so with the utmost integrity and uprightness. However, the details of all of this were very sketchy.

Now, with a single sentence, Peter throws the floodlight of revelation on the day of judgment. God has ordained that a Man will judge men! That is something that had never been made clear by Moses or the Prophets. The judgment would also be thorough – of the living and the dead. That is, the God who had only been known for judging the living, would also take up the cases of the dead. All of this would be done by the Lord Jesus Christ, who has been ordained for this time of review and accountability, of punishment and reward.

Jesus “commanded” that this word should be preached – even to those who believe on the name of Jesus Christ, it is Gospel, for their Savior is also their Judge. For those who have rejected Christ, and chosen to live without giving due regard to Him, the terror of this day defies all description. Before Jesus commences the judgment, He shall have removed the heavens and the earth, and all things in them. The things for which men have lusted will not be present in any form. Only eternal verity will be staring them in the face. Divested of flesh and blood, which cannot inherit the kingdom of God (1 Cor 15:50), and housed by a frame that is not subject to death and decay, the wicked will have a full recall of all of their unrighteous deeds. They will be able to access them while they stand before “God the Judge of all,” and “the Man Christ Jesus.” Nothing will be hidden, and nothing will be forgotten. No opportunity will be given to make amends, correct their thinking, or start again.

Should the professing church come to the point where this commandment of Jesus is obeyed, it will have a significant impact on society in general, and the church in particular. Let the message be faithfully declared!

It is no wonder that Jesus commanded this message to be preached, declared, announced, and affirmed to the people! While religious pretenders are busying themselves to correct the problems of humanity, Jesus commands that the people be told that He is going to judge the living and the dead.

When Jesus walked among men, He referred to “the day of judgment” (Matt 10:15; 11:22; 12:36), and “the judgment” (Matt 12:42; Lk 10:41; 11:31,32). He said that men would give an account for every “idle word” that they spoke (Matt 12:36). He said that those who rejected His words would be judged by them in the last day (John 12:48). He also said that no one who did a work in His name would lose their reward (Matt 10:41-42). The Lord Jesus Christ made the people acutely aware of the appointed day of judgment.

Should the professing church come to the point where this commandment of Jesus is obeyed, it will have a significant impact on society in general, and the church in particular. Let the message be faithfully declared!

THE PROPHETS BEAR WITNESS TO JESUS

“43 To Him give all the prophets witness, that through His name whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins.”

Here again, something is said that differs significantly from the trend of modern preaching. It is good to remember that a man is speaking who has been chosen by Jesus, given special privileges by the Son of God, and is filled with the Spirit.

ALL THE PROPHETS WITNESS

“To Him give all the prophets witness . . .” Other versions read, “of Him all the prophets bear witness,” NASB “All of the prophets testify about Him,” NIV and “all of the prophets have written about Him.” LIVING

This agrees perfectly with what Jesus Himself said, “Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of Me ” (John 5:39). An angel of God also confirmed this to John the beloved: “the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy” (Rev 19:10). Once, when John was recording Jesus quoting from the book of Isaiah, he added, “These things said Esaias, when he saw His glory, and spake of Him ” (John 12:41). Peter said of the testimony of the prophets, “Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow” (1 Pet 1:10-11).

Jesus Christ is the theme of Scripture, the heart of its message, and the fulfillment of its prophecies. He is the consummate theme of the prophets, and all of their other messages revolve around Him. When he had found Jesus, Philip told Nathanael, “We have found Him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth” (John 1:45).

Now, if this is true, then why have professed Christian leaders allowed a prevailing ignorance of the prophets to be developed in the church? Why is it that what is being said about Jesus is often even at variance with what the prophets said about Him?

Let it be clear, the prophets spoke of Jesus Christ in order that men might be able to recognize Him. The Jews were cultured to think in terms of the Scriptures being fulfilled. Now, Peter affirms that this is precisely the case. Of course, if his hearers had no knowledge of the prophets, this word would have no meaning at all.

That condition may exist in the churches of our time, but it did not exist in the synagogues of Peter’s time. Jews and proselytes were acquainted with this custom: “For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew Him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning Him” (Acts 13:27). The ones who rejected Christ did not do so because they had not been subjected to the testimony of the prophets. They heard them read “every sabbath day.”

WHOSOEVER BELIEVES

“ . . . that through His name whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins.”

And what is the testimony of the prophets concerning the Lord Jesus Christ? It is a message of not only the superiority of Jesus, and the greatness of His accomplishments, but of the effectiveness of embracing what is said of Him. “Through His name, everyone who believes in Him receives forgiveness of sins,” NASB “everyone who believes in Him receives forgiveness of sins through His name,” NIV “through His name everyone who has faith in him will have forgiveness of sins,” BBE “Every person who commits himself to Jesus will be forgiven through the authority of Jesus,” IE and “everyone who believes in Him [who adheres to, trusts in, and relies on Him, giving himself up to Him] receives forgiveness of sins through His name,” AMPLIFIED

I have come from a background where believing was nearly, if not outrightly, demeaned. All kinds of arguments were regularly initiated that said it was not enough to believe. The reasoning presumed believing to be one of several steps that were of equal value, and obtained their power when they were all knit together. With such a perception we could not refer to this verse – even though it was in the book of Acts, which we contended, contained “the plan of salvation.” Alas, concerning this verse, we were like Ephraimites who, when asked to repeat the word “Shibboleth,” “could not frame to pronounce it right” (Judges 12:5-6).

But now, praise God, I can “pronounce it right,” and take great joy in doing so: “whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins!”

Why should any person be ashamed to repeat what Jesus said, or feel any need to modify it or apologize that it was in the Bible? What Peter said was the truth – not a portion of the truth, but the truth! . . . What this means is that there is more to believing than I had thought. It is not a mere step, but is the house in which everything else was found.

Paul taught essentially the same thing when he said, “And by Him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses” (Acts 13:39). Jesus said such a person is “not condemned” (John 3:18). He also said the one who believes on Him has “everlasting life” (John 3:36; 6:47). Again He said that the one believing on Him would “never thirst” (John 6:35). The person who believes on Him, Jesus said, would experience the flow of “living waters” out of his inmost being. John said He was speaking about the Holy Spirit, whom those who believe would receive (John 7:38-39). Jesus told Martha that the one who believed in Him, though he was dead, he would live (John 11:25).

Peter said that the person who believed on Jesus would “not be confounded” (1 Pet 2:6). John said that the person who believed Jesus is the Son of God overcomes the world (1 John 5:5). He also said that such a person “hath the witness in himself” (1 John 5:10).

Why should any person be ashamed to repeat what Jesus said, or feel any need to modify it or apologize that it was in the Bible? What Peter said was the truth – not a portion of the truth, but the truth!

What this means is that there is more to believing than I had thought. It is not a mere step, but is the house in which everything else was found. If a person can believe, Jesus said, “all things are possible” (Mk 9:23). Such a person – one who believes in Jesus – will certainly have no trouble obeying Him, for faith always obeys, and never disobeys. That is the resounding testimony of the eleventh chapter of Hebrews.

This verse also confirms the priority of remission. Until sins are forgiven, no other benefits will be realized. Believing in Jesus is directly associated with the remission of sins. That is what Peter said.

This in no way negates that men are to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ “for the remission of sins” (Acts 2:38). It does undergird WHY this is the case. It is one’s faith that validates their baptism, and not visa versa. When men have trouble with the requirement of baptism, it is because they do not believe. There is no record in Scripture of a believer who balked at the necessity of being baptized. When people stumble over that requirement, it is because they do not believe – and that failure excludes them from the privilege of experiencing the remission of sins.

CONCLUSION

We have been exposed to a remarkable presentation of Jesus Christ. It is one that was inspired by the Holy Spirit, and delivered by a man with spiritual understanding. It will now be interesting to learn how heaven will respond to such a message, and to the readiness of the household of Cornelius to embrace it.

Here is a classic example of someone who was prepared for Christ. The path had been cleared, and no further obstacles stood between the people and the Lord. Their hearts had been made ready, and thus the Word of Christ will in no way offend them. This is an example of “the hearing of faith” (Gal 3:2,5).

Lesson #50

THE HOLY SPIRIT and CORNELIUS' HOUSE

“ 10:44 While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. 45 And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. 46 For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, 47 Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? 48 And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days. ” (Acts 10:44-48)

INTRODUCTION

In this text we are faced with a most remarkable phenomenon – a group of people receiving the gift of the Holy Spirit, and in a most unusual way. In a sense, the whole event stands by itself, with unique spiritual properties. Yet, there are other ways in which it is representative of something that is common among believers – the receiving of the Holy Spirit. The experience itself is part of apostolic doctrine. The precise nature of the experience, however, is not inherent in apostolic doctrine.

There are recorded incidents of other groups of people receiving the Holy Spirit. On the day of Pentecost, the disciples “were all filled with the Holy Spirit” NKJV (Acts 2:4). In this text, Peter referred to that occasion as the disciples receiving the Holy Spirit, paralleling the experience of Cornelius' household with that event (Acts 10:47). Later, the whole body of disciples were "filled with the Holy Spirit" following a prayer for boldness to speak the word of the Lord. It is written, "and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit" (Acts 4:31). The Samaritans also appear to have received the Spirit as a group, with Peter and John laying their hands upon them. It is written that "they received the Holy Spirit" NKJV (Acts 8:17). Certain disciples in Ephesus, who had been baptized with the baptism of John also received the Spirit as a group when "the Holy Spirit came on them" NKJV after Paul had preached Christ to them and laid his hands upon them (Acts 19:6). In Scripture such occurrences are rare, and therefore worthy of serious consideration. The fact that they are rare means that they are not the kingdom norm. It also means they are strictly controlled by the King Himself, the Lord Jesus Christ. Furthermore, it is not on the part of wisdom to attempt to formulate a doctrine from such passages, or to fit them into a preconceived pattern of theology.

In view of these things, in handling this text, I will endeavor to show how it relates to the doctrine of the apostles, as well as the experience of all believers. The precise relationship will not be at the detailed, or evidential, level.

AN EXAMPLE OF CHRIST'S RULE

Our text records an example of the King, Jesus Christ, administering the Kingdom in a manner that cannot be codified – at least not at the experiential level. He is the one who orchestrated the events relating to Cornelius. They include the preparation of Cornelius, the preparation of Peter, and the gathering of the people to whom Peter is speaking. They also include getting Peter into the area, the inclination of Cornelius to the Lord and to His people, and the response of his household to the things of God – i.e. fearing God.

AN UNFORTUNATE TENDENCY

Throughout history, devout men have often struggled with how to handle the record of the experiences of godly people. This ranges from the working of the miraculous, to how men went about serving God, and even how they received the Holy Spirit of God. It has not been unusual for them to form doctrinal statements out of corrective teaching – such as Paul's correction of the Corinthian's desire for, and handling of, spiritual gifts (1 Corinthians, chapters 12-14). Such people speak of "the nine spiritual gifts" just as though it represented the manner in which the apostles taught. Others have taken the record of what early disciples did, and shaped it into a hard and fast doctrine – such as gathering together on the first day of the week to break bread, or even gathering a collection at that time.

Mind you, there is profit in considering what the early believers actually did. However, when men attempt to shape that into a teaching, they have entered an activity in which human opinion will be inevitably mingled with Scripture. It is preferable to ponder WHY the believers did what did, considering the impact that the truth of the Gospel had upon them. I have found that when this is done, the people generally end up doing much the same things as the early disciples – such as meeting on the first day of the week to break bread. However, in such a case, their activity has not been determined by a commandment or a law – for no such commandment or law has been given. Rather, the understanding that results from believing the Gospel becomes the true motivation.

It seems to me that all of this reflects a certain Divine manner. It is KNOWING the truth that causes them to be free – free to conduct their lives in such a manner as to please God (John 8:32). When speaking of this, Jesus went on to say that the freedom of which He spoke was actually accomplished by Him personally: “If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed” (John 8:36). That is, He works in the individual to the degree that they have apprehended the truth. Further, while His commandments are true, truth itself has a wider circumference than commandments. It includes all of the commandments, yet is not confined to them.

A POINT ABOUT DOCTRINE

When speaking of the various ministries of the Scriptures, “doctrine” is one of four uses. “All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness” (2 Tim 3:16). These appear to be listed in order of their priority.

DOCTRINE. This is the objective teaching of Scripture, and pertains to reality – the way things are. Doctrine is not variable. There is not one doctrine for one person, and a different one for another. Doctrine can be summarized in a Person – Jesus Christ. Thus we read of “the doctrine of Christ” (Heb 6:1; 2 John 1:9). It can be summed up in an objective – God’s eternal purpose. We therefore read of “the doctrine of God our Savior” (Tit 2:10), and God’s “eternal purpose” (Eph 3:11). It can also be gathered into an ordained “form” that depicts the doctrine – such a baptism, which is a form of the doctrine (the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ – Rom 6:17). The “doctrine” is what shapes our understanding concerning God Himself, the Lord Jesus Christ, and the execution of an eternal purpose. It is also what edifies, strengthens, and builds up.

- REPROOF. Reproof has to do with rebuking, or denouncing conduct or speech that is wrong. It deals with convicting one of sinfulness. Rebuke differs from doctrine in that its objective is to bring the person away from sin in order that a proper response may be given to the doctrine. Rebukes are also tailored for the individual, while doctrine is not. Reproof, or rebuke, does not edify or build up. It rather prepares the sinner so he can be edified.

The strengthening of a believer, or edification, is something that is accomplished by faith, which comes by means of hearing the Gospel of Christ and taking hold of the promises of God

CORRECTION. Correction differs from rebuke, because it is dealing with one who is headed in the wrong direction. Such a person may not require rebuke, yet must adjust his course, for he is headed in the wrong direction. This involves making a place for Satan, not being vigilant, or being slow and indolent in response to God. The person also may have already fallen into sin, requiring rebuke. In such a case, “correction” brings the person back to the narrow way that leads to life. Correction is also not in order to edification, and does not itself minister edification or up-building.

- INSTRUCTION IN RIGHTEOUSNESS. This has to do with training the young, whose understanding is not yet fully formed. Scriptural teaching concerning interpersonal relationships and personal vigilance and consistency are examples of “instruction in righteousness.” This is also designed to get the person to a point where the doctrine can be comprehended. It is required because the doctrine cannot be seen when a person does not know what is involved in living unto the Lord. Instruction in righteousness is also something that prepares a person to be built up in the most holy faith. Men are not made stronger by knowing what they ought to do. Rather, such a ministry has to do with preparing one for the process of edification.

The strengthening of a believer, or edification, is something that is accomplished by faith, which comes by means of hearing the Gospel of Christ and taking hold of the promises of God (Rom 10:14-17; 2 Pet 1:4).

When men PREACH rebuke, correction, and instruction in righteousness, they are presenting an incorrect emphasis – for what is preached IS the emphasis. For example, it is not proper to take the text before us and preach the detailed experiences that it declares as a doctrine. The doctrine will pertain to the receiving of the Holy Spirit, and will be in strict accord with the promises of God and the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

In this text, the Holy Spirit is given in a procedural manner that differs from what occurred on the day of Pentecost. Neither, indeed, does it conform to what took place among the Samaritans. Yet it is the same Lord who poured out the Spirit.

PRONENESS TO CODIFY

Although men are very prone to codify the manner in which the Holy Spirit is received, this text suggests that they should refrain from such tendencies. To be sure, in matters pertaining to salvation and the receiving of the Holy Spirit, there is such a thing as the norm – what ordinarily takes place. However, that norm does not concern the manner in which the Spirit was perceived as being bestowed. Rather, it is seen in the FACT that He is bestowed, given, poured out, and received. It is that norm that is contained in the doctrine.

Concerning the phenomenon that attends the receiving of the Spirit, God is not locked into the evidences declared in our text – or any other isolated text. Those are matters that He determines according to His own discretion, and always comport with His eternal purpose. They are always in keeping with His objective, and not intended to be standards. He does have a right to do this because He is Lord. Men, however, do not have this right.

WHILE PETER YET SPAKE THESE WORDS

“ 10:44a While Peter yet spake these words . . . ” Other versions read, “while Peter was still speaking these words,” NKJV “while Peter was still saying this,” RSV and “while Peter was still speaking these truths.” WILLIAMS

This text is of particular significance because it records a heavenly response to the words of Peter. There is no doubt about the propriety of what Peter said. No one is in order to question either the content or the focus of Peter’s words, for the Divine approval of his words is seen in the heavenly response. The marvelous effect of these words upon the hearers will also be confirmed, for they are the ones who will be blessed. Therefore, it is in order to nail into our conscience precisely what Peter has said.

- God is no respecter of persons (10:34).
- In every nation, the one who fears God and works righteousness is accepted by Him (10:35).

- God sent the Gospel to the children of Israel (10:36a).
- Jesus is Lord of all (10:36b).
- The particular word that is said to have been declared is concerning things that occurred after the baptism that John preached (10:37).
- God anointed Jesus with the Holy Spirit and power (10:38a).
- Jesus went about doing good and healing all that were oppressed of the devil (10:38b).
- God was with Jesus (10:38c).
- The disciples of Jesus were witnesses of all that He did (10:39a).
- The Jews slew Jesus and hanged Him on a tree (10:39b).
- God raised Jesus from the dead on the third day (10:40a).
- God showed the risen Jesus openly (10:40b).
- God did not show Jesus to all of the people, but only to witnesses that He had chosen beforehand (10:41a).
- The chosen witnesses were those who ate and drank with Him after He rose from the dead (10:41b).
- Jesus commanded the disciples to preach to the people (10:42a).
- Jesus commanded them to testify that He is the one who has been ordained by God to be the Judge of the living and the dead (10:42b).
- All of the prophets gave witness to Jesus (10:43a).
- The witness of the prophets confirmed that through Jesus' name, all who believe on Him will receive remission of sins (10:43b).

Notice that everything that was declared had to do with God and Jesus Christ.

GOD THE FATHER

- God is no respecter of persons.
- God accepts every person in every nation that fears Him and works righteousness.
- God sent the Word of salvation to the Jews.
- God anointed Jesus with the Holy Spirit and power.
- God was with Jesus.
- God raised Jesus from the dead.
- God showed Jesus openly.
- God ordained the ones who would see the risen Christ.

THE LORD JESUS CHRIST

- Jesus is Lord of all.
- Jesus went about doing good and healing all who were oppressed by the devil.
- The word that was published concerned what Jesus did.
- Jesus was slain and hanged on a tree.
- Jesus was raised from the dead.

- Jesus commanded the disciples to preach to the people.
- Jesus commanded the disciples to testify that God had ordained Him to judge the living and the dead.

OTHERS MENTIONED

Others who were mentioned had some relationship with God or Christ, and that is the only reason they were mentioned.

- Those who fear God and work righteousness.
- The children of Israel to whom God sent the word.
- John the Baptist, whose baptism prepared the way for Jesus.
- The disciples who were witnesses of all that Jesus did.
- Witnesses that were ordained of God to see the risen Christ.
- The people, to whom the disciples were to preach of Christ.
- Those who ate and drank with the risen Christ.
- The prophets who gave witness to Jesus.
- Those who believe on the name of Jesus, who will receive remission of sin.

It is every evident that Deity was the focus of everything Peter said. There is an evident thrust in his words that is not common in our day. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are not merely mentioned, but are the axis around which Peter's word rotate. The fundamental work that was accomplished was clearly that of Deity. Furthermore, the responses of men, whether good or bad, were, strictly speaking, to what the Lord had done.

This message does not fit handily into a theological system, or an institutional mindset. Notwithstanding, that circumstance, which is a disconcerting condition to many, there is a sanctifying nobility in Peter's words that is most refreshing.

OTHER THINGS TO NOTICE

Peter did not set Jesus forth as the grand answer to humanities self-diagnosed needs. He did not represent Him as one who could help men reach their goals or realize their dreams. He made no connection of the Lord with political, social, or domestic circumstances. While the Lord Jesus does touch all of these facets of life, that is not the message of the Gospel itself. Jesus is simply not presented as panacea for the troubles of life in this world.

It also ought to be noted that Peter has not yet specified what is required of men. He has only presented the facts relating to Christ. He does present the general promise that all of the prophets give witness to the fact that whoever believes in Jesus will receive the remission of sins. That promise, of course, has a certain attraction that tugs at the soul of those who are seeking the Lord. In addition to that marvelous reality, he has also stated that those who fear God and work righteousness are accepted by Him, and that Jesus has been appointed to judge all men – the living and the dead. Of course, to someone who is fervently seeking the Lord, such declarations are of the highest relevance. You may rest assured that Peter has the attention of all who have gathered together to hear his words. Such attentiveness always attends an earnest quest for the Lord. I fear that the conditions I have just mentioned are not at all common in our time.

THE HOLY SPIRIT FELL ON THEM THAT HEARD

“ 10:44b . . . the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word.”

Let me emphasize that we are being exposed to the discretionary working of the God of heaven and the Lord Jesus Christ. It is not part of the Lord's nature to do something that is out of harmony with either His character or His purpose. The enthroned Jesus will not do something that conflicts with the Gospel, or that is contradictory to the salvation that it announces. If what takes place in this text is at variance with a theological system or way of thinking, then they are what is wrong, not what is now reported through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

THE SPIRIT FELL ON THEM

“ . . . the Holy Ghost fell on all them . . .” Other versions read, “the Holy Spirit fell upon all those,” NKJV :the Holy Spirit came on all who heard,” NIV “The Holy Spirit came upon all those who were hearing,” BBE “the Holy Spirit came down on all those who heard,” CSB the Holy Spirit came to everyone who heard his message,” GWN “the Holy Spirit overshadowed all them that were hearing the word,” MRD and “the Holy Spirit took control of everyone who was listening.” CEV

Let me emphasize that we are being exposed to the discretionary working of the God of heaven and the Lord Jesus Christ. It is not part of the Lord's nature to do something that is out of harmony with either His character or His purpose.

The Greek word from which “fell” is translated is evpe,pesen (e-pip-ip-to). Its lexical meaning is as follows: “to fall upon, to rush or press upon, to lie upon one,” THAYER “literally fall on someone, throw oneself on,” FRIBERG “press close on, embrace,” UBS and “approach eagerly . . . come upon, embrace.” GINGRICH In its various forms, this word is used fourteen times in the Scriptures. I will highlight the English word that is translated from the Greek word just mentioned.

- PRESSING UPON. “For He had healed many; insomuch that they pressed upon Him for to touch Him, as many as had plagues” (Mark 3:10).
- FEAR COMING UPON. “And when Zacharias saw him, he was troubled, and fear fell upon him” (Luke 1:12).
- EMBRACING. “And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him” (Luke 15:20).
- LIE UPON. “He then lying on Jesus' breast saith unto him, Lord, who is it?” (John 13:25).
- COMING UPON. “For as yet He was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus” (Acts 8:16).
- OF A TRANCE. “And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance” (Acts 10:10).
- COMING UPON. “While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word” (Acts 10:44).
- COMING UPON. “And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning” Acts 11:15).
- RUSH OR PRESS UPON. “And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand” (Acts 13:11).
- FEAR COMING UPON. “And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks also dwelling at Ephesus; and fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified” (Acts 19:17).
- EMBRACE. “And Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him said, Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him” (Acts 20:10).

• EMBRACE. “And they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him” (Acts 20:37).

• REPROACHES COMING UPON. “For even Christ pleased not himself; but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me” (Rom 15:3).

These texts confirm there are both an objective and a subjective sense in which this word is used. That is, it is used to denote something that a person does, and something that is experienced apart from his own volition.

Examples of something a person does are the people thronging and pressing Jesus, the father of the prodigal embracing him, John lying on Jesus’ bosom, Paul embracing Eutychus and raising him from the dead, and the disciples from Ephesus embracing Paul.

Examples of things occurring independent of human volition are fear coming upon people, falling into a trance, darkness falling upon a rebel, and the reproaches of sinners coming upon Jesus, being laid upon Him by the Father.

Unfortunately, some men have fastened on the expression “fallen upon” as though it spoke of an external phenomenon. Such men represent the Holy Spirit as violently seizing men, and throwing them into an unconscious state. However, as used in this text, the expression “fell upon” does not emphasize what happened to men. It rather described the activity of the Holy Spirit Himself. He came upon the people, embracing and, in a sense, taking control of them. There is such a tenderness in the experience, that the individuals maintained their rationality.

This is a view of men receiving the Holy Spirit, and will be so declared in this text. Peter will also affirm this to have been the reception of the gift of the Holy Spirit and in two later explanations of the event to others (Acts 11:18; 15:8). Included in the idea of “fell” is that the Holy Spirit came down from heaven to embrace and sanctify the people.

THAT HEARD THE WORD

“ . . . which heard the word.” Other versions read, “heard the message,” NIV “were hearing the word,” MRD and “were listening to the message.” AMPLIFIED

Although the experience of receiving the Holy Spirit is something that is common to all believers, here the manner in which that was accomplished is different. Thus far, we have several instances reported of people receiving the Holy Spirit.

• THE DISCIPLES. The disciples on the day of Pentecost. Then they were said to have been “filled with the Holy Spirit” (Acts 2:3). Referring to that very experience, Jesus had told them they would be baptized with the Holy Spirit (Acts 1:5). He also said the Holy Spirit would “come upon them” (Acts 1:8). Jesus referred to the giving of the Holy Spirit when He said, “Behold, I send the promise of My Father upon you” (Lk 24:49). He also referred to this as the Father giving them “another Comforter” (John 16:14).

• PENITENT BELIEVERS. On the day of Pentecost, those who were convicted of their sin, cried out inquiring what they ought to do. It is written, “Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost ” (Acts 2:38). He went on to say that the “promise” was also to them and their children (Acts 2:39). This promise pertained to the giving of the Holy Spirit – something that Joel had promised, and the disciples had experienced (Acts 2:17). Peter also said that Jesus had “shed forth” the Spirit upon them, as they were witnessing (Acts 2:33). The details of those who were baptized receiving the Holy Spirit are not provided.

• THE SAMARITANS. The Samaritan believers were baptized, but they had not yet received the Holy Spirit. The description of that circumstance is the same as our text: “for as yet He was fallen upon none of them” (Acts 8:16). Peter and John went down to that “that they might receive the Holy Spirit” NKJV (Acts 8:15). When Peter and John laid their hands on them, they “received the Holy Spirit” NKJV (Acts 8:17,19). Luke says of the event that the Holy Spirit “was given” to them (Acts 8:18).

God also works with a consideration of those who are beholding His activity, as well as those toward whom it is focused. A point is made of this in this text. Some of the conceptions of the Gentiles that were promoted under the Law, and were obviated with the taking away of the sins of the world, were being corrected in this working

CORNELIUS’ HOUSEHOLD. Our text relates the Spirit of God falling upon everyone who was hearing, or listening to, Peter’s word. This is the first, and only, recorded occurrence of this kind. It is referred to in a number of ways.

- (1) FELL ON THEM. The Holy Spirit “fell on” them – 10:44.
- (2) RECEIVED. They “received the Holy Spirit” – 10:47.
- (3) BAPTIZED WITH. Upon witnessing this, Peter recalled the words of Jesus that the disciples would be “baptized with the Holy Spirit” – 11:16.
- (4) GIFT OF THE SPIRIT. God “gave them the like gift” as He did the disciples – 11:17.
- (5) GRANTED REPENTANCE. Upon hearing the report, the Jews in Jerusalem responded, “Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life” – 11:18.
- (6) SPIRIT GIVEN. Peter also reported to the Jerusalem conference concerning this event that “God, who knows the heart, acknowledged them by giving them the Holy Spirit, just as He did to us” – Acts 15:8.
- (7) VISITED BY GOD. James said of this event that God “did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name” (Acts 15:14).

These inspired references confirm that the experience thus described was related to salvation itself and the initiation of newness of life. It also is said to be the same kind of experiences the disciples had on the day of Pentecost. Additionally, it is specifically said to be the gift of the Holy Spirit, as promised on the day of Pentecost. There is no need to attempt to provide additional explanations of this event.

God also works with a consideration of those who are beholding His activity, as well as those toward whom it is focused. A point is made of this in this text. Some of the conceptions of the Gentiles that were promoted under the Law, and were obviated with the taking away of the sins of the world, were being corrected in this working. Therefore an accent is placed on the fact of God’s approval and acceptance of Cornelius and his household – all that were hearing the word.

THE IMPORTANCE OF PREACHING THE WORD

There is also something else to be seen here: the importance of preaching the Word. We are living in a time when the Word itself is not the thrust of much of the preaching. There is an inordinate dependence on human experience, illustrations, and everyday life. It all may sound acceptable to a psychiatrist or sociologist. However, it is not acceptable to those who are acquainted with “the ways of the Lord” (Hos 14:9). Those who speak in the name of the Lord must remember that He is active in the Kingdom, visiting people (Lk 7:16), taking a people out of the masses for Himself (Acts 15:14), directing the people (2 Thess 3:5), giving repentance (Acts 5:31) and much more. However, there is a context within which these things are realized. Generally, it includes the proclamation of the Word of God, which is the “sword of the Spirit,” used by Him to work among men (Eph 6:17).

Personal testimonies, which a means whereby men can labor together with God, obtain their power when they are associated with the Word of God. I do not know that it can be substantiated that a personal witness of what the Lord has done for as person has any power or effectiveness where there is an ignorance of what the Lord has said. It can whet the appetite of the hearer, and provoke an interest in further inquiry. However, until there is some cognizance of the Person and work of the Lord, declaring what He has done for us has little meaning to the hearer.

Therefore, in our text, while Peter was speaking the Word, heaven moved toward those who were taking in what he said. You may recall that this same man was vigorously opposed when he declared much the same thing to the chief priests and Jewish council. Upon hearing this, that group of people took counsel to kill the apostles (Acts 5:29-32). Whether the council or the household of Cornelius, the Word of God was the catalyst that brought the condition of the people to the surface.

When men refuse to deliver the Word of the Lord, tone down what the Lord has said, or attempt to modify its straightforward message, the sword of the Spirit is sheathed. God will not work in such a case, and therefore the real condition of the people will not, and cannot, be known. Only the Word of God can cut to the heart, exposing what is in it (Heb 4:12).

This is the precise reason for much of the condition of the modern church. Today, here simply is not enough being declared concerning the Person, mind, and purpose of the Lord to allow for Divine workings. Very often, a frothy message is being spewed out upon the people. In such a circumstance, all that will be apparent are differing shades of the flesh, or men in a natural state.

THEY WHO WERE OF THE CIRCUMCISION WERE ASTONISHED

“ 45a And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter . . . ”

Those who are sincere, having embraced the truth of God, yet being unaware of the new thing that He has accomplished in Christ, are astounded when the Lord works contrary to their perception.

THE CIRCUMCISION

“And they of the circumcision which believed . . .” Other versions read, “the circumcised believers,” NIV “the believers from among the circumcised,” RSV “the Jews who had faith,” BBE “the faithful of the circumcision,” DARBY “Jewish believers,” NLT “the Jews,” LIVING “the believers from among the circumcised [the Jews],” AMPLIFIED “the believing ones from the circumcision,” ALT and “some Jewish followers of the Lord.” CEV

Several versions do not refer to these men as being from “the circumcision.” The Greek expression is very precise: οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς (the out-of circumcision). This emphasizes the Jews as a covenanted people, and not merely an ethnic group. There is Greek word for “Jews” (Vioudai/oi), and it is used seventy-one times in the book of Acts. However, it is not used here. Here, the relationship to the first covenant is accented. This expression, “the circumcision,” is used fourteen times in Scripture in reference to the Jewish people (Acts 10:45; 11:2; Rom 3:30; 4:9,12; 15:8; Gal 2:7,8,9,12; Eph 2:11; Col 4:11; Tit 1:10). In every case, it accents their covenant relationship to God, not their ethnicity.

This is of significance because of what God is doing in salvation. In Christ He is merging together two groups that were formerly separated by the First Covenant – which was a “middle wall of partition” between them (Eph 2:14). A new “people” were formed by putting “a people” together with those who were formerly “not a people.”

In order to have an appreciation of salvation that actually glorifies God, as opposed to glorifying self or an institution, it is imperative that we have some understanding of how God is working out His purpose. From the very beginning, God has intended to bless all of the families of the earth. This was not revealed to Adam, Enoch, or even Noah. The first indication of this was given to Abraham, to whom the revelation of salvation began to be unfolded. God told Abraham that in him, “all families of the earth” would be blessed (Gen 12:3). Later heavenly messengers observed, “Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him” (Gen 18:18). Still later, the Lord spoke with more specificity: “in thy SEED shall all nations of the earth be blessed” (Gen 22:18). God reminded Isaac that He had promised that “all nations of the earth” would be blessed in his “seed” (Gen 26:4). After Isaac, the Lord told Jacob, “and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed” (Gen 28:14).

After the mystery of God’s purpose had been revealed to Paul, he wrote that this promise to Abraham was nothing less than a declaration that God intended to justify the heathen through faith: “And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed” (Gal 3:8). He also revealed that the “Seed” of reference was Jesus Christ: “Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy Seed, which is Christ” (Gal 3:16). In further amplification of what would be realized in Christ, Paul was also given to see that the distinction of Jews and Gentiles are removed in Christ: “There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus” (Gal 3:28).

Now, in Christ Jesus, His body, the church, is formed of both Jew and Gentile, with the only recognized distinction being now made between the saved and the lost, or those who are in Christ and those who are not. Jesus has, in fact, “broken down the middle wall of partition” that was between the Jews and the Gentiles – which wall was the Law (Eph 1:14). This was the outcome of Jesus taking away the sins of the world (John 1:29), and putting sin away by the sacrifice of Himself (Heb 9:26). This removed the law as a means to righteousness (Rom 10:4). The removal of this means was necessary for “the strength of sin is the law” (1 Cor 15:56). Instead of freeing men from sin, once the Law came home the heart, it actually caused sin to break forth more aggressively. As Paul well said, “But sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence. For without the law sin was dead. For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. And the commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me” (Rom 7:8-11). This happened because the Law reflected the Divine nature, which conflicted sharply with fallen man. That conflict is what caused sin to break forth among those who were under the Law, while is spread among the Gentiles through their conscience.

Once sin was condemned in the flesh of Christ (Rom 8:3), righteousness could be imputed to both Jew and Gentile upon the basis of their faith (Rom 3:22,29; 4:5-13). This was not possible under the Law, for “the law is not of faith,” or “is not based upon faith,” NIV or “does not rest on faith [does not require faith, has nothing to do with faith]” AMPLIFIED (Gal 3:12).

Now, with liberating power converted Gentiles are told, “Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellowcitizens with the saints, and of the household of God” (Eph 2:19). Peter reminds them, “Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy” (1 Pet 2:10). Now they are “fellowheirs, and of the same body, and partakers of His promise in Christ by the gospel” (Eph 3:6).

Why Say These Things?

Why spend time saying these things? To many they appear to have little to do with life. Such people would rather hear what they perceive to be relevant, having to do with life as it really is – down where the rubber meets the road, so to speak. However, we should not be turned aside by such foolish chatter. How can anything that God has done have nothing to do with life? How can any word spoken by the Almighty God be considered irrelevant, or disconnected from life as it really is.

The Point of It All

The point of all of this is that the text before us is accomplishing the very thing that God promises. It is what is actually realized in Christ Jesus. Jews and Gentiles are being joined together into one, by means of the faith and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. This is what Paul described in Galatians 3:14: “That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith ” (Gal 3:14). As to the reception of the Holy Spirit, Paul also wrote, “In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, ” or “the promised Holy Spirit” NIV (Eph 1:13).

WERE ASTONISHED

“ . . . were astonished, as many as came with Peter . . . ” Other versions read, “were amazed,” NASB “were astounded,” NRSV “full of wonder,” BBE “astonied,” GENEVA “greatly astonished,” NET “surprised and amazed,” AMPLIFIED “absolutely amazed,” PHILLIPS and “were out stood.” INTERLINEAR

The word translated “astonished” is a strong one. Its root lexical meaning is, “to throw out of position, to displace . . . to throw into wonderment,” THAYER “To be out of one’s mind,” UBS and “to drive out of the senses, to amaze, to confound.” LEH

This is a word that shows the limitations of the human intellect, or the mind. The mind of “the natural man ” has certain boundaries beyond which it cannot reach. Those boundaries consist of knowledge and experience. As soon as the mind is confronted with things beyond those boundaries, the individual becomes astonished or amazed. This is because they are pulled beyond the limitations of natural aptitude. In order to comprehend such things, either their knowledge must be upgraded or their experience. If, as in the case of Peter and those with him, their experience can verify what they have witnessed, all will be well. However, until that takes place, confusion will dominate the mind. In our text, Peter will make the association between what he is witnessing and what he himself has personally experienced.

The text is stated very precisely. It was not Peter that was “astonished,” but those who had come with him. Peter will include them in the experience that he himself had – yet, at this point, these believers were not able to make that association. Peter’s comprehension has been preceded by insight into the fact that God is no respecter of persons, but accepts those who fear Him and work righteousness, regardless of whether they are Jews or not. He will therefore be able to make some sense out of what is happening before their very eyes.

IT IS STILL HAPPENING

Here is an experience that is still taking place in our time – and it is to a far greater extent that permits any degree of tolerance. There are at least two sets of people within the body of Christ. John identifies three: children, young men, and old men (1 John 2:13). I will here fasten on “little children” and “fathers” – the extremities of the members of the body. They are both legitimate believers, like Peter and the brethren who were with him. Though really in Christ, some of that number are unable to account for what is taking place before them, while others know full well what is happening. The difference between these two groups of people is spiritual maturity – growing up into Christ in all things (Eph 4:15), or being “no more children” in their understanding (1 Cor 14:20).

Our text provides some insight into how to address this situation. It is NOT to let those who are “astonished” make an effort to describe what they have seen, or what they think an event or the Scriptures mean. It is those who DO understand that are to provide the required explanation – just as Peter does in our text. It is not appropriate for those without wisdom and spiritual understanding to provide explanations of texts and events that are “hard to be understood” (2 Pet 3:16). That is something reserved for the mature.

THE HOLY SPIRIT WAS Poured ON THE GENTILES

“ 45b . . . because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost.”

The Spirit moved Luke to record why the brethren that came with Peter were astonished at what they saw and heard. It was the Source of the phenomenon, and not the phenomenon itself that resonated in their hearts. They also were taken with what had happened TO Cornelius household, not merely what they did. As the text will affirm, the extraordinary activity of the household indicated a Divine initiative.

This is a consistent pattern throughout the book of Acts. What actually took place is the primary point, and what it moved the people to do was the secondary point. This should move people to avoid seeking a recorded experience, rather than the benefit that caused it. Allow me to briefly dwell on this subject so that we may better appreciate the text before us. Here are some examples of the accent being placed on the cause of recorded experiences.

- On the day of Pentecost, the disciples “were all filled with the Holy Spirit.” That was the cause for them speaking with different languages (Acts 2:4).
- Following his stirring message, it was those who “gladly received the Word” who were baptized (2:40).
- When Peter and John were opposed by the Temple authorities, it was because Peter was “filled with the Holy Spirit” that he was able to speak with such focus and clarity (4:8).
- When the early church prayed for boldness, and then actually did speak the Word of God with boldness, it was because they were “ were all filled with the Holy Spirit” (4:34).
- The selfless spirit of the early disciples, as evidenced by none of them saying the things they possessed were their own, was because they “believed,” and “were of one heart and one soul” (4:32).
- When the apostles were found ceasing not to teach and preach Christ daily in the Temple, and in every house, it was because they were “rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name” (5:41-42).

That is why one segment of professing Christendom make it their aim to get people baptized. Another segment seeks to get people to speak in tongues. Still another makes it their aim to work miracles. Others make the unity of believers their goal.

When Stephen did “great wonders and miracles” among the people, and confounded those in the synagogue of the Libertines, it was because he was “full of faith and power” (6:8-9).

- When the people in the city of Samaria “were baptized, both men and women,” it was because they “believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ” (8:12).

- When the Ethiopian eunuch was baptized, it was because he believed “that Jesus Christ is the Son of God” (8:37).

It is possible for men to fasten on the responses I have just mentioned, making them their objective. In fact, that is the manner in which those who are riveted to an institution tend to think. That is why one segment of professing Christendom make it their aim to get people baptized. Another segment seeks to get people to speak in tongues. Still another makes it their aim to work miracles. Others make the unity of believers their goal. As noble as such efforts may appear, they all fail to consider the revealed cause of such responses. As Solomon well said, “Except the LORD build the house, they labour in vain that build it” (Psa 127:1). Let it be clear that when men make it their aim to produce certain responses, they have set sail on an uncharted sea. This is precisely why Paul gave this testimony, which is disconcerting to many: “For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect” (1 Cor 1:17). He certainly was not deprecating baptism, for most of the teaching concerning its necessity and effectiveness comes from him (Rom 6:1-17; Col 2:11-12; Gal 3:27). He chose to focus on the activity through which men are brought to obedience from the heart – preaching the Gospel. Where that is faithfully done, and the Gospel is gladly received, the appointed responses will take place.

I will now approach this text with what I have just said in mind. The emphasis will be the cause. The effects of that cause are something determined by heaven, not men.

FELL ON THEM = POURED OUT

“ . . . because that on the Gentiles also was poured out . . .” Other versions read, “had been poured out,” NKJV “was also being poured out,” CSB “had been poured on,” GWN “was shed out,” PNT “had been showered upon,” WILLIAMS and “had been bestowed and poured out largely.” AMPLIFIED

The pouring forth of the Holy Spirit, therefore, is not something that is only external. In our text, as well as in Acts the second chapter, there were external evidences, but the evidences were not the outpouring itself, which, as Paul affirms, is common to all believers.

Previously, the text states that the Holy Spirit “fell on all them that heard the word.” Now that same Holy Spirit moved Luke to describe what had taken place. It is vital to perceive this in order to avoid assigning some unique meaning to “fell on all them,” that is not intended by the text.

Here the same action is referred to as the Holy Spirit being “poured out” on the Gentiles in Cornelius’ house. That language perfectly comports with what Peter said took place on the day of Pentecost. At that time, he correlated what was happening with what had been prophesied by Joel. “But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of My Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of My Spirit ; and they shall prophesy” (Acts 2:16-18). Using the same Greek word translated “pour out” (evkcew /), Peter also referred to what the people were seeing as them receiving what the exalted Christ had dispensed: “ He hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear” (Acts 2:33). Other versions read “poured out,” NKJV and “poured forth.” NASB

Joel is not the only prophet who spoke of this pouring. Through Isaiah the Lord also declared, “For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my spirit upon thy seed , and my blessing upon thine offspring” (Isa 44:3).

In addition to this, Paul speaks of the pouring out of the Spirit as an experience common to all believers. “Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy He saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which He shed on (evxe,ceen) us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior” (Titus 3:5-6). Other versions read, “poured out” NKJV/NASB/NIV This is the same word used to described the love of God being poured out into our hearts by the Holy Spirit, who Himself is poured lout upon us (Rom 5:5).

The pouring forth of the Holy Spirit, therefore, is not something that is only external. In our text, as well as in Acts the second chapter, there were external evidences, but the evidences were not the outpouring itself , which, as Paul affirms, is common to all believers.

I suppose that there may be some who wish to affirm that the testimony of Titus 3:6 refers only to the apostles. Such a view would rob the text of its edifying power. That particular text is not speaking of the empowerment of special messengers, but of the manner in which God has “ saved us” (Tit 3:5). I do not know that the apostles, or any other special group within the body of Christ, are ever the focus of a discourse or word concerning salvation.

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

“ . . . the gift of the Holy Ghost.” The vast majority of all English versions read “the gift of . . .” Other versions read, “the gift of the Holy Spirit,” NKJV “the Holy Spirit was given,” BBE “the grace of the Holy Ghost,” DOUAY “the Holy Spirit. . . given,” LIVING “the free gift of the Holy Spirit,” AMPLIFIED and “the gratuity of the Holy Spirit.” INTERLINEAR

This too is common language: i.e. “The gift of the Holy Spirit.” This is what Peter promised to those who inquired concerning what they should do: “Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost ” (Acts 2:38). That “gift” is what Peter declared they had been witnessing in the disciples. He went on to say that it was a promise to everyone the Lord called: “For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call” (Acts 2:39). The words “the promise” refer to the promise of God to give His Holy Spirit to the people. Paul refers to this promise in both Galatians and Ephesians. “That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith” (Gal 3:14). “In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise ” (Eph 1:13).

The giving of the Holy Spirit of God is one of the unique qualities of the New Covenant, and is often mentioned in the Apostolic writings.

- “But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His” (Rom 8:9).
- “But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you” (Rom 8:11).
- “Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?” (1 Cor 3:16).
- “Or do you not know that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit who is in you, whom you have from God, and you are not your own?” (1 Cor 6:19).
- “Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God ; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God” (1 Cor 2:12).
- “Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts” (2 Cor 1:22).

- “Now He that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit ” (2 Cor 5:5).

- “He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us His holy Spirit ” (1 Thess 4:8).

- “And he that keepeth His commandments dwelleth in Him, and He in him. And hereby we know that He abideth in us, by the Spirit which He hath given us ” (1 John 3:24).

The pouring forth of the Holy Spirit is associated with salvation as well as empowerment. In the case of the household of Cornelius, that is the point that is being emphasized. What took place there was not an example of the bestowment of spiritual gifts, given

- “Hereby know we that we dwell in Him, and He in us, because He hath given us of His Spirit ” (1 John 4:13).

The pouring forth of the Holy Spirit is associated with salvation as well as empowerment. In the case of the household of Cornelius, that is the point that is being emphasized. What took place there was not an example of the bestowment of spiritual gifts, given for the edification of the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:7). This was evidence given by God for the sake of Peter and the Jews who were with him. It chronicled a spiritual epoch in which the acceptance of the Gentiles by God took place. As would be opened up in other apostolic writings, they were being grafted into Israel, who is the natural olive tree (Rom 11:24). They were being made partakers of “the root and fatness of the olive tree” (Rom 11:17), which were the promises that had been vouchsafed to Israel, yet were never intended to be for them alone.

WHAT HAVE I SAID THESE THINGS

I have taken the time to say these things because of the confusion that covered this subject in my earlier days. I have been subjected to a doctrine that stated the Spirit was poured out only upon the apostles. That teaching confused the unique evidences of the gift with the gift itself. Even during those days, I found it most difficult to comprehend why, on the day of Pentecost, Peter referred to “the gift of the Holy Spirit,” paralleling it with what this hearers were witnessing. There was never a satisfactory explanation of Joel’s prophecy, which spoke of sons and daughters prophesying, and the participation of young men and old men, and servants and handmaidens in that outpouring. Nor, indeed, could I make any sense out of Peter saying “the promise” was to everyone called by God. The problem was compounded even more by the things recorded as taking place in the house of Cornelius.

Oh, there were attempts to explain all of these things. One particular body of thought said that the apostles received “the miraculous gift” of the Spirit, while the other believers received the “ordinary gift.” This seemed to meet their claim to exclusiveness. However, that proved to be nothing more than theological jargon, and could not be supported by Scripture.

It seems to me that it is far better to simply accept the events as they are recorded, and allow the words used to describe those events to shape our understanding of it. If that seems to impinge upon some cherished doctrines, so be it. Furthermore, such an approach will not automatically align the individual with corrupted doctrines that are extant in the Christian community. It is always safe to stick with the Word.

THEY HEARD THEM SPEAK WITH TONGUES

“ 46a For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God.”

I understand that the religious lives of some would be greatly simplified if these words were not in the text. However, what can be said of any approach to the truth that makes a Scriptural expression intrusive, or requiring some extensive modification? How can any view be right that tends to filter out words that have been inspired by God, or makes them appear strange and out of harmony with what one perceives to be the truth? All of this is particularly accented when we consider that this is a record of something that God and the exalted Christ are doing. No man is at liberty to question what the Lord has done, or to doubt its authenticity or profitability.

THEY HEARD THEM SPEAK WITH TONGUES

“For they heard them speak with tongues . . .” Other versions read, “they were hearing them speaking with tongues,” NASB “speaking in other languages,” CSB “speak with diverse tongues,” MRD “speaking strange languages,” NJB “speaking different languages,” IE “speaking in foreign languages,” WILLIAMS “talking in [unknown] tongues (languages),” AMPLIFIED “speaking in foreign tongues,” PHILLIPS “speaking languages,” INTERLINEAR and “speaking in other languages.” GW

The word “tongues” is translated from the Greek word glw,ssaij . As used in this text, its lexical meaning is “the language used by a particular people in distinction from other nations (Acts 2:11; Isa 66:18; Dan 3:4; 5:19; Rev 5:9; 7:9; 10:11; 11:9; 13:7; 14:6; 17:15) , THAYER “tongue; language; utterance,” UBS “a tongue, language,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “language,” LEH Theologically, not etymologically, men have assigned the following meaning to the term: “as a religious technical term for glossalalia tongues(-speaking) , understood variously to be unintelligible ecstatic utterance (1Cor 14.2), heavenly language (1Cor 13.1),” FRIBERG and “The expressions glw/ssai , ge,nh glwssw/n, evn g) lalei/n etc. refer to the ecstatic speech of those overcome by strong emotion in a cultic context. The latter expression is usually rendered speak in tongues. Ac 19:6; 1 Cor 12:10; 13:1, 8; 14.” GINGRICH This definition has been driven by a theological persuasion, and does not reflect the root meaning of the word, or the intent of the Holy Spirit. It represents a human interpretation, not a Divine revelation. It is men’s explanation of how the term came to be used, without regard as to whether or not that use was proper.

I do not believe it can be substantiated that this is the intended meaning of the text before us. I will therefore proceed with the understanding that “tongues” refers to the utterance of a language – a human language. It does appear from the context that this parallels the experience that took place at Pentecost when men spoke in a language that was not their native tongue. Yet was understood.

As such, this record is much like that of the disciples on the day of Pentecost, who, when the Spirit was “shed forth” upon them, “began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance” (Acts 2:4). The word “utterance” has the following lexical meaning: “to speak out, speak forth, pronounce, not a word of everyday speech, but one “belonging to dignified and elevated discourse,” THAYER and “speak out (loudly and clearly), declare (emphatically).” FRIBERG This is a word that described an intelligent, well ordered, and discernible statement made with the voice. This is also the kind of utterance that is described in our text.

The verse says that Peter and the six men with him “ heard them speak with tongues.” As used here, the word “heard” means, “to attend to (use the faculty of hearing), consider what is or has been said . . . to understand, perceive the sense of what has been said,” THAYER “of inner comprehension understand, be aware of,” FRIBERG “to hear and understand,” LIDDELL-SCOTT “to understand,” LEH and “heed, listen to, understand.” GINGRICH

From the standpoint of language itself, therefore, what Peter and those with him heard was not unintelligible. It was not a language that was strange or unknown to them – although it no doubt was formerly unknown to those who were speaking, else it would not have been attributed to the influence of the Holy Spirit. Again, it perfectly parallels what took place on the day of Pentecost. Men were speaking in a language they had not learned naturally, and it was understood by those who heard it.

I do not doubt that the people could have been speaking in Hebrew, the language of the Jews, or some other dialect that was common to them.

MAGNIFY GOD

“ . . . and magnify God.” Other versions read, “exalting God,” NASB praising God,” NIV “extolling God,” NRSV “giving glory to God,” BBE “declaring the greatness of God,” CSB “proclaiming the greatness of God,” NJB “extolling the majesty of God,” WEYMOUTH “telling of the greatness of God,” WILLIAMS “extolling and magnifying God,” AMPLIFIED “glorifying God,” PHILLIPS and “praising God’s greatness.” GNB

As used in this text, the word “magnify” has the following lexical meaning: “to make great . . . enlarge . . . to make conspicuous . . . to esteem highly, to extol, laud, celebrate,” THAYER “enlarge, extend,” UBS “to make big,” LOUW-NIDA and “to make great by word.” LIDDELL-SCOTT

To a Jew, magnifying God means something quite different than some of the representations that are being heard in our day. They had been tutored by the Psalms in praise, and knew well what God had said of Himself in the Scriptures. To magnify God means precisely what the term implies: to cause Him to appear larger. In this case, larger than all that competes with Him. In other words, they were affirming the truth about God, and Peter and his colleagues recognized it.

Here is the real situation: “the whole earth is full of His glory!” (Isa 6:3). God is imminent in all of creation, and is “not far from every one of us” (Acts 17:27). However, sin has rendered men obtuse to the Lord and His glory. As a consequence, apart from Christ Jesus, His Person and his works are hidden. There is an ignorance of God that dominates any realm permeated by sin. Now, what happens when the eyes of the understanding (Eph 1:18) are opened is that suddenly the individual becomes aware of the Lord. What may have been known intellectually is now realized in human experience. It is then that the Lord can, in fact, be “magnified.” God Himself is not made larger, but the understanding of Him is enlarged. What happens when people magnify the Lord is this – words are spoken that draw the attention of the hearers away from the things of this world . The prominence and preeminence of God are proclaimed in such a way as to dwarf everything else. Furthermore, the magnification of God can only be done by someone whose vision and heart have been captured by the Lord. No person can magnify the Lord who is fundamentally unacquainted with Him, or has not become acutely aware of who He is.

Much of what is referred to as “praise” in our time is not really the magnifying of God, but is done out of rote, or human orchestration. The element of spontaneity is often missing, and there is more mimicry than insightful expression. This kind of thing is not what took place at the house of Cornelius!

Furthermore, what Peter and those with him heard was not gibberish, or a language that could not be understood, therefore requiring an interpretation like the writing on the wall seen by Belshazzar. To be sure, it is not possible that it was the repetition of hackneyed religious phrases that were popular among the people.

THEN ANSWERED PETER

“ 46b Then answered Peter . . .” Other versions read, “Then Peter said,” NIV “The Peter declared,” RSV “Peter’s response was,” CJB “Then Peter responded,” CSV “Then Peter asked,” NLT “Then Peter exclaimed,” PHILLIPS and “Peter spoke up.” GNB

It is a sign of spiritual advancement when a person can recognize the exceptional working of the Lord. God is fully able to work within the parameters of the truth without being locked into a theological routine.

The word “answered” is translated from a word that means, “to answer . . . to begin to speak.” THAYER Of course, no question was asked Peter, so he is not responding to an interrogation. Instead, he is responding to a circumstance. Something has occurred that elicited a response from this man of God – and it is something that has been initiated by heaven. Peter, enjoying “the communion of the Holy Spirit” NKJV (2 Cor 13:14), will process what he has seen and heard. Mixing it with faith (Heb 4:2), and bringing out of his spiritual “treasure things new and old” (Matt 13:52), he will speak in concert with the truth. He will not be able to hold his peace. Peter correlates what he has witnessed with the manner of entrance into the Kingdom of God, putting forth a question that will reflect “the mind of Christ” (1 Cor 2:16).

One of the signs of a spirit-filled man is the ability to respond to things that are new in a manner that glorifies God. Those who are unlearned and undiscerning will not make sense out of what Peter says. His words will not blend with their perception, for it is immature.

This, of course, is one of the differences between Peter and the brethren who were with him. They were very real brethren in Christ, but the whole event had left them confounded and astonished. But it is not so with Peter. Our text does not say that he was astonished, but that those “who had come with” Him “were astonished that the gift of the Holy Spirit had been poured out even on the Gentiles.” NIV However, being more fully taught by the Lord, Peter can now see further and deeper, and knows how to respond to what has taken place. He is the leader, and they are the followers. He is the teacher, and they are the taught. For them, this is not necessarily a demeaning circumstance. However, from that point on, and since the record of these events has been made public, it is no longer acceptable for a state of ignorance to exist on this matter.

It is a sign of spiritual advancement when a person can recognize the exceptional working of the Lord. God is fully able to work within the parameters of the truth without being locked into a theological routine. He does not give men the liberty of developing unique approaches to the truth, and especially to men being saved. However, He Himself is not locked into a rigid procedure, as is confirmed in this text.

I am careful to point out that what occurred at the house of Cornelius was not intended to establish Kingdom standard. However, it does provide enough insight into the ways of the Lord to provoke discerning souls to cease from associating Divine acceptance with fixed outward procedures and sequences that have been compiled by men. What God did at the household of Cornelius did not obviate any revealed requirement for the appropriation of salvation, and it is wrong to so approach it. However, it certainly did reveal that our conclusions must be shaped by the proper assessment of what the Lord Himself has done.

IS THERE ANY REASON WHY THESE CANNOT BE BAPTIZED?

“ 47a Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized . . . ”

Peter appears to be asking a question, but he is not looking for an answer. He rather appeals to his audience in such a way as to promote holy conclusions.

CAN ANY MAN FORBID WATER

“Can any man forbid water . . .” Other versions read, “Surely no one can refuse water,” NASB “Can anyone keep these people from . . . water,” NIV “Can anyone withhold water,” NRSV “Is anyone prepared to prohibit these people from . . . water,” CJB “No one can refuse . . . water,” GWN “No one can withhold the water,” NET “Could anyone refuse the water,” NJB “Can anyone object to,” NLT “The water is any one able to forbid,” YLT “No one can stop us from using water,” ISV “No one can stop us from using water,” WILLIAMS “no any the water is able to forbid,” INTERLINEAR and “I am certain that no one would dare stop us.” CEV

Here the issue is birth, not life – for only life can be birthed. What has been made clear to Peter is that life has been granted to the household of Cornelius, for “the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus” (Rom 8:2) has been visibly attested. Now, however, that life must be birthed, so that the individual may be inducted into Christ, added to the church, and raised to sit in heavenly places.

The technical Greek expression Mh,ti (translated “can any”) is defined as follows: “an interrogative expecting a negative answer; in a direct question,” THAYER “used when expecting an emphatic negative answer,” FRIBERG “used in questions to indicate the expectations of a negative answer,” UBS and “used in questions to indicate the expectations of a negative answer.” LOUW-NIDA

The question is a rhetorical one. That is, an answer is not expected, because the answer to it is glaringly obvious. In this case, the question is asked with the expectation that it is apparent that water cannot be forbidden. Should there be any objection to a question like this, the objection would be evidence of ignorance, and would therefore be ignored.

THAT THESE SHOULD BE BAPTIZED

“ . . . that these should not be baptized . . .” Other versions read, “for these to be baptized,” NASB “being baptized with water,” NRSV “for baptizing these people,” RSV “have baptism,” BBE “from being immersed,” CJB and “to be immersed.” LIVING

Here we are introduced to a certain technicality that has eluded many. Baptism is associated with one’s initial acceptance by God. It is never represented as an option that can be accepted or rejected by the individual – never! Men have haggled over baptism to such an extent that some have been repulsed by a discussion of it. I wonder if many of the professing theologians and teachers of our time would have attempted to answer Peter’s rhetorical question.
